Report: Deadline looms for Taliban

Northern Alliance: Surrender today or face attack

Combined wire reports

TALQAN, Afghanistan — The Northern Alliance Friday put off an assault on the Taliban's last outpost in northern Afghanistan for another day, continuing negotiations aimed at avoiding a costly battle and holding out the prospect that Taliban would surrender.

Twelve days after Taliban forces across northern Afghanistan fell back to the city of Kunduz after a string of defeats at the hands of the Northern Alliance, thousands of Afghan, Pakistani, Arab and other Taliban troops remained surrounded. Alliance troops on two sides of Kunduz edged slightly closer to the city, but a promised attempt to capture the city never materialized and talks between the two sides apparently yielded no agreement. "At the moment, we don't have a plan to go to Kunduz," said Atiqullah Baryalai, the Northern Alliance's deputy defense minister.

In Kabul, the alliance's foreign minister, Abdullah, said that if no surrender deal has been worked out by today, Kunduz will be attacked. "We have given them more time,"

POMERELLE OPENS

M-C runs beat rest of Idaho; S.V. considers next weekend

By Shelley Ridenour Times-News writer

ALBION — Wearing out the knees in his pants apparently did the trick for W o o d y Anderson.

Anderson, one of the owners of Pomerelle Mountain Resort near Albion, said the ski area opened at 9 a.m. Friday after receiving steady snowfall since Wednesday night.

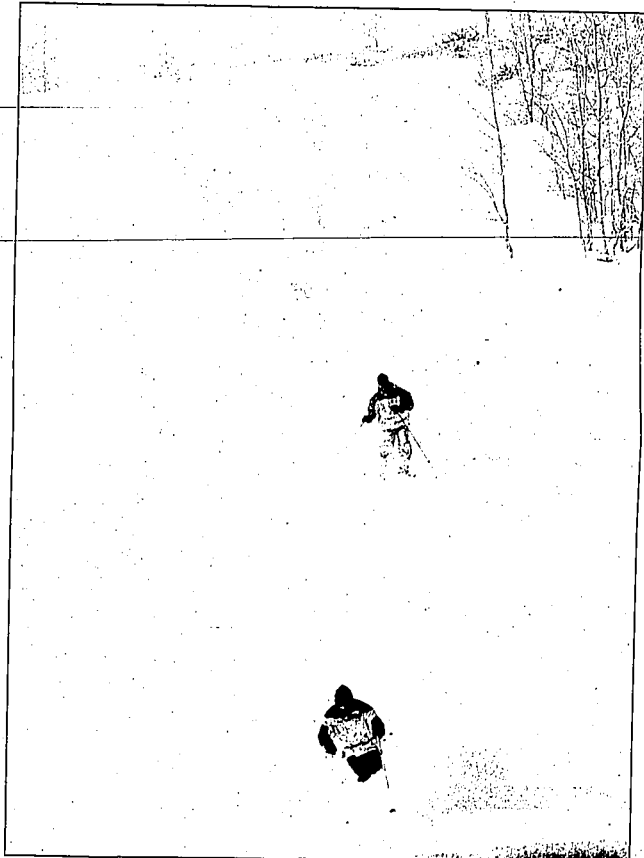

"We were getting real nervous," Anderson said Friday morning. "I told somebody I was praying so hard I wore holes in the knees of my pants."

Pomerelle typically opens a week before Thanksgiving, Anderson said. But a lack of snow this fall delayed opening day. Last year, the ski area opened Nov. 10, following plenty of early-season snow.

Some years it's been open as early as Halloween, he said. The mountain was about 80 percent open at 11 a.m. Friday.

Leave the driving to them

Pomerelle Mountain Resort will be open every day from 9 a.m. until 4 p.m. Night skiing is slated to start Dec. 26, as it traditionally does. Weekend bus service is set to begin Dec. 1. Buses pick up skiers Saturdays and Sundays at various spots in Jerome, Twin Falls, Burley, Rupert and Declo. Buses run to the mountain in the morning and return people home, leaving the ski area at about 4 p.m. Additional bus routes are added during the Christmas holiday break. The bus service "is a really good thing for us and for parents who want their kids to ski, but may not have time to drive them up here every weekend," resort owner Woody Anderson said.

Skiers make first tracks on this run at Pomerelle Mountain Resort Friday afternoon. The ski resort opened Friday after receiving snow for the third straight day. Pomerelle is the first ski area to open in Idaho this year.

Anderson said. "There are two or three runs closed this morning, but they may have those open by this afternoon," he said. Snow depth at the lodge at 5 a.m. Friday was 20 inches, including 4 inches of new snow.

Between 5 and 11 a.m., Anderson estimated 6 more inches of snow.

After years under Taliban, Afghan women reclaim their working life

The Associated Press

KABUL, Afghanistan — After Humaira's beauty salon was shut by the Taliban, she hid her cans of hairspray, her portraits of coiffured women and her cracked hair dryer. A day after the Islamic militia fled, she reopened for business.

The chairs are old and torn, and the Taliban had smashed her larger mirrors, but Humaira has scraped off the paint they splashed over her "beauty salon" sign. And she's put her posters back on the walls, one showing a sassy young woman in heavily curled pigtail.

A beauty salon reborn, women on the air, and, from this Saturday, no more sexual segregation in the hospitals — women in the Afghan capital

"We were like in prison. We had no life, nothing for us to do. We were not people."

— Humaira, Afghan beauty shop owner are heading back to work after the collapse of the Taliban social order.

"We were like in prison," Humaira said. "We had no life, nothing for us to do. We were not people."

Afghanistan was always a conservative place, and many women were wearing the burqa, the tentlike, all-enveloping robe, long before the Taliban seized power in 1996. But the Taliban's extreme reading of Islamic law made the burqa mandatory. Women were barred from holding jobs, and girls over 8 couldn't go to school.

Shireen, 26, was a government statistician before the Taliban sent her home.

Now she is trudging from one government ministry to the next, looking for work. Like most women in Kabul, she still wears her burqa. Her gold-rimmed glasses are all that is visible behind the mesh. She said she's waiting for a regular government to take office and give official clearance to shed the burqa.

Idaho ad ties terrorist deaths to abortions

The Times-News and The Associated Press

BOISE — About 4,000 people died during the Sept. 11 terrorist attacks on the World Trade Center, but an equal number of Americans lost their lives to abortions that day, according to a television ad planned for Idaho viewers.

The Idaho Chooses Life group Friday unveiled a 30-second advertisement which seeks to tie the deaths in the New York City skyscrapers to the estimated daily loss of unborn children to abortion.

The TV ad is a continuation of the anti-abortion group's push to rein in legalized abortion in Idaho. On Oct. 24, Idaho Chooses Life Executive Director David Ripley rallied Magic Valley supporters against Planned Parenthood's plans to open a clinic in Twin Falls.

The new television spot offers the strains of "America" and shows a photograph of the smoking World Trade Center towers before their collapse. It says more than 4,200 Americans lost their

COLUMBUS, Ohio — Moments after the doors swung open for Ohio State University's annual career day last week, a small crowd formed at the CIA table. Throughout the day, a group of students five and six deep waited to drop off resumes and discuss job opportunities at the nation's best-known spy shop.

"I think it would be a very interesting job," said Lloyd Abrenica, a business student with a tiny American flag on his lapel. "After the terrorist attacks, I think working for the CIA would be a way to help out my country."

Campus

The favorable interest is a welcome change for the CIA, which has seen an earlier generation of students head out to symbolize the worst of U.S. foreign policy. The CIA's presence on campus once drew protesters who excoriated the agency for a dubious series of Cold War adventures, including assassination plots on foreign leaders and its aid in overthrowing popular regimes in nations from Congo to Chile.

But after the Sept. 11 terrorist attacks that killed more than 3,100 people in New York, Washington and Pennsylvania, trust in the spy agency — and the rest of the federal government — is soaring on campus.

A nationwide survey released this month by Harvard University found that three of five college students trust the federal government to "do the right thing" all or most of the time. A year earlier, just 36 percent expressed a similar belief.

In addition, 75 percent of 1,200 undergraduates surveyed said they trust the military to do the right thing, 69 percent of all or most of the time. A year earlier, just 62 percent trust Congress. Students have also voiced support for the war in Afghanistan, with four in five saying they support U.S.-led air strikes and two in three backing the use of ground troops. The level of support among college students are similar to those found for the nation as a whole.

Pockets of dissent have been small. Students have staged anti-war protests at three schools, including Stanford University, the University of California at Berkeley and the University of Wisconsin. But those demonstrations seem to run counter to the prevailing mood on the nation's campuses.

In the two months immediately after the terrorist attacks, the CIA said it received 28,000 resumes, many from college students — about the number it typically receives in a year. Other intelligence and law enforcement agencies, including the National Security Agency and the FBI, have also seen similar increases in student interest.

"We've been a lot more busy," CIA recruiter Sharon Cordero said at Ohio State. "A lot of people are a lot more interested in working for the government. They want to help their country. It's nice to see."

Even before the attacks, a cooling economy meant fewer private-sector job openings, prompting more students to look to the government for work.

But job placement professionals say much of the interest in intelligence and law enforcement agencies seems driven more by a new attitude among students than the realities of the marketplace. "It is not like all the students are flocking to the FBI or CIA," says Amy Thiel, a career counselor at Ohio State. "But there is clearly more respect among students for those careers than there used to be."

William Rufus, a computer and information sciences major from Cleveland, interned at a bank last year. He says he was intrigued by the CIA and got put off by the modest pay, starting at about $35,000 a year, or the months of background checks. Nor is he discouraged by the reality that the bulk of the agency's jobs involve not James Bond-type spy-ing, but relatively mundane tasks of collecting, analyzing and evaluating data. "I guess I feel a little bit of a patriotic surge right now," he said.

Afghan doctors Fahanda and Noor Jan check over a patient's X-ray Thursday at the Rabia Balkhi hospital for women in Kabul. Female doctors were forbidden to work alongside their male colleagues. Starting today, that rule is dead.

Until then, she remains cautious. She and several other women talked to a reporter only on condition that their surnames not be published.

The aviation ministry was closed, so Shireen went next door to Radio Afghanistan, where several women already have been given jobs delivering the news.

"Maybe I could get a job as a news reader," she said through an interpreter. "I am educated. I have to work. I must work to contribute to my country and to my family. I have the right to participate."

For young women who have been unable to acquire other skills during the Taliban years, broadcasting seems to be favored as a quick way back into the job market.

The medical profession also suffered under Taliban strictures.

lives that day through abortions. And more than 4,200 also died in the trade towers.

"Many of us in the pro-life movement have been struck by the parallels between the events of Sept. 11 with the daily attacks on innocent babies in the womb," Ripley said.

"Each day, that many and more lose their lives to abortion," he said. "Those victims pass from us largely without note, no markers, no one looking for their remains. Legalized abortion is a silent daily attack on the most vulnerable among us."

Ripley said his political action committee had enough money to create the television ad. It was looking to like-minded people and church leaders for financial support to pay for television time and create a radio advertisement.

"Some cynics on the left will no doubt dismiss our attempt to link abortion to the terrorist attacks on Sept. 11," Ripley said. "And they will be right in this attempt. We are trying to take advantage of until tomorrow afternoon. Otherwise, if there isn't a result after these negotiations, the fighting will resume," Abdullah told Reuters news agency.

An American official in Washington, meanwhile, said some of the fighters in the besieged city may be deputies and lieutenants to Osama bin Laden and to the Taliban's supreme leader, Mullah Mohammed Omar.

At the United Nations, officials announced a one-day delay in a conference in Germany aimed at paving the way for a new Afghan government following the Taliban's collapse. The meeting will open Tuesday, rather than Monday, because of delays in getting all the participants to the venue in Bonn, U.N. spokesman Ahmad Fawzi said.

had fallen, and the snow was still coming down, he said.

And, he said, there is considerably more snow on top of the mountain than at the lodge. The lodge sits at an elevation of about 8,000 feet, he said, while the top of the mountain is about 9,000 feet.

Anderson described the opening-day turnout as "a moderate crowd."

"We were nervous about opening and letting anybody know. But the word is out now, and I'm sure this weekend will be really busy," he said.

At Sun Valley, although weather conditions have improved for snow-lovers in the last couple of days, there still isn't enough snow to open the ski area.

Jack Sibbach said Friday morning "there's a 75 percent chance we'll be open next Saturday, Dec. 1."

"If the weather conditions stay favorable for snowmaking — and it looks like it is going to do that — or if Mother Nature gives us a helping hand, we'll open next weekend," Sibbach said.

Weather conditions will remain unsettled, with a major winter storm taking off from state for tonight and Sunday, meteorologists predicted.

Scattered rain and snow showers continued Friday in the Panhandle and southeastern Idaho, the National Weather Service reported. Up to 4 inches of snow blanketed the west-central mountains, and a half-foot the 9-11 events to press our case for sparing the lives of babies in the womb.

"The number of people missing or dead in the World Trade Center is now estimated at more than 3,000. "We were shocked that Idaho Chooses Life is using a horrific national tragedy as a way to promote their organization," said Lee Flinn, Idaho Women's Network director.

"Right now in this country, there are a lot of people hurting on very deep levels because of the events of Sept. 11, and we think that the campaign Idaho Chooses Life is starting is no more than blatant exploitation to raise money and promote their organization," she said.

Ripley said the Idaho Chooses Life board of directors is considering at least three bills for the Legislature which would continue the group's concerted efforts to change state abortion laws.

"A fourth option is letting the Legislature take a break and we would focus on education," he said. "It's a pretty tricky judgment call."

was reported in northern Idaho.

Brundage Mountain near McCall reported 23 inches Friday, and Bogus Basin above Boise had 14 inches. Resort officials were waiting for more snow to open.

At Pomerelle, Anderson visited the top of the ski run about five times on Thanksgiving and found "it was snowing a lot harder" at the top than at the bottom each trip.

"Conditions are just awfully good for an opening," Anderson said. "It is still early-season skiing. But it sure has improved just since (Thursday)."

The first 6 or 8 inches of snow to hit Pomerelle Wednesday "was heavy, wet snow," Anderson said. "That's good. It makes a good, firm base, and people don't get down to rocks and dirt. And it's fluffy, powder, is nice, but you need a solid base under it."

Pomerelle has received snow from time to time for the last six weeks, Anderson said. One storm fell between 8 and 10 inches of snow at the ski area. But that was followed by warm weather, which melted most of the snow, particularly on the south-facing slopes, he said. The north side of the mountain retained some of that snow.

receive the influenza vaccine in December, January and even February. The peak influenza season in south-central Idaho is late December through early March. Adults develop antibody protection against influenza infection about seven days after vaccination.

Influenza viruses are spread from person to person through coughing and sneezing. Influenza is characterized by the abrupt onset of fever, headache, severe discomfort, muscle tenderness or pain, non-productive cough, sore throat and a runny nose.

Clients are reminded to wear short-sleeved clothing so they do not have to roll up their sleeves to receive injections.

LET THE SHOPPING BEGIN

Tim Jones loads some Christmas presents into the bed of his truck in the Kmart parking lot in Twin Falls on Friday morning. The day after Thanksgiving is the traditional start of the shopping season and many shoppers said they will be spending less this year.

Local shoppers turn out in force

Most plan no change in holiday spending

By Carol Stephens
Times-News correspondent

TWIN FALLS - Large numbers of shoppers filled stores in Twin Falls on the traditional first big day of the Christmas shopping season Friday, but there was an air of caution amid the holiday rush.

Most shoppers contacted said they planned to spend about the same amount as last year for Christmas. Some said they would spend less, and none said they would be spending more.

"The same as far as money goes," said Dave Walden of Twin Falls, who was looking at a DVD and player. "The economy is supposed to be hard this year. We can stay home, watch videos, and keep ourselves entertained."

Nancy Lewis of Twin Falls, shopping at Kmart, said she planned to spend about the same amount of money but was buying more practical things than toys and more clothes than jewelry. She also attacked the plethora of sales with a strategy: a list of what she wanted at each store, starting with the stores she had to hit before 11 a.m. to get the sale prices.

For the sheer number of shoppers, though, Friday's turnout was impressive.

"ShepKo had 1,100 cars in the parking lot by 6:30 a.m.," said Brent White, Magic Valley Mall manager. "I have never seen anything like it before. The lines at ShopKo were 15 customers deep, with all registers running. Stores are promoting early and heavily, and people are responding, knowing they're getting good value at that hour."

Across the nation, stores reported big numbers of shoppers. But many brought with them a bargain-hunting sentiment that could temper overall holiday sales. A weakened national economy and the impact of the Sept. 11 terrorist attacks have retailers worried about how much they're going to sell this year.

The National Retail Federation is predicting a 2.5 percent to 3 percent increase in spending over last year.

The Magic Valley continues to be insulated in large measure from the nation's economic woes.

"We never saw the fall-off predicted by the tragedy of September 11," White said. "I slowed down in October, but sales picked up in October. If this continues, it's going to be a good year."

Those who said Friday they expect to spend about the same amount of money for Christmas this year as last year usually had a reason attached.

"The prices have been very good today. I'll probably spend about the same as last year," said Anita Dick of Jerome. "I bought computer accessories and clothes for the grandkids."

Kevin Utley of Twin Falls of Twin Falls started out saying he was spending less for Christmas this year, but changed it to "about the same" - that is, "I've bought this DVD I'm looking at."

Store owner escapes charges

The Times-News

BURLEY - The owner of a Burley business who was charged last spring with the sale of sexually oriented materials received a deferred sentence in Cassia County 5th District Court in July.

Judge Michael Crabtree signed an order for deferred prosecution July 2. That order indicates that if Steve DeRoche, who owns Little Cinders Smoke Shop, is not convicted of any crime in the next year, the state will dismiss the charges against DeRoche.

DeRoche, who lives in Pocatello, pleaded innocent to the allegations contained in the complaint filed in District Court earlier this year.

He was charged with the sale or distribution of obscene matter and the distribution of sexual material in a restricted area. His shop, located at 2311 Overland Ave., is within 2,500 feet of a school or place of worship. State law prohibits the sale of obscene material within that distance of those three types of entities.

DeRoche was also charged with a second violation of the state's obscene materials law. The charges indicated that the amount of obscene printed materials for sale or rent in Little Cinders constituted 10 percent or more of the shop's printed materials. The Cassia County Sheriff's Department affidavit indicated that all of the magazines, books and videotapes in the store were of a pornographic nature.

DeRoche removed the materials from his store in April, after the charges were filed against him.

Workers at Simplot help each other

By Nate Johnson
Times-News writer

HEYBURN - Simplot employees are pooling money for emergencies.

Employees can opt to contribute some money from each paycheck into a relief fund for other employees in need of financial assistance.

Simplot employee Jerry Krieh said employees modeled the fund after a similar program already in place at the Amalgamated Sugar Co. The fund started out as the informal practice of passing the hat when an employee's family needed money.

"I think it's for a good cause," Krieh said. "People put in a dollar a paycheck and some put in a heck of a lot more than that, but $25 to $35 a year ain't going to hurt anyone."

Committee recommends health care aid

BOISE (AP) - A proposal to help nearly 5,000 Idaho residents obtain health insurance may receive some state money, despite tight finances and the hesitation of some lawmakers.

The plan, which would require $1.2 million from state coffers to leverage another $2.8 million in federal funds, could get some of the state's Millennium Fund income interest from money generated by Idaho's portion of the national tobacco lawsuit.

The committee charged with recommending where the state spends this year's $3.5 million chunk of the fund included the insurance plan.

The "HealthLink of Idaho" plan would use the money over two years to help some small businesses with low-paid employees obtain health insurance.

Eligible businesses would have fewer than 20 employees; would pay average wages of less than $12 an hour, or $24,960 a year; and would not have offered insurance for more than two years.

The employees and employers would each pay one-third of the costs, and the final third would be covered by the $4 million.

The money would insure 4,675 employees by the end of the two-year pilot program.

"I didn't think that it was necessarily the best plan," said Republican Lewiston Sen. Joe Stegner, one of 20 lawmakers on that panel. "But at the moment it's the only plan."

With an estimated 200,000 to 240,000 Idahoans uninsured, about 18 percent of the state's population, lawmakers seek the need to find some solutions.

On their vacation time they spent time visiting relatives and friends in Nebraska and also going on bus tours to Canada and other western states. They also enjoyed camping and going on trips with their friends.

Richard had many health problems through the years and because of this, he had to retire in August of 1991, after 31 years. Margaret also retired and in 1993 they moved back to Nebraska. In the last few years his health problems increased and on February 20, after a short stay in the hospital this year, he entered the Cambridge Manor where he resided until his death.

He was preceded in death by his parents and grandparents, many aunts and uncles, two brothers-in-law, Eldon Durner of Arapahoe, and Robert Durner, of Cheyenne, WY, one sister-in-law, Karen Durner, also of Cheyenne, WY, his mother-in-law and father-in-law, Fred and Evalena Durner, of Arapahoe and two great-nieces, Andrea Young and Malory Rowan. # Crapo sides with dairymen on bill POCATELLO (AP) - Sen. Mike Crapo said he will lead the fight to remove legislation from the national farm bill he believes would cripple Idaho's burgeoning dairy industry.

Crapo, R-Idaho, said the legislation sponsored by a Vermont lawmaker subsidizes smaller dairy producers and increases milk prices.

The larger-scale producers who dominate the Idaho industry would be eligible for only a small percentage or none of the subsidies. Crapo said the measure would also jack up the price of milk 10 percent at a time when people can't afford price increases.

The farm bill already passed the House and will soon be up for a vote in the Senate.

"The increase in the cost of milk would hurt consumers and cost Idaho tens of millions of dollars," Crapo said. "It would turn the milk program into a subsidy program. More importantly, it would divorce it from market forces."

The latest rankings show Idaho is sixth in the nation in dairy production.

Crapo said President George

Bush will probably be among the supporters of his motion.

Crapo and other members of Idaho's delegation are supportive of many of the other provisions of the farm bill.

Their support puts them at odds with Bush, who fears the measure provides incentives for overproduction and would artificially drive market prices down.

"I think that's a valid concern," Crapo said. "I think we also need to have a safety net in place to protect our farmers."

Crapo said without some of the subsidies and protections in the bill, farmers would be vulnerable to predatory competition from foreign markets, where overproduction is encouraged through subsidies.

The bill includes no support for potato farmers. The majority of the assistance goes to wheat farmers, but Crapo said most small farmers also grow wheat and prefer market stability to subsidies.

The bill protects sugar farmers by limiting the influx of foreign sugar into the U.S. market, Crapo said.

Hunters inundate ranch after free offer

DARBY, Mont. (AP) - For five days, Ruth Thorning's phone hasn't stopped ringing.

Even at home - at midnight - the game farm business manager is getting phone calls from people wanting a chance to kill an elk for free.

"I've got six lines in the office, and there were a couple days this week where all six were lit up at once. They're calling me at home, too, waking me up in the middle of the night."

The ranch, citing a voter-approved law banning game farms from charging fees to kill elk, said it is going out of business, and its owners say they must eliminate their entire 800-elk herd.

Without the ability to charge

"I've got six lines in the office, and there were a couple days this week where all six were lit up at once. They're calling me at home, too, waking me up in the middle of the night"
- the business manager at the Big Velvet Ranch radio ads about a week ago, saying their only choice under the new Montana law was to offer the elk for free to anyone wishing to kill one.

The response has been more than they bargained for. By Thanksgiving, more than 2,000 people, some from as far east as New York, had called, Thorning said.

Friday morning, the phone in her office was still ringing. One day this week, trucks were lined up for a half-mile at the ranch's entrance, the occupants hoping for a chance to kill one of the elk, she said.

"All the elk are spoken for," Thorning said. "We don't want any more calls."

Thorning said the week's worth of killing has not been pleasant for her and other ranch employees.

"We're watching our jobs end," she said.

The Wallaces are allowing 10 hunters onto the ranch at a time. They are escorted and closely supervised by guides. A veterinarian must test each animal for diseases, including chronic wasting disease, before it is hauled away. The hunters are required to pay the vet fees.

Those taking part are not required to have a state hunting license, and the harvest is legal as long as no payment is made for the elk.

The Wallaces are among state game-farm owners who have filed a class-action lawsuit contesting the legality of Initiative 143. The measure, which voters approved last November, bans the shooting of captive game-farm animals for a fee in Montana.

ACLU honors attorney who helped free inmate

SPOKANE, Wash. (AP) - The Spokane criminal-defense attorney who worked 18 years to free a former biker from Idaho's death row has been presented the 2001 Civil Libertarian Award by the area chapter of the American Civil Liberties Union.

Roger Peven was honored for his work to release of Donald Paradis, now seeking $20 million in damages from the state and Idaho's Kootenai County for nearly 21 years in prison.

Peven represented Paradis in 1980 and won his acquittal in Washington state on murder charges. Paradis, a former member of the Gypsy Jockey motorcycle gang, was later convicted of the same crime in Idaho.

In 1987, Peven represented one of Paradis' co-defendants, Larry Evans, who was acquitted by a Kootenai County jury. That acquittal "raised serious doubts about the convictions of Paradis and another co-defendant, the ACLU said.

The award honors people who have made recent outstanding contributions to civil liberties. The ACLU also cited the work of attorneys Paul Dayton, Christopher Osborn, Andrew Parnes, Edwin Mathews and Bill Mauk.

"In cases involving complex issues across state borders over many years, they devoted countless hours to pursuing justice," said spokesman Doug Honig with the ACLU's Washington state chapter.

Paradis and his two co-defendants were represented either for free or for court-appointed fees far below the attorneys' usual rates, Honig said.

"The comment they exhibited was exemplary, and their work was emblematic of the dedi-tion of many others who have handled capital cases," said Jesse Wing, chairman of the ACLU's Awards Committee.

Peven received the award last weekend at the Bill of Rights Celebration Dinner in Seattle.

Peven, 52, is chief trial attorney for the Federal Defenders of Eastern Washington and Idaho, where he has worked since 1992. He was in private practice as a defense attorney from 1983 to 1992, after working as a Spokane County public defender from 1972 to 1983. He earned his law degree at Gonzaga Law School in 1975 after graduating from the University of Michigan in 1971.

Paradis was convicted of first-degree murder and initially sentenced to death, along with co-defendant Thomas Henry Gibson, for the 1980 slaying of 19-year-old Kimberly Ann Palmer of Spokane, whose body was found near Post Falls, Idaho.

In 1996, after questions arose about Paradis' role in the killing, Idaho's then-Gov. Phil Batt commuted his sentence to life in prison without possibility of parole.

In March, the 9th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals upheld a lower court ruling that Paradis had been denied a fair trial because prosecutors withheld notes that could have helped the defense discredit a key prosecution witness. The court ordered Paradis released or retried.

Prosecutors in Kootenai County and Washington's Spokane County agreed to let Paradis plead guilty to being an accessory to murder, for helping move Palmer's body. He was sentenced to five years in prison, given credit for time served and released in April.

Business incubator to assist start-ups

COEUR D'ALENE (AP) - The COEUR D'ALENE (AP) - The University of Idaho hopes to turn a vacant downtown building into an outpost to help small businesses get up and running.

A business incubator designed to give start-up companies a boost so they can eventually contribute to the local economy, said Doug McQueen, director of the school's Research Park in Post Falls.

"We can come in and pay relatively low rent and have some services that they would not be able to afford, like a copy machine, fax and phone line," he said.

"In exchange for that assistance, the companies are asked to get started and move on."

The proposed location is the former Washington Water Power building, which has been vacant for about two years.

The building is owned by First National Bank of Idaho. The University of Idaho is the former Washington Water Power building, which has been vacant for about two years.

State orders charter school to serve special student

NAMPA (AP) - The Idaho Department of Education has ordered a charter school to extend needed services for a student with Down syndrome.

The Nampa Charter School, among other things, was directed to provide speech and language services to the student and make up for a missed therapy session on the first day of school.

Charter schools are funded through the agency based on student average daily attendance, just like traditional schools. They may focus more on certain activities such as arts, technology or learning disabilities.

The order came in a decision issued by a department investigator who reviewed a complaint filed by the student's parents. They said the school violated federal law guaranteeing education to the disabled.

Of about 800 employees, around 450 contribute to the fund. All Simplot employees and their family members are eligible for assistance. Those who contribute to the fund can receive up to 20 percent of the collected money, while those employees who do not contribute are eligible for 10 percent, Krieh said.

A board of seven members applications and decides how much money the fund will give. Krieh said the board has chosen to help some people and turned down others. "Everybody has their own idea of what an emergency is."

Since the birth of the fund in February the board has given out several sums of money. "One lady's house burned, or such, and we gave her a couple hundred dollars," Krieh said.

The fund help other workers who had death in the family.

"I wish everyone in the plant would fork over a dollar if someone has a dire emergency," Krieh said.

of Twin Falls, were sharing a truck to haul their purchases, and Tse also had an agenda for the day.

"I looked at the ads and picked what stores I was going to. I just want to get Christmas shopping out of my way today," he said.

Both Tse and Jones say they will be spending less this year for Christmas. Tse said he will be giving fewer gifts. Jones said, "I just spent my way on a new home."

Both said the economy is the reason for spending less.

"We're a little busier this year than last," said Mel Quale of Quale's Electronics, who reported high-definition TVs as his hottest-selling items. "But all of November has been very strong this year."

MaryAnn Belkman, owner of The Homestead, said Friday was quiet at her store in the Greenwood Shopping Center and sales were down. She added, "I've noticed a trend that our business goes by paydays, and this isn't a payday weekend. People also have almost a whole week longer this year for Christmas shopping," she said.

"Business is going very well, about the same as last year," said Bryon Dalby, assistant store manager for Home Depot.

"Morning sales started out with people buying of specials, household items. This is the first year we had small appliances - coffee and crock pots, smaller tools and hand drills - and they sold fast. By afternoon we were also picking up big-ticket sales also."

Historic Old Towne was busy, but retailers there didn't expect it to be an extremely busy day.

"The best sales are the two weeks before Christmas," said Tom Ashenbrenner of Price True Value Hardware.

In spite of the hype about the biggest shopping day of the year, it is not, according to data compiled by the International Council of Shopping Centers over the past six years. The top shopping day is typically the last Saturday before Christmas, whether that Saturday falls on Dec. 18 or Dec. 23.

"Traffic was very good and steady" (Friday), said Ashenbrenner.

Tom Rasmussen of Boise, visiting Price Hardware's china shop, said he was spending about the same amount of money this year, but is going more for quality than quantity. He said, "I plan to buy a couple of the other items that are cut down on."

Dave Nelson, owner of Saw-Mor Drug Store, said it was busier than normal.

"Although we aren't as seasonal as we used to be, sales do peak this month. October was a big, big month, so December will really have to rumble to beat it," he said.

Dan Churchman of Churchman Jewelry and Idaho Artistry said he has been a little busier than usual, but his busiest time is the week before Christmas. He added, "This area is still a farming community, and how they do affects how we do."

BLM director: Big fire stories overshadow small successes

The Associated Press

ELKO, Nev. — Nevada had a number of large wildfires this year that drew the headlines, but firefighters say they quietly succeeded in putting out most blazes before they got a chance to make news.

Bob Abbey, U.S. Bureau of Land Management director for Nevada, told Resource Advisory Council members in Elko that big fires grab the attention, while stopping the little ones can get lost among other statistics.

"Ninety-three percent of the wildfires that we had reported this past fiscal year, we were able to contain before they reached beyond 100 acres in size," Abbey told the group.

That was accomplished with the help of initial attack from volunteers and cooperation from other agencies, he said. More than 400,000 acres of BLM land burned in Nevada this year. The total overseen by all agencies was 554,094 acres, according to the National Interagency Fire Center.

Over the past three years more than 2.5 million acres have burned in the state, but "they were the wrong 2.5 million acres," Abbey said. Prime wildlife habitat is being lost, while areas that could benefit from fire were untouched.

Firefighting efforts got a big boost after the record 1999 fire season, when Congress appropriated an additional $1.2 billion for fire management. The BLM's share was $450 million. Nevada got $14 million of that.

"Certainly we were fortunate in Nevada to get what we perceived to be a fair share of those dollars," Abbey said.

The BLM's funding in Nevada went from $11 million to $25 million in one year, he said. Nevada's loss in the devastating 1999 fire season topped 1.8 million acres.

With money from the National Fire Plan, the BLM has hired additional firefighters and additional support personnel for training, archaeologists, hydrologists, fire weather specialists and a liaison with the Nevada Association of Counties.

This year, the BLM has burned 140,000 fewer acres than last year, Abbey said, and the BLM is planning to rehabilitate about half that amount.

Meanwhile, Abbey said fire will continue to be a tool used by the BLM.

"A lot of people think that under the National Fire Plan that we're just going to go out and start burning a bunch of property, and a bunch of resources, and that's not necessarily the case," he said.

This past year the BLM did prescribed burns on 7,432 acres in the Western Great Basin Area.

Slow snow start hampers farmers

The Associated Press

When the snow finally began falling in the West this week, Lee Bolin was getting in Florida — his Colorado hunting outfit shut down after a dismal season. Kills were off 30 percent, thanks to an unusually warm and dry fall that kept the elk in hiding and his clients scouting in shirt sleeves.

"We generally get a couple of snows in September, but this year we didn't get any. In November, it's on the ground all the time," said Bolin, a Colorado Springs-based outfitter. "When we pulled out a week ago, it was 65 degrees and we were working with no shirts on. That is NOT good."

The slow start to the snow season, coupled with persistent drought in some parts of the West, has strained businesses throughout the region that rely on the white stuff and the moisture it supplies.

Skii resorts in Montana, Utah and Colorado failed to make their traditional Thanksgiving. Day sales because of the lack of snowfall and inability to make snow due to warm temperatures.

Some Idaho outfitters canceled fall float and fish trips because the rivers were low, while wheat farmers in Oregon — suffering from three straight years of drought — are literally praying for rain or snow to insulate the winter wheat crop and replenish the parched soil.

"I'll often hear someone say, 'Ugh, it's raining again or it's cloudy again,' and my response is, 'Thank God it's raining!'" said Tammy Dennee, executive director of the Oregon Wheat Growers League. "Our growers have been severely damaged by these years of drought. We're glad to see these rains drop down, but we're still anxiously awaiting the arrival of snow."

Until the Thanksgiving week storm that dumped snow on parts of Utah, Colorado and Montana, nearly the West saw above-average temperatures and below-average precipitation in October and most of November, said Kelly Redmond, a climatologist at the Western Regional Climate Center.

In parts of Montana, temperatures that should have been in the 30s soared into the 50s. Until a few days ago, it was the warmest November in the Colorado Rockies since 1979. Even always-balm Phoenix was extra-balm this fall: It hit a record 98 degrees on Oct. 27.

By mid-November, no more than 5 inches of snow covered the Sierra Nevada near Lake Tahoe. There is usually between 4 and 10 inches, Redmond said. West Yellowstone, Mont., had just 0.8 inches of snowpack compared with the average by this time of 2.8 inches.

Experts blame a myriad of factors from global warming and the La Nina phenomenon, which brings warmer than usual weather to the West, to a long-term warming of the world's oceans.

And while it's only the beginning of the winter season, some forecasts call for the warm, dry trend to persist — a cause for concern among interests ranging from hydroelectric companies to farmers.

Is the anti-terrorism act constitutional?

Yes

Powers are justified to protect U.S.

PETE DU PONT

PHILADELPHIA - Last month, President Bush signed a sweeping anti-terrorism bill that grants new powers of the intelligence and law enforcement agencies controlled by the federal government - agencies that had experienced a dramatic erosion of their respective authorities following Wargate.

As a member of Congress in the mid-1970s, I had a front-row seat as Congress acted to limit the powers of the executive branch to investigate and prosecute lawbreakers.

Chief among the targets was the Central Intelligence Agency and the Justice Department. Both agencies had been used by the administration in an elaborate political cover-up, ultimately leading to President Nixon's resignation.

Twenty-five years later, and only after Sept. 11, the federal government determined that the limitations placed on the CIA and other intelligence gathering agencies had diminished the nation's ability to monitor worldwide terrorism planning and execution. The Justice Department also had suffered in its ability to use its investigative powers.

During times of war and worldwide calamity, governments are forced to reassess their security needs. New laws and regulations are passed, usually in emergency legislative sessions.

This was the case after the terrorist attacks with the White House, the Pentagon and the Justice Department largely calling the shots. The Congress responded to make it difficult for anyone intending to wage another wave of terrorist attacks here or abroad, while still protecting our inalienable rights.

While there won't be any internment camps for Arab-Americans, like those erected for Japanese-Americans during World War II, the bad news is that some of the liberties we take for granted may be limited until the law expires in 2006. The good news, of course, is that Congress has placed a "sunset" provision on the new powers of the CIA and the Justice Department. Technologically, much has changed in the United States since 1975, when the successful campaign to restrict our intelligence gathering capabilities was launched.

The U.S. government, and unfortunately, terrorist cells, enjoy high-tech wizardry unheard of just 15 years ago.

Wiretaps, enhanced surveillance devices, smart bombs with lasers, and other James Bond-style domestic novelties have become almost mundane. Our ability to use them for national defense was limited, however, until now.

America under high-tech domestic surveillance, including irrefutable wiretaps, computer and cellular phone monitoring, face recognition camera technology and a network of highly trained and skilled but unseen men and women working undercover worldwide to use any means available to thwart terrorist plots, seems to fly in the face of the U.S. Constitution and the Bill of Rights ... but only on first blush.

Expect complaints about invasions of privacy, inconveniences with long lines at security checkpoints, and the confiscation of our mail clippers and other privacy personal accoutrements, but we are being asked to be patriots and to obey. We have to, and we will continue to obey these war-induced regulations, probably beyond 2006 - but only to a point. No nation has ever waged a worldwide war on terrorism before. No one knows where this new endeavor will lead us, or what it will do to our inalienable rights. It's a new century with new threats requiring new laws and a new order. Our survival as a free nation, and our goal of creating a Free World, depends on how patriotic Americans rise to the challenge.

Yet for over 200 years, the U.S. Constitution has stood

No

It exceeds constitutional limits

SONIA ARRISON

SAN FRANCISCO - The USA PATRIOT Act recently signed by President Bush seeks to combat terrorism. Yet in doing so, the labyrinth legislation ironically threatens to compromise the basic rights that define our nation.

For instance, the act unnecessarily impinges upon Fourth Amendment protections because it significantly changes how search warrants are executed. Previously, before the government could enter a house and search through an individual's property and documents, a warrant had to be obtained and notice had to be given to the person being searched (except in very limited circumstances where a person's electronic communications were being searched).

Notice is important to ensure that the individual being searched can assert his or her Fourth Amendment rights. For example, making sure that the police are only searching the areas allowed by the warrant.

The law changes this so that police can delay giving notice when conducting searches in any crime. That means the police can search your home or office when you're not there and tell you about it after the fact.

This ability to search secretly gives government broader powers, justified as a means to protect America against its enemies. Unfortunately, law enforcement has a history of snooping on "enemies" that are a far cry from terrorists. Martin Luther King, Jr. and John Lennon come readily to mind.

The law also expands Internet surveillance by making Carnivore, the controversial e-mail wiretapping system, official even though there is a real danger that it over-collects information. And while a judge must monitor Carnivore use after the fact, now the system can be installed by order of a U.S. or state attorney general without going to a judge.

Financial privacy is at risk, too. Without a doubt, there is a need to freeze the assets of known terrorists and their relatives. It has been done. But the USA PATRIOT Act goes too far, forcing financial institutions to monitor daily financial transactions of all customers more closely and requiring that information be shared with other federal agencies, such as the Central Intelligence Agency.

The law also takes steps toward making legitimate political dissent a terrorist act - a problem for a country that values free speech and political association.

It does this by creating a new crime called "domestic terrorism."

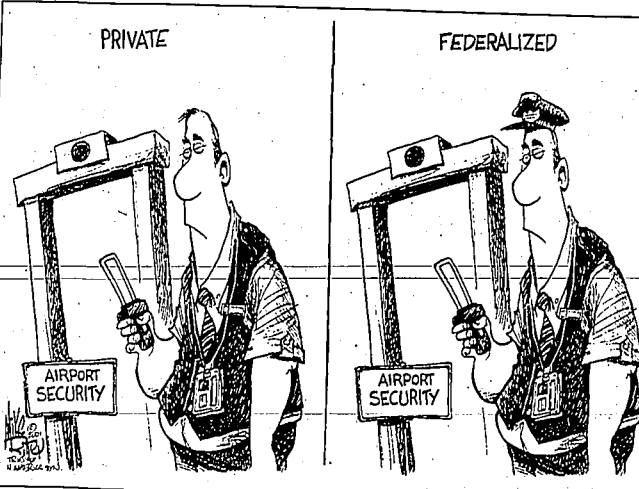

It is unclear why this new category is necessary as the September 11th attacks violated the books' definitions already on terrorism transcending national borders, and federal terrorism.

Under the new law, someone is guilty of domestic terrorism if they engage in acts of political protest that threaten national life. The American Civil Liberties Union asserts that this means the World Trade Organization protesters "have engaged in activities that could subject them to prosecution as terrorists."

Obviously, acts such as damage to persons or property should be prosecuted, but that can already be done without these new provisions. To equate protest acts goes too far and threatens legitimate political association - especially since the law also makes it a crime to allow a "terrorist" to stay in one's home.

While much of this Act is unjust, at least parts of it were given to us in exchange for when the sunset clauses expire in four years, Congress will come back to its senses and reaffirm America's fundamental liberties.

guard against government intrusion into our lives, our religious establishments and our free press. While we cannot tolerate the 1970s-style erosion of our ability to defend ourselves any longer, maintaining our individual liberties and other protections should be our No. 1 goal. We can never forget this awesome responsibility as we adopt measures to prevent the destruction of our democracy.

Pete du Pont is a former Republican governor of Delaware and the policy chairman of the National Center for Policy Analysis.

The Uniting and Strengthening America by Providing Appropriate Tools Required to Intercept and Obstruct Terrorism (USA PATRIOT) Act was rushed through Congress with remarkable speed.

This quick movement, combined with a fear that the administration calls the "new normalcy," allowed for legislation that would have been difficult to pass pre-Sept. 11 or even months from now.

While it is important to defend the country against terrorist acts, it can and should be done without whittling away America's liberties.

Don't eliminate supervision law

As a medical doctor, a graduate of Jerome High School, and the son of parents who still live in the Magic Valley, I am writing regarding a topic of great importance to all senior citizens in Idaho. Four years ago, the Clinton administration that doctors supervising when nurses provide anesthesia to Medicare patients during surgery. The Clinton proposal was seen as a significant threat to patient safety and was opposed by more than 80 percent of senior citizens, the American Medical Association, the American College of Surgeons and the state medical societies of all 50 states - including Idaho. The rule was supported by Bill Clinton - whose mother was a nurse anesthetist - and nurse anesthetists across the country who could significantly increase their incomes if they didn't have to work under physician supervision.

A recent study of more than 250,000 Medicare patients clearly shows that death and failed resuscitations are significantly higher when nurse anesthetists are not supervised by medical doctors called anesthesiologists. Idaho Gov. Dirk Kempthorne was one of four governors in the United States who wrote in support of the Clinton proposal. A well-organized letter-writing campaign by Idaho's nurse anesthetists was the likely reason for Kempthorne's support of the Clinton proposal. Last week, President George Bush formally and permanently overturned the Clinton proposal - leaving intact the long-standing rule that anesthesia nurses be supervised by a physician when they provide anesthesia to Medicare patients.

While anesthesia and surgery remain safe in Idaho, senior citizens in Idaho should be asking Gov. Kempthorne why they don't deserve the same high-quality health care as those in other states.

Attacks brought us together

America to me is a country forged by independence. An independence that is truly divine and majestic. One country in which these God-given rights are as precious as gold. But until Sept. 11, 2001, I myself took these rights for granted. We don't know about the immigrants who died trying to come to this country just to have a good job to support their family. Still, this country has always stood up to anything that dare threatens democracy, whether it be dictatorship, communism or Nazism. This country is always the first to help other countries in distress or despair.

Sadly, these are the very reasons we were attacked by radicals who do not want our light of freedom and democracy to shine. But no matter how hard we were hit, we stuck together. It's unfortunate that it takes a tragedy to bring us together, but we'll survive. These terrorists think they have won. How wrong they are; they'll never win!

So in this time, we must thank all those firemen and policemen who died trying to rescue another life. So now that we are on the road to war, we must not stop until the word terror is abolished from the world. Now I would like to quote two presidents that have been through this same experience:

"Dec. 7. A day that 'ill live in infamy,'" by Franklin Delano Roosevelt after the Pearl Harbor attacks.

"Today our nation saw evil, evil in the purest form. But we responded with the best of America," by George Walker Bush on Sept. 11, 2001.

Let it be known that these terrorists have awakened a giant, a giant which will not let this act of war go unpunished, a giant which thirsts for justice; and I will join this giant because I am proud to be an American!

Don't accuse without evidence

Throughout the past several years, many letters to The Times-News have accused the dairy industry of polluting the streams, rivers and the equifer. There needs to be some real truth published about these matters. In one of the latest letters, the author used the scenario that run-off from facilities and fields was entering laterals that eventually ended up in the Snake River. Since 1995 when the inspection of all dairies for Clean Water Act violations was transferred to the Department of Agriculture, tremendous results have been made to assure the public that these kinds of pollution do not occur. In fact, if any run-off leaves one's property, the dairy is in violation. Many of us in the National Pollution Discharge Elimination System permit to allow them to release nutrients into the river. This is called point-source discharge. Ask any regulator from any agency how much a dairy operation is allowed to discharge off of its land and the answer will be zero.

There is also scientific data that will show that the dairy industry does not pollute the groundwater. Dairymen are as concerned about increases in nitrate levels as anyone else. The Idaho Dairymen's Association has funded testing of every well on all dairies and around some dairies in Idaho to determine if it was coming from animals. The Department of Agriculture took the tests and sent the samples for chemical isotopes testing to determine the source of nitrates. Ninety-six percent of the tests taken on dairies showed that the source of nitrates was inorganic nitrate and only 4 percent was from either humans or animals. Is this the scientific evidence activists use to prove the nitrates are coming from dairies? Twin Falls Ground Water Assessment Plan should eventually determine the facts.

Please do not accuse an industry without first finding what is really true. Can't we work together to determine the source of the nitrates that are testing high in some locations? Isotope and DNA testing is available.

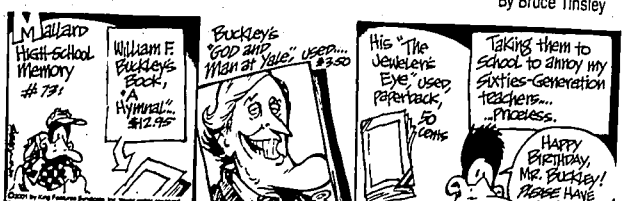

If Twin Falls County wants to prosper, then good science needs to prevail.

Pressure grows for Israel to present facts of Palestinian children's deaths

The Associated Press

Israeli opposition leader Yossi Sarid called on the army Friday to present the full facts of the deaths of five Palestinian boys killed Thursday by what Palestinian police said was a bomb planted by Israeli forces. He called for stern action to be taken if improper conduct is discovered.

"Somebody high up in the army will have to pay with his head," Sarid told Israeli television. "Children killed, whether on our side or theirs, is not something that can be passed over."

In the Gaza Strip, thousands joined the funeral procession for the five boys killed in Thursday's blast. The victims ranged in age from seven to 14 and all members of the same clan.

The Palestinian police chief in Gaza, Brig. Gen. Abdel Razeq Majada, said the boys appeared to have been killed by a bomb which had been seen operating in the area the night before the blast.

"Shrapnel we collected from the area shows that the explosion was caused by an explosive device," he said. "Our investigation continues, but it looks as if the device was booby-trapped and when one of the children kicked it exploded."

Israel's defense minister said the blast was being investigated and expressed regret over the deaths. Israel officials refused to comment further pending the results of the inquiry, but two Israeli newspapers quoted army officers as saying that Israeli troops trying to thwart Palestinian sniper squads had recently operated in the area of the explosion.

After Friday's funeral, about 200 Palestinians marched toward the nearby Jewish settlement of Neve Dekalim, throwing stones at the fence.

Israeli troops fired stun grenades and live rounds, killing a 15-year-old boy, doctors said. The army said it fired warning shots in the air, and did not see anyone being hit.

Also Friday, an Israeli helicopter fired two missiles at a van in the West Bank on Friday, killing a leading member of the Islamic militant Hamas group and his brother, Palestinian officials and Israel army radio said.

The Israeli military refused to comment.

A total of six Palestinians were killed Friday, making it the deadliest day since Oct. 26, when 10 died in clashes with the Israeli military.

Also in Gaza, a Palestinian taxi driver was killed and three of his seven passengers were wounded when the vehicle came under Israeli fire. Two of the wounded were critically hurt with head injuries, doctors said.

The army said troops opened fire at the car fearing it contained attackers after the driver approached an army post after dark and ignored orders to halt.

They said that the car had previously twice driven toward the post, then turned back before approaching for a third time.

Near the West Bank town of Nablus, two Palestinians were killed when a bomb they were trying to plant near a road used by Israeli motorists blew up prematurely, Palestinian security officials said.

Poll: Israelis favor state for Palestinians

JERUSALEM (AP) - A week after Israel's foreign minister set off a political firestorm by telling the United Nations that his people support creation of a Palestinian state, a poll published Friday backed up his conclusion.

The Gallup poll in the Maaviv district showed that 59 percent of Israelis support the creation of a Palestinian state, and 36 percent are opposed. The other 5 percent had no opinion, the poll said.

Hard-line Cabinet ministers, including members of Prime Minister Ariel Sharon's Likud party, called for the dismissal of Shimon Peres after his bid at the U.N. General Assembly on Nov. 15, "though this is not yet a formal policy of the government of Israel, there is support for a Palestinian independence, supporting Peres' position."

Peres, representing the moderate Labor party in Sharon's broad coalition, said afterward, "I do not see really any other solution either for the Palestinians, nor for us, nor for peace in the future" than a Palestinian state in the West Bank and Gaza Strip.

The poll showed that 73 percent of the respondents believed that a Palestinian state would emerge, regardless of their views on the issue.

Previous polls have also indicated broad support among Israelis for creating a Palestinian state, despite more than a year of Palestinian-Israeli violence.

The poll questioned 544 Israeli adults and quoted a 4.5 percent margin of error.

Tribunal will hear genocide case against Milosevic

AMSTERDAM, Netherlands (AP) - The U.N. war crimes tribunal said Friday it will try Slobodan Milosevic for genocide in Bosnia, linking him for the first time in court to the murder of thousands of non-Serbs and the displacement of a quarter million people.

Judge Richard May approved the third indictment against the former Yugoslav president, confirming that years of investigation had produced enough evidence to put him on trial for mankind's worst crime.

Prosecutors charged the 60-year-old defendant with criminal responsibility for the "widespread killings of thousands of Bosnian Muslims and Bosnian Croats" during the 3.5-year Bosnian war.

The latest indictment lists dozens of execution sites, detention facilities and the locations of more than 8,600 murders across Bosnia. It charges Milosevic with 29 counts, including genocide, complicity to commit genocide, crimes against humanity, grave breaches of the Geneva Conventions and violations of the laws or customs of war - every crime in the tribunal's statute.

Robby Gordon bumps Jeff Gordon on way to New Hampshire 300 win

The Associated Press

LOUDON, N.H. — It's rare to see Jeff Gordon lose his cool on the track. It's even rarer to see Robby Gordon win a race.

Both happened Friday in NASCAR's season finale at New Hampshire 300. Robby's allowed him to go his first Winston Cup victory, while Jeff's retaliatory contact earned him a penalty that cost him any chance at victory.
When it was over, there were harsh words flying through the garage — even from mild-mannered Jeff.

"He should be embarrassed to win like that," said Jeff, the series champion who led 257 of the 300 laps. "But hey, I understand why guys do that kind of stuff. I just wish I had taken his tire down or something so at least he wouldn't have won the race."

Robby, who was out of work for part of the season and blew two other opportunities to win this year, apologized for nothing.

"I didn't spin him. I just moved him a little bit up the race track and then I had to go," Robby said. "I've heard a lot of people over the years call that racing."
The clash began with 16 laps to go when leader Jeff Gordon appeared to slow his Chevrolet to avoid running into the lapped car of Mike Wallace. Robby rammed him from behind, turning Jeff sideways and into the back of Wallace.

As the yellow flag came out, Jeff raced around the track and slammed into the back of Robby in a retaliatory bump that drew a one-lap penalty from NASCAR.
"I ought to take him out right now!" Jeff screamed over the radio as he headed into the pits for his penalty.

Jeff's Chevrolet suffered heavy front-end damage after the contact and the penalty eliminated him from contention. He wound up 15th.

Tiger tries to breathe some life into aging Skins game

The Associated Press

INDIO, Calif. — When the Skins Game made its debut with Arnold Palmer and Jack Nicklaus trying to win holes for cash, it was an immediate hit with television viewers starved for off-season golf over the Thanksgiving weekend.

Eighteen years later, another big star is being counted on to rescue an event that in recent times has grown stale and been lost amid the Silly Season events that now clutter TV screens.

With ratings in decline, the Skins Game is doing what every tournament director dreams of being able to do — bring in Tiger Woods to make it a must-see event once again.

Woods will share the billing for nine holes today and another nine on Sunday with defending champion Colin Montgomerie. Greg Norman and Jesper Parnevik.

followed Woods in Friday's program, while only a handful bothered to watch the other players, who were in separate groups.

"It's obviously a coup for the match," Montgomerie said. "He will bring in more fans and more viewers."

The 19th Skins Game opens at the Landmark Golf Club with two big changes.

A new rule that forces a player to, in effect, win a skin twice figures to add a bit more drama to the 18-hole event. More important, though, is the presence of Woods in the four-man field for the first time in four years.

"We're anticipating it will bounce back this year," said Barry Frank, an IMG senior corporate vice president who helped found the event in 1983. "It's no secret that any tournament will do better with Tiger in it and in contention. And in a tournament like this he's always in contention."

Woods will be a regular in the Skins Games over the next five years, thanks to a contract he signed in the summer with ABC/ESPN that guarantees him millions before he even hits a tee shot. Woods, who played in 1996 and 1997, is committed to appear in

NEW YORK — Maybe Melvin Ely is just a slow starter.

Fresno State's 6-foot-10 center was scoreless in the first half but more than made up for it with 14 second-half points to lead the Bulldogs to a 63-58 victory over No. 13 Michigan State on Friday in the consolation game of the preseason NIT.

"Our goal was to win in New York," Ely said. And he made sure they did.

Jagr leads Caps to third straight win

WASHINGTON (AP) — Jaromir Jagr had a goal and an assist to help lead Washington to its season-high third consecutive victory.

Andreï Nikolishin scored twice, and Adam Oates, Ulf Dahlén and Dainius Zubrus also had goals for Washington, which had a club-record 27 shots in the second period and capitalized on a match penalty assessed to New York's Igor Ulanov for sucker-punching Chris Simon.

The game, which degenerated into a series of brawls in the third period, ended in a wild melee that was sparked by New York's Dave Karpa's cross-check on Washington's Matt Pettinger. Every player on the ice squared off with someone, including the two goalies, who dropped their gloves. Karpa received 31 minutes in penalties in the game-ending brawl.

Country's top chefs gather for Olympics

Lauré Pequegnot of France blasts through a gate on her way to winning the women's World Cup Slalom Thursday at Copper Mountain, Colo.

French woman wins with fallen teammate in mind

COPPER MOUNTAIN, Colo. (AP) — Her French teammates want to remember Regine Cavagnoud with victories, not tears.

Lauré Pequegnot earned her first World Cup triumph Thursday, just three weeks after Cavagnoud, the team leader, died in a training accident.

"We do it for her family, her boyfriend," Pequegnot said. "She wouldn't like that we cry all the time. I'm sure that she would want that we compete."

Pequegnot said she used Cavagnoud as inspiration as she survived a calamity-filled second run in which she had her helmet and goggles knocked askew, then nearly had to dodge a piece of gate that snapped off.

The temptation was there give in to the difficulties.

"I know Regine always competes, she never quit," Pequegnot said. "She is a very good example. Me, I really want to be like her and never give up."

Pequegnot edged 18-year-old Austrian Christine Sponring by 0.17 seconds.

As she crossed the finish line, Pequegnot slipped onto the freshly fallen snow. Teammate Christine Fueschler ran to her and hugged her, then a coach climbed the fence and joined the celebration.

The 26-year-old Pequegnot won in a combined time of 1:37.64. Most of the morning run was held in a snowstorm, but the snow tapered to flurries by the afternoon run.

SALT LAKE CITY — The "best of the best" will arrive for the Winter Olympics in February — but they won't be athletes.

Nearly 50 of the country's top chefs will prepare everything from smoked salmon tartare to duck sausage and foie gras each night of the games.

The culinary masterpieces will be served up at Abraham Hall in a room to be named after James Beard, the father of American cooking.

The chefs selected by Olympic organizers for "The Art of the Table" have been singled out by the James Beard Foundation as the best in their field.

It's the first Olympic culinary event and could become a tradition. Corporate sponsors already have gobbled up most of the gourmet evenings, which are limited to 80 guests a night.

That leaves six February nights for the public to eat like kings. It won't be cheap. Tables of eight — no individual seats are being sold — will go for $5,000.

Jennifer Rodriguez, from the United States, skates to a second-place finish in the 1,500 meters during the Essent ISU World Cup Sunday in Innsbruck, Austria.

Hays leads U.S. bobsledding surge

Todd Hays was a kickboxer and linebacker at the University of Tulsa. He played a couple of years in the Canadian Football League and won the national kickboxing championship in 1993. Seven years ago, he decided to try bobsledding. His first taste of the sliding sport came at a tryout on a hill near his home town of Del Rio, Tex.

Two months later, Hays competed in his first World Cup race.

Now he is the hottest U.S. winter-sport athlete and an early favorite to bring home a medal or two from the Salt Lake Olympics in February — in a sport in which the United States hasn't won a medal since 1956.

Hays, who last year became the first driver to lead the United States to a bobsled World Cup victory in Aspen to another site in the season's last race, has dominated the bobsled circuit this season, winning medals in the four opening World Cup competitions and winning three outright. His teammates' performances have been surprising in a sport in which Americans typically lag behind their European counterparts.

Lack of snow leads to major race cancellations

A few weeks ago, downhill skier Pieter Buitendijk speculated that certain European skiers would consider skipping a pair of World Cup ski races in Aspen and Vail, Colo., because of fears of possible terrorism in the United States.

It never crossed her mind that the biggest problem would be no snow.

Warm weather and light snow forced the cancellation of a women's World Cup giant slalom scheduled for this weekend in Aspen, as well as the Dec. 12 men's downhill and Super-G in Vail. They also caused the movement of a slate of women's races scheduled for this week in Aspen to another site in Colorado, the higher elevation Copper Mountain. In short, Colorado's warmest November since 1979 has wreaked havoc on the international skiing schedule.

U.S. skater uses deceased coach for inspiration

Last week, U.S.-born medalist Angela Nikodinov learned that a coach instrumental in shaping her figure skating career — Elena Tcherkasskaja — died of pancreatic cancer. This weekend, Nikodinov will attempt to use Tcherkasskaja as inspiration to reach a new career height. With a third-place or better finish at the Cup of Russia, Nikodinov would earn her first-ever berth in the skating season's crowning event — the Grand Prix Final — held this year in Kitchener, Ontario, Dec. 14-16. Nikodinov won the bronze two weeks ago at the Nations Cup in Germany.

U.S. pair Krista Moore and John Zimmerman have proved a major surprise in the figure skating Grand Prix, winning silver medals at Skate America in Colorado Springs, the Nations Cup and Trophée Lalique in Paris this past weekend. Ina and Zimmerman, seventh-place finishers at the first two world championships, look like Olympic medal contenders for the first time during their three seasons together.

Unsung hero leads American skeleton crew

In a surprising start to the season, American Chris Soule has outshined more prominent U.S. skeleton athletes Jim Shea and Lincoln DeWitt in early World Cup events. Soule, a stunt man in the film "G.I. Jane," stands just behind Switzerland's Gregor Stabli in the overall World Cup standings, having won a silver and a bronze in the season's first two events in Konigssee, Germany, and Igls, Austria.

The eighth-place finisher in last year's overall World Cup standings, Soule, 28, was considered the third-best skeleton athlete on a loaded U.S. team entering the season. But Soule, a University of California graduate who works as a research assistant at an engineering company, has been the star.

Investors return from holiday in buying mood Refinancing

Blue chip stocks see strong gains

NEW YORK (AP) — Investors returned from the Thanksgiving holiday in a buying mood, sending blue chip stocks to strong gains and reversing the profit-taking trend of recent sessions.

"We did see some selling. We did see some money taken off the table. But there are bargain hunters that refuse to sit idly by as optimism appears to be increasing."

What's more, Giss said, retailers are still wary of inventory. And once inventory changes show general economic slow-down, there aren't enough goods available for a sale of a sale, even if a last-minute surge in demand occurs.

"The shock effect from Sept. 11 has worn off on a lot of consumers. They're ready to shop," said Scott Krugman, spokesman for the National Retail Federation.

No surveys are so optimistic that lower taxes and refinances cash-outs will stimulate retail sales. Richard Giss, a retail consultant with Deloitte & Touche in Los Angeles, said consumers cut back higher than projections. After cutting spending, refinancing and postponing travel, consumers have plenty of money, Giss said.

"The question is just when they'll start spending it again." During the previous refinancing boom in 1998, about half the $50 billion taken out by homeowners went to saving investments or to repay debts.

Russia trims oil output

Volatility in the Middle East has brought scrutiny to the United States dependence on foreign sources of oil. For example, of the 9 million barrels of crude oil imported to the U.S. each day, nearly a quarter comes from the Persian Gulf. MOSCOW (AP) - A pledge from Russia to reduce its daily oil exports by less than 1 percent disappointed the world's other leading oil producers, which had hoped for a cut three times as large to help stabilize falling prices. The government of the world's second-largest oil producing nation said Friday that companies would trim output by a mere 500,000 barrels a day for the remainder of the year. The Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries has implored Russia to join other nonmember nations such as Mexico and Norway in making larger cuts to help shore up prices, which have plummeted nearly 30 percent in the past two months.

Group moves closer to official declaration of recession

Chicago Tribune - Economists moved closer to official acknowledgment that the U.S. economy is in recession - an obvious fact to most people - as the committee that defines such downturns held a meeting Friday to discuss when things started turning sour. While individual economists who are members of the committee call recessions have said they know we're in one, the experts are still sorting out the details of just when it started. Once the official word is handed down by the National Bureau of Economic Research, it will be of great interest to economists but have very little impact elsewhere. # Taliban leaves no stone unturned in war on art

Los Angeles Times

KABUL, Afghanistan — There was something sadistic about the way two Taliban government ministers and their shock troops destroyed many of Afghanistan's precious works of art. They did it with smiles on their faces.

They walked through the National Museum here in the capital last year, inspecting each object to determine which ones depicted living beings. And then they raised their axes and brought them down hard, smashing piece after piece of Afghan history into oblivion.

It was such a high priority that the Taliban minister of information and culture, Mullah Qudratullah Jamal, and the minister of fine arts, Asqar Moteaseb, led a wrecking crew, witnesses said.

Over three days, as the Taliban ministers weeded from one artifact to another, an Afghan archaeologist and a historian followed at a respectful distance, pleading for mercy as if begging for the lives of their own children.

The Taliban's war on Afghan art got world attention in March, when its soldiers blew up two enormous Buddhist statues sculpted from a cliff overlooking Bamian, the Hazaras' ethnic heartland.

But the destruction of the Bamian Buddhas — dating back to the 5th or early fourth century — was only the most widely publicized event in the Taliban's systematic campaign to destroy Afghanistan's cultural heritage, which went largely unnoticed in the rest of the world.

"I don't know why they changed and became the enemy of our ancient things," said Mir Abdul Rauf Zaker, an archaeologist and director of the Institute of History at the Afghan Academy of Science.

"It was their own idea. I don't think they were trying to punish the outside world, though because if a father faces a difficult condition, he never kills his own child."

Zaker and historian Yahya Mohebzadiah had spent years trying to keep thousands of Afghan cultural treasures at the National Museum from ending up in the ruins of war.

One Buddhist statue was among the most precious. It was a clay image of a bodhisattva, a Buddhist who seeks complete enlightenment, made 1,600 years ago.

"Before, when we needed to move the bodhisattva, we were afraid it would break and didn't touch it," Mohebzadiah said. "So it was difficult for me to see it being smashed with an axe."

"I was crying," he continued, and tears welled up in his eyes all over again. "One of the Taliban saw me, and I pretended that my hand was hurt, and that I was crying, and I said, 'No!'"

The Taliban found more than 2,750 items that were renderings of living things and therefore had been destroyed because, according to the regime's interpretation of Islam, they were idols that offended God.

Zaker, 50, and Mohebzadiah, 38, were ordered to act as guides for the two Taliban ministers. The officials simply wanted a tour of the museum, they were told.

"But when they entered, they were like a hungry tiger looking for prey," Mohebzadiah said. "The minister told us that if we tried to stop the destruction, they would break our heads with the same axe."

On the first day, the delegation arrived about 4:30 p.m. and spent about two hours in the museum, breaking objects with stones. The next day, they returned with axes. When Taliban soldiers from the Ministry for the Promotion of Virtue and the Prevention of Vice joined in, they usedledgehammers, Mohebzadiah said.

It meant nothing to them that the Islamic world has produced some of the most beautiful art — including depictions of living beings in the history of humankind, he said. The Taliban wanted to have a superior Islam in Afghanistan," Mohebzadiah said.

Museum staff had managed to hide crates full of other museum pieces. The Taliban found and destroyed them too. Mohebzadiah and Zaker were able, however, to conceal a few statues, such as a delicate seventh-century Buddhist male deity.

The two-story National Museum opened in 1979, the Arab media now targets terrorist

The Washington Post

The cartoon of fugitive Saudi, dissident Osama bin Laden - showing him in a dark cave using a flute to charm a mushroom cloud from a basket, as a serpent recoils in horror - represents one of the first alarms in the official media of Saudi Arabia and Egypt about the fervid support bin Laden attracts.

This week's cartoon, in the English-language Saudi daily, Arab News, and a Thursday opinion piece in Egypt's semi-official Al-Ahram, mark a belated reaction to the threat presented by Islamic extremists and an effort by Islamic scholars to set the record straight on the distance between their religion and terrorism.

Criminal law professor Nabil Luka Bibawi, writing in Al-Ahram, cited extensive passages from the Koran preaching religious tolerance and prohibiting attacks against innocent non-Muslims, calling them attacks against the prophet Muhammad and God.

"Terrorists impose darkness on the climate of the intellect because they try to force their backwardness and fanatic opinion under the veil of religious correctness," Bibawi wrote.

"They construe religious thought to suit their political objectives to reach power." He accused such extremists of "disfiguring religious tolerance with insane acts."

"There can be no worse distortion of religion than that. If world Zionism spent billions of dollars to tarnish the image of Islam, it will not accomplish what the terrorists have done with their actions and words."

In a series of editorials in the Arab press, and even on the occasional talk show on the Qatar-based al-Jazeera satellite television network, there's been a clear effort to discredit bin Laden in religious terms and shed light on his criminal bent, political aspirations and pretensions of piety. The delicate and narrow Islamic dictates on who has the right to issue a fatwa, or religious ruling, are being laid bare to viewers and readers, indicating bin Laden and his associates lack the theological authority they claim.

"While Osama bin Laden and his followers claim to have lofty ideals, they have forgotten that it is their leader's own words which now point the way to damnation," wrote Jamal Khashoggi, deputy editor of Arab News, in an undated online commentary.

Bin Laden allegedly fled before bombing

FARMADA, Afghanistan (AP) - Osama bin Laden, part of his family and about 2,000 Arab fighters were staying in a housing complex in eastern Afghanistan shortly before the United States launched its bombing campaign against his al-Qaida network and the Taliban, an area commander said Friday.

Standing outside a compound where one of bin Laden's wives lived with their children, local militia commander Mohamed Nawab said bin Laden often spent his days in the eastern provincial capital of Jalalabad but went to the mud-brick compound in Farmada at night to visit his family.

Nawab said bin Laden rented the compound from militia commander Mullah Yunus Khalis, a Muslim fundamentalist who fought the Soviet occupation of Afghanistan, later allied himself with the Taliban and only recently defected to anti-Taliban forces.

Nawab's claims could not be independently confirmed. If true, however, they would be the first detailed account of bin Laden's whereabouts since U.S. airstrikes began last month.

Bin Laden was no stranger to Farmada, a farm village about 15 miles from Jalalabad. The farm's previous owner, a former guerrilla leader known as Engineer Mahmood, was the person who invited bin Laden to settle in Afghanistan. Khalis' militia, which controls Farmada, remain suspicious of militiamen loyal to Abdul Qadir, the main anti-Taliban leader in Jalalabad.

Magic of a stranger who cares

It was the sniffing, finally, that got to me.

Not the chin-ups on the light-rail train hand straps. Not the constant din of teenage cell phone chatter. Not even the almost overwhelming aroma of a maintenance worker in desperate need of maintenance. None of these things bothered me about the family sitting across the aisle from me on the commuter train that afternoon.

Just the sniffing, emanating from a youngster I'd guess to be about 10 years old. It was constant. Steady. Indefatigable.

And if that wasn't a word (meaning "tireless" and

VALUESPEAK
Joseph Walker

"incessant") before I got on the train that day, it certainly was after. Because my little sniffing buddy was exactly that.

Tireless and incessant. You know - indefatigable.

And I wasn't the only one who noticed. The lady in the seat facing mine glanced up from her magazine more than once, gazing across the aisle at the raucous little family. She probably wondered as I did why the mother seemed to pay no attention to the aural explosions erupting from her son's sinuses. At one point, the lady looked for all the world like she was about to say something. But she hesitated, then buried her face in her magazine again.

It was just as well. What could she say in the face of something so ... you know ... indefatigable?

At the next stop, another woman boarded the train and sat next to the lady reading the magazine. She was one of "those" commuters - you know the kind. Instead of avoiding eye contact, they look fellow passengers directly in the eye.

Instead of earnestly avoiding human contact and interaction, they smile and chat amiably with anyone about anything. And instead of being overwhelmed by something indefatigable, they offer a tissue.

"Here you go, young man," she said, smiling. "Sounds like you could use this."

"Oh, thank you," the boy's mother said, relieved. "He's got allergies."

"Oh, I know," the new woman said. "I've got 'em too. And they've been awful this year."

"Tell me about it," the mother said. "I keep reminding him, don't go anywhere without some tissue. But he never listens."

"Well, if you think it's bad now, you just wait until he's a teenager," the new woman said. "Why, with my boys it was ..." and she was off on a long story that extended for several stops and included references to teen drinking, body piercing and Britney Spears.

Don't ask. Meanwhile, I couldn't help but notice that the sniffing had stopped. Completely. Totally. Blessedly.

Turns out indefatigability is no match for a stranger who cares. And that's nothing to sneeze at.

Or sniffle, as the case may be.

Sarah Banton, pianist and organist at the First United Methodist Church in Twin Falls, says the newly restored piano in the church sanctuary is better than before.

Restoration of something Grand

Methodists bring piano back to life

By Joan Bean
Times-News correspondent

TWIN FALLS - When a 50-pound chunk of plaster dropped from a 40-foot ceiling in the First United Methodist Church early one morning in September, a grand piano broke its fall.

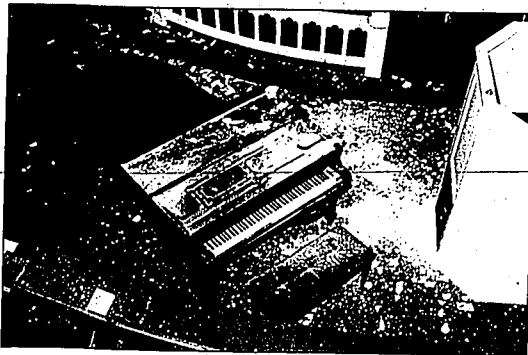

Clarence Dudley, the church historian who oversees the musical instruments, said two things needed to be done: The ceiling had to be repaired and the piano had to be restored.

The accident was the last straw for the old piano, after 88 years of normal wear and tear. Pastor Jim Frisbee said, over time, plants were set on top of the piano and there were water spots, too.

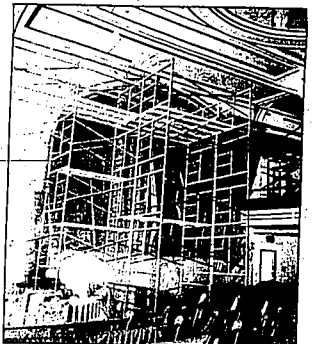

"You can't help it - both in terms of the playing of it and the fact that it's out there and sometimes in the way of other things going on," Frisbee said. "So it gets kind of taken for granted."

Fortunately, through the skill and artistry of local piano technician Ken Davis, the old instrument now has a new lease on life. And it's getting a lot of respect these days.

"Ken did a beautiful job of restoring it, both in terms of wood finish and also in terms of the musicality of it," Frisbee

Plaster damaged the ornate piano, which was built in 1913, and its unique African mahogany.

Scaffolding filled the church sanctuary during the renovation process.

said. "The piano plays better; it sounds better than it ever has, and it's just incredibly beautiful."

But when Davis first saw it, he said it looked pretty sad. Plaster had landed on the music desk (the part that holds the sheet music), had broken through to the strings and was all over the sound board. He said the ornate piano was built in 1913, and there's nothing available today to match its African mahogany.

"So what I attempted to do was put the fibers back where they came from, those that were available," Davis said. "And those that weren't, I had to replace with a filler and then just match it up the best I could as far as blending, because nothing would look good on that piano except that music desk."

The plaster accident seems to have been age-related.

Davis said the restoration job was like fixing a small dent in a car, having to finish that entire part to blend in with the rest of it. So the decision was made to refinish the entire piano instead of fixing it piece-meal.

The first step was to take the piano outdoors and use forced air to remove all of the plaster. It took five men to move the 1,000-pound piano to Davis' shop, after which he totally stripped it down and did a lot of sanding and filling.

Davis mixed a stain to match the original, cleaned and polished all the hardware, repaired cracks in the sound board and put in a new key bed. He was able to save the original ivory, filing it down flush, and he glossed all the sharps.

"I just made everything work like it was new so they could sit down and enjoy playing it, and all the keys are nice and firm and tight," he said. "Unless you're a piano player, you don't really appreciate all of those things."

Sarah Banton, the church organist/pianist said, before the restoration, she thought the piano was ugly and hard to play. She had to pound on it, she recalled.

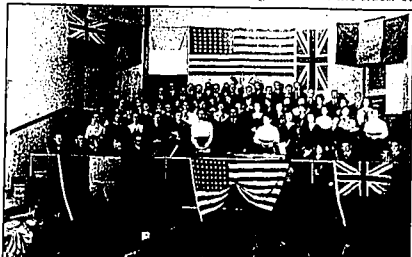

Now, all of that has changed.

opened. According to a newspaper article, the piano was donated to the church by "friends of the city."

He said the design of the piano is called "art case grand," and it features raised designs on the sides. The piano has 12 legs, solid brass casters and an elaborate frame-work supporting the pedal lyre.

Frisbee described the African mahogany as gorgeous, with almost a fluted grain, and said the color has a dark, and ruddy nature. The lid is "book-matched," he said, which comes about when a slab of wood is split down the middle and the two halves are opened like a book. The grain is like a reflection in the mirror from one side to the other.

"It's very valuable, both in terms of the artistry of the cabinet work and the way it's constructed, as well as its musical quality," he said. "It is both a showpiece and a very fine musical instrument."

This is the earliest known photo of the Methodist church piano, shown shielded from view by an American flag. The patriotic service drew 1,200 people on Dec. 27, 1917, the year the church building was completed. Dr. Orin Fuller, who was a well-known Magic Valley resident, is sitting at the far right in the photo holding a comet.

"I just can't believe it - it's like a new piano - it's like there's a different piano in there," she explained. "I think the tone is brighter and it's just wonderful. It was a blessing in disguise."

Dudley said the 8-foot grand, built by the Starr Company of Indiana, has probably been in the sanctuary since 1917, when the church building was

The plaster from the church ceiling landed on the piano's music desk and broke through to the strings.

Franklin Graham era begins

Son starts to take over for famous father

By Richard N. Ostling The Associated Press

The Rev. Billy Graham has preached to millions, counseled presidents and created a vast ministry. And now, in the twilight of his career, he is turning his organization over to his son and designated successor.

The clearest sign of the trend came last week. Franklin Graham spoke at a luncheon of civic leaders in Charlotte, N.C., and announced that the Graham organization will move its headquarters to that city from Minneapolis, its base since 1950.

It was the first major decision since Franklin, 49, officially took charge of the Billy Graham Evangelistic Association a year ago from his 83-year-old father. The elder Graham hasn't quite retired, but the relocation signals that Franklin is now directing strategy for the association.

In short, the Billy Graham era is ending and the Franklin Graham era has already begun. The son will be a different leader from the father, said William Martin of Rice University, whose "A Prophet with Power" is the definitive Billy biography.

"Franklin is less concerned to have everybody pleased at what he says than his father was," Martin said, and "his theology is more conservative."

Those traits became obvious the day after the Charlotte announcement, when NBC News broadcast an interview in which Franklin spoke about the war on terrorism.

"We're not attacking Islam but Islam has attacked us," he said. "The God of Islam is not the same God. He's not the son of God of the Christian or Judeo-Christian faith. It's a different God, and I believe it is a very evil and wicked religion."

Muslim organizations expressed outrage, and Franklin's words under President Bush's effort to depict Islam as a peaceful faith that terrorist factions have distorted. Franklin issued a statement Sunday that said it wasn't his calling to analyze Islam but he was concerned about the faith's treatment of women and its attitude toward the killing of non-Muslims.

The Rev. Franklin Graham speaks with reporters in Charlotte, N.C., after announcing the Billy Graham Evangelistic Association will move its headquarters from Minneapolis to Graham's hometown of Charlotte.

Samaritan's Purse until its revenues last year slightly surpassed the Graham association's $125.8 million, but few interdenominational Protestant agencies can match the gift-edged supporters on the Graham mailing list, or the group's $286.9 million in assets.

Graham association will merge, Franklin said in an interview with The Associated Press. Franklin said the Charlotte facility will be "state-of-the-art, not luxurious, but wired for the internet, radio and TV."

The third point in the empire's emerging North Carolina triangle is The Cove, a conference center near Montreat. All the Graham training programs will be based there.

Charlotte is Billy's proud hometown, and Minneapolis was an accidental location. Billy spent several years there as part-time president of what is now Northwestern College in St. Paul, and asked campus business manager George Wilson, Curt's predecessor, to set up a one-room office for his evangelistic work. As operations exploded over succeeding decades, Billy's sidekick Cliff Barrows would ask radio host Cliff Barrows to write "Billy Graham, Minneapolis, Minnesota. That's all the address you need."

That tradition didn't impress Franklin, however, when a cheap, 60-acre plot in Charlotte beckoned. But he vowed there would be no shift from the association's central purpose: classic arena meetings that urge people to make commitments to Jesus Christ.

Since 1989, Franklin has led evangelistic "festivals" in 61 U.S. cities, typically smaller than his father's venues, and 30 locations internationally. Next year he visits Gainesville, Fla.; College Station, Texas; Spokane, Wash.; El Salvador and Argentina. And as usual, he'll be in Cincinnati as backup in case his ailing father is unable to preach.

The meetings will continue "as long as churches invite us and the people come," said Franklin, who rebelled into skepticism and hard liquor before making his own decision for Jesus at age 22.

Some wonder if that stadium-style evangelism is a dying form, but Franklin insists it's still full force, he said, and Billy is breaking stadium attendance records.

Husband's office party bans wives

DEAR ABBY
Abigail VanBuren

DEAR ABBY: Every year, my husband and his co-workers get together for a holiday dinner at a nice restaurant. More than 20 of them participate. Most of the women are married, but most of the men who work there are single. The problem is that wives are not welcome at these parties.

My husband and I have been married two years. He says this is a nice tradition and that I shouldn't make waves about not being invited.

I can't believe the other wives are happy with this tradition, but to my knowledge, none of them openly object to it. Am I wrong to feel that both members of the couple should be invited to social functions?

—RESENTFUL IN SEATTLE

ing the dinner without you. These occasions are part of the job. There are plenty of other nights when you and your husband can enjoy a holiday dinner at a nice restaurant of your choosing. So please stop giving him heartburn.

DEAR ABBY: There are times when we all need a pick-me-up. Yesterday I was having a terrible day. It just kept going downhill. I had spent several hours at my grandmother's nursing home, as I do every week. I enjoy being of service, but always leave with mixed emotions.

I made a quick stop at a department store to look for something new to wear. I found a beautiful pale blue dress that was a perfect fit. However, after I paid for it, I noticed that a section of the dress had separated due to some missing stitching. Just my luck! Then I remembered an alteration shop that had recently opened near my home and thought I'd give it a try.

The woman behind the counter admired the dress and assured me it would be no problem to fix. I sat for a few minutes while she mended my dress.

Well, she did more than that, Abby. That kind lady mended my heavy heart. When the dress was done, I grabbed my wallet to pay. She refused the money with a smile and said, "You pay next time" — even though we both knew I wasn't a regular customer and there could very well never be a next time. Her act of kindness lifted me up when I needed a boost.

This is a reminder to people who might think that one simple act isn't all that monumental. I beg to differ. One simple gesture can turn someone's day around.

We can all do our part to make a gloomy day begin to shine by recognizing acts of kindness when we encounter them. There will be a letter in the mail from me to the owners of that alteration shop, with a glowing report of their employee's generosity.

—PASS IT ON, FOLSOM, CALIF.

DEAR RESENTFUL: Yes, you are wrong. Your husband is an employer of the company and does not make the rules. Do not make him feel guilty for attending.

Flower slapper apologizes to Charles

Knight Ridder News Service

The 16-year-old girl who slapped Prince Charles in Riga, Latvia, has said a more apologetic letter for the incident, her father said Thursday.

"I didn't want to offend you personally and I ask for your forgiveness and hope you understand," Alina Lebedeva wrote in the letter, published in Chas, a Russian-language daily.

Her father, Nikolai Lebedev, confirmed its contents.

Lebedeva struck Charles in the face with a red carnation earlier this month as she stopped to greet children in Riga. She said she was protesting Britain's involvement in the Afghan war.

A. Nine.

Q. Do buffaloes all go to the same place to die?

A. Can only tell you that the bison in Yellowstone Park appear to do that. To Violet Creek. It's not so mysterious. When big animals get sick with fever, they look for water to cool off.

Q. Why are rhinestones called by that name?

A. The first were made near the Rhine River in Germany.

All cats have the same general body proportions. That is, a small housecat would take the shape of a tiger if it kept on growing, and a tiger would look much like the housecat, if it hadn't grown at all.

THE ACES ON BRIDGE

Bobby Wolff

"It's not knowing much, but what is useful, that makes a wise man."

—Thomas Fuller

A plan that doesn't apply vital information gleaned from the bidding ranges to be a loser. Given East's opening bid and West's failure to respond, how would you plan the play of today's no-trump game?

Note North's reopening double. It is a much better choice than two diamonds. It not only brings the spade suit into play, but also leaves the door open to a possible penalty pass by South.

At three no-trump, West leads his partner's suit, and East plays his nine over West's eight. With no reason to hold up, South wins his queen. With six top tricks, South must develop three more winners while losing the lead only once.

If he conceals an early diamond trick, he develops two more diamond winners, but that will not suffice. East knocks out the heart ace and defeats the game when he wins his club ace.

If South leads a club to dummy's king at trick two, it achieves a similar result. He now gets two club winners, but the defenders still get a total of five winners.
