Neighbors of dairy say they are ready to move out

By Julie Pence
Times-News writer

FILER - The McKnight family used to sit on the front porch in the cool evening breeze and gaze at the Idaho sunset.

But for the past year and a half, the family of three has hidden behind closed doors and windows, trying to avoid the millions of flies, clouds of dust and sometimes eye-stinging, gut-wrenching odors that have come to the neighborhood with some new residents.

When those new neighbors - thousands of Holsteins - showed up, folks in that neck of the woods, known as Cedar Draw, were more than a little surprised.

"We didn't even know they were coming until the digging started," Larry McKnight.

The McKnights and their neighbors were invaded by a fairly new phenomenon to Magic Valley: the industrial-sized dairy.

When the large dairies began to proliferate in southern Idaho more than a decade ago, they spurred significant cash flow through the valley. But the increasing urbanization of the countryside also put the huge dairies on a collision course with the human population. And in recent years, some counties have had to grapple with finding ways for the people and the cows to live together in harmony. Twin Falls County is currently working on a third ordinance to site those dairies.

But back in 1997 owners of the two new dairies, Dutch Touch and Desert Rose Farms, got permission from Twin Falls County to construct facilities under an ordinance that allowed dairies of any of any size to locate anywhere in the county that was zoned agricultural. Public hearings were not required for dairymen to receive permits.

Though that may change when a new ordinance - the second since '97 - for siting dairies is approved by county commissioners, those two dairies were grandfathered under the old ordinance. And the dairies are likely to continue operating, as the state Department of Cody, Sena and Larry McKnight, left to right, stand on the back steps of their home which is located directly across the street from the Dutch Touch Dairy and about a mile from the Desert Rose Farms dairy. The McKnights are concerned that their property value has plummeted because of their proximity to the dairies.

Cody McKnight goes past the fly swam on the screen door on his way to school. The McKnights say that since the dairies moved in, their house is constantly full of flies and it's impossible to keep them out.

Hafliger says ag department helped quell odor

By Julie Pence

FILER - When the state Department of Agriculture gave Hank Hafliger plans in mid-summer to rid his dairy of its strong odors, he said he was happy to comply.

"They told me to get with the program or else," he said. "It wasn't as if he hadn't tried to make his system that flushes away the waste of 4,000 cows work right. Since day one of Desert Rose Farms dairy, he had tried to quell the putrid sewer smells that frequently blanketed the neighborhood."

During the process, the potent stench made him famous. It also triggered legislation at the state

Rail crossing might soon get safety upgrades

By Mark Holzn
Times-News writer

JEROME - When it comes to vehicles and rail crossings, compliance can pave the way to chaos, said an Idaho State Police trooper.

Nearly all collisions with trains happen near drivers' homes on roads they drive frequently, said ISP Sgt. Chris Schenk.

"We all get lulled into it. And the bottom line is when we're driving a vehicle, we've got to pay attention," he said.

That's a big part of why the ISP has put most of the blame on drivers for several collisions at rail crossings in the Magic Valley over the past few years.

Even so, many of the drivers who've been hit say the warning signals at some crossings - especially those at the crossing on U.S. Highway 93 just north of the Interstate 84 - just aren't adequate.

An accident Tuesday at the Barrymore crossing on U.S. Highway 93 north of Interstate 84 derailed two locomotives, partially derailed a boxcar and destroyed the trailer on a silage truck. Luckily, there were no serious injuries in the accident. But there was enough damage to the tracks and the highway to shut both down for more than two days.

U.S. plans to rebuild Afghanistan after bin Laden is out

Knight Ridder News Service

WASHINGTON - The United States tightened its noose around the Taliban regime in Afghanistan Saturday, airlifting troops to its northern border and rejecting a new plea for negotiations while laying the groundwork for a massive international effort to rebuild the battle-scarred nation after the fighting stops.

Planning for the reconstruction effort, which senior officials outlined to Knight Ridder on Saturday, is still in its early stages. However, the officials said, it's likely to include a United Nations peace-keeping force supplied by other Muslim nations, a major humanitarian de-mining effort and a multibillion-dollar program to revive the Afghan economy, rebuild schools, repair roads and bridges and improve health care. Like other elements of the complex U.S. strategy for the war against terrorism, the plan for a WASHINGTON - Intelligence from Pakistan. Air strikes from Oman or from aircraft carriers. Troops on the ground in Uzbekistan to back up special forces operating inside Afghanistan. And perhaps a command center inside Saudi Arabia.

Three weeks into America's declared war on terrorism, U.S. military options are taking shape. Questions remain, though.

who harbor him, it remained unclear what kind of action will be taken and when. Some worry about how the Pentagon can plan war strategy in a region with potentially unstable, untested and unorthodox Islamic rulers.

The United States has maintained a large force in the Gulf region since the 1991 war to oust Iraqi forces from Kuwait, and it still uses facilities in numerous places, including Kuwait, Bahrain, the United Arab Emirates, Turkey and Qatar.

Because of its long common border with Afghanistan, officials initially eyed Pakistan as a possible base for operations in the new terrorism campaign. Though Pakistan is providing intelligence and other support, officials are limiting its use for fear it would enrage the country's fundamentalist Islamic factions and prompt a regime takeover in a country armed with nuclear weapons.

Potential risk to Saudi Arabia's royal family is a factor in that Muslim kingdom as well.

On his first stop on a five-nation visit to the region, Defense Secretary Donald H. Rumsfeld noted Wednesday that Saudi officials are worried a war on terrorism could create harmful "secondary effects" in the Muslim world.

They have said publicly that American troops must not use bases inside Saudi Arabia to launch attacks on other countries in the region, including Afghanistan.

Privately, U.S. officials dismiss the dispute, saying Saudis are cooperating, even if they are unwilling to publicize it.

"The Saudis have always been very cautious publicly, and very accommodating privately," said Tony Cordesman, a Middle East expert at the Center for Strategic and International Studies.

Experts suggest the U.S. Air Force would be allowed to use a new command center in Saudi Arabia to direct air operations and to refuel, even if not to launch raids. Others say Saudi reluctance is slowing U.S. military preparations.

In his weekly radio address on Saturday, President Bush stressed that the approaching military action - which senior officials said might begin this week - is aimed at ousting bin Laden and those members of the Taliban who are harboring him, not at the Afghan people.

"We're offering help and friendship to the Afghan people," Bush said. "It is their Taliban rulers, and the terrorists they harbor, who have much to fear."

Senior officials said that while the United States is prepared to take the lead in financing a U.N. reconstruction effort, Washington wants no role in determining how the Afghans govern themselves once bin Laden and his Taliban protectors are defeated.

level as well as work on new Twin Falls County ordinances—all aimed at trying to control odor, siting and lighting of large dairies so that neighbors wouldn't complain about their misery.

But the government involvement finally helped Hafziger resolve his odor problems. When state-ag scientists showed up, they had solutions. As of Oct. 1, the department officials said he was in compliance.

"Now I'm just having minimal violations," Hafziger said.

Marv Patten, state dairy bureau chief, has said the agency continues to tinker with Hafziger's system. They monitor day and night, and they also respond to complaints.

Not so fast, say the neighbors. Sana McKnight said not three days before the department signed off on Hafziger's changes, she and her family endured the same old odor all night.

Hafziger said, however, that meters that measure the odors prove they have not been beyond the usual country smells.

McKnight said she knows the difference between the smell of regular cow manure and the overwhelming odor that emanates from his lagoons.

"I'm the beacon on the hill," Hafziger said. "People think I'm the only one around here who smells cases of dairies when people were out here measuring odors and not finding anything and at the same time the neighbors are calling in to complain."

Patten said there could be no way the odors on Hafziger's dairy were out of compliance that night, because the odor monitors didn't register a problem. In addition, the particular lagoon that caused the problems currently has nothing that could cause odors, Patten said.

The ag department is sending The Times-News 652 pages of documentation of monitoring done since July 1, when the department started regulating ag odors.

"It could have been lagoon waste that was spread on the fields. It could have been neighboring dairies. That smell could have come from a number of sources," Patten said. "But if people think there is going to be zero odor when they live in the country, they're being unrealistic."

But then, too, there's the infinite supply of manure-covered flies that has infested the neighborhood since the dairies arrived. In fact, it seems there are more flies at the neighbors' than at the dairies.

"That's probably true," Patten said. "They spray chemicals at the dairies to keep the flies down. When the manure is land applied, if it isn't turned under right away, it makes an excellent breeding ground for flies."

And because there hadn't been a killing frost as of Friday, the flies were particularly abundant.

Also, Patten has heard some interesting theories about flies odor. It doesn't have lights, dust or a fly problem," she said.

She said she can live with the smaller dairy because it has less impact on the surrounding environment. But there is a difference between what she calls industrial operations with thousands of confined animals versus traditional dairies.

"When these two operations become fully operational, there will be 12,000 cows just upwind of us," she said.

Neighbor Earl Miracle recently put his house up for sale because of these two dairies. He said his family's quality of life has been destroyed.

"This was our dream house," he said, "but we're going to move to town. I've lived in the country my whole life, but we're going to move where we don't have to worry about this damnable thing."

The house, a relatively new brick home, was appraised at $249,000, but real estate agents told Miracle he would have to settle for $200,000 or $300,000 less than that.

Appraisals sheets left by agents who toured the house all say basically the same thing: very nice home, but dairies will be a factor in the sale.

An executive home about a mile away that appraised for $280,000 sold within the past year for about 10 percent less than that.

Real estate agent Tad Haney said he and other agents are currently doing a study on how much homes depreciate when industrial-sized dairies go in next door.

"First of all, let me say that I support the dairy industry. They've done a lot for this valley. But we get so many calls from all over the valley about what houses are worth after a dairy moves in that we decided to research it," he said.

Now, though, it appears that homes near dairies do lose about 10 percent of their value, he said.

But there are homes near dairies that do sell quickly and for top dollar, said Realtor Bob Jones. Those are the ones that have large dairy men snap up for their employees.

Some of the neighbors in the Cedar Draw area said the owners of Dutch Trow, Jack and Tillie Tuls, said they would buy all the homes near the dairy. Tillie Tuls denied that.

"We looked at everybody's houses, and we bought the one we liked best for our hired hand," Tuls said.

"One woman thought we would automatically buy her house, but we bought the place that cost the least and suited our needs the best."

The Tulses bought the house directly north of the McKnights'.

"The Tulses don't live near their Dutch Trow dairy."

Often the land that surrounds dairies takes top dollar, too, Jones said. Dairy men need more land for growing feed and sometimes to fulfill nutrient management plans. Some in Jerome County have been asked to sell 50,000 to 100,000 acres. In comparison, at the other end of the scale in the same county, some land that probably wouldn't be useful to dairymen is currently marketed at $1,300 an acre.

Hafziger said he has offered to buy some of the farms near his dairy that happened to have houses, but no one has sold to him.

"I mainly wanted to see if buffers to dairies would be useful."

The Hafziger family lives three miles away from their dairy.

With ongoing odor problems, Hafziger's dairy has been the most controversial dairy in Magic Valley. Neighbors said it doesn't do much to improve property values of nearby homes. He admitted the 4,000-head dairy had severe odor problems since he opened for business, but he said Thursday those days are pretty much in the past.

Thanks to the state Department of Agriculture.

"I don't see the light at the end of the tunnel. I am through the tunnel," Hafziger said.

As for the McKnights, they're skeptical about that. They're thing they know for sure, though: They want out, Sana McKnight said. But she also wants fair market value for her home.

Crossing

Patrick McGuire, 34, of Gooding, said sun glare and poor visibility near that crossing caused him to miss seeing an Eastern Idaho Railroad train until it was too late Tuesday, said McGuire's boss, Randy Adams, of Shoshone.

McGuire's southbound tractor-trailer rig was hammered by the train at about 2:15 p.m. Although McGuire wasn't badly hurt, the crash derailed two locomotives, partially derailed a boxcar, destroyed the trailer on McGuire's rig and left his cab teetering upside down on top of a fence. There was also enough damage to the tracks and the highway to shut both down for more than two days.

McGuire was cited for failure to yield at a rail crossing, according to the ISP. But the accident wasn't entirely his fault, Adams said. That's because the signal lights were washed out by glare and trees, buildings and other objects near the tracks at the crossing made the train almost impossible to spot until it was almost at the crossing, Adams said.

Other drivers involved in the three other collisions at the crossing — commonly called the Barrymore crossing — since 1998 have made similar complaints. But the ISP, the railroad and the Idaho Transportation Department are — for the most part — refusing to buy them.

The state police were out there the next day, and they verified that they could see the lights from the top of that hill before the crossing," said ITD rail-highway specialist Lee Wilson.

ISP Trooper Quinn Carmack, who led the investigation of the Barrymore crash, said he was among officers who confirmed the lights could be seen from the hill.

Wilson said the sun might be at a bad angle for drivers in mid-winter. But Schenk said he doesn't see how it could cause accidents during other months.

"Highway 93 faces north and south — how can the sun be much of a factor in seeing those lights?" Schenk asked.

He acknowledged that equipment and trees could make it difficult to spot a train as they approach the Barrymore crossing from the west.

"We still throw it back to the driver, though. If the lights are on, it's the driver's responsibility to slow down, watch out and stop for the train," he said.

Earlier, Idaho Railroad spokesman Jack Lisle said his company recognizes the Barrymore crossing and the Curry Crossing — just east of Filer — as trouble spots.

The Curry crossing has been the sight-of-four-collisions since 1993. In the last one, earlier this year, a tractor-trailer rig hauling sand was struck by a train, but nobody was seriously hurt.

The railroad has kept up with all the safety standards set by the ITD, which determines what warning signals are needed at any given rail crossing.

"It's their road-going across the railway, and it's their call what warning devices they want there."

Although both the Curry and Barrymore crossings might soon get safety upgrades, don't expect to see crossing arms at either location, said Wilson.

The Curry crossing is too wide for crossing arms, and after improvement projects are completed in the next few years, Highway 93 at the Barrymore crossing also will be too wide, he said.

Instead, the ITD plans to put amber warning lights, similar to those in some school zones, about 900 feet back from both sides of the Barrymore crossing, Wilson said. Similar extra lights might also someday be installed at the Curry crossing, he said.

But if drivers don't pay careful attention to rail crossings, the extra lights are going to help, Schenk said. The best way to stay safe is to always assume there's a train approaching the crossing, he said.

Bush rejects Taliban offer to release workers

WASHINGTON (AP) - The White House on Saturday rejected Afghanistan's Taliban regime in his weekly radio address there is little time left to comply with his demand that the terrorists who plotted the Sept. 11 attacks against the United States be surrendered.

"Full warning has been given and time is running out," he said. Meanwhile, White House officials dismissed the Taliban offer to release the detained workers if the United States abandons its threats to use force.

"The president has made clear from the beginning that the Taliban needs to release the aid workers and that it is time for action, not negotiation," said White House spokeswoman Claire Buchanan.

Bush spent the day at the presidential retreat at Camp David in western Maryland. He was joined by national security adviser Condoleezza Rice; White House chief of staff Andrew Card and George Tenet, head of the Central Intelligence Agency. They conducted a 45-minute teleconference with other security officials in Washington.

Secretary of Defense Donald H. Rumsfeld, back in the United States after a five-nation tour to drum up support for the anti-terrorism campaign, briefed Bush by phone, the Pentagon said.

Asked whether the White House now considers the aid workers hostages, spokesman Ari Fleischer said, "I have nothing further to say other than to refer you to the president's speech and to the statement by Claire Buchanan."

The eight aid workers in Kabul - four Germans, two Americans and two Australians - were arrested in August on charges of trying to convert Muslims to Christianity.

In the radio address, the president made a clear distinction between the Taliban regime and the Afghan people.

"Our enemy is the terrorists themselves and the regimes that shelter and sustain them," Bush said.

"We're offering help and friendship to the Afghan people. It is their Taliban rulers, and the terrorists they harbor, who have much to fear."

The Taliban militia has given shelter to Osama bin Laden, accused of ordering the attacks on the World Trade Center in New York and at the Pentagon.

Foreign spy agencies help U.S. at unprecedented levels in terror probe

WASHINGTON (AP) - It's the kind of communication between nations that takes place beneath the public pronouncements of diplomats and politicians, but in many ways it's far more important. Especially now.

Since Sept. 11, the back channels between the United States and both its allies and adversaries have been lighting up, filled with a crush of intelligence from some 100 countries related to the investigation into the attacks and the worldwide effort to prevent more.

The challenge - as is true with the reams of data acquired from U.S. satellites, spies and communications taps - is sifting through the masses, looking for a scrap of hard truth amid piles of rumor.

"That information is called 'actionable intelligence,' something Defense Secretary Donald H. Rumsfeld has said the armed forces want and need to track down terrorism suspect No. 1 Osama bin Laden and his associates in Afghanistan. That's information so current, and so solid, that the United States can take action: launch a missile, raid a camp or send in troops.

So far, information is pouring in from 100 nations, including some that previously had little interest in sharing their intelligence, U.S. officials said. The cooperation is unprecedented, one official said.

When foreign intelligence comes in, U.S. analysts and field officers must try to confirm it - and consider the source.

British intelligence is top notch, former intelligence officers say. Saudi Arabian and Jordanian intelligence is excellent in the Middle East region - when those nations share.

But intelligence experts warn that data coming in from some foreign sources may be subjective or otherwise suspect - perhaps designed as much to meet their own political ends as to hunt terrorists. Israel and Pakistan's intelligence services have provided such selective information in the past, one former senior officer said.

"You have to look at it very critically and see if it is corroborated by other evidence you've got," said Vince Cannistraro, a former CIA counterterrorism chief, adding much of it is useless.

Nonetheless, the Pakistani government, the only one that still maintains diplomatic ties with Afghanistan's Taliban regime, has already provided useful information. Its intelligence sources said bin Laden moved immediately after the attacks on the World Trade Center and the Pentagon.

Russia also has intelligence and combat experience in the region, dating back to the Soviet Union's war in Afghanistan in the 1980s. Russia has offered to share information with the United States.

NATO allies are part of the equation, as well. German intelligence provided a crucial link in the investigation by intercepting phone conversations of bin Laden supporters who were celebrating the attacks.

Anthrax case puzzles investigators; source remains a mystery

LANTANA, Fla. — Relatives of a Florida man who contracted a fatal case of anthrax are being given antibiotics as a precaution and the man's co-workers have been tested and cleared, health authorities said Saturday.

Investigators are awaiting test results from soil and other specimens as they try to learn how 63-year-old Bob Stevens contracted the rare and extremely lethal inhaled form of the disease. He died Friday.

More than 50 health and law enforcement officials have fanned out across Palm Beach County to track his movements over the past two months and look for other possible cases.

Officials believe Stevens contracted anthrax naturally in Florida. The disease can be contracted from farm animals or soil, though the bacterium is not normally found among wildlife or livestock in the state.

FBI: Man attempts to hijack medical plane

DEMING, N.M. — Authorities were searching Saturday for a man who held a knife to the neck of a pilot and attempted to hijack a medical transport plane before fleeing a tiny airport in southern New Mexico.

FBI supervisory agent Doug Beldon said Friday night's incident appeared to be isolated and unrelated to the Sept. 11 terrorist attacks on the Pentagon and World Trade Center. No arrests have been made.

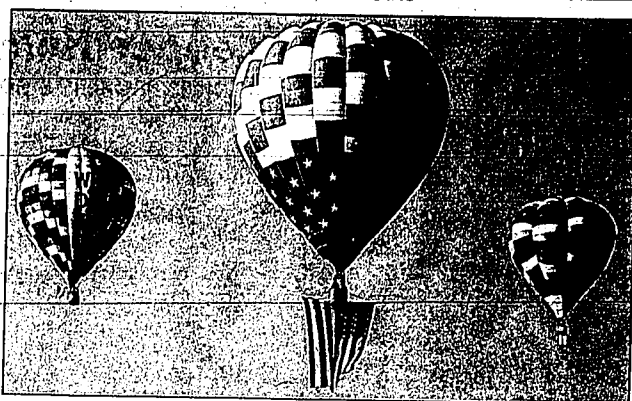

The University of New Mexico Hospital plane arrived at the Deming Municipal Airport around 9:45 p.m. to transport a baby from an area hospital. Paramedics had gone to get the child and the pilot stayed behind.

A man entered the back door of the plane and put a knife to the neck of the pilot and said, "Let's fly," Beldon said.

"It was very dark," he said. "The pilot certainly felt the knife to her neck."

The man was carrying a knife and a radio or police scanner. He was also wearing dark clothes that included a black hood with the eyes cut out.

A stars and stripes balloon drifts with others Saturday over Albuquerque, N.M., at the 30th annual Kodak Albuquerque International Balloon Fiesta. The event ends today.

Police: Man killed Afghan filmmaker over money

MINEOLA, N.Y. — An Afghan filmmaker was fatally stabbed, beaten and then dismembered by one of his investors who briefly kept the head in his refrigerator, police said Saturday.

Jawed Wassel, 42, was killed shortly before Wednesday night's opening of his film "FireDancer," said Lt. Frank Guidice, head of the Nassau County homicide squad.

The suspect, Nathan Powell, attended the premiere. He was arrested Thursday night and was arraigned Saturday on a second-degree murder charge.

Police say Powell was supposed to receive 30 percent of the movie's gross and allegedly killed Wassel in an argument over money.

Transformed Emmy Awards show plays this evening
LOS ANGELES — The Emmy Awards show is finally going

After a three-week postponement because of the Sept. 11 terrorist attacks, the 53rd annual ceremony honoring television's best will be held tonight. As with much else in America, it will be a changed event as organizers aim for a solemn tone of respect without being downbeat.

"It's a fine line you walk," said Academy of Television Arts & Sciences President Jim Chabin. "We're in the business of entertaining people and making people smile and feel emotion at a time when people's emotions are raw."

The Shrine Auditorium ceremony, which will air 6 p.m. MDT on CBS, will include a New York studio broadcast for presenters and nominees who want to avoid traveling to Los Angeles.

Police make late-night doughnut run via helicopter
ALBUQUERQUE, N.M. — Albuquerque police have taken doughnut runs to new heights, swooping down in an official helicopter for a late-night snack.

"I don't know how they decided that was a good idea," said Lt. Bob Huntsman, department spokesman.

Huntsman said the department is investigating. Keith Turner, who works near a Krispy Kreme doughnut shop, said he was on a break with other people early Thursday when a police helicopter circled and landed in a dirt field nearby.

Burger King workers burn feet at company retreat

MIAMI — About a dozen Burger King marketing-department workers burned their feet when they walked over white-hot coals at a meeting intended to promote bonding.

One woman was taken to a hospital emergency room, and Burger King brought in a doctor to treat others whose feet were blistered. Some workers used wheelchairs the next day when they went to the airport to leave for another company retreat.

"You're walking over hot coals, and something can happen," said Robert Kallen, owner of The Achievement Group, which ran the event. "The majority of the people get through it without a nick or a blister."

Dana Frydman, vice president of product marketing for Burger King, was injured but had no regrets about the event she helped organize. "It made you feel a sense of empowerment," Frydman said, "and that you can accomplish anything."

Smithsonian opens show on dolphins, whales

WASHINGTON — The Smithsonian has opened a whale of an exhibition. Literally.

"Masters of the Ocean Realm: Whales, Dolphins and Porpoises," takes a detailed look at these active and intelligent denizens of the deep starting Friday at the National Museum of Natural History. "It's the story of science and legends and the interaction of whales and humans through time," said Dennis O'Connor, Smithsonian under secretary for science.

One exhibit offers a full-size model of a dolphin, showing smooth skin and smile-like mouth. Walking around to the other side, the viewer can see inside the mammal and study its skeleton, including a long tooth-filled jaw.

The show remains at the museum through Jan. 2.

Countries come through with aid for Afghans

GENEVA — Donor countries have met — and surpassed — U.N. Secretary General Kofi Annan's desperate appeal for $584 million in aid for the Afghan people, U.N. officials said Saturday at the end of a two-day humanitarian meeting in Geneva.

Civil war and a three-year drought have led to famine and forced millions of Afghans to leave their homes. As many as 22 percent of children in some drought-affected areas die before they are five years old, and the national average life expectancy is 40, the World Food Program said.

Transportation chief: Bolster airplanes' doors

WASHINGTON — In releasing the recommendations of two task forces studying aviation security, Transportation Secretary Norman Y. Mineta ordered airlines to carry out one of the suggestions: strengthen their cockpit doors within 90 days.

At least four airlines — American, Delta, United and US

Airways — have already started to install steel bars or are taking other actions to reinforce cockpit doors. The carriers began the improvements after some task force recommendations were publicized.

Cockpit doors on airplanes have been designed to allow flight crews to escape quickly in an emergency. But that also allowed the terrorists to break into the cockpits and take control of four airliners on Sept. 11.

Unidentified aircraft draws gunfire over Kabul

KABUL, Afghanistan — An intense volley of Taliban anti-aircraft fire Saturday brought thousands of Afghans into the streets of Kabul, where they craned their necks to watch a plane fly over. The plane was not hit. Taliban guns fired at the silver-colored aircraft as it flew slowly over the capital at a high altitude. The origin and type of the plane were unknown.

On Sept. 22, the Taliban claimed it had shot down an unmanned U.S. reconnaissance aircraft over the Tashkorgan Pass in Afghanistan's northern Samangan province.

Memorial service includes tribute from Springsteen

YARDLEY, Pa. — The memorial service for a fan who died in the Sept. 11 terrorist attacks included a special videotaped tribute from Bruce Springsteen.

James P. "Jim" Berger, 44, a senior vice president of the insurance company AON Consulting Group, died in the attack on the World Trade Center. Co-workers said Berger shepherded many of AON's employees to safety from their 101st-floor office in the trade center's south tower after the north tower was struck by a jetliner.

"I am so proud my husband was able to put other people in front of himself in the face of what must have been unbelievable fear," Berger's widow Suzanne said before the lights dimmed and Springsteen appeared on a screen set up for Friday's service. Springsteen dedicated his performance to Berger's three sons. "I understand this was one of your Pop's favorite songs," he said.

Shirley Fleckenstein prepares trays of eggplant parmeliana at Nino's Restaurant on Canal St. Wednesday in New York at the boundary of the blocked-off area around the World Trade Center. A day after the Sept. 11 attack, the eatery closed to regular customers and began feeding rescue workers for free.

Restaurant serves as refuge to rescue workers

NEW YORK (AP) — Quiet candlelight dinners for two at Nino's on Canal Street have given way to busfling, round-the-clock meals for the thousands of rescue workers toiling at the ruins of World Trade Center nearby.

A day after the Sept. 11 terrorist attack, the Italian eatery closed to regular customers and began feeding the workers for free, serving about 5,000 meals a day.

The emergency workers crowd around the tables, relaxing and chatting over an array of dishes, including chicken, pasta, salads, meatloaf, hamburgers and hot dogs. They wash it down with soda, juice, coffee or tea.

"If it wasn't for this, who knows where we would go," said police Officer Jason Haynes, sitting at the bar next to trays of fruit and candy in red-white-and-blue wrapping.

Trade Center workers find safe stuffed with $2.7 billion

Newsday

NEW YORK — Workers picking through the rubble at the World Trade Center, trying to recover the bodies of the nearly 5,000 missing, found a safe containing about $2.7 billion in stocks and bonds last week, according to law enforcement officials.

The safe, which belongs to Morgan Stanley Dean Witter, was discovered in the debris pile of what once was 5 World Trade Center on Sept. 28. According to law enforcement sources speaking on the condition of anonymity, the safe hadn't been locked before the collapse. Some stock and bond certificates were destroyed by fire but most of the safe's content were intact, the sources said.

Police and Fire Department officials turned the stocks and bonds over to officials from Morgan Stanley Dean Witter, who took the documents to the company's New Jersey headquarters, the sources said.

Company spokeswoman Judy Hitchen declined to comment.

The multimillion-dollar find is the largest financial recovery at the site to date, but there are plenty of other riches still buried underneath the hundreds of thousands of tons of rubble.

On Wednesday, officials at the Canadian-based Scotia Mocatta Depository Corp., the bullion and metals division of the Bank of Nova Scotia, admitted that a vault containing more than $200 million of gold and silver is still buried in what was 4 World Trade Center.

"It's probably recoverable but in a long time," said the bank's chairman and CEO Peter Godsoe, who added that the precious metals are insured.

A Brinks armored car with approximately $14 million in cash and bonds is also believed buried in the rubble. In addition, there are several prominent financial companies and banks, including Citicorp and Chase, that had offices or branches in the World Trade Center, officials said.

"But to be honest, the firemen and cops don't care about any of that," said one law enforcement source, who spoke on the condition of anonymity. "They're there looking for bodies and if it happens to come by the other stuff, so be it."

Acts of kindness combat racism and bigotry

The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — Shortly after last month's terrorist attacks, two bricks ferried handwritten notes with crude, racist remarks through the front window of the Old Town Islamic Bookstore in Alexandria, Va. Store manager Hazim Barakat was angry and frazzled. The Palestinian immigrant also was unprepared for what happened next.

About 15 bouquets of flowers and more than 50 cards — some with money — arrived at his store. People from as far away as Tennessee and Nebraska called with condolences. A local businessman, who would not give Barakat his name, paid for a new window. Christian ministers and a rabbi dropped by to express their support.

"The people in the neighborhood were so nice you don't believe," said Barakat, 44, who runs the store for the American Muslim Foundation. "This is like another family I have. This is my big family. I want to thank everybody."

Terrorism and bigotry, it seems, can have unintended consequences.

Across the Washington area and the nation, many Muslims say that since Sept. 11, they have been encouraged and comforted by unexpected acts of kindness from communities and individuals. In subdivisions, stores, restaurants and offices, non-Muslims have approached them with hugs, handshakes, moral support — even the sanctuary of their own homes — as well as apologies for attacks by others.

"The love and support we got from the community was overwhelming," said Mohamed Magid, 36, imam of All Dulles Area Muslim Society in Herndon, Va., describing the response after someone spray-painted anti-Muslim obscenities in the hallway outside the mosque's prayer room.

Nada Hamoui, who lives near Tampa, Fla., wrote that two days after the attacks, she found a card that said, "From one American to another." It came from a patient of her physician husband. "I held it," she wrote, "and I cried."

10th Mountain Division answers the call

Los Angeles Times

WASHINGTON - In the past decade, they've become the most called-upon Army unit in a generation. They've fought through sniper fire in the streets of Somalia, marched across Iraqi deserts and played a leading role in keeping peace in Bosnia.

Ready for either hand-to-hand combat or peacekeeping missions, the light infantrymen of the Army's 10th Mountain Division have a new assignment that again will take them far away from their families at Fort Drum in northern New York State. A first wave of 1,000 soldiers are being dispatched to Uzbekistan, a country not unfamiliar to them. They spent periods training there in 1997 and 1998.

'Advance' troops move fast, travel light

At least initially, their job will not involve combat in Afghanistan, which borders Uzbekistan. They're being assigned to provide security for Uzbek air bases that will be used for humanitarian missions, such as food drops.

The history of the 10th is a rich one. Former Sen. Bob Dole was a member of that division when he was severely wounded in Italy during World War II. The division traces its roots to the Army's first mountain infantry battalion formed on Dec. 8, 1941 - the day after Pearl Harbor - at the urging of Charles Minnie "Minnie" Dole, no relation to Bob Dole.

Charles Dole, who was president of the National Ski Patrol, had spent months lobbying President Franklin D. Roosevelt's War Department for creation of U.S. "mountain troops" because of a humiliating defeat by Russian soldiers in 1939.

In November of that year, when the Soviet Union invaded Finland, Finnish soldiers on skis annihilated two tank divisions, humbling the Russians. Dole saw this as a perfect example of why the U.S. Army needed mountain troops, and Gen. George C. Marshall, the Army's chief of staff, ultimately agreed to Dole's plan to train fighting ski units.

The first soldiers, who trained on Mount Ranier's 14,408-foot-peak near Fort-Lewis, Wash., were dubbed "Minnie's Ski Troops" after Dole's nickname.

That division entered combat in January, 1945, in the North Apennine Mountains of Italy, facing German positions along a five-mile-long ridge. Their attack under cover of darkness led to a crucial German defeat.

Four months later, with help from other units, the 10th Mountain Division launched an offensive toward Italy's Po Valley to mark the final phase of the war in Europe.

But times have changed. Because the 10th has been used more in recent years in such places as the Persian Gulf, Somalia and even on a peacekeeping mission to Haiti, they now train more in wooded flatlands. They no longer have artillery or heavy tanks, but learn to fight with what they can carry on their backs.

Prime minister pledges support

By Marjorie Miller
Los Angeles Times

LONDON - In Britain, Prime Minister Tony Blair is being called a moral visionary in the mold of 19th-century statesman William Gladstone, a commander in the cloak of Winston Churchill and, less fondly, "Mr. President."

In the United States, President Bush simply calls him "friend." Since the Sept. 11 attacks on the World Trade Center and Pentagon, Blair has dedicated himself to the role of America's closest ally in the U.S. war on terrorism. His job in this partnership has been to articulate the moral and legal case against the suspected author of the assaults, Osama bin Laden, and to shore up international support for military action.

Blair has made it his mission. As the embassies still smoldered in New York and near Washington, D.C., Blair appeared beside first lady Laura Bush for the president's speech to Congress, joining in standing ovations. He shuttled back and forth among European allies and met with Russian President Vladimir V. Putin in Moscow before flying to the front line in Pakistan. He offered British troops for the war.

But his greater contribution might be this: While the president of a wounded nation sought retaliation, the prime minister of Britain sought to make sense of the senseless killing of thousands. He appealed for a new world order, in which rich countries help the poor and put down tyrants, to serve as a memorial to the dead.

"Out of the shadow of this evil should emerge lasting good: destruction of the machinery of terrorism wherever it is found, hope among all nations of a new beginning where we seek to resolve differences in a calm and ordered way, greater understanding between nations and between faiths, and, above all, justice and prosperity for the past and possessed," Blair said in a speech to his Labor Party last week.

Globalization applies not just to trade, he argued, but to conflict and chaos, confidence and order.

Prime Minister Tony Blair Makes case against bin Laden

"The world community must show as much its capacity for compassion as for force," he said. "What is the lesson of the financial markets, climate change, international terrorism, nuclear proliferation or world trade? It is that our self-interest and our mutual interests are today inextricably woven together."

His eloquence earned him praise from normally hostile quarters.

"Blair's Finest Hour," said the conservative Daily Telegraph newspaper, evoking Churchill. "This was the speech that persuaded the nation that our prime minister is more than equal to the challenge we face."

This vision of a world community is not new for Blair. He discovered the theme as a student at Oxford University in the mid-1970s, when friends introduced him to Christian theology and social doctrine, and he carried it into politics when he was elected a member of Parliament from the northern coal mining town of Sedgfield in 1983.

To friends in government and the Labor Party, Blair's convictions are his strength.

"He has a strong moral code based firmly in religious belief," said David Hill, a Labor Party activist. "This gives him a clear sense of moral duty and right and wrong."

In secret, Iran blames bin Laden

The Washington Post

TEHRAN, Iran - In newspaper, influential Friday prayers, seminars and official pronouncements, Iranians are treated to a variety of theories about who committed the Sept. 11 terrorist attacks in the United States: radical American-bred militia groups, Israeli intelligence agents, disgraced former U.S. military pilots - anybody it seems, but Osama bin Laden.

Privately, the government has a different view. Last week, high-ranking officials in the administration of President Mohammad Khatami supported a group of Western diplomats and told them they had concluded that bin Laden was behind the attacks.

They said they accept the right to punish people responsible for a crime, and they were clear: They are sure bin Laden was responsible, said a senior Western diplomat familiar with the meeting. "They will not say that openly. They will continue asking for proof and clear evidence, but they said ... the responsibility of bin Laden is clear."

Western diplomats were told that while Iran would likely publicly condemn any U.S. attack on Afghanistan, where the ruling Taliban militia is believed to be harboring bin Laden and his associates, officials privately hoped a U.S. response would be confined to self-defined military objectives.

They said the Taliban and bin Laden are the same, don't try to make a distinction. It's a war against extremism, a diplomat said. "They said that if you fail, there will be heroes and it will be clear before, so don't let the job unfinished like you did in Iraq."

Analysts said the unfolding terrorism crisis offers Iran a chance to showcase its growing self-sufficiency in foreign affairs. Khatami ended nearly two decades of international isolation and repaired Iran's relations with Islamic and European countries.

U.S. forces in the Middle East

Forces by location

Bahrain: Home of the Navy's 5th Fleet, which controls the carriers while they are on six-month deployments in the Gulf. U.S. warplanes also use an isolated air base south of the capital; cargo planes fly from another airbase.

Kuwait: U.S. warplanes, based at Al Jaber air base, patrol the southern no-fly zone over Iraq. Supplies to equip an Army brigade. Saudi Arabia: U.S. warplanes, out of Prince Sultan Air Base in the desert south of Riyadh, patrol the southern no-fly zone over Iraq.

Turkey: U.S. warplanes, based at Incirlik air base, patrol the northern no-fly zone over Iraq.

Oman: U.S. cargo planes at Seeb North Air Base near the capital of Muscat and at Masirah Island. About 75 percent of Air Force reserve equipment in the Middle East is in Oman.

Qatar: Supplies to equip an Army brigade.

United Arab Emirates: Airborne refueling tankers for planes that patrol Iraq. Diego Garcia: Supplies to equip an Army brigade. Probable bases for B-52 bombers.

Uzbekistan: About 1,000 Army infantry soldiers.

Still others say it would be pointless to wage war from Riyadh, and set the royal family up for domestic challenges, if another option would work just as well.

That's where Oman comes in. Oman's Sultan Qaboos has allowed the United States to preposition military equipment and have emergency access to Omani bases since 1980. The country could supply critical staging bases for operations inside Afghanistan and has two airports that can give warplanes a straight shot across the Gulf of Oman and Arabian Sea to Afghanistan while avoiding Iranian airspace.

In addition to Oman, air operations could be run from other bases, including the Indian Ocean island of Diego Garcia, where the Pentagon was sending Air Force B-52 bombers.

"Oman has become the obvious place for geographic reasons to fly out of - at least for combat missions," said Joe H. Daulder of the Brookings Institution. "We don't need to be close" for air activity, he said.

For ground operations, however, troops do.

The focus for that has been on Uzbekistan and Tajikistan, two former Soviet republics bordering Afghanistan.

Uzbek's president gave permission Friday for U.S. warplanes and troops to use an Uzbek air base and the U.S. Army sent 1,000 infantry soldiers there. They will be on standby to come to the aid of any U.S. special forces that might run into trouble operating inside Afghanistan.

The Uzbeks, however, appeared to rule out using Uzbekistan for land operations against Afghanistan, or to launch air strikes. And, the country's president said, no U.S. special operations forces - such as Army Rangers or Green Berets who specialize in operating behind enemy lines - would be allowed to operate from Uzbek territory.

The USS Kitty Hawk aircraft carrier also will be available in or near the Arabian Sea as a floating base for other forces, defense officials said.

Arafat criticizes Palestinian gunmen

JERUSALEM - In a rare public criticism of Palestinian militants, Yasser Arafat's Cabinet has demanded gunmen stop attacking Israel, saying they have violated the Mideast truce and damaged Palestinian interests.

Still, several days of heavy fighting have greatly undermined a Mideast cease-fire announced 10 days ago after both sides came under considerable pressure by the United States.

Neither Israel nor the Palestinians wants to be blamed for the failure of the truce, and the Palestinian statement was intended to show Arafat remained supportive of the cease-fire. But Israel has insisted that the Palestinian leader also arrest Palestinian militants, and so far Arafat has refused to take this step.

U.S. officials, contractors withdraw from Philippines

MANILA, Philippines - The U.S. government has withdrawn officials and contractors from the southern Mindanao region of the Philippines and advised American citizens not to travel there because of increasing terrorist threats. "Kidnappings of foreigners, bombings, and other violent incidents call for Americans to exercise great caution throughout the Philippines. Moreover, as a result of the September 11 terrorist attacks in the United States, U.S. citizens and interests may be at increased risk of terrorist actions from extremist groups," a State Department travel advisory said Friday.

It cited the kidnapping of three Americans and 17 Filipinos from an upscale resort on May 27 by the Muslim extremist Abu Sayyaf group and another incident in which a group of American Navy personnel and their guides were fired upon by communist rebels on Mount Pinatubo. No one was injured in the shooting. The group claims it is fighting for an independent Islamic state in the southern Philippines, but the government regards it as a bandit group.

elections last month, and the smaller Polish Peasants Party agreed Saturday to form a coalition government that will have a majority in parliament.

After a five-hour meeting, the Democratic Left authorized its leader, Leszek Miller, to sign a coalition agreement with the smaller party, spokesman Michal Tober said.

The Peasants Party later announced its approval.

Separation from family drives man to suicide

SEOUL, South Korea - An 82-year-old man committed suicide near the border with North Korea, where he had a son he had longed to see again after a half century apart, police said Friday.

Chung, In-kook's body was found in a small pond at the border town of Imjingak. His wife, Lim Young-sun, said frustration drove her husband to kill himself. "I hope his spirit will fly across the border and meet his son, finally," she told KBS-TV.

Chung had applied for a government program allowing 100 South Koreans to reunite with relatives in North Korea, but was not among those chosen from 94,000 South Korean applicants.

Schindler's widow dies in Germany at age 93

FRANKFURT, Germany - Emilie Schindler, who helped her industrialist husband save hundreds of Jews from Nazi death camps in a saga memorialized by the movie "Schindler's List," has died, her biographer said Saturday. She was 93.

Schindler's widow died Friday night at a hospital in Strausberg outside Berlin where she had been brought for an undisclosed illness on July 21.

The Schindlers' campaign to save at least 1,200 Jews from the Holocaust went largely unnoticed until Steven Spielberg's Oscar-winning film came out in 1993.

Hemingway saga takes another tragic twist: Gregory dies in jail

Knight Ridder News Service

MIAMI — The harrowing history of the Hemingway clan gained a new tragic chapter this week when the youngest son of the noted American author was found dead on the floor of a Miami-Dade County jail cell, the victim of an apparent heart attack.

Gregory Hemingway, 69, leaves behind a grieving widow and seven children.

He was a doctor, a fisherman, a hunter who slayed 18 elephants in one month in Africa, a world traveler, a champion pigeon shooter by age 12, a marathon runner, a better-than-average tennis player and husband to four women.

And, at times, he was a woman named Gloria Hemingway.

He told a reporter in 1987 that his father — the utmost model of maleness — knew he wore women's clothing. He also said he had undergone 98 electroshock treatments and had seven nervous breakdowns.

Hemingway had been diagnosed with manic depressive disorder, said Ida Mae Hemingway. Her husband sometimes skipped medication, which made him either sink into deep downs or soar to incoherent highs when he would sometimes strip off all his clothes, she said.

That's what happened Sept. 26, when police got a call about a naked pedestrian heading north on Crandon Boulevard in the Village of Key Biscayne.

Hemingway often went there to walk on the beach, his wife said. "He was trying to lose weight."

When Officer Nella Real caught up to Hemingway, he was sitting on the curb, putting on underwear. He had a pink dress and a pair of high heels in his hands. When he was booked into the Women's Detention Center, an annex of the Dade County Jail, they took the dress and the shoes, as well as two rings and a choker necklace.

Five days later, Hemingway died alone, tormented by both personal demons and the ghost of a famous father.

His last contact: with people who probably didn't understand but, rather, mocked him.

His last view: the gray floor, bolted-down bed, sickly-green walls and open toilet of No. 377 on the third floor, a 10-by-10 foot "safety cell" typically used to house inmates with psychological problems.

"In his case, we were separating him from the rest of the inmate population," said Janelle Hall, a spokeswoman with Miami-Dade Corrections. "For his own protection."

"He would not be dead if he had gotten the medical attention that he needed," Ida Mae said

Thursday as she sat at a wooden desk in the comfortable, colorful home in Coconut Grove, Fla., which she shared with Gregory.

"I called constantly, constantly," she said. "I don't know if they ever gave him his high blood pressure medication. He was a manic depressive. He had just come out of hip surgery and had been on Percocet for months." Arthritis, she explained. "He should have gone to a psychiatric ward immediately. The guy was out of his mind," she said.

She would not say whether Gregory had undergone a sex-change surgery, but both jail and police officials said he had. It is why he was sent to the women's annex.

The last time Ida Hemingway saw him was three weeks ago. She had left for Montana to sell their home there, she said. They had a fight, she said, because he wanted to put all their money into the stock market. "His big thing was he was going to make millions and leave it in trust funds for his children."

"She knew something was terribly wrong by Friday, when he hadn't called."

So she called hospitals and the jail looking for him, she said.

It's an exercise she had done before. Gregory Hemingway had been arrested at least four times in Miami-Dade County since 1996, when he was charged with aggravated assault and resisting arrest with violence.

By the time she found him, her husband had already had a bond hearing and could have been freed. Janelle Hall, the jail official, said he had an arraignment Friday at which bond was set for $1,000. Ida Mae said she is alternately stricken by guilt for having left him there and righteousness for trying to get him into mental health care.

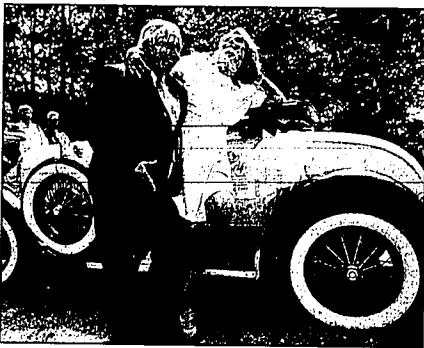

"Since Friday, she said, she had called the jail 'every single day' asking to see him."

"They said that they were not allowed visitors. I said, 'What about letters?' They told me no messages, nothing. 'No, you can't do that.' So here he is sitting there not knowing whether anybody cared about him. They said he would call out, but I think he was so out of it he couldn't."

Police say the medical examination ruled the death a natural one caused by hypertension and cardiovascular disease. The investigation into his death is closed, a detective said.

"His wife didn't know he was found dead at 5:45 a.m. Monday until later that night when his brother Patrick called and told her."

"I don't know how often they make the rounds but the guards found him at 5:30 in the morning, and here I am talking to people

WORKERS' COMPENSATION

Q. Recently the insurance company told me that my workers' compensation claim was closed two years ago, and that I was not entitled to any more benefits or compensation. Is that true?

A. Not necessarily. If you signed a lump sum agreement your benefits and compensation have ended. If you didn't, you could still be entitled to benefits and additional compensation that were not addressed earlier. For example, if you were never evaluated by a doctor for a "whole person impairment" rating, you might be entitled to have one done now and then be paid a substantial sum of money for any percentage of impairment you have. You might also be entitled to a substantial additional sum of money for any "disability" you have above your impairment. Each percentage point of either impairment or disability could be worth up to $1,360.00, depending on the year of your injury. Getting money for either "impairment" or "disability" long after your injury is virtually impossible on your own.

I have been helping injured workers all over the state of Idaho for 33 years with all aspects of their claims, and particularly with obtaining payment for impairment and/or disability. I do not charge for any service unless I am successful in obtaining benefits and/or compensation for the injured worker, and I provide free consultation on all injury, claims, workers' compensation or otherwise, through collect calls placed to the number shown below anytime during normal business hours.

Teacher raises should come after recovery

The 2002 legislative session isn't far off, and the lobbying for education dollars is already in full swing. But educators should heed the counsel of Rep. Maxine Bell, R-Jerome, and not expect another hefty raise from Idaho taxpayers this winter.

After a decade of legislative efforts to elevate teacher salaries, Idaho's average teacher pay rated second-highest among Rocky Mountain states in 1999.

The education lobby likes to point out that Idaho teachers rank low (38th) on the national salary scale. But a more useful barometer for teachers' income is a comparison between their salaries and those of other occupations in the state. Other Idaho workers combined rank 44th in the nation.

Teachers are doing well by that comparison. Average teacher salary in Idaho is $35,155, compared with $22,835 for other Idaho workers. When measured this way, Idaho teachers jumped from 34th in the nation to 12th in the 1990s. They have done well indeed.

Further, a teacher's salary is for a nine-month contract, compared with a full year of work for other occupations. Teachers may argue that they often devote their summers to advanced training. But most other workers would consider a summer spent enriching their skills to be a benefit, not a drawback.

Idaho has also worked to raise new teachers' starting pay - which was lowest among Rocky Mountain states in 1999. As a result, the starting pay jumped to $25,000 this year, in districts that opted to fund the increase.

Funding to standardize that figure statewide is a key goal for the coming session.

All things considered, Idaho has done a worthy job of elevating teacher pay. But this was done during prosperous times, when the state had increasing revenue. Now, recession flags are rising in many sectors. Heavy layoffs in the Treasure Valley and eastern Idaho have sapped tax coffers, and that means less spending next year.

We agree with Bell, who said recently that any expectations for teacher raises are unrealistic. Until Idaho and the nation show signs of recovery, requests need to be held to a minimum.

Competitive teacher pay is important, because school districts want to keep good teachers. But pay isn't the only factor in retaining teachers. Magic Valley districts can't compete financially with urban giants such as Las Vegas. But Las Vegas can't compete with Magic Valley on other fronts. We have less crime, shorter commutes and less urban stress.

The warnings from Bell should serve notice to teachers and all Idahoans. The education budget can't keep expanding as it has in the past few years. This year, it's time to hold steady.

Idaho has done a worthy job of elevating teacher pay. But this was done during prosperous times, when the state had increasing revenue. Now, recession flags are rising in many sectors.

Twin Falls man praised for honesty

On Sept. 21 while traveling through your state on my way home to Portland, Ore., I stopped for gas in your city at the Snake River Chevron station owned by Mike Hunsaker. In the process of getting gas and some merchandise, I left my wallet on the counter.

It was not until we stopped at Boise for the night that I realized it was gone. I immediately felt it was a lost cause as there was no identification in the wallet, but I felt it would be worth a call when I arrived home.

To my delight and surprise, Mr. Hunsaker had left a message on my machine notifying me they had found the wallet and to please let him know where to mail it.

I wanted to share this with you and your readers as this gentleman had to contact Chevron to even find my name and telephone number. It is important to know and I appreciate the honest and thoughtful citizens that live among you.

Mr. Hunsaker and his staff are people to be proud of. I am most grateful that I stopped at his service station.

Crisis brought out best in leadership

The crisis precipitated by the terrorist attacks has brought out the best in our national leadership. Commending President Bush for his compassion, his commitment to a long war against terrorism and his caution before launching counter attacks. I commend the congressional leaders of both parties for their high degree of unity in this time of crisis and for their decisive action in providing support to fighting terrorism.

We should keep in mind that the purpose of this war on terrorism is the defense of our nation and other nations against further terrorist attacks, not revenge against the perpetrators. To be sure, justice requires punishment of those culpable but not broad-scale attacks that would harm thousands of innocent persons. An adequate defense will require carefully targeted actions, which I am pleased to see our government is preparing.

As we carry out this war, we could do well to remember the reckless actions of our own government in the past, such as at Hiroshima and Nagasaki, Dresden and Hamburg. May I say that we have led to the needless loss of many innocent lives. We must fight this war with a greater adherence to our basic ethical principles.

We would also do well to study why it is that so many Idaho fundamentalists hate us. We can dismiss this as religious fanaticism, as indeed it is. But their hatred may be aggravated by some of the things we do - flaunting our wealth and power, not respecting other religions' sensibilities and inflicting some of the worst of American culture on other nations. This is not to excuse heinous crimes against humanity but to increase our awareness of the impact of our culture and policies on others.

To assume that we know God's will in making judgments on our fellow citizens as some religious leaders have done is to fall into the same fallacious thought patterns as the terrorist fanatics. We need to listen to what people of other nations and faiths are saying to us - God can also speak to us through them. But to think we speak for God can be very dangerous.

As we carry out this long struggle against terrorism, we need to be faithful to the principles of respect for life, justice, doing no unnecessary harm to others, tolerance, courage and perseverance. It will not be easy, but with God's help, we can and must prevail.

Printed accusations do disservice

I've always wondered why it was necessary for this paper to print court proceedings in its issues, everything ranging from barking dogs to divorces.

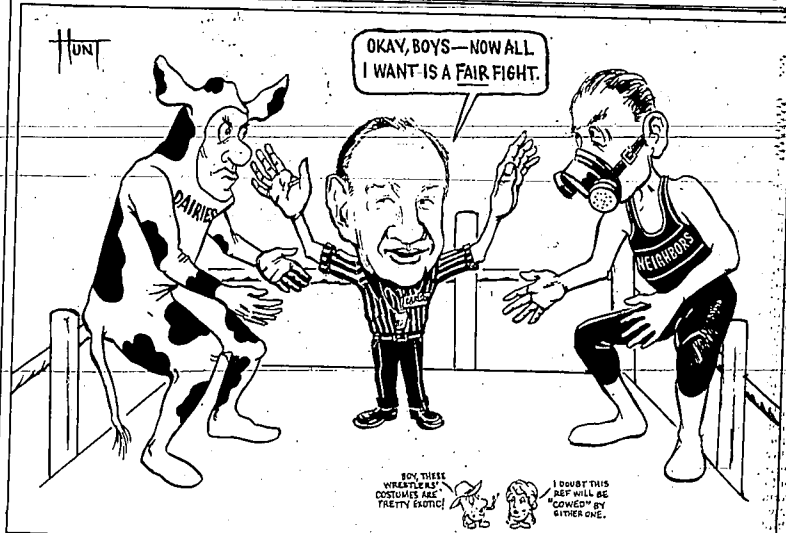

What has irritated me recently is the printing of accusations that arise from pending court cases. As example of this is the lengthy description in Tuesday's (Sept. 23) filings concerning a lawsuit filed by an ex-employee of McDonald's.

Was it really necessary to print all the accusations without any challenges? Most people have no idea the lengths a disgruntled employee will go to in order to send an ugly picture to anyone that will listen, and by printing these accusations, and yes, they are just that, accusations, in your paper, you are only helping them.

Mr. Kyle has employed hundreds of happy people in Twin Falls for many years, and you have done him a great disservice by printing these unfounded accusations.

National spirit may hook new volunteers

The great feat of statesmanship is to turn catastrophe into opportunity. That is what John McCain and Evan Bayh hope to do by converting the surge of patriotic energy unleashed by the terrorist attacks of last month into a greatly expanded program of national service for young Americans.

McCain, the Arizona Republican, and Bayh, the Indiana Democrat, are putting the finishing touches on legislation they will introduce in the Senate to encourage as many as 1 million youths every four years to spend a period of time working on projects that will benefit the country.

Their effort was under way before the events of Sept. 11, but, as McCain told me the other day, "That attack inspired patriotism and also identified many more ways in which people can serve."

Homeland defense - the new top priority for President Bush and the military establishment - is labor-intensive work. The armed forces will have their hands full hunting down the terrorist cells overseas. But there are myriad tasks here at home which can be done by well-trained volunteers - safeguarding the transportation and communications systems, assisting in monitoring the flow of people and goods across U.S. borders and providing security at large public gatherings of all kinds.

And there is the vital work of helping shattered families rebuild their lives and achieve at least some of the dreams they held before the terrorist attacks.

Some or all of these jobs might be assigned to the expanded AmeriCorps that Bayh and McCain are proposing. But much of the volunteer work, as they see it, would continue to focus on community projects, where AmeriCorps members have made themselves a vital catalyst for nonprofit organizations tackling such basic human needs as housing, food, health care and education.

AmeriCorps began in 1994, fulfilling a campaign pledge by President Clinton to provide education benefits to young people who give some time to community service. It was an idea championed by the Democratic Leadership Council, which from its start almost a decade earlier had included national service as one of its distinctive policy proposals.

It is only recently that Republicans have come to embrace the concept, but when AmeriCorps was up for renewal last year, 49 of the 50 governors endorsed it - most of them Republicans. They like the program because it is run out of the state capitals, and the AmeriCorps volunteers work for the same community groups that governors and mayors count on to deliver human services.

Habitat for Humanity, the Red Cross and other organizations use AmeriCorps volunteers - who are available to them full time - to help organize their part-time and temporary citizen-helpers, thus multiplying the effectiveness of this grass-roots work force. Teachers and principals deploy them as mentors and tutors. Some already work with local police departments and help out in floods and other natural disasters.

While the full details of the McCain-Bayh proposal are still in the works, the basic idea is to expand the ranks of AmeriCorps, which now have leveled off at 50,000, to five times that number by 2009, so that every four years, 1 million young Americans would have the exciting experience of giving a year of their lives to their country. The McCain-Bayh bill and a companion bipartisan measure in the House would continue the current policy of awarding an education grant (currently $4,725) to each person who completes a year of service.

In our interview and in an article in The Washington Monthly, McCain said he had been particularly impressed by the spirit and energy of young people in two small AmeriCorps programs where they live and work together, wearing distinctive uniforms and functioning as teams. That semi-military approach might be particularly appropriate for some of the homeland defense functions.

Bayh and McCain also want to encourage more of the college students now on work-study programs to give up their mental campus jobs and instead undertake community service projects. McCain also plans to lobby the Pentagon to develop a more flexible enlistment policy for the armed services - perhaps one where a recruit would serve 18 months on active duty and 18 months in the Reserves and walk away with $18,000 in college grants.

His goal - and it is an important one - is to increase the number of future national leaders with first-hand experience in the armed services, closing the worrisome gap between the civilian and military cultures.

In this, and every other way, expanded opportunities for national service could be a great response to the September 11 tragedy.

for those victims and their families in New York and Washington in my own way. I feel, however, that my city did very little to show grief to our nation.

Here is how I prove my point. Shortly after the event on Sept. 11 and even during the national mourning, my town did not once line Main Street with our nation's flag like it does on Memorial Day. On the other hand, they are so concerned with our school sports program that during a football game that took place a few days after the tragedy, they lined Main Street with the flags of our local school.

Now I give them a little credit for them lowering the flag on the city building to half mast. I'm not saying ban all school activities or that the game should not have taken place. I am saying that, in my view, they should show respect to our nation first and our school sports second. I did not write this letter thinking my town is the only one out there that has done this. I'm sure there are other towns that have not shown our country all their support. I just wanted to voice my opinion about it.

Meetings seem like just a formality

To the people in the 200 acres being annexed, don't expect to change anything by going to these public hearing meetings.

We, the people that were annexed last December, went to three meetings and, at the first one, the mayor and city council never answered any of our questions.

At the other two meetings, they answered questions but to their own satisfaction and not to ours. We knew their minds were made up before any meetings were ever held.

We were pressured into hooking up to the city sewer at our own expense. Our cost $800. We were told that if we didn't hook up within five years, they would charge us $5,000 to hook up. Our septic systems were working fine, but that didn't make any difference to them. We haven't seen any street lights or fire hydrants and our insurance sure hasn't gone down, and we don't have any better police or fire protection than we did. When we get our next tax bill, it will be up about 40 percent.

If I had any money to throw away, I would give it to my kids and grandkids instead of giving to the city to blow. This mayor and city council has cost the taxpayers of Jerome much more money than they can afford and all for the love of money for the city. Why does the city need 200 acres more except just for more money?

Yes, Dennis, you have accomplished many things since you were elected mayor, and most of them have cost us money. Thanks for not running again, and I hope you take some of your "yes" men with you. I wish the people who are being annexed good luck, but don't expect to get much consideration. These meetings are just a formality required by law.

Special section deserves praise

I would like to compliment you on the special section, "Attack on America," which was included in your paper of Sept. 12. It was outstanding. I was out of town for the balance of that week and had the opportunity to see newspapers in several other cities and none had a comparable section.

Sometime in the 1880s, my grandfather started saving papers reporting noteworthy events. My mother added papers during her lifetime, and I have tried to continue this tradition. Your "Attack on America" will be added to this collection.

Kimberly gets poor patriotism review

I am concerned about the patriotism of my small town's city officials. Kimberly has been my home for more than 10 years. There have been things happen in this quiet community that I have not been proud of. This month, they have disappointed me even more.

Sept. 11, 2001, has been the worst day for our nation in the new millennium thus far. Many innocent lives were lost in several cruel acts of hate-fueled terrorism. It has brought this nation and the world together once again. However, the city government of Kimberly has shown little support for our nation in my eyes.

Our president did a very respectful thing by declaring a national mourning for those lives and families that were lost and have lost. I, myself, have mourned

Victory can never be declared in war against terrorism disease

Pundits and political analysts have been groping for words trying to make sense of Sept. 11. Many argue we cannot embark on an ordinary "war" in response to grand terrorism because we have no enemy state or clearly identifiable adversary. Others say that the terrorist attacks are like oversized "crime," which requires bringing specific perpetrators to justice. In his recent address to the nation, President Bush used both metaphors cautiously, saying that he would use diplomacy and military might as war requires, and all manner of investigation as crime-ring busting requires.

War and crime metaphors both fall to capture the scope of the problem. The idea that terrorism amounts to war aggrandizes; it plays to the megalomania of the terrorists and leads us to a no-holds-barred response, while the comparison to organized crime trivializes and encourages us to think in terms of handfuls of international thugs, and an easy return to normalcy.

If Plato, that great political analyst of the ancient world, were to weigh in on the recent events, he would offer that the Arab-Islamic community, so far as it subtly fosters resentment or overtly encourages injury to others, suffers a "disease of the soul." He would advise the evil-doer (in this case, an entire society) to hurry himself to the judge as a sick man to the doctor, confess his crimes and take his punishment, lest the disease continue to fester, and rot his soul beyond repair. The lesson here seems unbearably obvious: it is impossible for people to advance themselves by destroying others; they forfeit their humanity and become monsters.

The spirit of enmity that now pervades Arabic-Islam is organic: killer martyrdom sprung up decades ago in the poorer classes of Palestine, and now has freshly spread to the middle class of Saudi Arabia and other Muslim countries. Even if this epidemic of jihad does not affect the entire body of Islam, it is certainly a disfiguring pox on its very face. Mankind looks upon it now with horror and cries out that if Islam itself cannot clear it up, the West will take a scalpel to it.

This fanaticism is not a tumor which can be neatly excised, nor is it a virus which has fatally diffused itself throughout the organism. It is more like a fungus, which spreads slowly, from central spots; it is also like the AIDS virus in its recent virulence and relative confinement to certain populations; it is also like spongiform encephalitis (mad cow) in the dread it inspires. While jihad flourishes in poverty, ignorance and despair, it is not directly caused by any of these. It is as useless to ask for its origins as to ask for the cause of the botulism bacterium; it exists and it is dead.

We simply do not know how contagious this spiritual plague is, or how dangerous it will ultimately prove. Jihad is a new form of distemper that will probably not be the undoing of civilization but that may not yet have wreaked its full havoc upon it. Because it has proved so threatening, however, we simply cannot allow it to "run its course." In this age when so much damage can be done by so few, we have no choice but to treat jihad as smallpox, and try to eradicate it. While it seems that we must use the strategies of war and crime-fighting to battle terrorism, victory will never be declared, and abatement is probably our best hope. Diseases of the spirit, like diseases of the body, will always be with us.

Wells Fargo makes deal for other banks with assets totaling $5.6B

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — Wells Fargo & Co. will buy banking companies with assets of $5.6 billion from Carl Pohlad and his family, the companies announced Friday.

Wells Fargo said it was buying banks in seven states and 117 locations that have 2,300 employees and 300,000 household customers. The companies expect to complete the transaction early in the first quarter next year, after getting regulatory approval.

Wells Fargo, based in San Francisco, is a $290 billion diversified financial services company and the largest banking company in Utah.

An undetermined number of overlapping jobs will be consolidated after the sale closes, said Jim Campbell, chief executive of Wells Fargo Bank Minnesota.

Dance clubs try to keep it all off

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — Nude dance clubs in South Salt Lake got no help in their effort to keep it all off.

Third District Judge J. Dennis Frederick on Thursday refused to grant an injunction that would have prevented the city from enforcing a ban on all-nude dancing.

"We are appealing it as fast as we can," said attorney Andrew McCullough, who represents American Bush, Club Paradise and Leather & Lace.

Since the city passed its nude-dancing ban and the clubs sued, dancers at the three clubs have continued to take it all off. But South Salt Lake has stepped up its pressure on the clubs, citing several dancers for work-card violations.

A Club Paradise spokesman said Friday the clubs will not cave in.

Football used to be fun in Moscow

I can't come over to your house and rake leaves a week from Saturday. I probably should go up to Moscow for the University of Idaho's big homecoming game against the University of Louisiana-Lafayette Ragin' Cajuns.

There's nothing like a great college football rivalry. What a shame this isn't one.

That's because the football program in Moscow, where the average mean temperature is 47 degrees, is now a member of the Sun Belt Conference.

Idaho's nearest league opponent is 1,492 miles - that's a 35-hour drive - away, in Las Cruces, N.M.

DON'T ASK ME
Steve Crump

You see, the Vandals had the Big West Conference - in which it could least play Boise State in a game that meant something - pulled out from under them last year when the BWC discontinued football. The Broncos, swells that they are, moved up to the Western Athletic Conference, but that league wasn't interested in Idaho.

Now everybody knows that Idaho and Boise State have been locked in the longest-running case of me-tooism in the state's history - over business education, over engineering, and especially over athletics. But now it's gotten silly.

And Vandal football, once the preserve of Denison Erickson and quarterbacks who threw six touchdowns passes a game, is kinda dull.

It started getting that way in 1995 when the Vandals decide they had to - had to - move up a step from the low-rent Big Sky Conference to the big-time NCAA Division I-A. If Boise State did. Never mind that Idaho's stadium was too small by I-A standards, and the fans never filled it anyway.

So Idaho phased out its old rivalries with Idaho State and Montana State and phased in the likes of North Texas State and Arkansas State. Now in the Sun Belt Conference, the Vandals' closest opponent is New Mexico State.

I freely admit that I'm not astute enough to comprehend booster-club politics in Idaho, but I can count.

In the 5 1/2 seasons before the Vandals left the Big Sky Conference, they had a record of 44-20-6. In the six appearances in the NCAA Division I-AA playoffs, produced 14 players who went on to the NFL and - the most important index of success - beat Boise State five times.

In the 5 1/2 seasons since Idaho left the Big Sky, it has a record of 32-28, one conference championship, has sent four Vandals to the NFL and beat BSU twice in six tries.

I wonder if that's progress.

Could it be that Idaho football was better off slumming in the Big Sky Conference and Division I-AA than reaching for bright lights and TV money? Maybe football was fun then.

Understand, though, that there's an ominous history here.

Idaho joined the Pacific Conference, the precursor to the University of Southern California. It finally quit in 1958, after losing 14 straight conference games and 29 of 34 over a decade.

My Uncle Richard, an avid Vandal fan, went to see them play Shofur when he was stationed at air base in the Bay Area in 1942.

"They were down 54-7," he used to tell me. "Then Stanford took the field."

Idaho did not once have a winning record between 1939 and 1963 - that's 22 seasons, discounting the three years during World War II when college football wasn't played. Eighteen of those years were in a conference in which the Vandals were breathtakingly outclassed.

So even though Idaho lost its first four games of the season, don't expect reality to filter into the Kibbie Dome anytime soon. Besides, it's not all bad for the rest of us Idahoans.

Geographically speaking, if Moscow's in the Sun Belt, that leaves Twin Falls in Margaritaville.

DEER SEASON KICKS OFF

Hunters report prolific prey F&G operates checkpoints through busy opening weekend

By Jennifer Sandmann
Times-News writer

BELLEVUE - Hunters rolled through an Idaho Department of Fish and Game checkpoint Saturday with reports of numerous deer sightings.

Opening weekend of general deer season wraps up today, and so do Fish and Game checkpoints. The state employees gather hunter and deer population trend data during the first weekend of the hunt - the busiest time of the month-long general season. The Timmerman Hill checkpoint about 10 miles south of Bellevue on Idaho Highway 75 is one of the region's busiest. Last year more than 500 hunters passed through the opening weekend checkpoint.

"We saw more deer this year than we've seen in a long time," said hunter Andy Wiseman of Filer.

He and sons David, 13, and Michael, 10, hunted in the hills between Halley and Ketchum. They had not been hunting in the Wood River area for several years.

David brought home his first catch Saturday. The trio didn't have to hike very far up into the forest to find deer.

"Ours were down pretty low," Andy Wiseman said.

Wildlife biologist Bruce Palmer from the Jerome office of Fish and Game said the checkpoints allow the department to count hunter success rates and gauge the age and health of deer populations. Hunters are required to stop at the checkpoint on their way home whether or not they had game.

Officials are looking for information about the average age of hunters, whether or not they have had a hunter education class, and where they hunted. A number of hunters used ATVs. A few had horses along.

Biologists this year are taking small meat samples from the carcasses to begin gathering DNA information on herds. Initially, the DNA mapping is being looked to as an enforcement mechanism to identify deer killed in closed hunting areas.

Mike Todd, conservation educator for Idaho Fish and Game in Jerome, said good hunter success is expected this year in Fish and Game's Little Wood and Big Wood drainage "units" and in the Big Smoky unit north of Fairfield.

"Generally, our northern units are the best place to go for deer hunting," he said.

Last year's mild winter allowed deer populations to thrive, but the drought conditions could make hunting more difficult, Todd said. Hunters will have a tough time being quiet with dry underbrush crunching underfoot.

Hunters were anxious to get carcasses home Saturday. Warm temperatures made keeping the meat cold a challenge.

Younger hunters like David Wiseman also were passing through the Timmerman checkpoint Saturday. Fish and Game has a youth hunt that allows children under 15 to hunt does and fawns.

Youth hunts are a hunter recruitment tool, Todd said. Hunters are getting older. The average hunter is a 42-year-old white male.

Regional tallies from the weekend's checkpoints will be available at the beginning of the week.

TWIN FALLS - Individuals and organizations across the Magic Valley are rallying in support of victims of the Sept. 11 terrorist attacks in New York City, Washington, D.C., and Pennsylvania.

Here are some of the efforts:

- A Burley cleaning business is offering to clean flags for half-price and donate the proceeds to the relief efforts in New York and Washington, D.C.

Through Jan. 1, Simon's Cleaners is offering to clean flags for half-price and donate all the proceeds to the American Red Cross disaster relief. Kelly Simon said.

Simon said he came up with the idea after hearing that many people were throwing away their flags when they became dirty. Full-price for the average flag is between $5 and $10, Simon said. Simon's Cleaners is located at 2203 Overland Ave. in the Overland Shopping Center.

- Albertson's customers and employees across the nation have already raised nearly $5 million to benefit Red Cross disaster relief efforts.

"The response from people around the country has been overwhelming," said Skip Seltz, senior vice president at the American Red Cross. "Albertson's in-store campaign has been instrumental in helping everyone feel they can have a part in supporting recovery and relief efforts - whether you have just 10 cents or a hundred dollars, this program makes it easy."

to participate."

The fund-raising program will run at least until Oct. 11.

- Aby's, which has restaurants in the Magic Valley, has launched a "Raise the Flag" donation program, with a national fund-raising goal of $1.6 million.

Aby's restaurants are asking for donations of $1 to the September 11th Fund, which benefits the victims of the terrorist attacks. In return, customers will receive

American flag appreciation cards that they can sign and have posted in the restaurants. "This is another great example of how the community is joining together during this time of adversity," said Liz Worley of The Bailey Company, which operates the Twin Falls Abby's restaurant.

- The American Legion has recruited its nationwide Family Support Network to assist families of troops expected to be called to active duty, said a press release forwarded by James Crouson of Wendell, adjacent to Post 41.

Families of deployed military troops needing assistance in everyday needs can call toll-free at 1-800-504-4098. Their requests will be referred to nearby Legion posts for assistance.

Burley Wal-Mart may chip in for traffic light as part of expansion

By Ruth Streeter
Times-News writer

BURLEY - A Wal-Mart official said that the retail giant is considering chipping in for a traffic light as part of its Burley expansion project.

"That's something we are considering seriously," Wal-Mart spokeswoman Amy Hill said last week.

City officials recently objected to Wal-Mart's plans for fixing traffic congestion in North Burley, saying the proposed remedies were insufficient and would create new problems.

Hill said that it is important for all of the city's concerns to be addressed and that people be comfortable with Wal-Mart's expansion.

Wal-Mart engineers are taking ideas that were discussed at a Friday meeting with city leaders back to Wal-Mart representatives to be approved, City Administrator Mark Mitton said Friday afternoon.

Those ideas have not been finalized, Mitton said. City leaders still want to talk with area businesses and the City Council also has to approve any plans, he said.

Ideas include having Wal-Mart contribute to a traffic light at Wal-Mart's proposed new entrance on East Fifth Street North. Still to be determined is whether the light would go up upon completion of expansion or further down the road, Mitton said. That would be spelled out in a written agreement, he said.

Another idea is for Wal-Mart to move the curb back to the superstore's property line in order to create an extra east-bound lane on East Fifth, Mitton said.

City Councilman Curtis Mendenhall said he also supports a traffic light at Wal-Mart's northern entrance. He also favors widening East Fifth to create a four-lane road, which wouldn't be a cost-prohibitive measure for Wal-Mart to take on, he said.

Other ideas include allowing only right-turn exits from East Fourth Street North, Wal-Mart's western entrance, onto Overland Avenue. Left-turn entrances from Overland Avenue onto East Fourth would still be allowed, Mitton said.

Bill Kyle, who owns the Burley McDonald's, said that requiring only right turns from East Fourth would have little effect on his business. Few people brave crossing four lanes of traffic to get from Wal-Mart to McDonald's, he said.

TF woman dies in crash near Stanley

The Times-News

STANLEY - A Twin Falls woman was killed Friday night in a one-vehicle rollover on Idaho Highway 75 about five miles south of Stanley, the Idaho State Police reported.

Jessica L. Franklin, 20, of Twin Falls, was not wearing a seat belt and was partially ejected from a 1992 Jeep Cherokee, an ISP news release said. She had been riding with driver Nathan D. Southern, 22, of Twin Falls. The Jeep was headed north when it went off the highway. Southern overcorrected, and the Jeep rolled two and a half times in the southbound lane, the ISP said.

The accident occurred at about 7:30 p.m. The ISP said alcohol was a contributing factor to the crash, which remained under investigation Saturday.

There was no word on Southern's condition Saturday. The ISP said he was taken to St. Luke's Wood River Medical Center in Ketchum.

Bats pose a rabies threat

Report contact to health officials

By Lorraine Caveren
Times-News correspondent

TWIN FALLS - Ghosts, goblins, broomsticks and bats.

It's that time of year. And although people associate bats with Halloween, South Central District Health officials warn that any time bat contact is made, the district should be notified immediately.

Bats are a major animal vehicle for passing rabies," said SCDH Director Cheryl Juntunen.

If a person is bitten by a bat the bite would be hard to see, she said.

The Center for Disease Control and Prevention recommends that if contact is made with a bat, rabies shots be considered, she said.

The concern about bats was raised at a recent district board of health meeting, when SCDH Community Director Maggi Machala said there had been an incident involving a bat last summer at a summer camp near Stanley. It wasn't reported until a month following the incident, she said.

Bats had been found in a cabin where children were sleeping. The children were removed from the cabin while it was bat-proofed. It was later learned that bats roost near the camp.

After a month, it was difficult to find the children and counselors who had been there. The camp serves children from throughout Idaho, Machala said. District staff had to locate counselors who had gone on to college in other states and overseas.

If the district had been notified immediately of the incident, those involved would have been warned right away that they should talk with their physician about the possibility of rabies shots.

The camp was also given better information about bat-proofing.

Machala was not sure if bat-proofing conducted originally by the camp officials was sufficient.

"Bats can get into tiny places," she said.

In Remembrance of Andy Anderson

Arnold Charles (Andy) Anderson, beloved father and grandfather, passed away September 29, 2001, at the age of 89 in Plano, Texas, where he had lived near his son Gary and family since September 1995. Andy Anderson was a prominent member of the Bull and Twin Falls communities from 1948 to 1995.

Mr. Anderson was born in St. John, Onondaga County, Idaho, on September 17, 1912, the youngest son of Andrew Lars and Hannah Elizabeth Josephson Anderson. He was the last survivor of six children.

After graduating as valedictorian of his high school class and attending high school in Malad, Idaho, he attended Adnet Aviation and Automobile School in Portland, Oregon, where he graduated in December 17, 1932.

Mr. Anderson was employed as a mechanic at Hill Field Air Force Base in Ogden, Utah. At the age of 29, because of his airplane mechanical training, he had 350 people under his supervision. He developed an assembly line for building generators and magneto for the airplanes used in World War II, a technique that cut manufacturing time in half. He was recognized in the Ogden Standard Examiner for this accomplishment.

Mr. Anderson married Barbara Taylor in the Mormon Temple in Salt Lake City, Utah, in 1939. In 1941, doing most of the work themselves, they built their first home together in Ogden, Utah. Andy was employed as service manager and later sales manager for Hinkley Dodge in Ogden. In 1948, they purchased a dealership in Buhl, Idaho, where they resided for the remainder of their lives.

This successful car dealership was first known as Andy Anderson Motor Company and later Andy & Bob's Motor Company. Andy and Barbara divorced in 1971.

Mr. Anderson was an active individual. In 1948, at his first meeting of the Buhl Chamber of Commerce, he was elected president. He was also a president and 35-year member of the Kiwanis Club. Because of his quick wit and public speaking ability, Andy often served as master of ceremonies for many civic and club functions. Mr. Anderson's hobbies were bowling and golf. He delighted in telling the story about the golf pro at the Buhl Country Club who, after three lessons told him to stick with fishing because he was never going to make it in golf. That comment challenged him to prove the pro wrong. He practiced, played a lot, and won many tournaments, including the Idaho State Senior Championship when he was 72 years old.

Mr. Anderson married Gwen Neilsen in 1972. During their 27 years of marriage, they were active in the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints and participated in American Casino's business and public relations activities. Mrs. Gwen Anderson passed away on March 11, 1999, in Las Vegas, Nevada. Following her death, Mr. Anderson moved to Plano, Texas, where he lived in a luxury retirement community near his son Gary.

He is survived by his former wife, Barbara Taylor Kaplan of Walnut Creek, California. He is also survived by daughter, Bonnie Jean Anderson Mich and son-in-law, Dennis Mich of Healdsburg, California; son Gary Arnold Anderson; daughter-in-law Karen Brooks;

ANDERSON, AND GRANDSON-BROOKS

Anderson and Bradley Anderson of Plano, Texas; and daughter Patricia Lynn Anderson Hacker, son-in-law Hacker, granddaughters Stacey Hacker and grandson Bret Hacker of Walnut Creek, California. He is also survived by his stepson Craig Neilsen and grandson Ray Neilsen, both of Las Vegas, Nevada.

During his time in Texas, Mr. Anderson rediscovered his love for singing and entertaining. He bore a striking resemblance to John Wayne and perfected his "John Wayne act." He quickly became a star of Cottonwood Estates, where he lived, bringing much pleasure to the residents there, as well as to many friends and family to whom he sang the apes of his songs. In another time, had the opportunity been presented, he had the talent and charisma to be successful as an entertainer. He charmed people wherever he went and never met a stranger. Arnold C. Anderson was loved by many and will be greatly missed.

Memorial service to be held Monday, October 8, 2001, 2:00 p.m., The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, Twin Falls 11th Ward Building, 847 Eastland Drive North, Twin Falls, Idaho. Services will also be held at Benson-Horsley Funeral Home, 122 West 300 N., Malad, Idaho, Tuesday, October 9, 2001, 9 a.m. Interment following at Pleasantview Cemetery, Malad, Idaho. A reception will be held at the Shuler Country Club following the Twin Falls service.

Flowers may be sent Monday, October 8, to 847 Eastland Drive N., Twin Falls.

Irene Pauline Theate Bento

Irene Pauline Theate Bento went to be with her Lord October 5, 2001.

She was born at Downs, Kansas, on February 7, 1916, the daughter of Henry G. and Dorothy Hansen Theate, and was baptized at Zion Lutheran Church, Downs, Kansas, on March 5, 1916. She attended a country public school at Downs and then a Lutheran high school, where she was a member of the Rev. Otto H. Mueller, would pitch for both teams, and that he would always place her at first base, not in left, she always played in left where she belonged. Rev. Mueller confirmed Irene on June 8, 1930, at Zion Lutheran Church, Downs.

Irene came from a loving family of seven sisters and two brothers. When she was 18 years old, she and an older sister, Frieda, accompanied their youngest sister, Evelyn, to Detroit, Michigan, where they lived for several years. Irene was killed in an auto-pedestrian hit-and-run accident in Detroit. Irene stayed in Detroit with Evelyn for several years. She then accompanied Evelyn to Olathe, Kansas, where Evelyn attended Kansas State School for the Deaf.

After living in Olathe for a short time, Irene moved to Twin Falls, where she was active in the Emanuel Lutheran Church and the Walther League. A few years later, she moved to Lofg Beach and Bellflower, California, where she worked at Douglas Aircraft. She married James Barton on August 7, 1953. They moved to Hemet, California, where she worked for Hemet Castings. James passed

Barbara Jean Froom

Barbara Jean Froom, 72-year-old Heyburn resident, died Friday, October 5, 2001, at the Cassia Regional Medical Center in Burley.

She was born February 2, 1929, in Ogden, Utah; the daughter of Frank and Margaret Winn Hermansen. Barbara attended schools in Paul and graduated from high school in Hawthorne, California. She married George "Mel" Froom on April 19, 1946, in Torrance, California. She loved gardening, crocheting and making crafts for her children and grandchildren.

Barbara was a loving wife, mother, grandmother, sister, and mother-in-law. She will be deeply missed by her family and friends.

Survivors include her husband, George of Heyburn; a daughter, Trudy (Don) Bundy of Lake Stevens, Washington; two sons, Thomas Allan (Pam) Froom of Garden Valley, Idaho, and Raymond Todd (Cathy) Froom of Rancho Palos Verde, California; a sister, Dolores Landers of Paul; a brother, Francis Hermansen of Paul; ten grandchildren, and seven great-grandchildren. She was preceded in death by her parents; a brother, and a son, George Timothy Froom in 1988.

Funeral services will be held at 11 a.m. Tuesday, October 9, 2001, at the Payne Mortuary, 221 West Main Street in Burley, with Bishop Doug Mabey officiating. A private family burial will take place at a later date in the Paul Cemetery. Friends may call at the Payne Mortuary, 221 West Main Street in Burley, on Monday from 6 to 8 p.m. and from 10 to 10:45 a.m. prior to the funeral on Tuesday.

Warrant issued for ex-police chief

IDAHO CITY (AP) — Former Idaho City Police Chief John Cobley is charged with six counts of contributing to the delinquency of minors and one count of battery involving an under-age girl.

A warrant for Cobley's arrest was issued Friday after Ada County prosecutors filed a criminal complaint against him.

The complaint was filed after Cobley requested more time before entering a plea to felony charges of intimidating a witness Friday morning in 4th District Court. The plea hearing is now set for Nov. 9.

Cobley, who had been Idaho City's only police officer, was arrested Sept. 13 on the intimidation charge.

The City Council fired him on Sept. 25, the day he was indicted on charges of threatening Peggy Cobley, his ex-wife, and an unidentified juvenile girl, reportedly asking them to give false information to investigators.

Ask The Director.

Q. I've heard the name "funeral director" all my life but don't know much about them. Just what does a funeral director do?

A. Funeral directors are licensed professionals whose role is to offer guidance and caring service to families who have experienced the death of a loved one. The overall goal of a funeral director is to help you arrange a funeral service that honors your loved one's life the way you want at a price you can afford.

The funeral director is the primary counselor to the family, guiding them through the details that must be taken care of when planning a funeral service. Those details include:

- Selecting a casket.
- Gathering correct information for an obituary.
- Arranging for pallbearers.
- Selecting flowers.
- Choosing clothing for the loved one.

For more information, please call us today.

Clamp on gunshot hole in pipeline stops leak

FAIRBANKS, Alaska (AP) — Crews on Saturday installed a clamp over a bullet hole in the Trans-Alaska pipeline, finally stopping a leak that spewed 285,600 gallons of oil onto the wilderness over three days.

With the temporary repair in place, workers turned their attention to a permanent fix and the massive job of cleaning up some 75 miles north of Fairbanks. Regulators said there was no evidence that any wildlife has been affected.

"We anticipate it will take literally years to get the area free of contamination," said Bill Howitt, a vice president of Alyeska Pipeline Service Co., which operates the 800-mile pipeline.

A man who had been drinking shot the pipeline Thursday with a hunting rifle in what the governor called "a hare-brained act of violence." Before the clamp was installed, oil under high pressure sprayed through the hole. At one point, oil flowed onto the ground at a rate as high as 140 gallons per minute.

The pipeline, which carries about 17 percent of the nation's oil production, had to be shut down.

Department of Environmental Conservation Commissioner Michelle Brown, who toured the area Saturday, said it could have been worse.

"It's actually a pretty small containment area for such a large amount of oil spilled," Brown said.

The suspect, Daniel Carson Lewis, 37, is charged with felony assault, weapons misconduct, criminal mischief and driving while intoxicated in connection with the shooting. He was being held in Fairbanks on $1.5 million bail.

According to documents, Lewis, who has an extensive criminal background, had been drinking before shooting the pipeline with a .338-caliber rifle. He allegedly fired four shots before the fifth penetrated the pipe.

Lewis then fled on an all-terrain vehicle, according to the documents. His brother, Randolph Lewis, remained at the scene and explained to pipeline security officers what happened. He said his brother, Daniel, had pointed the rifle at him and threatened to kill him.

Investigators have not determined why Daniel Lewis started shooting.

Workers built a series of dikes to contain the spilled oil and keep it away from the Tolovana River, about a mile away. The oil was being vacuumed into trucks and transferred to storage tanks. By Saturday afternoon, nearly 80,000 gallons had been collected.

A permanent clamp on the pipeline was expected to be in place by Sunday morning, and it was to be back in operation a few hours later.

Gov. Tony Knowles said state officials would be taking another look at security along the pipeline. Alyeska had beefed up security in the wake of the Sept. 11 terrorist attacks.

The pipeline carries about 1 million barrels of oil a day.

Simpson shelves bill temporarily

IDAHO FALLS (AP) — Citing a more pressing need for national unity, Idaho Republican Rep. Mike Simpson has temporarily withdrawn his proposed National Monument Fairness Act.

Simpson said two factors led him to postpone debate on the bill until next year: There was no guarantee the bill would even be heard by the full House, given all that needs to be done in the wake of the terrorist attacks. And Simpson said he didn't want to bring up such a divisive issue in a time when unity is needed.

"We're not trying to do things that divide us. I didn't want to be on the floor questioning each other's motivations in this environment," Simpson said.

The bill would require the president to involve state and local officials before creating a national monument. It also would require congressional approval of any monument designation or expansion larger than 50,000 acres.

The bill is seen as a reaction to former President Bill Clinton's numerous monument designations during his final term in office, including a 661,287-acre expansion of Craters of the Moon in southern Idaho near Arco.

The bill had been scheduled for a committee hearing Sept. 12. After the attacks it was rescheduled for Sept. 26. Following a conversation with House Resources Chairman James Hansen, R-Utah, Simpson decided to hold off until next year.

Hinckley: Faithful must remain humble

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — Mormon church president Gordon B. Hinckley on Saturday said the religion continues to grow and gain worldwide acceptance, but he warned the faithful against becoming arrogant.

"Those who observe us say that we are moving into the mainstream of religion. We are not changing. The world's perception of us is changing," said Hinckley at the faith's semi-annual General Conference. "We teach the same doctrine. ... But the old hatred is disappearing, the old persecution is dying. People are better informed."

He said that the Mormon church will endure any hardships to preach the word of God.

"We have become as a great army. We are now a people of consequence. Our voice is heard when we speak up," Hinckley said. "The world may be troubled with wars and rumors of war, but this cause will go forward."

The 91-year-old church leader is considered a living prophet by the 11 million members of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints.

He said this is a time of miracles and technology. He encouraged members to continue to improve and warned against modern evils.

"We live in a season when fierce men do terrible and despicable things," he said, mentioning the Sept. 11 terrorist attacks in New York and Washington.

He also said church members must not become arrogant and self-righteous.

"We cannot be smug or egotistical. We must reach out to all mankind," Hinckley said.

Saturday afternoon, Elder M. Russell Ballard of the Quorum of the Twelve Apostles told church members to practice tolerance and inclusion, especially in communities where Mormons are in the majority.

Kindergartners Jesus Medrano and Juan Sanchez work on coloring a handout as English as a second language kindergarten instructor Olivia Badger looks on. ESL kindergarten is in its third year at Heyburn Elementary School, and teachers are seeing results.

ESL kindergarten in Heyburn gives some students an extra boost

By Shari Chaney
Times-News writer

HEYBURN — The nine students sing the alphabet and the days of the week. They are learning shapes and colors. It's just like kindergarten, but it's the English-as-a-second-language version — and it's raising test scores at Heyburn Elementary School.

The ESL program at Heyburn allows students to take a normal session of kindergarten in the morning and stay for ESL kindergarten in the afternoon, where concepts that are learned earlier are taught again in both English and Spanish.

ESL kindergarten is a program found district-wide in Minidoka County, and "I think it is a district-wide success," said Colleen Johnson, the principal at Paul Elementary School.

Heyburn Elementary has been tracking test scores that show just how successful the program is.

Out of seven third-grade students who did not have the option of attending ESL kindergarten, but who would have qualified, six students who took the Idaho Reading Indicator this fall were reading below grade level.

One student was reading near grade level, and none of the students were reading at grade level, according to the test results.

Out of 15 students who have completed the ESL kindergarten program in the past two years, only four students were reading below grade level this fall, according to the test results. Six students were reading near grade level, and the other five students were reading above grade level.

Angel Prano, a kindergarten teacher at Heyburn, said she has seen brothers and sisters come through before and after the program was offered. The IRI scores keep getting higher and higher, she said.

Students qualify for the program after a taking a home language survey and Woodcock-Munoz Language Proficiency test.

If there is something they don't understand in the morning class, they will hear it in the ESL class and be able to go back to the morning class and understand better, said Olivia Badger, an ESL kindergarten instructor.

Students are hearing the same concepts twice and in both languages, said Jodie Mills, who oversees federal programs testing and data collection.

Early in the year, Spanish and English are spoken equally, each about 50 percent of the time, Badger said.

As the year progresses and the children are understanding better, Badger said, the use of Spanish gets smaller.

The students read Accelerated Reader books in their morning kindergarten class, Badger said. Those teachers make the books available to Badger, who reads them to the afternoon class in both Spanish and English. Then students understand the story better when they are tested the next day, Badger said.

Tina Hernandez said communication with teachers and willingness to work together is one of the most important pieces of the program.

"That makes or breaks the program," Hernandez said. Hernandez, who is the ESL instructor working with students in first through sixth grade, said she is dealing with fewer students in her program because of the ESL kindergarten. Many students can test out of the ESL program after kindergarten, she said.

The whole goal is preparing them for the first grade, Mills said. Students who go through the ESL kindergarten are overwhelmingly more successful.

Not only are children learning things every kindergarten student needs to learn, but they are learning it in a different language, Mills said. Some students have a hard enough time with the first task. ESL kindergarten allows them to learn both kindergarten concepts and language.

All elementary schools in the district have an ESL kindergarten program, which is funded solely by the district, Mills said.

"It's one of the most important services we can offer," Johnson said.

Teresa Vargas, a first-grade teacher at Heyburn, said there is a test all first-graders take to see if they learned what they were supposed to in kindergarten. Vargas compared test scores of those who would have qualified for ESL kindergarten if the program was offered at the time to those who have participated in ESL kindergarten.

Before the program was offered, 35 percent passed the test; that has risen to 99 percent.

"The growth is phenomenal," Prano said. "It's a program we believe in."

Grant for summer baseball learning program shows results in Raft River

By Shari Chaney
Times-News writer

RAFT RIVER — Little League baseball season has long been over, but summer learning program held in conjunction with baseball continues to reap the benefits.

Earlier this year, Raft River Elementary School received an $8,350 grant from the Idaho Department of Education to fund the same summer learning program next year that this year was funded by the school district.

Principal Jeff Birch said the program has helped raise test scores and was overwhelmingly supported by the community.

Before the summer reading program began, Little League previously worked in conjunction with the local library during the summer to bring baseball practice and library time together, Birch said.

Birch said that members of the Parent Teacher Organization and the athletic program came to him and asked for a way to get additional baseball equipment and improve the reading program.

The grant was the answer, Birch said.

Almost half of the grant money will be spent on library books for the reading program, Birch said. The grant will also pay for new Little League equipment, prizes for students when they reach reading goals and T-shirts for those with 80 percent or better attendance. The grant also pays for the instructors who teach in the program.

Last summer, the program ran from 9 a.m. until noon Monday through Wednesday, mid-June to mid-July. Almost 50 students participated in the program, said Tina Look, a Raft River teacher who helped coordinate the summer program.

Coupling the summer program with Little League allowed for more participation, Tina Look said. In a place where people are spread out, it allows them to come to town for baseball practice and for the summer reading program.

From 9 to 10 a.m. the focus was on reading, Look said. Students had to attend this hour in order to participate in the other stations.

From 10 to 11 a.m. those who had Little League would go to their games or practices. Students who didn't play baseball would rotate to a new station, Look said. Everyone would rotate to a final station again for the final hour.

Stations included art and science activities, PE and math. On Mondays, the Butley Public Library provided library activities from 11 a.m. until noon, Look said.

Coupling the summer program with Little League allowed for more participation, Look said. In a place where people are spread out, it allows them to come to town for baseball practice and for the summer reading program.

Look said she has a student now in third grade who used the Mad Minute program during summer school and now tests very high using the program in class. Look said even the student recognizes how summer school helped.

"He says, 'The reason I'm doing so well is I did this in summer school,'" she said.

Look also recognized two students now in the first grade, who were ready to read at the end of kindergarten. With the summer program, they began reading during the summer and have continued progressing this fall.

Children do tend to lose information during the summer, Birch said. A big part of the summer program was to "maintain or enhance learning gained through the school year," Birch said. Idaho Reading Indicator test scores for Raft River seem to show that the summer program did just that.

For those who are third-graders this year, 26 percent were reading at grade level last year; 55 percent are reading at grade level this year.

Meanwhile, the numbers of students who are reading near or below reading level are dropping. Forty-three percent were reading near grade level last year, and only 27 percent are reading near grade level this year. Twenty-six percent were reading below grade level last year, and that percentage has dropped to 18 percent this year.

"We met what we wanted to do," Birch said.

There was a tremendous positive response from the community, Birch said. Many people commented that the kids loved to come to the program. Birch said that might have been because the program was more than knowledge. It included art and recreation, as well as reading and math.

Bonnie Tracy, a teacher at Raft River Elementary, lives in Almo and spearheaded a similar program for the students in Almo, Birch said.

A photograph of Navy Reserve Lt. Cmdr. Ronald James Vauk, of Nampa, was on display after a memorial mass at St. Paul's Catholic Church in Nampa, Saturday, Vauk, 37, died in the Sept. 11 terrorist attack at the Pentagon while serving as the Watch Commander at the Naval Command Center.

Nampa packs church to honor Pentagon victim

NAMPA (AP) — The community gathered Saturday to remember Pentagon attack victim Lt. Cmdr. Ronald James Vauk as a man who met all his responsibilities for his family and the U.S. Navy. Family and friends, political leaders and fellow officers packed St. Paul's Catholic Church in a memorial mass for the 37-year-old Navy reservist killed on Sept. 11 in the terrorist attack.

Vauk, a graduate of the Naval Academy and a former submarine officer, had begun his two-week reserve training at the Pentagon just the day before the plane crash. He was among 189 killed there, along with former Sugar City resident Brady Howell.

Vauk was the watch commander at the Navy command center when the hijacked plane hit the building. He was posthumously awarded the Purple Heart.

"Ron was in the military office. He showed up for duty and was in his post. In a shocking way, his life was demanded of him," said the Rev. Gerald Funk.

Vauk attended St. Paul's Catholic School and Nampa High School. He graduated from the academy in 1987 and served on the submarines USS Glenard P. Lipscomb and USS Oklahoma City. He had been a part of the Johns Hopkins University Applied Physics Laboratory's Submarine Technology Department and was a Navy Reservist since 1993.

Vauk and his wife have a 3-year-old son, Liam. Mrs. Vauk is expecting a second child in late November.

Friends said he selected the two-week period to serve at the Pentagon because he wanted to finish the annual training before the second baby would be born.

"We share in the loss of your son, but all in the gathering know he's not lost," Gov. Dirk Kempthorne told the family.

Kempthorne said even if Vauk had known about the airliner headed toward the Pentagon, he still would have been on the scene to help.

"Ron Vauk didn't die in vain. He was a patriot and the blood shed will only water the tree of liberty," the governor said.

Rear Adm. Mark Feichtinger said Vauk was special to become a submariner on the two fast-attack ships.

"There is a camaraderie that goes very deep," he said. "It's not easy to make the cut for subs. I'm sure that when the physicians at his regular checkups listened to his heart, they didn't hear, 'Thump, thump, thump.' They heard, 'Go, go, go.'"

Murderer may face new charges

BOISE (AP) — Ada County prosecutors will start focusing on whether to charge convicted murderer Darrell Payne in two separate cases of violent sexual assault.

Payne was identified last year as a suspect in sexual assaults of two 14-year-old girls in Boise's Barber Park and the rape of a woman in her apartment. Both crimes were committed in June, before Samantha Maher was abducted near the Boise River Greenbelt, raped and murdered on July 6.

Payne was convicted of Maher's murder on Thursday after a two-week jury trial.

"Now that we are out from under the pre-trial publicity issues, we will be examining those cases and working closely with the victims," Ada County Prosecutor Greg Bower said. "We are attentive to their needs and will be working with them over the short term."

Ada County Sheriff Vaughn Killen said Payne was identified as a suspect in the Barber Park case when investigators found a mention of the crimes in a suicide note in Payne's hotel room at the time of his arrest for Maher's murder. The note also referred to another rape in the Boise area in June.

A few weeks after that rape, two teen-age girls said a nude man with a handgun approached them while they were sunbathing in Barber Park on June 27, 2000, and forced them into the woods. Both were sexually assaulted and one was raped, according to reports. Police believe Payne was the rapist.

Not much has been released about the other reported rape, which occurred June 8, 2000. A woman told detectives she discovered a man with a gun in her apartment around 5:40 a.m. The man first asked the woman for money and then sexually assaulted her before leaving the scene, according to Boise Police reports.

Payne could get the death penalty for the first-degree murder, kidnapping, robbery, and rape of Maher.

His sentencing is expected next year.

Fifth may become a right-turn-in, right-turn-out entrance and exit, Mitton said. A median would also be placed in the middle of the road to prevent left turns in and out of the parking lot. It would also prevent left turns in and out of the Snake River Plaza.

Steve Thompson, the marketing manager for the Snake River Plaza, said that he supports a traffic light for Wal-Mart's proposed new entrance.

He said that he has been considering moving the plaza's main entrance further east on East Fifth, right across from Wal-Mart's, to prevent the traffic light would be.

John Evans Sr., the president of D.L. Evans Bank, said that a traffic light should be installed at the intersection of Overland Avenue and East Fourth at Wal-Mart's expense. That entrance is also his main access.

"We didn't have a problem prior to Wal-Mart coming in,"

Evans said. "It's just what's fair, is what we're talking about."

Mitton said that a traffic light there is not feasible because it would be too close to the existing traffic signal at the intersection of Overland Avenue and East Fifth. Cars would not have enough "stacking" distance, he said.

Times-News writer Ruth Streeker can be reached at the Mini-Cassia Bureau at 677-4042, Ext. 109, or by e-mail at rstreeker@magicvalley.com.

The incident at the camp illustrates that people should notify the health department if contact has or could have been made with bats, Machala said.

"We don't require them to tell us every incident," said Cheryl Becker, district epidemiologist.

But the CDC recommends that if it is a bat is found in a room with sleeping children, the children be evaluated by their health-care provider, Becker said.

If the bat can be easily caught and contained, that is the easiest way to find out if the bat carries rabies, she said.

"Use gloves and don't touch it with your bare hands," Becker said.

The bat can be taken to a veterinarian to determine if rabies is present, she said.

"Very few bats are rabid," Becker said.

When rabies shots are given it is considered a reportable situation by state code and must be reported to the health department, she said.

Chimneys are a place where bats sometimes roost. Cabins in the mountains are another place where bats can sometimes be found, Becker said.

The health district can provide information about bat-proofing your home or it can be found on a number of web sites, she said.

"We do have bats in Idaho, but not a high number," she said.

Times-News correspondent Lorraine Cramer can be reached at 436-1351 or lcramer@boiseidn.com.

Bat bits

Bats belong to the order Chiroptera. Out of the four families of bats found in the United States, there is only one confirmed family living in Idaho: Vesperugo. In this one family, there are eight different genera occurring in Idaho, with fourteen different species among them.

Vesperugo demonstrate a diversity of roosting sites including buildings — especially attic areas, caves, mines, fractures in rock, and hollowed locations or foliage roosts in trees. For more information on bats in Idaho go to <http://imnh.lsu.edu/digitalatlas/>

Glitzy Jackson Hole, poor Mexican village become unlikely siblings

JACKSON, Wyo. (AP) — The towns of Jackson and San Simeon appear to have little in common. One is a ski town where the average home is $1.25 million. The other is a village in central Mexico where indoor plumbing is a luxury.

Yet their economies have been linked, some say inextricably, since residents of San Simeon and neighboring Hueyotlipan began coming to Jackson about 10 years ago to fill the surfeit of hotel and restaurant jobs.

With only several paved roads and little telephone service, San Simeon is not on any maps. Even the Mexican Embassy had difficulty tracking down information about the rural, high-plain community in Tlaxcala, Mexico's smallest state.

Yet over time, through word of mouth and family ties, the immigration wave coming from the area has changed Jackson from being a place known for its Rockefeller and Cheneys to a community where fiestas and Spanish radio also are part of the scenery.

The connection is also felt in San Simeon, where Jackson Hole T-shirts, key chains and snowboarding posters are common sights.

"You see a lot of representations of this area that are very funny and very obvious," said Vida Day, a Hispanic advocate who traveled to Jackson's unofficial sister city.

San Simeon and Hueyotlipan, with more than 5,000 residents each, have become dependent on Jackson because they have little to sustain their economies, according to Day and others who have visited the area.

The villages are about seven miles apart in a valley rimmed by mountains. Each town has a Roman Catholic church, but they share a priest. Many homes are adobe huts with open doors, where people invite visitors in for coffee and tamales.

Like in rural Wyoming, cowboy hats and farmers with weathered faces are common sights. Otherwise, horse-drawn plows are still in use. Partly built homes are scattered about and infrastructure projects such as water supply are booming. Much of the construction is funded by relatives in Jackson.

The dependency runs both ways. Jackson's ski and summer resorts need an estimated 4,300 workers to make the beds, vacuum the rooms and wash the dishes for the tourists who ski and hike here. Other mostly migrant jobs include bricklaying and landscaping.

There aren't many locals who want the jobs, so Mexican labor has become essential for the resorts to function. While the Jackson tourists seldom see it, those workers form a community of their own behind the glitzy scene.

Many live 10 to 12 people per home, often with children doubled up in bunk beds, mostly in apartments and mobile homes. There are several clusters of apartment complexes and trailer parks where the immigrants live. Many reside in Driggs, Idaho, and commute to work over winding Teton Pass, a 45-minute drive that is dangerous during winter, especially in the inexpensive, poorly equipped cars they buy.

In Jackson, while there are still no Spanish-language signs on stores and restaurants, the infrastructure is growing, with St. John's Hospital training its workers to recognize cultural differences and apartment managers posting their rules in Spanish.

A coalition of volunteers and public service groups publishes a monthly newsletter in Spanish.

and English. Spanish-language children's books are in stock at the local library. Forums are held in Spanish on how to establish credit and avoid eviction.

In the mid-1990s, the Immigration and Naturalization Service raided Jackson and rounded up 450 illegal workers. Some speculate the INS has not conducted any raids in Jackson since then because the tourism industry is so dependent on migrant workers.

Gerene Gilliam, supervisory special agent for the INS in Cheyenne, said the INS simply lacks the staff to do the job. There are no INS agents in Jackson.

"We've only got three investigators in the whole state of Wyoming right now, and we concentrate on criminal aliens," she said.

How many people have immigrated from San Simeon and Hueyotlipan to the Jackson area is unclear. Some Hispanic groups estimate up to 2,000 immigrants from the towns are in Teton County. In the latest census, only 1,185 Hispanics are reported.

Martha Lira, 38, came to Jackson from San Simeon with her husband on Cinco de Mayo, 1991. The couple works in hotel housekeeping and construction. Every month, they send home to relatives a quarter of their income, about $200 to $300. Like many immigrants, the couple returns home yearly as a requirement for renewing their U.S. work visas.

In the cramped home they share with their five children, ages 5 to 19, Lira said she has a better life in Jackson, despite a housing crunch and high cost of living.

"In Mexico, I have nothing. I'd have this chair," Lira said, gesturing around her living room. "I'd have this TV. I'd have nothing. I'd have my bed. ... For me, it's everything. Bathroom, everything inside. My kids have everything, like shoes. In Mexico, you would have just one pair of shoes and dresses, two or three."

Rescuers find woman gone two days

LEWISTON (AP) — A missing U.S. Forest Service employee was found unharmed and was listed in stable condition at Syringa General Hospital in Grangeville.

Joanne Townier, 46, was found in the Shells Licks area near Riggins Friday morning. It had been two days since fellow employees last saw her.

Idaho County Sheriff's Chief Deputy John Nida said Townier became disoriented after walking too far from her vehicle and could not find her way back to where she had parked.

Nida said Townier suffered some exposure but appeared to be in good health. The Wyoming resident is seasonally employed by the Forest Service in Grangeville as a range conservation technician.

YOU ARE A FORCE IN PEOPLE'S LIVES.

And yet, after all you do for the people in your life, they have something more to ask:

Take care of yourself.

Women's Health Check offers annual mammograms and Pap tests — at no cost.

If you are aged 50 and older, with limited income and no insurance to cover these services, call Idaho CareLine to find out if you qualify: 1-800-926-2588.

Your friends and family would want you to take advantage of this health screening. It is important that you be tested annually.

South Central District Health

Wayne Wright, M.D. and Reed Harris, M.D.

A health care choice that's right for Twin Falls.

We know that good health care starts close to home. That's why we continue to partner with Twin Falls physicians and health care professionals. We're working together to give you the health care choices you want, right here at home.

To that end, Magic Valley Health Network, Twin Falls Clinic and Hospital, Magic Valley Regional Medical Center and Regence BlueShield of Idaho are pleased to introduce the Regence Choice Preferred Provider Organization (PPO) product, a flexible new health plan that will give you the choice you want to meet your specific needs. This new product is now available to Magic Valley residents.

We work hard to maintain strong relationships with our participating physicians. These professionals are going the extra mile with us, so you can get the health care you want close to home.

For a list of our participating physicians or for more information about Regence Choice, visit our Web site at www.id.regence.com or call (208) 736-0755.

Enlarged Prostate?

If you are a male and are experiencing urinary frequency, a weak urinary stream, frequent nighttime urination, or the sensation of incomplete bladder emptying, you may have an enlarged prostate.

Dr. Donald Weese, in conjunction with the Rocky Mountain Prostate Center, is pleased to offer the Targis Prostate Microwave procedure. The Targis Prostate-Microwave procedure is an FDA approved, 30-40 minute, non-surgical, in office procedure that can eliminate the symptoms caused by a large prostate.

The Targis Prostate-Microwave procedure is the only microwave procedure that utilizes a special catheter design which allows targeted treatment of the prostate. This results in fewer side effects as compared to other microwave procedures.

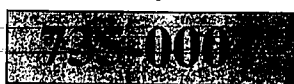

Donald L. Weese, M.D.
844 Washington St. N. #400
Twin Falls, ID 83301

The Targis Microwave Advantages

- * Excellent results
- * Non-surgical treatment
- * In office procedure
- * 30-40 minute procedure
- * Few side effects
- * Minimal to no pain
- * FDA approved
- * Covered by Medicare and most other insurances

Michelob Better-Ball tourney
at TF Muni, Canyon Springs

IN BRIEF

CSI baseball splits home doubleheader

TWIN FALLS — Freshman
Ryan Davis threw seven shutout innings and struck out nine as the College of Southern Idaho baseball team defeated Tripple Play of Washington 2-0 on Saturday in Game 1 of a doubleheader. The Golden Eagles fell to Albion College 3-2 in the nightcap.

Kody Kirkland and Riley
Johnson had the Eagles' RBIs in the seventh inning against Washington. Dan Smiedley worked the final two innings in relief for the save.

picked up CSI's lone RBI against Albion in the first inning. The Eagles added a second run in the third when John Hurd stole home. Freshman Nate Burnstead gave up four hits in the loss.

The host Team Idaho next Friday at 6 p.m. at Frontier Field.

Two teams tied atop Michelob tourney

TWIN FALLS — The twosomes of Jim Ochsenrider and Corky Federger and Kevin Kelly and Scott Jerome both shot rounds of 64 Saturday for a one-stroke lead at the annual Michelob 2-Person Better Ball Tournament.

Carl Sklavos and Gary Burkett are all alone in second with a 65, three teams are two shots back at 66.

Other flight leaders include
Terry McNew and Donn
Overacker (66, first flight); Bill
Schmahl and Mike Heisley and Shawn Fullmer and Dennis
Payne (tied at 74, second flight);
Marguerite Astorguia and Jann
Hall (77, third flight); Terry Spackman and Vi Duro and Wainey and Lacey Manwaring
(74, fourth flight).

The event, held at both Twin Falls Municipal and Canyon
Springs golf courses, ends today.

Clear Lake ladies announce winners

BUIL — The Clear Lake ladies winners have been announced, with Betty Lou Wilson and Jeanne Gannon tying for first prize with 32 in the field shots competition Aug. 23. Oletha Roberts and Tamara Yost tied with the team of Linda Fennen and Betty Lund for the best gross scores with 82.

Dona Pierce and Teddy Frey were ahead in the lightning-shortened Sept. 13 blind draw competition. On Sept. 20, the ladies had their annual bus trip, playing nine holes at the 93 golf course and another nine at the Pleasant Valley Golf Course. The team of Tamara Yost, Phyllis Erikson and Kathy Borchard won the net competition with a 272.

A YEAR OF RECORDS

Regular season reaches finish line

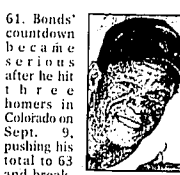

San Francisco's Barry Bonds relaxes in the dugout during Saturday's game against the Dodgers.
Bonds hit his 71st and 72nd home run of the season on Friday to pass Mark McGwire's record.

By Hal Bock
The Associated Press

Barry Bonds' home-run record was the most notable of a series of milestones as baseball went through the final weekend of the regular season.
Bonds used three homers in as many at-bats on Thursday and Friday nights to break
Mark McGwire's single-season record, raising the bar to 72, a once-inconceivable number.

Bonds was not in the lineup for the Giants' game against the Dodgers on Saturday but still had today's game to try to add to the mark.

The achievement came just three years after McGwire broke Roger Maris' record of

SEATTLE — The Seattle
Mariners tied the major league record for wins with their 11th Saturday night, beating the Texas Rangers
1-0 behind Bret Boone's first-inning homer.

The Mariners' (116-45) can break the record set by the 1996 Chicago Cubs (116-36-3) by winning their final regular season game today against the Rangers. Aaron Sele (15-5) will start against Darren Oliver (11-11).

On Friday night, the Mariners became the winningest team in AL history, passing the record of 114 set by the New York Yankees in 1998.

THE WENDELL ROCKET

Stevenson uses his gift for speed on track, gridiron

By Joe Sunnen
Times-News writer

WENDELL — If statistics were the only thing that motivated Wendell senior Skylar Stevenson, he would have kept the football tucked safely under his arm and jogged into the end zone against Payette.

Instead, the running back handed it to Trojan offensive lineman and best friend Tyrell Hoagland.
Some things are more important than 80-yard touchdowns

"We work on that in practice," Stevenson said. "But I never thought we'd get a chance to do it.
I was about 30 yards out from the goal line, I saw him right beside me so I handed it to him and off he went. The offensive linemen are always telling me the backs get all the glory."

Now maybe the 5-foot-10 running back knows how everybody else feels. For the past three seasons, Stevenson has been the navy-and-gold streak people have been trying to catch.

"When he started getting some attention, we wondered which way he would go," Wendell football coach Jerry Diehl said. "He handled it right. He carries himself well. He doesn't brag about his accomplishments."

The athlete

Stevenson is fast. Just how fast he can be is anybody's guess.

He won the Class A-2 state championship in the 100-meter dash as a sophomore and repeated in the A-3 ranks as a junior. He also added the 200-meter title and anchored Wendell's state champion medley relay team.

He broke the Wendell Middle School 100-meter dash record as an eighth-grader and placed in the 'top 6 in nearly every race he ran as a freshman. He's run the 40-yard dash — the standard by which all football speedsters are judged — in 4.4 seconds on grass.

"He's fast," Diehl said. "Just ask Payette."

Wendell's Skylar Stevenson is a pacesetter for the Trojans, either on the gridiron or the track.

Launch sequence

- | | |
|---|---|
| 1 - Team state track championship | 100 meters as a junior |
| 3 - Individual state track championships | 11.31 - state championship time in
100 meters as a sophomore |
| 6.8 - number of carries between touchdowns this year | 11.5 - yards per carry as a senior |
| 7.0 - average yards per carry as a junior | 22.8 - state championship time in 200 meters as a junior |
| 10 - number of touchdowns this season | 66 - number of carries this season |
| 11.08 - state championship time in | 113 - number of carries as a junior |
| | 762 - yards rushing this season |
| | 793 - yards rushing as a junior |

Stevenson has that rare combination of size and speed that translates into artwork on the football field. He's racked up 762 yards rushing in the Trojans' first six games this season, averaging 11.5 yards per carry. More importantly, he's crossing the goal line at an alarmingly frequent rate.
"Every time I get the ball I'm thinking 'score,'" Stevenson said.

"It doesn't always happen that way though."

Most of the time this season that's exactly how it happens.

Stevenson is averaging just six carries between touchdowns this season, rushing for 10 TDs on 66 carries. The "Wendell Rocket" served notice in the first game of the year against Wood River, turning on the jets for a 63-yard run on the second play from scrimmage.

He finished that game with 160 yards on the ground. Stevenson followed with three more touchdowns against Kimberly, scoring on a 62-yard dash. Two weeks later, he scorched Payette for 240 yards on eight carries including two runs of 80-plus yards.

"We have lots of weapons on this team," Diehl said. "We have kids that can run the ball. It's a very good combination. But we would probably be an I-back team if Skylar was about 25 pounds heavier."

Stevenson credits genetics and hard work for his gift of speed.
It's certainly not style. Stevenson runs with a straight back, leaning even further away from 90 degrees as he gains speed. The result isn't pretty, at times making him look like a running back

No. 3 Sooners tame Texas 14-3

The Associated Press

DALLAS — The Oklahoma
Sooners didn't dominate the Texas Longhorns this time. They tricked 'em instead.

Third-ranked Oklahoma set up its only touchdowns by running an option on fourth-and-2 and poaching a punt on a fake field goal, leading to a 14-3 victory over No. 5 Texas on Saturday.

Quentin Griffin, who had six touchdowns in a 63-14 stomping last season, ran 17 yards on the second-quarter option from quarterback Jason White, who replaced the injured Nate Hybl, then scored on a 2-yard run off another option late in the second quarter for the game's first points.

Week 4 matchups

11 a.m.
Bears (1-1) at Falcons (2-1)

Key elements: Losing James Anderson to a season-ending knee injury does not necessarily mean the Falcons ground game will dry up, as backup Maurice Smith has shown some ability to move the yard markers. Bear quarterback Jim Miller should have success against a Falcon defense that yields 390 total yards per game and ranks in the NFL. Chicago has prevailed in five of the last six meetings.

The pick: Chicago. The underrated Bear defense will go after Atlanta quarterback Chris Chandler.

11 a.m.
Patriots (1-2) at Dolphins (2-1)

Key elements: This game is always a slugfest; six of the last eight meetings have been decided by three points or fewer, with the Dolphins winning the last four. Look for the Dolphins to lead the box with eight players, during Patriot quarterback Tom Brady to beat Miami's excellent set of five bowl cornerbacks, Sam Madison and Patrick Surin.

The pick: Miami. The Patriot defense looks to prove the 42 points the Rams scored was a fluke.

11 a.m.
Titans (0-2) at Ravens (2-1)

Key elements: The Titans already face a must-win situation against the Ravens, who have handed Tennessee three of its last six division losses since 1998. Titan running back Eddie George has his work cut out for him against a defense that has not allowed a 100-yard rusher in 36 games. Titan guard Bruce Matthews will break a tie with Jim Marshall for most NFL games played by a non-kicker (22).

The pick: Baltimore. The Ravens must rank as the most disappointing team in the league.

11 a.m.
Redskins (0-3) at Giants (2-1)

Key elements: Don't think the Giants are about to take Washington lightly; the Redskins have won four of last five matchups. Washington must get the most out of running back Stephen Davis, who averages 4.5 yards a carry as the lone bright spot on an otherwise woeful offense. Look for New York quarterback Kerry Collins to have a big day, as Washington has yielded 30 or more points in three consecutive games.

The pick: New York. The Redskins' situation has become so unfavorable that mutiny seems a viable option.

11 a.m.
Cardinals (0-2) at Eagles (2-1)

Key elements: Cardinal quarterback Jake Plummer has the unenviable task of throwing into an Eagle defense that has sacks from 10 players. Arizona's much-hyped offense has led the ball over seven times in two games. Eagle rookie running back Correll Buckhalter gained 99 yards against the Cowboys on Sunday. Philadelphia is 14-1 under Coach Andy Reid when scoring more than 19 points.

The pick: Philadelphia. The Cardinals have lost nine consecutive games by a combined score of 269-94.

11 a.m.
Bengals (2-1) at Steelers (1-1)

Key elements: The Steelers host their first regular-season game at Heinz Field, hoping to have better luck than they did at Three Rivers Stadium, where they were 6-12 over their last 18 home games. Steeler running back Jerome Bettis needs 54 yards to become the 14th player to rush for 10,000 yards. Cincinnati wide receiver Danny Scott has 355 yards and four touchdowns in his last four games against Pittsburgh.

The pick: Pittsburgh. Look for the Steelers to choke Cincinnati's offense with a tough ball-control game of their own.

11 a.m. FOX
Vikings (1-2) at Saints (1-1)

Key elements: A rematch of last season's NFC divisional play-off game, which Minnesota won, 34-16. New Orleans must protect its suspect secondary by reaching Viking quarterback Daunte Culpepper before he can get rid of the ball. While Viking receivers Randy Moss and Chris Carter have yet to get on track, Byron Chamberlain leads NFL night ends with 10 receptions. Saint running back Ricky Williams could have a breakout game against a Viking defense that yields 50 yards per game.

The pick: Minnesota in an upset. The Vikings have always played the Saints well and led the series, 14-6.

11 a.m.
Chargers (3-0) at Browns (2-1)

Key elements: The Chargers are looking for their first 4-0 start since 1994, when they went to the Super Bowl. Rookie running back LaDainian Tomlinson has been one of the keys to the Chargers' resurgence, rushing for 310 yards while leading the NFL with five touchdowns. The Browns' pass defense has a league-high 11 interceptions; they had 12 all last season. San Diego has won five of the last six meetings.

The pick: San Diego. The Chargers' balance on both sides of the ball make them a favorite to win.

Jets (1-2) at Bills (0-3)

Key elements: Jet defensive end John Abraham looks to feast on a Bill line that has allowed quarterback Rob Johnson to be sacked at least four times in each game this season. New York running back Curtis Martin has a touchdown in three consecutive games. Bill rookie Travis Henry hopes to put up numbers against a Jet front seven that surrendered 233 rushing yards to the 49ers on Monday. Buffalo receivers Eric Moulds and Peoria Price have yet to make an impact.

The pick: New York. Depleted by injuries, the Bills have little chance at beating the Jets, who have won four of the last six meetings.

2:05 p.m.
Jaguars (2-1) at Seahawks (1-2)

Key elements: After getting pummeled by the Raiders' front seven last Sunday, Seattle quarterback Trent Diller will get no relief from a Jaguar defense that has at least three sacks in seven consecutive games. Jacksonville has not given up a touchdown pass this season. Ricky Watters' streak of 116 consecutive starts ends because of a shoulder injury.

The pick: Seattle. Diller could give the Seahawks some much-needed stability and leadership.

2:05 p.m. CBS
Chiefs (1-2) at Broncos (2-1)

Key elements: The Chiefs are coming off a game in which they scored on seven consecutive possessions, had 29 first downs and outgained the Redskins, 546-218. Denver is still looking for 100-yard rushing games out of either Orlando Gary or Mike Anderson. Denver wide receiver Rod Smith has four consecutive 100-yard games against Kansas City.

The pick: Denver. The Chiefs don't have the offensive firepower to beat a Bronco team that has won six of its last seven home games.

2:15 p.m.
Cowboys (0-3) at Raiders (2-1)

Key elements: Cowboy quarterback Quincy Carter faces a Raider defense that allows opposing quarterbacks an NFL-low 48.5 completion percentage, while Emmitt Smith will run into a rushing defense that ranks third in the league. Oakland receivers Tim Brown and Jerry Rice will have a field day against Dallas' weak secondary. The Cowboys are off to their worst start since losing their first eight games in 1989 while the Raiders have won 10 of their last 11 at home.

The pick: Oakland. This game could be out of reach by the end of the first quarter.

2:15 p.m. FOX
Packers (1-0) at Bucs (1-1)

Key elements: You won't find better entertainment than going to Green Bay to watch the Packers and Tampa Bay defensive tackle Warren Sapp battle it out. Favre and the Packers have outscored opponents, 56-0, in the second half. It will be up to Buccaneer quarterback Brad Johnson to somehow crack a packer defense that allows in his last 198 yards a game, best in the NFL. Mike Alstott takes over for the injured Warren Dunn as the primary ballcarrier.

The pick: Tampa Bay. This one should go down to the wire; four of the last five games in this series have been decided by seven points or fewer.

6:20 p.m. ESPN
Panthers (1-2) at 49ers (2-1)

Key elements: This game is always a shootout; the teams averaged 410.5 yards in two meetings last year. Wide receiver Moush Muhammad has 34 catches and five touchdowns in his last five games against San Francisco, while Terrell Owens has 20 catches and three touchdowns in his last three games against Carolina. Garrison Hearst and Kevan Barlow have combined to give the 49ers the best rushing offense in the NFL.

The pick: San Francisco. While Carolina Coach George Seifert has a 4-0 record against his former team, the 49ers' tough running game will prevail.

Monday, 7 p.m. ABC
Rams (1-0) at Lions (0-1)

Key elements: If Ram quarterback Kurt Warner was able to pass for 328 yards and four touchdowns against Miami's top-flight defense last Sunday, imagine what's in store for the Lions' battered secondary Monday night. Warner has yet to throw for fewer than 300 yards this season. Marshall Faulk leads the NFL with 464 yards from scrimmage, on pace for 2,475, which would break his record of 2,425 set in 1999. Faulk has scored 15 touchdowns in the last six regular-season games.

The pick: St. Louis. The Lions don't have the ball-control offense to keep the high-powered Ram attack on the bench.

NFL's new Iron Man

Matthews passes legend Marshall for most games played by non-kicker

By Teresa M. Walker
The Associated Press

NASHVILLE, Tenn. — Milestones and records have piled up for 19-year veteran Bruce Matthews, and he quietly credits God and genetics for each one.

Today, the Tennessee Titans' guard will pass Jim Marshall for the most NFL games ever played by a non-kicker, which he calls a "humbling" prospect.

"Jim Marshall to me represents those ideals and those paragons. ... There's almost a fairy tale-type thing to the NFL. It's like the music, the John Facenda voice," Matthews said.

"It's bigger than what it actually is, but that's what he represents to me."

Marshall set what appeared to be an unreachable standard by playing in 282 games in 20 seasons, the last 19 with the Minnesota Vikings, ending in 1979.

Then came Matthews. A No. 1 draft pick of the Houston Oilers in 1983, he never missed a game with an injury, was never benched. Only a contract holdout that cost him eight games in 1987 kept him from passing Marshall before now.

When Matthews steps on the field today against the Baltimore Ravens, he will play in his 283rd game.

"It's something that you don't really set out as a record to set or break," he said.

"My brother played 19 years, so I wasn't necessarily thinking about Jim Marshall. I was thinking more about trying to match what my brother had done."

If Matthews hadn't missed those eight games in 1987, he also would have surpassed Marshall's record of 282 consecutive games. He had played 63 straight up to 1987 before starting a new string of 218.

"Often times, you take it for granted," Titans coach Jeff Fisher said of his durability. The NFL is a family tradition for the Matthews', starting with Clay Sr., a defensive lineman for the San Francisco 49ers in the 1950s. Clay Jr. followed with 19 seasons and 278 games at linebacker for Cleveland and Atlanta from 1978-96.

"I just expected him to do that," his father said of his son passing Marshall. "I give him any particular compliment on that. That's just in a day's work. I want him to play well and to be well."

Bruce started in 1983 at 6-foot-5 and 276 pounds. Now weighing 305 pounds with 13 Pro Bowls on his resume, he passed Jackie Slater in 1999 for most games by an offensive lineman and leapfrogged his brother on the list in 2000.

He turned 40 in August and is a little less a little slower, but he earned his seventh All-Pro honors last season and still your ability to stay healthy game after game is probably two of the greatest attributes a football player can have," said Marshall, who now works with inner-city children in Minneapolis. "I think he's certainly in possession of those things."

Two members of the 1983 class are among the non-kickers in the top 10 still active. Trey Junkin (267) is a deep snapper for Arizona, while cornerback Darrell Green (266) plans to retire at the end of this season.

That top 10 includes six kickers, led by quarterback George Blanda (340), who extended his streak mostly with his leg for the Oakland Raiders from 1967-1975.

Clay Matthews thinks his brother can play a couple more seasons if he chooses. Bruce, who thinks watching his children play sports might satisfy his need to compete, is approaching 2001 as his final year.

Still, nothing is set for a man who would love to help the Titans win their first Super Bowl. "I'm not willing to commit to say this is my last year yet," he said. So keep counting.

Late field goal lifts Huskies over USC

Georgia upsets sixth-ranked Volunteers

SEATTLE (AP) — John Anderson kicked a 32-yard field goal as time expired as Washington rallied behind backup quarterback Taylor Barton to beat Southern Cal.

The Huskies (4-0, 2-0 Pac-10) have come from behind to win in the final quarter three times this season. And they did it five times in their Rose Bowl season last year.

Barton, 11-for-20 for 197 yards and two touchdowns, directed the offense in all but four plays in the second half after starter Cody Pickett separated his right shoulder in the second quarter.

Southern Cal (1-4, 0-3 Pac-10) has lost four straight and is off to its worst start since 1958 when it also began 1-4.

No. 1 Miami 38, Troy St. 7
MIAMI — Ken Dorsey threw for 259 yards and two touchdowns as Miami overcame a slow defensive start.

Dorsey was 18-of-30 passing, missing open receivers and finding himself under steady pressure for the first time this season. Clinton Portis ran for just 18 yards on seven carries, and Miami (4-0) finished with 101 yards rushing — the first time the Hurricanes have been held under 200 yards rushing this season.

No. 2 Florida 44, No. 18 LSU 15
BATON ROUGE, La. — Rex Grossman passed for a Florida-record 464 yards and five touchdowns.

Grossman broke the mark of 462 yards set by Danny Wuerffel against Arkansas in 1996.

Grossman passed for 319 yards and four TDs in the first half as he topped the 300-yard mark for a straight game.

Florida (5-0, 3-0 SEC) has surpassed 500 yards in each of its first five games.

Crouch broke the mark of 49 set by Kareem Wilson of Ohio from 1995-98 and set a Nebraska record for rushing touchdowns, passing 1983 Heisman Trophy winner Mike Rozier's 49.

Georgia 26, No. 6 Tennessee 24
KNOXVILLE, Tenn. — Verron

No. 4 Nebraska 48, Iowa St. 14
LINCOLN, Neb. — Nebraska's Eric Crouch set an NCAA Division I-A record for rushing touchdowns by a quarterback, scoring four times in the first half to push his total to 51.

Boise State 28-7
The Owls' other scores came on 1-yard runs by Leroy Bradley, Sean White and Robbie Beck; a 7-yard run by Clint Hatfield; and Brandon Skeen's 31-yard field goal.

Boise State made it 28-0 before Dinwiddie threw a 20-yard pass to David Mikell with 1:06 left in the first half. Donnie Heck added an 83-yard TD run in the fourth quarter.

Boise State made it 28-0 before Dinwiddie threw a 20-yard pass to Mikell with 1:06 left in the half.

Skeen's field goal came on the Owls' first possession of the second half.

Washington St. 34, Oregon St. 27
PULLMAN, Wash. — David Minnich ran for a career-high 195 yards and threw a touchdown pass as Washington State beat Oregon State 34-27 at Martin Stadium on Saturday.

Washington State (5-0, 3-0 Pacific 10) won five games for the first time since the Rose Bowl first five games.

No. 8 Virginia Tech 35, West Virginia 0

MORGANTOWN, W. Va. — Keith Burnell ran for 102 yards and two scores and Virginia Tech (5-0, 2-0 Big East) recorded its third shutout of the season.

It was the worst shutout loss at home for West Virginia (2-3, 0-2) since Oregon State posted the same score in 1963.

Colorado 16, No. 12 Kansas St. 6

MANHATTAN, Kan. — Craig Ochs threw a 21-yard touchdown pass and Roman-Hollowell set up Jeremy Flores' third field goal with a 53-yard punt return, leading Colorado past Kansas State.

No. 13 South Carolina 42, Kentucky 6

COLUMBIA, S.C. — Derek Watson ran for 135 yards and fullback Andrew Pinnock scored twice as South Carolina beat Kentucky for its first 5-0 start since 1988.

The Gamecocks (5-0, 4-0 SEC) also got another mistake-free game from quarterback Phil Petty and scored their most points in six years. Kentucky has lost 12 straight SEC games.

Ohio St. 38, No. 14 Northwestern 20

COLUMBUS, Ohio — Jonathan Wells ran for 179 yards and three touchdowns — including a 71-yard sprint on the second play of the game — as Ohio State beat No. 14 Northwestern 38-20 on Saturday night.

The Buckeyes (3-1, 2-0 Big Ten) won for the 22nd consecutive time against the Wildcats (3-1, 1-1). Northwestern hasn't won in the series in 30 years.

No. 15 Michigan 20, Penn St. 0

STATE COLLEGE, Pa. — John Navarre threw two touchdown passes as Michigan saddled Penn State with its worst start in 115 years of playing football.

Not only did the loss mark the lowest point in Penn State history, it also was the first time a Joe Paterno-coached team was shut out at home, dating to his first season in 1966.

Penn State (0-4, 0-3 Big Ten) still needs one more win for Paterno to equal Bear Bryant's major college record of 323 career victories.

Michigan (4-1, 2-0) has beaten Penn State five straight times, outscoring the Nittany Lions 145-46.

No. 17 Georgia Tech 37, Duke 10

DURHAM, N.C. — George Godsey was 24-for-40 for 295 yards and two touchdowns as Georgia Tech beat Duke.

No. 21 Purdue 23, Iowa 14

WEST LAFAYETTE, Ind. — Ashante Woodyard returned an interception 86 yards for a score and Travis Dorsch kicked three field goals as Purdue beat Iowa.

No. 23 Toledo 48, Ohio 41

ATHENS, Ohio — Tavarus Bolden was 31-of-39 for 387 yards and two touchdowns as Toledo beat Ohio.

Antwon McCray scored his third touchdown to cap a 12-play, 68-yard drive with 1:32 left. McCray had 72 yards on 23 carries.

No. 24 Texas A&M 16, Baylor 10

COLLEGE STATION, Texas — Keith Joseph ran 6 yards for a touchdown and Cody Scates kicked three field goals for Texas A&M.

The Aggies (5-0, 2-0 Big 12) trailed 10-3 at the half, then scored 13 straight points in the second half to send Baylor to its 23rd straight conference loss.

No. 25 Maryland 41, Virginia 21

COLLEGE PARK, Md. — Shaun Hill threw for two touchdowns and Bruce Perry ran for 74 yards and a score as Maryland snapped a nine-game losing streak against Virginia.

MAGIC VALLEY DAIRY FAMILIES ANSWER A FEW OF YOUR QUESTIONS

How many dairies are really here in the Magic Valley? If the Magic Valley is defined as our six county area (Twin Falls, Jerome, Gooding, Lincoln, Minidoka and Cassia Counties) According to the Department of Agriculture, there are 356.

Valley, Horizon Dairy, near Burley, is investor owned. The others are all locally owned, by families. Now, keep in mind the definition of "family farm" is changing and many family owned operations are not what was traditionally known as a family farm. Here in the Magic Valley, even the dairies which milk nearly 10,000 head of cattle are owned by one family — with fathers, sons, mothers, daughters, aunts, uncles and cousins all choosing to stay near the family dairy.

helps us pinpoint the issue if it is coming from our dairy or helps us help you figure out exactly where the problem is coming from.

These tips are especially important if there is more than one dairy nearby. Wind direction and time of day are essential to fixing any problem.

How many of them have more than 1,000 milk cows? In the Magic Valley — 62.

Why are many of these dairies in our communities? Why are some of them so large? The Magic Valley is blessed with fertile soil, a relatively mild climate, and affordable land, water, and electricity prices. Idaho offers not only the land, but also a reputation of excellent farming practices, so dairy operators know that they will always have a good supply of food for their cattle. In many, many cases, a dairy moving into a neighborhood has allowed small farms to stay in business, when they would have otherwise been forced to sell. The dairies provided a steady market for crops.

A dairy recently moved into our neighborhood. Am I going to have odor problems I keep reading about? Probably not. But here are some tips for working with your local dairy family if something should come up: Keep notes of when the problem occurred. What time of day did you smell something?

"The Magic Valley is blessed with fertile soil, a relatively-mild climate, and affordable land, water, and electricity prices."

In most cases, the size of the dairy is guided by that good old fashioned economics principal of economy of scale. In order to support our families and be able to compete in a global economy, we simply had to grow.

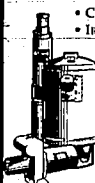

What direction was the wind blowing? Are there any other potential sources? Keep track of the issue for a few days. Is it happening at the same time each day? Is it only happening when the wind blows a certain direction? Once you have the data collected, make an appointment with your neighbor and show him or her your information. This

Hewitt rolls over Blake in semifinal

TOKYO (AP) — Lleyton Hewitt reached the Japan Open final when he routed James Blake 6-4, 6-0 Saturday in their first meeting since a contentious match at the U.S. Open.

The top-seeded Hewitt, the U.S. Open champion, will play Michel Kratochvil for the title in the $970,000 tournament. Kratochvil, seeded fifth, beat Karol Kucera of Slovakia 6-0, 6-3 in the other semifinal.

In women's semifinals, second-seeded Tamarine Tanasugarn of Thailand defeated seventh-seeded Joannette Kruger of South Africa 6-3, 7-5. She will next face top-seeded Monica Seles, who downed Ai Sugiyama in a semifinal Friday.

Kafelnikov handles Haas to reach Kremlin Cup final MOSCOW — Yevgeny Kafelnikov moved a step closer to a fifth straight Kremlin Cup title, routing Tommy Haas of Germany 6-1, 6-2 in Saturday's semifinals.

Kafelnikov, the top-seeded Russian, will face Nicolas Kiefer of Germany in today's championship match of the $2.2 million tournament. Kiefer downed Dominik Hrbaty of Slovakia 6-4, 6-3 in the other men's semifinal.

Among the women, Jelena Dokic reached her fourth final of the year by beating Silvia Farinella of Italy 6-4, 6-3 in the semifinals.

The 18-year-old Yugoslav will play Elena Dementieva for the title. Dementieva, seeded eighth, downed wild card Anastasia Myskina 6-7 (7), 6-1, 7-5 in an all-Russian semifinal.

U.S. soccer hopes for friendly fans

FOXBORO, Mass. (AP) — The U.S. soccer team hopes renewed American patriotism finally creates a home-field advantage for today's crucial World Cup qualifier against Jamaica.

If it's a pro-American crowd, it's going to be a plus for us," U.S. coach Bruce Arena said. "Any time you play a home game, you hope to have home-field advantage. It helps you tremendously."

But the Americans have reason to doubt.

While the fans at Foxboro Stadium have always been supportive — including a crowd of 31,211 for a 2-0 victory over Trinidad and Tobago on June 20 — that hasn't always been the case on U.S. soil.

On Sept. 1, the Americans lost 3-2 to Honduras at Washington's RFK Stadium in front of a crowd that heavily favored the visitors. It was the Americans' first home loss in a World Cup qualifier in 16 years.

After a 4-0-1 start in the final round, the Americans have lost three straight qualifiers for the first time in 29 years, dropping from first to fourth in the standings of the North and Central American and Caribbean region.

They'll have to try to reverse the slide without forward Ante Razov, who twisted his ankle Thursday and will not play against Jamaica (2-4-2).

With a win and another at Trinidad and Tobago (0-7-1) on Nov. 11, the United States would be assured one of the region's three berths in next year's tournament in Japan and South Korea. Without two wins, the Americans would need either Mexico (4-3-1) or Honduras (4-2-2) to falter.

Toms takes advantage of ice-cold Michelob

David Toms shows his disappointment after a missed birdie putt during the third round of the Michelob Championship at the Kingsmill Golf Club in Williamsburg, Va. Saturday. Toms shot a 67 to take a two-stroke lead.

WILLIAMSBURG, Va. (AP) — David Toms battled chilly conditions and some early bumbles to finish with a 4-under-par 67 Saturday.

It was a good day, good for a two-shot lead in his bid to repeat his victory in the Michelob Championship.

Playing in the second-to-last group, with greens softened by heavy morning rain but temperatures in the low 50s and gusting winds making it feel much colder, Toms proved the day's best survivor at Kingsmill.

"I hit the ball well and kept it in the fairway and hit some good iron shots," Toms said after hitting 14 of 14 fairways. "You have to hit the ball solid when it's windy to keep it on line and I was able to do that."

Esteban Toledo was alone in second after a 68 that included five birdies and two bogesys, with Jose Caceres in a four-way tie for third after a bogey-free 67. The group at 204 also included Kirk Triplett, who had a 69 Saturday, Neal Lancaster and Chris Riley.

Delasin finishes strong to take Samsung lead

VALLEJO, Calif. — With the gallery shouting her name, Dorothy Delasin birdied three of the final four holes to move one stroke ahead of Karrie Webb and Se Ri Pak on Saturday at the Samsung World Championship. Delasin had a 5-under 67 for a 208 total. Webb, who started strong but had just one birdie in the final 11 holes, shot a 70. Pak, who tied Delasin for the first-round lead, fought off a stiff neck muscle for a bogey-free 67.

Delasin grew up in the San Francisco Bay area, and she learned the game on San Francisco's municipal courses. She has been the clear crowd favorite at the event, which pits 20 of the world's top women golfers against each other at Hiddenbrook Golf Club.

After hanging behind second-round leader Webb with steady play for most of the day, Delasin missed the two-time Player of the Year with birdies on the final two holes. She nearly eagled the par-5 18th, but her 30-foot putt sat on the lip of the cup.

Pak, who won the AFLAC Champions in Alabama last week, nearly dropped out of the tournament on Friday after straining her neck while warming up. After a few messages, she returned as "still stiff, but not too bad."

Daly shoots 64 in Germany; Langer holds on to lead

FULHEIM, Germany — John Daly shot an 8-under-par 64 Saturday for the day's best score at the Linde German Masters, leaving him three strokes behind leader Bernhard Langer.

Langer birdied the final hole to keep his lead entering the final round. His 68 put him at 17 under, with Fredrik Jacobson, Stephen Leamy and Greg Wen one shot back after three rounds.

T.F. meeting focuses on mystery project

TWIN FALLS — It's a public meeting, but City Hall isn't telling the public what it's about.

Twin Falls' Urban Renewal Agency will meet at 7:30 a.m. Wednesday in City Hall to talk about what the city's economic development director describes as a potential new project.

But Dave McAlindin wouldn't define "project" or give any other information Friday.

Members of the public will just have to show up to hear about it when the agency hears, he said.

McAlindin said the agency won't be asked to take or consider any action.

Business Women's Week award needs nominations

TWIN FALLS — In celebration of National Business Women's Week, Oct. 15-19, The Times-News and the Zonta International Club of Magic Valley are accepting nominations for the 2001 Magic Valley Business Woman of the Year Award.

The award will recognize a woman who has exhibited extraordinary efforts in promoting, expanding and improving the business climate of Magic Valley, organizers said. Other criteria include years in the business field, length of service in Magic Valley, community service and individual challenges a nominee has overcome.

The honoree will be featured in the newspaper's Oct. 14 Women in Business display ad. The Times-News and Zonta will also honor her at a pre-work coffee social at Metropolis Bakery and Cafe at 8 a.m. Oct. 18.

Nominations should be limited to 100 words and will be accepted until 5 p.m. Tuesday. Also include an address and contact information for the nominee and for the person nominating her.

Mail nominations to The Times-News, P.O. Box 548, Twin Falls, ID 83303; drop them off at 132 Third St. W. in Twin Falls; fax them to 734-5538; or e-mail them to janet@magvalley.com.

For information, contact Janet Goffin at 735-3254 or contact her at janet@magvalley.com.

Wendell chamber hears candidates on Wednesday

WENDELL — An opportunity to meet the candidates will highlight the Wendell Chamber of Commerce's October meeting, which begins at noon Wednesday.

City Council and mayor candidates will be the speakers in an open forum for questions. The chamber also will discuss its installation banquet and nomination of officers.

The Wendell Chamber also will hold a Business After Hours event at 5:30 p.m. Oct. 24 at O.H. Kruse. Chamber members and guests are invited to tour the O.H. Kruse facility and learn about its expansion plans.

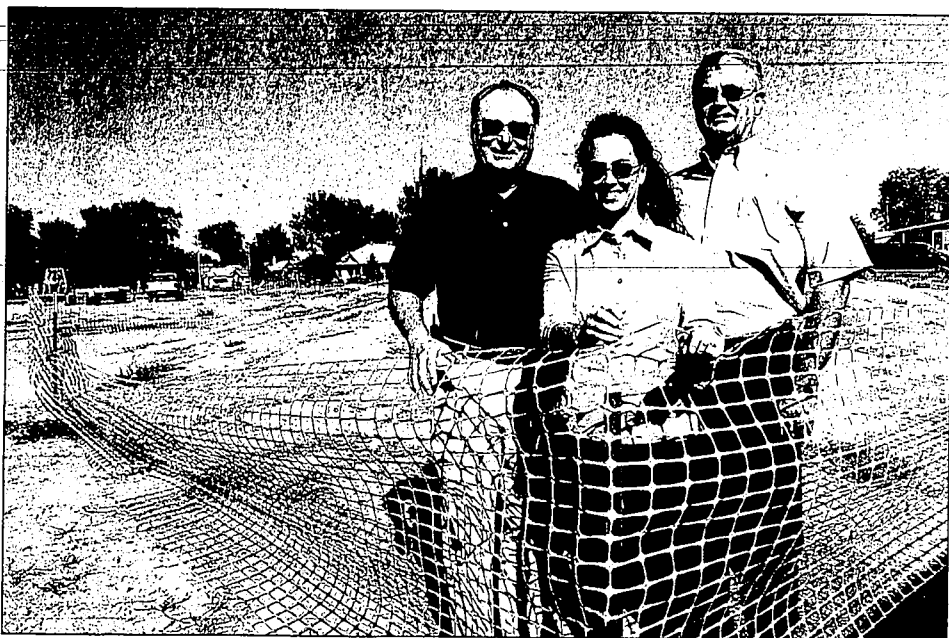

Submission deadline for YourBusiness moves up

TWIN FALLS — The Times-News beginning this week will move up by one day its weekly deadline for submission of news items to print in the Sunday Money section's YourBusiness column.

The new deadline for YourBusiness submissions is noon on the Wednesday immediately preceding. Send submissions to Business Editor Virginia S. Hutchins by e-mail at virginia@magvalley.com, and attach any digital photos in JPEG format. Hutchins also accepts submissions by fax at 734-5538, or by mail at P.O. Box 548, Twin Falls, ID 83303-0548. Or deliver them to The Times-News' offices in Burley or downtown Twin Falls.

E-mailed submissions are preferred.

Commercial project stands out

Slow month for permits has few bright spots

By Virginia S. Hutchins
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — Housing was September's most valuable player in Twin Falls' building industry. But its teammates' performance lacked sparkle.

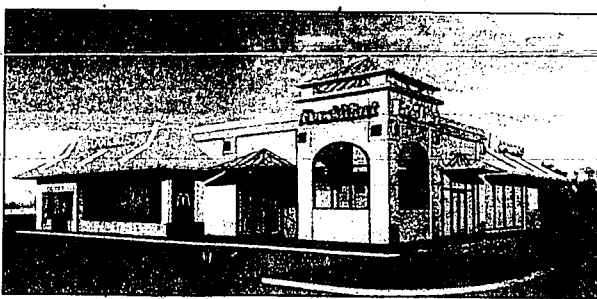

All commercial construction categories fell short of year-earlier building values, while new single-family home construction more than doubled. A planned convenience store was the only sizable commercial project to get a permit during the month.

"Usually we get the fall rush," city building official Marianne Barker said.

Typically, September sees the building department busy with projects that are trying to beat winter's arrival, she said. Barker said she isn't sure why this year is different — perhaps the mid-September terrorist attacks on the East Coast, perhaps weather patterns here at home, perhaps economic conditions.

But house building pressed ahead with vigor last month.

By Sept. 17, the city building department had issued two more permits for new single-family homes this year than in

This artist's rendition shows the convenience store and fast-food restaurant planned for the northwest corner of Addison Avenue West and Washington Street North.

September permits

Estimated values for construction that received permits in September from the city of Twin Falls:

Type	Sept. '01	Sept. '00
New single-family homes:	$1,703,517	$652,289
New multifamily units:	0	$98,640
New commercial projects:	$281,473	$1,496,127
Commercial alterations/additions:	$33,900	$915,370
Total (including such things as mobile homes, residential alterations/additions and signs):	$2,018,890	$3,061,426

all of 2000, when the department had issued 168 such permits, Barker said.

Overall, Twin Falls' construction sector in September posted a hefty 37.5 percent shortfall from year-earlier building values. The city last month issued building permits for projects totaling an estimated $2.16 million — $1.3 million less than in September 2000 — for

Recent numbers at a glance

Here's how Twin Falls' total construction values in the past six months stacked up against the same months a year earlier:

September '01	down 37 percent
August '01	up 5 percent
July '01	up 6 percent
June '01	up 89 percent
May '01	up 9 percent
April '01	down 36 percent

combined construction types.

That performance narrowed this year's lead, bringing year-to-date 2001's revised tally to $33 million for combined types, compared with $32.5 million for the first nine months of 2000. That's a mere $449,434 advance in construction values so far this year, or 1.4 percent.

By comparison, the city a year ago saw construction values plummet 57 percent from the September 1999 total. But for perspective: September 1999 is when a permit for a new Twin Falls location of the world's largest home-improvement retailer added $4 million to the city's building activity.

In the most recent September, the new-residential side advanced slightly on one front and slipped on another: It added more — but less expensive — houses than a year ago in Twin Falls.

September's number of permits for new single-family homes in the city shot up to 18 from the six of September 2000, also beating the 14 such homes permitted in September 1999. But those Twin Falls homes' average estimated value last month fell 12.9 percent to $94,640 from the $108,715 of a year earlier, when values had risen slightly from the $107,578 average of September 1999.

Included in last month's single-family permits were two attached dwellings, that Zambesi Group of Caldwell is building on Riverview Drive in Twin Falls. The $165,759 and $148,828 structures count as single-family homes because each is on its own piece of property and can have separate ownership.

Conference will focus on technology for rural Idaho

The Times-News

BOISE — "Connect Idaho Conference: Attracting High-Speed Telecommunications to Idaho" will be held Oct. 25-26 in the Boise State University Student Union Building, 1700 University Drive.

The conference will bring together government officials, educators, economic developers, telecommunications professionals and other interested parties to discuss today's high-speed telecommunications issues, how to implement the technologies in mostly rural Idaho, and how to make the best use of the technologies.

High-speed telecommunications service is essential to maintaining and improving the competitiveness of rural Idaho people, businesses and communities, said a press release from conference organizers. Ordinary Internet service is no longer sufficient for advanced business and government applications. Since there is no clear map for technology deployment, basic economics favor more populated areas.

Shared learning among elected officials, community leaders, rural development practitioners, business leaders and telecommunications providers is needed, the event organizers said.

Cost is $75 per person. For more information or to register, call Shelly Houston at (800) 225-3815 or visit the Web site at www.iicr.com/connectidaho. The conference is co-sponsored by the Idaho National Engineering and Environmental Laboratory, Idaho Rural Partnership and Idaho Small Business Development centers.

in any core class to register to win a new computer. The more A's on a report card, the more chances to win.

Christopher Horgan, a student at Jerome High School, had a grade-point average of 4.0 and was this year's recipient.

BUSINESS PROFESSIONALS

The Business Professionals of America chapter at Murtough High School received a donation of $100 from Lamb Weston Inc. The donation came through free use of the company's French fry cart at the school's homecoming game in September. Here, Jacob Mills, Leon Mills of Lamb Weston and Alex Crystal man the cart. The donation will help students attend BPA's state conference in Boise, business teacher Lorraine Rapp said.

Financial seminar covers 'Investing by the Book'

The Times-News

JEROME — The public is invited to a free seminar hosted by investment representative Gretchen W. Clelland of the financial services firm Edward Jones.

More and more women are taking charge of their finances, Clelland said. For those ready to join their ranks, she is offering "Investing by the Book," a program to provide the fundamental information they need to make charge of their financial futures.

The seminar will be held from 7 to 8:30 p.m. Tuesday at the Edward Jones office, 2716 S. Lincoln, Suite B, in Jerome. Space is limited, so call Patri soon at 324-0174.

Otter speaks at Buy Idaho annual membership meeting

The Times-News

BOISE — Idaho Congressman C.L. "Butch" Otter will be the keynote speaker at the Buy Idaho annual membership meeting, starting at noon Oct. 26 in the Ivory Room at the Owyhee Plaza Hotel.

Seating is limited; cost is $30 for the lunch and meeting, which lasts 1 1/4 hours. For reservations, call Barbara Dorsey at 343-2582, or send a check and name of person attending to Buy Idaho, P.O. Box 6016, Boise, ID 83707.

In 1976, Otter, along with Bruce Belcher, started Buy Idaho. It has grown and claims responsibility for keeping many jobs in Idaho and increasing the profitability of member companies and individuals.

Medical assistants chapter meets Tuesday

The Times-News

TWIN FALLS — Magic Valley Medical Assistants will meet for a regular chapter meeting Tuesday at Asthma and Allergy of Idaho, 800 Falls Ave.

Members will meet at 6 p.m. to discuss plans for Medical Assistant Recognition Week Oct. 15-19. At 6:30 p.m., guest speaker Julie Caputo will talk on updated guidelines for Medicare reimbursement. One continuing education credit is available.

For information, call Sue Eckert at 733-6022 or Shanda Hughes at 734-4555.

TWIN FALLS — Tom Sherman, director of nursing at BridgeView Estates, recently was named Northwest Division Director of Nursing of the Year by Life-Care Centers of America, the company that manages the 121-bed nursing facility.

The award is based partly on customer service ratings and successful state surveys.

Sherman received the award during Life Care's annual meeting for nursing directors at Life Care's headquarters in Cleveland, Tenn. He was selected from all directors of nursing in Life Care's Northwest Division — Idaho, Oregon, Utah and Washington.

BridgeView Estates, at 1825 Bridgeview Blvd., is one of 11 nursing, assisted-living and retirement facilities in Idaho operated by Life Care.

BOISE — Idaho Youth Ranch President and Chief Executive Officer Mike Jones received the John Stuber Award Sept. 25 for the annual conference of the Idaho Juvenile Justice Association.

The award is presented only in years when a nominee is deemed worthy. The recipient must meet these criteria: experience in the field of juvenile justice social work, commitment to children and families, with ability to individualize services to meet their needs; and an impact as an individual on the juvenile justice field.

For the past nine years, Jones has led the Idaho Youth Ranch, which has strong ties to Mini-Cassia and the rest of Magic Valley — following his earlier work with the ranch and other agencies in positions of child-care worker, staff psychologist, director of treatment, assistant director and vice president.

Jones has been active in several organizations affecting children, at-risk youth and their families. He served on the board and held officer positions in such organizations as the Idaho Correctional Association, Idaho Children's Alliance, National Association for Homes and Services for Children and the Council on Accreditation. He was chairman of the Idaho Juvenile Justice Commission from 1991-97. He is on the executive committee of the National Alliance for Children and Families.

JEROME — The Scoular Co.'s Industrial Markets Division announced Todd Strayer was hired as dairy services manager.

He will work from the company's existing Jerome location and utilize his experience in grain and ingredient merchandising as the company develops a full line of risk-management products for the dairy industry.

Strayer's most recent employment was with ABS Global in Twin Falls as district sales manager. Before that, he was with Purina Mills Inc./Koch Industries in Jerome as western region ingredient manager. He served in a variety of ag positions during his seven-year tenure with Koch before that assignment.

Strayer is a graduate of Fort Hays State University in Hays, Kan., with a bachelor's degree in ag business. He has experience in field sales, sales management, elevator and fertilizer facility management, grain and commodity merchandising, end-user market development, custom feed formulation, feed mill ingredient and merchandising management and venture project financial analysis.

The Scoular Co. is a century-old, employee-owned, agricultural trading company that operates in more than 40 cities throughout North America.

TWIN FALLS — Liberty Mutual Group announced four new employees at its Twin Falls office.

• Debbie Daniels is a new life planner. She joins the office of 11 other life planners.

• Lance Horejs is a life planner licensed for life, property, casualty and variable contracts. He can provide clients with auto, home, life insurance and retirement/investment planning. He has more than 20 years of experience.

• Mark Graybeal, a new life planner, is licensed in life, disability, property and casualty. He has been involved in retail sales in Twin Falls for the past 26 years.

• Barbara Weaver joined Liberty Mutual in May with a diverse history of community involvement and customer service.

CAREER MOVES

SHOSHONE — Jim Johnson, representing Outdoor Power in Shoshone, was presented with the Gold Leader Award for outstanding Dixon ZTR mower sales in 2001. Outdoor Power has been an authorized Dixon dealership since 1998.

Dixon Industries Inc., a Blount Inc. company, manufactures and markets Dixon ZTR mowers.

TWIN FALLS — Yong Ja Tanaka, on staff at Van Engelen CPAs & Co. of Twin Falls, was certified by the American Institute of Professional Bookkeepers.

The certification distinguishes her as a highly skilled professional in an industry where people with a wide range of skills and knowledge are known as bookkeepers, a press release from the institute said.

The institute requires an applicant to pass five tests covering adjusting entries (payables and receivables), error correction (including bank reconciliation), payroll, depreciation and inventory.

TWIN FALLS - Longview Fibre Co., the Longview, Wash.-based operator of a Twin Falls container plant that's a major Magic Valley employer, said net income decreased 10.8 percent for the third quarter and 22.3 percent for the first nine months of 2001 compared with those periods in 2000.

Operating profits improved in the timber segment but declined in the manufacturing segments of the business, the company said.

Longview Fibre's report shows net sales of $220.478 million for the three months ended July 31, compared with $220.257 million for the same period in 2000. Net sales for nine months were $654.901 million, compared with $642.506 million a year earlier. Operating profit was $24.048 million for the three months ended July 31, down from $26.122 million a year earlier. For the nine months, operating profit was $64.157 million, down from $72.938 million in 2000.

For the quarter, Longview reported net income at $9.45 million, or 19 cents per share, down from $10.594 million or 21 cents per share for the same period in 2000. Dividends paid per share remained the same as a year ago at 12 cents.

Net income for the nine months was $21.994 million, or 43 cents per share, down from $28.303 million, or 55 cents, a year earlier. Dividends paid per share remained at 36 cents.

TWIN FALLS - The Idaho Medical Association has renewed a four-year accreditation to the Continuing Medical Education program at Magic Valley Regional Medical Center.

CME provides ongoing education to area physicians to keep their practices on the leading edge of providing health care, the hospital said.

"Thanks to the hard work of the staff at Magic Valley Regional, this is one of the strongest programs in the state," said Ron Hodge, associate executive director of the Idaho Medical Association, in a Magic Valley Regional press release. "Record keeping is extensive, the hospital and medical staff provide adequate financial support, the program complies with the Commercial Support Standards, and objectives are properly formulated and com-

Since the last accreditation, Magic Valley has added technical capability to broadcast CME programs to remote sites in the area, said Stacy Miller, education marketing assistant for Magic Valley Regional. The hospital partners with the College of Southern Idaho to provide broadcast services.

LONG BEACH, Calif. - KIT Manufacturing Co., which has several dealers in the Magic Valley, reported a net loss of $614,000, or 60 cents per share, for the current fiscal quarter compared with net income of $53,000, or 5 cents per share, for the same period in 2000.

The third quarter of fiscal 2000 reflects a gain on the sale of business property in McPherson, Kan., net of related income taxes of $402,000, or 38 cents per share.

Net sales companywide declined 16 percent from the comparable quarter in the previous year. Manufactured home sales reflected a 5 percent increase, while recreational vehicles posted a 29 percent drop in sales compared with third quarter 2000. Manufactured home sales for third quarter 2001 included sales of $1,067 million from the consolidated retail operations.

"Dan Pocapalia, KIT's chairman and chief executive, said, "The slowdown in recreational vehicle division is mainly attributable to the decline in consumer confidence as a result of a decline in the overall economy due to higher fuel costs and tightened credit policies."

M-C chamber schedules two special events

The Times-News

BURLEY - The Mini-Cassia Chamber of Commerce scheduled two special events this week.

The chamber is partnering with Key Bank to present a free mini-seminar called Toast and Topics, from 8 to 10 a.m. Thursday at the Burley City Council chambers.

Top security Key Bank officer Jeff Flori will discuss methods in business fraud protection, check-washing and fraudulent consumer transactions. He also will highlight recent robberies within the state, discuss business security procedures and touch on personal safety, the chamber said.

The Burley Police Department will report on challenges in the community and give tips on how to handle a tough situation if your business is involved with an armed robbery, the chamber said.

The chamber's October luncheon will be held at noon Thursday at the Rupert Elks Lodge.

Claudene Buettner, director of nursing at the College of Southern Idaho, will be the guest speaker. Participants will find out about the nursing profession and learn what needs to be done to keep nurses in the Mini-Cassia area, the chamber said. Buettner will report on the CSI nursing program and what educators say the future will hold.

Rec resources bureau offers grant workshop

The Times-News

TWIN FALLS - The Idaho Department of Parks and Recreation's Recreation Resources Bureau is offering a grant workshop in Twin Falls on four funding programs: Watershed Improvement Fund, Recreational Vehicle Program, Off-Road Motor Vehicle Fund and Recreational Trails Program.

The workshop will review program rules and guidelines, application procedures and the evaluation process, and will train potential recipients on grant administration. The state is encouraging all prospective grant applicants to attend the free workshop, which is set for 1 to 3 p.m. Oct. 18 at Weston Plaza Hotel, 1350 Blue Lakes Blvd.

Registration deadline is Friday, Sept. 21.

The deadline for applying for the four programs is 5 p.m. Jan. 25.

Small business moves toward 'new normal'

NEW YORK (AP) - Steven Mazur's company is located on Wall Street, just a few blocks from the World Trade Center. Even with the devastation from Sept. 11 close by, he's seeing business returning to something unimaginable in the days after the terrorist attacks: normal.

"People are talking about business, and more importantly they're acting on business," said Mazur, managing director of Piskiewicz Mazur & Co. Inc., a corporate identity consultancy.

Still, he said, things have changed: "We feel that rather than normal, it will be a new normal."

The immediate shock of the attacks appears to be fading for many small businesses, and many are looking for, and finding, a return to normalcy even amid the more uncertain economy.

Mike Ringel, whose New York-based firm runs support and networking groups for small business owners, sees the signs.

"They're trying to figure out what to do the best way to motivate employees, the best ways to market and to sell," said Ringel, whose title is chief community officer at Let's Talk Business Network. "People have the realization that it's going to get back to that sense of normalcy."

In the days after the attacks, small business owners were stunned, according to William Dunkelberg, chief economist with the National Federation for Independent Business, an advocacy group representing 600,000 small and independent companies. The NFIB surveys members monthly and issues a Small Business Optimism Index - which plunged in the second half of September to the lowest level since 1993.

The survey found that companies cut back their already conservative hiring and capital spending plans after the attacks and were much more pessimistic that business would improve during the next six months.

But Dunkelberg, while acknowledging the very real fear that businesses have felt, is fairly optimistic about the future.

"My guess is a sense of normalcy will return pretty quickly, but it's still going to be a sluggish (fourth) quarter," he said. "It will take time."

Obviously there are businesses that have been harder hit than others - particularly those in industries related to travel, and also retailers. But other companies are finding opportunities, even in the economy made more uncertain by the attacks.

Mazur said his company has been getting more business in the past few weeks from firms that are trying to redefine themselves and their images in the midst of the nation's changing emotional and business climate.

Of course, there is still uncertainty ahead, particularly about the U.S. response to the terrorist attacks, that could set back the return to normalcy.

"How the fourth quarter unfolds will depend on the variables," said Dunkelberg, the NFIB economist. "If more domestic terrorism occurs, it would be bad for spending."

Construction

Meanwhile, the city issued no permits for apartments or mobile homes last month.

September's most notable activity in the commercial sector was a new Twin Stop convenience store - with a fast-food restaurant, gas pumps and a car wash - planned for the corner of Addison Avenue West and Washington Street North.

"It's going to be a fabulous facility," said Lori Donaldson, general manager of Twin Falls-based Twin Stop LLC. She expects the project to create about 30 part-time and full-time jobs.

A permit issued on the last business day of the month lists a $273,824 value for the 5,811-square-foot building that will house the restaurant and store at 108 Addison Ave. W. A permit issued Oct. 1 - so not included in September's totals - values the 1,163-square-foot car-wash structure at $46,032.

Those represent only a small portion of the total project cost, Donaldson said, adding she wasn't ready to name a figure.

Twin Stop will lease the full-service McDonald's facility to the fast-food giant, whose local franchisee will operate the new restaurant, Donaldson said.

She said Twin Stop a couple of years ago purchased three pieces of property to get enough land for its Addison Avenue West project. Formerly home to appliance-repair, medical-supply and automobile businesses, the land now is bare except for a mound of dirt left after dynamiting the future gas tank site.

"It's going to be a huge improvement. It's a pretty neat-looking building," Donaldson said.

Construction is set to begin this week, with completion in early 2002.

The new convenience store will sell Chevron fuel, as do Twin Stop's two existing locations in town. Donaldson said the company has property for another future operation in Twin Falls but declined to say where.

Authors: Keep dating even under tension at work

The Associated Press

Getting a pink-slip doesn't give you the right to sing the blues when on a date, according to Ellen Fein and Sherrie Schneider, authors of "The Rules."

The doyens of dating dicums for women strongly urge the unemployed and those with jitters about losing their jobs to

Furthermore, your romantic life shouldn't end simply because of work tension.

"No matter how you feel, you need to treat dating like you would finding a job," said Schneider. "It's not a good idea to neglect your social life."

It's also crucial to avoid letting your personal appearance go to pot despite financial strain.

HOPING FOR A CHARMED RIDE

Rodeo cowboys do whatever makes them feel lucky

FILER — Rodeo cowboys are not necessarily more superstitious than the rest of us. But in facing danger for a living, they tend to do whatever they can to bring good fortune their way.

At the Magic Valley Stampede, national reigning All Round Champion Joe Beaver said he was playing catch-up in calf roping and team roping because he had been out of competition for two months. He didn't say why.

"Whatever you do, don't ask them about injuries," former professional calf and steer roper Gene Schiffer of Twin Falls warned. "Talking about injuries is kind of like putting a monkey on their backs. They don't want to think about getting hurt. That's supposed to be the last thing on their minds."

Champion bareback rider Kelly Wardell of Bellevue was the only cowboy who dared to wear yellow when he competed last month in the Magic Valley Stampede. For him, it was a lucky color, since he won his event and took home a paycheck of just over $1,300.

Stock contractor Juanita O'Malley of Gooding agreed, recalling the 25 years her husband, Pat, rode bulls.

"I didn't like people to say, 'I hope Pat doesn't get hurt,'" O'Malley said. "When people would say something like that, I would block it out and not respond to it. When you think those things, sometimes they happen."

Cowboys realize there is an element of danger in their work, she said, but they don't dwell on it. "They want to think positive," she said. "They want to picture a perfect ride and winning and getting that check."

Rodeo announcer Zeb Bell said cowboys never put hats on a bed. "That's a sign of bad luck, that you might get hurt and have to spend time there," he explained. "It's nothing new. I've heard it all my life. I've seen a cowboy drive for a hat tossed on a bed, to grab it off."

Cowboys have an assortment of lucky hats, shirts and favorite old boots, sometimes held together with duct tape, Bell added.

Potato diversion program's benefits total $22 million

BOISE — The potato industry's decision to divert spuds from the marketplace early this year made a $22 million difference to Idaho

That's the cumulative estimate of the diversion program's benefits that Paul Patterson, University of Idaho extension agricultural economist, derived this month. Patterson credits the combined private-public diversion effort with 85 percent of the difference between what growers were getting for their 2000-crop Russet Burbanks in mid-May — less than $1 per hundredweight — and what they were getting by early August — $6 to $6.50 cwt.

He considers the $22 million figure "a conservative estimate" of the diversion program's value to Idaho growers.

Southern Idaho fares best in a dry water year

TWIN FALLS — Any way you run the numbers, the water year that just ended was dry.

Ron Abramovich, a hydrologist with the USDA-Natural Resources Conservation Service in Boise, has looked at the water year, which runs from Oct. 1 through Sept. 30, in terms of precipitation and stream flow. It doesn't matter which measurement he uses, each points toward a parched state.

Gauges across the state show that southern Idaho received the most precipitation in the state. Of course, receiving the "most" precipitation in a year like this is relative. Areas south of the Snake River (including Salmon Falls, Oakley and Bruneau) received 74 to 77 percent of average precipitation for the water year, Abramovich said.

That's not enough to make a crop, but it was better than most of the rest of the state where total precipitation averaged around 65 percent of normal, with the exception of the Big and Little Lost systems that received 69 percent of average. The Panhandle was the hardest hit region, receiving just 59 percent of average, Abramovich said.

Weather throws kink into bean harvest nationwide

TWIN FALLS — Harvest has been thrown off in recent weeks by weather conditions like rain and wind, and the Magic-Valley bean industry has suffered from these setbacks along with other areas of the United States.

The United States Department of Agriculture reports that recent rains in Michigan and New York have caused delays in harvests there. Some producers are reluctant to move product because yield and quality of the new crop is questionable. This leaves trading on dry edible beans slow to moderate again this week, according to the USDA.

Steve Salisbury, extension educator for Twin Falls County, reports that adverse weather has set harvest back in this area as well. Wind and rain over the past few weeks put many growers on hold, causing delays in harvest.

However, Salisbury expects that harvest in the Twin Falls area will be around 75 to 80 percent completed by the end of this week.

Traders review stocks report, see positive trends

IDAHO FALLS — After initially reacting negatively to the U.S. Department of Agriculture's quarterly grain stocks report, released late last week, grain markets seem to be taking a second look at the report and finding reasons to be more positive.

Paul Patterson said the market appeared to perceive the report much differently than he did at first. Where the University of Idaho extension grain economist saw good news in the USDA estimates that wheat stocks were down 8 percent and soybean stocks were down 26 percent from a year ago, those numbers were less bullish than traders had anticipated and the markets fell.

One bit of negative news in the report showed that corn stocks are up a projected 11 percent from Oct. 1, 2000.

But by Sept. 3 traders were apparently rethinking the numbers, and the futures market had started to make significant recovery.

One 200 metric tons of U.S. soft red wheat to Spain also helped lift the market.

In complaints filed with the National Labor Relations Board and federal court, labor leaders and supermarket management have accused each other of unfair tactics during the voting process.

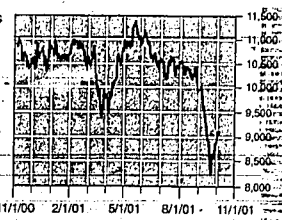

A strike would be the first by Northern California grocery store workers since a nine-day walkout in 1995. A year ago, a 47-day strike at a Safeway's Northern California grocery distribution center cost the company about $66 million in profits.

The San Francisco Bay area's astronomical housing prices are the main sticking point in the current dispute. Despite a deep slump in the technology industry, the area's cost of living preoccupies almost everyone who didn't cash in on the dot-com boom of the late 1990s.

"I'm tired of living and doing business in the Bay Area is becoming a real competitive disadvantage," said Tapan Munroe, chief economist for Applied Development Economics in Berkeley.

Tech stocks rally but doubts linger

NEW YORK (AP) — Tech stocks are re-emerging as the force that can move the stock market and maybe make investors get a little ahead of themselves.

Investors sent the beleaguered sector soaring this past week on upbeat outlooks from Cisco and Dell and largely shrugged off warnings from Sun Microsystems, Advanced Micro Devices and Gateway.

Despite the market's renewed enthusiasm, analysts are still skeptical about the sector's prospects for the time being.

"I think this is a bear market rally," said Steve Milunovich, Merrill Lynch's technology strategist. "This is a rebound from over-sold levels that happened after the terrorist attack, not the beginning of anything new."

Indeed, much of the week's buying appears attributable to an expected snapback from the massive sell-off that followed the Sept. 11 terrorist attacks. The tech-dominated Nasdaq composite index, which lost 272 points in the first week of trading after the attacks, remains 90 points below its Sept. 10 close.

But the market did hear the first good news from high-tech firms in quite a while when Dell and Cisco both reaffirmed their quarterly outlooks. Warnings Friday from Sun, Gateway and AMD slowed but didn't stop the rally, but the analysts weren't bowled over.

"Quite obviously the good news is particular to those companies and does not seem to be universally shared," said Ronald J. Hill, investment strategist at Brown Brothers Harriman.

At the same time, though, there might be some reasons for more optimism.

Interest rates are at their lowest level in nearly 40 years, because of the nine rate cuts this year by the Federal Reserve, including two within the last three weeks.

Meanwhile, President Bush is proposing an economic stimulus program of as much as $75 billion in hopes of helping an already weak economy recover from the further losses by the Sept. 11 terrorist attacks on the Pentagon and the World Trade Center. Stocks spurred higher during the week on Wednesday and Friday when Bush made televised remarks about the plan.

Luxury sales outlook grows dimmer as upscale retailers warn on profits

NEW YORK (AP) — In the days after the Sept. 11 terrorist attacks, Lisa Concepcion Giassa and Enid Lewin drastically changed their luxury shopping habits — but in opposite directions.

Giassa, who used to buy Pantene hair products from the supermarket and never paid more than $70 for a handbag, ordered a $550 Fendi bag and spent $80 on Frederic Fekkai hair products.

"I better enjoy life because in one minute I could be dead," said the 30-year-old Bogota, N.J., resident, whose stepmother managed to escape from the World Trade Center area. "If you have the money, don't deprive yourself. I also don't want to hide at home in sweaters and give terrorists the satisfaction."

On the other hand, Lewin, who used to spend $1,000 on Prada and Fendi handbags and clothing, has pulled back. She's turning to off-price retailers like Duffy's, an East Coast chain.

"I feel somber, like the nation," said the 38-year-old New Yorker. "I think we are all concerned about what is going to happen. It's not fun to go shopping when everything around you is crumbling."

Luxury retailers, already hurting before the attacks because of the volatile stock market and softening economy, need more people like Giassa to go on shopping sprees. Unfortunately, the stores find more people behaving like Lewin — cutting back amid concerns about the economy or because they're just not in the mood.

Wage fight

Workers at two Northern California supermarket chains, Albert Inc. and Safeway Inc., could go on strike as early as Monday fight over wages. Here is a look at the two supermarket chain:

Labor Statistics. "We have to take into account what our competitors pay," said Safeway spokeswoman Debra Lambert. "We don't want to expand that gap any more."

The companies are offering most workers a $1.50 per hour increase over three years. That translates into a 10 percent raise, based on the average wage of $15.50 per hour. The lowest-paid workers now start at $7.75 per hour while the top-paid workers, including Reese, receive $17.58 per hour.

Seeking a raise of $2.40 per hour over three years, labor leaders recommend that workers reject the proposal. Management, meanwhile, is conducting interviews with potential replacement workers to ensure the stores will remain open if there is a strike.

FOR NEWLYWEDS

QUESTION: We are engaged to be married, have some money put aside and wonder if we should start out an apartment or a home large enough to house our projected three children?

ANSWER: Stop and reflect these alternatives. Apartment rents are climbing as available space is scarce. On top of this, monthly rent checks represent money that is gone forever. On the other hand, mortgage payments are a form of forced savings and build up equity for you.

Don't forget the tax breaks. Mortgage interest will probably be your largest deduction. Also, you can look forward to a good profit when you eventually sell.

IF YOU CAN SWING IT, a home vs. apartment makes good financial sense for newlyweds.

Yellowstone Firewood employees load up their truck this summer in the Caribou National Forest.

STOKING THE FIRE

Idaho Falls firm keeps Yellowstone Park's fires burning

IDAHO FALLS (AP) — Logs from forestland 250 miles away fuel family conversations and warm hands in nearby national parks.

Because people cannot fell trees in national parks, someone has to do it elsewhere so the tourists from around the country and five other continents can enjoy the ambience of Western campfires.

The man responsible is Idaho Falls businessman Jack Berrey, who runs Yellowstone Firewood, a shipping point for the wood cut in the Caribou Forest outside Soda Springs, in a converted spud warehouse on U.S. Highway 91 near the Bingham/Bonneville County border.

A pair of old trucks and small trailers haul the logs from the forest to the warehouse where four employees cut the logs on a vintage, handmade woodchopper. Berrey created it to resemble a turn-of-the-century model once used in Yellowstone National Park that can cut logs to any dimension.

It is powered by electricity and uses a system of pulleys and belts to drop a thick metal triangle that looks like five welded ax heads to sever the logs in a split-second.

Berrey and his employees can cut the wood into campfire-sized logs, kindling or even to a flat shape to fit in a special grill invented on the East Coast, Berrey said.

Berrey isn't sure how much wood goes out of the building in a year. He sells 40,000 boxes just to Yellowstone in a year and about the same amount to Grand Teton National Park. He also sells tens of thousands of boxes to grocery stores in the West supplied by Associated Foods.

The people he supplies look forward to his deliveries.

"He's a real sweetheart," said Patti Green, director of retail operations for the Grand Teton Lodge Co. "We're real fond of Jack. He brings us a plant or some freshly-picked berries whenever he comes to visit us."

His business may come under new ownership soon, the 72-year-old said as Mozart's "Eine Kleine Nachtmusik" came over the sawdust-coated tape player in his office.

One of his employees — most likely the father, mother or grandfather in the Gonzalez family — will take the reins, and the North Mexican mariachi music played in the dark workshop will fill the office.

The Gonzalezes and some of their friends have all worked hard for him for as long as he can remember, Berrey said. Even so, the transition won't be easy for him.

"This is my baby," he said of the company. "But it's probably getting to be that time."

He's supplied to Yellowstone for about five years and to Grand Teton for nearly 20 years, when he started the company in Idaho Falls.

ZIONS BANK
THE LOAN SALE IS ON NOW.

*The standard Annual Percentage Rate (APR) is a variable rate and is subject to increase. The maximum APR is 7.1%. The APRs are accurate as of 10/2/01. The introductory fixed rate is valid for six months after opening the plan; after that, the APR would revert to the 12th standard variable rate. Special introductory rates only offered on lines where the total of the first mortgage and the home equity credit line do not exceed $400,000 and an 80% loan-to-value ratio, and where automatic payments are made from a Zions deposit account. The borrower must have adequate property insurance in place in order to open the credit plan. After the first 12 months, the credit line has a 150 annual fee. The APR reflects a special introductory interest rate of 5.5% for the first three months and an interest rate as low as 6.62% for the remaining term on a $10,000 loan. The APR includes a 10% discount for automatic payments from a Zions Bank Loan Account and is the best rate available to the most qualified borrower. Your rate may be higher based on credit qualifications, the amount and term of the loan, and the type of account from which automatic payments are made. Refinance amounts are limited to current Kelly Blue Book value. Offer available on 1998 autos or newer. Rate shown based on seven year term. The repayment schedule for this product would be 64 payments of $115.94 per $1,000.00 borrowed. Rate good with automatic payment from a Zions Bank deposit account. Other terms and rates are available. Check with your bank representative. Offer good on home refinance loans less than $75,000 with a maximum loan-to-value ratio of 85% on an owner-occupied dwelling. All rates subject to change without notice. 60 minute approval by TeleLoan.

More phone users connect with wireless

The Dallas Morning News

DALLAS - Dennis Slechta is not a typical local phone customer. In fact, he doesn't even have the service at home.

Dissatisfied three years ago with line repairs by the local phone company then known as GTE, the 53-year-old Grapevine, Texas, businessman decided he didn't need its service. His cellular phone did everything he needed.

"I get questions when I tell my mortgage company or my bank that I don't have a home phone, that I have a cellular phone," Slechta said. "Some people find it hard to believe."

Slechta is part of a small but determined cadre of Americans who are ditching their local phone lines and going totally wireless.

Listing a number of reasons - saving money, irritation with local phone service and the ease of cellular phones - wireless-only users say they prefer their setup to having two or more phone numbers. About 3 percent to 5 percent of America's 120 million wireless subscribers say their cellular phone is their only one, according to industry and research groups.

A larger but harder to measure group is making long-distance calls on wireless phones instead of wired home phones, because those calls cost no more than local ones on newer wireless service packages.

"After they get their cell phones, they realize they have all this long distance," said David Goldstein, president of Channel Marketing Corp. in Addison, Texas. "Why should they use their home phone?"

The math is simple: A local phone line with frills such as Call Waiting, Caller ID, voice mail and three-way calling coupled with a decent amount of long-distance calling can cost $75 a month. A wireless service plan with 3,400 minutes including long distance and all the frills costs as little as $40 a month.

"These national rate plans have had an effect of driving down the cost of long distance in general," said Knox Bricken, an analyst with the Yankee Group in Boston.

The discrepancy is already weighing heavily on companies such as AT&T Corp. and WorldCom Inc., which are seeing their long-distance revenues fall.

Wireless firms, by contrast, have seen revenues and subscriber numbers skyrocket.

But a majority of Americans continue to make phone calls the same old way, and even wireless subscribers are not always hip to the best savings.

The Yankee Group estimates only 20 percent of cellular subscribers are on national calling plans. The rest pay for long-distance calls per minute.

Let's not forget the 95 percent of subscribers who still send a check to Southwestern Bell, Verizon Communications and other local phone companies every month. In fact, local phone lines continue to grow.

Latest figures from the Federal Communications Commission show that phone lines grew by 3.2 percent to 186.2 million in 1999. And 28.6 percent of homes had two or more phone lines in 1999, up from 1.4 percent in 1990.

Families are getting second lines so they can dial into the Internet without tying up the main line. Some consumers have started using digital subscriber lines or cable modem service for higher-speed access that doesn't tie up phone lines, but wireless technology can't provide comparable Internet services.

"You can't get the speed over wireless PCs at this point as you can on wire line," said Ronald T. LeMay, Sprint Corp.'s president and chief operating officer. "And the ability of the signal to penetrate the interior of homes or offices or apartments" remains less than stellar.

Voice quality and reliability remain problematic on cellular, experts say.

Wireless calls often drop unexpectedly, and getting a radio signal during rush hour can be challenging. Security could also be an issue, since it's easier to listen in on a wireless conversation than a wired one.

"In a perfect world, if the quality of wireless phones were acceptable, there would be no reason to have a wired phone," Goldstein said.

Should improve Service quality should improve with the advent of new technology and more investments in wireless, but getting people to change their habits may be harder, Ms. Bricken said.

Hope for a wireless world largely rests with teenagers and young professionals who move or travel frequently. They make-up the trend's strongest proponents.

Wireless-only lifestyles will really take off "once the teens and youths of the United States move out of their parents' home, because their parents are not going to get rid of their local phones, but they the young will adopt these trends," Bricken said.

The movement is further along in some European countries such as Finland, Britain and Sweden, where more people have wireless phones than wired ones.

"They don't have the same unlimited local calling on land line, so in many cases it's cheaper to go wireless," said Martin Dunstby, a partner at Deloitte Consulting.

Europeans also pay more for Internet access and spend a lot of time on public transportation, where they can use phones to send messages and read news, Dunstby said.

Some U.S. consumers say they are awaiting technologies that would give them faster Internet access over the airwaves and would gladly unthrottle themselves from all wires - high-speed or the basic dial tone variety.

"I could use the same wireless service at home," said Sameer Jaffer, a Dallas software developer who has two phone lines and DSL service.

"I would use the cell phone only and remove my land lines. But I haven't done that yet."

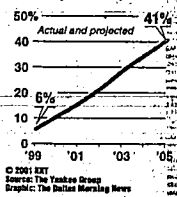

Experts predict that the American home phone line's main purpose will be connecting people to the Internet, not calling.

"Voice is going wireless," said Jeffrey Kagan, an independent telecommunications analyst based in Atlanta. "The wire into the home will be mainly for broadband, and that's just the trend. It's an undeniable trend."

Rise of wireless

Wireless phones are expected to carry about 41% of U.S. voice communications by 2005.

Section E

So you don't forget, write a check today!

OPEN IMMEDIATELY! PRIORITY NOTICE! While I have you on the line, I must tell you about the 43 other bargains available just until midnight.

I'm really beginning to question some of today's marketing tactics. I don't want to say everyone is out to deceive me, but I think most of this stuff could be classified somewhere between mildly annoyed and LEAVE ME ALONE FOREVER!

Last month, I received two mailings that definitely pushed the envelope (ha, ha, envelope, get it?). One of them, from a magazine service, arrived in a gaudy-looking envelope with the words "URGENT!" Respond within 14 days" printed in a disco-era neon pink color. Inside, I found a letter warning me to hurry and renew a magazine that won't expire for six months.

LIFE AND TIMES
Denise Turner

"By acting now, you'll be sure not to miss a single issue," the letter said.

No duh.
The letter was signed by someone named Leslie, who will surely be calling me soon when she figures out I didn't "respond." Because Leslie warned me to "renew now, while you still can." I wonder if this means Leslie is a fortuneteller who is predicting my imminent demise.

If means Leslie will never make me another offer.

I should be so lucky.
The second mailing of questionable taste, sitting there in my mailbox looking innocent last month, was addressed to "the parent of" my son. It began with "Congratulations" and went on to inform me of a special invitation to people over age 16 to sign up for a credit card. It arrived the day after my son's 16th birthday.

"Finally," it said, as if I had been waiting for the letter for years, "the convenience, security and financial flexibility that teen-agers need."

Faulted Teen-agers may need a lot of things - a family who loves them, teachers who spend time with them, friends who listen to them - but one thing they do not need is perceived access to easy money.

In a vain attempt to keep me interested, the card service offered me the right to view my teen-ager's account information and the assurance that, "Your teen-ager doesn't need to be employed."

Wait a minute. If the teen-ager isn't employed, who's going to pay the credit card bill?

For that, you have to read the small print, "for the guarantor." As the guarantor, the letter said, I could oversee my child's "development of good credit habits" (actually, I would have to hang out at the mall with him to do that) and make sure the account is paid even if the "applicant experiences financial hardship" (if he blows his allowance on a pizza, I guess).

But wait! Go to the very small print (the kind parents have to remove their glasses to read), in the section for the "guarantor signature," and you find the scary words: "bound," "nontransferable," "unconditionally guarantee payments... without limit."

All this for a kid who's just now learning to stop leaving his billfold on a bench at the ballpark.

Reminds me of a mailing I once received that said, "Your family may never forgive you," if you don't renew within 15 days.

"Excuse me?" I wanted to reply. "Last time I checked, failure to renew was not one of the mortal sins."

The letter also said, "This is your last chance." Even God gives you more tries than that.

Besides, I still had four months to go on that stupid subscription. And if I decided to send that company cold, hard cash later on, I'm supposed to believe they were going to return it? (Sorry Mrs. Turner, your family can't forgive you, so we can't take your money.)

Get real, guys.

TWIN FALLS — As she walked up on the porch one day after school in 1943, Vivian Beals Lyman heard sobbing — deep, uncontrolled, alarming.

Her father's heart was breaking, and she'd never heard that before.

Harry Beals had been waiting for months for word of the fate of his son, Donald, an Army Air Force second lieutenant who had disappeared without a trace somewhere in Europe.

"His letters stopped coming, and the mail we sent to him was returned," said Lyman, now 74 and a resident of Portland, Ore. "There was no news for 18 months, and that was just hell."

It was the end of July 1944 before the Beals family received a terse form from the War Department, with the name and dates typed in:

"Upon direction and delegation by the Secretary of War, the Chief Casualty Branch, the Adjutant General's Office... finds Second Lieutenant Donald S. Beals, Army

Service planned

A memorial service for 2nd Lt. Donald Beals will be held Friday at 2:30 p.m. in the Twin Falls Cemetery, where his headstone is now in place. The Rev. James Frisbee of the First United Methodist church will conduct the service. Anyone who wishes to attend may do so, and Beals' family invites those who know him.

Anyone who wishes to contact Beals' sister, Vivian Lyman, can do so by writing to her at 1105 SW 66th Ave., Apt. 3218, Portland, Ore. 97255, or by e-mail at asong4u1@juno.com.

Beals' aircraft went missing on a flight between England and Tunisia on Jan. 26, 1943. There were no remains. No wreckage. No trace.

26, 1943. There were no remains. No wreckage. No trace.

"That was literally all we knew until after the war," Lyman said. "Then one day my wingman called us."

Beals, who had graduated from Twin Falls High School in 1934 and was a senior at the University of Idaho when he enlisted a day after Pearl Harbor was bombed, was a P-38 fighter pilot. In January 1943, he was among a group of two dozen pilots ferrying the planes to North Africa, where the Allies were fighting the Germans.

"The mission had been aborted three times because of heavy weather," Lyman said. "But on Jan. 23, the pilots finally left a base outside London, only to encounter another heavy storm — this one uncharted. Without enough oxygen to fly above the storm or the instruments and training to fly through it, the wing commander told the other pilots on the radio that it was every man for himself."

"The wing commander turned east and crashed into the Pyrenees," she said. "My brother radioed to his wingman that he was going to try to fly under the storm. Of course, he couldn't."

Record your family's lives

Etc.

Nick Kelsh has been in the picture business for 30 years, and his work has been featured on the covers of several books in the "Day in the Life" series. He also worked with author Anna Quindlen on "Naked Babies" and "Siblings." Here are his opinions on recording your family's lives.

• The self-timer. Go ahead and be narcissistic. It's OK for the family photographer to get in the picture. Sometimes the self-timer is the only way to do this. Plan for a logical space for yourself as you set up the photo. The space should be near the camera but not risk you blocking someone in your hurry to get in front of the camera. A tripod helps with positioning. Nowadays, even the inexpensive point-and-shoot models come with a tripod plug.

• Face it or not. Photographing someone from behind can communicate a lot of emotion and be a pleasant break from pictures of faces. My favorite example is that (June 13, 1948) Nat Fein Pulitzer Prize shot of Babe Ruth in Yankee Stadium," says Kelsh. The shot is of the back of the ailing baseball legend, tipping his cap to the fans who were there to celebrate the stadium's 25th anniversary and to retire his famous No. 3.

• Digital photography: The digital camera is a grand opportunity to preserve family memories. It's becoming easier to use and cheaper, and photo quality is better. Plus, there's a variety of ways to use digital photos on the computer. For about $7 more than the processing fee, you can store your roll of film on CD. Think of the physical space savings if you have a large family.

• Vertical vs. horizontal: If you're going to make a computer slide show of your work, consider how your verticals will be cropped on the PC screen. If you're shooting digital pictures specifically for a computer screen-saver, take horizontals only.

• Video vs. stills: Video gives an instant idea of what it was like to be there. It's a nice complement to still pictures. But it does not substitute for a single image sitting in a frame on a desk. Still photography pushes emotional buttons harder than video and has stood the test of time, Kelsh says. "There's been a movie made about that famous Vietnam image of the gun being pointed at the head of the young Viet Cong. (Photojournalist Eddie Adams' black-and-white photo "Murder of a Viet Cong by Saigon Police Chief" won a Pulitzer Prize in 1969.) Nobody remembers the movie."

• Filing sans shoebox: Filing photography can be a nightmare. Kelsh recommends culling 10 photos a year. Put them in a binder with your best negatives. Store the outtakes in an old shoebox, give them away or toss them if you can stand it. Another good bet store all your pictures on photo CDs. That way you can toss discards with a clear conscience and take advantage of a format that uses minimal space.

Solar System program begins at planetarium

Ongoing

TWIN FALLS — A new educational program begins Tuesday at the Faulkner Planetarium in the Herrett Center for Arts and Science on the campus of the College of Southern Idaho. The theater will also reprise its Halloween show the same evening.

"WSKY: Radio Station of the Stars," a lighthearted and entertaining way of teaching about the solar system, will be shown at 7 p.m. Tuesdays, Fridays and Saturdays. WSKY is a fictional radio station that beams its signal throughout space, using the planets, moons and asteroids as props for news, weather and traffic reports.

Dr. Cosmos, the show's answer man, makes repeat appearances to reveal interesting information. The show also features a professional soundtrack of original music.

"Anthems of Ghoulish Delight" also starts Tuesday and will be shown at 8 p.m. Tuesdays and 8 and 9 p.m. Fridays and

To do for families

Saturdays through Oct. 30. Anthems was created by the Faulkner Planetarium staff as a Halloween entertainment program in 1999. The program uses Halloween and other fiendish pop music along with graphics and images on the planetarium dome.

Admission to both shows will be $4 for adults, $3 for seniors, $2 for students and $9 for families of two adults and up to five children. Children under the age of 4 are not admitted and late admissions are not allowed.

For more information, call the Herrett Center at 733-9554, Ext. 2655.

Every week, To Do for Families lists family-oriented events in south-central Idaho. To get an item listed, send it to Features Department, The Times-News, P.O. Box 548, Twin Falls 83303. Deadline is noon on Wednesdays.

FAMILY LIFE

Maryann Amaillen shops for costumes recently for her two children in Hagerstown, Md. The retired Air Force veteran says she won't let her children walk the streets this year because of her concerns for their safety.

This year, parents contemplate a low-key Halloween celebration

Knight Ridder News Service

As the nation comes to grips with the horrifying events of Sept. 11, parents whose nerves are already jittery now face another worry: Is Halloween appropriate in these new scary times?

While some will skip Halloween altogether, more parents are planning to exorcise the evil spirits, giving Halloween a gentler face this year.

There'll be fewer witches and more firefighters, less trick-or-treating and freakish displays. Ghouliness is out, but the sense around the nation is that Halloween is still in.

"As a parent, there's something comforting about a ritual like Halloween," says Elizabeth Simmons, whose 9-year-old son and 11-year-old daughter attend Halloween in Palo Alto, Calif. "This year I think it's less about being scary and more about trying to get back to normal."

Many parents say they'll keep Halloween wholesome and low-key by celebrating quietly at home with friends and handing out candy. Some schools are turning traditional harvest festivals into fundraisers to benefit victims of the attacks. And specialty stores are making room for U.S. flag and eagle stickers for kids to affix to their faces or their costumes.

Child experts say Halloween, if treated so that children get a superficial spooking but still feel safe, could be used as a therapeutic tool to help youngsters cope with real-life fears about what's happening nationally.

"Children are always full of real anxieties, so they relish play experiences that allow them to master anxiety symbolically," says Dr. Elizabeth Berger, a Philadelphia-area child psychiatrist and author.

Halloween, Inc.

Halloween is the second-largest holiday after Christmas in terms of dollars spent, accounting for more than $6 billion in sales and growing.

According to the International Retail Marketing Association, more than 60 percent of Generation Xers (18-24 year olds), 44 percent of 25 to 34 year olds and 40 percent of 35 to 44 year olds planned to dress up in 1998. Eight percent of households even planned to dress up their pet.

Within the United States, the strongest markets for Halloween are the East and West Coasts. The Midwest and Southern states are a little more conservative.

Candy accounted for $1.93 billion in Halloween sales last year, according to the National Confectioners Association, in the fourth of the candy sold each year is purchased between Sept. 15 and Nov. 10.

Seventy percent of Americans handed out candy in Halloween 1999.

Berger says parents should consider the age and emotional sensitivity of their children when deciding whether to observe Halloween. Younger children - ages 2 to 4 or so - might not cope as well as older children. And older children, she says, should be allowed to dress up as ghosts and goblins if they choose. But costumes that exploit human tragedy or incite discrimination should not be allowed.

Even with the changed focus, some people find the very notion of Halloween distasteful in light of recent world events.

"I think we have to respect good taste here," Berger says. "In prior years, we might have enjoyed grave imagery in a way that perhaps could be considered offensive at this time."

Teachers and school administrators also are struggling with how best to present Halloween this year.

"We're not feeling like having fun, but at the same time do we take this away from the children? Because most of them don't understand what is happening," says Lucy Mitchell, director of the Montessori Academy of Campbell, Calif., which enrolls 46 children in preschool and kindergarten.

At Mandala Children's House in San Jose, Calif., also a preschool, Halloween will look the same. Kids will wear costumes, have a party, do arts and crafts and bob for apples. Just like always.

"With preschoolers, the biggest thing they do is dress like fancy little Tinker Bells and Spider-men," says Jean Buell, a school administrator.

according to Market Research TeleNation on behalf of American Demographics Inc.

More women (30 percent) than men (26 percent) don't give out Halloween treats.

Costume sales amounted to $1 billion and $1.5 billion last year.

Twenty-eight percent of adults planned to dress up in a costume in 1999, as did 78 percent of kids.

Sales of pumpkins, decorations, crafts, greeting cards, product tie-in advertising, specialty foods, entertainment (in-home parties for adults or children), outside entertainment (seasonal videos, movies, bar and restaurant sales) amounted at $2.5 billion in 1999.

According to Hallmark Cards, Inc., Halloween is the eighth-largest holiday for greeting card sales, accounting for the sale of 23 million to 25 million cards.

the unknown is worse than fear of certain pain. I have heard it said that if people were to put their worst misfortunes into a common basket and then choose one dreadful contingency from that basket, each person would choose his own. To the Israelites, going back to Egypt, the land of bondage, seemed better than the talk of the promised land. This factor has kept people in jobs they hate, abusive associations, destructive habits and spiritual stagnation. Remember, the ship is safe at the harbor, but that's not what's it made for.

4. Self-devaluation. Focusing on what you think you do not have instead of what you have. Moses, when called to redeem the Israelites, talked of his inability to speak. If you will take a minute and list the resources you have and the life you envision, you'll be surprised to discover that you already have a resource that can get you started in any venture.

5. Looking for success "out there." Trying to find meaning, fulfillment, worth and identity in a career that you dislike, unprofitable associations, or habits that are detrimental to yourself and others is like trying to improvise a cooling system. You have what it takes to live a fulfilling life.

Daughter can't pretend she's part of one big happy family

DEAR ABBY: I am a 12-year-old girl and I need some advice. My dad recently had an affair with a woman he met when he went back to school. She is also married. He asked her to marry him, but she said no, so he decided to come back home. He has left us twice before, so my home isn't very stable.

My parents got married at a very young age and have been together for 26 years. Mom tells me she doesn't want to get divorced, because she is still in love with him and thinks that "a two-parent home is better than a one-parent home." She may be right, but even my counselor agrees that one stable parent is better than two unstable parents.

Now that Dad is living back home, he expects me to act like nothing happened - that we are "one happy family." I can't do it, and I'm still very hurt. What should I do?

-NEEDS ADVICE IN CALIFORNIA

DEAR NEEDS ADVICE: Since no one in your family has amnesia, your father's expectations are unrealistic. Considering the fact that he has left the family multiple times, your feelings of hurt and distrust are valid. Family counseling could be helpful to all of you, but if your parents are unwilling, the wisest thing you can do is to continue talking with your counselor until you work through more of your feelings.

DEAR ABBY: Our oldest daughter "Bonnie" has just entered into her second relationship since her recent divorce. We are concerned that she continually uproots our grandchildren to move to a different place. We feel it's time a woman in her 30s "settled down" and gave her children a stable home environment. The father of the children was killed in an unfortunate accident.

Each time she claims to be "in love" and expects us to welcome her new man when we have barely had time to adjust to the last one. Our youngest daughter, "June," feels as we do. Consequently, the two girls no longer speak.

Our dilemma: Since we all live far away from each other, we get together once a year for a family reunion. We always stay with June and her family because Bonnie has never had a spare room until now. Our reunion is coming up, and because of the rift we won't all be together. We would like to see Bonnie and the grandchildren, but are not interested in meeting her new man or traveling to her new home.

How can I diplomatically explain to Bonnie and settle on a neutral place to meet without any hurt feelings?

-CAUGHT IN THE MIDDLE

DEAR CAUGHT: There is no way you can do that, so I urge you to rethink your plan of action. You are not helping your daughter, Bonnie, to make "wise choices" by making her feel like an outcast. If June doesn't want to speak to her - fine. But Bonnie has suffered enough tragedy and disappointment without your adding to her grief. Punishing her will only widen the rift.

Spray stops cat from spraying

Cats are wonderfully complex companions with a language all their own. But sometimes cats communicate in ways we don't appreciate - such as spraying urine on doorways, walls and furniture. This unpleasant but natural action is a common problem with cats, male and female. Unfortunately, it can strain the human-animal bond, to the breaking point.

Here is the really bad news: The National Council on Pet Population says that 40 percent of cats exanthed each year are not only healthy, they are between the ages of 5 months and 3 years. And one NCPP study revealed that behavioral problems like spraying were the second most common reason given for relinquishment of cats.

There main reason cats spray is anxiety. There are two categories of stress for our feline friends - territorial issues and everything else. Cats can react in greater or lesser degrees to other animals roaming outside the house, a new pet to the family and relationship problems with other pets in the home. A new human in the house can cause stress, too, as can relationship problems among "their" people. Being transported somewhere, hospitalized or boarded and moving to a new home can be stressful. Even moving, remodeling or new pieces of furniture can upset their sense of the way things should be.

Meow can only express so much. For other statements, they turn to the pheromones, or chemicals, that communicate feline messages. Pheromones are found in a cat's urine, paws and cheeks.

THE BOND
Marty Becker

This explains why cats spray, claw and cheek-rub household locations.

Pheromones in the urine are used to make a statement. When cats spray the doorway, they're issuing a territorial "Mine!" in response to a perceived threat. Pheromones released from their paws as they scratch are like feline graffiti that says, "I'm here!" Another type of pheromone is released as cats rub their cheeks on objects. Unlike urine, these facial pheromones can only be sensed by the feline nose. And they have a calming effect on cats. They say, "I'm happy and everything's fine."

It's these reassuring, life-is-good pheromones that provide the answer to urine marking.

Observation of felines has revealed that cats don't leave urine marks on objects that have been marked with facial pheromones. A group of veterinarians developed an odorless (to humans) environmental spray for pet guardians that uses a synthetic copy of cats' facial pheromones. Called Feliway, it was available for years through veterinary hospitals and it is now available over the counter in pet supply stores.

This product can be sprayed once or twice a day for 30 days

(at cat-nose height!) directly onto urine marks and furniture, walls, window frames and doorways. The risk of spraying increases when you have more than one cat.

Clinical studies combining Feliway with litter management and medication showed a 95 percent success rate in reducing or spraying or eliminating it altogether.

Before you decide that your cat is spraying due to behavioral problems, make sure you have your veterinarian do a physical exam with diagnostic tests to rule out any medical problems - such as a bladder infection or hormonal imbalance - that may be causing your cat to indiscriminately urinate.

Pheromones can also be used to calm your cat in stressful situations. When moving a cat in a carrier, spray the inside about five minutes before putting the cat inside. It takes about five minutes for the solvent to dissipate, leaving just the pheromone. Before going for a car ride, spray three to four times in the area your cat will ride. In boarding facilities, cats are more comfortable if each corner of the cattery is sprayed before the cat enters.

Spraying is a natural response to perceived threats. By using calming pheromones, both you and your feline pal will find life a lot easier.

The unused air conditioner

Have you ever discovered a talent you did not know you had? Perhaps you were aware of it but never used it. Has the use of the once-neglected talent changed your life in any way? Have you wondered what delayed you from using it earlier?

I learned in high school physics class in my native Kenya that "AC" meant alternating current. In 1986, I came to Wyoming from my graduate program at the University of Wyoming and bought a car. It had a button that was marked "AC." I didn't dare touch it!

My family drove wherever we went. One hot summer, we drove from Laramie, Wyo., to Portland, Ore., and back with seven people in the car. We improvised ways of keeping cool. We opened the windows, stopped regularly and used hand-held fans.

Later, while riding with my family on a hot summer day, our friend Sandra Biegeube asked why the air conditioner was not on. "Our car has no air conditioner," I replied. She pointed at the "AC" button and pressed it. Relief had been at our fingertips all the time!

Do you have an air conditioner that you're not using? Is there something you have always wanted to do but have been afraid to try?

Millions of talents and gifts come and go from this world packaged within people who never use them. Yet when you use a hidden talent, you significantly enrich your life and the lives of others.

There are factors that stop us from pressing the buttons of spiritual, professional or personal growth.

1. Loyalty to the past. If I had not learned that "AC" meant alternating current, I probably would have tried to find out what that button was used for. Past experience, especially failure, may be a hindrance to progress. A key to success is to try and try again after failure. A spider web is distorted by other insects over and over again. But the spider keeps trying until the web is completed, even if it's completed at another location.

2. Loyalty to others. Fear of appearing stupid has caused thousands of spiritual and social buttons to remain unpressed. What others would say if you did something unexpected. Successful artists present the world as they see it themselves, not what they think others see.

3. Fear of the unknown. Fear of

Fudd-like talk is normal for 21-month-old toddler

Q. My 21-month-old was premature. As a consequence, her developmental skills are lagging by approximately 3 months. I'm especially worried about her language skills. At this point, she can only say about 12 words, and most of them she mispronounces; e.g., she says "buh" for "ball." Her pediatrician says there's no cause for concern, but I want your second opinion.

PARENTING
John Rosemond

A. To form a second opinion, I consulted with two pediatricians, reached way back into the Rosemond Family Archives to that long-time time when my children were toddlers, and spoke by phone with my 24-month-old grandson, Connor.

Connor, who is obviously gifted, told me he was playing with his "ephant" and that he "waved" me. He was being prompted by his mom, my daughter Amy, who at this same age was also doing a near-perfect impression of Elmer Fudd. At 21 months, Amy's verbal skills were not much farther along than your daughter's, if at all. Nine months later, she was speaking clearly, in complete sentences.

My pediatric consultants confirmed what your pediatrician told you: At 21 months, a 12-word vocabulary is within normal limits, and few children this age can pronounce "L" or "R" correctly. It all likelihood, you are overly sensitized to developmental problems because your daughter was premature.

To prevent yourself from going down the long neurotic road, I recommend that you practice chanting "The First Developmental Principle: You can't push a river." In other words, your daughter's developmental skills will unfold according to her timetable, not yours.

To help your daughter's verbal skills along, I recommend what I recommend to parents of all toddlers: read to her (but not constantly), talk to her (but not incessantly), repeat what she says, pronouncing the words correctly (but don't harass her about her pronunciation), and if she, like too many children these days, is using a pacifier, take it away. (Note: developmental pediatricians now advise that a pacifier not be used past 6 months. Used beyond 18 months, a pacifier can seriously interfere with speech and language development.)

And relax. Neurosis is communicable.

Celebrate your friendships

This article is a celebration of friendship. Let me introduce four friends of mine: Paloma, Cameron, Robert, and Gabrielle. They all live in Los Angeles. I get to see them two or three times per year. I learn something new about life every time I'm with them.

STRESS
Tim O'Brien

Certainly, we could exist without friends. However, would life be as rich, fulfilling, and complete? Mine wouldn't be. I'm very fortunate. My wife is my best friend. Has been for 33 years so far. My daughters and I are good friends. We enjoy traveling and doing things together. We miss each other when someone's not around.

There are other men and women who are my friends: They are all ages and sizes. They add dimension to my life. Sometimes they laugh with me. Sometimes they cry together. Sometimes they warn or chastise me. Mostly, we support each other's chosen path through life. We celebrate accomplishment and share concerns. Sometimes I feel I have few friends. Then, something happens, or they call to say hello, and I realize I have several good friends in my life.

Who are your friends? Do you regularly show them how important they are to you? Do you have true concern for their well being? Are you thoughtful and considerate of them? Friends are like teeth. If you don't want them, just ignore them, and they will go away.

We don't need to give gifts to show friendship, although there are times when giving gifts is proper and appreciated. Giving an ear for listening, a shoulder for comfort, and an arm for support are gifts of friendship.

Taking time out of our overbooked schedules when needed or asked for is a mark of friendship.

Friends, along with family, help us maintain perspective on what is important in life. "God gave us family to learn to get along with others. He gave us friends to learn how to love," Yogananda. Sometimes, with family we love out of obligation or guilt. With friends, we love because we choose to love. We love because we have formed a kinship with another person.

Back to my four friends I introduced you to. They have helped me learn to communicate beyond regional language. They use smiles, frowns, and laughter more than most people. They've taught me to be happy with simple activities. They don't need to go far away on expensive vacations to feel satisfied. We enjoy each other in a living room, or just taking a walk.

Mostly, they've helped me increase my capacity to love someone else as they are, instead of how I might want them to be. They are always happy to see me.

They don't care what I do for a living. They don't care where I live. It's unimportant to them how much I make, although they do like it when I buy them lunch. They simply take me as I am. They smile, laugh, and enjoy being with me. I love being with them too. Their capacity for unconditional acceptance has had a huge impact on me.

Who are these four friends of mine? Well, Paloma is 3 and counting (very fluently in both English and Spanish). She loves giant Leggo blocks, and going to Robert's house. Cameron is 2, just graduated from the Blue's Clues to Barney, and likes to jump into swimming pools. Gabrielle is 1. She's about to take Robert walking in all directions with much determination and no fear. His favorite hide out is the cardboard box his rocking chair came in. Gabrielle is 3 months old. She's Cameron's little sister. She smiles, sleeps, and smiles some more. Gabrielle's forehead is often multi-colored, and multi-flavored from the gentle spontaneous kisses she regularly receives from Paloma and her brother.

I suggest each of you make friends with some of the youngest generation. Be open minded and ready to learn. They are very good teachers. They will help you learn to celebrate your friendships.

How far can you see in the night sky?

How far can you see with the naked eye? On a clear day in the Magic Valley, you can see the Sawtooths some 60 miles away. But this pales in comparison to the most distant vistas offered by the night sky.

Every one of the 6,000 or so stars visible to the naked eye is part of our galaxy, the Milky Way. Determining which is the most distant is difficult since there are so many more faint stars than bright ones, and we only know the distances of the closer ones. But it's a pretty safe bet that the most distant star we can see without a telescope is within a few thousand light years (a light year is about 6 trillion miles). That still only a fraction of the galaxy's 100,000 light-year girth.

The most distant celestial vistas are beyond the Milky Way's edges. Two smaller galaxies, known as the Magellanic Clouds, are easily visible from the southern hemisphere as hazy patches of light. These satellites of the Milky Way sit about 160,000 light years away.

But the true naked-eye distance winner is the Andromeda Galaxy. Autumn is the best time of year to see it, shining faintly from more than 2.5 million light years away. To find it, get away from the city lights between 9 and 10 o'clock on the next moonless night. Give your eyes at least 20 minutes to adjust to the dark, then look about 20 degrees (one outstretched hand's span, at arm's length) to the right of the constellation Cassiopeia, which lodges like a crooked "W" in the northeastern sky. There you should see a hazy smudge of light. Binoculars will show the oval shape of this spiral galaxy, and a telescope may show a dark lane of dust within it. But don't magnify too much! It spans the width of four full moons in the sky.

Aries: Strengthen your resolve

IF OCTOBER 7TH IS YOUR BIRTHDAY ... your moods are deep, you often "live for love." It is evident to many that you possess extraordinary perception. Pisces, Virgo and Taurus play important roles in your life, could have these letters, initials in names: G, P, Y. You adore mysteries, have knack for getting money's worth and could be fortunate in acquisitions of antiques. During November, make necessary repairs to roofing, plumbing.

ARIES (Mar. 21-Apr. 19): Keep plans flexible. You may be involved in activities with a "social cause." Keep resolutions concerning health, including exercise and diet.

TAURUS (Apr. 20-May 20): Dig deep for information; by tonight you could hit "pay dirt." What you lost had sentimental value; you will retrieve it tonight. Scorpio featured.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Lunar cycle high. Efforts involving writing will reap rewards. Relationship lends spice but could prove expensive. Virgo, another Gemini involved.

HOROSCOPE

Sydney Omar

CANCER (June 21-July 21): Your kind of day! Domestic harmony restored if you make intelligent concessions to family. Focus on luxury items, marital status. Libra plays role.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Define terms. Get commitments in writing. You do not have complete story; go after it. Get facts, not evasions. Flowers and romance are featured tonight.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Let loose with humor of what you've been holding back. Emphasis on business, career and investments. Capricorn individual becomes ally. Get priorities in order.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): You will succeed in "idealistic project." Don't be discouraged by those who lack talent, faith. Journey to foreign land is distinct possibility.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Let go of preconceived notions. Dream tonight will portend future. During day, you accomplish what others consider "impossible." Reunion with loved one featured.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Focus on direction, motivation, meditation and where you live. There could be an addition to family sooner than you might think. Cancer native involved.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Popularity on the rise. You will be asked to monitor social-political debate. Play role behind scenes; strive to be impartial. Gemini figures prominently.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): You upset odds. Emphasize the unorthodox. Be confident because you will win. Emotional responses honed to razor-sharpness. Taurus plays fascinating role.

PISCES (Feb. 19-Mar. 20): Focus on variety of tensions. Give logic equal time. Maintain emotional equilibrium. Flirtation becoming more serious than expected. Virgo plays role.

Beals

So there never was a headstone to bring the Beals family closure. Not until now.

On Friday, one will be dedicated at the Twin Falls Cemetery, 58 years after Lt. Beals died.

"It would have made my brother happy to have a headstone back Twin Falls, and to have it next to our parents' graves," Lyman said. "I wish my mother and father were here to see it."

Hurry Beals, a land agent, died in 1949 - in part of a broken heart, Lyman said. Sadie Beals lived until 1962, and they were buried next to the second of their three children, who had died young.

"One day I saw a item in a women's magazine about the Veterans' Administration supplying gravestones at no charge to servicemen who had died," Lyman said. "I decided it was worth pursuing."

The process took months, but in June the headstone was installed. Lyman will see it for the first time this week.

"I hope people who know him and knew the family will come to the dedication service," she said. "It would be good to see them."

Don Beals was an All-American boy when he grew up during the heady '20s and '30s in Twin Falls. Good-looking and Shoshone. Studious yet gregarious, he wanted to earn a college degree in agronomy and become, like his father, a land agent.

But there was no money, so after high school he went to a business school in Boise and took clerical classes. Then he went to work and earned enough to go to college. Once he got to Moscow, he worked full time, and was elected senior class president in 1941.

Don's other love was airplanes, and after the Japanese bombed Pearl Harbor, he enlisted in the Army Air Corps. To his delight, he qualified as a fighter pilot and was assigned a P-38.

The P-38, a twin-engine, twin-boomed fighter by Lockheed, was the hottest fighter in the Allied inventory in 1942. It was rushed to Europe while its pilots were still learning its eccentricities.

Beals was assigned to the 82nd Fighter Squadron of the 78th Fighter Group, and to a base outside London. After Allied forces invaded North Africa in November 1942, the Army transferred the P-38s - faster, with more range and with a greater rate of climb and dive than German fighters in use at the time, to North Africa. The 82nd was to remain in England and refit with single-engine P-47 fighters.

But first the P-38s, nicknamed "Lightning," had to be flown to North Africa.

"The P-38 was a dream to fly your grandmother could do it," said E.B. "Bert" Roberts, an Acaquia-born pilot who flew Lightning's in the South Pacific campaign. The Pacific Lightnings were retrofitted to increase their range, but an 800-mile flight like Beals' was a stretch in early 1942.

The route was complicated. In fact the fighters could not fly over Spain or Portugal, which were both neutral in the war, so the trip had to be made around the Iberian Peninsula, refueling at the British base at Gibraltar.

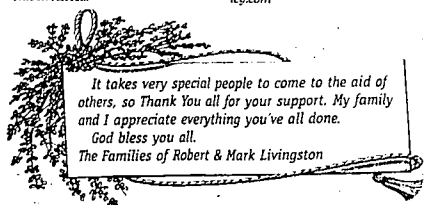

Only six of the 25 pilots made it that far.

"Donald was my hero," Lyman said. "He was 10 years older than I, and I always looked up to him. When he went away, I missed him so much."

"But I know that he died doing something that he loved," she said. "I know he would have been very happy to come back home."

Now he has.

Bride-to-be Michelle Loden walked down the aisle carrying a bouquet of white and pink roses, and a small measure of sadness in her heart.

She's madly in love, and wants to be married.

But when Loden envisioned her dream wedding, the one she's planned since childhood, she never imagined it would fall at the end of the worst week in modern American history.

Loden married her college sweetheart in a sunset ceremony the week after the Sept. 11 terrorist attacks. The flag outside the Delray Beach, Fla., hotel flew at half-staff. Nearly half her guests couldn't attend, their travel blocked by earlier airline shutdowns. The horrors of the week lingered, amidst rose petals strewn on the bridal path.

But under a chuppah, the traditional Jewish marriage canopy, there were vows and rings and kisses. And hope for the future.

As the nation reels from unfathomable attacks that brought death to thousands, life, inescapably, goes on. For many, it goes on in the form of one of life's most significant events.

September is one of the most popular months for weddings, second only to June. Across the country, thousands of couples had to decide whether to celebrate in the wake of tragedy, or cancel an occasion they've spent months planning. The choices are equally difficult.

Two days before the ceremony she'd planned for nine months, Camille Tumoi, 24, learned that her sister, grandparents, aunts, and dozens of friends couldn't attend.

Tumoi's relatives began calling on Sept. 11 to say their flights had been canceled. She felt guilty even thinking about what the terrorist attacks meant to her wedding the following Friday night at the Four Seasons in Newport Beach, Calif.

"I kept thinking there was hope, that the dust would settle," Tumoi said.

For Michelle Loden, 26, and fiancé Sean Slentz, 27, there is no choice but to move forward. To go on living is to honor the dead, a tenet of Loden's Jewish faith. And to stop feeling joy, to delay the moments that make life worth living, Slentz said, is the same as surrendering to the enemy, whenever it might be.

Economic downturn eases hotel search - and prices, too

NEW YORK (AP) - Dreaming of roving in Central Park, museum hopping on Fifth Avenue or catching a jazz show in the Village? Now's your chance.

In Manhattan, where there was virtually no room at the Inn for most of last year, more hotel rooms are going vacant and at least some prices are dropping.

"The big difference is that now if you want to come to New York you can find a room. That's amazing. For most of last year the city was effectively sold out," said John A. Fox, a senior vice president of PKF Consulting, a company that tracks the hotel business.

Many hotels are offering special deals for the summer. In a shift from recent years, when hotel ads in newspaper-travel sections conspicuously left off room prices, hotels are now listing special deals in big bold letters: $125, $119, even $99.99.

"People are definitely going to see better deals because of this," said Sean Hennessy, the director of PriceWaterhouseCoopers' hospitality consulting practice.

The city's hotel room occupancy rate for the first quarter of the year is down by 7.6 percent as compared with the same period last year, the biggest drop since 1994, according to a report released Tuesday by PriceWaterhouseCoopers.

Children can't agree on what is best for their ailing parents

Q. Our mother (age 80) and father (age 86) are both failing physically and mentally. Although I live closest to our parents, see them regularly, and try to take care of their needs, my brother and sister (who live in other parts of the country and come to town irregularly) and I cannot agree on what is best for our parents. These conflicts are causing breaches in our family relationship, and, at the same time, our parents are suffering. The three of us had a meeting with a lawyer who lost control of the situation and caused even deeper resentment. Do you have suggestions about how to break the logjam?

A. In working with elderly individuals and their families to create an effective long-term care plan, it is essential that the lawyer understand not only the unique needs of the elderly person, but also the intra-family dynamics. To be effective, the attorney must identify, assess, and address these issues as early as possible in the planning process because all long-term care planning is filled with conflicts.

These conflicts often include whether to preserve assets for beneficiaries or to use assets to fund long-term care, and whether the elderly person is comfortable giving up control of assets and, if so, to whom. If the elderly person is not comfortable with giving up son need a nursing home? If so, how long will the funds be available? Can the cost of care be paid without causing the spouse who may remain in the community to become destitute? Will assets be sold to pay for the care? If so, what are the income tax ramifications control of assets, alternate planning ideas should be discussed.

Another area of conflict is "quality of care versus cost of care." Certainly, everyone wants the best care available for family members; however, as with any commodity, the more you get, the more it costs. Should the elderly person stay at home? Does he or she need residential care? Can a nurse or aide come to the house to assist? Can a wife or child take care of the elderly person? Does the elderly person tions and will taxes be offset by medical deductions in whole or in part?

Taking the NextStep: The attorney, the elderly persons, and the family must face the question of the elderly person's needs as opposed to his or her desires. Almost no one wants to be in a nursing home, but some people need to be in a nursing home. The elderly person's perception of health issues and the ability of the family to provide care is often very different from the actual facts.

Elderly persons (if capable) and family members must determine what care can be afforded and still meet the family's other financial needs based on their unique circumstances.

The family must remember that providing the best care for the elderly person at the best price is the goal of the planning process. Unfortunately, this is not always clear and causes squabbles within the family that can be avoided if family members are educated and understand that someone needs to be in charge.

Looking in the rearview mirror

I heard a minister on the radio the other day talking about people who always look in the rearview mirror. He was referring to those people who, instead of looking forward, tend to always look behind them to allow the past to control their lives. He certainly had a point.

There probably isn't a person among us who hasn't wished he or she had done some things differently in his or her life. Surely we all wish we could take back a statement or an action — a moment of anger, a thoughtless remark.

I know that I often think back to past hurts that, for the most part, I unintentionally inflicted upon a friend, a loved one or my dear students.

As a young, inexperienced teacher I once used the name of a difficult student as a bad example in one of my classes. A perceptive principal took me aside and kindly explained that, no matter how difficult the child, a good teacher would never make a point at his or her expense. What I had done bothered me for a long time, but rather than continue to feel bad about it, I used it as a learning experience. I would never belittle a child again. I learned a valuable lesson that I never forgot.

A critical problem all of us must face in life is when to become concerned about the past and when to let it be. Some of us, however, become so concerned about our past mistakes that we can't think of anything else. Moving beyond those mistakes seems almost impossible, especially if they are life altering.

But always looking in the rearview mirror can lead to greater problems because we ignore what is in front of us. Although driving through life is fraught with peril, and we must check our rearview mirrors constantly, our main emphasis must be on going forward, leaving what is behind us where it belongs. Looking always to the future, seeking to solve new problems rather than wallowing in past ones.

The past teaches us what to avoid in the future. As I often told my history students, "History has a tendency to repeat itself if we do not learn the lessons taught the first time. We must learn from our mistakes and try very hard not to repeat them."

The future lies before us. It is new and fresh and ours to use for the good of ourselves and our loved ones. If we stew over mistakes that were made, we are cutting ourselves short and denying what might be for what was or what might have been.

Concentrating solely on looking in the rearview mirror may lead to a collision. We must keep our eyes to the front and our minds on the future, always doing our best to avoid the mistakes of the past.
