RAISING ANOTHER'S KIDS

Research detects 'caress' nerves

The Washington Post

Neuroscientists have discovered what romantics have always known: The touch of a lover's hand is special.

Scientists have announced that humans have a special set of nerves for feeling a mother's caress or a lover's embrace.

These nerves are sensitive to the soft touch of fingers gliding over a forearm or a parent's soothing hand, but not to rough touches, jabs or pinches. Scientists speculate that the nerves may be designed to guide humans toward tenderness and nurture — a theory bolstered by the fact that the nerves are wired to the same brain areas activated by romantic love and sexual arousal.

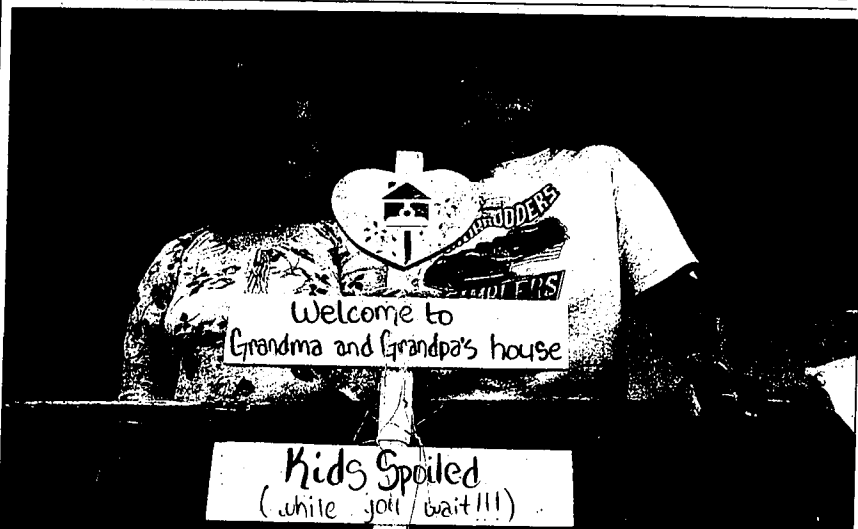

While these special nerves, which have thin fibers and send relatively slow signals to the brain, have been previously identified in animals and humans, their role had been unclear. Scientists had wondered about their purpose, especially because they do not work as efficiently as thick nerve fibers, which are also found in skin.

The new research, published in the current issue of Nature Neuroscience, indicates that while the thick fibers rapidly shoot electrical signals to the somatosensory cortex of the brain near the crown of the head and convey information about contact and pressure, the slow fibers are connected to the insular cortex deep inside the brain and convey the emotional context of the touching. Both sets of fibers fire together, and the brain combines information about physical contact with information about emotional context, melding them together into the richness of physical experience.

A crucial reason nature may have endowed people with two different sets of nerves is that the slow fibers function from the earliest hours of life, perhaps even in the womb, while the fast fibers develop slowly after birth. Wondrously, newborn infants may be able to feel the love in a parent's touch before they can feel the touch itself.

Referring to studies showing that babies need physical contact and nurture, the group of scientists from Sweden and Canada who made the discovery wrote, "The profound importance of such a system for human well-being has long been suspected, at least since the classical study of baby monkeys who show affection for a surrogate mother in response to tactile comfort."

The nerve system continues to function throughout life, underscoring the continuing importance of such comfort. While the thicker nerve fibers that communicate contact information are more densely packed into areas like the palm, the thinner nerves are found on hairy areas of the skin, like the forearm.

As need grows, support group forms

By Sandy Miller Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS - There are many kinds of families. One variety that's growing is people raising other people's children.

According to the 2000 U.S. Census, 4.5 million, or 6.3 percent of the country's children under 18, live in grandparent-headed households, and one-third of them have no parents present in the households.

Millions of grandparents and others across the country have suddenly found themselves parents again. They've stepped in to bridge the gap and rescue children from faltering families, drugs, abuse and violent crime. Their stress as repeat parents is quite different from the routine kinds of stress usually associated with raising kids, said Page Geske, public relations specialist for the local Office on Aging and Adult Services.

"They're older, and a lot of them haven't planned financially for raising more children," Geske said. "They thought they were going to retire, and then they find themselves in the middle of parenting again. They planned to be able to support two people but not four."

Second-time parents have lots of questions, and the Office on Aging and Adult Services will begin offering a weekly support group in August to help answer some of those questions. "They don't know where there are resources out there to help them with legal, medical and financial issues," Geske said. Geske said the weekly groups will feature guest speakers.

Grasshoppers abound in the Magic Valley

Lincoln County takes biggest hit; Twin Falls, Cassia suffer somewhat

By Nate Johnson Times-News writer

ALMO - At each step dozens of grasshoppers erupted from around Clark Ward's feet as he walked through his ravaged barley field.

"We was afraid if we fell down they might eat us," Ward said. When Ward saw the large numbers of young grasshoppers this spring, he commissioned a crop duster to spray insecticide. Then he sprayed again, using his tractor. Then he set out poison bait. The grasshoppers only multiplied. "I think all it did was fertilize them," Ward said.

There are a few isolated but

In a few square inches of Clark Ward's barley field, 11 grasshoppers were spotted. The grasshoppers stayed close to the ground as the first raindrops of a thunderstorm pelted down. Grasshoppers have eaten through the grain stems.

dense grasshopper swarms, like the one on Ward's land in southern Cassia County, and several minor swarms in Twin Falls County. Lincoln County suffers from more widespread infestations, officials say.

Sections of road in Lincoln County have turned yellow with thousands of spayed legs, the center lines obscured by squashed thoraxes, said Lincoln County Extension Educator Ron Thiemert.

"In the northern and eastern parts of Lincoln County they are very bad," Thiemert said.

Thiemert has distributed eight tons of poison bait to farmers, but the grasshoppers just keep coming, he said.

In Twin Falls County the problem is not as severe, University of Idaho Extension Educator Steve Salisbury said. He has distributed 750 pounds of bait. But he worries the problem will intensify as the summer continues.

While Cassia County has not suffered the extensive infestations of Lincoln County, a few isolated populations of grasshoppers are booming. The windrows, rows of drying hay waiting to be baled, were alive with little bodies when Steve Ward, who lives next door to Clark Ward, went to bale hay. There were hundreds of grasshoppers in a square yard, he said.

"The whole top of the windrow

'I said to myself, "This is it,"' rescued miner recalls

Nine men swam, prayed, snuggled during their ordeal

New York Daily News

The cold water was rising, and Blaine Mayhugh felt his hope slipping away.

When he'd left for work at the Quecreek Mine that day, the 31-year-old miner had forgotten to tie his wife, Leslie, goodbye. Now, crouching in a muddy 4-foot-high chamber some 240 feet belowground with eight other men, Mayhugh wondered if he would see Leslie or their two children again.

"I asked the boss if he had a pen, and he said, 'What for?' and

The Associated Press

SOMERSET, Pa. - Nine miners pulled from a flooded 4-foot-high mine shaft after three days underground suffered some symptoms of hypothermia, but given their ordeal, their lack of significant health problems was remarkable, doctors said Sunday.

"If you were to meet any of these guys on the street right now, you would not know that they were trapped in a cavern full of water for three days," said Dr. Russell Dumire, a trauma surgeon at Conemaugh Memorial Medical

Who was trapped
 The nine trapped miners in the order that they were pulled from the shaft:

- Randy Fogle, 43, of Garrett. Has a wife and three children, according to a cousin.
- Harry B. Mayhugh. Foy's son-in-law, in his late 20s, married with two children, according to the family baby sitter and newspaper reporter.
- Thomas Foy, 51. Leader of the trapped crew, according to his sister, Neva Glessner, of Garrett.
- John Unger, 52, of Hollisport. His mother, Mary Unger, said he owns a horse and raises cattle on the family farm when he isn't working in a mine.
- John Phillip, of Gray. Has a young son "who idolizes everything his father does" and a wife who works at the local post office, according to neighbor Lori Sunquist.
- Ronald Hillman, of Gray. An avid hunter. His wife runs the Hilman day care center in Gray, neighbors said.
- Dennis Hall, 49, of Johnstown.
- Robert Pugh, 50, of Boswell.
- Mark Popemack, 41, of Somers. Has a wife and two children, according to cousin Randy Popemack.

warm air was probably lifesaving for these individuals," Dumire said. The miners also huddled together for warmth.

As crews drilled a shaft to save the men trapped 240 feet underground, all types of emergency equipment and personnel had been dispatched to the scene, including ambulances and 18 helicopters, in case some of them had problems. And there were nine decompression chambers, which were not needed at the time.

Administration officials promote condition of economy

The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — The Bush administration sent its economic team to the television networks Sunday to make a case for the economy's good health and the soundness of its policies.

Treasury Secretary Paul O'Neill and White House National Economic Council Director Lawrence Lindsey appeared on the ABC, CBS, NBC and Fox networks to say the economy is fundamentally strong, despite the volatility of the stock market.

O'Neill and Lindsey also defended President Bush's 10-year, $1.35 trillion tax cut against criticism that it has helped reduce the federal government to deficit spending.

They made it clear that they oppose one of the most contentious corporate governance proposals still on the table in Washington: a plan to force companies to cut as expenses the large number of stock options issued to executives and employees.

Hoppers

The Washington Post

The administration's efforts Sunday illustrated the perilous line the White House is walking as farm states that have long been a weak link pull down the rest of the economy. Administration officials hope to overcome investor pessimism and voter gloom by promoting continued economic growth, stable job and increasing wages, three positive points that O'Neill referred to as CBS TV's "Face the Nation" as "a sea of good news."

The grasshoppers chewed through the stems of 35 acres of barley, letting the heads fall to the ground. Now Clark Ward is considering baling the barley to save what he has. But he worries that if he cuts the barley, the grasshoppers will move into his alfalfa.

The Wards live next to Bureau of Land Management land. The BLM has a list of the state's applicable laws for assistance in controlling grasshoppers to the Animal Plant Health Inspection Service. The inspection service has spent about $1,000 this year fighting grasshoppers in Cassia County but not on land near the Wards' properties, said Dave McNeal, state plant health director for the Animal Plant Health Inspection Service. Protection and Quarantine Division.

Bound by regulations, the inspection service can only use solid black Carbaryl bait to kill the grasshoppers. Because the Wards live in an environmentally sensitive area, the BLM did not authorize use of that bait.

It's still too early for farmers to estimate the damages caused by grasshoppers, Dumire said. At this point it's hard to estimate how much the farmers will be able to salvage. In Lincoln County, it's difficult to determine how much of the damage was caused by grasshoppers or how much was caused by lack of water.

Though Steve and Clark Ward agree it is too early to estimate losses, they both know they will miss the grain consumed by the insects. Last year's drought and a long winter forced Elba and Almo ranchers to buy hay to feed their stock. This year they may have to buy more.

But the grasshoppers can leave as suddenly as they appear. The grasshoppers disappeared from the Black ranch in Almo about a week ago, Sharon Black said.

Gutsy grandma

Fern Warren has never raised a child, but she couldn't handle the former jockey raised three children on her own, at one time working two full-time jobs and three part-time jobs to do it. And when her last child left the nest 12 years ago, she cut down to zero and enjoyed her newly found free time restoring old cars and raising thoroughbred horses.

She married her husband, Billy, eight years ago. They both worked for Henningsen's Cold Storage and enjoyed the solitude of an empty nest.

Then a year ago, family problems led 15-year-old grandson Terri to find herself flunking school and stuck in a revolving door at juvenile detention.

Fern knew her granddaughter was headed for trouble and decided to take her under her protective wing.

"She needed love," Fern said. "She needed someone to care for her and know she was there."

There was an adjustment period for both grandmother and granddaughter.

"It was hard at first, because I missed my mom and dad," Terri said. "But now I love it here. I'm very happy."

Today, the former failing student brings home A's and B's on report cards and is showing a budding talent for fashion design.

When an attorney told Warren it would cost $800 to $1,500 to get custody of Terri, she turned to the Internet. With help from the information highway and a neighbor who had recently gotten custody of her own granddaughter, Warren found all the necessary legal documents. She had them notarized and took them to court, where she was awarded full custody of Terri last month.

Warren said when it comes to parenting advice, she thinks back to something she learned during her jockey days: "One trainer told me to ride this way, and another trainer told me to ride another way. I look little bit from each of them, put it all together and did it my way."

But even a strong woman like

House full of laughter

Court Peterson said the biggest problem she has run into since taking in a 17-year-old stepson from a former marriage and a 17-year-old cousin is that she's running out of freezer space.

Add three children of her own and all their friends, and that adds up to a lot of groceries.

"There's always six to eight kids in the house," Peterson said.

Peterson said she never could turn away a child in need. And she wouldn't have it any other way.

"If a kid has a problem, they know they can always stay with me," Peterson said. "I've helped a lot of kids when they were in between places to stay. I had four here last summer who stayed until they could save $200 more than they could save $100 more when Chelsea, 10, had no problem when 17-year-old cousin Charity and 17-year-old Steve, a stepson from a former marriage, moved in. It might be a little crowded at times, but there's a lot of laughter inside the house.

"They all get along really good," Peterson said. "They actually enjoy having them here."

Life is a juggling routine for the divorced mother of three and surrogate mother to any kid who needs one. She works an early shift at Albertson's so she can be home with the kids in the afternoon.

"In home when they get home from school," Peterson said. "I know where my kids are."

Her days are definitely full.

"I'm the only person in the house with a driver's license (daughter Kasia recently moved to New Orleans)," she said. "There are days when I get stretched pretty thin."

But the kids help out.

"We delegate duties," Peterson said. "Everyone has chores."

And now that Steve has earned his GED and is working, he's paying rent. But knowing he has a place of saving to do in order to get his own place, Peterson only charges him $50 a month.

But Peterson gives her young boarders a lot more than just a roof over their heads.

"I can give them stability and a place they can feel safe," Peterson said. "I'm all I think these kids are looking for."

Peterson said her son Kamp, 16, and her daughters, Kasia, 20, and Chelsea, 10, had no problem when 17-year-old cousin Charity and 17-

With fire shift, officials order evacuation of Oregon resort

SISTERS, Ore. (AP) - Firefighters ordered the evacuation of the 4,000-5,000 people in the Black Butte Ranch resort and subdivision west of here Sunday after stiff winds fanned the Cache Mountain Fire.

Initially the order was to evacuate only the Golf Homes section of the combination resort-residential subdivision, but Lisa Clark of the Central Oregon Interagency Dispatch Center said orders to evacuate everything quickly followed.

The winds were causing spot fires in and around the ranch.

The lightning-caused fire broke out on Wednesday and had burned about 3,300 acres by mid-Sunday.

There were reports of one home burned in the complex, which is made up of a lodge, about 1,300 homes and two golf courses. Not all of the residences are occupied year-round.

Black Butte general manager Loy Helmley said the evacuation was "very orderly."

"It's going to be a few days" before residents can return, he predicted.

The Red Cross was setting up evacuation centers in Bend.

Transportation officials closed Highway 20 between Santiam Junction and west of Sisters.

"Between 2 o'clock and 3 o'clock the smoke went from white to billowing and black," said Black Butte resident Jill Click. The evacuation order came at around 4 p.m. "It seemed to happen very quickly. Many folks were caught by surprise," said Bonnie Lippitt of the Northwest Interagency Coordination Center. She said 20-25 mph winds blew the fire into the northwest corner of the development.

Camp Caldera, a summer art camp a mile northwest of the fire, was not threatened. The fire was moving away from the camp and its 40 campers.

Meanwhile a sprawling wildfire near the Columbia River port town of The Dalles singed another 3,000 acres overnight and burned to within inches of some buildings but had not destroyed any homes by Sunday.

Crews had the Sheldon Ridge fire about 55 percent contained. Residents of 250 homes have been urged to evacuate since the lightning-started fire flared Thursday.

Stiff winds whistling through the Columbia River Gorge pushed the fire toward tight-tension Bonneville Power Administration electrical wires overnight, Foster said.

The third miner emerges - in the rescue cage - from the Quecreek mine as workers on Sunday began pulling nine miners one by one from the water, 240-foot-deep shaft, where they had been trapped for three days.

Miners

I said, 'I want to write my wife and kids, you know, to tell them that I love them,'" he said.

On a scrap of cardboard from a box, he scrawled a message to his family that he prayed they would never read.

The others followed, pouring out their hearts with the ink from a single pen passed around the cramped tunnel.

Gently, they placed the notes in a lunchbox, closed it and tethered it. If they didn't make it out, at least their loved ones would know their final thoughts were with them.

Sunday, Mayhugh and his comrades were back with their families after being rescued from the belly of the Earth, ending a hellish 77-hour ordeal.

The gritty band of nine shared their tale of survival and solidarity - from its terrifying beginning to its miraculous finish.

No way out

It began 9 p.m. Wednesday as Mark Popernack, 41, accidentally drilled into an adjacent abandoned mine, and "all of a sudden, water started coming down real fast and real heavy," he told the Daily News.

As 60 million gallons poured into the shaft, a cannon of water roared through at 60 mph, and the miners couldn't outrace it. "The scary part was watching the water rise, knowing that you don't have a way out," said Dennis Hall, 43.

One of the nine miners was separated from the group in the initial chaos, but the others stuck together - frantically hammering away at rock to knock down a wall.

They smelled toxic fumes and gasped for air. And the water just kept coming - until it was over their heads and their desperate escape effort gave way to despair.

"This is it," Mayhugh said to himself. "I didn't think I was going to see my wife or kids again."

Crew chief Randy Fogle, 43, rallied his men.

"The No. 1 entry is higher, so let's go there and give that a shot," he said.

Thomas Foy, 52, tied everyone together. "We made a pact that we would either all get out alive or we would all die in the mine," Ronald Hileman, 49, told a relative.

The men found their way to higher ground - a snail compartment, 50 by 20 feet. That's when they saw the helmet light of the ninth man, on a ledge 100 feet across the water.

"We kept in communication with him, we yelled back and forth. You could see him over there, but the noise was so intense with the raging water, you couldn't hear him," John Phillippi, 36, told The News.

It was pitch black, cold and damp in the space.

The miners didn't know how much air was left or when waters would rise again.

Signs of help

The first moment of promise came at 2 a.m. Thursday when they heard the rumble of rescuers boring a 6-inch-wide air hole.

When the drill broke through and the workers above tapped three times on the pipe, the miners tapped back seven times so there was no mistake of it being an echo.

"When we heard the drilling, we knew they were coming. We just didn't know how long we would be able to hang in there," Popernack said.

"We knew what was going on on the surface because most of us miners know that when a brother is in trouble, the others will do everything to help him."

Later Thursday, the water receded enough for the group of eight to send a battery-operated tractor to where the ninth was stranded and bring him over.

The reunited nine tried to barricade themselves with concrete blocks, building four 5-foot-high walls, "but we couldn't stop the water," Phillippi said.

As the hours passed, the men tried to keep warm, huddling around the hole where life-saving 100-degree air was pumped in; smuggling against each other under a nylon sheet.

They used one flashlight at a time, keeping it on for 10 hours a day and spending the rest of the time in total darkness.

Unable to stand, they crouched, or sat on the wet ground, occasionally lying down to rest, their aching, soot-caked bodies.

"We'd all been soaked from day one. There was no way to dry out," Phillippi said.

They banged on the ceiling and shared their thoughts.

"Anything imaginable - about your family, the last thing you said to your family before you left for work that day," Mayhugh said.

They tried to stay positive, and the vibrations of a giant drill that began digging an escape shaft at 6 p.m. Thursday buoyed their mood.

Victims criticize pope's comments on abuse

TORONTO (AP) - Advocates for victims of sexually abusive priests complained that Pope John Paul II's first public comments Sunday on the clerical misconduct crisis seemed to express more sympathy for clergy than Roman Catholics who were molested.

Janet Patterson of Conway Springs, Kan., said the pope should have encouraged those gathered for World Youth Day to embrace victims as "brothers and sisters in Christ." She blames the 1999 suicide of her 29-year-old son, Eric, on abuse by their parish priest when he was 12.

"I'd like to see a lot more attention put on prior victims who are still struggling through life, never having the chance to live the kind of life they should," she said in a phone interview.

In the Mass before an estimated 800,000 people, the pope said the crisis had caused "a deep sense of sadness and shame." He acknowledged some priests had victimized children, but said most clergymen wish to "serve and do good" and he urged young Catholics to support them, drawing cheers and applause.

The scandal erupted in January in the Boston Archdiocese, when Cardinal Bernard Law acknowledged allowing a pedophile priest to remain in parish work. The crisis has since spread throughout the United States and beyond, prompting widespread demand for reform within the church.

About 300 of the 46,000 priests in the United States have been taken off duty this year because of sex abuse allegations.

Law, in brief remarks to the media after the Mass, defended how he has handled the abuse problem, saying his archdiocese has taken significant steps to improve its response. "If you all would look at that, I think you would see that," the cardinal said.

Speaking from her home in Newton, Mass., Paula Ford said she was pleased the pope had acknowledged the scandal, but said she felt he missed a key chance to provide guidance to young Catholics.

Clinton: Bush ignores GOP role in scandals

WASHINGTON (AP) - Former President Clinton says the bill market of the 1990s bred corporate corruption but 100 times have been laid blame on his predecessor "twists the truth."

"There was corporate malfeasance both before he took office and after," Clinton told a Washington television reporter. "The difference is I actually tried to do something about it, and their party stopped it" in Congress.

"And one of the people who stopped our attempt to stop Enron accounting (Harvey Pitt) was made chairman of the Securities and Exchange Commission," Clinton said. "That is a fact; an indisputable fact."

Clinton said he began warning in 1998 about a gathering problem with corporate accounting practices, and when his SEC tried to stop the Enron accounting practice of accountants being the consultants, the other party stopped us. And their main lobbyist was Harvey Pitt.

Heiner Diaz was thrown from the vehicle, while Nery Diaz was crushed inside.

Another 15-year-old was injured in the crash, but ISP did not release the youth's name.

That passenger and Garcia-Alvarado were flown to St. Alphonsus Regional Medical Center.

WATER MANAGEMENT

Council wades into pool proposal

By Robert Mayer
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — It's a marriage that aims to please the Twin Falls swimming community — providing year-round swimming opportunities while lessening the financial hemorrhage to the city's coffers.

The city of Twin Falls and the Magic Valley YMCA are proposing to join forces by having the nonprofit organization manage the city's pool.

"If we want to have a year-round facility for community use and limit the cost, we think there's a better chance with the Y managing the pool than with us managing the pool," City Manager Tom Courtney said.

The proposal will be placed before the Twin Falls City Council at today's meeting at 5 p.m.

While the YMCA would manage the city pool, the city would still own the pool, provide maintenance and provide major capital investments.

Operating a swimming pool is generally a losing proposition for municipalities. But the city's attempts to offer it during the winter — with the help of a $225,000 dome over the pool — has caused the red ink to flow even deeper.

Subsidizing the pool under the YMCA arrangement would still cost the city around $140,000 per year, more than the $100,000 it originally agreed to. Yet, Courtney is quick to point out, it's much less than the $220,000 hit to the city if it continued running the year-round operation on its own.

"I don't know if we'll ever get it close to $100,000," Courtney said, adding that increases in utilities and other overhead factors make that an increasingly difficult goal to achieve.

For the rest of the year, officials will be closely monitoring the money, ensuring that the plan is, indeed, a prudent financial decision, he said.

The two pools would be designated for different purposes. The city pool would be used as a general family swimming area, whereas the Y's pool would be used for lap swimming and competitions.

But will the 25-yard YMCA pool be long enough for racing? Granted, it's shorter than the city's 50-meter pool, YMCA Director John Eschenburg said, but most competitions don't require more than 25 yards.

"There's nothing to say that a competition can't be held at the city pool. Whatever's necessary can be arranged," he said.

And that's what Eschenburg likes most about this proposal — greater freedom and efficiency to manage the pools, ensuring a successful operation, he said.

The YMCA brings with it decades of recreation and pool management experience, he said.

The changing role of the Y's pool, however, would reduce the need for lifeguards, using them only when necessary. State law only requires a lifeguard when 35 or more adults are in the pool, he said. But swim team practice will probably have lifeguards.

"We will staff it appropriately," he said.

People won't be required to become members of the YMCA to use the city pool. The Y will offer daily rates for each pool. The organization is trying to put together a season pass to be used at the pools. Details on user fees are still being hammered out.

Negotiations between the two entities are moving quickly, and necessarily so, Eschenburg said.

"If we're going to do programming for the fall, it needs to move fast," he said.

Wood River residents will present film

By Karen Bossick
Times-News correspondent

KETCHUM — Don't look for the famed Hollywood letters atop Baldy. But the public is invited to participate in a Hollywood ritual Tuesday evening.

That's when a group of Wood River Valley teen-agers and adults will unveil a new feature-length film filmed primarily in the Sun Valley area. The screening is free but audience members will be asked to fill out questionnaires concerning changes that could improve the final take — just like at a real Hollywood test screening.

The 95-minute film titled "Duende" was designed to give Cathy Reinheimer's acting students some hands-on experience with acting before a camera, script writing, film, lighting

Showing

The film "Duende" will be shown free of charge at 6:45 p.m. Tuesday at the Stage Theatre in Ketchum. A panel discussion will follow. A professor with a PhD in "duende" will also discuss the concept of the word, which means to rise above a tragedy and not become like those who caused the tragedy.

and editing.

"It also gives the kids a tape in case they do seek an acting job so they'll have something that will help them be picked out of 500,000 actors," said Reinheimer, a former New York soap opera actress who now works as a casting director and acting coach in Ketchum.

"The good ones always start at a grassroots level and they always start with their own ideas. Clint Eastwood, Steven Spielberg — they didn't want to be offered a job. They went out and created their own jobs so they could show their work. Some of the casting directors in Los Angeles know about the film and they want to see the kids now."

"Duende" started as a 10-minute short that Sun Valley Film Festival director Wanda Petticlerc promised she would show at her film festival. But when the film festival was postponed indefinitely due to 9-11, the teen-agers decided to expand it.

They went to Hollywood to see behind-the-scenes at Disney. They sat in on some courses at the L.A. Film Institute. And they met with a partner of Kathleen Kennedy and Frank Marshall, who produced Steven Spielberg films.

Then they wrote a script based on the premise that teen-agers are generally open to new ideas and able to embrace differences in people while adults can be jaded.

In the film, the teen-agers are emotionally transformed by a stranger who comes into their rural, Rocky Mountain town, exposing the community's dys-

Hunt Camp mapping begins

JEROME — Mapping out the landscape of the Minidoka Relocation Center that detained American citizens of Japanese ancestry during World War II is beginning at the new national monument.

The Minidoka Internment National Monument — established by President Bill Clinton just before he left office — covers 72 acres of the former internment camp. Monument managers at the National Park Service will hold an archaeological excavation at the site to determine where other buildings once stood.

Of particular interest is locating the foundation of a guard tower, said Jan Harper with the National Park Service in Hagerman.

"It's a symbol to a lot of people of the confinement that went on there. It's just a powerful image of what the camp was like," she said.

People interested in the excavation can stop by, she said.

The Hunt Camp, as it is known locally, originally spread across 33,000 acres and included a working farm, Monument managers at the National Park Service will hold an archaeological excavation at the site to determine where other buildings once stood.

Rev your engines: Minidoka County Fair features lawnmower races

By Sarah Chaney
Times-News writer

RUPERT — Men would be clamoring to mow lawns if their mowers had these engines.

East End Fire Department Fireman Alan Brady said some mowers entered in the lawnmower races at the Minidoka County Fair tonight can reach speeds of up to 65 mph.

The fourth annual event begins at 6 p.m. today in the fairgrounds arena. Cost is $4 or a donation, Brady said. Proceeds from the lawnmower races go to the East End Fire Department, which then disperses the money to families who lose their homes to fire or suffer other catastrophes.

Last year about 37 racers participated in the event before a crowd of 500; organizers are hoping for the same turnout or better tonight. Brady noted, though, that this year the races are on a Monday rather than a Saturday. Last year, some $1,400 was generated at the event.

Stock mowers run on a circled track, but the modified class runs on a straight track right in front of the grandstands. It's much like drag racing with cars, but on lawnmowers, Brady said.

Lawnmowers must have a kill switch attached to the driver; no blades can be on the mower, and a deck must be attached. Souping up the mower varies by owner, but some have put more than $1,000 into their machines.

The lawnmower races kick off the week-long fair festivities in Rupert. To day's events also include 4-H demonstrations from 10 a.m. until noon and 4-H and FFA beef weigh-in from 9 until 10 a.m. Open class entries must be entered from 9 a.m. until 6 p.m. today.

What to expect

An archaeological excavation at the Minidoka Internment National Monument will be under way from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. Friday through Aug. 7.

Visitors should be advised that there are no facilities for drinking water at the site and that the activities under way will be of a research nature.

The site is north of Twin Falls in Cassia County. Signs will be posted directing visitors to the site beginning at the intersection of Interstate 84 and U.S. Highway 93. For more information call the National Park Service in Hagerman at 837-4793.

Kilauea volcanic lava flow slows

VOLCANO, Hawaii (AP) - Despite warnings against the danger of noxious fumes and unstable ground, Kilauea Volcano's fiery lava drew hundreds of spectators again Sunday.
Tourists and residents have made lava gazing their nightly vigil, their flashlights competing with the orange and pink glow of the molten rock.
Kilauea has been erupting for nearly 19 years, but the latest phase is the most dramatic in years. It has caused 3,600 acre forest and brush fire.
Signs warn of danger in the steam cloud created as the lava pours into the sea, in the instability of the hot crust stop lava flowing underground, and in fumes from the lava and burning road asphalt.
People climbed over old lava flows to view the glowing mass and its fiery entry into the Pacific. Late-night visitors have increased in recent days.

"It's the beauty of the earth being born right here," said Michael Matsumoto of Oahu.
Several spectators arrived at the sea entry before dawn Sunday, including residents David Jordan and Steven and Sandra Young.
All described themselves as "lava junkies." Jordan said he came at 1 a.m. and stayed until after dawn to watch the light show.
"We saw Pele at her best," said Cathy Donaldson of Pearl Harbor, who was with her daughter, Hailey, 4. Hawaiian folklore says Pele, goddess of fire, resides in Kilauea.

Poughquag, N.Y., turned back from the heat and fumes, covering their faces with scarves.
"Hopefully, the rest of the family won't be in the obituary," Jenny Haggerty said. "I got quite a little nervous when I saw the lava bubbling up in front of us."
The lava is creating new black-sand beaches along Big Island's southeast shore and extending Volcanoes National Park by several acres each week. The latest massive breakout of lava from Kilauea began on May 12 and reached the ocean last week.

Astronaut, ex-teacher visits Idaho

NAMPA (AP) - Astronaut and former Idaho teacher Barbara Morgan greeted visitors at Nampa's Warhawk Air Museum this weekend.
Making her first Idaho appearance since NASA announced in April she will be aboard a space shuttle mission in 2004, Morgan was met at the museum by more than 200 well-wishers, fans and former students.
Morgan taught at the McColl-Donnely Elementary School from 1975 to 1998.
"The fact that they're here today tells me that we were able to connect all those years ago," Morgan said.

"I have carried them in my heart, and now I know that they have carried me in their hearts as well."
Morgan was joined at Warhawk by Kay Gott Chaffey, a civilian pilot for the Army Air Corps during World War II. Both women appeared in conjunction with the traveling Women in Flight Exhibition on loan from the Smithsonian Institution in Washington, D.C.
Chaffey spoke with museum guests about her experience in the Women Airforce Service Pilots program. Chaffey was born in Nampa and attended the College of Idaho.
"My mom was seared spitless to fly, but she volunteered to be my first passenger," Chaffey said.
Morgan was selected as the backup candidate to Christa McAuliffe for NASA's Teacher in Space Program in 1985. After McAuliffe and the rest of the shuttle crew died in the Challenger explosion in January 1986, Morgan continued to work with NASA.
She said she never considered quitting the program after McAuliffe's death, and that the program's continuation carries a powerful lesson for children about never giving up.

Crowd protests topless ordinance

MOSCOW (AP) — An estimated 200 people turned out Saturday to participate in a rally against a Moscow City ordinance banning topless women. None of the women involved in the carwash were seen at the gathering. That gathering by Muscovites for Equal Rights stems from the ordinance, approved by a 5-1 city council vote earlier this month, that ended the city's policy of allowing women to bare their breasts. "The vote came on the heels of a topless carwash opened by some Moscow roommates who claimed to be in a rally to push a referendum. None of the women involved in the carwash were seen at the gathering. Rally coordinator Garrett Clewley, 31, announced he is backing away from the leadership position. "I have laid the groundwork, but this needs to be run by a woman," he said.

Peg Hamlet, the Moscow city council member who voted against the ordinance, spoke to the crowd. She said the ordinance was a "punch" that pushed the limits of the city's new ordinance. The ordinance limits women to displaying only the cleavage between the breasts. Any violation of the ordinance would be a misdemeanor, punishable by a fine up to $500 or up to six months in jail.

Hospitals stop printing birth records

BOISE (AP) — A change in policy aimed at preventing infant abductions will mean fewer birth announcements in newspapers. St. Luke's Regional Medical Center has adopted the valley's most restrictive prevention policy. The hospital will no longer submit birth announcements to local newspapers. The change went into effect July 1 after the National Center for Missing and Exploited Children warned hospital administrators that information obtained from birth announcements can be used to abduct newborns. Saint Alphonsus Regional Medical Center will continue to notify papers if parents sign a consent form after warning parents of the dangers associated with publishing birth announcements. Since 1983, 216 infants have been abducted in the United States. Since 1989, information obtained from birth announcements was used to abduct at least four newborns. Idaho is one of 10 states where no infant abductions have been reported since 1983. Before July 1, St. Luke's submitted birth information to newspapers if parents signed a consent form. Now the hospital provides parents with the necessary forms, but it is up to the parents to notify newspapers of a child's birth. Judy Jones, administrator for the Center for Women's Services at St. Luke's, said the change might be seen as a scare tactic, but it's not. "We just want to be mindful of a changing world," she said.

Anti-hate group advises Pennsylvania communities

COEUR D'ALENE (AP) — A group acclaimed in northern Idaho as crusaders in the decades-long fight against the white supremacists have taken their expertise on the road to help communities in Pennsylvania.

"It's becoming well-known nationally, what has been accomplished here in Kootenai County and elsewhere in North Idaho," said Norm Gissel, an attorney and member of the Kootenai County Task Force on Human Relations. Gissel, Marshall Mend and Tony Stewart were invited to the state by the Pennsylvania Human Relations Council to shut down Pennsylvania hate groups multiplied in the last decade, from 12 in 1990 to 56 in 1995, said Ann Van Dyke, a civil rights investigator for the commission. The list now is down to 33. "All of us in this field have watched very closely as the Southern Poverty Law Center, working with the Kootenai County task force, shut down the Aryan Nations compound out there," Van Dyke said. "When I heard that the team in Kootenai County was willing to come to Pennsylvania, we were willing; but anxious, we just jumped on it."

Shortstop Ozzie Smith joins baseball’s Hall of Fame

The Associated Press

COOPERSTOWN, N.Y. — Go crazy, folks! The Wizard is in the Hall of Fame.

Fighting back a tear or two, Ozzie Smith joined baseball’s elite Sunday, accepting his position in the pantheon of great stars of yesterday with a wonderful speech that aptly described his storied life.

“This is tough,” Smith, the only former player to be elected this year, said, halting to brush away a tear after his son, Dustin, read the inscription on his plaque. “I’ve faced many challenges in my career, and if I was to rank them by difficulty, this moment in

Osborne Earl Smith — “Ozzie” — “The Wizard” — San Diego, N.L. 1978-1981 — St. Louis, N.L. 1982-1996 — Revolutionized defensive play at shortstop with his acrobatic fielding and artistic turning of double plays. The 13-time Gold Glove winner set six major league fielding records among shortstops, including most assists, double plays and chances accepted. An effective offensive player, he accumulated 2,460 hits and stole 580 bases. Named to 15 All-Star teams. His relentless pursuit of perfection helped lead the Cardinals to three World Series, including a 1982 championship. His congenial personality, consummate professionalism and trademark back flip made “The Wizard” a fan favorite.

Texan claims fourth straight Tour victory

The Washington Post

PARIS — On a perfect Paris day, under a brilliant sun and with the world’s most recognizable boulevard sprinkled with American flags, Lance Armstrong won his fourth consecutive Tour de France on Sunday, so dominating the grueling, three-week cycling race that even the often-critical French media have dubbed him “The Boss.”

Armstrong’s feat was impressive enough on its own, covering the 2,032-mile race through the mountains and flatlands of rural France 7 minutes 17 seconds ahead of his closest rival, Joseba Beloki of Spain. He became the first American to win four Tour trophies (Greg LeMond won three) and moved within one of the all-time record for victories in cycling’s premier event (four riders have won five times).

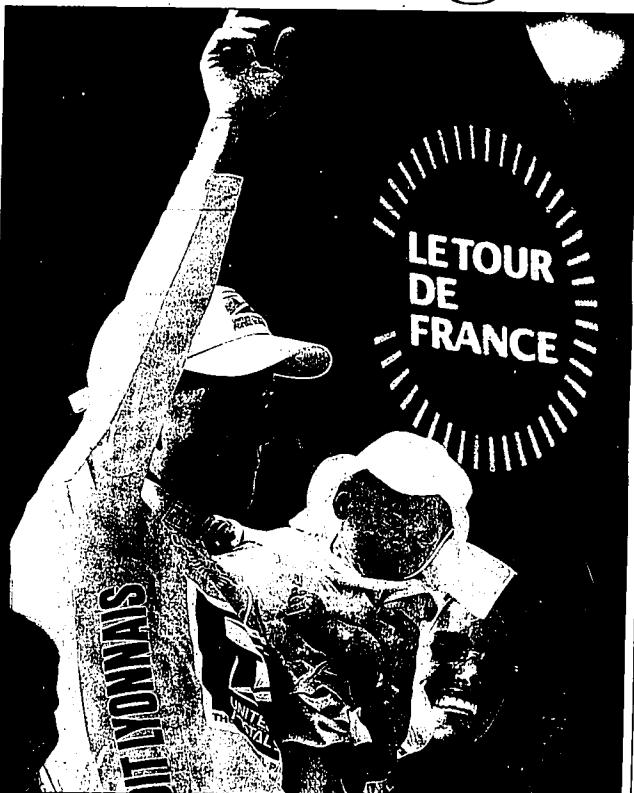

Add to all that the fact that only last year, Armstrong reached an even more difficult goal: being cancer-free for five years. He was treated for testicular cancer that had spread

Elliott breaks record with Pocono victory

The Associated Press

LONG POND, Pa. — Bill Elliott stalked Sterling Marlin throughout the race, finally passed him with 21 laps remaining Sunday and took the crash- and rain-delayed Pennsylvania 500 to set a record with his fifth career victory at Pocono Raceway. “It seems like the guy who was out in front had the advantage,” Elliott said. “I gave it everything I had.”

The win was the first on the mountaintop since 1989 for the 46-year-old driver from Dawsonville, Ga. It also was the 42nd in the career of the 1988 NASCAR champion, who went winless in six years as an owner-driver before selling his team and joining Evernham Motorsports last season.

The race turned into a marathon of 6 hours, 35 minutes. Please see RACING, Page A8

Idaho falls short at national rodeo

The Times-News

FARMINGTON, N.M. — Idaho cowboys and cowgirls finished strong but came up short in the final standings Sunday at the National High School Finals Rodeo at McGee Park in Farmington, N.M.

Raft River High bareback rider Mac Erickson added a final-round 73 to his 68 from Saturday night for a final average of 714. Only Arvada, Colo., cowboy Zach Curran topped Erickson with a 75 in Sunday’s final go after scoring a high of 76 on Saturday morning to capture the bareback national championship.

Curran finished with an average score of 225 as Erickson settled for second overall. Thomas Salario, of LeBlanc, La., took third with a 211.

It was also a bittersweet ending for Hailey’s Ashley Smith in girls cutting. The reigning national champion saw her bid for a second title end as New Mexico’s Shayla Smith scored a 221 Sunday to Ashley Smith’s 218.5. Only 1.5 points separated the two girls in the final tally with Shayla Smith winning 661-659.5.

Blaine County rival Natalia Ferris of Ketchum took 11th overall with her 631 after scoring a 203 in the final performance and Raft River’s Melissa Oman scored a 180 to place 20th overall with 607.5 points.

As a team, Idaho finished with a respectable ninth-place finish with 3,130 points and the Idaho girls team placed fifth with 1,930 points.

Texas won the team title with 7,206.66 points, besting runner-up Utah (6,205) by 1,001.66 points. Wyoming rallied for third with

Park wins LPGA Big Apple Classic in playoff

The Associated Press

NEW ROCHELLE, N.Y. — Gloria Park knows how to win an argument.

The 22-year-old earned her second LPGA Tour victory when she made a 6-foot birdie putt on the first playoff hole Sunday to beat Hee-Won Han and win the LPGA Big Apple Classic.

She got a big hug and an apology from her father after prevailing in her first playoff.

“I had a big fight with my dad last night about my putting stroke. I cried for two hours and couldn’t sleep,” Park said. But in addition to the $142,500 first prize, she also got the apology from Steven Park, who was the one in tears this time.

“He said he was sorry after the last hole,” she said with a big smile.

Park and Han, both natives of South Korea, held off Annika Sorenstam in the final group of the day and finished 72 holes at 14-under 270.

Sorenstam, the leading money-winner on tour who has six victories this year, shot a 1-under 70 and missed the playoff by one stroke.

“I was chasing all day and that isn’t what I want,” Sorenstam said. “That’s the way it goes.”

Park, who started the final round tied for the lead with Sorenstam, shot a 69 Sunday.

While Han, the tour’s rookie of the year in 2001, had a 67. The victory at the 6,161-yard Wykagyl Country Club course was the second for Park, who is in her third year on tour. The win-

The cancer left him scarred, but the chemotherapy reshaped his body into the leaner, more powerful machine that allowed him to not only make an unlikely return to cycling but to overpower his rivals. The crash allowed a Spaniard, Igor Gonzalez Galandano, to take the lead in his yellow jersey. Armstrong wasn't injured, but in a three-week cycling race, any crash is a source of fright. At Sunday's race, on the sun-drenched Place de la Concorde, Armstrong seemed relaxed, even serene about this latest record-making achievement. "It's nice to finish," he said, speaking in French for local journalists. "It's a difficult race, three weeks. It's difficult mentally. It's good to finish. I'm really happy to finish." He paused to pick up a cellular phone and take a telephone call from the White House, where President Bush just to offer congratulations just minutes after the Tour's finale. Bush has named Armstrong to a three-year term on his cancer advisory board. "He's a really good guy," Armstrong said, after speaking for a few minutes with Bush. "He's a Texan. Like me ... KENT, Wash. — Local drag racers Don and Diana Anderson and Nampa's Dick Vander Meer all were eliminated in the early rounds of the Lucas Oil North West Nationals Saturday at Pacific Raceways in Kent, Wash.

Dianna Anderson was the lone winner of the group, taking wins in the first two rounds of Super Street. She raced her 1967 Nova past Leon Elliott's 1968 Camaro in the first round and beat the 1967 Camaro of Brett Waldron in Round 2.

Anderson lost late Saturday in the third round. Anderson's husband, Don, lost his first-round race in Super Gas to Ray Kuhn of Renton, Wash., and Vander Meer, driving a Chevy dragster in the Super Comp class, fell to the nation's fourth-ranked driver Mike Ferderer.

In Top Fuel, Kenny Bernstein saw a track record with a qualifying run of 323.58 mph in 4.58 seconds.

The right-hander is 30 with a 2.41 ERA in 39 appearances this season despite a trip to the DL June with a strained left groin.

SAN FRANCISCO — The San Francisco Giants addressed their desperate needs for outfield depth and speed, acquiring six-time All-Star Kenny Lofton from the Chicago White Sox on Sunday for two minor leaguers.

The Giants sent right-hander Felix Diaz and left-hander Ryan Flaherty to Chicago in exchange for Lofton, who's hitting .259 with eight home runs, 42 RBIs and 22 stolen bases with the White Sox this season. He's sixth in the AL in stolen bases and third in triples.

Lofton will be expected to contribute immediately to a San Francisco outfield that was missing Barry Bonds, Randy Bass and Marvin Benard during a weekend series against Los Angeles because of injuries.

TIPS program would be suspiciously un-American

Deseret News (Salt Lake City)

The Bush administration insists it does not want to set Americans spying on each other.

That, according to Homeland Security chief Tom Ridge, is "not what president is all about." But it's pretty hard to read descriptions of President Bush's proposed Operation TIPS and see it as anything else. TIPS stands for Terrorism Information and Prevention System. It would enlist regular citizens to keep an eye out for suspicious activity and to report it to a toll-free number.

Their view: The government's idea to enlist regular citizens for reporting suspicious activity is suspicious in itself.

What do you think? We welcome viewpoints from our readers on this and other issues.

would take federal investigators years to sift through. After all, many of the credible reports from FBI officials prior to Sept. 11 were ignored in part because they were buried in an unmanageable glut of intelligence.

The second concern has to do with redundancy. The Postal Service, for example, already has a procedure in place for reporting suspicious activity. In addition, the president already has asked Americans to be extra vigilant.

Most importantly, however, the program sounds simply, for lack of a better word, un-American. Many people, both on the right and left of the political spectrum, are correctly concerned about the need to safeguard constitutional freedoms. It is one thing to urge Americans to unite in an effort to resist terrorism. It is quite another to divide them against each other in a program that, despite the administration's explanations, would amount to domestic spying.

A popular song in the 1950s sarcastically intoned, "If mommy is a commie then you've gotta turn her in." To be sure, the nation faces challenges today that exceed those of that era, but the principle is the same. Americans shouldn't spy on each other.

Risk-takers, beware of reforms

DAVID IGNATIUS

Investors seemed positively giddy at the prospect of new laws to prevent corporate fraud Wednesday, bidding up the Dow by 489 points after House and Senate conferees cut a deal.

I wish I could be as sanguine. But I fear that this belated crusade by the nation's only "distinctly native criminal class," as Mark Twain once described Congress, will make investors' problems worse, rather than better. That's because the new rules and regulations will apply Washington's "zero-defect culture" — its tendency to criminalize failure — to corporate America at precisely the wrong time.

Here's the danger: At the very moment corporate managers need to take more risks and be more creative to revive the American economy, they will instead be more uptight. Instead of the "animal spirits" that power economic growth, the cover-your-backside ethic will prevail.

When you clear away the debris of the 1990s, the best thing about that decade was that it encouraged the idea that it was OK to fail. That invitation to take chances created vast wealth — not just for CEOs but for ordinary folks. According to a recent Business Week study, "the biggest winners from the faster productivity growth of the 1990s were workers, not investors."

financial statements is the best guarantee against fraud. But in practice, the requirement will cause severe problems.

Take the several hundred companies that have had to switch auditors in the past few months because of the collapse of the giant accounting firm Arthur Andersen. They have new auditors poring over the books, looking for irregular transactions. Their audit committees are beginning to panic as the date for releasing second-quarter earnings approaches. Someone finds a possible problem that may take weeks to clarify.

What's the CEO supposed to do? He's required to sign a statement that his company has a zero-defect filing with the SEC. If he's wrong, he could go to jail, and the new SEC rule doesn't allow him to say, "We'll get back to you on that one."

Does the CEO restate or qualify past earnings reports to protect himself? Do the investors who own his company's stock take a hit to make sure the CEO stays clean? Stay tuned, because this drama is actually going to play itself out at dozens of big companies over the next few weeks.

Attorneys counsel some of the nation's largest companies say there will be lots of earnings restatements, and perhaps even CEO resignations, driven by the SEC's new rules.

If the new anti-fraud measures make investors feel it's safe to go back in the water, then they've won all the battle. But I have a feeling the only folks who'll really be cheering a few weeks from now will be lawyers, who will have to defend the newly criminalized.

'Stop' bumps at mall were done for safety's sake

This letter is in comment on the "stop" bumps that were recently installed at the Lynwood Shopping Center.

This work was very expensive and was done in response to numerous complaints from merchants, and their customers regarding people speeding through the parking lot — ignoring both the stop signs and the stop signs painted on the ground (even when freshly painted). The many buildings throughout the property create blind spots, and there have been several instances when people, including small children and elderly customers, were almost hit by cars because drivers were not cautious and paying attention.

The stop bumps that were installed a few weeks ago had an abrupt edge because they were not wide enough. They have now been widened and should provide a smoother ride. We certainly apologize for any inconvenience the first installation caused our customers but hope that our efforts to slow down and stop automobiles at critical areas throughout the property will result in keeping customers safe when moving through the parking areas.

GOP-dominated commission isn't doing its job

With little investigation, we are now to believe a Times-News editorial that states if the county had a manager, we would have done the moratorium and jail issues differently.

First, the county has in place all the advisers necessary to assist in any decisions on issues. The county commissioners have the advice of several elected officials — the prosecutor's office with a staff of lawyers as well as the sheriff's department, assessor's office and county clerk, to name a few.

The real problem is the reactive rather than proactive commissioners who need to work with their organizations to solve the problems through good advice, decision-making and public input before getting involved too late in the process.

Secondly, our county form of government has elected officials;

LETTER

a manager form of government would not work without a complete change in elected officials.

Third and foremost, the voters would need to elect this form of government. The last time this issue was before the voters, it was turned down almost 5 to 1. Research suggests that the voters of this county would vote no on a county manager.

If you are going to run for county commissioner, you should feel comfortable with managing a budget of $20 million or $100 million. With the county clerk and treasurer providing information, the budget process is not a monster out of control. I have no problem with budgets and have proposed in my campaign that my first objective would be to complete a three-year proposed budget with five-year planning budget to keep the county from falling into the problems it currently has in cost-of-living increases, failure to plan for grants as they run out, planning ahead for growth and community progress.

The current Republican-dominated commissioners have not done their job. The county needs a change. The county manager is not what is needed but commissioners that are proactive in their community and government.

Working on the issues before they become a problem and providing leadership to Twin Falls County taxpayers.

The time for change is here; you, as voters, can make that change. Nov. 5, I am a candidate who will make changes as a commissioner. I am a community leader, and I can and will make decisions that will move this county forward out of the quagmire that we are currently in.

Give us less 'static'

Say you own a grocery store. You notice that six-packs of a particular soft drink are selling briskly at $2 each, which brings you a modest profit. A friend says you should sell them at $4 — which, he suggests, would double your profit. Would you do it?

Probably not. You don't need an MBA from Wharton to realize that dramatically hiking your price would cause many customers to shop elsewhere.

Sure, you'd be making more money per six-pack, but you wouldn't sell nearly as many. Just common sense, isn't it? So why does Congress act like the store owner's friend every time it votes to raise spending, increase taxes or to assemble a budget?

Indeed, some lawmakers are fighting Congress' act like the store owner's friend every time it votes to raise spending, increase taxes or to assemble a budget? Indeed, some lawmakers are fighting Congress' act like the store owner's friend every time it votes to raise spending, increase taxes or to assemble a budget?

Between 1961 and 1968, tax revenues rose by one-third.

The same thing happened when President Reagan cut taxes in the early 1980s. Many lawmakers predicted financial chaos as a result of the estate (or "death") tax last year. During the period the legislation was being debated, static estimates of how much the repeal would cost jumped from $186 billion to $306 billion between 2002 through 2011.

Alarmed, Congress elected to phase in the repeal slowly, until the tax is gone in 2010 ... and then renege it in 2011 at its original levels.

If experience is any guide, though, death-tax repeal won't "cost" nearly that much. But by the time most lawmakers realize that, another opportunity to boost economic growth will have been missed.

Can you imagine any private business acting this way? Of course not. That's why it's time Congress switched to a "dynamic" business-owners use. "Dynamic" means "changing" — which assumes that if you change the way you do business, customers will react in relatively predictable ways. Before they've liked a price or a product, most companies have a pretty good idea of how many customers they'll gain or lose.

Would "dynamic scoring" always give lawmakers perfect estimates? No, but it surely would get much closer to the true cost than "static scoring" does. If doubts remain, put it to the test: Have Congress produce "static" and "dynamic" scores of various pieces of legislation for a few years and see which prove more accurate.

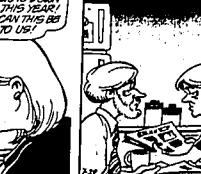

Meanwhile, certain lawmakers are brushing us out permanent. (Like the death-tax repeal, it's gone in 2011. Why? "Static" estimates show it will cost too much. Haven't we been here before?

Targeted assassinations prove useful Bulls, bears and chickens

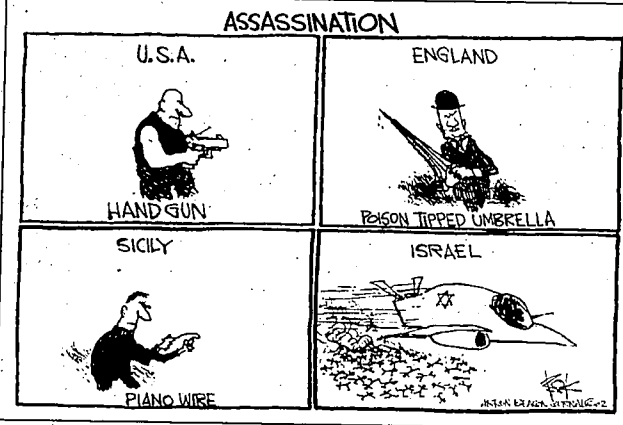

MICHAEL KINSLEY

As of Wednesday morning, the New York Stock Exchange Composite Index was below where it had been five years ago. So were the Dow Jones Industrial Average and what used to be called the "technology-rich" Nasdaq. The markets had a good day Wednesday. Nevertheless, your money would have done better for the past five years if you had hidden it behind the dresser. Of course, investors didn't feel poor five years ago. In July 1997 those three indexes were up by almost half in the previous 12 months. They were far higher than in December 1996, when Alan Greenspan gave his famous warning against "irrational exuberance." Pundits (including this one) were saying stock prices had reached heights that were unsustainable, and then felt foolish as they continued to soar.

Somehow, though, the same place doesn't seem as exuberating on the way down as on the way up. It's like passing through the same airport on your way home from a vacation. And the fact that we were popping champagne and feeling great when we were here the last time is unconsoling for another reason, too: It's a vivid reminder that still may have a long way to go in retracing our steps. There must surely be a statute of limitations on bragging rights about economic predictions, especially predictions about the stock market. I claim no prize for predicting five years ago the imminence of something that finally happened the past few weeks. Almost any prediction about the economy—as with a stopped clock—will be correct eventually. Nevertheless, my rationalization for pessimism five years ago still seems sound. In 1997 the major indexes were up by 40 percent or more during the previous 12 months—the Dow had even broken 8000—while the economy had grown less than 4 percent. In dollar terms, the increase in value of shares on the New York Stock Exchange alone was over $2 trillion, while the increase in goods and services produced by the American economy was about $280 billion. People were trillions of dollars richer, or felt that way, but there were only billions of dollars' worth of additional stuff for them to buy.

The current popular outrage about corporate governance is mostly a justified concern about declining stock prices, and at first it seems misdirected as a political issue. But society—and its proxy, the U.S. government—readily have an effect in promoting many folks a level of financial security it is mathematically impossible to deliver, and the anger as this becomes clear is somewhat justified. Optimists during the bubble-boom years offered variations on three arguments: First, that we were finally starting to enjoy the productivity benefits of the high-tech revolution (i.e., time saved at the office by computer spell-checking finally outweighed time lost by computer failure). Second, that we were enjoying the benefits of general agreement about the crucial importance of a stable monetary policy (i.e., there had been an "end of economics") that made the path of wisdom obvious and therefore easy to follow. Third, and most spectacularly, a few lunatics argued that a statistical error had blinded everyone to the fact that stocks were already worth many times their current value, and the Dow would soar to 30,000 or 36,000 as we figured this out.

Pessimists rejected all these arguments and said that actual production of new stuff could

STEVEN R. DAVID

Israel's killing of Hamas leader Salah Shehadeh—and 14 Palestinian civilians—has provoked a major international outcry. Even President Bush, who usually supports Israeli actions, condemned the airstrike as "heavy-handed." Although the Israelis erred in this instance by launching an attack that killed so many innocents, it would be a mistake to conclude that their policy of targeted killing is wrong. In fact, targeted killing is a moral and appropriate response to the terror launched against Israel by Palestinian leaders.

Targeted killing is the Israeli policy of intentionally killing individuals who are on their way to commit a terrorist attack or those who are behind such attacks. It is not a new policy. Israel has pursued such attacks throughout its history, even at one point attempting to kill Yasser Arafat—a failure that Prime Minister Ariel Sharon has publicly lamented. What is new is the scale of the attacks, which has grown since the launching of the second intifada almost two years ago and the increased use of sophisticated military weapons such as Apache helicopters and F-16 jet fighters in the operations. There is much that is distasteful about targeted killings. They provoke murderous retaliations, burn informers, create martyrs, complicate peace negotiations, divert intelligence resources and promote cooperation among Israel's enemies.

Individuals are killed without due process. Most important, there is no compelling evidence that they are effective in reducing terrorism. A record number of Israeli civilians have become victims of terrorist attacks at the same time that targeted killings have reached their peak. So how can such a policy be justified? Targeted killings make three important contributions to Israeli security. First, by keeping terrorists on the run and gradually eliminating some of the skilled operatives, Israel hopes to eventually reduce the terrorist threat. As bad as things are now, they may have been even worse, or would get worse in the future, without the policy of targeted killing. Second, when targeted killing works, the only one killed is the perpetrator (or backer) of the terrorist act. This is far better than major military sweeps that kill and injure countless innocents. Finally, targeted killing provides a sense of revenge and retribution for the Israeli public, which understandably demands a response to terrorism. No Israeli government could survive without a forceful response. As long as the Palestinian Authority is unwilling or unable to curb those who deliberately seek to kill innocent Israelis and bring these attackers to justice, it is up to Israel to do so. Targeted killing does this, and at a cost that is far less harmful to the Palestinians than its alternatives. Targeted killing will not bring peace to the Middle East. Only a political solution that calls for an independent Palestinian state can do that.

A policy of targeted killing also must carry with it adequate safeguards, including civilian oversight. Targeted killing must focus only on combatants. Political leaders, no matter how odious, must be spared. And targeted killing cannot be carried out forever. It is a policy that makes sense only during war or armed conflict. Once a peace settlement is reached, it must end. For a region going through a horrendous time, targeted killing is the worst possible policy—except for all the others.

Environmental groups hinder forest thinning

HOLLY LIPKKE FRETWELL

A cool, moist air at last reaches the Rocky Mountain West, some of the largest fires in Colorado and Arizona history are finally fading. Remaining fresh in our minds, however, are the bitter debates over the causes of those fires. By environmentalists evaded blame for their protests against critical forest thinning and prescribed burning. It has become widely known that the conflagrations across the West are the result of years of drought, fire suppression, and past logging practices. Reducing fuel through thinning of overly dense forests and prescribed burns is an accepted solution. The Manitou Experimental Forest in Colorado, where these treatments have been practiced for fifty years, shows how effective they can be. When the 137,000-acre Hayman fire in Colorado reached the experimental forest, it swept through grasses and ground cover but spared the large, thick-barked ponderosa pines. Indeed, the Sierra Club, the Wilderness Society, the Center for Biological Diversity, the Southwest Forest Alliance, and other environmental organizations all pay lip service to thinning small-diameter trees and to prescribed burning. So why don't we see more thinning and prescribed burning, particularly in the urban-wildland interface where life and property are at greatest risk?

The fact is that environmental organizations have opposed logging, including restorative thinning, for years. Their opposition has played a deadly role in helping the fuel buildup to reach dangerous levels. And many continue to oppose projects that would reduce fire risk. The Sierra Club and Forest Guardians, among others, have appealed an Arizona project that is desperately needed and supported by a consortium of federal, state, and local organizations known as the Greater Flagstaff Forests Partnership. The intensity of the fires in Arizona and Colorado was just beginning to focus criticism on environmentalists for their resistance to logging when, late in June, the Center for Biological Diversity dropped a bombshell. It reported that the General Accounting Office (GAO) had reported on environmentalists from responsibility. As reported by the center and picked up by regional newspapers, the GAO had found that only 20 out of 1671 "hazardous fuels reductions projects" that is, fewer than one percent—had been slowed by appeals. What the report did not mention—and environmental groups failed to point out—was that each of these projects had already been through the process of environmental assessment and appeals before the GAO had begun its examination. These projects were already approved, ready to go, and waiting for funding. One would expect none, or at least very few, of these projects to be appealed at that point—many of them had likely been appealed already. The GAO did not consider whether any of these projects had faced earlier litigation. Superficially, this looked like vindication for environmental activists, and numerous environmental organizations flaunted the one per cent figure—among them the Center for Biological Diversity, Natural Resources Defense Council, Sierra Club, and Wilderness Society. Newspapers quoted it as well. Yet the author of the report, Barry T. Hill, GAO director of natural resources and environment, plainly says, "The numbers are being misrepresented." Even as they drape themselves in this "exonerated," many environmental groups are using the appeals process to delay projects that would reduce fuel buildup. The latest information from the Forest Service is that 48 percent of the forest thinning projects proposed over the last 18 months were appealed. In April, a salvage sale to remove Engelmann spruce killed by beetle infestation was held up in Utah's Piute-Juab National Forest. Also this year, ecosystem restoration was appealed on the Ochiltia National Forest in Arkansas. Such appeals continue a long history of resistance. In the mid-1990s, environmentalists protested thinning a stand of trees in the Coconino National Forest in Arizona because it was near the nest of an endangered goshawk. In 1996, the trees—and the goshawk nest—went up in flames. In fact, the 1996 fires, plus reduced Forest Service timber sales due to protests, led to the formation of the Greater Flagstaff Forests Partnership, which is still struggling to get its restoration effort going due to environmentalist opposition. Environmentalists may have scrambled to safety this time, thanks to the widespread misinterpretation of the GAO report. But fires will continue to burn unless the environmental opponents change their actions, not just their rhetoric.

Daughter resents control by dad

DEAR ABBY: I am a 34-year-old woman who recently started dating a 40-year-old man. I'll call Vince. We get along great and like each other very much.

THE PROBLEM is my 83-year-old father. When Mom passed away last year, I was chosen to move back home to look after him.

IF THIS CONTINUES, it will ruin a potential relationship before it has a chance to develop.

— UNDER HOUSE ARREST IN NEW JERSEY

DEAR UNDER HOUSE ARREST: Your father is well aware that you are not a child.

I DON'T KNOW his mental status, but it appears he does not want to lose a companion and housekeeper he can control.

I DON'T KNOW who chose you to be your father's primary caregiver, but unless you put your foot down now, you will be taking orders from everyone until your father dies.

WORK OUT a reasonable schedule with your father or a caretaking service so that you have enough private time for a life of your own.

DEAR ABBY: A co-worker sent me an invitation to a party celebrating her son's graduation from college.

THE PARTY fell on a day I work, so I didn't even consider attending.

I HAVE NEVER met the young man and have no social relationship with his mother.

HERE'S THE clincher: I received a thank-you note written in my co-worker's handwriting!

— PERPLEXED IN PENNSYLVANIA

DEAR PERPLEXED: It's sad, really, because it shows the extent to which your co-worker has failed as a parent.

THE MAN'S mother appears to be in complete control of her son's social life.

DEAR ABBY: "Going Coconuts" complained that she and her fiancée are having a Hawaiian-themed wedding.

I DISAGREE. Her future in-laws may have been only trying to extend the theme of the wedding.

COCONUTS needs to remember that you don't marry just the man.

I THINK you — and "Coconuts" — took it the wrong way.

Afghan orphans receive weekly visits - and gifts - from U.S. soldiers

CHARIKAR, Afghanistan (AP) — The 30 children sat patiently on the floor, but their wide eyes showed their curiosity as U.S. soldiers carried boxes of supplies into the crumbling, mud brick room.

THE BOYS and girls at Rosantun Orphanage look forward to this weekly visit, knowing the soldiers will bring much needed food and school supplies.

"Today, we brought you some toys sent from America," said Maj. Bryan Cole, who has been leading the orphanage visits for the last month.

SOLDIERS moved through the rows of eager children, handing out dolls, balls, a Frisbee and a box of Disney stickers.

NAZI, 7, a purple-print scarf over her head, shyly took a small stuffed bear dressed as a joker.

SHE HAS made many friends in the past month at the orphanage and she enjoys the lessons.

"After I leave here, I will go to university," she said quietly during the Saturday visit.

Children at the Rosantun Orphanage reach out with open hands as a visiting U.S. soldier hands out candies Saturday in the village of Charikar, 16 miles north of the country's capital of Kabul.

SOME LOST only their fathers, and their mothers brought them here to be cared for and educated.

THE CHILDREN, some as young as 5, stay until they are 12 and then most go to orphanages in Kabul, Qaimi said.

ALTHOUGH most soldiers at nearby Bagram, the main U.S. base in Afghanistan, are focused on pursuing Taliban and al-Qaida renegades, Cole and other members of his civil affairs battalion work to foster warmth and social cohesion in a long-suffering country.

COLE pulled bags of markers and pens from one box, donated by a Girl Scout troop in Lexington, Ky.

THE CHILDREN, some as young as 5, stay until they are 12 and then most go to orphanages in Kabul, Qaimi said.

Officials resign, jailed after crash

LIVIV, Ukraine — Hundreds of fearful relatives waited anxiously outside an overcrowded morgue Sunday while forensic officials tried to identify the mangled remains of victims of a Ukrainian military jet crash that killed at least 83 people on an air show.

A SU-27 fighter jet was performing risky aerobatic maneuvers at Sknyliv air base in the city of Lviv when it nicked the ground and sliced through a crowd of hundreds of spectators before exploding in a huge ball of fire.

ON SUNDAY, Defense Minister Vladimir Shkidenko submitted his resignation, which was being considered by President Leonid Kuchma, the Defense Ministry's press service said.

Wall Street's crack job

Wall Street is in trouble. This is your fault.
Yes, I am talking to you, Mr. or Ms. Small Investor. Wall Street is getting sick and tired of your namby-pamby "wait and see" attitude toward the stock market. Wall Street wants you to show some courage and resume handing your money over to Wall Street, the way you did back in the excellent 1990s, when we had a New Economy, and leading Wall Street analysts were touting all these amazing new companies that were in the exciting new business of ... OK, nobody really knew what exact business they were in, but it was new.

Back then, the message from Wall Street, as expressed in TV commercials for brokerage firms, was that if you gave them your money, in three or four weeks you would reap gigantic profits, then retire to a lifestyle in which the hardest work you had to do was think of names for your polo ponies.

Unfortunately, things did not

work out that way. It turned out that we did not have a New Economy, and that leading Wall Street stock analysts were, to put it charitably, smoking crack. It turned out that you would have been better off making an investment standpoint, if you had fed your retirement nest egg, a quarter at a time, into a Skee-Ball machine. So, OK, Wall Street made a mistake. We all make mistakes! But now Wall Street is graciously willing to let bygones be bygones, and would very much like to win back your investor confidence, in the form of money. Your major brokerage firms, in an effort to show they have "turned over a new leaf," have taken the extreme step of running a new type of commercial, wherein Wall Street professionals show sincere concern for small investors by actually talking directly to them, answering their questions, stroking their hair, etc. The message of the Wall Street ad is: "You can trust us now, because we are no longer flagrantly lying to you!"

Nevertheless, you small investors remain skittish. One reason is these darned accounting scandals. I don't know about you, but I always thought of accountants as being serious, suit-wearing people whose idea of a wild party was to crack open a bottle of Snapple and recalculate their tax returns. And here it turns out that accounting is a wild and crazy profession. It is the Las Vegas of professions!

They are nuts, those accountants! First, they declared that Enron was a legitimate corporation, when in fact it had basically the same business plan as a guy sticking up a 7-11. And then they threw up WorldCom. Here is the first sentence of the Washington Post story on the day the scandal broke: "WorldCom Inc. said recently it had improperly accounted for $3.8 billion in expenses and would restate its financial results for the last five quarters."

Yes! Nearly 4 billion dollars! This is an incredible feat of improper accounting, on a par with some of the finest work of the federal government. The WorldCom accounting department must have swayed day and night to improperly account for that much money in such a short time. I've been filing expense reports to The Miami Herald for 20 years, and I bet I haven't improperly accounted for half that amount.

And then there was this unfortunate situation with Martha Stewart, who is in hot water (literal, with a slice of lemon) because she allegedly may have benefited from insider trading. This is a great tragedy, and although many of us may have poked fun at her in the past, now, seeing her in this mess, we are lying face-down on the floor in a puddle of foul five feet in diameter.

But the point is, Wall Street is in trouble, and things are not going to get better until you, the small investor, stop selfishly thinking about yourself all the time. Wall Street needs your money now! That crack stuff is not cheap.

Halitosis: How to get rid of bad breath for good

By Steve Crump
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS - If they weren't already in your mouth, you wouldn't dream of putting them there.

Fact is, you're cultivating a zoo of microbial ne'-do-wells in the damp, nutrient-rich neighborhood between your lips and your pharynx, and some of them you wouldn't want to hang around.

Neither do the rest of us. Not to put too fine a point on it, but they smell bad. Which is why we're keeping our distance.

"Bad breath is very common, but not everybody has it," said Mark Wright, a Twin Falls dentist. "Yes, you can get halitosis from eating garlic, but often it's a symptom of other problems."

"To understand why you put out affects the air you exhale, first you have to understand the biomechanics of bad breath. Once food is adsorbed into the bloodstream, it's transferred to the lungs and expelled. Brushing, flossing and mouthwash will only mask the odor temporarily. Odor continues until your body eliminates the food."

If you don't brush and floss daily, your mouth becomes a noxious Petrie dish. Particles of food remain there, collecting bacteria that can cause bad breath. Food that sticks between the teeth, on the tongue and around the gums can rot, leaving a foul odor.

The reason may put you off breakfast: Gram-negative bacteria, the brand that thrives under the gums, on the surface of the tongue and in the nooks and crannies of your mouth, cause the formation of volatile sulfur compounds in the form of hydrogen sulfides. That's the rotten-egg odor that your junior high school chemistry teacher whipped up and caused all the students to flee the classroom.

The same bacteria promote periodontal, or gum, disease—the principal reason that folks who live in modern, well-fed societies lose their teeth.

Periodontal disease is caused by plaque, a sticky, colorless film of bacteria that constantly forms on teeth. The bacteria create toxins that irritate the gums. In the advanced stage of the disease, the gums, bone and other

Let saliva flow

Dry mouth equals bad breath. Here's how to help your salivary glands do their job:

- 1 Drink plenty of water to provide the fluids your body needs to keep your mouth moist.
- 2 Rinse your mouth before bedtime to moisten oral tissues before you go to sleep.
- 3 Stop smoking or chewing tobacco. Smoking dries the membranes of your mouth, alters its pH balance and interferes with saliva flow.
- 4 Avoid alcoholic beverages.
- 5 Eat foods such as carrots, celery and other items that require lots of chewing; promotes flow of saliva.
- 6 Chew sugar-free gum.
- 7 Avoid sleeping flat on your back or your abdomen. It can block the flow of saliva to your stomach and promote acid reflux in your esophagus. Use a pillow to elevate your head and shoulders so gravity and saliva can work together.

structures that support the teeth become damaged.

"With chronic halitosis, periodontal disease is the biggest culprit," Wright said. "The biggest, perhaps, but not the only cause among the 40 million Americans for whom halitosis is a chronic problem. Bad breath is also caused by dry mouth—a condition called xerostomia—which happens when, for one reason or another, your salivary glands aren't working right. Saliva is necessary to clean the mouth and remove particles that cause odor."

"The bad breath you have when you first wake up in the morning is caused by dry mouth," Wright said. "Dry mouth can be blamed on various prescription drugs, salivary gland problems or continuously breathing through the mouth. There are also several disease processes that can result in chronic bad breath," said Gary Dixon, another Twin Falls dentist.

Bad breath may be a signal of a local infection in the respiratory tract (nose, throat, windpipe, lungs), chronic sinusitis, diabetes, gastrointestinal disturbance, liver or kidney disease.

And it will surprise you not at all to learn that smoking or chewing tobacco is an engraved invitation to both chronic bad breath and periodontal disease.

Americans spent $1 billion in 2000, the last year for which statistics are available, on over-the-counter mouthwashes, sprays and odor-masking gums—much of it of limited effectiveness, according to Wright.

"I think the majority of these products just cover up the problem for a short time," he said. "That don't do anything to solve it."

But the dental community's disdain for breath-sweetening potions is softening a bit. Many dentists, for example, now recommend chewing sugarless gum for breath problems, and some also sell mouthwashes and rinses that get, they say, to the core of the problem.

"I've had good success with them," said Craig Rancher, another Twin Falls dentist, who uses a commercial zinc chloride-based concoction called BreathRx.

Your supplies don't have to be sewing-specific; use cheaper items

Angela Lamb-Dittmar of Sterling Heights, Mich., is a well-organized home-sewer. Following are some of her sewing-room hints for those of us who need a little help.

Recycle containers from baby wipes and use them to store small supplies such as pencils, pens, scissors, tape, glue, needles and more.

The boxes stack well and can be labeled with a permanent marker. (If you need to change the label, use rubbing alcohol to remove the mark.)

Buy products that are not exclusively designated for sewing. For instance, get marking pencils in blue, silver and yellow from the office or art stores. Look for the ones that say "for blueprints."

They are cheaper than those sold in fabric stores, and they work on fabrics as well as paper. (I've discovered, too, that glue sticks for paper are just as good as the ones designated for fabric.)

Flat pizza boxes (clean and new, of course) can be purchased at privately owned pizza parlors and used for storing quilt blocks or cutout pattern pieces.

Try a folding drying rack to extend work space for a large project. Lamb-Dittmar suggests draping excess fabric on the dowels to prevent drag.

Check out new light bulbs on the market. "An especially good one is the new GE Reveal bulb. It filters out the yellow, producing a whiter-looking light," says Lamb-Dittmar. She also recommends fluorescent bulbs called "Sunshine," at Wal-Mart and Home Depot.

For pattern organization, try using a large ring binder with file dividers and sheet protectors for the envelopes.

For the tissue pattern pieces, use labeled plastic bags stacked in plastic baskets. Patterns can be filed by number or by category.

Gripper shelf lining, about $4 for a large roll, is versatile in the sewing room.

It's great under machines and foot pedals, helping keep them stationary.

Lamb-Dittmar also uses it rotary cutter mat, and as a liner inside her sewing machine cabinet drawers.

She even cuts it into small pieces to use as lint removers and as grippers for opening jars.

Food and Drug Administration rejects anti-alcoholism drug

A highly anticipated new drug to help recovering alcoholics remain abstinent has been rejected by the Food and Drug Administration. The agency turned down the application to market acamprosate, telling its manufacturer, Merck KGAA of Germany, that the company had not adequately demonstrated the medication's safety and efficacy.

The FDA requested that Merck KGAA conduct at least one more U.S. clinical trial. Previous studies on acamprosate, which has long been used in Europe, showed it to be free of serious side effects and modestly helpful in increasing the chances of abstinence in motivated individuals.

Neotame weighs in

With a nod of approval this month from the Food and Drug Administration, the latest sugar substitute—neotame—is poised to become a new ingredient in baked goods, soft drinks, chewing gum, frozen desserts and other products. Already approved in Australia and New Zealand, neotame joins the sweeteners aspartame (sold as NutraSweet and Equal), acesulfame potassium (Sunett and Sweet One), saccharin (Sweet'N Low) and sucralose

Health notes

(Splenda) now on the market. Sugar substitutes are one way, of course, to soothe a sweet tooth with fewer calories than sugar, honey or molasses. A 2000 survey in the United States use sugar substitutes at least once every two weeks, according to the Calorie Control Council, a trade group of diet food and beverage makers.

What's the buzz?

A lot of the old home remedies work much better than insect repellents, says York County, Va., biologist Jim Rindfleisch. He does, however, often wear Deep Woods OFF! because he likes the citronella oil in it. Musk smells attract insects, while lemony fruits repel them, he says. Herbs also work well as repellents. Some herbs he suggests for creating extractions include rosemary, wormwood, lavender, lemon basil and pennyroyal. Citronella plants growing by the house do not deter mosquitoes, he says. You need to mash the plant and use its essential oils to do the job.

Doctors' bedside manner matters again

PHILADELPHIA - Martin Williams, the 17-year-old captain of his high school basketball team, is sitting in the doctor's office complaining of a constant headache.

In reality, the "patient" is Matt Saunders, 25, an actor and set designer. The doctor, though, is real: Shahram Sani works at a Wilmington Memorial Hospital.

This little exercise is designed to test his bedside manner.

Technically, the "clinical skills assessment" measures the ability to gather information, perform physical examinations, and effectively communicate with patients. A big part of it is how comfortable the doctor makes patients feel - the intangible known as bedside manner, something that many doctors in recent years have been accused of lacking. Indeed, it is sometimes cited as a reason that Americans are turning to alternative therapies by the millions.

It is required for graduates of foreign medical schools seeking licenses to practice in the United States. Now, the National Board of Medical Examiners is looking to make it a requirement for third- or fourth-year medical students in the United States as well.

The test cannot be standardized because each patient is unique. Instead, it uses what is known in medical terms as a "standardized patient," an actor who is paid to ask a set of questions depending on his or her malady.

Since the 1940s that oversee testing for both sets of students are located in Philadelphia, the pilot program is working with three medical schools here: the University of Pennsylvania, Temple University and Thomas Jefferson University.

The test would have medical students see 10 "patients," for 15 minutes each.

The "patient" would score the encounter on a checklist of all the questions the doctor should ask, said Gerald Whelan, who runs the program for the Educational Commission for Foreign Medical Graduates. The medical students will also write up notes on the patients' complaints, the findings of their physical examinations and their diagnoses.

"Each of these scores are averaged over 10 cases," said Peter Sculley, a senior vice president of the National Board of Medical Examiners. Doctors at the national board will compare the student's notes and the patients' checklists and give a final score. Graduates of foreign medical schools were required to take the test beginning in 1998. Last year, about 7,200 took the exam; about 20 percent failed the first time, Whelan said.

The National Board of Medical Examiners expects about 1 percent to 2 percent to fail the exam on repeated attempts. The exam may be taken as many times as desired.

The board plans to expand its Philadelphia pilot to Atlanta in the fall. If that goes well, it hopes to add the test to the national licensing exam starting in 2004.

Although medical licenses are issued by the individual states, all state medical boards require doctors to pass the national licensing exam.

Retailers see fashion trend for young men

Some see shift: The guys actually care about how they look

NEW YORK (AP) — A guy shopping for a pair of basic jeans this fall might think he's stumbled into the women's department.

Retailers and clothing manufacturers including Levi Strauss & Co. and American Eagle Outfitters Inc. are focusing on a trendier look for young men, including low-rise jeans that hug the hips — similar to the pants that a year ago became a must-have style for teen girls and young women.

At Limited Inc.'s Express men's division, 25 percent of its men's pants for the back-to-school season will be low-rise styles.

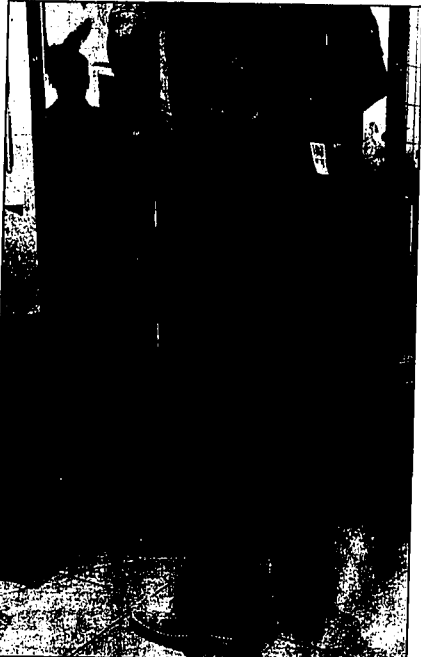

Merchants are hoping that low-rise pants, along with tighter-fitting sweaters, tinted jeans and other looks, will help fuel sales in the young men's category, which targets the 18-to-34 age group. The segment has just started to rebound after slumping for more than a year.

One of the interesting twists about these new fashions is that they look more like women's clothes than traditional men's apparel.

"Stores are recognizing that today's guy may choose to dress a lot like today's girl," said Marian Salzman, chief strategy officer at Euro RSCG Worldwide, a New York-based marketing company. "There is a lot more blurring of what is female and what is male."

Retailers believe that might be the result of young men's growing appetite for stylish clothes.

"In general, it has always been a cliché that men were not interested in fashion. But younger men are shopping now with more confidence because they have all these fashion icons to look up to in sports and music," said Mark Minsky, senior vice president of merchandising at Doneger Group, an apparel buying company, citing baseball player Derek Gary Thomas tries on a pair of Levi's low-rise jeans July 18 in San Francisco.

Jeter and rap artist Sean "Puffy" Combs, lately known as P. Diddy. Bridget Russo, spokeswoman for Diesel USA, said, "Guys are becoming more and more daring, and open to trying more fashion-forward products."

Most of the national mall-based store chains aren't showing men's pants that hug as low as the women's low-rise versions, but the rise — measured from the top of the inseam to the top of the waist band — is definitely much lower than on traditional styles, and it's falling. After successfully testing men's pants with a 9-inch rise last year, merchants this season are now marketing rises as low as 7 inches.

The traditional rise for men is 12 inches, which typically ends a half inch below the navel.

Levi's, which backed its offerings of low-rise jeans for women last year with heavy advertising, has launched its "Dangerously Low" campaign in August issues of magazines, promoting the look for both men and women.

Levi's is selling men's jeans with rises as low as 7 1/2 inches. Its women's low-rise pants are now down to 7 inches.

Some trend trackers like consultant Irma Zandl believe the time is right for body-tight clothes, given that a new wave of rock bands, such as Phantom Planet, The Hives and The Stroke are sporting low-slung pants, the uniform of the rock rebel.

But some industry executives, while recognizing the need for more fashion, are not convinced that low-rise styles, featured by fashion-forward men's wear designers two years ago, will have broad appeal.

"This seems to be in a way manufactured," said Michael Wood, vice president of research for Teenage Research Unlimited, a market research company.

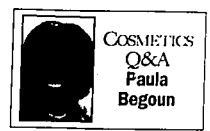

At Diesel, Russo noted, there will "always be a guy out there who wants the loose basic pants."

Macy's East, while infusing its men's floors this back-to-school season with a variety of denim washes and treatments, is featuring limited low-rise offerings.

"This is not something we are going to bank on," said Joe Donofrio, senior vice president of fashion in fact, Eddie Bengasco, 21, from Chattanooga, Tenn., found shopping at cheap city retailer Hennes & Mauritz on a recent Tuesday, said he is "interested in clothes," and is a fan of Prada, Banana Republic and Brooks Brothers, but is leery about buying low-rise pants.

Face it: Menthol irritates your skin

DEAR PAULA: I was wondering why you have such a negative opinion about menthol in men's shaving products. I use a men's product that is loaded with menthol — way above the normal amounts. Menthol has a history of healing dating back many hundreds of years. Might you be confusing the flush it causes to skin, a rush of additional blood, which, as I understand, is a component of the healing process with irritation? I find it works great for me. Please let me know your resources on this.

ingredient that induces local inflammation to relieve inflammation in deeper or adjacent tissues. In other words, it substitutes one kind of inflammation for another.

—SOOTHED IN TAMPA
DEAR SOOTHED: Menthol is problematic for skin for many reasons.

Artificially increasing blood circulation by a topical stimulant is not healing; that is the skin's irritation response.

Also, men expect their products to "burn" or feel cooling and they never associate the resulting redness and irritation it causes to be a problem with their products. Instead, they blame it on razor burn, which is rarely the source of the problem.

I have never seen any research showing menthol to be healing. Menthol is classified as a "counter-irritant" (Source: Archives of Dermatologic Research, May 1996, pages 245-248), but that still puts it in the category of an "irritant." Counter-irritant is defined as an

And even if your skin doesn't react in an irritated fashion, if you apply irritants on your skin, the damage is still taking place even though the skin doesn't show it (Source: Skin Research and Technology, November 2001, pages 227-237).

That is never good for skin. Irritation or inflammation in any way, shape or form impairs the skin's immune and healing response (Source: Skin Pharmacology and Applied Skin Physiology, November-December 2000, pages 358-371).

Waterski landings are harder than you think

Knight Ridder News Service

COLUMBUS, Ga. — You haven't been body slammed by Stonecold Steve Austin — you just feel that way.

Your legs ache. Your neck, shoulder and arms, they smart a little bit too.

Such, you figure, is the price for a fun afternoon of water skiing. But it doesn't have to be that way.

"People forget that water skiing is an athletic activity," said Joe Kostuch, director of physical therapy at the Human Performance and Rehabilitation Center in the Hixson Sports Medicine Center in Columbus, Ga. "There are things you need to do not only to prevent hurting yourself seriously but also to keep away from smaller problems."

Kostuch said he actually sees more folks who have been banged up after falling off personal watercraft than from water skiing accidents.

"There aren't as many of the serious leg injuries you get with snow skiing because, for one thing, you can lose water skis a lot easier," Kostuch said, "but you still can suffer some lower back pain and have trouble with

A few tips for staying safe

- Wear a life jacket.
- Know how to swim.
- Stretch your muscles before skiing.
- Be sure boat and ski equipment are in good shape.
- Always turn boat motor completely off when approaching a fallen skier.
- Drivers, watch the water ahead of you at all times.
- Have someone aboard to watch the skier.

- Skiers, run parallel to shore and come in slowly before landing, and all down if coming in too fast.
- Use proper hand signals to signal boat operator.
- Don't ski at night or in restricted areas.
- Make sure water and weather conditions are safe.
- No alcohol.

the shoulders and arms from all the pulling."

To be in good physical shape, of course, is a plus, but whether you are or not, Kostuch advises warming up before you put on skis.

"Go ahead and jog a little," he said. "Do some stretching. Get loose."

Greg Brannen couldn't agree more.

"I have all my skiers do that," said Brannen, beach manager and ski director at Callaway in Pine Mountain, Ga.

It is one of many tips he gives them.

Another is to be aware of their surroundings, especially if other boats and skiers are in the area.

"Remember, boats don't have brakes," he said. Brannen also tells them to check for damaged skis, frayed ropes and loose screws in bindings.

Every skier should have someone in the boat who is watching them, said Brannen, and everyone should know the hand signals.

"If the skier is getting tired," said Brannen, "he needs to be able to signal that message."

Tired skiers can get hurt.

Besides wearing a strong sun screen and a life jacket and not wearing sunglasses or jewelry, skiers should also avoid alcohol and wait an hour after eating before getting up on the skis.

"Some people think it's an old wives' tale about getting cramps from getting in the water too soon, but it's not," Brannen said. "I've seen folks cramp up."

Brannen not only agrees with Kostuch that the equipment plays a big part in preventing serious injuries but he said today's equipment makes it easier to ski.

"It's not as frustrating," Brannen said. "The equipment is so light and strong, as well as the skis being wider. You can get right up."

He said the skiers he worries about the most are the "week-end warriors."

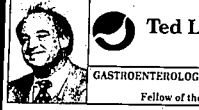

"They haven't skied in a while and act like they do it all the time," he said. "They are often careless."

DIVERTICULOSIS & DIVERTICULITIS Part 2

WHAT CAUSES DIVERTICULA TO FORM?

No one knows for sure why the pouches form. Scientists think they may be caused by increased pressure made the colon due to muscle spasms or straining, especially if the person has constipation problems or uses laxatives too often.

HOW SERIOUS ARE THESE DISORDERS?

For most people diverticulitis is not a problem. Diverticulitis is a problem and can develop into a serious problem if untreated. For instance, within one of the sacs becomes infected and inflamed, bacteria enter small holes in the surface of the bowel leading to an abscess. Such an infection may be the doorway to spread and break through the wall of the colon causing peritonitis (infection of the abdominal cavity) or abscesses in the abdomen. Such infections may be life threatening.

WHAT ARE TREATMENTS?

If you have diverticulitis with no symptoms, no treatment is needed. Doctors advise eating a high-fiber diet.

IS SURGERY EVER NECESSARY?

Sometimes patients do need surgery to drain an abscess, and the resulting form a fistula (diverticulum) and the part of the colon is removed. It is reserved for patients who have multiple abscesses.

WHAT ABOUT DIET?

Doctors recommend a diet that is low in fat and high in fiber. It is important that the diet be low in fat and high in fiber. A diet that is low in fat and high in fiber provides a bulkier stool that is easier to pass and does not irritate the multiple abscesses.

REMEMBER, DIVERTICULA USUALLY CAUSES NO PROBLEMS AT ALL, SO A DIAGNOSIS OF DIVERTICULITIS SHOULD NOT BE A SERIOUS CONCERN.

INCENTIVE TRUSTS

QUESTION: How can I leave bequests for my grandchildren and make sure they use them wisely?

Although it is often said that you can't rule from the grave, that's not entirely true. And it's certainly not a good idea to leave a substantial inheritance to a beneficiary who has not developed the maturity to manage it wisely.

With stock market advances and appreciating land values increasing the personal wealth of many Americans, more and more people are looking for some way to assure that their net squandered and that they don't end up doing more harm than good.

A popular means of assuring that inheritances are used in a responsible manner is through the use of what might be called incentive trusts. These can be as simple or as complex as you wish. They can be managed by surviving family members, by a corporate trustee, or both. They can be of short or long duration.

The criteria you select to govern distribution of trust assets should be given careful consideration. It becomes the blueprint guiding the trustee's use of funds for trust beneficiaries. The best incentive trusts have features: a wise trustee, clear instructions, and ample trustee discretion.

What fashion becomes a bankrupt exec?

The Washington Post

Last Monday, when WorldCom's president and chief executive officer, John Sidgmore, emerged from U.S. Bankruptcy Court in New York, he was wearing a traditional charcoal gray business suit and an especially unattractive tie. And because filing the largest corporate bankruptcy in U.S. history requires a battalion of lawyers, Sidgmore was accompanied by a passel of attorneys who had adopted a similar uniform of sober suit and unappealing four-in-hand.

If there was anything that made Sidgmore stand out — aside from his valiantly impassive demeanor — it was his blue dress shirt, a lone splash of color in a pack of crisp white sternness. Outside the dusky blue, with its weak allusions to synergy and outside-the-box thinking, he a wobbly declaration of faith in the future? Sidgmore has worn blue shirts before, butter-yellow ones, too. But on Monday, Sidgmore's choice was almost a distraction, a tiny dash of color that was too chirpy for the moment. It read like a stylistic exclamation point to the banner — "WorldCom Moving Forward" — that hung behind him as he addressed the media on the topic of bankruptcy. The whole scene reeked of desperation; this technology behemoth reduced to pinning up a sign that looked as if it had been cranked out by the overnight cashier at Kinko's.

But then, what does one wear to a bankruptcy? Is there any appropriate executive uniform when a corporation is teetering on the edge, propped up only by the protection of Chapter 11?

It wouldn't do for the beleaguered chief executive to stand before a judge wearing only a barrel and a pair of suspenders. But then, such an ensemble would certainly drive home the point that the big boss fully understood the company's dire circumstances.

A nun's habit would send the proper signals of penitence and remorse far a firm's financial sleight-of-hand. An $11,000 guano Oxford omelet would be a fine symbol of the wild indulgences that paved the road to court. While prison stripes might be appropriate, at this stage they're a bit premature.

In these fretful economic times, fashion plays a role in helping financial reformers and ne'er-do-wells send duly grave and earnest messages. The finest details can be evocative of defeat or determination. Wednesday morning, John Rigas, the founder and former CEO of bankrupt Adelphia Communications, was arrested on charges of defrauding investors of billions of dollars. When Rigas made his perp walk, he was wearing a white shirt, suit jacket and handcuffs. The shirt was unbuttoned at the neck. No tie was in sight. The Western world's great symbol of masculinity, authority, control and decorum was gone. Rigas looked positively dejected.

The cops might as well have hauled him out in a sweat-stained undershirt and boxer shorts.

Clothes can be symbolic of times that have passed away, as well as cultural ripples yet to come.

In 1985, designer Christian Lacroix, then working for the French label Jean Patou, debuted a whimsical party dress known as le pouf. In addition to its lavish construction and adornment, its signature was a skirt puffed up like a ballerina's tutu. Le pouf was the apotheosis of '80s excess. If ever a frock portended disaster, this one did. In 1987, Lacroix opened his own couture house and that same year, the stock market plummeted.

What followed were several years of our collections. Designers offered modest black frocks accessorized with crosses, the sort a Sunday school teacher might favor, rather than the platinum and diamond statement that might be made by a rapper.

A similar move from excess to restraint has occurred over these past few years. The tail end of the century included gluttonous Fendi baguettes — $1,000-and-up handbags decorated with mother-of-pearl, Austrian crystals, mirrored paillettes and fur pelts — that, in hindsight, were warnings rather than fads. Consumer demand for $3,000 beaded Gucci jeans surely must have been a sign of impending doom. And in 2000, when Victoria's Secret promoted its $15 million ruby-and-diamond studded bra and G-string, the truly sentient would have seen that the bubble was about to burst.

Doctors caution folks with food allergies to be wary of kisses

The Dallas Morning News

If you have a food allergy, a kiss may leave you breathless. And blistered and itchy.

Doctors warned last month that food allergies can sneak up on the sensitive even during a passionate embrace. As many as 5 percent of people allergic to nuts and seeds said they had a reaction — but not the reaction they were expecting — after a kiss.

"For some of them, it was a huge shock to have this reaction in that setting," said Dr. Suzanne Teuber of the University of California, Davis. Teuber and her colleagues surveyed 379 patients with food allergies, checking whether any of them had experienced an immune response after a kiss. Twenty had.

About one-third had experienced their first kissing reactions while dating.

Most of the time, the flare-ups weren't serious — just a bit of swelling or irritation "in the area kissed," the California scientists wrote last month in The New England Journal of Medicine. Four people had begun wheezing. One child, however, ended up in the emergency room after his mother, standing at the stove, tasted a pot of pea soup before smooching her toddler son on the cheek.

Four adults had reactions even though their partners had brushed their teeth before getting romantic.

THE ACES ON BRIDGE

Bobby Wolff

"Honey, I just forgot to duck." - Jack Dempsey

North and South should have a simple sequence here. East and West have no reason to come into the action...

West leads the spade jack and the best play is to duck means obvious. You declarer are threatened with the loss of four black suit winners if the club honors are badly placed...

It is diamonds that you play your mind that you will play on diamonds, but the first essential element of the deal is to duck the opening lead to cut defensive communications...

If East has the diamond king, the ruffing finesse is worth two tricks to you. If West has the diamond king, you will be able to throw two clubs away on the diamonds later on by crossing to dummy in trumps.

Note that if you take the first spade, you leave open a line of communication for West to win the diamond king, then cross over to East in spades to a club shift that will set the game - and that would be a real sucker punch.

NORTH ♠ 8 3 2 ♡ K 9 4 ♢ A Q 9 ♣ 7 4

WEST ♠ J 10 7 ♡ 5 ♢ 8 7 2 ♣ A Q 6 3 2

EAST ♠ K Q 4 3 ♡ 7 2 ♢ 6 5 4 3 ♣ 10 9 8

SOUTH ♠ A 9 6 ♡ A Q 10 6 3 ♢ 10 ♣ K 5

Vulnerable: East-West Dealer: South

The bidding: South West North East 1♥ Pass 3♥ Pass

Opening lead: Spade jack

LEAD WITH THE ACES

South holds: ♠ A J 10 4 ♡ A 10 3 2 ♢ 10 9 8 2 ♣ A

South West North East Pass 2 NT Pass 3 NT All pass

ANSWER: Lead the club 10. Since the suits are not splitting for declarer, there is no need to play an active defense. Settle for safety first.
