Postal officials: See mail as 'threat'

White House tries to ease concerns

WASHINGTON - Postal authorities advised Americans to regard their mail as a "threat" Wednesday, began offering protective masks and gloves to every mail handler in the nation and counseled enhanced vigilance by everyone during the anthrax crisis.

Three more postal workers were hospitalized in the Maryland suburbs outside Washington and a possible new case of anthrax was reported at the New York Post, bringing the number of confirmed or strongly suspected cases nationwide to 14.

Postal officials said they soon will begin using high-tech equipment to neutralize anthrax spores and will distribute improved masks and gloves to as many as 500,000 postal employees – nationwide – who process, ort, deliver or in any way touch mail.

TWIN FAILS - Idaho abortion opponents. Wednesday, blusted Planned Farenthood of Idaho as a "criminal organization" that coaches pregnant teens how to get abortions behind their parents backs and vowed to fight plans for a Planned Parenthood site in Twin Falls.

But a Bois-based official with Planned Parenthood Inc., which provides women's gynecological and teproductive services, called the charges "ludicrous" and said the courasizion provides invaluable counseling for teen agers, who have nowhere to turn for help:

EPA proposes $359M cleanup in Idaho's Silver Valley

SPOKANE, Wash. - The Environmental Protection Agency, proposed a $359 million cleanup Wednesday of toxic mining wastes that have accumulated for more than a century in Idaho's Silver Valley.

The work would take 20 to 30 years and create one of the nation's largest Superfund sites. Work would focus first on protecting people from lead, agenetic and other heavy metals left over from the mining and smelting of silver and other metals.

Expanded federal efforts to clean up the northen Idaho valley are a niw nerve issue with many area residents, who fear the impact of aim expanded Superfund designation on efforts to lure new lobs and tourists.

Steve Allred, head of Idaho's Department of Environmental Quality, said Wednesday, he had not yet seen the EPA's proposal, a fact he characterized as "a lack of cooperation and partmership" with the federal agency. What he had heard about the plan was discouraging, Allred said.

"I am unhappiy and I think the people of Idaho are going to be unhappy," Allred said, adding the state may not be willing to pay its share of the cleanup work.

claimed that the Taliban's combat power had been "viscerated."

Stufflebeem's comments came five days after U.S. forces conducted a nighttime raid near the southern city of Kandahar, the Taliban's spiritual center, that had appeared to mark a new phase in the campaign. At the least, Pentagon officials had clearly hoped that the raid would undermine the morale of the regime, which the United States accuses of shielding Osama bin Laden and his terrorist network. Also Wednesday, Secretary of State Colin L. Powell said the United States won't let Ramadan, the Islamic holy month of fasting that begins in mid-November, constrain the military campaign if the operation hasn't achieved its goals by then.

"We are senslaye to Ramadan, but we can't let that be the sole determinant of whether or not we continue our military activities," Powell said. "The important point to remember is, we have military objectives to accomplish."

Anxieties within the Pentagon have been rising in recent days because of signs that the Taliban regime has been moving troops and equipment - and perhaps its leaders - into civilian centers. "Abstinence is a big part of our program," Poedy said, "If we want to reduce abortion, we have to reduce untended pregnancies."

Poedy said recent declines in unwanted pregnancies can be directly linked "to medically responsible sexual education" provided by organizations like hers. She said Planned Parenthood's decision to open a site in Twin Falls was based on the high poverty rate in south-central Idaho – one of the highest poverty rates in the state.

"That statement is absolutely ludicrous," she said. "Planned Parenthood believes every child should be a wanted child." Poedy pointed out that a new state law adopted by lawmakers earlier this year requires any teenager to have a "Judicial bypass" from the court system before being able to get an abortion without parental consent.
"Planned Parenthood encourages teens to involve their parents in all medical decisions— and most do," she said. "But not every family is a model family. If a teenager opts to go through a judicial bypass, it's within the law."

FBI: No anthrax, Sept. 11 link yet

WASHINGTON (AP) - The FBI has investigated 2,500 reports of possible anthrax exposure but has found no links yet between them and the Sept. 11 hijackings, bureau Director Robert Mueller said Wehnesday. Telling the nation's mayors of the challenge facing his investigators, Mueller said the FBI is responding to every report of an anthrax attack even though the wast majority are hoaxes or false alarms.

The largest investigation in FBI history now involves more than 7,000 bureau personnel about one in four employees looking into the hijackings and the subsequent anthrax attacks. Much is still to be learned about the bioterrorism assaults, which have produced a growing number of anthrax cases.

"At this point, it is not clear if the few confirmed anthrax exposures were motivated by organized terrorism," Mueller said in a speech to the U.S. Conference of Mayors.

"But these attacks were clearly meant to terrorize a country of Mayors.

"But these attucks were clearly meant to terrorize a country already on the edge. We're responding swiftly to each and every incident."

Mueller said the FBI is "pouring its heart and its soul" into the investigation. Agents have gotten on their hands and kneess at crash sites and are laboring over more than 3,700 pieces of evidence, he said.

Despite the enormous resources being devoted to the investigation, the FBI's priority is preventing another attack. Mueller repeated the Bush administration's consistent warnings that a high probability exists for more assaults.

He acknowledged the bureau has done better in the past at tracking down terrorists than stopping them.

"Now, it may well be overly optimistic to think that every single attack can be prevented. But we can certainly give it everything we have got, and thay is exactly where got, and thay is exactly where we doing," Mueller said.

The FBI has now entered its hijackers "watch list" into computer records available to state and local law enforcement agencies, he said.

The list includes individuals.

The close 216-214 vote, largely—along party lines, came afterhours of noisy debate reflecting the deep political divide on economic policy, a departure from the unity on some other matters on Capitol Hill since the Sept. 11 terror attacks. Seven Republicans voted against the bill; three Democrats voted for it.—"It officially shatters the myth of bipartisanship," said Rep. Charles Rangel, D.N.Y.
Undeterred, Republicans said the legislation was the ideal way to encourage renewed business investment, stop job lagoffs and boost consumer confidence in time for the holiday shopping season.

"Investment is the driving engine in the economy," said House Majority Leader Dick Armey, R-Texas. "This bill provides a reward for the risktakers who create jobs in America." Democrates sharply disagreed, accusing Republicans of assembling a package that favors the wealthy and big corporations over laid-off workers and threatens to trigger deep future budget deficits. Senate Democrats are certain to make major changes, most likely giving greater aid to the unemployed and fewer-business tax cuts.

An Israeli military operation to arrest the assassins of a Cabinet minister turned into a bloody gunbattle Wednesday in which at least six Palestinians were killed, despite U.S. demands that Israel end its incursions into Palestinian territory.

The Israeli army said two of 11 Palestinians arrested in the raid on Beir Rima were connected with the Oct. 17 assassination of, Tourrism Minister Rehavam Zeevi. Israeli forces closed off, the village, barring reporters and Palestinian ambulances.

The Palestinian Cabinet called the incursion an "ugly massacre" and said more than nine Palestinians were killed and dozens were wounded. It called on the United States to put a

Simpson offered no explanation for the scratch on Pattinson's face but explained his thumbprint on the glasses by saying it must have happened when he brushed them away as he broke off the 30-second, profanity-laced confrontation. During closing arguments, prosecutor Abbe Rifkin did everything but call Simpson a liar, saying the actor came out in him as he testified.

The media got caught napping before Sept. 11

hy were we caught with our preparedness pants down on Sept. 11? Some blame the government for ignoring not only the acts and threats to repeat them. While the past two administrations can share some blame, a major culprit is the media. The press fiddled with the likes of Gary Condit and Chandra Levy, with Bill Clinton and Monica Lewinsky, with the political games Republicans and Democrats played over the budget and electoral politics, while America was being prepared for burning by her enemies.

nems, prepared for ourning by ner enemies.

This isn't the first time the news media has deliberately missed a story with religious roots. During the 1929 Scopes trial, the media of that day thought they had buried fundamentalism. In 1979, the so-called "religious right" re-emerged from seven decades of political hibernation and the media scratched its head in astonishment. PBS's Bill Moyers wondered in a 1980 TV special where all of these people had come from. He and others might have known had they been paying attention and looked in the right places.

paying attention and rooker in the gain places.
While the media was lying in bed on Sunday morning reading the New York Times and watching the TV interview programs, much of America was worship-ping a higher authority and their ranks were growing. Because most in the media elite don't worship anything higher than their careers, they missed this important and newsworthy movement. They never fully recovered from that lapse and most still are incapable of understanding reli-gious doctrines and accurately defining religious terminology. The desire for better TV ratings lead programmers to present people from the extremes for highcoaten religious debates, rather than responsible and knowledgeable guests who could emlighten the public with historical facts and informed perspective. Now comes another religious movement, with an indictment of secular culture similar to Christian conservatism, but with a far more radical and dangerous proposal for altering it. While the "religious right" sought victory through the ballot box, radical Islam seeks it at the point of a gun. But the press missed this, too, to our common detriment. Some may wish to excuse the media blindness on the grounds that most journalists do not wish to offend that is selective absolution. While they may not wish to offend cortain racial and sexual minorities, they have regularly offended conservative Christians and many Jews by wrongly attaching labels and motives that insufficiently describe what these groups believe. The media has been able to get away with this because they know such people won't send anthrax to them in the mail or hijack airplanes that crash into their offices.

Few in the media know the basics about Middle Eastern culture, politics and history, or takam and its myriad teachings. Newspaper editors and television executives should require that reporters take a crash course on these topics, or hire people who already have the information and can present it fairly and accurately. The disinformation cainpaign about our enemies will succeed in proportion to the ignorance level of our citizens.

citizens.

A major part of the problem has been journalisms failure in recent years to cover foreign news. When I worked for NBC News in the 1960s and early 70s, one of the more useful endeavors was a year-end national tour by our correspondents, who would come in from Hong Kong, London and Paris and join a team of domestic reporters for enlightening "town meeting" sessions attended by the public.

Today, the networks have a server and the public.

"town meeting" sessions attended by the public.

Today, the networks have closed mest of their foreign bureaus and rarely coyer news from overseas. Advertisers covet, 18 to 49 year-old female viewers, who, buy their products, so foreign news has been dropped in favor of too many stoyries apparently chosen for the express purpose of reaching this demographic. The TV networks, from which most people get their news, will only make the commitment and spend the money to cover foreign news again if there's sufficient demand and if it's profitable. That will depend in large part on whether viewers want such coverage and support it by buying the advertised products.

Given the media track record, I wouldn't bet they will make the commi ment now and our ignorance will place us in greater danger.

I served on the Governor's Task Force on Safe Schools that was released in 2000. There is a vast amount of research that shows that more than 50 percent of all youth crimes occur between 3:30 and 6:30 in the afternoon and the majority of teen-age pregnancies also occur during this time. Research also indicates that students involved in extracurricular or after-school ungreams are more-engaged. after-school programs are more engaged, better-adjusted and more effective learn ers. The report recommended that the Idaho Legislature should provide fund-ing incentives to encourage school dis-tricts to initiate or expand student advi-ing incentives to encourage school dis-tricts to initiate or expand student advi-stry groups, group counseling, student forums, before- and after-school pro-grams, student advising and lower the ratio of school counselors to students. On the local level, Jon Jund, the dean of students at the Blull School District, compiled data demonstrating that stu-dents who participate in extracurricular activities ourperform academically those students who do not participate. During 2000-2001, of 179 student-ath-letes, there was a 3.072 accumulative grade-point average. Of the ISS students participating in drama and music, there is a 3.01 to 3.08 accumulative grade-point students not participating in extracurri-ular activities, there was a 2.19 accumu-lative grade-point average. That is a big difference.

Truther data gathered by Jund indicated that in a five-year period, of the 125 students who dropped out of school in that time frame, 92.8 percent or 116 of those students did not participate in extracurricular activities. Also, Pass Room participants for the past year 2000-2001 consisted of a range of 75 percent to 90 percent of students who did not participate in extracurricular activities. Finally, in an interesting article of 8-Pediatrics and Adole-scent Medicine, it states: "There may be something to the stereotype of a clean cut high school able lete. A survey of more than 14,000 teem-agers found that those who participate in extracurricular activities were less likely to use drugs, smoke, have sex, carry weapons or have unhealthy eating habits. The generally positive relationship between sports/extracurricular activities and healthy behavior suggest hat parents and physicians should actively encourage young people to nife advantage, to join sports and other activities offered by the schools."

Economic stimulus has to help the consumer

f you are designing an "economic strimulus," you need some notion of what you're doing and why. The idea is not just to throw money at the economy on the theory that one dollar is like any other. The central purpose is to help the economy recover—something that seems to have eluded jobh Republicans and Democrats. "Even before Sept. 11, the economy that one glaring vulnerability." It was not the sagging stock market, declaring corporate investment or falling exports, though all these were (and are) problems. The great danger was consumer spending. For eight years, consumers shad spent beyond their means—or, more precisely, beyond the increases in their current incomes. They borrowed, sold stock or skimped on saving. By 2001, consumers' debt burden (the share of income devoted to interest and principus) rowed, sold stock or sampet on saving, By 2001, consumers' debt burden (the share of income devoted to interest and principal) nearly matched its previous record of 14 percent.

It was this spending spree that kept the economy advancing despite faltering business investment and exports. But it could not last. The personal savings rate fell to zero. The economy had benefited from a long period of faster-than-normal consumer spending. Inevitably, there would be a period of slower spending, because consumers were over-borrowed, wouldn't sell more stock or need do replenish savings. The slowdown had started before Sept. 11st the attacks worsened it.

The inescapable conclusion is that any stimulus should concentrate its benefits on consumers. It should help them get past their spending retrenchments as quickly as possible. Consumer spending is two-thirds of gross domestic product. As it goes, so goes the states of the economy. But this imescapable conclusion has escaped the Republican-con-tolled House Ways and Means Committee, which passed the first major stimulus plan. Its proposed tax cuts would go overwhelmingly to business. Let's see. In 2002 and 2003 – Let's see. In 2002 and 2003— the relevant years for recovery— the bill provides $112 billion in business tax breaks. Personal tax cuts are less than half that, $49 billion. The biggest business tax break involves larger write-offs for new investments. Well, the Fed's index of industrial carpacity utilization was at 75.5 in September, the lowest since June 1983 (74.8) just after the worst recession since World War II. With so much surplus capacity, recession since World War II.

With so much surplus capacity, most companies won't add to investment until overall demand aka consumer spending - investment until overall demand – alka consumer spending – revives.

The Ways and Means package also repeals the corporate "alternative minimum tax" and provides one-time rebates connected with past AMT payments – rebates that are an indefensible giveaway. Citizens for Tax Justice, a liberal advocacy group, estimates that IBM would receive a $1.4 billion rebate and General Motors $833 million. What would these do for recovery? Not much. Let me repeat some previous suggestions for a stimulus plans—Advance (already passed) personal tax cuts. Changes would help the middle class. Under present law, the child tax credit is scheduled to 90 from $500 per child to $1,000 by 2010; the full increase could be done in the next few years. General rate cuts scheduled for 2004 to 2006 could be advanced to the next three years. With more income, consumers can do one of three things spend it pay down debt, or save it. The first would instantly help the economy, the other tow would hasten a resumption of stronger consumer spending by improving people's finances.

• Help state and local governments. This may be the next sector of the economy to tumble. Barred from deficit spending, most state and local governments thin spending when tax revenues falter, as they are now. To cushion cust in services and jobs, Congress could temporarily revive the General Revenue Sharing program that in the 1970 provided grants to 50 states and 37,000 localities.

These proposals wouldn't per-provided grants to 50 states and 37,000 localities. These proposals wouldn't permanently increase federal spending or crode the tax base. They'd simply accelerate already-passed ax cuts and provide temporary (two to three-year) grants. Instead the "stimulus" has become a vehicle for pet agendas. Democrats propose a hodgepodge of tax rebates for low-income families, expanded government health insurance and spending. This is income redistribution posing as stimulus. There's an almost-reflexive opposition to anything that might benefit upper-income families. But these are the people who do most of the consuming. The richest fifth of households (with average income fatilos). The richest fifth of households (with average income fatilos). Colts, Chiefs look to get on winning track

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) - Key injuries. Interception-prone quar-terbacks. Angry fans, sagging morale, three-game losing morale, three-game losing streaks. Heading into their game tonight in Arrowhead Stadium, the Indianapolis Colis (23) and Kansas City Chiefs (15) have a tori ncommon.

"We're in a slump, They're in a slump," said Chiefs safety Jerome Woods. "They're probably thinking the same thing we're thinking—this team needs a win." After starting 2-0 and appearing to justify their high expectations, the Colts have lost three straight. Peyton Manning, with injuries to some of his best receivers, has thrown nine interceptions.

injuries to some of his best receivers, has thrown mine interceptions.

In a strange game last week against New England, Indianapolis seemed to dey football physics and math. Manning threw for 335 yards, Edgerrin James ran for 143 and Marvin Harrison caught for 157 as the Colts-totaled 484 yards but still found a way to lose to New England by 21 points.

"It's just a matter of trying to execute even better, trying to maintain that same focus we have from our own 20," said Manning.

"Most of our mistakes have been lack of execution, more mental mistakes than physical mistakes. We played very well in our two wins. Since then we just haven't played well enough. It's pretty simple."

essentially the same thing. In his first year in Kansas City since the Chiefs gave St. Louis a first-round draft choice for him, Green has thrown five TD passes but been intercepted nine times. He's been hampered by injury and ineffectiveness among the wide receiver corps but he's also been responsible for many of his own woes. In a 24-16 loss to Arizona last week, tight end Tony Conzalez got wide open on two crucial plays. But Green sent the ball flying over his head on one play and threw the next one on the ground at his feet.

The Chiefs have been unable to get touchdowns once they get close. On four possessions inside the 20 at Arizona, they came away with three field goals. Since an easy win over Washington on Sept. 30, Green's offense has scored only one touchdown from inside the 20.

Cougars may take perfect record to Memphis

PROVO, Utah (AP)—The BCS is not very popular at BYU.
Coach Gary Crowton criticized the Bowl Championship Series formula that determines which teams play for the national title and reach the three other bigmoney bowl games.
"I'm not for the system because it doesn't involve enough teams," Crowton said Wednesday. "In doing that, it keeps the money in a small majority of conferences, and that's not the best thing for college football."
Crowton is in a position to complain.
After replacing the retired LaVell Edwards, he has taken BYU (7-4) back to the high-scoring days of the past, when the Cougars routinely smothered opponents but just as often faced criticism about having a weak schedule.
This season, BYU leads the nation in scoring at 48.9 points a game.

two months for the Liberty Bowl.
"If we go to Memphis, that means we will have won the con-ference championship," quarter-back Brandon Doman said. "We'd be happy about that."

But there's more at stake. Payouts at non-BCS bowl games are substantially lower than for BCS bowl games. The BCS-affiliated Fiesta, Orange, Sugar and Rose bowls typically land out around $13 million, compared to $1.25 million for the Liberty Bowl.

The Cougars weren't listed in this week's BCS ratings, the first of the season, which came out Monday. Only the nation's tool for the season, which came out Monday. Only the nation's tool have BYU as high as No. 17.

"All we can do is be consistent in how we win our games," Doman said. "Hopefully, when they punch those numbers back into the ratings system we can they punch those numbers back into the ratings system we can be up there somewhere."

To qualify for a BCS bowl game, a team from an unaffiliated conference must be zanked within the top six in the final BCS standings. The formula mixes several national polls and considers factors such as wins against other teams using the BCS standings and strength of schedule.

Crowton noted tile, only the BCS ratings will change substantially.

That has become the Hurricanes' theme this season.

First-year coach Larry Coker believes it, and so do his players. That confidence combined with some leftover hostility from last season has the Hurricanes playing with attitude.

"It seems like that every year. It's nothing new to us. It's something we're used to playing with is that lack of respect. It gives us extra incentive to go out and perform well every week."

The Bowl Championship Series standings have provided plenty of incentive, too.

Last season, the Hurricanes beat Florida State 27-24 and finished the regular season 10-1, but they dropped below the one-loss Seminoles in the final BCS rankings and didn't get a chance to play Oklahoma in the Orange Bowl for the national title.

Sixteen teams, including reigning state champion Genesee and runner-up Clark

Sixteen teams, including reigning state champion Genesse and runner up Clark Fork enter-pool play at four-separate venues around Lewiston today. By day's end, eight will advance to the 1A state tournament at Lewis-Clark State College beginning Friday.

The District Four champion Cutthroats (15-5) are the proverbial new kids on the state block. Under McCann, who took over for expecting coach Nancy Fenn, the Matteson (5-7) and Lauren Drew (5-6) come from the outside with setter Temi Turtem running the offense.

Though exestatic with making the field of 16, McCam isn't as excited about the team's pool, which holds District One champion Clark Fork, Rimrock and Kendrick at Jenifer Junior High School.

"It's strange that we drew Clark Fork in the first game," McCann said. "It's going to be tough, but the girls have shown that they can win all year."

Though the canch may be new, Murtaugh is no stranger to state, having made the elito eight five straight years, including finishing second to Troy in 1997.

The Red Devils will need seniors Annie Adolfsen (5-7, S) and Stevie Tolman (5-10, OH) and jumiors Lacey Perkins (5-7, OH) and Tanyn Perkins (5-10, MB) to produce if they are to make their sixth tournament in a row.

"We're thrilled to get to state," Cornell said. "It was good to see the girls improving the whole season."

Murtaugh (20-6), the Magic Valley Conference champion and District Four No. 2 seed, faces perhaps the easiest pool with District Three champion Notus, North Gem and Cambridge at Lewis-Clark State College.

The other two poels both at Lewiston High School, feature Camas County (20-10) and perennial state contender Shochone (24-1).

Northside wild card Camas County makes its second trip to state in as many years under Beelcy Simmer. The Mushers, who were several at state last year, went on a tear at the conference tournament, winning two loser-out matches while beating Shoshone and forcing a second championship with The Community School. "It will be very tough to defeat Genesee, being that they are the defending state champions," Stimer said. "We have played Rockland and defeated them. We are going to have to (wait and see) with Garden Valley."

Meeting provides forum for canyon rim issue

Imme-News writer

HAZELTON - People wanting more information about a proposed preservation zone along the 35-mile stretch of Snake River Canyon rim in Jerome County can find it at a meeting tonight. The second of two open houses will be held from 5 to 7 p.m. at Valley High School in Hazelton. Canyon rim property owners can ask questions about what the proposal means to their land, said Art Brown, Jerome County planning and zoning administrator. The Canyon Rim Committee will be on hand not only to answer questions, but to hear suggestions or comments on the proposal, Brown said.

The committee will meet one more time

nance before submitting it to the county's Planning and Zoning Commission for approval.
Creation of a preservation zone will allow existing land uses to continue. It would prevent future development within 100 feet of the canyon. No property under 40 acres in size could be subdivided. and city impact area, Brown said. If the preserapproved by Planning and

The proposed preservation zone varies in width, reaching its widest point at U.S. Highway 93 where the zone extends north from the canyon rim to Interstate 84. Most of the land is private and belongs to 330 property owners.

The proposal is guided by Jerome County's comprehensive plan that calls for preserving open space, recreational uses, migratory corridor for raptors, waterfowl and other widdlife, water quality and cultural and historical sites, unique geological features and scenic vistos.

CSI gears up for Dell

TWIN FALLS - The mad scramble has been on for about six weeks.
Folks at the College of Southern Idaho have had to prove to Dell Computer Corp. they had what it rook.
"We've had to work 24-7 to get it done. I got my first gray haits," said information technology instructor Todd Schwarz. "Most of the time I don't even know what day of the week it is."

Schwarz and others involved with information technology classes had to build a program to process about 300 students who would be able to go on to apply for the call support center jobs offered by Dell Computer Corp. which plans to be operational in Twin Falls by February. They also had to find facilities for all those classes as well as for classes that Dell will conduct in January after the first Magic Valley employees have been

Center counselor Jerod Opsal tells those who show up for the 30-minute orientation sessions what to expect in the CSI information technology class called INFT 102.
"The learning curve is relieved."

"The learning curve is going to be pretty steep," he warned. The first thing to understand is that anyone who has trouble turning on a computer will probably be in too deep. The course is for those with at least a basic understanding of Windows and Internet functions.

Second, because the class is a two-credit, intense 40-hour course held over a period of two weeks or one month, students should make sure they have plenty of time to devote to it, Opsal said.

"Students should expect to do at least two hours of homework for every hour of class," he said. And third, the intensity of the class demands punctuality, regular attendance and a thirk spiral notebook for copious rates. Opsal said it is essential for students to purchase the required textbook prior to getting to class on first day. If the book is not calculated the control of the Court rules sheriff was not responsible for removing rock

BOISE (AP) - County sheriffs ave no statutory or common law

BOISE (AP) - County sheriffs have no statutory or common law duty to remove or even warn anyone about rocks on state highways, the Idaho Supreme Court said.

The high court, in a unanimous opinion issued Wednesday, upheld a lower court's summary judgment for Custer County and Sheriff Mickey Roskelley in a lawsuit from a Challis man injured after hitting a rock on Idaho Highway 15.

David Leslie Udy was driving a pickup truck on Idaho 75 on the morning of March 1, 1998, when he hit a large rock. His right front tire was blown and Udy lost control of the truck. Udy and his two passengers, Roy Chivers and Roxanna McDonald, were injured in the subsequent rollover.

Udy alleged that Róskelley and his wife had traveled on Idaho 75 the night before the accident, and that the sheriff was negligent in failing to remove the rock or direct someone else to do it.

Chivers and McDonald and heir spouses also sued Roskelley and the county.

Roskelley, later admitted having seen several small rocks on the road about a third of a mile from the scene of Udy's crash north of Clayton.

But the Supreme Court agreed

But the Supreme Court agreed with 7th District Judge Richard

St. Clair's February 2000 rejection of arguments that a common sense reading of state law implies sheriffs have a duty to remove or alert someone to road hazards. "The language instead indicates that law enforcement personnel are to make sure that vehicles do not damage the physical surface of the highway," Justice Jesse Walters wrote. Lawmakers could easily have required sheriffs to remove or notify someone of highway obstructions. "Instead, the Legislature has placed the Legislature has placed the responsibility of maintaining state highways, such as Highway 5," on the Idaho Department of Transportation, Walters wrote.

State asks Supreme Court to review ruling on reservation fuel taxation

BOISE (AP) - The state on Wednesday asked the U.S. Supreme Court to reverse the Idaho Supreme Court to reverse the Idaho Supreme Court's June 8 ruling that states have no authority to tax fuel sold on Indian reservations.

Attorney General Al Lance's office petitioned for review of the decision barring the state from taxing Lewiston-based Goodman Oil Co. for gasoline it delivers for resale on the Coeur d'Alene Tribe's Panhandle reservation.

"We are trying to clarify an issue that has a big impact on issue that has a big impact on fiscally and from a standpoint of equity," state Tax Commission Chairman DuWayne Hammand said.

"We have a very unfair situations of the country, both fiscally and from a standpoint of equity," state Tax Commission Chairman DuWayne Hammand said.

Commission charman pruwayne Hammond said.

"We have a very unfair situa-tion today. Those who purchase untaxed fuel on Indian reserva-tions get the same benefits from our transportation system as those who pay for the system through the purchase of taxed fuel," he said. More than 23 cents per gallon of Idaho's 25-cents per gallon fuel tax is dedicated to road construc-tax is dedicated to road construc-tion and maintenance. Almost $6.2 million of those receipts were spent on Coeur d'Alene Indian Reservation roads between 1993 and 1999, accord-ing to Lance's office.

Hammond said the ruling also put gas retailers near Indian reservations at a competitive dis-advantage to those operating within tribal boundaries. The Tax Commission estimates the state could lose $1.6 million a year in gas taxes from Goodman Oil could lose $1.6 million a year in gas taxes from Goodman Oil alone.

Lance said the U.S. Supreme Court has never addressed whether the federal law that allows states to collect fuel taxes on federal "reservations" - such as military installations – also applies to Indian reservations.

"Given that the South Dakota Supreme Court reached the opposite conclusion of the Idaho Supreme Court on a similar question, it is important to motorists in all of the states that the U.S. Supreme Court bring finality to the issue," he said.

But Lance acknowledged the chances of being granted high court review are slim. Last year only 99 of 5,633 petitions were approved.

only 99 of 5,633 petitions were approved.

The Idaho Supreme Court in June agreed with then-4th District Judge Daniel Eismann now a high court justice himself-that no federal law clearly allowed the state to tax fuel sales in Indian country. It also agreed with Eismann's conclusion that doing so interfered with the Coeur d'Alene Tribe's ability to exercise sovereignty. (IIIIIIIIII)

City will seek tax solution in legislature, rather than in court

RATHDRUM (AP) - The city is putting its court fight against a state tax law on hold in hopes of finding a solution in the 2002 Legislature.

Rathdrum filed suit in 1st District Court in July challenging a 1995 law that stops the city from using the new Cogentrix Energy power plant as a tax revenue windfall.

Unless the law is changed, Rathdrum will not get an extra $400,000 afficials anticipated in maxt year's budget, and Kootenai County could lose $300,000 to $400,000 already earmarked for its 2002 budget.

When the Legislature convenes in January, the city plans to support a bill to include private-power-generating plants in the new construction' rulls and send the property tax revenue directly to city and county budgets.

A similar measure passed the flouse last winter, but the session ended before the Senate considered it. City attorney Rollie Watson said trying again to change the law may provide a quicker and less expensive solution than a lawsui. The Legislature in 1995 limited how fast municipalities can increase their budgets in an attempt to control rising property maxes. Taxing authority was limited to a 3-percent annual increase, plus the taxes from any new construction.

But "operating property"—including such infrastructure as railroad tracks, pipelines and generating plants—cannot be included in the taxes collected from new construction.

The city is challenging the state's definition of operating property.

state's definition ot operating property.
Under state law, operating property is assumed to be owned by a government or to be privately owned but crossing several boundaries such as city, county or state lines. Watson contends Cogentia's plant is a private, for-profit fullity, not an operating property.

Hailey candidates talk about planning

HAILEY - The candidates were there to field questions from voters and newspaper reporters. But no question was more succincily put than the one Hailey City Councilwoman Martha Burke posed to her challenger Pete Kramer. Why, she asked, did you decide to run for my seat instead of Don Keim's?

"I don't know Don very well.-I've known you for jyears," Keirn's?

"I don't know Don very well.

"I don't want to be in competi-tion with you," he went on. "I just want the best man in this job. And I've wanted this job for "vears."

In contrast to Ketchum's candidate forum, which boasted a record number crowd of about 70 people and 10 candidates, Hailey's turnout was small.

Twelve people came to the Tuesday night forum, four of whom were there to report on and photograph the forum. It was half the number that turned out for an election forum in Sun Valley.

Moderator Pam Morris asked whether the smallest turnout in the valley's largest city represent-ed mass satisfaction or mass apathy.

Burke sided with complacency.

Burke sided with complacency, if the current council had screwed up, there would be eight candidates running and a roomful of viewers, she ventured. Kramer agreed that town residents were complacent but for a different reason. People gende items that keep being revisited month after month, year after year, he said. The council needs to move quicker.

Al Lindley, a retired AT&T executive and Power Engineers employee, was the only one to cast his hat in the ring for Hailey's mayoral suit, which is being wacated by Brad Siemer. And Don Keirn, who was named to Jennifer Hazard-Davis council seat earlier this year when she opted to spend more time with her newly adopted daughter, will run unopposed.

Burke, who has eight years on the City Council, seemed most passionate when she was talking about solutions to congestion on Idaho Highway 75.

Hailey must adopt some of the planning tools Ketchum is using-now, she said. The town needs to focus on becoming a pedestrian community rather than an automobile-driven community. And it needs to support some kindi of bus system for adults and childen going to and from school.
Kramer, airport operations chief for eight years and an organizer of the Northern Rockies Folk Festival, agreed that Hailey needs to do some planning to keep from being Ketchum's parking lot.
Kramer said that Hailey also Lindley said he hoped to estab-lish long-range plans 20 years out to preserve the town's small-town feel and quality of life.

He said he doesn't see his work as co-chair and founder of the Quigley Recreation Facilities committee as a conflict since he has nothing to gain financially from a public golf course being built in Quigley Canyon. "I think it will be a positive thing for the city of Hailey," he said.

thing for the city of Hailey," he said.

Lindley added that he thinks Ketchum has an avoidance problem when it comes to trying to limit traffic into the city: "To put a magic number on it, I don't know how they will meter it or enforce it." There are other options, he added, such as building a bypass around the city's Main Street.

ing a bypass around the city's Main Street.

One member of the audience intimated that he feared Lindley would abet turning Della Mountain into an antenna farm, given Lindley's recent work as a wireless facilities consultant.

Lindley responded he had already suggested that state land people clean up the towers on Della. One multiple-use tower of the right-height-would-allow-the-city to get rid of "two nasty looking ones by the airport, which are practically inoperable, anyway," and prevent the multiplicity of towers needed to service the area, he said.

Fire Chief Mike Brown also asked the council to "add teeth to our ordinance" regarding weed control. He said most of the time there are no problems with weed control, but when people don't want to clean up their weeds, there is very little that forces them to.

Brown asked the council to consider amending the ordinance to allow city employees to go on to property to clean up weeds if people do not do it themselves after they are notified to do so. They would be charged 5100 for the first hour of work and 550 for cach heur after that.

That money could be assessed on the property owner's taxes if not paid, Brown said.

Geologists keep eye on growing swell near volcano in Oregon

PORTLAND, Ore. (AP) Federal researchers say they may place new seismic equipment near an Oregon volcano known as the South Sister because of evidence that molten rock has continued to seep into the area over the past year.
Scientists say the influx of volcanic rock doesn't necessarily mean the South Sister will erupt, but the magma three to four miles below the surface could trigger earthquakes as it moves.

could trigger earthquakes as it moves.

New measuring devices would allow further study of the volcanic area, as well as protect the public, said Daniel Dzursin of the U.S. Geological Survey's Cascades Volcano Observatory.

"If it continues, it could eventually culminate in an eruption, and we need to be prepared for that," said Dzursin, who works in Vancouver, Wash.

South Sister, the youngest of the Three Sisters volcanoes in central Oregon, erupted twice, about 2,000 years ago, Volcanic vents near the South Sister last spilled magma more than 1,200 years ago and lie in a region that, has spewed more volcanic debris, then any other in the Pacific years ago and lie in a region that has spewed more volcanic debris than any other in the Pacific Satellite images earlier this year revealed that a region inpet to 12 miles across had risen about 4 inches from 1996 to 2000. Geologists said it was the most striking geological change in the Cascade Range since the 1980 cruption of Mount St. Helens.

Helens.

At the time, there were no current satellite images to show whether the swelling was continuing. In September, however, a European satellite circling about 500 miles above Earth snapped a new picture that includes precise measurements of the surface tooperankly.

topography.
Comparing it with earlier images, researchers found that the area centered three miles west of South Sister had continthe area centered three miles west of South Sister had continued bulging upward at more than an inch a year. That brings its total swelling to about 5 inches, in five years - a breakneek pace in geologic terms.

Other volcances are known to swell and shrink without eruping, but in some cases small surges of molten rock have triggered eruptions.

A relatively small infusion of 30 million cubic yards of magina could have caused the swelling, but it could also come from a larger reservoir of molten rock that has, been under the Cascades for hundreds of years. "We know from other places that there can be magina bodies present for some time, where a small increase causes the original body to erupt," Dzurisin said. "If the process were to continue, it would be like stretching a rubber band. Eventually it's going to break. It may take five years or it may take 10 or 20." William E. Scott, scientist-incharge of the Cascades Volcano Observatory, emphasized that more research would help unravel details of the uplift. He said scientists nede to find out if the rate of the swelling is increasing, decreasing or holding steady over time.

In addition to monitoring

In addition to monitoring ground movement, researchers have sampled springs in the area for volcanic gises that would be a signature of an underground magma reservoir. Those gases act as the driving force of eruptions.

indiced "Biack Kobe" they had heard about for generations before white men set foot in their rountry.

The Rev. Pierre-Jean De Smet traveled the West for more than a quarter of a century to bring Christianity to Salish-speaking tribes of the Pacific Northwest and upper Missouri River.

Where such encounters turned out badly for some, "there was just an innate attraction of respect and love between De Smet and the native people," contends Gonzaga University history professor Robert Carriker. "They felt very deeply the loss of De Smet when he passed away."

A bronze bust installed on the Gonzaga campus. Tuesday commemorates the 200th anniversary of De Smet birth in Belgium.

A naturalized American who joined the Society of Jesus, or Jesuit, order of Roman Catholic priests in 1821, De Smet became one of the best known missionaries in North America before his death in 1873, Carriker said.

In addition to establishing a sring of Catholic missions in the Great Plains and Pacific Northwest; De Smet was an adventurer who became one of only two men to travel the Columbia and Missouri rivers from source to mouth.

He was also a prollific fund-rais

He was also a prolific fund-raiser for his missions who traveled frequently to Europe; as well as an author and executive at St. Louis University.

De Smet saw in the Indian spiritual life things that were comparable to Catholic ideas, said Carriker, author of "Jesuit in the West," a De Smet biography.

For instance, Indians chauted around the campfire at night, believing the smoke carried their prayers.

"De Smet said, 'We're on the same page, my church does Gregorian chants," Carriker said, "As you believe smoke from your campfire rises to the Great Spirit: when you come to our church service, you'll notice we use smoking incense to portray the same thing ... to carry our petitions skyward."

De Smet's successor at the Idaho mission that carries his name today has Indian symbols on his vestments, Carriker said.
De Smet got along with the Indians because he practiced the Jesuit ideal of accommodation, Carriker said.
"It meant ... that it's recteri Carriker said. "He would say,

There is a meeting ground, we're all together in trying to understand the spiritual world." Indians who had heard of the priests from Eastern Indians who served as guides and paddlers for Canadian fur trappers had ulterior motives for making four treks to St. Louis to beg for the Black Robes, Carriker said.
"One of the reasons the Indians were so interested in the white man's religion is because they believed it might be an avenue to make them more powerful and, in fact, bulletproof against their warlike enemies," he said.
"Those reasons are not what De Smet suspected," Carriker said. "He thought they were truly inspired by the Holy Spirit."
Although he latter would serve as a chaplain and interpreter for the U.S. Army as it carried out its Western "campaign" against Indians, De Smet got along well

"They were aware this was a man who was not a U.S. government shill and as a result, they had an enduring love for him."

De Smet's 1842 visit to the Coeur d'Alene Tribe of northem Idaho fulfilled a tribal leader's vision of a man wearing long black robes and carrying a crossed stick who would bring great change, tribal spokesman Bob Bostwick said from Worley, Idaho.

Court upholds prison term for Idaho businessman

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — A federal appeals court on Tuesday unanimously upheld the 17-year prison term for an Idaho businessman who ordered an employee to clean out a storage tank filled with hydrogen cyanide gas. Allen Elias prison term issued last year was the harshest ever imposed for an environmental crime in the United States, authorities said. And Elias, 62, former owner of Evergreen Resources Inc. in Soda Springs, was Idaho's first employer ever convicted on federal charges of knowingly expension a worker to hazardous waste.
Elias was convicted in May knowingly exposing a worker to horazirdous waste. Elias was convicted in May 1999 of ordering Scott Dominguez to wash down the sides of an 11-foot-ligh, 36-foot-long, 25,000-gallon tank containing phosphoric acid and cyanide, a combination that produces the same gas Nazis used in their World War II death camps. A federal judge had also ordered Elias to pay $6.3 million in restitution to Dominguez and his family. But the 9th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals, in striking down the payment Tuesday, ruled that Elias' conviction is among "the few for which Congress has not sanctioned the imposition of restitution. Perhaps this case will change that."

Dominguez collapsed in the tank in August 1996 and could not be rescued for an hour. He suffered severe brain damage and requires extensive care. Elias provided no salety training and idn not give Dominguez or other workers required protective gear. Elias maintained that Dominguez was the victim of a tragic acident for which he bore no responsibility. He was convicted of knowingly endangering the safety and health of his employees, illegally disposing of hazardous cyanide waste and mak-

The appeals panel also said Elias lied to lirefighters and to Dominguez's treating physician—when-asked-whether-there was-cyanide in the tank.

A native of Long Island and a graduate of the Wharton School, Elias had such a long history of environmental and worker safety violations that federal and state regulators sometimes called him "Idaho's walking, talking Three Mile Island."

Ironworkers who erected WTC now dismantle it

NEW YORK (AP) - Willie Quinlan was just a teen-ager when he began bolding together the 50-ton steel beams that would become, for a while at least, the world's tallest buildings. Now Quinlan, 54, is removing that same steel - mangled and twisted, this time - from the charred heap that used to be the soaring twin towers of the World Trade Center. "It was the greatest thing in soaring twin towers of the World Trade Center.

"It was the greatest thing in the world to work on it." Quinlan said, reflecting on the skyscraper project three decades ago. "Now all that beautiful work is gone."

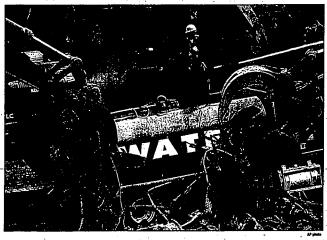

Quinlan is among the men from New York City's Local 40 Ironworkers Union who are disassembling the same steel they put up. Union officials say dozens of Local 40 members, most of them men now in their-50s and -60s—worked on both jobs.

Even those who were not one original construction site feel a personal pride in the 110-story twin towers, which were engineering marvels when they surpassed the Empire State Building as king of the New York skyline. It was a project that some said couldn't be done when it was first proposed in the 1960s.

"We take it real personal," said Charles Melfi, adding that he

"We take it real personal," said
Charles Melfi, adding that he like every other fromworker he knows - is outraged at the destruction of the towers.

Heavy equipment removes debris Wednesday as a worker hoses down the remains of the World Trade Center complex in New York. Workers continue clearing debris from the site of the Sept. 11 collapse of the towers, which were destroyed efter being struck by two planes in a terrofial attack.

Melfi, a husky, bald-headed fig-ure in a Harley Davidson jacket, is foreman of one of the Trade Center cleanup crews

In shifts that continue around the clock, his men and hundreds of other construction workers painstakingly extract knots of misshapen metal that were once the northern tower. The 110 floors have been compressed to a crumpled, smoking, nine-story pile.

pile.

It is like a giant - and dangerous - game of pickup sticks. If the pieces of metal are removed in the wrong order, the pile could collapse. Complicating the work is other debris, including 50 miles of elevator cable, intertwined in the pretzel heap.

The ironworkers must venture into the wreckage to not apart into the wreckage to not apart.

the pretzel heap.
The ironworkers must venture into the wreckage to pry apart the steel beams that have melted onto each other. Once a piece is dendhed, a large hole is burned into it with a heat torch, a rope from a giant crane is attached, and the steel is hoisted into a dump truck.

The 16-acre site is easily the biggest cleanup job the men have worked on. But there is another major difference: Scattered amid the ruins are the remains of some 5,000 people.

Tonworker John DelDuca-said the workers are finding mostly body parts now, nor innact bodies. "That's really hard. Nothing prepares you for that," he said.
When a spotter finds human remains, the heavy machinery grinds to a halt and the firefighters or other emergency workers are summoned to remove it.

Jack Doyle spent about seven years' working on the northern tower and the surrounding build-ings also crushed on Sept. 11.
"There were some days, when we started getting up really high, where you couldn't see the ground when it was foggy," Doyle recalled.

where you couldn't see the ground when it was foggy," Dnyle recalled.

He said his "raising gang" – which put up the skeleton – could tell steel was on its way up to them when they heard the came engines start to rumble.

"Then you would see the load come out of the clouds," he said. "It was ghostly."

The steel pieces were so'bit they had to be shipped across the Hudson River by barge from a yard in New Jersey.

When the ironwork reached the 28th floor, Doyle was pronfot—ed. to-foreman. His:raising gangbeacame the first to reach the top of the building. Following tradition, the men staked an American flag at the new highest spot in Manhattan.

"It was a great feeling making history," he said. The Trade Center would later be overtaken by the Sears Tower in Chicago as the world's tallest building. After the attack, Doyle became particularly sad when he saw the picture of fireflighters erecting a flag over the rubble.

"We changed the skyline," he said, "and now it's all gone."

"The people want to contact us, they know we are here," the bespectacled Taliban ambassador, Abdul Salam Zaedf, said this week. Zaeef is quick with a broad smile, a soft voice and bursts of anti-American wrath.

Vehicles heading there drive past Islamabad's Deutsche Bank branch and follow a wooden sign with an arrow onto Street 90. There they park, jamming the narrow road.

They disgorge state-of-the-art cameras – a no-no inside Taliban Afghanistan, where photographing people is forbidden. Reporters troop juto the compound, gazing at the dirty palmires wall lianging outside.

They hear Zaeef condemn the bombings, defend the Taliban, denounce free United States. "With the passage of each day, the inhumane and brutal face of America is becoming naked," he said this week, reading from his statement.

Yet even the Taliban cannot

The embassy is forced to accept what the government inside Afghanistan wouldn't - a cameraman in shorts with legs splayed, even a woman in tight jeans, her face uncovered, asking lots of questions. Aid shipments should start flowing "within the next week or two," Nigel Fisher, south Asia regional director for the United Nations Children's Fund, said after senior U.N. officials held talks with the Uzbek government Wednesday.

The Uzbeks have agreed to allow United Nations relief agencies to use port facilities and large barges at the strategic border town of Termez to ferry aid across the Amu Darya River into Afghanistan, said U.N. and Uzbek officials. The border was shut in 1997 after the Taliban city of Mazar-e-Sharif, 38 miles south of Termez.

The Uzbek government also will permit other nations to fly relief shipments directly into Termez and has agreed to the creation of a U.N. Uzbek committee to monitor the flow of aid.

Ironing gets debated as possible anthrax solution possible anuma sommon Ironing, that humble domestic chore, is being debated as a possible weapon in the battle against bioterrorism.

According to Ken Allbek, a gern-warfare scientist from the former Soviet Union now working in biodefense, a small amount of anthrax spores in a standard envelope cannot survive the heat and pressure of a minute long, steam ironing. Allbek, president of Hadron Advanced Biosystems in Manassas and author of Biohazard, 'described the procedure at a congressional hearing last week. "The major requirements to kill spores is high temperature and steam," he said in an interview. "It's just the general principle of sterilization for killing bacteria."

Alibek said he could not vouch for the effectiveness of zapping mail in a microwave oven, which also has been mentioned as a possible way to kill the bacteria. But he maintains that "froning is 100percent effective," with steam being critical to the process.
The notion of ironing has met with skepticism, though: Tony Snow of Fox News Sunday dismissed a CNN report, while NBC News reported ironing might work - but would require a halfhour. Last week, Albek on air, saying that "if' anyone should know about the uses of anthrax and other agents . . . !'S Ken endorsement two days later, citing two other experts' doubts.

Muslims want to clear up misconceptions

The Gazette

COLORADO SPRINGS, Colo

There is a new jihad in the world of Islam.

And a small group of Colorado Muslim women are stepping for ward to lead its charge in Colorado Springs.

It's important to understand what jihad is, said Zeba Yousufi, a Pakistani native who has been a U.S. citizen for 17 years and has lived in Colorado Springs since 1985.

"In America, we have only heard of jihad as a war of some sort, but really, it simply means to strive, to do something better for Islam." Yousufi said.

Yousufi and the women who belong to the city's only mosque say the jihad they have taken on is sweeping the nation. Muslims want to clear up misconceptions about Islam – and especially about Muslim women.

"We are seen as oppressed and subdued," said Yousufi
"That can't be further from

and subdued," said Yousufi.
"That ean't be further from what's true."

Those impressions stem from a distorted view presented by media reports of the shocking plight of Muslim women in counfries such as Afghanistan.

The Taliban in Afghanistan, often described as an extremist sect with roots in fundamentalism, impose suffocating and confunctional requirements on Muslim women. Although a passage in the Koran suggests women "draw their outer garments around them" as a way to identify themselves as Muslim and to thwart unwanted attention, the Taliban give it an almost medieval interpretation.

The Koran mentions covering the head, neck and bosom. The Taliban regime forces women to

ing. The Islamic Society of Colorado Springs, which has fewer than 100 members, began to discuss Islam with anyone interested. More than 200 showed up at the first session, Yousufi said.

Leslie, an American convert who asked that her last name done be used, understands, more than most, those who are curings.

What is a veil?

Since ancient times, women have worn head or face coverings for a variety of cultural reasons, but the veil was embraced and spread by the Muslim religion. Not all Muslim women wear veils, and among those who do, the styles vary widely.

The burka (below), in its most conservative form, fully covers the lace, with only a mesh screen to see through. This Alghan woman is wearing the burka the Tabban regime requires women to don outdoors. The burka is thought to have originated in the Arabian peninsula and is still worn there, often in a less conservative form that reveals part of a woman's face. part of a woman's face.

large Muslim populations there were respected. "In France, Islam was looked at as a religion of peace," she said. "But I couldn't understand how women could embrace a religion that oppressed them -that's what the scarf seemed to do."

She met and married a Tunisian Muslim and, as she learned more about Islam, decided to convert.

What appealed to her, she said, was that women and men are equal. She quickly learned the scarf's meaning had nothing to do with subjugating women. Instead it, was, a. way, to, show-respect for women.

Another convert and member of the mosque, Barbara, who also asked her last name not be used, said the Muslim absence of clerics made a difference to her. There are no Muslim pastors, priests or ministers to interpret the Koran and other writings. Instead, a mosque is led by a president elected by its members.

"In Islam, there is no man between me and my God," Barbara said, shaking her linger in the air.

The Koran and its supplements, the Sunnah and Hadith, outline the traditions and practices of Mohammed and are explored in study groups with the members of the mosque.

The oppression so many Muslim women experience isn't necessarily because of Islam, said Robert Lee, professor of political science at Colorado College and an expert in Middle East policy. Instead it's a product of the economic, social and political circumstances in each region or country.

A woman who cannot read and depends on a teacher to tell her political circumstances in each region or country.

A woman who cannot read and depends on a teacher to tell her about Islam may live her religious life in a way far different than an educated woman in a gious life in a way far different than an educated woman in a Western country.

"Islam is deeply influenced by where it's practiced." Lee said, much like Christianity. "That's why Muslim women in Colorado Springs speak as they do, and women in Afghanistan are influenced by a Taliban, which seems to function from another age." A mericans have been bombarded by images of Islam from those countries.
"I have felt a greater responsibility to teach people about Islam" because of that, said Leslie, who calls this effort her personal jihad. "Americans see it as a religion where women are subdued or oppressed. I want to show them that Islam is not that at all."

at all."

How women observe Hijab—covering the head and body—at the mosque illustrates how diverse Muslims are in their faith.

Though women of the mosque here see the scarf as a way to express their faith, they wear it in different ways and it has varying degrees of importance in their lives depending on the culture they were raised in.

Drought has water level low, but Big Lost Lake still

By Karen Bossick Times-News correspondent

FAIRFIELD - Big Lost Lake is truly in danger of being lost this

The lake, nestled in an abscess of the Smoky Mountains surfounded by varying shades of gray talus shopes, is fast giving up the ghost as its water evaporates in the face of two rough drought-

When our group had stopped watching their feet on the descent, they were rewarded with a view overlooking the smaller but full-of-water Smoky Lake and the Smoky Mountains. The Smoky Mountains, though not as spectacular as the Boulder and White Cloud mountains, are more important than those two ranges for wildlife because the lower elevation offers more diversity in edible plant and animal life, Thea said.

The trail is a little faint here since it's not a Forest Servicemaintained trail. But if you lose it, just follow the creek down from the lake. You'll meet up with the Norton Lakes trail about a mile from the trailhead.

Meanwhile, the ranch continued to operate; summer help was hired to mend fences and move cattle, a haying and irrigation work continued well into the century. Each fall, the cattle foundup was a huge social event for the "dudes," eastern visitors to the rustic corner of Idaho.

Over the years, the emphasis on turning a profit from the ranch dwindled and more importance was put on wildlife preservation. Eventually, the ranch became a vast wildlife preserve, surrounded by national forests and within sight of Yellowstone National Park's western edge.

In 1955, Roland Harriman began the eventual transfer of the land to the state, and in 1961, Gov. Robert Smylie signed the agreement that would eventually-lead to the creation of Harriman

State Park in 1977.

But before the land could become a state park, the state needed a parks system - something it lacked prior to the donation of the Railroad Ranch. As a condition of the grant, Roland and Averell Harriman required the state to set up an administrative body to managed the ranch as a state park, the first of 27 now in the state system.

Mountain rescuers make a point

SALT LAKE CITY - When President Bush called blind dimber EriE. Weihenmayer at 26,000 feet last spring on Mount Everest to wish him luck on his summit assault, he might also have put in a congratulatory call to some American heroes on the other side of the mountain.

Tantalizingly close to the summit, Dave Hahn, Tap Richards and Jason Tanguay of the 2001

Expedition gave up their own bid to scale the world's highest mountain to rescue five climbers stranded overnight at altitudes where only a handful have survived. While the Americans administered food, water, drugs and oxygen to the near-comatose climbers, other mountaineers continued past them on their way to the summit.

"We've known it is possible to do a rescue up there," sald expedition leader Eric Simonson. But the corollary is that oxygen and horsepower can't be used for a summit bid, too. The bigger question is the obligation, this whole business of responsibility and accountability for one's decision-making."

Tanguay, who invested more than two months on Everest without reaching the summit, can't see drawing the line anywhere, if he can influence the outcome.

"I couldn't imagine walking past anyone dying, it's no different than walking past someone dying in the street," he said.

The three climbers left their high camp at 27,200 feet at 1 a.m. on a clear, windless night. After 3 1/2 hours, they unexpectedly stumbled on three Russian climbers huddled by the landmark Mushroom Rock. Two were in serious trouble. The Americans spent almost an hour tending to them, before the Russians recovered enough to descend on their own.

Continuing up the ridge, they came upon Andy Lapkass and Jaine Vinals about 630 and, alive but unresponsive, with their jackets unsipped. While they squeezed

Old stereotypes still unfairly target many hunters

Too many assume hunters are dangerous

COLORADO SPRINGS, Colo. OK, let's shoot down a stereotype of the season.

"So, when do your hunting seasons start?" I recently was asked in one of those casual, make-talk efforts typically associated with an office water cooler. The questioner has a rural/outdoor background and has lived in the area more than a few years.

The most recent incident of a nonhunter being shot by a hunter in Colorado occurred in the late 1960s. A teen-ager was killed while riding a motorcycle on forest trails near a hunting camp. The shooter said he mistook the victim for an elk; some contemporary accounts, as I recall, implied

The effect was dramatic. Fatalities among hunters fell from an average of 10 a year in the 1960s to few or none, according to the Colorado Division of Wildlife, which keeps meticulous-records of such matters. The rate among nonlunters stands at zero. Last year, one hunter died after he tripped and accidentally shot himself. No other shooting incidents were reported. Trime frozen packages of meat for the table.

There are no easy answers to this short of hoping for an early blast of winty cold to chill hundring country – but there are a number of ways that bowhunters and early-season rifle hunters beat the heat of September and early October.

The best-case scenario, of Sourse, is to fill your tag on property right next to your game processor's coler. That makes it pretty easy to get the carcass to the cooler quickly. It gets increasingly difficult the further a person is out in the field.

Another best-case scenario is to fill your antelope tag, rather than bagging the biggest bull elk in Montana. The bigger the critter, the bigger the problem becomes The transporting and cooling the meat.

-Keep.it clean. It's a dirty world out there and dirt on the meat will have to be trimmed off by the processor. • Pack along black pepper. Some hunters will coat the skinned mear with black pepper to discourage files from landing on it and laying their eggs. It's a good back-up measure if you don't have mesh game bags, but peppered meat may also have to be trimmed off by game processors. Still, peppered meat is better than maggots which the flies will produce.
• Cold water. A cold mountain stream or even a prairle pond canhelp you cool out meat, but this is another judgment call on the part of the hunter. "When you take them out of the water, they're going to get dirty. Anything that touches a scaled animal will get it dirty, "Michael said. On the other hand, if that's the only way, you can cool it out, it's better than having the meat sour.

* Cet the meat down. "Many bowhunters' pack along coolers full of ice," Michael said. "Guys in the mountains can't do it, but many archery hunters elsewhere do. When it's 90 degrees, ice 'em down and get 'em cool. Some guys bone the deer or antelope out and pack them in coolers of ice."

* Be prepared for the drive home. In his cookbook "Game ls Good Eating," John Willard writes, "Never close up a carcass wille it is warm, such as draping it over a fender with the sides of the body cavity closed together. This may make you look like a big hunter, but it marks you as a novice to anyone who know how to care for meat. If meat must be moved soon after killing, lay it down with the cavity open and let the air go through the cavity while you are on the road... Pack the skinned and cooled quarters in butcher paper or gauze (game bags) for the animal in the field overnight. In the book "Elk Talk," Dan Laubach advises, "If you have to leave you leave. Cut pine boughs and branches and pild soon protection for the carcass before you leave. Cut pine boughs and branches and pild slosourage birds from making a meal out of your freshly-tagged animal. For coyotes and bears, it's best to leave as much human scent in the vicinity as possible. It may mean hanging some sweat-soaked garments on nearby bush-es. Put anything there that you think might smell strongly of human odor. It just might make the difference between the elk becoming your dinner or one for the coyote or bear."

Exceptions to the front-seat rulle will be made for children traveling alone and for Greyhound employees, said Kristin Parsley, a spokeswoman for the Dallas based carrier, which has depots or ticket offices in Twin Falls, Bliss and Burley.

She said the changes are a temporary solution to protect drivers. "No bus manufacturer creates an enclosed area for the driver. That would be the long-term solution."

Greyhound is seeking funds from the U.S. Department of Transportation for bus modifications that might improve security, Greyhound, with the nation's last remaining nationwide bus service, operates 2,300 buses and curries an estimated 25 million people a year. The company – which has a store in Twin Falls and retail dealer stores in Hailey and. Her husband works for a moving company, and has doubled his hours. But the couple, who have a 1-year-old child, still "can barely even pay for the diapers we need," Stevenson said.

Stevenson and Bolanos are also worried about health insurance. For most workers, the coverage ends shertly after they lose their jobs. After that, they must pay $300 or more a month." If have to keep the insurance," said Bolanos, the father of boys ages 7, 9 and 14. "If you have kids, they can be sick anytime, any day."

The hotel employees union is lobbying Congress for funding to cover health insurance-costs for those put out of work since Sept. 11.

Income growth stays slow

BolsE - Personal income in Idaho grew less than I percent again last spring as declines in manufacturing, transportation and public utilities stiffed the economy.

It was the third threemonth period between mid-2000 and mid-2001 that the state reported such anemic growth. Only eight other states experienced three quarters of growth-below-I-percent during the same period.

The Commerce Department report on Wednesday offered yet more evidence of the deteriorating state of Idaho's economy well before last month's terrorist attacks.

before last month's terrorist attacks. Kempthorne administration economists said earlier this week that fallout from terrorism will siphon over $400 million from personal income along with thousands of jobs from payrolls between now and the end of 2003. But they pointed out that those losses are comparatively smaller than the ones being caused by the general economic slowdown. The analysis said the attacks will cost the state's relatively high paying manufacturing sector nearly Idaho also posted personal income growth of only 0.7 percent from spring 2000 to summer 2000.

The biggest contributor to this spring's modest income expansion in Idaho was agriculture, which has benefitted in recent years from federal supports. It increased 5.2 percent while mational farming receipts were down I percent.

But the government said so-called transfer payments in Idaho, which include transactions like federal farm supports, were up 1.8 percent for the spring quarter, higher than all but seven other states.

Fed finds widespread damage

WASHINGTON (AP) - The already ailing U.S. economy has been battered by weak retail sales, canceled manufacturing orders and rising layoffs since the terrorist attacks, the Federal Reserve said Weehensday.

The Fed's new suryey of business conditions found that no area of the nation had been spared from the economic joit caused by the Sept. 11 attacks.

"The softness in consumer spending, manufacturing and construction activity is affecting the labor marker, where layoffs and plant closings have been reported in many injustries from financial services on the East Coast to media and advertising on the West Coast to auto parts in the central states," the Fed said.

The report, compiled from information gathered by the central bank's 12 regional banks, will be used by the Fed when it meets Nov. 6 to decide what to do about interest rates.

Most economists say the terrorist attacks pushed the country into a recession. They are predictive.

The Fed survey, known as the beige book for the color of its cover, depicted an economy that came to a virtual-ptandstill in the days immediately following Sept. 11 as air travel was temporarily suspended and Americans stayed home to watch television news reports.

In fact, the survey said that in the week following the attacks, spending dropped sharply for all items "except those that were likely purchased in preparation for possible additional attacks."

The Fed found increased spending for groceries, security devices and bottled water. Purchases of insurance also rose. Since the initial shock, consumers have returned to the stores but spending twas reported to be below the level of early September, causing many retail.

The Fed survey found that the temporary suspension of all commercial flights had both short-and longer-term impacts.

The delivery of fresh vegetables from the West Coast to the East Coast was disrupted and manufacturers reported trouble getting parts from their suppliers. However, the Fed said these disruptions proved temporary as air cargo was rerouted to trucks.

All Fed districts except Bostom and Kansass City reported sharp declines in hotel, airline and tourism industries although some canceled conventions have now been rescheduled.

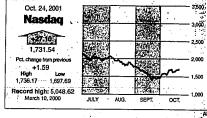

In the longer term, the Fed noted large layoffs in the aircraft and aircraft parts industries as orders for new planes have been cut sharply. It said layoffs had already increased in other manufacturing industries.

"The continued weakness in manufacturing has contributed to pessimism about when orders will improve," the survey said. "Many districts do not expect a turnaround until 2002."

ket Wednesday as investors looked past another round of lukewarm earnings reports and decided to focus on hopes for an economic recovery next year.

But analysts were still conservative, noting that various industry sectors have been trading quickly in and out of favor on Wall Street. They also said the market is vulnerable to the continuing political and economic uncertainty following the Sept. 11 terrorist attacks and this month's spread of anthrax cases.

"It's just rotation into tech today and the constantly looking over your shoulder," said Gary Kaltbaum, market technician for Investors' Edge Partners.

Nasdaq composite index rose 27.10 to 1,731.54, and the Standard & Poor's 500 index advanced 0.42 to 1,085.20. Investors were careful in their dealings, which was apparent in fluctuating stock prices and that more stocks fell than advanced. The cautious mood on Wall Street duplicated that of Thesday, when uneasy investors took profits from Monday's big rally. Aside from Monday's big rally. Aside from Monday's big syree, in which the Dow rose 172, the market has had mostly modest gains and losses since companies began reporting third-quarter earnings last week. Analysts said the cautious trading was understandable given how well Wall Street has reconverd from the massive selloff in the first week of trading following the terror attacks.

The stock market has regained that first week.

The Dow has recouped about 80 percent of the 1,369 points it lost that week. The Nasday is 32 points above its pre-attack level; the S&P 500 is 7 points below its Sept. 10 level.

More people are coming from Utah for ski and golf week-ends.
"People are coming here and discovering that we have a nice boat launch where they don't have to wait as long as they do in Utah," he said.
An Idaho Department of Commerce study shows southern Idaho has the lowest figures for tourism in the state, Asson said.

But the local increase in visitor numbers is beginning to show a change in people's idea of the area as only a gas and Twinkie stop, she said. "Maybe they will so downtown."

stop, she said.
"Maybe they will go downtown a few minutes to eat lunch or take a walk in the park," Asson said.

The goal is to bring them back for a return trip.
Toward that goal, training sessions for local tourism industry workers are planned for February.
Asson has passed out information over the past year at festi-

Gates proclaims XP as 'most important tool'

REDMOND, Wash. (AP) – It's the week of Microsoft's biggest software release in six years and chairman Bill Gates is shrugging off criticism that his company's juggernaut operating system has squashed the competition.

Love it or fear it, Gates says, Microsoft's Windows is "the most important tool that's ever been created."
"It's a tool for communications, for creativity – It's the basis for the entire software industry," Gates said in an interview from his unassuming office overlooking the company's Redmond headquarters.

Today, Microsoft will release Windows XP, the new version of the desktop operating system that runs the vast majority of personal computers.

To some, including the U.S. Justice Department, Windows' massive reach creates a quandary. As Microsoft keeps improving and expanding its dominant product, consumers may get a better deal - but competitors face the threat of being blown into obscurity.

To Gates, also Microsoft, schief software architect, it's simply about saving computer overstime and money.

"It's a value for consumers," Gates said. "Why are there headlights in cars? Why don't they make you go and buy those things separately?"

It's also about money: Desktop operating systems accounted for more than $8 billion of the $25.3 billion in revenue Microsoft reported for fiscal year 2001.

Friends and foes agree that Windows XP is the souped-up sedan of the desktop operating system world.

It offers new features for listening to music, playing videos, or editing and organizing digital photographs. A new, system called Windows Messenger lets users communicate instantly with others using text, voice and video.

The situation is even tougher for undocumented workers who entered the country illegally and who can't receive unemployment benefits. Many are looking for jobs cleaning houses and as day laborers, said Kurt Petersen, organizing director for the hotel and restaurant employees local in Santa Monica, Calif.

Just last year, the hotel industry was facing a labor shortage and lobbied for immigration reform so it could hire more workers from Mexico. But this September, consumers spent $5.5 billion on hotel rooms, down from $7 billion in September 2000, according to Smith Travel Research.

About 10,000 people have visited in the past two weeks, clutching eviction notices and asking for help paying rent. They fill out unemployment forms and try to work out payment plans with power, telephone and water companies.

Lucy Cedeno, 42, is among the union volunteers there. Cedeno, who worked in a hotel casino making change for gamblers, lost her job on Sept. 23.

Now she divides her days between volunteering, searching for a new job and pleading with her bank and credit card companies for alternate payment schedules.

"I have to tell them my problems," said Codeno, who emigrated from Mexico, "I'm probably going to have to sell my house."

Personality: Dr. Doolittle, move over! This 10 year-old girl's affinity for animals is quipe remarkable. She feels close to creatures, especially dogs, who love and protect unconditionally something few adults have provided in her life. Lianne is a likable girl who takes pride in her accomplishments. Most adults are amazed at her sharp insight into her own emotional needs. "I need lots of attention. That's something that can't happen when we live together because Robin needs a lot of attention."

Interests: Dolls and animal fig-ures provide hours of fantasy play for Lianne. She also enjoys outdoor sports – swimming, soc-cer, baseball and basketball. Reading is a favorite subject in

Needs: Lianne needs a two-parent family with a strong, stable and loving relationship. This is critical in working with a child who wants to ortestrate even the smallest details of her life. In the past, American tourists have always protected helped insulate tourism-related businesses from the frequent rise and fall of the Mexican economy.

Mexican peso devaluations, which usually occur every six years or so, have a good side effect for businesses catering to tourists. The devaluations slash the buying power of locals, but increase the buying power of locals but increase the buying power of a merican tourists in the bars, restaurants, shops and pharmacies.

tourists in the bars, restaurants, shops and pharmacies.

To make it through these tough times, some people are trying to cut costs and reduce their prices. The recently opened Hilton hotel in Matamoros charges $20 less per night than the rate it advertises at its counter.

"I don't turn on the 'air, the lights," said Martin Saent, manager of the shop Barbara, which catters almost exclusively to American tourists, "What are we going to pay the electricity with." he asked.

THE ACES ON BRIDGE®

Bobby Wolff

Order marches with weighty and measured strides; disorder is always in a hurry." —Napoleon I what prompted such a smug answer?

At the first table, West led his fourth-best heart, and East played third hand high," his queen going to South's king South took a losing club finesse. East returned the beart nine, South covering with the Jack. West won and cleared the suit, hoping he would beat the game when he won his spade ace. He didn't get the chance. South ratitled off nine winners (four clubs, two hearts and three dlamonds) before he led a spade, and the defenders took only four tricks.

At the other table, against the same lead, East inserted his heart eight at trick one. South won his jack and took a losing club finesse. East then returned the heart seven (suit preference for spades), and East's queen cleared the suit, limiting South to only one heart trick.

East complied with the stiltpreference signal, and the spade return to West's ace scored two more heart winners, sending the game one down.

"Third hand high," is only a general guide for thirth-hand plays a suit fourth and the spade return to West's ace scored two more heart winners, sending the game one down.

"How did you beat the no-trump game on board seven? asked one player. "They had an easy time against us." "If they made it, your side mis-handled the heart suit," replied his friend.

What prompted such a smug more heart winners, sending the game one down.

"Third hand high" is only a general guide for third-hand play. Visualizing the possible heart suit layout is more productive than re-flexive and hasty play.
