Longest Idaho session on record could end today

The Associated Press

BOISE – Stunned by a dramatic drop in tax receipts for April, the Idaho House on Friday easily approved a 29-cent-per-pack increase in the state cigarette tax.

"This is the prudent step," Republican Rep. Scott Bedke of Oakley said. "It's a logical step. This is the best action we can take, given the facts of the day."

The bill was sent to Gov. Dirk Kempthorne on a 44-26 vote, after clearing the Senate two days earlier on a 21-14 vote. It signaled the likelihood that the Legislature could wrap up its longest session ever today, the 118th day.

But the $23.5 million the tax will generate to help keep the new budget in balance falls far short of the cash Kempthorne administration analysts believe will be needed to cover the revenue shortfall aggravated by severely lower income tax receipts last month.

Administration officials have been assessing options to deal with the

'TWO-HORSE TOWN'

BRUCE SHIELDS/The Times-News

Hagerman librarian Wilma Butigan said she is so excited about Buddy Gil's run for the roses at the Kentucky Derby today that she might bring a television into the library where noise is usually prohibited.

Hagerman goes wild for Derby entrant

By Robert Mayer
Times-News writer

HAGERMAN – Make no mistake about it, this normally quiet town has been lit up by a horse named Buddy Gil.

The 3-year-old gelding competing in today's Kentucky Derby is the topic of most conversations, and his name graces most of the windows along the town's main strip.

"I think it's really cool," said Linda Vail, an employee at the Hagerman Food Store. "Everybody is for Buddy. We all want him to do as good as possible."

In this town of about 700 where "everybody knows everybody," where neighbors celebrate together and cry together, pride radiates for Buddy Gil, with the Hagerman denizens claiming him as their own.

Certainly Donnie and Judy McFadden, owners of Buddy Gil, are regarded as family. Known for their top-quality horses, their beautiful Billingsley Creek Ranch – where the thoroughbred was raised – and their active participation in the community, the McFaddens are an integral part of Hagerman.

"Isn't this exciting for a little town like this?" said Geri Feustel, local businesswoman and longtime friend of the McFadden family.

Should Buddy Gil win, Feustel said she'll probably fly to Palm Springs, Fla., to celebrate with the matriarch of the McFadden family.

Vicki Patterson and Jim Achabal, co-owners of the Angler Lounge and Riverboat Restaurant, said that not only are Donnie and Judy McFadden great customers, "They're great friends. We love the McFaddens."

When the couple began their trip to Kentucky, they gave the town a grand farewell, speeding through the normaly bucolic streets, honking their horns, screaming out the windows. Hagerman cheered right back, Patterson said.

"It's given everybody a jump start," she said.

To accommodate the part of the community that plans to watch the race at their business,

SARS appears contained in U.S.

Combined wire reports

The spread of the SARS virus in the United States has been contained, but the virus appears to be mutating, which could create problems with controlling it, health officials say.

"At the moment, there are 56 cases of probable SARS in the United States, but there have been no transmission to personal contacts or health care workers in 20 days, which means we have contained the problem for the time being," said Dr. Julie L. Gerberding, director of the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention.

Gerberding and Dr. Anthony S. Fauci, director of the National Institute of Allergy and Infectious Diseases, testifying before a U.S. Senate subcommittee field hearing here, said with hundreds of thousands of U.S. citizens still traveling abroad, the threat is by no means over. "With the level of alertness we've been put on and the measures for surveillance, the risk is relatively small," Fauci said. "But we still need to be on a state of alert."

Gerberding said the CDC will continue to warn travelers about the SARS "hot spots" because the threat in the U.S is primarily from travelers returning from those areas. She said the CDC will continue to recommend against travel to certain areas, including China, Taiwan and Hong Kong, Singapore, unless it is essential business travel.

In Hong Kong, researchers said the virus is mutating rapidly, developing at least two forms, which could complicate efforts to develop a solid diagnosis and a vaccine.

"This rapid evolution is like that of a murderer who is trying to change his fingerprints or even his appearance to try to escape detection," said Dr. Dennis Lo, a chemical pathologist at the Chinese University of Hong Kong.

Researchers there said they have determined the genetic sequences of virus samples taken from 11 SARS patients, and that by late March there were two forms of the virus present in Hong Kong.

T.F. plans gender separation

Lincoln Elementary follows lead of Kimberly school

The Times-News and The Associated Press

TWIN FALLS – Impressed with Kimberly Middle School's sixth-grade gender-separated classes, Lincoln Elementary School will do the same beginning fall semester.

"It will help kids ask more questions and get more involved," Lincoln Principal Beth Olmstead said.

Meanwhile, so successful was the experiment in Kimberly that the school will expand its gender separation to the seventh grade. [illegible]

Climber chose life over death in cutting off arm

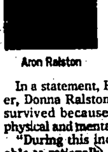
The Associated Press

GRAND JUNCTION, Colo. – A climber who amputated his own arm to free himself from in a narrow, remote canyon in Utah was a "six million dollar man" who wanted to survive, a rescuer said Friday.

Aron Ralston, 27, of Aspen was hospitalized in serious condition Friday after his six-day ordeal in Blue John Canyon near Canyonlands National Park in southeastern Utah.

The experienced outdoorsman would have died if he had stayed in the canyon, just 3 feet wide and 100 feet tall, said Sgt. Mitch Vetere of the Emery County, Utah, sheriff's office.

"He said that was the only way out," said Vetere, who helped rescue Ralston. "He's a six million dollar man. He was way good for what he went through. He had a will to live."



Aron Ralston

In a statement, Ralston's mother, Donna Ralston, said her son survived because of his strong physical and mental condition.

"During this incident, he was able to rationally consider alternatives relative to his situation," the statement said. "His spirits

Author Hunter Thompson weds

DENVER (AP) – Journalist Hunter S. Thompson, who often portrays himself as hard-drinking and unpredictable, was on his best behavior as he married his longtime assistant in a ceremony in Aspen.

"He had a nice suit jacket and slacks on. He brought her flowers. That never happens here. We were all impressed with that," Pitkin County Deputy Clerk Sherry McIntire said Friday.

The 66-year-old Thompson, best-known as the author of "Fear and Loathing in Las Vegas," married Anita Beymuk, 30, in the clerk's office April 24.

The couple live in Woody Creek, near Aspen.

In a column Thompson wrote for ESPN after the event, titled "The Royal Wedding," he said the marriage was completed "with fine style and secrecy."

Patterson and Achabal brought in a big-screen TV. Patterson is also working with her kitchen staff to create the proper mint julep, the traditional drink of the Kentucky Derby.

Boil equal amounts of sugar and water, and use plenty of fresh mint poured over shaved ice with a shot of bourbon, she said.

Because that version of the Kentucky classic sounds a "little rough" to Patterson, she said she'll have other versions of the julep on hand.

"We're pretty excited about the whole thing," she said.

While some community members have to work today, that won't stop them from somehow viewing the run for the roses.

Kirt Martin, chef at Snake River Grill, might place a TV over the stove to watch.

"It's a very, very unique opportunity," he said. "How many communities in America today have a horse in the Kentucky Derby?"

Wilma Butigan might do the same. However, because she's the town librarian, her TV might need to be a little more hidden.

Butigan said she remembers when the murmurings about Buddy Gil began a few months ago.

"Donnie may have a horse," the townfolk whispered to each other, she said. Sure enough, soon thereafter, Buddy Gil won the Baldwin Stakes in Southern California, then a longer race at San Felipe. Next victory came at the Santa Anita Racetrack. Today marks the biggest and certainly the longest race for this Hagerman horse.

And the town welcomes the spotlight.

"I imagine the local chamber of commerce will kiss Billingsley Creek Ranch sqaure on the forehead when Buddy Gil wins, because it would put this little town on the map," Martin said.

Yes, the community has long been known for its fossilized horse – the Hagerman Horse, renowned by paleontologists and found in the nearby Hagerman Fossil Beds National Monument. But, win or not, Hagerman can now add another horse to its long list of tourist attractions, Butigan said.

"Now we're a two-horse town," she said.

Schools

separation be taken to the eighth-grade level. But it's too soon to do that, Watson said.

"One step at a time," she said.

Now, in math, science, social studies and English, KMS sixth-graders are segregated into all-boy and all-girl groups. Though the latest testing data aren't back, leaving school officials with no measurable way to judge whether the system works, teachers and students alike say the system has helped them do better work.

Not all the classes are segregated. Elective courses – such as art, band and homeroom – remain mixed.

"Students learn socialization, self-resourcefulness and organization in school as well as their classwork. So, to put kids totally in single-gender situations doesn't appeal to us," Watson said.

Lincoln Elementary School, however, will extend the gender separation beyond the core classes. That's because rather than Kimberly's block schedule, Lincoln features a typical elementary schedule in which one teacher instructs one class throughout the day.

Thus, in the fall the plan will have one sixth-grade teacher with a classroom of all boys, another will have all girls, and then as a control group, one sixth-grade teacher will feature a regular mixed class.

Olmstead is sending out a letter to parents of fifth-graders informing them of the change and providing them the option to have their children in a mixed classroom.

Kimberly's experiment

In Jim O'Donnell's sixth-grade class at KMS, students asks a lot of questions about their social studies assignments. So many, in fact, that he has to stop them just so he can explain their next task.

It's one of the benefits, he says, of the single-gender classes the public school switched to this year.

It's a welcome change, O'Donnell said, from years past when students were more focused on social studies of a different kind – interaction with the opposite sex.

"I use a lot of interaction with the kids, and in my mixed classes the boys really dominated the conversation," O'Donnell said. "Now all the students are really eager to speak. We have fewer classroom problems with more focus on academic performance."

The American Association of University Women, however, still opposes the gender-separation classes, said spokeswoman Ashley Carr.

"Legislators must develop strong, fair public schools – not single-sex education – to improve student achievement," she said, quoting the organization's established policy.

But what makes the Kimberly experiment successful, Watson said, is that the decision to change didn't come from the top down – the teachers initiated the process.

Teachers came up with the idea after they heard a lament from a local high school teacher.

"The teacher said, 'If we could just separate boys and girls we could get a lot more teaching done,'" said Lani Tingey, who teaches English at the middle school. "I had just heard about a school in another state that was trying exactly that, and we decided to do some research to see if it would be a good idea here."

They didn't find much.

Several studies suggest that girls begin to ask fewer questions as they reach sixth grade, but few researchers have considered the effects of single-gender classes on boys, Tingey said.

"It seems to me like common sense, because this is the age when kids have a lot of insecurity around male-female interaction. They're still kids, even though society encourages them to mature faster. The classes let the boys relax and not try to impress the girls, and the girls like it because they're not afraid to ask questions," Tingey said.

The transition has been natural for the students, O'Donnell said.

"They segregate themselves when they come to homeroom, with all the boys on one side and all the girls on the other. It's comfortable for them," he said.

What students think

Edie Jones, an 11-year-old who hopes to be an architect or some sort of engineer, said she's glad her core classes are separated.

"I think it helps you learn. Sometimes you get embarrassed around the boys. In our English class, we had an assignment about embarrassing things your parents did to you," Jones said, "and I know some girls told things they wouldn't have told if boys were there."

Plenty of interaction with the opposite sex remains, she said.

"I think there are still people who go out with each other, and they pass notes still. That happens about the same," Jones said. "But this kind of helps you from getting distracted by looking at the boys."

School administrators are struggling to accurately measure the program's success. The state switched from using the Iowa Basic Skills Test to the Idaho Standards Achievement Test this year, and class sizes have grown enough to throw off grade comparisons.

But students are clearly behaving better, said O'Donnell.

Newsday

WASHINGTON – Hospitals in Baghdad remain in "disarray," leading many Iraqis to forgo medical treatment, the head of a Nobel Peace Prize-winning humanitarian group said Friday.

Dr. Morten Rostrup, president of the international group Doctors Without Borders, criticized the United States for not protecting Baghdad's 34 hospitals from looters or restoring leadership to the facilities.

"People are suffering and dying due to this," Rostrup said at a news conference here Friday. "I find it very surprising there did not seem to be any plan for assessing health needs after the war."

Rostrup, who recently spent six weeks in Iraq, said conditions at hospitals have improved "a bit" with the restoration of power and order in Baghdad and the return of many doctors who had stayed at home. But he said some hospitals still do not have proper staffing or admission procedures.

"People are reluctant to go to hospitals because they know they are not running that well," Rostrup said. He and Nicolas de Torrente, executive director of Doctors Without Borders in the United States, urged officials at the Pentagon, State Department and Congress to increase assistance to hospitals.

White House spokeswoman Claire Buchan said, "Great efforts were made to protect the resources of the people of Iraq and the critical infrastructure."

The lobbying effort came two days after the head of the United Nations' Iraqi oil-for-food program urged that it not be phased out immediately so that food and medicine will continue to reach Iraq.

Donna Ralston declined to comment and the family asked friends not to speak to reporters.

Officials at St. Mary's Hospital said the prognosis was good for Ralston and he was expected to recover fully.

Friends say Ralston's expeditions have been known to trigger awe. He has climbed 49 of Colorado's 14,000-foot peaks. He was preparing for a climb on Mount McKinley in Denali National Park, Alaska, when the accident happened.

"To be honest, sometimes we get pretty scared with some of the things he's doing," said Brion After, manager of the Ute Mountaineering store in Aspen, where Ralston works.

Nature photographer John Fielder hired Ralston for a week last summer to help carry gear in the Rawah Wilderness near Fort Collins. He described Ralston as the picture of an outdoorsman – about 6-foot-1, fit and wiry. "Great personality," Fielder said. "Fun to be with, loves to be outdoors. That's my kind of guy. He probably tests his limits a little more than most people do, but his skills are very good, so he can test his limits a little better than most people."

Ralston, 27, began what was to be a day hike April 26 by riding a mountain bike seven miles before he began hiking into the canyon. He was canyoneering, where a hiker uses rock-climbing gear to negotiate through slot canyons.

Ralston pushed his right arm into a wide crack in the canyon wall and an 800- to 1,000-pound boulder shifted, pinning his arm, said Steve Swanke of Canyonlands National Park. He tried to use his ropes and anchors to free himself, but couldn't.

On Tuesday, Ralston ran out of water.

By Thursday, he decided he had no choice but to use his pocketknife to amputate his arm just below the right elbow, Vetere and Swanke said.

He applied a tourniquet and administered first aid before he rappelled 60 feet down the canyon wall to the floor, where he began walking to safety.

He encountered two tourists from Holland and was about two miles from his car when a rescue helicopter spotted him, still bleeding, Vetere and Swanke said.

Vetere said rescue teams began searching for Ralston on Tuesday after friends called police when he failed to report to work.

During the helicopter ride to a hospital in nearby Moab, Utah, Ralston's only request was water. He was obviously tired, Vetere said.

He climbed out of the helicopter and walked to the emergency room, his bandaged arm in a makeshift sling that he supported with his left arm, Swanke said.

Ralston matter-of-factly explained what had happened and that he had lost a lot of blood, Swanke said. He later was transferred to the hospital in Grand Junction.

"Aron Ralston is a warrior," Swanke said.

Terrorists planned plane attack, U.S. says

WASHINGTON (AP) – U.S. authorities say they have uncovered an al-Qaida plot to crash an explosives-laden small aircraft into the American consulate in Karachi, Pakistan.

That prompted the Homeland Security Department to warn about possible attacks in the United States.

A department advisory said al-Qaida was in the late stages of planning an attack on the consulate using a small fixed-wing aircraft or helicopter.

Such a plot, along with one uncovered last year in which al-Qaida hoped to fly a small plane into a U.S. warship in the Persian Gulf, demonstrated a "fixation" on using aircraft in attacks, the advisory said.

The warning was issued Thursday to U.S. pilots and airport managers as part of a broader bulletin urging vigilance to guard against similar attacks in America.

A U.S. law enforcement official, speaking on condition of anonymity, said a plot against the consulate was uncovered.

The plot culminated with the arrests earlier this week in Karachi of Waleed bin Attash and five other alleged al-Qaida members.

About 300 pounds of explosives and a cache of weapons were seized.

Attash is believed to have played a leading role in planning for the Sept. 11 attacks and the bombing of the USS Cole in Yemen.

Homeland Security officials say there is no specific evidence about an attack using small aircraft in the United States.

But the advisory says al-Qaida could try to use such planes because they are easily available and require less pilot skill than large jets.

Security procedures also are less rigorous for small aircraft, there would be no need to attempt to control a large group of passengers and a credit card could be used to rent such a plane, the advisory said.

It said, "Reliable information obtained last year indicated al-Qaida might use experienced, non-Arab pilots to rent three or four light aircraft under the guise of flying lessons."

Pilots and airport officials and workers were urged to be extra alert for suspicious people and activity, aircraft with unusual modifications or people loading unusual cargo onto an aircraft.

Vigilance should also be maintained in checking identification, verifying baggage and cargo and watching for "persons who appear to be under stress or under the control of other persons."

Campaign finance reform loses

WASHINGTON (AP) – A federal court struck down most of a ban on the use of large corporate and union contributions by political parties Friday, casting doubt on a new campaign finance law that was supposed to take big money out of politics and govern next year's elections.

In another major finding, the court also ruled as an unconstitutional violation of free speech sweeping new restrictions on election-time political ads by special-interest groups and others. But it said other ad limits the law's sponsors included in the legislation as a backup were constitutional.

The special three-judge panel made its ruling effective immediately. The nearly 1,700-page decision – one of the longest ever produced by a federal district court – clears the way for an immediate appeal by the losing parties to the U.S. Supreme Court. The high court, which may not hear the case for months, will lay the ground rules for the 2004 elections and beyond.

April's unemployment rate goes to 6 percent

WASHINGTON (AP) – The nation's unemployment rate swelled to 6 percent in April, returning to an eight-year high as employers slashed payrolls even deeper. The ailing economy has lost a half million jobs in the past three months.

The rate was up two-tenths of a percentage point from March, with payrolls falling by 48,000, the Labor Department reported Friday.

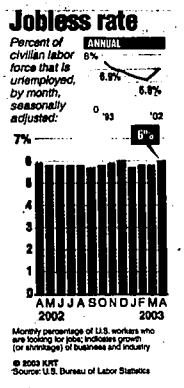
The bottom line: Employers are handing out pink slips, not job offers, and that's not likely to change soon.

"For those who are out of work, finding a job is getting tougher," said David Rosenberg, chief economist at Merrill Lynch.

April's job losses were the third in a row, which never occurs outside of recessions, he said, adding that "we now have such a case." Job cuts were concentrated in manufacturing, airlines and retail.

A separate report based on the previous month was more positive for the nation's factories. Orders rose 2.2 percent in March, an improvement over the 1.0 percent decline registered in February and the largest gain in eight months, the Commerce Department said.

In April, the number of unemployed workers surged to 8.8 million, with almost 2 million without jobs for 27 weeks or more.



Cities may fight over water use

SAN DIEGO (AP) – Political and legal conflicts over the water supply are highly likely in seven of the West's biggest cities by 2025, a federal study found.

The Interior Department identified Las Vegas; Reno, Nev.; Albuquerque, N.M.; Denver; Houston; Salt Lake City; and Flagstaff, Ariz., as cities where conflict is most likely over the next two decades.

Two major waterways, the Rio Grande and the Colorado River, also were named "highly likely" sources of conflict.

"It may simply be a situation where people want to water their lawns or irrigate their fields and there simply is not enough water available," Interior Secretary Gale Norton said.

A department initiative would focus money and technology to develop ways to conserve water, improve structures such as dams and reservoirs and stretch water resources to last in those critical areas.

The department said a lesser, but still "substantial" possibility of water wars exists in other Western cities.

Those include Los Angeles, Sacramento, Calif., San Diego, Phoenix and San Antonio.

A third level of cities had a "moderate" chance of future conflict, including Seattle; Dallas; Casper, Wyo.; Boise, Idaho and Salem, Ore.

The study was based on population trends, rainfall records, water capacity and storage and habitats of endangered species, said Assistant Interior Secretary Bennett Raley.

Overtapped water supplies could in the worst-case scenario spark a repeat of 2001 turmoil over the Klamath River, Norton said.

Armed federal officers were called in after farmers along the Oregon waterway pried open irrigation gates in anger when the government shut off their water to help endangered fish.

Bush pushes Congress on tax cuts

The Washington Post

SANTA CLARA, Calif. – President Bush said Friday that April's rising 6 percent unemployment rate ought to signal to Congress to stop fighting over his beleaguered tax cut plan.

"That 6 percent number should say loud and clear to members of both political parties in the United States Congress, we need robust tax relief so our fellow citizens can find jobs," Bush told workers at a Northern California defense plant that produced many of the armored vehicles used in the Iraq war. The new unemployment figure, which matches an eight-year high, was announced in Washington Friday morning.

Bush's appearance here, after Thursday night's end-of-war speech delivered from the deck of a homebound aircraft carrier and an overnight aboard the ship, continued his effort to transfer his image as a successful military commander in chief to the economic front.

With the memory of his father's abrupt fall from a 90 percent approval rating, following the 1991 Gulf War, to his loss of the presidency less than two years later as the economy fell, Bush is anxious to keep his wartime credentials burnished. But despite high postwar approval, Bush has not achieved his father's stratospheric levels, and polls indicate that only a bare majority of Americans approves of his handling of the economy.

Bush was clearly still resting on his wartime laurels Friday, examining prototypes of the next generation of fighting vehicles and blasting enemy tanks in a video simulator even as he called for Congress to blast the economic doldrums with similar energy.

"We've come through some hard times. Remember we've overcome a recession; we've overcome an attack on our soil," Bush said in a speech to workers at United Defense Industries Inc. He congratulated them for making products that "have made our military second to none."

The location provided numerous opportunities for the combined military and economic fighting image Bush was seeking. The company, Bush reminded to cheers, produced the Hercules tank recovery vehicle that the world watched drag a massive statue of Saddam Hussein down from its pedestal in Baghdad.

The factory lies in Silicon Valley, one of the most economically depressed areas of the country. In a full-page editorial Friday morning, the nearby San Jose Mercury News said the area was going through "the deepest recession any of us can remember." The money Bush wants to give up through tax cuts, the paper said, could be put to "better use, like covering war costs and the revenue shortfalls caused by recession."

Fuel economy remains stagnant during two decades

WASHINGTON (AP) – Vehicle fuel economy has improved little since the mid-1980s, at least partly because of the continuing popularity of sport utility vehicles, the Environmental Protection Agency said in a report Friday.

The average fuel economy for 2003 cars and trucks is 6 percent lower than in 1988, the EPA said. The average fuel economy of cars and light trucks peaked in 1987 and 1988, when it reached 22.1 miles per gallon. In 2003, the average fuel economy was 20.8 miles per gallon.

The EPA examined fuel economy from 1975 to 2003, weighting the fuel economy for each vehicle by its sales volume. In 2003, SUVs, pickups and other light trucks comprised 48 percent of all sales, the EPA said.

Soldiers earn Iraqi people's trust

U.S. forces deliver supplies to villages

By Alexandra Zavis
Associated Press Writer

NASIRIYAH, Iraq – In his first days of trying to help Iraqis feel more secure, Sgt. David Marr felt so insecure himself that he wore his body armor and helmet. Now he's ditched that gear for a T-shirt and headscarf and won the trust of local Bedouins who call him "Sheik Daoud."

"We're at war at the moment ... and you actually end up with friends," the U.S. army civil affairs officer marveled as he delivered water and food rations to impoverished Bedouin tribes on the outskirts of the southern city of Nasiriyah.

For weeks, tense coalition forces watched Iraqis through the sights of their guns. Now, efforts to help rebuild the country are giving them a chance to forge relationships many never thought possible.

While relations between Americans and Iraqis grow increasingly tense in parts of the country, Bedouins here have warmed to Marr since he began bringing his water truck to their camps, saving them hours-long walks to fill their pans and bags at a polluted river.

Men and women come running out of their tents when they see him coming. He greets the men the traditional way, clasping hands and kissing their cheek.

Often, he is joined by members of the British contingent based with U.S. forces at the nearby Tallil airfield. They hand out extra rations from their kitchen and candy donated by the troops.

Sand-dusted children in layers of tattered pink, red, purple and green clothes squealed with delight as British Lance Cpl. Helen Goodall handed out apples, candy and chips recently from the back of a truck. Laughing, she watched them stuff their pockets and hold out their hands for more.

Army civil affairs Sgt. Dave Marr, left helps an Iraqi Bedouin woman carry a full water bladder to her tent Sunday near An Nasiriyah, Iraq. Marr started a regular mission to deliver drinking water and food supplies to Bedouins in the area.

In the city, U.S. forces are hiring police, trying to restore water and electricity service, and locating medicine to replenish the looted stores of local hospitals. Like elsewhere, progress is slow, and frustration is mounting.

"A lot of people have the idea that the U.S. military is going to rebuild the country," said Maj. Robert Carr, a Marine civil affairs officer in Nasiriyah.

"We'll put on some Band-Aids," he said, but the real work will be done by Iraqis, aided by humanitarian workers who are starting to return to the area.

Carr spends much of his day meeting with local officials and coordinating the logistics of restoring basic services.

"It's really the engineers who are running the show now. Management was all Baath Party and ran off," he said. "My job has been to make the engineers manage."

When Marr and Carr first began doing their rounds, they didn't know what to expect.

Nasiriyah, a provincial capital set in a date-growing region on the banks of the Euphrates River, saw some of the fiercest fighting of the Iraq war. Forces loyal to Saddam Hussein dressed in civilian clothes and hid behind women and children to fire at U.S. troops.

For the first few weeks, he remained in full battle mode, wearing a helmet and flak jacket and carrying a gun wherever he went.

But with time, he started to relax. Now he favors a T-shirt and traditional red-and-white checked headscarf when he visits Bedouin camps. "That was to let them know that it is safe, I'm not over here to be a bully American."

Bedouins have now taken on the job of protecting his teams themselves, he said, stopping and searching any stranger who comes too close.

Coalition nabs three of Saddam's top men

BAGHDAD, Iraq (AP) – Tracking the scattered vestiges of Saddam Hussein's ousted regime, the U.S. military announced Friday that three more members of its most-wanted "deck of cards" were in custody, including one of Saddam's most trusted aides and a top weapons-development official.

With the new detentions, the United States is now holding 18 of the 55 people on its list of most-wanted Iraqi officials.

Mirzban Khadr Hadi, the commander of one of four military regions Saddam established just before the war, was captured Thursday in Baghdad, the U.S. Army's V Corps announced.

Abdel Tawab Mullah Huweish, director of the Office of Military Industrialization, and Taha Muhie-eldin Marouf, a Kurd and top Baath Party official who served as one of two vice presidents, were also in custody, U.S. Central Command said.

It was not clear when Huweish and Marouf were detained, where they were being held or whether they surrendered or were seized.

Huweish was listed as No. 16 on the coalition's list and the 10 of hearts.

He was in charge of supervising and coordinating the deployment of Iraq's ballistic missiles in late 2002.

He was also part of the leadership that was planning long-term guerrilla warfare against the United States, according to the Washington-based International Strategic Studies Association.

Hadi was one of Saddam's closest advisers, especially on policy relating to Shiite Muslims, the most populous sect of Islam in Iraq but the less powerful one under Saddam's predominantly Sunni Muslim regime.

He was decorated by Saddam for his role in the 1991 Gulf War and the monthlong Shiite rebellion that followed Iraq's defeat.

Marouf was the only Kurd in the Baath Party hierarchy and served as one of two vice presidents in 1975, a ceremonial role that was largely a gesture to the Kurdish minority. He was No. 42 on the U.S. list and was the nine of diamonds.

The top person to be detained so far is No. 10 Muzahim Sa'b Hassan al-Tikriti, the head of Iraq's air defenses.

Carrier changed routine during presidential visit

ABOARD THE USS ABRAHAM LINCOLN (AP) – President Bush didn't have to make a dramatic tailhook landing on this aircraft carrier. He could have flown here on a helicopter as presidents normally would, the White House said Friday.

Officials also acknowledged positioning the massive ship to provide the best TV angle for Bush's speech, with the vast sea as his background instead of the very visible San Diego coastline.

Bush's aides were delighted by the saturation television coverage and front-page pictures of Bush's visit Thursday to this ship homebound from the Persian Gulf. Press secretary Ari Fleischer dismissed any suggestion that the overnight trip was custom-ordered to provide campaign footage for Bush's re-election campaign.

Fleischer had said last week that Bush would have to fly out to the carrier by plane because the Lincoln would be hundreds of miles offshore, making helicopter travel impractical.

As it turned out, the ship was just 39 miles from the coast when Bush scored a presidential first by landing on the flight deck in a small S-3B Viking jet that was snared by a restraining wire.

"He could have helicoptered, but the plan was already in place," Fleischer said. "Plus, he wanted to see a landing the way aviators see a landing."

new cash deficit in the current budget. It grew to over $37 million with April's poor performance. Income tax receipts were off $35 million. That was partially offset with higher-than expected sales, corporate, estate and miscellaneous tax collections, but the net take was still $21 million short of the target on top of a nearly $17 million cash deficit built up during the months before.

With just two months left in the current spending year, officials said the deficit will have to be shoved into the next budget and the Legislature probably recalled into special session this fall to either raise more taxes or make further cuts.

The cigarette tax bill increases the levy to 59 cents a pack beginning June 1 and expiring in mid-2005. The cash is on top of $160 million a year extra being raised by the penny increase in the 5-cent sales tax that took effect on Thursday.

Kempthorne and a majority in the Senate argued that the additional cash from the higher cigarette tax was needed to avoid further spending reductions that the governor fears will affect essential services.

Before the April revenue report, many in the House contended the extra cash was unneeded. Some maintained that view anyway, continued to object to fixing broad-based budget problems with a tax that will be paid by only 20 percent of the Idaho population.

How they voted

Here is the 44-26 roll call vote by which the House of Representatives on Friday approved a 29-cent increase in the state cigarette tax. A "yes" vote was a vote for the tax, and there were 21 of those.

* Democrats for (16) – Anderson (Guyon), Bieter, Boe, Cuddy, Douglas, Henbest, Jaquet, Langford, Martinez (Echohawk), Mitchell, Narducci, Ringo, Robison, Sayler, Shepherd (Buell), Smith (30).
* Republicans against (26) – Barraclough (Schanz), Barrett, Bolz, Bradford, Campbell, Cannon, Clark, Collins, Crow, Eberle, Harwood, Kulczyk, Lake, Langford, McGeachin, McKague, Meyer, Moyle, Nielsen, Raybould, Roberts, Sali, Schaefer, Stevenson, Tilman, Wood.
* Democrats against (0) – None.

"We panicked and knee-jerked, and now we're going to solve the problem of the revenue decline on the backs of cigarette smokers," GOP Rep. Lenore Barrett of Challis said.

Critics warned that the higher tax will put Idaho retailers at a disadvantage and discourage consumption, thereby reducing revenues. But supporters pointed out that Idaho's tax will still remain lower than most border states and 35th nationally, well below the national average.

All 16 Democrats supported the increase after gaining some concessions from the GOP, including consideration of legislation delaying for at least a year a major change in the way school districts are reimbursed for transportation costs. The pending proposal strips nearly $3 million from six school districts.

And Republican leaders lured some conservatives behind the tax with the promise of passing a nonbinding resolution advising Kempthorne to cut up to 1 percent from education and Health and Welfare Department budgets next year to make ends meet.

Kempthorne's opposition to cutting any further from education budgets and providing at least some increase in next year's support level has been part of the reason the session has run five to six weeks longer than normal.

The governor has also said he will recall lawmakers into special session before he imposes another round of budget cuts – as he has three previous times in the past 18 months.

Iranian cleric urges Iraqis attack U.S. forces by dying

TEHRAN, Iran (AP) – A leading Iranian cleric urged Iraqis to use suicide attacks to expel U.S. forces from Iraq and learn from Iran's Islamic revolution to set up a new government.

"The Iraqi people have reached the conclusion that they have no option but to launch an intefadeh (uprising) and resort to martyrdom operations to expel the United States from Iraq," Ayatollah Ahmad Jannati told worshippers during Friday sermons in Tehran.

President Bush announced the end of major combat operations in Iraq on Thursday, but said U.S.-led coalition forces would remain there to restore order and establish a democratic government.

"Somebody – who has might but not logic – does not have dignity nor shame and doesn't listen to anybody," Jannati said, in an apparent reference to the Bush administration. His speech was broadcast live on Tehran radio.

Jannati, who heads Iran's powerful Guardian Council, said Iraqis should learn from Iran's 1979 Islamic revolution to establish a Shiite Muslim-controlled government.

"I urge the Iraqi people to remain united, follow clerics, make nonstop efforts to expel the enemy from Iraq's unsoiled land and establish an Islamic government ... This is the way. They (Iraqis) should learn from Iran's Islamic revolution," he said.

The power vacuum left in Iraq by Saddam Hussein's ouster has created competition between Iran and the United States for influence over Iraq's future government.

Iran's anti-American clerics say a free vote in Iraq would produce a Shiite-led Islamic government. Washington says Iraqis are free to choose their own government as long as it's not an Iranian-style theocracy.

Shiites form more than 60 percent of Iraq's population. A free vote in Iraq might produce an Islamic-oriented government with close ties to Iran's governing Shiite clerics.

Iraq was previously controlled by Saddam's Sunni Muslim regime.

The United States has accused Iran of meddling in Iraq. Iran's foreign minister rejected those charges, saying Iran only wants to see a democratic government in Baghdad, not one installed by America.

Senate OKs school funding

By Julie Pence
Times-News writer

BOISE – Public schools will likely have more trouble making ends meet next year than this year, but no one seems to know for sure how troubling that will be.

"We have 114 districts out there with 114 different stories," Oakley Republican Rep. Scott Bedke has said. Bedke was instrumental in working out a new way to distribute public school funding.

On Friday, the Senate Education Committee held a hearing to discuss the details. State Department of Education officials and lobbyists for education groups basically said the same. There is no pat answer on how each district will be affected by capping state appropriations for salaries transportation reimbursement and property tax relief.

"Children are important, and we don't experiment with the children," said Senate Education Committee Chairman Gary

What less salaries for schools could mean

The state plans to appropriate $3.7 million less this coming year for teachers' and administrators' salaries. Rep. Scott Bedke, R-Oakley, who helped craft a new way to appropriate the public school budget, has said money will be sent to schools in a "seamless and flexible" way. That means districts can slide funds from one account to another, depending on the need.

As far as scheduled salary increases are concerned, Bedke said districts have options. Because they might not get enough money to fund the increases on their salary schedules, they can freeze salaries, they can dip into contingency funds, they can pass override levies, or they can reduce staff.

Feedlot must make move after planners deadlock

By Jennifer Sandmann
Times-News writer

BURLEY – A dairyman doesn't know what he will do yet in response to a deadlocked county zoning board that debated his application for a feedlot northeast of Declo.

Alliance Land and Livestock LLC partner Brent Stoker said Friday he first needs to see the Cassia County Planning and Zoning Commission's written decision expected in about two weeks.

The commission delivered a tie vote Thursday night, and in effect Stoker's application failed.

But Stoker wasn't so sure.

"I don't know how to call it. Fail or pass, I don't know," he said.

He and his business partners want a 9,999-animal-unit feedlot to raise replacement heifers for their Moo Mountain Milk Inc. dairy south of Declo. The dairy is permitted for as many as 7,600 animal units.

Stoker's attorney, Don Pickett, said the feedlot application can be dropped or appealed or another site could be chosen.

"The third option would be to go across the street and perhaps a little closer to these people's homes," Pickett said.

Just across the road is the county's confined animal feeding operation overlay zone, he said. One of the reasons the existing site was chosen is that it is farther away from homes, he said.

The feedlot proposal has raised questions over the adequacy of the county's zoning ordinance. Among the issues is a stipulation that CAFOs cannot be located in areas with high water tables. The CAFO overlay zone is just across the road from the chosen site, where the water table is high.

Charlotte Armstrong lives about one and a quarter miles up the road. Neighbors are concerned about the potential for groundwater pollution from the waste of thousands of cows.

Jury convicts T.F. woman of kidnapping

TWIN FALLS – A Twin Falls jury after a trial this week convicted a woman on charges of aggravated battery and second-degree kidnapping, a prosecutor said.

A sentencing hearing for Christina Ann Rovig, 19, of Hansen has been set for June 23, said Twin Falls County Prosecutor Grant Loebs.

The charges stem from allegations made by Christine Marie Smith of Twin Falls. Smith told investigators that in October 2002, Rovig and Tiffany Rose Brave held her against her will and beat her, according to an affidavit written by Kimberly police officer Eric B. Foster and filed with court documents. Smith told officers that Rovig and Brave during the beating used a flashlight, a hammer head and what appeared to be the hammer's handle, according to Foster's affidavit.

Magic Valley in brief

Brave, 19, of Boulder, Colo., recently pleaded guilty to the second-degree kidnapping and aggravated battery charges against her, Loebs said.

Her sentencing date hadn't been set as of Friday, Loebs said.

Activists take last shot at Planned Parenthood

BOISE – Cutting Planned Parenthood out of federal funding, which is an idea many thought was dead for the session, got a surprise resurrection on Friday.

Idaho Falls Republican Sen. Mel Richardson made a motion in the Legislature's budget-writing committee to take $151,000 for 2003-2004 away from the organization and re-route it to health districts.

But northern Idaho Republican Sen. Shawn Keough pointed out the state would risk losing all of the $1 million it gets from the federal government for funding if lawmakers approved the motion. In addition, lawmakers concluded that health districts would not be able to use the extra money expeditiously because they do not have enough employees to administer the extra services.

Nevertheless, the vote was tied at 10 to 10.

As a result, the motion is dead for this year. However, it likely will be back next session as there is a movement afoot nationally to cut Planned Parenthood out of federal dollars.

Planned Parenthood of Idaho has centers in Boise and Twin Falls. It serves about 7,000 women.

Business lobby gives Legislature high marks

By Robert Mayer
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS – Though it's not over, the 2003 legislative session produced a handful of laws favorable to Idaho business.

"I think we had a reasonably good year this year," Dick Rush, vice president of Idaho Association of Commerce and Industry, told members of the Twin Falls Area Chamber of Commerce at their First Friday Membership Luncheon.

While most of focus remains on tax increases and the length of the session itself, Rush said some pro-business legislation made it through both houses and was signed by the governor into law.

For instance, a newly signed law that freezes unemployment insurance premiums saved Idaho businesses millions of dollars, he said.

The annual contributions made by businesses to the unemployment fund were scheduled to increase on a regular basis. Yet, despite the recent increase in unemployed workers, the fund continues to maintain sufficient money, built up during the state's boom times. As a result, increased business funding was deemed unnecessary.

This law froze the insurance tax rate at the 2002 level for the 2003-04 calendar year. Introduced by the Idaho Department of Labor, the bill was passed almost unanimously.

Another favorable law concerned the use of stringent environmental regulations, often a huge burden on businesses, Rush said. The IACI-sponsored bill requires the Department of Environmental Quality to use the best available science when passing regulations more stringent than those of the federal government. The language comes straight from the federal Clean Drinking Water Act of 1996, sponsored by then-U.S. Sen. Dirk Kempthorne.

The law benefits business by limiting environmental rules, Rush said.

"They have to be able to justify that there's a scientific reason to do that, not just a political reason," he said.

The tort-reform law which caps non-economic damages, such as pain and suffering, at $250,000 proved to be another pro-business law, Rush said.

While no legislation passed this session that can be considered anti-business, certainly the 1-cent sales tax increase will cause some harm, particularly to business along the state's border, he said.

Still, it could have been worse, he said. Aside from a possible tobacco tax increase, no taxes targeted individual industries or businesses; the sales tax is broad in its application.

"I think the Legislature was pretty cautious," Rush said.

Jerome should have new fire sub-station in December

By Dixie Thomas Reale
Times-News correspondent

JEROME – A new fire sub-station got the go-ahead this week and should be completed in December.

Architectural plans for the sub-station designed by ZGA Architects of Boise were submitted to the Jerome Urban Renewal Agency last month but listed the estimated cost at $1.1 million, roughly one-third more than the $800,000 urban renewal had budgeted.

Urban Renewal asked ZGA to work through the plans and numbers one more time. ZGA revised the estimate to $930,000. After looking through its annual budget, Urban Renewal accepted the architect's plans Thursday afternoon.

The sub-station will be located on a quarter-acre lot on 200 South Road West. When completed, the 103-by-75-foot sub-station will contain two drive-through bays, sleeping quarters for three, a living area, office space, a fitness room, storage and repair areas.

Representatives of ZGA have been meeting with a fire station sub-committee, made up of members of the urban renewal agency and the city fire chief, for several months to design the station.

City engineer Scott Bybee said he would advertise the project for bid as soon as he completes the paperwork.

The city has hired two additional firefighters to man the new fire station and will be hiring one more firefighter and one supervisor for the facility at an estimated salary of $30,000 per firefighter per year.

The city has not seen any projections on electricity or maintenance costs for the building, city administrator Travis Rothweiler said.

Other Urban Renewal business included:

- Wastewater plant – Plans for the wastewater treatment plant upgrade have been revised, Bybee said.

Hydroxyl pellets, which aid the treatment process, were originally included in Urban Renewal's contribution to the wastewater upgrade. However, the city will be including the pellets in a larger upgrade planned for next year.

By postponing use of the pellets until the larger upgrade is under way, urban renewal's contribution will be reduced from $700,000 to $500,000, freeing up money to be used elsewhere.

Urban Renewal has already purchased a belt press at $200,000 to remove moisture from the sludge after it leaves the digesters.

The city has been using the new belt press for several weeks. Urban Renewal will also finance the installation of the needed aeration equipment for around $300,000, Bybee said.

TV station interviews suspect in academy Internet probe

DENVER (AP) – The couple contacted him through the Internet, saying they were interested in joining group sex sessions he was organizing. Then they met him in person, asking him how he did it.

As an undercover KMGH-TV camera rolled, the man told two station employees posing as the couple that he was an Air Force Academy cadet who operated his Web site from his dormitory room.

"Shhhh ... I don't tell anybody because I would get kicked out," the man said in a transcript of the exchange posted Friday on the KMGH-TV Web site.

Four months after a sexual assault scandal at the academy broke, officials are investigating whether a cadet organized group sex sessions through the Internet.

The senior cadet, who has not been identified, is accused of sending e-mails to hundreds of people, and organizing and participating in sex sessions involving as many as two dozen men and one woman in nearby Colorado Springs and Denver, officials said.

The investigation began after the officials met with station reporters and viewed the tape.

The academy has been under scrutiny since dozens of female cadets said they were reprimanded or ostracized when they reported being raped. Its top officers have resigned. Three military investigations are under way and a civilian panel ordered by Congress will begin meeting later this month.

Federal officials said Friday it was not clear if any laws had been broken and that the investigation would be handled by the military.

In the transcript, the unidentified man said he knew he was breaking academy rules. The academy bars cadets from visiting pornographic or gambling Web sites.

He said he had been running the Web site, The Denver Horsemen, for two years, and up to 4,000 people were visiting it within four or five months.

Brig. Gen. Johnny Weida, who oversees academy cadets, said the site had been taken down, but would not comment on the length of time it had been in operation. Weida said he expects the investigation to be completed before May 28, when the cadet is scheduled to graduate.

U of I cracks down on overspending

MOSCOW (AP) – After years of talk, University of Idaho officials faced with a sizable deficit are starting to crack down on departments that are consistently overbudget.

Deficit-spending by various colleges and offices has resulted in millions of dollars of red ink.

In a better state economy, the deficit spending would have gone virtually unnoticed. But now, officials are writing policies to get the school back in the black and hold administrators accountable for going overbudget.

"We've been working on improving our controls for some time," said Wayland Winstead, the school's planning and budget chief. "In the past, we've not been very good about resolving our deficits, so they accumulated over the years."

One example is the $602,289 deficit facing the University Press, which publishes books, journals and other works, he said.

School administrators have discussed the deficit spending for two years, but the financial problems with the University Place project in Boise spurred action, he said.

The State Board of Education is conducting a management review of the university after learning it made about $10 million in loans to its nonprofit foundation for the huge complex of labs, classrooms and retail space.

One proposal is running all budget appropriations through a new university committee. Before, the president and the provost could make such decisions on their own, Winstead said.

He said the university's spending approach predates outgoing President Robert Hoover and even his predecessor, Elisabeth Zinser.

"This has been the way the University of Idaho has operated," he said.

Now, for the first time in Winstead's tenure, officials are drafting guidelines so the various departments and offices will be back on budget in three years, and writing penalties if they fail.

The Lionel Hampton Center Initiative is one area that must change, they say.

Between the Lionel Hampton Jazz Festival, the center and its visiting musical scholars program, the initiative is more than $500,000 in debt.

But the university is not ready to end the popular jazz festival any time soon, Winstead said. An oversight committee for the initiative may be formed like the one for intercollegiate athletics.

Olympic bid leaders ready for trial

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) – The two Olympic bid executives accused of bribery are confident of getting an acquittal and will go to trial instead of appealing a court decision reinstating the charges, one of their lawyers said Friday.

Blair Brown, an attorney for bid chief Tom Welch, also urged the U.S. Justice Department to drop the case, saying it will fail and has no public support for prosecuting bid leaders who insist the international system for cities vying to lure the Olympics was thoroughly corrupt.

The Justice Department said it wouldn't back off. That was little surprise given the April 22 ruling from the 10th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in Denver, which overturned a Utah judge who threw out the bribery racketeering case against Welch and his chief lieutenant Dave Johnson.

"We obviously agree with the 10th Circuit decision to reinstate the charges in this case, and we're preparing to take this case to trial," said Justice Department spokesman Brian Sierra. "Our position was clear in our appeal in the first place."

Career prosecutors who invested four years in the case felt vindicated by the appeals ruling and have no plans to drop the case or offer a plea bargain that Welch and Johnson say they won't accept anyway.

That standoff will set up a trial as early as this summer. It could feature lawyers for Welch and Johnson trying to expose the alleged complicity of many Utah political and business leaders, who sat on a board of trustees overseeing the winning bid for the games but said they were shocked to learn of the full extent of the executives' dealings.

"We think when all the evidence comes out, it will convince a jury that Tom and Dave are innocent," Brown said.

Speaking for both defendants, he said, "We don't expect to appeal. We think the time has come for a jury to hear the evidence, and we also hope the government will reconsider its case and allow Tom and Dave to get on with their lives."

Car crash claims Utah high school senior

MANTI, Utah (AP) – Manti high school senior Emily Bingham was killed Thursday after her car was rear-ended, forced across the center line of a highway, and hit head-on by a car going the opposite direction.

Bingham, who was 17, was driving northbound on U.S. 89 between Manti and Ephraim, Utah, and she had slowed to turn onto her street when a car of Manti high school students rear-ended her.

Local fire crews found the girl dead when they got there.

The high school canceled a school play scheduled for Thursday night.

Man pleads innocent in Arizona prostitute deaths

PHOENIX (AP) – A man pleaded innocent Friday to five counts of first-degree murder in the deaths of prostitutes whose bodies were found in a blighted downtown neighborhood over a nine-month period.

Cory Morris, 24, allegedly told police he lured women to his motor home with drugs, then strangled five of them during sex. He also admitted to dumping the body of a sixth woman, though he didn't say how she died, according to court records.

Morris was formally charged last month with the deaths of Jade Velasquez, 34, Sherri Nash, 37, Julie Ann Castillo, 39, Barbara Codman, 46, and Shanteria Davis, 32.

Morris was arrested April 17 after his uncle contacted authorities saying he found a woman's body in the motor home where his nephew had been staying.

Morris' attorney, Jim Logan, declined to comment on the case when contacted Friday by The Associated Press.

Rupert schools mull advisory period

By Shari Chaney
Times-News writer

RUPERT – The concepts in place for middle schools may need refining, teachers told the Minidoka County School Board Thursday.

East Minico Middle School teachers gave the board differing opinions on the new advisory period which was implemented when sixth-graders entered the middle school this year.

A student's advisory teacher doesn't change during the year and can help students with everything from personal problems to Idaho Standards Achievement Test scores, middle schools Coordinator Sandra Miller said.

Teachers also raised questions about shorter class periods in place this year. Teacher Terry Merrill pointed out the 55-minute classes, shortened from 70 minutes last year, mean less instruction in core subjects such as language arts. Test scores won't go up with less instruction, he said.

Miller said splitting reading and English into two separate required courses could add instructional time.

Merrill pointed out the advisory period also takes time away from instruction; the things learned in advisory about being better citizens could be taught in regular classes. Students learn many of the items taught in advisory at home, he added.

The advisory time is needed, teacher Julie Kraus countered, because not all children receive instruction at home. And, she said, the advisory period makes students accountable to an adult with whom they have a relationship.

If teachers are concerned about making every minute count teaching academics, they won't have time to be advocates for students, teacher Gwen Leone said. Advisory is a good place to meld being an advocate for the student, personal responsibility and academic progress.

Sixth-grade teacher Cara Nielson said the advisory time is invaluable in the sixth-grade as students adjust to middle school. The period has one teacher overseeing a small number of students.

Superintendent Nick Hallett noted the high school also holds advisory periods, but not daily.

Testing information

Federal programs director Jodie Mills shared test score data with the board members at Thursday's meeting, but told the board most information was seven or eight months old. ISAT testing is currently under way, Mills said.

Some teachers had current ISAT scores with them: "Incredible gains," Leone said.

Kraus said where seventh-grade math students were expected to hit a score of 226, "It's a 229. That's totally good."

Mills presented recent direct writing and direct math scores. Sixth-grade Direct Math Assessment scores showed 12 percent of students at proficient, 48 percent at a basic level and 40 percent below basic. The test was a pilot test, Mills noted.

Scores in the eighth-grade Direct Math Assessment show 51 percent of students below basic, 31 percent at a basic level, 15 percent at proficient and 3 percent above proficient.

Teacher Jim Watkins asked about help fixing computer problems which arise during the ISATs. Students can be 42 questions into the test and then have to shut down and reboot because of computer problems, he said. It frustrates the students.

Hallett said it could be software problems which can't be solved by anyone in the district. Other problems may be from using labs that were meant for things other than testing.

Burley farmer plans two wind turbines

The Times-News

BURLEY – The Cassia County Planning and Zoning Commission has approved two wind turbines on a Burley Butte farm.

LeRoy Jarolimek estimates he will generate enough power to cover his residential power needs and possibly more that he can sell on the power grid. A larger turbine will generate power for his irrigation pump and serve as research and demonstration project for farmers and property owners interested in generating their own power.

When inclement weather hits, the turbines will be turning.

"When it's the worst weather, we're going to make money off the turbines and make up for losses on the farm," Jarolimek said.

A residential turbine, at 225 S. 605 W., will be up to 100 feet tall and generate up to 54,000 kilowatts of power a year.

The larger turbine, at 250 S. to 655 W., could be up to 200 feet tall and generate up to 1.5 million kilowatts of power a year.

Guiding him through his project are experts from the Idaho Energy Division, Idaho Power Co. and the Idaho National Engineering and Environmental Laboratory.

Jarolimek is so devoted to developing wind power that he has rented out his farm and now devotes his attention to his new business, Wind Advantage. He measures wind potential for property owners.

Based on wind studies done on his property, he estimates that with this project he could earn more than $1.2 million over the next 20 years from generating wind power.

Commissioners unanimously approved a conditional use permit Thursday night for each turbine.

Commissioner Dee Yeaman, a builder, abstained from the vote because he said he had a potential economic conflict of interest. Jarolimek must follow Federal Aviation Administration lighting requirements for air traffic safety.

Second-graders remain at Big Valley next year

By Shari Chaney
Times-News writer

RUPERT – By the 2004-05 school year, all Rupert second-graders will likely attend classes at Memorial Elementary School.

Currently, only two classes of second-graders attend Big Valley Elementary School. Most second-graders attend Memorial.

Last month, the Minidoka County School Board voted to relocate the Even Start program into Big Valley Elementary School and have all second-graders attend Memorial, effective with the start of school this fall.

But board members changed their minds after hearing a presentation Thursday night from Big Valley Elementary personnel, who say several programs will end at their school if second-graders leave.

The two classes of second-graders will stay at Big Valley for the upcoming school year, but be moved to Memorial Elementary the following year, the board decided Thursday. Even Start will be housed at Big Valley starting this fall.

There are second-graders at Paul and Acequia elementary; those classes will remain in those schools.

Principal Alan Cardon said Big Valley second-graders are performing well at Big Valley and there's room for Even Start, too.

"We can house them and keep our second-grade classes," Cardon said.

School employees told board members they were concerned about losing programs such as the student assistance program, where music teacher Stan Bruns and art teacher Vickie Neiwert make themselves available to help students with problems such as anger management, divorcing parents, parents in jail, difficulties making friends or being disruptive in class.

With the lower number of students at Big Valley, Bruns and Neiwert wouldn't be at the school full time, Cardon said. They would have to spend time at other schools.

The basic needs of the students must be met before academic achievement can happen, Cardon said. "You can't teach kids effectively in a disorderly environment."

One parent spoke in support of the assistance program. Her son was helped in the anger management program and is a much better student now.

A letter was also read in support of the assistance program. Two boys had been helped in dealing with grief after their sister died.

Moving second-graders back to Memorial would change administration allocations at both schools. Currently Karen Skeen is three-quarter-time principal at Memorial and one-quarter-time assistant administrator at Big Valley. With second-graders all at Memorial, she could be at Memorial full time.

Skeen said parents and teachers have said there needs to be a full-time administrator at Memorial Elementary.

Cardon said Big Valley could do without the quarter-time administrator position.

There would also be a ripple effect of teachers being less willing to come to the district beginning with two involuntary transfers due to moving the second-graders, Cardon said.

Board member George MacDonald said that when the few second-graders were moved over to Big Valley it was because there was no room at Memorial; the move wasn't meant to be permanent.

After approving keeping the status quo for the upcoming year, board chairman Randee Martin said it was good to hear from teachers about the pros and cons of the situation.

"They're in the trenches. We're not," Martin said.

Investigators visit natural gas pipeline rupture site

AUBURN, Wash. (AP) – Natural gas from a ruptured 26-inch pipeline blasted a crater in the earth and bent surrounding vegetation like a powerful wind, frightening many but injuring no one.

The escape of gas outside this suburb between Seattle and Tacoma was halted in about an hour and a half Thursday without a fire, and the neighborhood soon returned to normal with the return of hundreds who had been evacuated.

Investigators arrived at the site Friday to look for the cause of the accident. They included representatives from the Pipeline Safety Division of the state Utilities and Transportation Commission, which is leading the probe; the National Transportation Safety Board; the state Department of Transportation; and pipeline owner Williams Gas Pipeline West, said Beverly Chipman, spokeswoman for parent company Williams Cos. in Salt Lake City.

Officials searching the area Friday found a broken section of the natural gas pipeline in a wooded area about 300 feet away. The company said the metal will be tested at a lab in Houston as part of the investigation.

Criminal activity has been ruled out as a possible cause, Chipman said.

Company crews also began repairing the break. "We'll be back in service no later than Monday morning, if not sooner," she said.

Once the investigation is concluded, UTC spokesman Tim Sweeney said, the commission will file a report with the federal Office of Pipeline Safety, which will determine whether any violations occurred and if any penalties or fines should be imposed.

Schools

Schroeder, R-Moscow. "I'm opposed to shaking things up without knowing what's going to happen."

Nevertheless, an anxious-to-get-home Senate passed five bills to fund public schools for the 2003-2004 school year. The legislation contains changes to 135 lines of Idaho Code that were negotiated during the mid-1990s between lawmakers and school groups. One change includes taking lottery money away from schools for capital improvements and putting it into a fund to pay for interest for new school buildings in poor districts. A couple of other changes take away $2 million for mentoring for new teachers and funding for classroom supplies such as paper and pencils. And early retirement for administrators is on the way out.

The hastily concocted plan has changed almost daily over the past week in its total amount, but as of Friday there seemed to be about $95 million for schools and another $7 million for a savings account because of holdbacks.

Local Republicans David Noh of Kimberly, Denton Darrington of Declo and Democrats Clint Stennett of Ketchum and Fred Kennedy of Mountain Home opposed the legislation. Rupert Republican Dean Cameron supported it.

Cameron, who sponsored the first of the "Bedke plan" bills, said the legislation would empower school boards.

The five bills are broken out into a children's division, teachers' division, administrative division, maintenance and operations division and a transportation division.

"This provides clarity as to what we are spending," Cameron said. "Breaking it out makes it easier to track. This budget empowers the local districts by putting the power right back at the local district where it ought to be."

Boise Republican Cecil Ingram explained that people would be able to better understand how their districts are being managed and vote responsibly on what they are seeing.

But Darrington, a retired Declo teacher, disagreed about power going back to the local level.

"We are micro-managing as a Legislature," Darrington said.

He took personally the funding legislation, along with earlier-in-the-session legislation that stops union dues from being deducted from teachers' paychecks.

"Teachers and administrators don't always receive the respect they deserve," he said.

Noh warned that lawmakers could ultimately pay a price, since polls for the past 14 years have shown the public does not want cuts in spending for public schools.

"I think it is very, very dangerous to vote for this," he said. "So many of the people I talk to back home are so terribly distressed about this legislation."

Noh, who is married to a Kimberly School District administrator, said he took the most offense to separating out what the Legislature pays for teachers and what it pays for children. He said the nature of education is that teachers and children cannot be separated. The new policy could be perceived by some as the Legislature assigning retribution to certain groups of people, Noh said.

Today the House is expected to approve the public school funding legislation.

Feedlot

"I knew it would be a close vote. I'm not surprised it turned out to be a tie," she said Friday. "The county needs it economically, but not in a place where so many people and the city of Declo would be affected."

She wasn't alone in her confusion over how commissioners interpreted different portions of the zoning ordinance.

A crowd of about 75 people seemed to hang on every word as commissioners deliberated Thursday night in the Little Theater at the King Fine Arts Center. There were some gasps and at one point a collective sigh of disgust from the crowd.

Commissioners Vaughn Cook and Bruce Beck voted against the permit and Commissioners Dee Yeaman and Joyce Ward voted for it. Commissioners Rod Lake, Randy Robinson and Clayne S. Zollinger Jr. abstained because of potential conflicts of interest.

Cook, Beck and Ward voted the same way they had done in July 2002 when the permit passed by a 1-vote margin. But a procedural issue sent the permit back before the board, and two of the three original supporting votes no longer are on the commission.

Yeaman, a new commissioner, cast Thursday's tie vote.

County Administrator Kerry McMurray, the zoning board's attorney, said the livestock company could opt to appeal to the county commission.

Appeals must be filed within 28 days of the written decision, which is expected to be ready at the commission's next meeting May 15.

Commissioners said they struggled over the economic benefit the feedlot could bring to the county versus the effects it could have on neighbors.

"I have to make a motion to deny this application. ... Hopefully we can find an area that will work for them," Beck said.

Rising nitrate levels and a vulnerable groundwater table documented in a state siting team's report concerned Beck and Cook, even if feedlot operators took measures to limit risk.

Yeaman agreed that the site wasn't the best and said that zoning laws should be changed. But existing laws allow for the feedlot, he said. He kept going back to the words "unreasonable" and "excessive" in county regulations and decided the proposal was not either of those.

"To me it's been a conflict of a social issue or a legal issue," Yeaman said.

McMurray advised commissioners that a motion to approve the permit should stipulate it be limited to fewer animal units.

The county's zoning ordinance limits the density of confined animal feeding operations to five animals per acre. The proposed site is 877 acres, which would provide enough land for about half of the proposed number of cows.

Yeaman said he was comfortable with the 9,999 limit. He said Friday that he based his decision on testimony by the livestock company that its manure contracts with other farms provided adequate acreage.

Budget writers put final pieces in place

BOISE (AP) – Legislative budget writers put the final pieces of the 2003-2004 state general tax spending blueprint together on Friday, clearing the way for lawmakers to adjourn the longest session in Idaho history on Saturday.

In its final session, the House-Senate panel approved multimillion-dollar budgets for Health and Welfare Department programs, higher education and agriculture research.

All those bills still needed approval today from both houses before the session can end.

The budgets were generally acceptable to Gov. Dirk Kempthorne. None was scaled back in response to the report of a dramatic decline in tax collections for April, creating a major deficit in the current budget that will have to be dealt with later this year.

House Speaker Bruce Newcomb said that even though lawmakers voted to more than double the cigarette tax, it will not be enough to keep the current and next budgets in balance and there is probably no way to avoid the Legislature reconvening in special session later this year to balance the budget.

That would probably occur after August, when the administration updates its revenue outlook.

In a series of lopsided partisan votes, the budget panel approved a $376 million Health and Welfare budget that provides a 4 percent increase in payments for foster parents, gives the go-ahead for the department to hire independent experts to assess treatment needs of Medicaid recipients and shifts the cost of the Prevnar pneumonia vaccine to families if they have insurance coverage that will pay.

Overall, the department's budget is 4.5 percent higher than this year. Lawmakers and the administration took advantage of a number of strategies to keep non-Medicaid spending down to offset a nearly 8 percent increase in the cost of providing health care to the poor.

The committee authorized 2.1 percent increases in general tax support for the three universities, Lewis-Clark State College, the two community colleges in Coeur d'Alene and Twin Falls, the vocational education programs and the University of Idaho's agricultural research and extension services.

The research and extension budget was the only one to secure more support than the governor recommended. The committee added $160,000 to assure agents remain in all counties and maintain facilities at the dozen research centers across the state.

The other budgets ran anywhere from $1 million to $4 million less than Kempthorne proposed, but the administration indicated it was willing to accept those spending levels to finally bring the session to an end.

Senate honors wounded Marine

BOISE (AP) – A Marine from southwestern Idaho, who was wounded during the final weeks of the Iraq war, was honored on Friday by the state Senate.

Lance Cpl. Jacob Tucker, 18, of Caldwell, walked on to the floor of the Senate with his parents to receive the proclamation congratulating him on his service and assuring "our servicemen and women of our continuing concern for their welfare and prayers for their safe return."

Tucker was a radio operator with a company patrolling downtown Baghdad two weeks ago when guerrillas opened fire. Tucker was shot in the shoulder and the bullet punctured his lung.

He underwent surgery in Germany and was further treated on the East Coast. He returned to Caldwell this week after receiving a Purple Heart.

Just a year ago, Tucker had been a volunteer on the campaign of Republican Lt. Gov. James Risch, who welcomed him to the Capitol.

"I love politics," Tucker told the Idaho Senate. "I just hope someday I'm good enough to sit in your seats."

Teens waive preliminary hearing in Nevada slaying

LAS VEGAS (AP) – A Utah brother and sister charged in a deadly knife attack outside a Mesquite casino waived their preliminary hearing Friday in a move their lawyers said was made to protect the family of the victims.

Beau and Monique Maestas appeared briefly and agreed to waive the hearing, which would have determined whether there was enough evidence to take the case to trial.

Instead, their arraignment was set for May 19 in Clark County District Court.

During Friday's Justice Court proceeding, the siblings stood quietly with their lawyers, saying "yes" in unison when Justice of the Peace Ron Dodd asked whether they agreed to forgo the hearing.

Beau Maestas, 19, and his 17-year-old sister have been charged with murder and attempted murder in the Jan. 22 knife attack, and the court has ruled that Monique Maestas should be tried as an adult.

The two are accused of attacking 3-year-old Kristyanna Cowan and her sister Brittney Bergeron, 10, in a trailer outside the CasaBlanca hotel-casino in Mesquite, a fast-growing town near the Nevada-Utah border.

Cowan died in the attack, and Bergeron was paralyzed. Authorities have said Beau Maestas told them the attack occurred after the mother of the girls and her boyfriend cheated him in a drug deal. The children were stabbed while the couple was inside the casino, eating and gambling.

Lawyer accuses police of Smart case leak

He says details were given to Salt Lake Tribune staffers

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) – A lawyer for the family of Elizabeth Smart said Friday that police and FBI officials leaked information about the case to two local reporters who were later fired for working with the National Enquirer.

Attorney Randy Dryer also said officials with the Utah Department of Public Safety and the Secret Service gave details about the case to the reporters for The Salt Lake Tribune.

The reporters, Michael Vigh and Kevin Cantera, avoided legal action by the Smart family by identifying the anonymous sources of their information, Dryer said. He refused to identify any of the sources.

"Clearly this is explosive information that could have detrimental impacts on people's jobs and their careers," Dryer said.

Vigh and Cantera, paid $10,000 each by the National Enquirer, were fired Tuesday from the Tribune for lying about their work for the tabloid, whose July 2 story was headlined "Utah Cops: Secret Diary Exposes Family Sex Ring".

The tabloid has retracted the story, settled with the Smart family and apologized for the false information.

Tribune editor James E. Shelledy resigned Thursday because of the scandal, which owner-publisher Dean Singleton said has done serious damage to the Tribune's credibility.

Dryer said Vigh and Cantera, as part of a settlement between the Enquirer and the Smart family, disclosed the sources of their information that fed the tabloid's story as well as other stories about the case that the Tribune published.

The former reporters did so in exchange for the Smart family's promise not to take legal action against them, Dryer said. Copies of a 3-page letter laying out his information on the leaks were sent to the U.S. Attorney, the state Attorney General and the Salt Lake County District Attorney, said Dryer. He refused to identify the names of those accused of leaking information.

The city police Friday afternoon issued a statement saying the department hasn't received "any specific information" about leaks to reporters. Nor would Chief Rick Dinse comment on Dryer's letter.

Dryer also said that some of the leaks came from the U.S. Secret Service and the state Department of Public Safety.

The Secret Service refused to comment, citing an ongoing internal investigation into the matter. Calls to the FBI and were not immediately returned. The Department of Public Safety said it had no additional information regarding Dryer's letter.

The Smart family, in a statement, said they "hold no personal animosity toward those who have acted in less than honorable ways. We again express our sincere gratitude to all those who worked so hard and with great compassion and integrity. The poor actions of a few should not spoil the good work of so many."

The Enquirer claims Cantera in a taped phone conversation vouched for the accuracy of the information the tabloid published, some of which Cantera said he got from law enforcement sources.

Dryer said Cantera told him he fabricated information he claimed was from a family member's journal that the Enquirer cited as another source.

Elizabeth Smart appears on TV show

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) – Elizabeth Smart appeared Friday on the syndicated television program "The John Walsh Show," playing the harp.

During the show, taped in advance, her parents, Ed and Lois Smart, spoke with host Walsh about the new nationwide Amber Alert legislation that President Bush signed Wednesday.

Elizabeth, 15, played two songs on the harp but didn't speak.

"Beautiful. Beautiful. Thank you so much," Walsh said, applauding her performance.

She made her first public appearance since her return to her family during a ceremony Wednesday at the White House Rose Garden. She has yet to speak publicly about her ordeal.

The teen was taken at knifepoint from her bedroom in the early hours of June 5 and held for nine months before being found in a Salt Lake City suburb on March 12. A religious zealot and his wife are charged in the kidnapping.

Boise-area resort predicts ski lifts open in December

BOISE (AP) – Developers of a four-season resort on Lake Cascade say they will install chairlifts to offer skiing by next winter.

Tamarack Resort plans to open the mountain to alpine skiing on Dec. 23.

Chief Executive Officer Jean-Pierre Boespflug has signed an agreement with Leitner-Poma of America to buy two high-speed, four-person chairlifts and a poma-platter lift. The price tag is $6 million.

Tamarack said the ski runs will open a year earlier than originally planned.

A construction crew of local workers will assist Leitner supervisors.

Three major runs will be created this summer so skiers can cover the 2,800-foot vertical drop from the summit to the base area.

One quad lift will bring skiers to the mid-mountain restaurant area, and the second ascends from there to the summit.

The poma lift will transport skiers about 1,000 feet from cottages and homes to the base area.

Nampa mayor suggests sister city hospital

NAMPA (AP) – Mayor Tom Dale has challenged local churches to help build a hospital in Nampa's sister city of Tizapan el Alto, Mexico.

Dale met Thursday with a city service club for the National Day of Prayer and related his trade mission to the impoverished town of 45,000 people in the state of Jalisco.

He said Tizapan el Alto has only one ambulance and a few poorly equipped clinics.

Quality medical care requires a drive of nearly two hours to the nearest big city, Guadalajara.

"I had a vision for a way Nampa could help. We could do this as a joint operation," Dale said, explaining churches could send members to work on one large humanitarian project together instead of several smaller ones individually.

Can Congress afford to pass the proposed tax cut?

Yes

Cuts will result in expansion of job opportunities

NORBERT MICHEL

Can we afford a big tax cut right now?

That's what the arguments against the president's $726 billion proposal boil down to, really. The fact that we've been at war, that the economy remains sluggish, that we've returned to deficit spending – all amount to a concern about price.

It would be a valid concern, too, if tax cuts simply extracted money from the economy. Then it would be a bad idea to slash our collective income just as our expenses were set to rise. It would make much more sense to go with $550 billion or $450 billion or $350 billion – or whatever number congressional skeptics such as Sens. George Voinovich, R-Ohio, and Olympia Snowe, R-Maine, are currently embracing.

But that's not how tax cuts work. Properly constructed, they result in more jobs, more savings and more income.

Indeed, a tax cut that encourages long-term growth by making it cheaper for people to invest – and eliminating the tax individuals pay on dividends would do that in spades – is exactly what our fragile economy needs, even (perhaps especially) when there's a war to pay for.

Yet the dividend part of the president's plan is just what congressional tax-cut opponents are targeting. Many would prefer a temporary, "fiscally responsible" tax cut instead. But that idea has already been found wanting: The $300 and $600 rebates mailed to taxpayers in 2001 were a sop to this way of thinking, and they did nothing to boost the economy.

We should never try to induce consumer spending at the expense of our long-term economic health. As the Congressional Budget Office noted in an analysis of the president's budget, encouraging higher government spending and private consumption hurts economic growth in the long term. By focusing instead on pro-growth tax cuts, lawmakers can ensure a quicker and smoother economic recovery.

A dividend tax cut is an excellent way to do this. It's why the $726 billion plan would lead to more business expansion and more jobs – an annual average of 914,000 more jobs over the next five years, a recent Heritage Foundation analysis found. By contrast, a $350 billion tax cut would create about 362,000 new jobs annually. That's nothing to sneeze at, but why settle for generating only about one-third the number of new jobs we could get if we go with the original $726 billion package?

Tax-cut critics have one more ace up their sleeve, however – deficits. Look at what happened when Congress enacted a big tax cut in the 1980s, they say. The budget was plunged into red ink because the 1981 cut drained federal revenues.

But facts sometimes have an inconvenient way of wrecking such tidy cause-and-effect arguments. Take a look at the revenue figures for the 1980s, and a different picture emerges. In 1980, the last year before the tax cut, the government took in $956 billion (in inflation-adjusted dollars). Did government revenues drop like a stone, per the hand-wringing predictions tax-cut opponents made then? On the contrary. In all but two of the next 10 years, revenues rose as much as $265 billion (and even in the two "off" years, they came close to matching it).

The real culprit behind the Great Deficit Mystery is government spending, which also rose in the 1980s. But try telling that to the critics, who still accuse tax-cut advocates of pushing "voodoo economics." They'd rather stick with short-term stimulus, it seems.

Yet it stands to reason that when individuals are faced with job and war uncertainties, providing them with one-time tax rebates will do little to change their outlook, and it's outlook that drives behavior – how much people save, spend and invest. And that's true whether we're at war or not.

No

Bush's plan translates into big oil subsidy

MARVIN HOROWITZ AND DANIEL MCGROARTY

Fighting the last war: That's the boogeyman of every military strategist since Vietnam. It has its domestic corollary, however, as Democrats and Republicans are proving in today's tax debate.

The dirty little secret of mainstream politicians, Democrat and Republican alike, is their collective collusion that the actions they take can fix – or, for that matter, fracture – the economy. The truth is that U.S. economy is simply much too large, and subject to macro-economic factors that regularly outweigh the likely impacts of tax policy.

Consider the current tax cut debate. Having opened the bidding with a $726 billion tax package, President Bush now claims he will settle for a $550-billion tax cut spread over 10 years; opponents want a slimmed down $350 billion package. The difference may look large to the untrained eye, but given the likelihood that our $10 trillion a year economy will generate $100 trillion in wealth over the next decade, today's tax cuts are rather small: The difference between one-third of 1 percent and one-half of 1 percent of GDP. Claiming either one will lever the economy into recovery is a little like trying to lift a boulder with a soda straw.

That's especially true, considering the tax cut just passed – by Gen. Tommy Franks and his troops. To be sure, the major nation-building effort has only just begun, but one thing is already abundantly clear: Iraq's post-Saddam "Marshall Plan" will be self-financed, in billions of barrels of oil. Given the consensus that a free Iraq could be pumping at the country's pre-Desert Storm capacity by year's end, and could double its oil production as the decade wears on, Iraq may well emerge as a second Saudi Arabia.

Which is where Gen. Franks' tax cut comes in: Imagine that the price of a barrel of oil falls from the one-year average spot price of $26 to $20, as an increasing number of oil industry analysts now think likely. At current U.S. consumption levels of approximately 7.3 billion barrels a year, the fall in price results in a "tax cut" for the U.S. economy of more than $44 billion in 2004. Project that savings against estimated U.S. oil consumption for the next 10 years, and the savings approaches $500 billion. That's an amount almost equal to the president's proposed tax cut, sans legislation.

Add to that savings stimulus the fact that an oil price decline of that magnitude will do wonders for the national and world economies. Economic models predict that a $5 decrease in the price of a barrel of oil increases U.S. GDP in absolute terms by a half of 1 percent. In a $10 trillion economy, a boost in GDP to 3.5 percent from 3 percent accelerates national economic growth by almost 17 percent, or $50 billion a year. As an added jump start to an anemic economy, that can't hurt.

So why won't the White House take to the hustings to argue the case for the Gen. Franks tax cut? Probably because it comes too close to validating the "Blood for Oil" placards waved at so many anti-war rallies. But to twist the fact that Saddam's fall would help both the people of Iraq and the world economy into the cynical brief of Blood for Oil confuses cause and consequence. Oil, quite simply, was and will be the Iraqi economy: Now, instead of fueling Saddam's "Oil for Palaces" program – in Gen. Franks' apt phrase – it will fuel an "Oil for Freedom" program, with the benefits flowing to the Iraqi people for a change.

Meanwhile back in Washington, sometime between now and October, a compromise will be reached, a tax cut will pass, and the generals of both parties will claim victory in the tax wars. That won't change the fact that the biggest economic stimulus we're likely to see for the next few years has already been passed, in the form of the liberation of Iraq and the decline in the price the world will pay for oil.

Maybe Legislature will have the courage to leave

Three cheers for our Idaho State senators! Despite being unable to bite the bullet and either increase taxes or cut expenses to balance the budget during the longest-running session ever, they have heroically introduced the following bill in the Senate:

"SJM 106 (state affairs) – Congratulates Buddy Gil, the bay gelding from Hagerman, and his owners, Donnie and Judy McFadden, on winning the Santa Anita Derby in preparation for the Kentucky Derby" (Times-News, April 25).

Truly a vitally important, much-needed piece of legislation! Am so happy someone had time to come up with this rather than doing what he, she or they were elected to do.

Four days after the above "bill" was printed in The Times-News, this 114-day session (to date) has agreed on an additional 1-cent sales tax. Maybe one day soon the legislators will just go home.

Extending Idaho inmates' sentences is unconstitutional

This year I have repeatedly sent to all legislators and the governor, the following information:

"There are currently, in Idaho prisons, approximately 1000 men and women, who are non-violent offenders, being forced to remain in prison past their top-out dates. A top-out date is the date, set by their sentencing court, which mandates when they should be released from the jurisdiction of the Idaho Department of Corrections to reserve parole time. Lawyers with national standing have told me they believe this is unconstitutional.

Keeping these people incarcerated sometimes for years, beyond their release time, is costing Idaho taxpayers approximately $2 million a month. The parole commission has no idea how many of these prisoners they are holding.

Information I have received from an incarcerated male contact stated he had easily found 30 non-violent men in this situation, in just one area, of one part, of one prison; even though their numbers are not being 'tracked' by the parole commission."

I asked for a response from the governor and all the legislators. On April 26, I received this reply from Rep. Leon Smith. "You make a very good point that I have inquired about myself. This is a function within the control of the governor and the parole board. We (legislators) exercise no power over this situation."

My response to Smith went as follows.

"The governor's office says this rule change would be the responsibility of the parole commission; the Legislature says it is the responsibility of the governor and the parole commission; Tracy Shearer from the parole commission says, 'Commission rules are reviewed, amended and approved by the Legislature in accordance with Chapter 52, Title 67, Idaho Code. 67-5224 (b) and 67-5291 specifically address legislative rule approval.'

At this late date is there any thing you can do? Or are the taxpayers going to have to fork over another $24 million which should be going to education; the non-violent offenders going to have to spend another year in prison past their release dates; their families suffer yet another year without the benefit of the non-violent prisoners' emotional, physical, and financial support; the IDOC experience another year of overcrowding while pleading for new prisons; and the state of Idaho lose another year of these non-violent people contributing to the tax and creative work base of their communities?

And if that year should go by without that one word correction to Rule 50.400.10, who is served?"

ULAHWTI
Twin Falls

(Editor's note: Officials at the Department of Corrections say inmates who are parolled, then violate their parole, are reincarcerated and do not receive credit for parole time served. This adds time to their top-out dates. The aforementioned estimated costs for extended top-out dates are from

Twin Falls doesn't need street name changes

Sorry, I can't stand it any longer without saying something the old saying fits: "If it's not broke, don't fix it." I can't imagine why we need to go to the trouble and expense to change the names of streets that have served us so well since the start of Twin Falls.

I was a delivery salesman in and around Twin for more than 30 years and was asked many times for directions, and what could be simpler to tell people – avenues run one way and streets run the other and that the original town is in four sections. What could be easier, changing to names sure won't make it easier.

In all my contacts, some don't care, but I have talked to no one who thinks it's necessary. It may be really important sometime for our police, firemen or ambulance driver to know exactly where the corner of Fourth Avenue North and Third Street North or Sixth Avenue East and Fourth Street East without any hesitation; why not keep it simpler.

And the expense. How many thousands is this going to cost for signs and labor to install. If we have money we have to spend, let's give it to the schools, police or fire department for something needed; maybe to the parks for ball diamonds, soccer fields or equipment, added and upgraded restrooms at these places or somewhere else we can all enjoy. And our kids and grandkids will have more things to do.

Sorry, I can't see the waste, and I'm not alone.

Pakistan and India OK talks

NEW DELHI, India (AP) – After a two-year gap marked by mobilization for war, nuclear-armed India and Pakistan agreed Friday to hold talks to settle five decades of disputes and to restore full diplomatic ties.

The rapprochement comes ahead of an impending visit to the region by U.S. Deputy Secretary of State Richard Armitage, and both sides suggested that the trip helped bring them together.

In a first step, Indian Prime Minister Atal Bihari Vajpayee announced he was sending an ambassador to Pakistan and restoring air links.

Pakistan also announced it wants to resume ambassador-level relations and hold talks but did not respond to the offer to resume landing and civilian over-flight rights.

"Things are moving very fast," Pakistan's information minister, Sheikh Rashid Ahmed, said in Islamabad. "Soon both prime ministers are going to see each other."

Vajpayee, 78 and ailing, suggested he wanted to cap his career with a historic peace agreement.

"This round of talks will be decisive, and at least for my life, these will be the last," he told India's Parliament.

U.S. Secretary of State Colin Powell called the renewed contacts "very, very promising."

The two countries sent troops to their borders and went on war alert last year after India blamed Pakistan for a December 2001 attack by Islamic militants on the Parliament.

Pakistan denied involvement. Tensions eased after intense diplomacy by the United States and Britain.

The main source of friction is Kashmir, divided between them and claimed by both in its entirety. Pakistan and India have fought two of their three wars over the region since their independence from Britain in 1947.

"We are committed to the improvement of relations with Pakistan and we are willing to grasp every opportunity for doing so," Vajpayee told Indian lawmakers.

Nuclear neighbors will talk

India and Pakistan agreed Friday to restore diplomatic relations and hold peace talks for the first time in nearly two years. The main source of friction for decades has been Kashmir, divided between them and claimed by both in its entirety.

Submarine sailors die in accident

BEIJING (AP) – An accident on a Chinese diesel-powered submarine killed all 70 sailors aboard, the government said Friday, in a rare admission of a military disaster.

The accident occurred "recently" in the Yellow Sea off China's northeast coast, the official Xinhua News Agency said in a brief report that didn't explain how the sailors died. It said the vessel had been towed back to an unidentified port.

Despite its lack of details, the report appeared to be an attempt by China's government to appear more open. The government of newly installed President Hu Jintao has been promising more candor as it fights an outbreak of severe acute respiratory syndrome that has killed at least 181 people in China.

The report was the first time China has announced a fatal submarine accident, said Bernard Cole, a professor at the U.N. National War College in Washington and a specialist on the Chinese navy.

"There have been rumors going around about the loss of submarines, but this is the first fatal accident that I know of," Cole said.

Nevertheless, the Chinese military did not comment on the accident Friday night. Xinhua said former President Jiang Zemin, who remained chairman of the commission that runs the military after stepping down as China's leader, had sent condolences to families of the crew.

Russian President Vladimir Putin sent Hu a telegram expressing condolences. Putin's government was criticized for its slow response to the sinking of the nuclear submarine Kursk in 2000.

The Chinese submarine was on an exercise when the accident occurred and "because of a mechanical malfunction, the 70 crew members on board died," Xinhua said.

Foreign military analysts said it would be unusual for an accident to kill everyone aboard a submarine while still allowing the Chinese military to retrieve the vessel.

They said that suggested possible causes ranging from a sinking in the shallow Yellow Sea after a collision to a disaster that flooded the vessel with toxic fumes.

Michael McGinty, an expert on the Chinese navy from the Royal United Services Institute for Defense Studies in London, said that the accident probably happened while the submarine was on the surface. If the accident happened when the vessel was under water, it was less likely that China could have recovered it, said McGinty, a former British submariner.

"For an accident to have been so catastrophic when the submarine was on the surface, I find it a very mysterious thing," he said.

McGinty said that the submarine's batteries might have leaked acid that mixed with sea water, creating toxic chlorine gas. Or the torpedoes might have leaked propellant that poisoned the crew, he said.

Kurds, Turks clash at earthquake site

BINGOL, Turkey (AP) – Police fired warning shots Friday as angry Kurds stoned official vehicles to protest a shortage of earthquake relief supplies while searchers pressed the hunt for children still buried in a collapsed school dormitory.

One boy was pulled alive from the rubble Friday morning, 30 hours after the quake, but funerals began for dozens of youngsters already found dead.

With no further signs of life evident in the debris of the four-story building, searchers began using cranes and heavy equipment to work through the debris despite protests from parents.

"God took him, why are you cutting him into pieces?" screamed Fethi Ketenalp, the father of a missing 14-year-old who threw himself in front of a crane.

Although sniffer dogs and electronic listening equipment had not located any survivors since morning, searchers said they still harbored hope. People can live for several days trapped under debris.

"This is still a search and rescue operation," insisted Ahmet Aydin, in charge of the emergency center at the site in Celtiksuyu, a village outside Bingol.

By Friday evening, 32 students were listed as missing, after 117 had been rescued and 49 found dead, officials said. The children, ages 7 to 16, were mostly from poor Kurdish farming families and lived at the school because they had no way to get back and forth from their villages.

The confirmed death toll from Thursday's quake rose to 115, and about 1,000 people were injured. It was not clear if the official figures took into account the latest bodies extracted from the dormitory.

In villages across the area, Friday was a day of mourning and burials.

Striking Nigerian oil workers agree to release hostages from four oil rigs

LAGOS, Nigeria (AP) – Striking Nigerian oil workers will release hundreds of hostages they've held for weeks aboard rigs off the West African nation's shore, negotiators said Friday.

The agreement securing the release of the more than 250 captives – which include 35 Britons, 17 Americans and two Canadians – was reached Friday between owners of the four oil rigs and negotiators for the Nigerian hostage-takers, said the secretary general of Nigeria's biggest oil workers union, Joseph Akinlaja, who aided in the negotiations.

"Any moment from now, all those on the rigs will leave," Akinlaja told The Associated Press by phone from the Nigerian capital, Abuja, where the negotiations were held.

Peter Akpatason, another Nigerian labor official, confirmed that an agreement was reached.

"The dispute has been resolved," he said.

Guy Cantwell, a spokesman for the Houston-based owner of the rigs, Transocean Inc., also said that he understood the hostages would leave the offshore oil platforms.

They've been held since April 19 by about 100 disgruntled Nigerian workers.

"We understand the meeting has ended and an agreement has been reached. We understand a communique is being prepared to ensure everyone on the rig will leave," Cantwell said by telephone from Houston.

Details of when and how the hostages will leave the oil installations were being arranged, Akinlaja said.

The rigs, about 20 miles off Nigeria's coast, are drilling wells run on behalf of multinationals Royal/Dutch Shell and TotalFinaElf.

Jazz guard John Stockton starts to tear up as he answers questions about his retirement in the team's locker room Friday in Salt Lake City.

'I THINK I'M FINISHED.'

Stockton meets with coach, owner to make his retirement official

By Doug Alden
Associated Press writer

NBA Playoffs – B4

SALT LAKE CITY – John Stockton left the Delta Center on the verge of tears Friday, all but certain it is time for him to retire.

Stockton, the NBA's career leader in assists and steals, met with Jazz coach Jerry Sloan and owner Larry Miller and told them he was not planning on coming back for a 20th season.

"I think I'm finished," Stockton said in the Jazz locker room. "I informed those guys and that's the direction I'm headed. I just said, 'I think it's time to move on.'"

The 41-year-old point guard's 15,806 assists and 3,265 steals all came with the Jazz.

Stockton wouldn't definitively say he was retiring, but made it clear that was his intention. Utah's season ended Wednesday night with a 111-91 loss to the Sacramento Kings.

"I would be very surprised. I can't think of what would change my mind at this point," Stockton said.

Stockton spoke briefly with reporters before his emotions took over. On the verge of tears, he cut the interview short and quickly ducked out of the Delta Center.

Stockton had not told his teammates, even forward Karl Malone, who spent 18 seasons taking thousands of passes from his pick-and-roll partner.

Malone said he heard the news on television while inside the arena for the team's final meeting of the season. He said he was disappointed that Stockton didn't deliver the news personally, but added that he would get over it.

"I love him to death, but if I could see him right now I'd like to shake him," Malone said.

Stockton's statement marked the first major turn of what figures to be an eventful offseason for the Jazz. Malone, who becomes a free agent this summer, may not return if the Jazz do not pay Malone what he feels he deserves.

DIXIE UPENDS CSI

Rebels force decisive Game 3

By Joe Paisley
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS – Dixie State reliever Jeff Oliverson wasn't ready to concede anything.

The Rebels weren't about to let this best-of-three Region 18 baseball series end a day early, either.

The result was an 8-1 victory Friday night by Dixie State College over the College of Southern Idaho to force Game 3 of the series today at 1 p.m. at Walker Field. The winner will take on top-seed Southern Nevada, 5-2 winners Friday over Salt Lake to clinch their series, next week.

Oliverson stepped in with CSI base runners at the corners with one out in the fifth and shut down the host team's last-best scoring threat. CSI was still in the game at that point, trailing 3-1.

The rout started with a big-time performance in the fifth.

"I was ready to concede the run at third but Jeff would have none of that," said Dixie head coach Mike Littlewood. "He wasn't going to concede anything."

With Oliverson shutting down the CSI batters, the Rebels put the game away in the top of the eighth with a five-run outburst, sparked by a two-run hit by Kade Boyer and two-run triple by Amos Burgess against CSI reliever Rich Conway.

Oliverson added a sacrifice fly to plate the fifth run and make it 8-1.

"Overall the guys had a great game," Littlewood said. "We were aggressive on the bases and tried to force the issue. Sometimes it backfires."

Which was the case for Southern Idaho (33-16). The Eagles were caught stealing twice and picked off two more times.

"We were Hyde tonight and Jekyll yesterday," Walker said. "We just didn't get the job done."

Certainly, when you consider they had runners in scoring position for three straight innings (the third, fourth and fifth) and managed a single run.

The two pickoffs ended two innings,

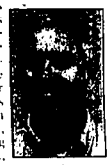
Johnson steps down as Declo girls coach

By Scott Thompson
Times-News writer

DECLO – Declo received a double whammy as both of its highly successful basketball coaches have stepped down.

Boys basketball coach Loyd Garey, who is coming off his second state title season with the Hornets, is taking over as the athletic director at Filer. Girls basketball coach Kim Johnson, who is expecting her third child, will remain on staff as a teacher at Declo but said the time commitment involved with coaching would be too much to juggle with three children.



Loyd Garey

Declo softball coach Kurt Murdock will take over the girls program but the boys job has yet to be filled.

Outgoing Filer athletic director LaRell Patterson is certainly pleased with the Wildcats' selection.

"Loyd isn't afraid of work that's for sure," he said. "And that's what most pleases me. I think he'll do a great job."

Patterson said Garey's Sawtooth Central Idaho Conference ties will be helpful.

"He's got a good reputation in our conference, district and, for that matter, the state," he said.

Garey will certainly be missed at Declo.

"We're really happy for him," Declo athletic director Jay Darrington said. "He's done a great, great job here. He'll be missed."

Garey couldn't be reached by phone Friday evening.

Johnson, who led the Hornets to five trips to the state tournament in her seven years at the school,

But Chad Davis' victory in the No. 1 singles position as well as victories by Mandy Hoehnes and Tisha Jones in girls singles stood out.

Filer shot 335 as a team for second place. Declo, led by the 83 of Jordan Bagwell, came in third at 347 followed by Wood River (349), Buhl (352) and Gooding (410).

Buhl, which placed all four golfers in the low five, won the girls side with a 407, beating Kimberly at 427. Declo shot 474 and Gooding totaled 479.

Salinas leads Bruin boys track to victory

By Scott Thompson
Times-News writer

RUPERT – Twin Falls sprinter Jake Salinas put the hurt on the rest of the competition at the 14-team Minico-Burley Invitational track and field meet for most of Friday.

But in the end the Bruin senior was left holding his hamstring after finishing second in 200-meter sprint at Minico High School.

Still, Salinas took victories in the 100, long jump and the 4X100 relay to lead the Bruin boys to a dominating victory. Skyline's girls beat out Twin Falls for first place.

"I feel pretty good about the meet," Salinas said. "Everybody did really good. I'm just trying to set school records."

Salinas set a personal best in the 100 with a time of 10.9 seconds, which is just .1 off the school record.

And the Bruin 4X100 relay team is narrowing in on the school record also.

Salinas' father, George, was a member of that record-setting relay team in the late 1970s.

"I'm really hoping to get it because I'm the baby," he said. "I'm the last one to have a shot at it."

Salinas was pushed hard in the 100 when he came from behind to edge Century's Dean Connett and Burley's Jed Thomas. Connett won both the 200 and 400.

"This is a really good meet," Salinas said. "There's great competition here. Hopefully, it'll help get ready for state. I want to win state."

Salinas worked extra hard in the off-season after failing to make the state finals a year ago in the 100 by a single spot.

He also narrowly won the long jump by a single inch with a jump of 21 feet, 1.5 inches on his final attempt, edging Jerome's Cory Musgrave.

The short relay wasn't close as the Bruins blistered the field by .6 of a second with a time of 44.2 but it may have been costly as Salinas felt the first twinge in that event.

It felt worse after the 200 but Salinas is optimistic that it isn't too badly hurt.

"I think it'll be OK," Salinas said. "Hopefully, I'll be fine to run next week. I should be."

Minico's Monica Jensen was also a triple event winner as she claimed victories in both hurdles races and the triple jump.

Jensen set the school record in the triple with a jump of 38-5 to beat the field by more than 3 feet.

"I was fresh coming into it and it felt really good," said Jensen, who is seeking her fourth straight state title in the event.

Jensen also blew away the competition in the hurdles.

"My main competition (McKenzie Walton of Skyline) in the 300s was here," Jensen said. "And she pushes me real hard. It's a very good meet."

So tough that Wendell sophomore sprinter Jaynie Goodbody lost for the first-ever time in the 100 while still setting a school record when Skyline's Laura Evans beat her by .1 with a time of 12.1.

Evans, who is bound for Brigham Young University on a full-ride scholarship, also handed Goodbody her first loss in the 200 since Goodbody's opening high school meet last spring. Evans also won the 400.

Other multiple event winners, included Skyline's Rilee Buttars, who swept the 1,600 and the 3,200. Connett won the 200 and 400 after falling to Salinas in the 100. And Skyline's David Jankowski swept the 1,600 and 3,200.

Notes: Declo high jumper Linzy Morgan, second at state a year ago, expects to be back ready to jump at state after separating her shoulder in the 300 hurdles at the Brad Matthews Invitational last month. ... Filer sprinter Caleb Lammers didn't compete in the sprints because he is still bothered by a heel injury suffered at the Angie Wyatt meet.

Bulldawgs take on Poky

By Scott Thompson
Times-News writer

M-C Bulldawgs (3-1) vs. Pocatello (2-2)
Today: 11 a.m.
Where: Marsh Valley HS

RUPERT – The Mini-Cassia Bulldawgs bring a rock-ribbed defense, burgeoning running game and a three-game win streak to today's Rocky Mountain Football League road game against the Pocatello Silverbacks.

Kickoff is set for 11 a.m. at Marsh Valley High School.

Several Bulldawg defenders rank among the top performers in the league.

Murtaugh's Deejay Stanger is leading the league in interceptions with six. And Dustin Lapray has eight sacks, doubling up the best of the rest.

And linebacker Allen Hakes is third in the league in tackles.

"The defense is just shutting people down," Bulldawg coach Dennis Hakes said. "Nobody can move the ball on us."

But the scary thing for the opposition is that the Bulldawgs (3-1) have gone to a successful running game recently to complement their high-power passing attack.

In last week's 43-12 pounding of Helena, Mini-Cassia ran for more yards than it passed.

"For the first time since I've been with the team, we had more yards rushing than passing last week," said Hakes, the second-year Bulldawgs coach. "We're trying to get more balanced. If we can make them have to defend the run and the past, that's tough. And I know we can do it."

Running back Lonnie Edwards had three touchdowns last week – two rushing and another passing. He is leading the league in scoring with three rushing TDs and four receiving TDs.

"Man, he's been playing some great ball," Dennis Hakes said.

Edwards is both the third-ranked rusher and reciever in the league. Everybody on the Bulldawgs has been as the team rebounded from a narrow loss to reigning league champion Idaho Falls with the three straight wins.

Against Pocatello (2-2) today, Mini-Cassia will have to stop receiver Brock Gunter, who has caught 29 balls at more than 17 yards a reception.

"We're not going to let Gunter beat us," Dennis Hakes said. "We're awful stout up front, so that shouldn't hurt us from stopping the run. But we'll have to take him away."

Do-it-all Jeff Oliverson steps forward for Dixie St.

By Joe Palsley
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS – At 6-foot-2 and 220 pounds, Jeff Oliverson is one of the biggest players on the Dixie State College baseball roster.

In the latter part of this season, his contributions to the Rebels season have become even bigger.

The freshman shortstop is the do-everything player for the Rebels during an injury-filled season that has seen two middle infielders and two pitchers go down with injuries.

And he's stepped in ably wherever needed. Being a sound starting shortstop after starting the season at third base was enough. But about six weeks ago, Dixie needed even more from him.

The Rebels pitching staff needed a boost.

Coach Mike Littlewood found it in Oliverson, now 3-0 on the season with Friday night's 8-1 win. He threw five scoreless innings, giving up a lone hit in shutting down the College of Southern Idaho.

Combine those with his season stats (0.00 ERA, 24 strikeouts, one walk) and its amazing Oliverson wasn't recruited as a hurler. He was a high school pitcher with a good fastball, curveball and changeup.

Hey, better late than never for Dixie. A few simulated innings later and Littlewood knew he'd found a closer and a potential starter for next year.

"It kind of opened our eyes," Littlewood said. "But when you're desperate, you'll try anything."

That desperation came from injuries after starters Brad Sylvester (elbow surgery) and J.R. Oliver (loose shoulder capsule) went down with season-ending injuries.

It's no surprise Oliverson was willing to step in and then able to perform well as a pitcher.

"Jeff is such a competitor," Littlewood said. "He's a big, strong kid that doesn't get tired."

Oliverson doesn't care where he plays as long as does.

"Anything to help the team win," Oliverson said. "That's what it's all about."

He's certainly done his part, especially Friday.

one coming with the bases loaded in the third.

Levi Shumway reached on a one-out double down the left field line, scoring on an RBI knock by Dale Hall after he slid around the tag at home for a 1-0 lead. An error and hit batter loaded the bases, but a strikeout and then a pickoff at second ended the threat.

"We have to move base runners," Walker said. "We didn't do any of that tonight."

Dixie then took control with three runs in the next half-inning, sparked by a hit-and-run RBI single by Burgess, a suicide squeeze by catcher Robert Grana and an RBI knock by Frans Meyer.

"You can't say enough about our coming back with those three runs," Littlewood said. "We executed the hit and run perfectly all three times."

That inning was a breakthrough for a frustrated Dixie team, which was held scoreless for the first 12 innings of the series.

Now with the bats warmed up a bit, Littlewood has to be hopeful for Game 3.

"We know it will be a dogfight," he said.

Walker is hoping the CSI team that shut down Dixie Thursday makes a return appearance Saturday.

"It's a single-elimination tournament now," he said.

said it will be difficult watching from the sidelines next year.

"It was always a goal of mine to coach a basketball team, so it was a very tough decision," she said. "But you have to give your all to be a wife and a mom and a teacher and a coach and I just didn't think that I had the time to give basketball what it deserved."

That doesn't mean that she has stepped away for good.

"I'm young enough that once my kids are grown, I might go back to it," she said.

Billups lights up Orlando

Pistons force Game 7; Sixers close out Hornets

ORLANDO, Fla. (AP) – Chauncey Billups broke out of his 3-point shooting slump in a big way, sending the Magic-Pistons series back to Detroit for a decisive Game 7.

Making more 3-pointers in the first quarter than he had all series, Billups scored a career-high 40 points and the Pistons blanketed the Magic defensively for a second straight game in a 103-88 victory Friday night.

The victory evened the first-round series at 3-3 and set up a win-or-walk situation Sunday in Detroit.

"The team that wins moves on, and the team that loses is going to feel like they've lost a golden opportunity," Orlando coach Doc Rivers said. "Being up 3-1, losing two games is very difficult for our team."

Billups shot 7-of-14 on 3-pointers, including all five tries in the first period when Detroit seized a lead it would never relinquish. He entered the game shooting 14 percent (4-for-28) from behind the arc, but credited a healed left thigh bruise for his turnaround.

Richard Hamilton added 22 points, and Ben Wallace had his fourth double-double of the series, tying his career-high with 20 points, grabbing 17 rebounds and blocking five shots.

Snapping a 12-game road playoff losing streak, the Pistons moved within one win of becoming only the seventh team in NBA playoff history to avoid elimination after falling behind 3-1. Also, Detroit would dodge the ignominy of being ousted by a No. 8 seed, which has happened only twice before – by the Miami Heat in 1999 and Seattle in 1994 – since the NBA went to a 16-team format in 1984.

"We dug a hole for ourselves and we could've felt sorry for ourselves and gave up," Wallace said. "Or, we could've came out and did what we did."

Orlando shot 39.5 percent, missing 16 of 18 3-point attempts, and turned the ball over 17 times for 17 points.

The Pistons' Chauncey Billups tries to drive past Orlando's Darrell Armstrong during the first quarter Friday in Orlando. Billups scored 40 points as the Pistons won to force a Game 7.

Tracy McGrady had 37 points and 11 rebounds for Orlando. Gordan Giricek scored 12 points while Drew Gooden added 11 points and 12 rebounds.

76ers 107, Hornets 103

NEW ORLEANS – It turned out Allen Iverson didn't need as much help as coach Larry Brown thought.

Iverson capped a 45-point performance by scoring Philadelphia's final six points – including a key straightaway bank shot with 10 seconds left – as the 76ers eliminated the New Orleans Hornets with a 107-103 victory Friday night.

Iverson's second-best offensive showing of the series came one game after coach Larry Brown said Iverson's teammates appeared too hesitant to shoot big shots and relieve some of the pressure on the Sixers' leading scorer.

Several other Sixers had solid games – Keith Van Horn with 18 points and 18 rebounds, Derrick Coleman with 16 points and Kenny Thomas with 10.

Jamal Mashburn, playing his second game with a chipped bone in his right middle finger, scored 36 to lead New Orleans, which was hurt by 14-for-23 free throw shooting, missing five of eight in the final period.

Baron Davis added 21 points for New Orleans but missed substantial chunks of time because of foul trouble. David Wesley added 19 points, but fouled out while struggling to guard Iverson.

Matsui snaps slump, sparks Yanks

NEW YORK (AP) – Slumping Hideki Matsui neatly slapped a key hit-and-run single and an RBI double, and made two nice catches in left field to lead New York over Oakland.

David Wells pitched the Yankees to their third win in a row and 12th in 15 games. Manager Joe Torre moved into a tie for 14th place on baseball's career victory list with Fred Clarke at 1,602.

After the start was delayed 78 minutes by rain, Wells (4-0) and Ted Lilly (2-1) dueled into the middle innings.

Devil Rays 2, Tigers 0

DETROIT – Joe Kennedy pitched the first one-hitter in the six-year history of the Tampa Bay Devil Rays, beating the punchless Detroit Tigers 2-0 Friday night.

The Tigers dropped to 3-24 with their fifth straight loss. They have been shut out a major league-leading seven times – Philadelphia is next with four – and have scored only 61 runs in 27 games.

Six teams – the Yankees, Red Sox, Blue Jays, Rockies, Cardinals and Cubs – have more runs this season than Detroit has hits (159).

Mariners 9, White Sox 2

CHICAGO – Mike Cameron, playing on the first anniversary of his four-homer game in Chicago, went 3-for-3 with a home run and three runs scored to lead Seattle over the White Sox.

Cameron also walked twice for Seattle, which had a season-high 16 hits. Bret Boone went 3-for-5 and Edgar Martinez got two hits to reach 2,000 for his career.

Chicago has lost eight of its last 12 games and dropped to 15-14.

Blue Jays 3, Angels 1

TORONTO – Cory Lidle pitched a three-hitter and Carlos Delgado hit a three-run homer off John Lackey (1-3) in the first inning for Toronto.

The game was interrupted briefly with two outs in the ninth inning when a fan came out of the seats in the right-field corner and jogged toward second base, pointing at the bag.

Toronto second baseman Orlando Hudson got into a football stance and shoved the male fan. Three security guards then tackled the fan and escorted him off the field.

As for the game, Tim Salmon extended his hitting streak to 19 games with a solo homer in the fourth.

Twins 11, Red Sox 7

BOSTON – Matthew LeCroy homered twice and Dustan Mohr homered and had a career-high four RBIs as Minnesota matched Boston's six-run inning with one of its own and beat the Red Sox.

Indians 6, Rangers 5

CLEVELAND – Ellis Burks hit a two-run double in the eighth inning – his second of the night – as Cleveland snapped an eight-game losing streak.

Alex Rodriguez hit his 10th homer in the first inning for the free-swinging Rangers, who lead the majors with 55 homers.

Royals 5, Orioles 2

BALTIMORE – Miguel Asencio pitched his first career complete game, and Mike Sweeney and Ken Harvey homered as Kansas City stopped a four-game losing streak.

Kansas City trailed 2-0 until Sweeney and Harvey homered in a four-run sixth against Rick Helling (1-3). Kansas City improved to 18-8, the best record in franchise history after 26 games.

The victory was the first for the Royals against Baltimore since 2001.

Devils win marathon to advance

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. (AP) – The New Jersey Devils are going to the Eastern Conference finals for the third time in four years.

Grant Marshall scored on a rebound at 11:12 of the third overtime and the Devils eliminated the Tampa Bay Lightning with a 2-1 victory in Game 5 on Friday night.

Playoffs

The Devils will face the winner of the Philadelphia-Ottawa series for the right to advance to the Stanley Cup finals. The Flyers and Senators are tied 2-2 in their best-of-seven series.

It will be the Devils' fourth appearance in the conference finals since 1995, and they haven't lost one – winning two Cups and losing a third in a deciding Game 7 to Colorado in 2001.

Scott Niedermayer also scored for New Jersey and Martin Brodeur, who only allowed eight goals in the five games with the Lightning, made 38 saves in the second-longest game in Devils' history.

Nikita Alexeev scored for the Lightning, who reached the conference semifinals for the first time in their 11-year existence.

Tampa Bay rallied from an 0-2 series deficit to beat Washington in the opening round, but never threatened New Jersey after losing the first two games in this series.

ST. PAUL, Minn. – Brent Sopel sent a slap shot under Manny Fernandez's glove on an extended power play with 4:08 left in overtime to give the Vancouver Canucks a 3-2 victory over the Minnesota Wild on Friday night.

Cardinals 8, Expos 1

ST. LOUIS – Jim Edmonds homered in a five-run first inning to back Simontacchi as the St. Louis Cardinals beat the Montreal Expos 8-1 Friday night.

Fernando Vina homered and went 3-for-3 for the Cardinals, who extended their winning streak to a season-best five games. Mike Matheny also homered and drove in three runs, and Edmonds had three hits.

Jason Simontacchi (1-1) won for the first time in five starts this season.

Cubs 7, Rockies 4

CHICAGO – Mark Bellhorn broke out of a slump, going 2-for-2 with three RBIs, and Sammy Sosa, Ramon Martinez and Shawn Estes also drove in runs for the Cubs.

Mets 9, Brewers 3

MILWAUKEE – Tom Glavine (4-2) gave up three runs and eight hits in seven innings as New York got 15 hits and stopped a five-game losing streak. Milwaukee has lost six straight and nine of 10.

Former Mets pitcher Glendon Rusch (1-5) allowed five runs, two earned – and seven hits in four innings.

Mike Piazza hit a go-ahead double and Roberto Alomar hit a run-scoring single, stopping an 0-for-21 slide.

Astros 4, Marlins 3

HOUSTON – Pinch-hitter Jose Vizcaino singled home the go-ahead run off Brad Penny (2-2) in the sixth as the Houston overcame a 3-0 deficit and stopped a three-game losing streak.

Florida built a 3-0 lead against Scott Linebrink on second-inning home runs by Juan Encarnacion and Alex Gonzalez, and Ivan Rodriguez's RBI double in the third.

Stockton

"I don't want to say something that I regret. I don't know what I'm thinking at this point," Malone said. "I'm still shocked right now."

Sloan is also considering retirement, but didn't want to talk about anything other than Stockton on Friday.

"In my opinion, John Stockton was the greatest. I had the opportunity to see what he was about every single game," Sloan said. "He gave it every single ounce of energy he had every time he stepped on the floor because he enjoyed playing."

Said Malone: "I used to have a coach who said 'Make your teammate an All-Star.' That's what he tried to do every night," Malone said. "There will not be another one."

Stockton, a father of six, said it was getting harder and harder to mentally prepare for games.

He was expected to decide on retirement within a few weeks, but he woke up Friday and decided not to prolong it. In typical Stockton fashion, he avoided a farewell news conference.

"I'm afraid I can't get reflective right now," Stockton said. "No, it will be too tough."

Despite his age and playing his fewest minutes since the lockout-shortened 1998-99 season, Stockton remained among the league leaders at point guard this season, finishing fifth in the NBA with 629 assists. Stockton averaged 10.8 points, down from his career high of 17.2 twice in the early 1990s.

He was selected one of the 50 greatest players in NBA history, and he played in every game in 17 of his 19 seasons.

Stockton was drafted 16th overall by the Jazz out of Gonzaga, the school in his hometown of Spokane, Wash. He was hardly known – just a quiet, skinny 22-year-old with a thatch of jet black hair.

His appearance never changed much, but his anonymity vanished quickly once former coach Frank Layden made Stockton a starter in the 1987-88 season. That's when Stockton and Malone established themselves as one of the top tandems in league history.

Stockton went on a five-season spree averaging at least 1,100 assists and 200-plus steals while scoring between 14.7 and 17.2 points a game.

Establishing himself as one of the top point guards in the league, he earned a spot on the 1992 U.S. Olympic Dream Team, along with such stars as Michael Jordan, Magic Johnson and Larry Bird.

He was an Olympian again in 1996, the summer before the Jazz went from contenders to Western Conference champions.

Stockton and Malone led the Jazz to back-to-back conference titles in 1997 and 1998, when Jordan and the Chicago Bulls spoiled Utah's best chance for an NBA title.

Stockton will always be known more for his pinpoint passing and tenacity on defense than his shooting. But some of the Jazz's most memorable baskets came from Stockton's hand.

It was Stockton's 26-foot 3-pointer at the buzzer in Houston that gave Utah its first trip to the NBA Finals in 1997. In the 1999 playoffs, his 22-footer at the horn saved the Jazz from elimination, and Utah went on to beat Sacramento in the first round.

"He's had a great career, and I know I say this all the time, but I think people in the state of Utah won't understand the impact of his career until he's gone for a couple of years," said former teammate Mark Eaton, now a Jazz broadcaster. "It was an honor to play with him."

Take Buddy Gil to complete exacta

VIC ZIEGEL

LOUISVILLE, Ky. – It's finally time to write about and discard the frauds and fakers in Saturday's 16-horse Kentucky Derby. I hope I have enough space.

You can trust me to get this right because, while picking winners is something I know very little about (and I have a closetful of $18 Dockers to prove it), identifying losers has never been my problem.

First, you ought to know that I'm picking Empire Maker, and his bruise, to win the thing, and Buddy Gil to complete the $30 exacta. I'm guessing Scrimshaw will run third, but if he doesn't somebody equally ridiculous will.

I'm ignoring Ten Most Wanted, the second choice at 6-1, because somebody has to. After you get past Empire Maker, and his bruise, the horse everybody is talking about is Ten Most Wanted. Who won the second race of his life four weeks ago, when he was the lukewarm favorite in the Illinois Derby, the same race that produced last year's Derby winner, War Emblem.

I asked a handicapper I respect, a guy who's picking Ten Most Wanted, how he felt about the colt before he romped in Chicago. "A bum," he said.

Bobby Frankel, Empire Maker's trainer, is in love with his horse and his bruise but he understands the Run for the Roses can be a thorny two minutes. He was talking about his horse when he said, "Until they prove they're Secretariat or Seattle Slew they're always eligible to run a bad race." And he included all the others (well, maybe not Ten Cents a Shine) when he said, "I've seen a lot of horses run well in the Derby that I wouldn't have brought here."

Scrimshaw, my third-place pick, and the Ten Cents thing, are trained by Wayne Lukas, who has entered 22 of the last 23 Derbys with something resembling a horse. He's won four of them, the last two at stunning prices, and he ran second last year with Proud Citizen, another head-scratching outsider. Is it possible Lukas knows what he's doing?

"There's no how-to book for this race but you can't downplay the experience factor," he says. "The (trainers) who've been here, they're the ones I worry about." When he first reached for Roses, without any success, he'd sometimes change his plans when he heard what other trainers were doing. He began coming closer, he told the huge media crowd around him, "when I learned to stay with my own program and lie to you guys."

I'm using up precious space to point out that Ten Cents a Shine is one of his biggest lies. The colt finished 24 lengths away for another trainer in mid-February and was promptly moved into Lukas' barn, where he lost his next two by 56.75 lengths. Please don't use him.

He isn't a cinch to finish last, though, because Outta Here is in here. That one's only start this year, with jockey Kent Desormeaux, won the United Arab Emirates Derby in Dubai. Trainer and part-owner Bill Currin said he expected the horse to win, and planned to rest him until the Belmont Stakes. But since Outta Here had all kinds of excuses, and didn't run hard enough to tire himself out, Currin is throwing another dart. "Desormeaux was willing to go 8,500 miles to ride him in a war, so he could sure go down the street to Kentucky," the trainer said.

Offlee Wild and Atswhatimtalknbout are two others I refuse to believe. Horses with names like that don't win America's great race.

Verplank leads low-scoring HP Classic

Golf

NEW ORLEANS (AP) – Scott Verplank shot a 9-under 63 Friday for a 36-hole tournament record and a three-stroke lead in the HP Classic.

Verplank was at 16-under 128 after two trips around the 7,116-yard English Turn, three strokes ahead of Brian Gay and Todd Barranger.

Davis Love III and first-round co-leader Akio Sadakata were among five players another stroke back.

The 5-under cut was the second lowest this season.

Irwin fires 65 for one-shot edge on Champions Tour

HOOVER, Ala. – Hale Irwin shot a 7-under 65 and held a one-stroke lead over Larry Ziegler and Bruce Fleisher in the first round of the Bruno's Memorial Classic.

Irwin had five birdies on the final nine holes of the Champions Tour event on the 6,992-yard, par-72 Founder's Course at the Greystone Golf Club.

Tom Jenkins and Morris Hatalsky were at 67.

O'Malley, Widmark share lead in Italy

BRESCIA, Italy – Sweden's Fredrik Widmark shot a 7-under 65 to move into a tie for the second-round lead at the Italian Open.

Australia's Peter O'Malley bogeyed No. 18 for a 70 and was also at 10-under 134 at the 7,112-yard Gardagolf Country Club.

Colin Montgomerie, playing in Europe for the first time this season, shot a 67 and was three shots behind the leaders.

Twosome shares top spot at Michelob Light Open

WILLIAMSBURG, Va. – Grace Park shot a 3-under 68 and Lorena Ochoa had a 69 to share the second-round lead at the Michelob Light Open.

Suzann Pettersen, who bogeyed two of her final three holes, and Akiko Fukushima, who birdied two of her final three holes, both shot 68s and were tied for third at 6-under 136.

Cristie Kerr and Patricia Meunier-Lebouc shot 68s and were tied for fifth, while Annika Sorenstam shot a 70 and was in a group of five at 138.

An event-record 14 cautions slowed the Hardee's 250 for 93 laps, including a crash by Mike Bliss that brought out the 13th yellow flag after 241 laps. After a brief red flag delay while the track was cleaned, Harvick had trouble pulling away from Riggs in a single-file restart.

But Ron Hornaday's crash with four laps to go ended the suspense. Busch races end under yellow if it comes in the final five laps.

"Scott Riggs probably had the best car," said Harvick, who pancaked his Chevrolet against an outside wall out of a turn late in the race. "We felt we had the second- or third-best car, but I was trying too hard."

Riggs thought he had a chance before the crash.

"When I got to his bumper, I was trying to get it out of my windshield and put it in my rearview mirror," he said. "We were trying to make the pass and the caution came when I thought I had a pretty good run on him."

The victory was Harvick's 10th in the Busch series, where he won the championship in 2001, and his second on a short track this season. It also gave him six top-10 finishes in as many starts in the series in 2003.

The race was run in a somber atmosphere, starting only a few hours after Winston Cup driver Jerry Nadeau was airlifted from the track after a crash in practice crash. Nadeau was in critical condition at Medical College of Virginia Hospitals, but details of his injuries were not released.

Derby

1.25-mile Derby, he was hiding it well.

"He's 100 percent," Frankel said no less than half a dozen times when asked about the strapping bay's right front foot. "He's going to run good. Don't worry about it."

Ten Most Wanted was the early second choice at 6-1, with Buddy Gil and Peace Rules – Frankel's other entry – each at 8-1.

Bob Baffert will saddle Indian Express in a bid for his fourth Derby win, while D. Wayne Lukas sends out Scrimshaw and Ten Cents a Shine with hopes of landing No. 5.

The 61-year-old Frankel, however, is still looking for his first.

"The script's written already," he said. "If he's meant to win, he's going to win. I think he's meant to win. He's just giving me a little aggravation right now."

Like on the track when he suddenly veered sideways while coming around a turn and backed up toward the outer rail in his first gallop since irritating the foot Tuesday.

An outrider on a pony reached over and grabbed Empire Maker's bridle and helped settle him down. With exercise rider Jose Cuevas aboard, the colt then galloped through the stretch and left the track with another pony.

"He pulled one of his little acts," Frankel said, adding that his star was only trying to get back to his barn. "That's why I was laughing when I came off the track. It's just part of the drama of this whole thing."

The horse's antics are part of his pedigree. "The whole family does it and it's never stopped any of them," said Frankel, who trained the dam, Toussaud, and several of her stakes-winning siblings. His sire is 1990 Derby winner Unbridled.

As for the bruise, the foot was being treated with an anti-inflammatory drug and the hoof soaked in a warm wrap this week. Things were going so well, Frankel said, the three-quarter shoe Empire Maker was wearing may come off and he might wear a full one on Saturday.

For two years, Frankel has been convinced Empire Maker is his winning ticket – champion bloodlines and a Hall of Fame jockey in Jerry Bailey will do that to a trainer.

And while Empire Maker is the heaviest morning-line choice since Arazi in 1992, the Derby has been unkind to favorites. Since 1979, only one favorite – Fusaichi Pegasus in 2000 – has won.

Lukas, who will increase his record of Derby starters to 41 if both his colts go, said Empire Maker doesn't deserve to be such a strong favorite despite convincing wins in the Florida Derby and Wood Memorial.

"We don't have a Spectacular Bid, I don't think, or a Seattle Slew," he said. "We've just got a darn nice horse. I'm not easily intimidated."

Frankel isn't so sure.

"I just think that going in, this is a superior horse," he said.

Bailey and Frankel have mapped out the race: Buddy Gil, Indian Express and Peace Rules are in the lead at the top of the stretch, with Wood runner-up Funny Cide in the mix.

"Jerry said he's following Peace Rules because he knows Peace Rules isn't going to stop," Frankel said. Then, of course, Empire Maker makes his move and, they hope, wins.

Ron Ellis, who sends out late-closer Atswhatimtalknbout – partly owned by director Steven Spielberg – sees it this way:

"The speed horses up front look like legitimate contenders, so I don't think any will sneak off. My horse can sit five lengths off with a slow pace, or can be 10-15 back with a blazing pace," he said.

Empire Maker is owned by Saudi prince Khalid Abdullah's Juddmonte Farms, which, like Frankel, is looking for a first Derby win. It was second in the 2000 Derby with Aptitude, also trained by Frankel. Rarely seen in public, the 65-year-old Abdullah was expected to attend the race.

Peace Rules, winner of his last four races including the Louisiana Derby and Blue Grass Stakes, is owned by Edmund Gann, whose Medaglia d'Oro was fourth in last year's Derby.

Ten Most Wanted, winner of the Illinois Derby and improving rapidly, has been virtually overlooked. Pat Day, riding in his 21st Derby, will be aboard.

"It's all falling into place," trainer Wally Dollase said. "We just need to keep it going."

Rosemary Homeister Jr., aboard 50-1 long shot Supah Blitz, will become the fifth woman to ride in the Derby. "I know it's not like any other race, but I have to make it like it is," she said.

With 16 starters, the purse will be $1,100,200, with $800,200 going to the winner.

Alabama's Price awaits decision on job status

University President Robert Witt, who took over shortly after Price's hiring in December, will present his findings to university trustees. The meeting Saturday will be open to the public, except when officials are discussing someone's "good name and character," spokeswoman Kellee Reinhart said.

The university is investigating Price's conduct during a trip to Pensacola, Fla., last month for a pro-am golf tournament.

According to news reports, Price paid for several private dances at a topless bar and, the next morning, a woman at the hotel where Price was staying ordered about $1,000 in items from the room service menu and charged it to Price's room bill.

NCAA penalizes Iowa State over free throw payments

DES MOINES, Iowa – Larry Eustachy, already suspended by Iowa State for his behavior at late-night parties, was suspended for one game by the NCAA on Friday for a secondary rules violation.

The NCAA found Iowa State guilty because Eustachy twice paid players for making free throws. The university was ordered to suspend Eustachy for one game, but that might become moot because athletic director Bruce Van De Velde has recommended Eustachy be fired.

Iowa State had reported the violations to the NCAA and will not appeal the ruling, said associate athletic director Bill Smith, the university's compliance coordinator.

Van De Velde's recommendation to fire Eustachy followed newspaper reports that he drank and partied with college students after games in Columbia, Mo., and Manhattan, Kan.

Photos from the Columbia party show Eustachy kissing young women and being kissed by them on the cheek. Eustachy disclosed this week that he is an alcoholic and is seeking treatment.

The payments to the players – the most anyone received was $20 – took place during the 2002-03 season.

Practice crash injures NASCAR driver Nadeau

The 32-year-old driver from Danbury, Conn., did not appear to be moving when he was removed from his car strapped to a body board. He was being fed oxygen through a bag when he was placed in the ambulance.

NASCAR spokesman Jim Hunter said Nadeau was in critical condition at the Medical College of Virginia Hospitals. He said the hospital was prevented from saying more while awaiting the arrival of the driver's wife, Jada, who was traveling from South Carolina after attending her grandfather's funeral. NASCAR sent a plane to pick her up.

Nadeau's Pontiac struck the outside wall on the three-quarter mile oval during the final practice session for Saturday night's Pontiac Excitement 400. The car skidded, spun halfway around and slammed driver's side first into the wall between the first and second turns.

BYU, Lewis meet for NCAA volleyball title

LONG BEACH, Calif. – Lewis is already the first Division II school to reach the finals of the NCAA men's volleyball tournament.

On Saturday against top-seeded Brigham Young, Lewis will try to become the first D-II school in the 34-year history of the tournament to win it.

BYU (23-6) will be trying for its third championship in five years.

Third-seeded Lewis (28-5), a small Catholic college in Romeoville, Ill., advanced to the title match at Long Beach State by beating second-seeded Pepperdine in Thursday night's semifinals.

Lewis, which entered the tournament with the nation's best hitting percentage (.388), displayed its defensive skill against Pepperdine with a school-record 71 digs.

"They are a scary team," BYU coach Tom Peterson said. "Their guys are a little bigger and they get up in the air very well so if they put up a block, it's going to be a hard time for us."

The Cougars, who beat Penn State in the semifinals, counter with a balanced attack led by outside hitter Jonathan Alleman and generated by setter Carlos-Moreno – both second-team All-Americans. Blockers Michael Burke and Chris Gorny provide stability in the middle.

Source: Bonnies hire Notre Dame assistant

BUFFALO, N.Y. – St. Bonaventure chose Notre Dame assistant Anthony Solomon to coach its troubled men's basketball team, a source told The Associated Press on Friday.

Solomon officially will be introduced at a news conference at the school's Olean campus, probably Monday, an Atlantic 10 Conference source said on condition of anonymity.

While both sides have agreed to a deal, Solomon has not signed a contract, the source said.

Bonnies athletic department spokesman Steve Mest declined to comment. Notre Dame spokesman John Heisler referred all questions to St. Bonaventure.

Solomon, never before a college head coach, replaces Jan van Breda Kolff, fired last month after a scandal involving an ineligible player.

LeMoyne Award. Classmates Stephanie Fowers and Erin Kincaid were named honorable mention winners this year, as well.

The LeMoyne Award recognizes Idaho high school seniors who have excelled in service, leadership, academics and athletics and are nominated by coaches, teachers and other faculty members. Only eight winners and five honorable mention candidates are awarded annually.

Other winners this year were Bryoni Southwick of Dietrich, Jessica Ritchie of Valley, Sean Goodbody and Natalie Hope of Wendell, Kendra Dreyer of Meadows Valley, Parker Magnum of Timberline and Brynne Bates of Boise. Joining Kincaid and Fowers as honorable mentions were Ruth Anna Spooner of Idaho School for the Deaf and the Blind, Patrick Seefried of Mackay and Blake Don Buehler of Malad.

Taylor and the other winners will be presented their awards by Governor Dirk Kempthorne during his opening remarks and will be guests at the Breakfast of Champions and Humanitarian Bowl in December.

The award is named after LeMoyne, who was an Olympic qualifier in 1904 and 1906. LeMoyne attended Harvard, where he was hailed as "the greatest school boy athlete ever." The last time LeMoyne made the headlines was in 1984, when he was inducted into the Swimming Hall of Fame in Ft. Lauderdale, Fla. He died in 1988 in Hagerman at the age of 99.

Big 5 Sporting Goods announces Q1 sales

TWIN FALLS – California-based Big 5 Sporting Goods Corp., a sporting goods retailer with a store in Twin Falls, said first-quarter net sales grew 4.7 percent to $164.5 million.

Big 5's same-store sales increased just 0.6 percent from a year earlier. Gross profit margin grew 0.2 percent during the first quarter, which ended March 30, to 35.2 percent.

Net income available to common stockholders increased to $3.4 million, or 15 cents per diluted share, compared with year-ago net income of $1.6 million, or 10 cents per diluted share. Results for the fiscal 2003 first quarter include a charge of $875,000, net of taxes, or 4 cents per diluted share, related to senior note redemption.

"We are delighted to have achieved our 29th consecutive quarter of positive same-store sales performance and to have provided earnings that exceeded our guidance, despite a significantly challenging business environment," said Steven G. Miller, Big 5's chairman, president and chief executive. "We faced a generally lackluster retail climate, diverted consumer interest caused by the war in Iraq and, during the first half of the quarter, record warm weather conditions in our primary markets that adversely affected sales of winter-related products."

Big 5 expects same-store sales in the slightly negative to low single-digit positive range for the second quarter, resulting in earnings per diluted share in the range of 28 to 31 cents. For the year, the company expects same-store sales in the low single-digit positive range, resulting in earnings per diluted share of $1.18 to $1.23 excluding the first-quarter charge.

Advisor association plans its monthly meeting

TWIN FALLS – The Southern Idaho Association of Insurance and Financial Advisors plans its monthly meeting at 11:30 a.m. Tuesday at the Mandarin House restaurant in Twin Falls.

Lunch will be served – free to members and first-time guests – and the association will elect new board members for next year's term.

One of the association's purposes is to provide continuing education to members, and Tuesday the group will take suggestions from attendees about what they'd like to see covered in professional training sessions available to all members.

Reception will take place to honor Burley policeman

BURLEY – A reception will honor Alan W. Smith's retirement from 2 to 4 p.m. Monday at the Cassia County Law Enforcement Center, 129 E. 14th St. in Burley.

Smith was with Burley's city police department from 1970 to 1977 and the Cassia County Sheriff's Department from 1984 to 2003.

ChevronTexaco's Q1 profit nearly triples

SAN FRANCISCO – ChevronTexaco Corp. on Friday said its first-quarter profit nearly tripled, lifted by a dramatic rise in oil prices that drove gasoline prices higher and rankled motorists.

The company earned $1.9 billion, or $1.81 per share, during the first three months of the year – up from $625 million, or 68 cents per share, in the same time last year.

Excluding a charge required to meet new accounting rules governing the company's employee pension plan, ChevronTexaco said it would have posted a profit of $2.1 billion, or $1.99 per share. That beat the consensus estimate of $1.81 a share by analysts surveyed by Thomson First Call.

First-quarter revenue totaled $31 billion, a 47 percent increase from $21.2 billion last year.

ChevronTexaco Chairman David O'Reilly hailed the results as the company's best quarter since the $39 billion merger that created the company in October 2001.

ChevronTexaco reversed a year-ago loss in its division that refines and markets its U.S. gasoline. The division posted a $70 million profit in the first quarter, bouncing back from a $154 million loss last year.

Magic Valley jobless rates rise

By Virginia S. Hutchins
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS – Jobless rates rose all around Magic Valley last month to levels – in most counties – comparable to year-ago April rates.

- Cool, wet weather delayed some farm hiring and construction projects.
- Sun Valley-area ski traffic dropped off, also bringing the typical decline in highway traffic past Lincoln County businesses.
- Soldier Mountain skier numbers suffered, hurting hiring activity at convenience stores and other retailers in Camas County.
- War in Iraq dampened consumer confidence, tourism and retail hiring.

Idaho jobless rate rises as small layoffs start to add up

The Associated Press

BOISE – A large number of small layoffs throughout the state combined with employer skepticism about the economic future in April to send Idaho's seasonally adjusted unemployment rate higher for a second straight month.

The Labor Department on Friday estimated the jobless rate last month at 5.7 percent, up two-tenths of a point from March and just a point short of a year earlier.

Analysts expressed little surprise at the increase because of "the sluggish economy and the numerous small layoffs that have occurred."

"Employers were cautious about expanding their work force or their businesses as consumer confidence continued to be weak," they said.

The report was more bad economic news for the state. A day earlier the Kempthorne administration reported tax collections in April were off $21 million, aggravating the deficit problem.

Key to the shortfall was paycheck withholding, a key indicator of the economy's underlying job strength. It missed the April target by $2.2 million, marking the fourth month in the last five that it has failed to hit the target.

The department said the cool, wet spring limited seasonal employment while layoffs hit the food processing sector. Weather and high log inventories plagued the timber sector, and only limited job growth was seen in agriculture, construction, business services and restaurants and hotels.

Kmart tries to bring back customers, revenue

The Associated Press

BRIGHTON, Mich. – As Kmart Corp. emerges from bankruptcy court protection, its future rests on whether the discount retailer can persuade customers to shop at its stores instead of Wal-Mart and Target.

Kmart expects to exit from the biggest retail bankruptcy in U.S. history next week with 600 fewer stores, new leadership and a $2 billion loan. It has a key financial backer in investor Edward Lampert, whose company is converting $2 billion in financial claims against Kmart into stock.

What's most critical to Kmart's survival is whether it has a strategy that will bring the retailer the customers and revenue it needs.

"It won't be enough to perform modestly well. The modest performers are doomed to fail," said Martin Zohn, a Los Angeles bankruptcy specialist with the law firm Proskauer Rose. "If they continue to lose money, they'll find themselves back in Chapter 11 again."

Some analysts believe the odds aren't on the side of Kmart, which entered bankruptcy Jan. 22, 2002 after a poor holiday selling season and a long reputation for having cluttered stores and items out of stock. It faces a weak economy and tougher competition as Wal-Mart Stores Inc. adds stores and Target Corp. strengthens its appeal to style-conscious consumers.

Retail watchers say Kmart won't be able to escape the fate of Montgomery Ward, Ames, Bradlee's and Caldor, chains that came out of bankruptcy only to liquidate, unless it gives people a compelling reason to shop in its 1,500 remaining stores – and keep coming back.

"They're going to have to change customer shopping patterns to steal customers who are now going to other stores, and convince them they have to get to a Kmart," said Darrell Rigby, who heads Bain & Co.'s worldwide retail practice.

Exactly what Kmart will and should look like is up for debate. Some retailing and bankruptcy experts say they haven't seen signs of a clear direction that sets Kmart apart enough to be profitable and competitive in the long term.

"The Chapter 11 provided a time for the company's management to test the market to find a new niche, a new reason for being. Management failed miserably," Zohn said. "They have a little more time based upon the cash they have. But they better come up with a good idea quickly."

But some bankruptcy and retail experts, noting that Kmart has passed through Chapter 11 fairly quickly, say it's unfair to expect the company to have initiated a new retailing plan while under the tight rules of bankruptcy.

"Whenever a company goes through something like this it's extremely distracting to management," said Nancy Aversa, analyst for the retail sector at Victory Capital Management. "This is definitely a positive that they're going to put this behind."

Righting a company after bankruptcy isn't a quick fix and people shouldn't expect it to be, she said, adding, "You've got to give them at least a year."

2003 is expected to be a transition year for Kmart, with a profit not projected until 2004, under the plan of reorganization approved April 21 by a federal bankruptcy judge. The company reported a loss of $3.22 billion for fiscal 2002.

Utility holding company lowers profit expectations

The Associated Press

BOISE – The holding company for Idaho's largest utility has lowered its 2003 profit projection because of drought and a legal settlement that reduced the payments it claimed it was owed by Nevada power district.

IDACORP President Jan Packwood said per-share earnings for 2003 will probably range between 90 cents and $1.15, down from the $1.50 to $1.70 expected before the revision.

The parent corporation for Idaho Power Co., which serves 400,000 customers in southern Idaho and eastern Oregon, reports its first quarter earnings Wednesday. Wall Street expected 50 cents a share before Friday's announcement.

The utility lost $3 million during the final quarter of last year after writing off an abandoned auxiliary power plant in southwestern Idaho and completing the closure of its wholesale power marketing operation.

Packwood said the settlement with Overton Power District No. 5 will result in the company writing off $21.5 million dollars it claimed the district agreed to pay under a power purchasing contract that ran from mid-2001 through mid-2011.

Under the settlement, Overton has agreed to pay $52.5 million to IDACORP over the next decade. The district paid the first $5.5 million Thursday.

A warm winter in southern Idaho that reduced power consumption and continued drought has forced the utility to heavily rely on more expensive coal-fired and wholesale market power. The company typically gets 55 percent of its power from its cheaper dams and turbines on the Snake River.

"While the forecasted results for this year are disappointing, they do reflect another year of abnormally low stream flow conditions, warm winter weather and the removal of uncertainty of payment under the Overton contract," Packwood said. "Looking forward, we anticipate a significant rebound in earnings next year, assuming a return to more normal operating conditions."

Los Angeles Times

California officials revoked the state mortgage lending licenses of Wells Fargo & Co. on Thursday, the latest twist in a long and bitter feud over which government agencies have authority over the giant San Francisco bank.

Regulators and bank officials alike said Wells' California customers aren't likely to be affected because Wells will be able to continue making and servicing home loans under authority granted by federal regulators.

Still, analysts said Wells' reputation could be tarnished with some consumers. And regulators at the state Department of Corporations clearly hoped to embarrass the bank, which is the largest financial institution based in California and the state's second-leading mortgage lender.

The company has bank branches in Magic Valley.

The dispute turns on Wells' refusal to obey a state law barring lenders from charging interest until the day before a mortgage is officially recorded. Wells maintains that the law is impossible to comply with and doesn't apply to nationally chartered banks such as itself.

State officials argued that Wells, like other mortgage lenders, should obey the law until the courts decide whether it applies. And they accused Wells' mortgage subsidiary of having misled consumers by touting its state licenses online and in mail and telephone pitches when it was refusing to comply with the law.

"Wells Fargo Home Mortgage was knowingly violating California law and not telling their customers, their competitors or the state regulator," said Corporations Commissioner Demetrios Boutris, who enforces California mortgage laws.

Wells Fargo mortgage chief Pete Wisinger, who learned of the license revocations late Thursday afternoon, said in a statement that "it makes no difference to our customers whether we have or don't have California mortgage licenses because we are a subsidiary of a national bank operating under a charter issued by the federal government.

"Our customers can feel confident that Wells Fargo will continue to originate, process and service mortgage loans," Wisinger said.

The dispute erupted publicly last February when Boutris accused Wells' home-loan subsidiary of refusing to reimburse borrowers for its violations of the state's so-called per-diem law limiting mortgage interest charges.

As low interest rates drove lending to record levels, officials in some California counties were taking days or even weeks to record mortgages for which Wells already had provided the funds, bank officials said. Wisinger said it would cost millions of dollars just to conduct an audit of how frequently that had occurred.

In a secondary allegation, Boutris accused Wells of providing lowball estimates of closing costs and then socking consumers with higher fees in violation of the federal Truth in Lending Act.

In a federal lawsuit in Sacramento, Calif., Wells asked the court to rule that the state can't regulate it, and that federal rules allow interest to be charged as soon as the lender funds the loan.

In March, U.S. District Judge Garland Burrell issued a preliminary ruling that only the U.S. Office of the Comptroller of the Currency may examine the books of national banks and enforce national and applicable state banking laws. State officials note that he didn't rule on whether the state law is pre-empted, leaving them hope the OCC might have to enforce it.

Wells and the state will be back in court Monday for more arguments before the judge makes his final ruling. If Burrell again rules for Wells the decision won't apply to other national banks until an appeals court has upheld it.

Stocks surge on investor optimism

NEW YORK (AP) – The Nasdaq composite index posted its best finish in 10 months Friday as buyers grew increasingly confident of a rebounding economy. Airline stocks surged after Merrill Lynch said the worst of the industry's troubles seemed to be over.

Analysts said investors were unfazed by a jump in the unemployment rate and pleased by a jump in factory orders, giving the Nasdaq and Standard & Poor's 500 index their third straight winning week. The Dow Jones industrials, meanwhile, climbed 128 points.

"Optimism is certainly returning to the market," said Richard Nash, chief market strategist at Victory Capital Management. "Most folks have been willing to ignore the subpar economic data because most of it has been backward-looking. They know the March-April period was affected by the war."

The Nasdaq gained 30.32, or 2.1 percent, to 1,502.88, the highest level seen since June 18, 2002, when it closed at 1,542.96. The S&P rose 13.78, or 1.5 percent, to 930.08, the best level since Jan. 14.

The Dow, meanwhile, closed up 128.43, or 1.5 percent, at 8,582.68, following a two-day loss of 48.74 points. It was the highest level since Jan. 17, when the blue chips finished at 8,586.74.

For the week, the three main gauges finished higher, with the Dow up 3.3 percent, the Nasdaq higher 4.8 percent, and the S&P up 3.5 percent. The Dow rebounded from a loss last week.

The Labor Department reported Friday that the nation's unemployment rate rose to 6 percent in April. Last month's jobless rate was up two-tenths of a percentage point from March, with payrolls falling by 48,000. April's reading matched economists' estimates.

But the Commerce Department said orders to U.S. factories rose 2.2 percent to $329.96 billion in March, following a revised 1 percent fall in February. The gain was larger than analysts' expectations.

"While the jobs report was weak, there was some trader talk that this report would come in at minus 100,000 jobs. So it wasn't as bad as folks thought," Nash said.

Wall Street has rallied in recent weeks on better-than-expected earnings, but analysts say investors are now looking for signs the economy will rebound by year's end before committing further to stocks. This week, the economic data has been mixed, including an April drop in manufacturing activity reported Thursday.

WorldCom, Enron seek tax refunds

WASHINGTON (AP) – Several big companies under investigation for accounting irregularities are seeking to recoup federal taxes they overpaid based on profits they inflated, a Senate aide confirmed Friday.

WorldCom, Enron, Qwest and HealthSouth either are pursuing or considering filing for tax refunds or credits for payments made on billions of dollars falsely claimed as earnings, the Senate Finance Committee aide said, confirming a report in Friday's Wall Street Journal. The aide spoke on condition of anonymity.

WorldCom, which plans to emerge from bankruptcy and change its name to MCI in the fall, already has collected $300 million in tax refunds from the Internal Revenue Service.

A spokesman for WorldCom declined to comment. IRS spokeswoman Nancy Mathis said the agency would have no comment.

HealthSouth, which has not decided whether to seek a refund, said it overpaid $300 million in federal taxes because of inflated income. "Logically, if we overpaid taxes on income we didn't have, we may seek a refund," HealthSouth spokesman Andy Brimmer told the Journal.

Now-bankrupt Enron, which paid only $63 million in taxes between 1996 and 2001, is seeking tax credits, while Qwest is likely to seek a refund.

"We are not commenting other than to confirm we are in discussions with the IRS. I'm not going to comment on the content of those discussions," Enron spokeswoman Karen Denne said from Houston.

A Chicago-based tax attorney said corporate fraud should have no effect on the ability of companies to recoup tax overpayments. "It's not the government's money, it's the shareholders' money," Richard Lipton, the tax attorney, told the Journal.

In fact, a HealthSouth shareholders' lawsuit filed last month in U.S. District Court in Birmingham, Ala., argues that any amount the company is refunded by the IRS should go to shareholders.

Federal investigators have said HealthSouth, a provider of outpatient surgery and rehabilitation services, overstated profits by at least $2.5 billion since 1997. Accounting irregularities at WorldCom totaled nearly $11 billion, according to investigators.

Jobless

President Bush's comments this week about the end of combat in Iraq, and Federal Reserve Chairman Alan Greenspan's expression of optimism regarding economic rebound, could boost local confidence and bring better hiring in early May, Rogers said.

Pending construction projects – including a new 45,000-square-foot Sportsman's Warehouse store to be built in north Twin Falls this summer – should improve employment in that sector.

And the same April weather that delayed the start of seasonal agricultural jobs also improved the valley's outlook for irrigation supplies. Rogers expects farm employment to be at least normal this year across south-central Idaho.

Combined unemployment for Minidoka and Cassia counties reached a seasonally adjusted 7.4 percent in April, the Idaho Department of Labor forecast Friday. That's up seven-tenths of a point from March's rate, and a tenth of a point above April 2002.

"We're starting to show the effects of the layoffs over there," Rogers said.

At first glance, it appears Mini-Cassia's economy in April did about the same as a year earlier.

Not so.

In April 2002, the Idaho Department of Labor's data-sampling period coincided with a temporary maintenance layoff at J.R. Simplot's potato-processing plant in Heyburn. This spring's high rates, on the other hand, are the result of mass layoffs at Simplot and elsewhere that are permanent or indefinite.

So last month's 7.4 percent unemployment in Mini-Cassia is much more worrisome to Rogers than the year-ago 7.3 percent.

Also, recent jobless rates might mask the fruitless job searches of some laid-off workers. Those who reach the end of unemployment benefits, become discouraged in their job searches and drop out of the labor force disappear from both the labor-force total and the unemployed-worker total – actually helping to lower the unemployment percentage.

More layoffs have been announced by Mini-Cassia employers for May and June and likely will sustain the high jobless rates there.

In the three-county labor market of Twin Falls, Jerome and Gooding, April's combined 4.2 percent joblessness – identical to a year ago – was up three-tenths of a point from March.

Also Friday, Times-News classifieds sales manager Deby Johnson reported an accelerated decline from year-ago levels in the number of newspaper advertisements looking for workers.

Last month, employers in the paper's classified advertising section bought 1,787 employment ads. That's 10 percent fewer than the 1,975 such ads placed in April 2002.

So far there have been very few ads for summer help, Johnson said. But advertisement activity in a couple of categories was on the rise: employment agencies, medical and drivers.

Idaho

The increase in the Idaho rate matched the situation nationally. Unemployment across the country hit 6 percent as companies slashed jobs for a third straight month. Payrolls fell 48,000.

It was the third straight month that Idaho unemployment has run below the national rate.

Total employment around the state slipped nearly 1,000 to just under the record 694,000. The number of workers off the job jumped over the 39,000 level for the first time this year.

Half of the state's 44 counties again had jobless rates over 6 percent while four were in double digits. But only six counties reported fewer jobs in April than a year earlier. Ada County, the state's largest, led that list with 2,700 fewer jobs, but it was hit with a major layoff at Micron Technology Inc. early this spring.

Statewide, nearly 9,200 more people were at work last month than a year earlier.

Through the four months of 2003, the unemployment rate has averaged just under 5.5 percent, well below the projection for the year. Labor department analysts in early February predicted average unemployment this year would run about 5.7 percent, down a notch from 2002.

Court certifies suit against Raytheon as class action

BOISE (AP) – A lawsuit brought by former shareholders of Washington Group International has been certified as class action by the U.S. District Court in Idaho.

The ruling clears the way for thousands of former Washington Group investors to seek damages from the Massachusetts-based Raytheon Co. Former investors hope to recover some of the money they lost when the Idaho construction and engineering company's stock was declared worthless as part of a bankruptcy settlement.

The suit, originally filed in June 2001, alleges Raytheon caused the May 2001 bankruptcy because it hid financial liabilities from Washington Group when it sold its Raytheon Engineers and Constructors division to the Idaho company in 2000.

"This is very good news for the investors because it's their only hope to recover what they lost when the Washington Group went bankrupt," said Boise attorney Philip Gordon, the local liaison for the Hagens Berman law firm in Seattle.

Washington Group is not named in the suit, which claims Raytheon failed to disclose cost overruns of about $700 million at projects Washington Group assumed.

The overruns forced Washington Group to warn investors on March 2, 2001, that they were facing a liquidity crisis. The company's stock immediately plunged by 80 percent, from $8 a share to $1.65 a share, a loss of more than $600 million to shareholders.

The class action lawsuit only applies to investors who bought Washington stock between April 17, 2000, and March 1, 2001 – the time between when Washington Group announced it was buying the Raytheon division and when it announced it was facing a liquidity problem.

Raytheon is fighting the suit. Its motion to dismiss the action was denied in June 2002.

"The company has every confidence that it will prevail in this case," Raytheon spokesman James Fetig said Thursday.

Kmart

The retailer, long known for its blue light special marketing tool, said people will shop at its stores because of its exclusive brands, such as Martha Stewart Everyday and Joe Boxer, and because it has everyday items at competitive prices. The Joe Boxer line generated sales of $300 million last year.

Some observers wonder if that will be sufficient.

"You need to have merchandise that customers are going to come out of their way to come to you for," said Jordan Kaplan, professor of managerial science at Long Island University. "Some have promise. I don't know that Joe Boxer is enough to carry (Kmart) through."

Heather Rozzano, shopping recently at a Kmart in Brighton, said she comes to Kmart when she needs something in particular, but she prefers the style of items at Target, which in this town is across the street.

"I don't usually come here unless they have a good price," said Rozzano, of Whitmore Lake, who came specifically for a car seat. "Sometimes they have good prices."

In hopes of improving Kmart's merchandise, the company has rebuilt its corporate structure to streamline purchasing and ensure that stores are stocked with popular items. Only 15 employees are now authorized to give final approval to orders, down from 220.

At the same time, store managers now have more power to decide what items their stores should carry, an idea Kmart calls the "store of the neighborhood." Kmart spokesman Jack Ferry said the concept is working well.

Lampert, chairman and chief executive of ESL Investments, which will own 49 percent of the new Kmart, said Kmart will choose retailing strategies that make good economic sense and help establish loyal customers.

"I think if you go in there, you're going to find they have what you're looking for and they're going to have it at pretty good prices," he said.

Many retail analysts said Kmart's problems over the years were due in part to seat-of-the-pants management. Lampert said his company's investment and involvement in Kmart will provide more direction.

"I do think that it is an important aspect when you have people involved at a board level that have a lot to lose," said Lampert, who also will serve on the new Kmart board of directors. "We've come into this situation with our eyes wide open."

Susan Sarandon and her partner, Tim Robbins, shown arriving at the 75th annual Academy Awards, were set to appear at the Baseball Hall of Fame last weekend to commemorate the 15th anniversary of the movie 'Bull Durham' but were uninvited by Hall of Fame president Dale Petroskey because of their vocal antiwar views.

Costner defends rights of speech for actors

SUNSET, S.C. (AP) – Kevin Costner says no one – including the Baseball Hall of Fame – should single out "Bull Durham" co-stars Tim Robbins and Susan Sarandon for their antiwar views.

Kevin Costner

Robbins and Sarandon had been scheduled to appear last weekend in Cooperstown, N.Y., to commemorate the 15th anniversary of the popular baseball movie.

Instead, Hall of Fame President Dale Petroskey sent a letter telling them he'd called off the festivities because they'd criticized the war in Iraq. He later apologized for not calling them before canceling the event.

Costner, who also starred in the film, said Robbins and Sarandon shouldn't be viewed as targets by those supporting the war.

"He's a good man and she's a really good woman; she's a thoughtful woman," the 48-year-old actor said Thursday. "We don't need to be separating them from us. We need Tim Robbins and Susan Sarandon."

Costner said he doesn't agree with all that Robbins and Sarandon say, but they have a right to their opinion like everyone in the United States.

Robbins and Sarandon aren't divisive and they don't intend to make others uncomfortable, Costner said. "They're just really voicing that right that we fought a long time ago for."

College students find romances online

The Associated Press

They might not want to admit it. But even when surrounded by hundreds of potential dates – in their classes, at parties or just walking around campus – many college students have a hard time finding love.

That fact, coupled with their Internet savvy, is making students a natural market for a growing number of high-tech cupids who are providing online matchmaking services aimed at the college crowd.

Some, such as the newly launched CollegeLuv.com, were started by companies that already run more general online dating services. Others have been created by students such as Michael Mason, who saw a need and decided to fill it. Most, though not all, charge a fee.

"It used to be that no one wanted to tell their friends they met someone online," says Mason, a North Carolina State sophomore who started CampusFlirts.com three months ago. "That stigma still exists, but I think it's really starting to fade."

So far, about 3,000 students from campuses across the country have signed up for Mason's matchmaking service, which he started with money from his credit cards.

Jonathan Monsarrat, a graduate of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, went smaller scale, creating a free temporary site that helped students and recent graduates from MIT, Harvard and Wellesley find dates for Valentine's Day. Nearly 4,000 people signed up.

Because of it, Monsarrat said, even he found what he calls an "almost girlfriend."

Online matchmaking for college students is part of an overall trend in which new sites are being created to help people with similar backgrounds or interests find one another. They include everything from Makeoutclub.com, a site for fans of indie and hardcore music, to MeraPyar.com, a matchmaking site for people of South Asian descent.

But many entrepreneurs see love-starved college students as, potentially, one of the most lucrative markets – in large part because they access the World Wide Web as easily as they use the telephone.

"This is the way they're brought up; it's not something they think about," says Aaron Ben-Ze'ev, an Israeli philosophy professor who's about to release the book, "Love Online: Emotions on the Internet."

Not that every college student wants it known that she or he is cruising for love online. Mason says some subscribers sheepishly ask to have their profiles removed once teasing friends see them.

But many others happily share their stories.

Tonia Turner, a 19-year-old student at Indiana Institute of Technology, has gone out on several dates with men she's met online. So far, she hasn't found that special someone.

"But I haven't met anyone psycho," says Turner, who spends a good bit of time at CollegeLuv.com flirting by computer with people whose photos and profiles she likes.

Faraz Ali, a Harvard business school graduate who still lives in the Boston area, recently hosted a party and invited three women he'd met via Monsarrat's site.

He says he was glad the site included graduate students and alumni.

"Something told me that trying to chase down that undergrad was simply not exactly going to be a high percentage shot," says Ali, a product manager for a biotech company who recently turned 30.

He says many people his age and younger have trouble finding dates because they are too shy or stuck in their ways – or study, work or travel too much.

He also thinks many people, including some of his friends, are too picky. And that, he quips, makes it "difficult to settle for something less than the average 'Swedish-model-brain-surgeon-tango-dancing-intellectual-hippy-chic-y et-mater nally-inclined-best-friend.'"

Michael Mason, a sophomore at North Carolina State University, discusses his website CampusFlirts.com on the campus in Raleigh, N.C. on Wednesday. His site fends off competition from larger matchmaking services and their sites.

Passionate love lasts up to three years for marriages

REVISITED
L.M. Boyd

Q. How long does passionate love last?

A. From two weeks to three years among married couples, according to two University of Wisconsin psychologists.

Other researchers have come up with similar findings. But they add that passionate love may revisit a pair.

If the citizens shaved their faces, their slaves had to grow beards. If the citizens grew beards, their slaves had to shave their faces. That has been the historic pattern.

Did your feet swell today? Or don't you want to talk about it? No matter, this is just preliminary to report the feet of the average grownup swell about 10 percent over the course of each day.

Q. How many workmen died in the construction of San Francisco's Golden Gate bridge?

A. 11.

Apple pie originated in Europe. What's really American is chocolate cake. Incidentally, fancy baked goods weren't all that snazzy in George Washington's day. Didn't get especially elaborate until Abe Lincoln's time. After 1850. When baking powder was invented.

Speed barrier pilot Yeager celebrates 80 years

PLANO, Texas (AP) – Chuck Yeager, who in 1947 became the first man to break the sound barrier and went on to set multiple new speed records, said at a celebration of his 80th birthday that his flying career hardly got off to an auspicious start.

He joined the Air Force in September 1941, but with aspirations of repairing planes, not flying them, Yeager told about 350 people who gathered in a far north Dallas hotel Thursday night to "celebrate a legend."

"I was trained to be a mechanic, which was easy," he said.

In the spring of 1942, Yeager was a crew chief on a twin-engine bombardier training airplane and the engineering officer asked him if he wanted to go along as he took the craft up to check it out.

The ride – his first in an airplane – was rough and turbulent, "and pretty soon I got sick, and threw up," he said.

He was accepted into flight training shortly thereafter, and went on to become the most famous test pilot of all time.

Yeager's favorite music group, the Oak Ridge Boys, sang several songs Thursday evening from their patriotic new disc, "Colors."

His 80th birthday was Feb. 13, but he put off the celebration for a couple of months until the country band could attend.

Ex-wife confides in husband's girlfriend

DEAR ABBY
Abigail VanBuren

DEAR ABBY: My ex-wife, "Jan," and I work for the same company. Before I filed for divorce, I secretly began dating her co-worker, "Carol." After the papers were filed, Jan moved out and, being upset, needed someone to talk to. She chose Carol to confide in.

Carol, not wanting to expose that we were lovers, gave Jan a sympathetic ear. At one point, Jan told Carol that she was her "best friend." Carol would sometimes call my wife to find out what her plans were on a particular night so our paths wouldn't cross if she and I were out on a date. Jan unknowingly baby-sat for Carol's children so we could sneak out.

Carol eventually broke up with me and wants to remain friends with Jan. Jan still does not know about our affair. This seems like the ultimate form of deceit.

Should I tell my ex-wife what really went on – or keep my mouth shut?

– TORN BETWEEN TWO EX-LOVERS

DEAR TORN: Confession is good for the soul. By all means tell your ex the truth. You'll be doing her a favor. She thinks Carol is her friend instead of the opportunist she really is. A person who will betray you once will think nothing of doing it again. (You should know!)

DEAR ABBY: I am a 47-year-old divorced mother of two boys. My ex split four years ago, and for the past two years I've been dating a wonderful man I'll call Ron.

My 80-year-old mother met Ron early on and says she cannot stand him. She can't give me a reason, but insults him to his face, which is every bit as insulting to me. I love Ron and want to marry him, but Mother is making it impossible. She constantly makes demeaning remarks about him to my boys.

Ron is urging me to limit the amount of time the kids and I spend with Mother. However, I am an only child and she never lets me forget I'm "all she has." Abby, I love Ron – and so do my boys – but Mom is making all of us miserable. Help!

– CAUGHT IN THE MIDDLE IN TEXAS

DEAR CAUGHT: Now is the time to be strong and nip this in the bud. Tell your mother that you and the boys are no longer all she has. She has Ron, too. She can accept him as the man you love and be part of your "one big happy family," or she can risk isolating herself by putting him down and trying to control you. The choice is hers.

DEAR ABBY: My husband, "Gene," retired 10 years ago. During his long career, he wore a suit and tie every day. Although Gene was never a slave to fashion, he showered and shaved, used a deodorant and put on clean underwear every day.

Since Gene's retirement, his attention to personal hygiene has deteriorated. He showers, shaves and changes his clothes only once or twice a week. I have to constantly change our bedding and use room freshener on the pillows, sofa cushions, etc.

I have tried presenting myself as a "role model," telling my husband how good it makes me feel to be clean and start "fresh" every day, hoping he'll get the message. But he thinks I'm being obsessive. Abby, what should I do?

– WANTING A CLEAN GENE IN A LAS VEGAS SUBURB

DEAR WANTING: It's time to talk to your husband's doctor. Changes in personal hygiene can be a symptom of serious depression. Your husband's whole identity may have been tied to his job – and now needs help. He needs a mental and physical evaluation by his doctor. Marriage and individual counseling could also benefit you both. Please don't wait.

But for Luke Bremer, the Heartland Lutheran High School's first commencement will be a solitary experience.

Bremer, the lone member of the Class of 2003, will receive his diploma in a ceremony Sunday at the school.

"I see it's importance. It's a big thing, the first graduation for the school," he said. "I fully realize it's important to a lot of people."

Heartland Lutheran began three years ago with five students – including Bremer – meeting in rooms at Peace Lutheran Church. It now has 25 students, including eight juniors.

The Rev. Dan Bremer, the graduate's father and the pastor at Grace Lutheran Church, will be the commencement speaker. Luke Bremer also has some prepared remarks.

A minority in Iraq has virtually been forgotten – the 3 percent who are Christians. You would think that they are at peace because of a tyrant's demise. Turns out, they still have much to fear. In the aftermath of the recent U.S. war, their story should not be overlooked. Among the mostly Muslim population (97 percent of the nearly 25 million people) are the two largest Christian groups: the Chaldean Catholic and Assyrian churches. Their roots go way back. According to tradition, Jesus' disciple Thomas took the gospel there, and by the seventh century, hundreds of monasteries were established throughout current-day Iraq.

TOM SCHAEFER

The history of Christianity in that Middle Eastern land is about advances and bitter controversies among competing Christian groups and a never-ending struggle to survive. Among the calamities, according to Christian History magazine: In 1843, Kurds invaded Assyrian villages and killed at least 10,000 Christians. In 1918, at the end of the British occupation of Iraq, 15,000 Assyrian Christians died as they fled from Turkish troops.

"It's a sad truth that since the 1930s, more Assyrian Christians live outside the Middle East than inside Iraq," the magazine notes.

Today, following the overthrow of Saddam Hussein, the creation of a new government that respects religious diversity will be a major task – and one that will take artful diplomacy. This week, the United States Commission on International Religious Freedom urged President Bush to remain firm in his commitment to ensure freedom, including religious freedom, for all Iraqis, including the minority who are Christians.

Can such a worthy goal be realized? The great Yale historian Kenneth Scott Latourette once said about that part of the world: "The amazing fact is not that Christianity remained a minority cult, but that it survived at all."

Last Saturday was the annual White House Correspondents Association dinner. President Bush praised the work of two reporters who died in Iraq – Michael Kelly, a columnist for The Washington Post, and David Bloom, a reporter for NBC. He recounted Bloom's last e-mail from Iraq to his wife, Melanie, and their three daughters: "Here I am, supposedly at the peak of professional success, and I could frankly care less. Yes, I am proud of the good job we have all been doing, but in the scheme of things, it matters little compared to my relationship with you, the girls and Jesus."

His e-mail should prompt some soul-searching: What's my measure of success?

An anonymous Chinese evangelist writes that some Bible smugglers do more harm than good. His article appears in a new journal called "The Brandywine Review of Faith and International Affairs." It's published by the Council on Faith and International Affairs, a network of Protestant, Catholic and Orthodox Christians.

The problem with some of the Bible smugglers, according to the piece, is that during the night, they "bomb" a town with gospel tracts so that when the people wake up the next morning, "there was Jesus everywhere." In response, local government authorities often arrest the innocent and expel or harass suspected foreign teachers or businessmen who are Christians – and whose services are needed. There is something deeply wrong in assuming that because you have anonymously dumped a tract on someone's windowsill, you have given him or her Jesus." Instead, he pleads, "come and spread the gospel his way – live here, learn Chinese, love the people, incarnate yourself into the culture as Christ incarnated himself into humanity."

By Joan Bean
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS – The Magic Valley Gospel Opry will cater to the country music crowd, with live music every Saturday night at the First Assembly of God.

Pastor Dan Duncan knows the opry format well. He performed in Nashville for 22 years.

He said he wants people to know this is not a typical church service, but a fabulous night of gospel music performed Nashville-style.

Magic Valley Gospel Opry
WHERE: First Assembly of God, Twin Falls
WHEN: Tonight, and every Saturday night at 7 p.m.
ADMISSION: Free, offerings accepted
MORE INFORMATION: 733-8349

"The Grand Ole Opry, which I've sung in several times, they just bring out one artist after another," he said. "When the curtain goes up they just keep 'em rolling – artist after artist – a lot of good variety, and it's very upbeat and a feel-good time and that's what we strive to create."

The music is all country, and the evenings will begin with happy songs involving the congregation. After that, the first guest will sing, takes a break and come back for more. Then, there may be more congregational involvement.

"And we just keep that rolling for about an hour and fifteen minutes, almost non-stop – just music, music, music," Duncan said.

Two or three weeks out of the month, artists from the Great Northwest will perform, Duncan explained. Other sessions will be spiced up with special guests from Nashville and the Grand Ole Opry.

Some will be Nashville artists who have not joined the Opry, but who have been successful in country music. Many are not Christian entertainers, but are entertainers who are Christians.

Duncan has staged a couple of Magic Valley Opry tune-ups already. Before bringing in the Nashville folks, he pulled in musicians from southern Idaho. Band members include guitarist Darren Gere, from Nampa; steel guitarist Dick Shaffer, formerly of Twin Falls now residing in Salt Lake City; mandolin player Ron Cole, of Filer; keyboard player Caleb Collins, of Twin Falls; drummer Dave Bolster, of Twin Falls and guitarist Brian Hildreth, of Buhl.

The first of many Nashville guests, Aaron Wilburn, will be on stage tonight.

"He's a singer. He's an enormously successful songwriter. He's a comedian that will keep you in stitches," Duncan said. "He's sort of a Jeff Foxworthy kind of guy – that type of just good old homespun humor."

Duncan said Wilburn wrote the Song of the Year in gospel music for 2002. It's title is "Four Days Late."

Other guests who will grace the Magic Valley Gospel Opry stage in the future include Marty Rabin, formerly the lead singer for Shenandoah; Jack Green, Doyle Dykes and Billy Walker, an opry star for more than 40 years.

Duncan said world-class musicians and singers, along with people from the Magic Valley and Northwest, make this a good blend. He said local people can have an opportunity to be a part of it if they would like to audition.

"It's just good ole country fun, and if folks like country music they're going to like this," Duncan said.

And if they don't?

"We've had some folks who kind of turned their noses up at country that came out to the warm-up sessions," he said. "And they have been saying, 'Hey, wait a minute – this is fun.'"

Ten families help build their own affordable homes in Filer

By Dixie Thomas Reale
Times-news correspondent

FILER – Mercy Housing and the United States Department of Housing and Urban Development (HUD) have joined forces to create affordable housing in Filer – and 10 families have been selected to work off 30 percent of the price of their new homes.

The construction on the project is being funded by a grant from HUD with the help of Mercy Housing Idaho Inc. Mercy Housing, established in 1991 in Nampa, has helped more than 300 families in the state to obtain affordable housing. It was originally founded as a Catholic women's organization in Omaha, but evolved into a corporation to provide quality and affordable housing for individuals and families who are economically disadvantaged. It helps locate suitable home sites and arrange for construction supervision and loan financing.

The current group in Filer consists of two single mothers, one single father and seven two-parent families.

Connie Barnes, director of Mercy Housing Idaho, said, the project helps close the gap between the cost of housing and the wages of working Americans. The future homeowner/family is required to supply 35 hours of work a week and do up to 65 percent of the construction work. Volunteers from the Filer LDS Stake, Filer missionaries and other community representatives have been assisting with volunteer labor and expertise.

The homes in Filer are expected to be completed by June. Then, 10 more families in Filer will begin work on homes. In September, work will start on homes for 10 families in Buhl, according to Julie Galbreth,

Gospel singers gather for annual convention

By Bryan Woolley
The Dallas Morning News

STEPHENVILLE, Texas – "What's a gospel singing convention?" Aubrey Wedgeworth repeats the question he has been asked. He ponders. "Well, it's a group of people that loves to spread the gospel. We're not preachers. We're just laymen. We're just singing songs written by people who love the Lord. And this is our way of spreading the gospel of Jesus."

At the other end of the Stephenville High School cafeteria, two pianists, an electronic keyboardist and an electric bassist are noodling with their instruments, warming up for the Saturday afternoon "class," as it's called, of the 71st annual Texas State Gospel Singing Convention.

Some 200 people are milling, visiting, waiting for President Milton Brown to call them to the rows of cafeteria chairs and get the music going. They're dressed in their Sunday best, the men in suits and neckties, the women in flowery spring dresses. Most of the people are old. There are several canes, crutches, walkers and wheelchairs in the room. But a contagious joy is in the air.

"We just love to sing," says Wedgeworth, first vice president of this convention.

It's Easter weekend. The singers aren't accustomed to spending this sacred time away from their families and their churches. But the Texas State Gospel Singing Convention is always on the third weekend in April. No matter what.

The convention began with a two-hour singing "class" Friday night, followed by a period of fellowship. On Saturday, the convention sang from 1 to 4 p.m., broke for a barbecue dinner, then sang from 6 to 9. On Sunday, it sang from 9 to 10 a.m., then held a church service and sang some more.

During the three days, any soloist, duet, trio, quartet or quintet who wants to sing a "special" will do so. Everybody who wants to stand up in front and lead the congregation in a song will do it. Everybody who wants to play the piano will. Those who just want to sit in the cafeteria chairs and sing along, or just listen, will do that.

The tunes are lively, with a toe-tapping beat. The piano style is a tinkling blend of ragtime and blues. Most groups who perform "specials" sing in the close harmony of a barbershop quartet. Every song comes from one of the six songbooks published by music companies across the South, and for sale for $3 to $4.50 each.

Gospel singing conventions are a white, Southern Protestant tradition that began in rural churches of the British Isles, where people got together to learn a little music and enjoy one another's company. It spread across the frontier American South, especially among small, rural evangelical churches that frowned on dancing and other forms of entertainment. African Americans developed a different form and style of gospel singing out of their own distinct experience of Southern religion.

In many Catholic parishes, most 'altar boys' are girls

By Mark Niesse
The Associated Press

ATLANTA – As soon as she was old enough, third-grader Ellen Clarke joined the first wave of girl altar servers, helping break up a club reserved for Roman Catholic boys for centuries. Seven years later, the 15-year-old is still serving, but now she's surrounded by other girls helping out priests and deacons on Sundays at Atlanta's Our Lady of the Assumption church.

Altar serving has become so popular with girls that they outnumber the boys in many parishes. That's exactly what some in the church feared when the Vatican allowed female servers in 1994. Before girls could serve, many parents pushed boys into altar serving, especially in churches with shortages. Girls have now taken over in some parishes, which has made it easy for boys to drop out. That's bad news for a church already suffering from a priest shortage – because altar serving has always been a prime recruiting ground for future priests.

"Girls can't do that much in the church. I guess that was a way to get more girls involved," said Ellen, who wore jeans and a T-shirt while practicing recently for Easter services. "I do it to give back to the community, and it makes going to church a lot more interesting."

In less than a decade, girls have flocked to the altar in some churches. At Our Lady of the Assumption in Atlanta, they make up 44 of the 75 altar servers.

Why is the activity so popular among girls?

"Whenever a group is denied a possibility for doing something, that makes it particularly attractive in some ways," said Lynne Arnault, director of women's studies at Le Moyne College, a Jesuit school in Syracuse, N.Y. Now that they've finally got a chance to serve, girls want to do it, Arnault said.

No one keeps track of the exact number of altar servers nationwide, but altar girls have become an increasingly familiar sight carrying the cross, washing the priest's hands and lighting candles during Mass, say priests and parishioners. At least two dioceses in the United States – in Arlington, Va., and Lincoln, Neb. – still don't allow girls to be altar servers.

AP photo

Altar girl Ellen Clarke, 15, between fellow parishioners listening to the service at Our Lady of the Assumption Catholic Church in Atlanta, has been an altar server for seven years. She was one of the first in a wave of girls to serve in the institution that was for centuries reserved for boys.

Some clerics worry that girls will continue taking over altar serving duties, simply because boys and girls often don't like participating in the same activities. Most servers participate between fourth and ninth grades.

There hasn't been enough time to tell whether fewer altar boys will lead to difficulties getting men to enter the priesthood, said the Rev. Mark Huber of the Lincoln diocese. But it's up to the bishop of the diocese to decide who may become an altar server, and in Lincoln, he decided to stick with the boys-only tradition, Huber said.

"There was a thought that having altar boys may help promote the idea of vocations to the priesthood in the future," he said.

Altar girls may be a step toward the Catholic church someday allowing women as deacons or priests, said Mike Reineck, who trains and schedules servers at Our Lady of the Assumption.

Homes

local self-help coordinator.

The current group in Filer consists of two single mothers, one single father and seven two-parent families. All are young families, noted construction supervisor Mark Cutler. Occupations range from waitress to school teacher, policeman to school lunch worker.

To qualify for a home, prospective homeowners must have good credit and an income. Monthly mortgage payments are based on income. The houses in Filer are in the $100,000 to $110,000 price range, and homeowners will move into their homes with $30,000 to $35,000 of built-up equity, thanks to their labor.

Cutler said there is a need for more families for future projects. Senior citizens, the handicapped and minorities are encouraged to apply.

Many local contractors have volunteered their services, Cutler said. By the time the families move into their homes, they will also have friends and a built-in support systems on the block.

Future homeowner Bud Compher said homeowners work on all the jobs that do not require a license for installation. Licensed tradesmen do the rest. The homeowners do framing, roofing, cement work, painting, siding, flooring and cabinetry. Cutler helps with the training.

Most of the future homeowners in the Filer self-help project were approved in September. But Rossana Gomez, a single mother who works as a waitress, was not approved until December.

"So I have to put in extra time to get done by June," she said.

She has recruited her mother, Mary Gunnell, and her brother, Danial Mendez, to help with work on her three-bedroom, two-bath home.

RELIGION LETTER

When we discuss the Bible, we need to understand the context of the verse or passage and, if possible, some of its background. Any verse can be twisted to fit our own personal point of view if: (1) we are already at odds with God or (2) we do not understand the context of the passage. Therefore, we must approach the Bible with an open mind and a sincere desire to know the living God. Some people criticize Paul because they do not understand him. While it's true he was a Pharisee and Christian-hater at one time, God got his attention as only God can do and turned Paul into one of the stoutest Christians in history. Also, Paul always makes it clear when he is voicing his own opinion rather than that of the Lord's. Incidentally, every prophecy given in the word has been and will be fulfilled regardless of what the skeptics say. Even if you hate Jesus, he loves you. So much that the very hairs on your head are numbered (Matthew 10:30). Please trust him for your salvation today.

'Coined by God': Authors cull words from Bible

The Dallas Morning News

"Coined by God: Words and Phrases That First Appear in the English Translations of the Bible," by Stanley Malless and Jeffrey McQuain (Norton, 221 pages, $23.95)

You wouldn't be surprised to learn that "balm in Gilead," "born again" and "reap the whirlwind" are phrases that entered common English usage after first appearing in translations of the Bible. But would you feel as sure that "eat, drink and be merry," "busybody" and "ivory tower" are from the same source? The authors have confined their sources to translations between John Wycliffe in 1302 and the King James Version that appeared in 1611. Phrases are more likely to catch the eye, but single words are often more loaded with history. "Shibboleth" was used in the Book of Judges by Gileadites because the enemy Ephraimites couldn't pronounce the word properly. It has now come to mean a word or phrase indicative of a person's origin. The book gives which translation, with the quotation where the word or phrase first appeared, what other translators used, a history of how the meaning of the word has changed, then a modern example of usage.

Ed department defends decision on Christian lit

HONOLULU (AP) – The state Department of Education is defending a decision to allow students to distribute 70,000 packets of teen-oriented Christian material in schools across the islands.

Some students, parents and teachers complained about the Jesus Hawaii Project, run by 184 churches at a cost of $355,000. Earlier the project sent videos on the life of Jesus to homes around the state. Each packet, dubbed a "student survival kit," includes a Christian video, a CD, a copy of the New Testament and Christian literature aimed at youths.

State Schools Superintendent Patricia Hamamoto alerted teachers to the project in an April 8 memo, reminding them that students have a right to distribute material in a peaceful manner.

The ACLU said other religious groups should be given the same opportunity. An official of Hawaii Citizens for the Separation of State and Church wants the policy to apply to gay rights activists.

When Robertson retires, who's next in line?

By Steven G. Vegh
The Virginian-Pilot

Pat Robertson

At 73, he's still the face of television's "The 700 Club," watched by millions on the Christian Broadcasting Network he created in 1960. As chancellor and acting president, he is still the ultimate authority at Regent University, which he founded in 1977. He still chairs Operation Blessing International, which dispensed more than $50 million in charity in the fiscal year ending March 31, 2001. And his political and social commentaries still make headlines.

Publicly, there's little indication that evangelist Pat Robertson sees himself entering the autumn of a life's work. On the contrary, Robertson remains fueled by a strong evangelical faith and an "age-defying" health regimen.

Healthy living didn't protect Robertson from developing prostate cancer, a disease that often coincides with advanced age. In February, a surgeon successfully removed the cancer, which had not spread. But the illness reminded Robertson loyalists and observers that no one lives forever, which raises inevitable questions: What happens after Pat is gone? Can his enterprises flourish without his business acumen, his aura as a holy man and his celebrity power? Is Gordon Robertson, the son who co-hosts "The 700 Club," destined to fill his father's shoes?

No image-conscious institution can ignore the need to raise up new leaders, especially an independent religious organization that depends on charitable donations inspired largely by a single personality.

"'The 700 Club,' in many ways, is all about Pat. That particular program might have a hard time surviving," said John Green, a University of Akron scholar who studies the religious right.

American church history is full of charismatic evangelists who were famous in their day, but whose names and work faded in the public's consciousness after death. Among them was Charles E. Fuller, a renowned crusader who pioneered Christian radio with the "Old Fashioned Revival Hour." His program folded after he died in 1968, although Fuller Theological Seminary, which he co-founded, is flourishing in Pasadena, Calif.

Focus on the Family represents the latest generation of Christian radio. Dobson, a licensed psychologist who founded Focus 26 years ago, is still interviewing guests on the air, writing books and going strong at 67. More than a decade ago, however, the Focus board of directors began considering what would happen when Dobson retires or dies. In 1999, the board adopted a transition plan, which is available to the public on request. As part of that plan, Focus has added two new personalities to Focus broadcasts, physician Walt Larimore and psychologist Bill Maier, so that listeners don't identify the radio ministry with Dobson exclusively.

There is, of course, nothing quite like keeping a business, or a ministry, in the family. Bob Jones University, named for its founder, has been run by three generations of Joneses. More notably, Billy Graham designated his son, Franklin, as his future successor in 1995. Five years later, the nation's best-known evangelist retired and formally passed leadership of the Billy Graham Evangelistic Association to Franklin.

But things aren't exactly the same. Likewise, the fame enjoyed by televangelists Jimmy Swaggart, Oral Roberts and Robert Schuller hasn't transferred completely to their second-generation heirs, Donnie Swaggart, Richard Roberts and Robert Schuller II.

"In all of these cases, the son is a rather dim bulb compared to the luminosity of the father," said Columbia University's Randall Balmer, who studies religion in America.

According to his biography on CBN's Web site, Gordon Robertson grew up in Portsmouth, Va., and graduated from Yale University in 1980. He earned a law degree from Washington & Lee University, and practiced law in South Hampton Roads, Va., for 10 years. He is married and has three children.

As Republican party chairman in Virginia's 2nd Congressional District, Gordon Robertson helped lead local candidates' campaigns during the early 1990s. In 1999, he returned to Virginia to co-host "The 700 Club," while remaining president of CBN Asia Inc. The on-air job puts Gordon at the side of his famous father, and he stands in as host when the senior Robertson is absent. Robertson's other son, Tim, is a businessman.

Baptists expel church that baptized gays

CONCORD, N.C. (AP) – A Southern Baptist congregation was expelled from a regional association after the pastor baptized two gay men and welcomed them into membership.

The Cabarrus Baptist Association, representing 81 member congregations, agreed in a closed meeting to sever ties with the 800-member McGill Baptist Church in a 250-11 vote. Afterward, the Rev. Randy Wadford, association missions director, read a statement that said "the homosexual lifestyle is contrary to God's will and plan for mankind" so admitting members "without evidence or testimony of true repentance is to condone the old lifestyle."

McGill's pastor, the Rev. Steve Ayers said "the kingdom of Christ is about love, about God's grace and mercy .... When a church becomes so judgmental that it can't accept people into their fellowship, it is a sad, sad day."

Ayers said the two gay men declined comment.

Governor vetoes bill about contraceptives law

PHOENIX – Gov. Janet Napolitano vetoed a bill to expand religious exemptions under a state law requiring employers' health-insurance plans to cover prescription drugs including contraceptives.

The contraceptive coverage law, passed last year and signed by Napolitano's predecessor, allows exemptions for religious organizations that mainly hire people of the same faith and provide goods or services related to that faith. The bill Napolitano vetoed would have expanded exemption to social-service agencies affiliated with religious groups. It was supported by Roman Catholic officials and opposed by Planned Parenthood.

Supporters said the bill enhanced constitutional protection of religious rights, but Napolitano, a Democrat, said the existing law's exemption was "carefully crafted."

Religion in brief

Head bishop says sexuality must not split church

YANKTON, S.D. – Congregations should not allow the issue of human sexuality to split the Evangelical Lutheran Church in America church, the denomination's head bishop says.

Mark Hanson told a pastors' conference that the church's 5.1 million members face a challenge to "talk openly with one another, to disagree with one another about human sexuality and, more particularly, the place of gay and lesbian people in our congregations and ministry." He noted that work has begun on a study document on homosexual policy, authorized by the churchwide assembly two years ago and due to be finished in time for the 2005 assembly. If the Lutherans simply await the 2005 assembly's decision and then react, "we will have a divided church," he said.

Meanwhile, Hanson's predecessor as presiding bishop, Herbert Chilstrom, and the retired bishop of the St. Paul area, Lowell Erdahl, told a conference at St. Olaf College in Minnesota that the denomination should welcome gays and lesbians without reservation.

The Rev. James M. Childs Jr. of Trinity Lutheran Seminary in Columbus, Ohio, who directs the sexuality study, told the meeting his committee has received 1,000 letters and e-mails.

Church in theme park has endured

By Amy Wilson
The Orange County Register

BUENA PARK, Calif. – The story goes that Walter Knott used to teach Sunday school on the train. You know, the train that runs through his park. The one that continues to run even on Sunday through his park, rambling past the little Church of the Reflections, a sanctuary built 127 years ago for a congregation that was founded at the time of the Gold Rush.

Which explains why the church is located in the Old West part of Knott's Berry Farm Theme Park.

But there is little but faith to explain why the church has lasted this long and why it remains open for official business every Sunday, the only church of its kind – in a theme park – in the world.

The crowd on Palm Sunday numbered around 50. That included old-timers who've worshipped here for decades and a pew of first-timers. It included four drop-in park-goers from Fresno and a bevy of Job's Daughters from Garden Grove and a guy who flew in from Hawaii. It included a hiccuping baby, a nursing mother and an organist who plays the piano and the organ at the same time.

> It is country quiet inside the church. Still, there is the random piercing scream from out there.

Aside from the little hiccups, it is country quiet inside the church, the high redwood beams absorbing a lot of outside noise. Still, there is the random piercing scream from out there, the high-pitched giggle of happiness, the deep floorboard shudder of big equipment sounding perilously close.

Constitutionally, the congregation is evangelical, which means you get a Bible and a hymnal when you walk in the door. Officially, they're interdenominational, which means that the church board of directors includes a Presbyterian, an Episcopalian, a Baptist and a Pentecostal.

The church itself is multi-denominational, built in Downey in 1876 as a Baptist church, then becoming a home for Episcopalian worship. It was in 1955 that the church was rescued from demolition by Walter Knott. Knott, it is believed, had a relative – "a mother's cousin or something," a churchgoer said – who used to be a Methodist minister there. Knott had the clapboard church taken apart piece by piece and rebuilt it near his original berry stand in his budding theme park. It's said he wanted a place for his employees to worship. (It is also obvious he wanted a place to worship, too, as he attended there for years until his death.)

For 17 years, Rev. Sheldon Perrine enthralled the churchgoers with his old-time religion, but Perrine retired recently and the church committee has been hard at work to find a replacement who is as fiery and as well-suited to this place.

You don't have to pay a park entrance to go to the church. But you've got to call ahead to get your name on a list of who's coming. That's just to make sure the church isn't a front for freeloaders who want to use the rest of the park.

Reader brings up Christian view of suicide

The Kansas City Star

Faith Q&A

Reader's Question: Aren't current thoughts on suicide a function of human law rather than God's law?

The Rev. Patrick Rush, vicar-general of the Diocese of Kansas City-St. Joseph (Mo.): The Bible has little to say on the subject of suicide. There is, of course, the commandment "Thou shalt not kill," but there is little to spell out unequivocally its application to the act of self-destruction. Yet from the beginning, Christian tradition has strongly opposed suicide. This opposition is founded on several Christian principles. Each of us is a steward of God's gift of life; none of us is the owner. Therefore, we have no right to destroy that gift and to do so offends the Master of Life. Likewise, suicide is an offense against the commandment to love oneself and one's neighbor. As to love of neighbor, suicide unjustly breaks the ties of solidarity with family and other human societies to which each of us has obligations. It unjustly burdens family and friends with tremendous guilt. If it sets an example for others, it becomes, additionally, a source of grave scandal. Although Christianity has always held that suicide is a serious moral evil, such suicide might not be mortally sinful. Sin is freely chosen, and most people who commit suicide do so with the impairment of serious anxiety, depression or tremendous fear of suffering. These conditions diminish free choice. Therefore, we do best to leave personal judgment to God who always wants our salvation and who alone can read our hearts.

TWIN FALLS – The Magic Valley Regional Medical Center Foundation's Spring Fling proved to be a successful fund-raiser for women's health, and lots of fun, organizers said.

Twelve high-profile area "Hosts with the Most" designed entertainment packages that were auctioned April 11. Each package was unique, and included whitewater rafting, helicopter rides, a show-filled weekend in Boise, a Steelheads game and wining and dining. One host arranged a private airplane trip to Stanley with activities of horseback riding, hiking, biking and a guided river trip.

The auction brought in more than $10,000, earmarked for the foundations Women's Health Fund.

The night had an Hawaiian theme, featuring casual attire and tropical desserts. Music was presented by soloist Camille Barigar, while Shawn Barigar was the master of ceremonies. Intermission featured the Essma Girls of Twin Falls hula dancing. The auctioneer was Justin James.

"Maybe, this will become the new trend. Several people came up to me after the auction and wanted to volunteer for next year. What a great event. More fun than I would have ever imaged," said Susan Courtnay, Magic Valley Regional Women's Health coordinator.

If you are interested in volunteering or for more information about Magic Valley Regional Foundation events, call Merrily Huether at 737-2480.

Asset builder gives time to young

Randy Maves has been named an HealthNet Asset builder.

TWIN FALLS COUNTY HEALTHNET

Nick Mindock

Randy Maves is helping to create a strong foundation for today's young people.

His many contributions to the community have earned him the recognition of being named an HealthNet Asset Builder. Randy teaches art at Castleford High School, and is volleyball and track coach, and an integral part of his church.

As a coach, Randy tries to do much more than win. His goals are to build self-esteem and strengthen relationships between team members. When young people have something they view as a success, it can give them strength. Randy tries to give the athletes he coaches something they can feel good about.

"If they're better at anything when they leave, it's a success," Randy explained.

"Kids today have a hard time expressing things," he also said.

He teaches students how to express themselves with art. His classes are a reprieve from the stresses teens face daily, and are meant to be a "mental quiet time." He tells students, "You should let the medium move you."

Within his church, he also does many things to help young people. He conducts group discussions where students are able to express their feelings about God and religion.

Randy also has led volunteer youth groups to help less fortunate people.

"Bringing kids to help these people gives them a new perspective on life," he said. "Kids get a sense of the world's size, and yet at the same time, its smallness."

Randy's commitment to help young people in the community is backed by numerous fund-raising efforts. Through events like golf scrambles, Randy has helped to raise funds for youth projects, even raising $25,000 for a trip to Mexico.

His work in the community has had a broad scope of positive influence on young people.

~~Nick Mindock is a student~~ at Twin Falls High School. HealthNet is a coalition of agencies promoting the health of southern Idaho residents, and assets, which are defined as developmental building blocks young people need to avoid risky behaviors.

THE ACES ON BRIDGE®

Bobby Wolff

"Once you're lucky, you don't have to work for other people. You make them work for you."
— Dan Totheroh, Stephen Vincent Benet and William Dieterle

Today's auction may be unsophisticated, but the final contract is excellent. Indeed, you (South) may relax inwardly when dummy appears, since your mind may turn to making a grand slam if both major suits behave. Instead, however, you should focus on how to make the small slam if both majors are unfriendly.

The obvious thing to do is to win the opening diamond lead and test trumps. When they turn out to be 4-1, can you see how you might avoid the need to take the spade finesse?

The answer is to draw three rounds of trump, then play off the four top clubs, pitching your diamond loser from hand. If West can ruff the third club, you are down — but you would have had no chance to make anyway. If he can ruff the fourth club, you will be reduced to taking the spade finesse; but surely you deserve to have something work out for you. The good news comes when, as here, West has to follow suit to all of the clubs. You pitch your diamond, of course, and now the time is ripe to ruff dummy's second diamond to hand (extracting the last of West's minor-suit cards) and reassess the position.

Given the vulnerability, East can be assumed to have started with seven diamonds, so West had only two. That being so, it is safe to exit to West with your last trump. That player is reduced to his three spades and has to lead away from his queen into your tenace: contract made!

ANSWER: Double, for penalties, but suggesting that partner lead a heart. When you double in auctions like this where you passed initially, your most likely hand type is real heart length — the only suit you could not conveniently bid.
