Police ID murder suspect

They'll announce today in case of Burley woman

By Shelby Hildner
Times-News Writer

BURLEY — Police say they have identified a suspect in the December 1999 murder of Burley resident Kacy Kay Ray. Cassia County Sheriff Jim Higns has called a press conference for 9 a.m. today. He said he will announce the suspect at that time. The suspect is reportedly incarcerated in the Idaho State Penitentiary on convictions from other felony crimes.

Ray's body was found in the desert 13 miles southeast of Burley on Jan. 1, 2000. She had been stabbed in the neck and her hands were wounded in a fashion that led police to believe she had been defending herself from her attacker. She was 30 at the time of her death.

curly hair and dark eyes," Judith Ray said. "She was a victim of this crime and she fought very, very hard for her life and I believe that this person needs to be held accountable for what he did."

Judith Ray praised the work of Higns, his deputies and everyone else who worked on her daughter's case. "Those people have been very, very supportive and I feel we've become friends."

Higns is waiting until today's press conference to share details about what has led him to name a suspect.

In March, Higns told The Times-News the case was "very active." Several months earlier, the sheriff's office received new information related to the Ray murder, he said.

For more than two years, the sheriff's office has had DNA test results from the murder and identified possible suspects. But

City pool use soars

By Rachel Hartigan
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — Carol Gunther says the city pool has always been a great facility but was dark and cold in the winter, with a vacant parking lot. That was before the YMCA took over management. Now, Gunther said, the pool is a happening place all year. She and her family have a family pass and swim weekly.

"The YMCA has added a lot of fun features," Gunther said. "They've made it more family-friendly. It's a great place to have families come swim, and it's full all the time now."

In fact, use of the pool has increased by about 65 percent since

Ashcroft deflects criticism, seeks more authority

John Ashcroft on Capitol Hill Thursday

Newsway

WASHINGTON — In a rare appearance before the House Judiciary Committee, Attorney General John Ashcroft Thursday deflected his congressional critics and shrugged off an internal report critical of the treatment of detainees in the Sept. 11 terror probe.

Despite nearly five hours of testimony, Ashcroft's added little to the Justice Department's response to questions about its use of new anti-terrorism laws or to the stinging 198-page report issued Monday by the department's inspector general.

Instead, he invoked the "ideological war" between the United States and terrorists, claimed progress and success in that war and dismissed his critics while asking for three new anti-terrorism measures.

And in his first public comment on the detainee report, Ashcroft ceded no ground, repeating his spokeswoman's line that "we make no apologies" and that the measures taken were necessary and legal.

Democrats on the committee posed a variety of questions challenging the Patriot Act and the detainee report but they failed to pin down Ashcroft, who responded with often lengthy answers.

He was aided by the gavel of committee chairman E. James Sensenbrenner Jr., R-Wis., who strictly enforced each committee member's five-minute limit for questions, cutting off some in mid-sentence.

The tone of the hearing was set when Sensenbrenner ended a line of questioning by Rep. Maxine Waters, D-Calif., about the links between the Sept. 11 attacks and the 515 detainees

Northwest governors back salmon recovery without breaching dams

The Associated Press

BOISE — Four Northwest governors who met Thursday to map out a salmon recovery strategy that balances fish and economic interests without breaching the four lower Snake River dams emerged declaring their continued support for incremental improvements in spawning habitat and hatcheries.

Idaho Gov. Dirk Kempthorne, Washington Gov. Gary Locke, Montana Gov. Judy Martz and Oregon Gov. Ted Kulongoski met in Boise to discuss the strategy. They agreed to build on the consensus

Preferences heading to President Bush focus on habitat

The four states' chief executives reached three years ago.

The four states skirted the issue of dam breaching in 2000 because then-Oregon Gov. John Kitzhaber supported the measure. But Kulongoski's adviser, Jim Myron, said the new Oregon governor agrees with his counterparts that breaching can occur at the same time the regional economy is stimulated. "The Pacific Northwest made a commitment to pursue a proactive fish and wildlife recovery strategy that avoids the breaching of dams, and it remains a strategy we continue to endorse," the governors wrote in recommendations they are sending the Bush administration.

The summit comes a month after a federal judge threw out the government's existing plan for managing the Columbia and Snake river basins on grounds it failed to comply with requirements. Please see SALMON, Page A3

Mild winter brings out the moths

By Julie Pence
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — It's milder time — much more than usual.

But it's not beer we're talking about. It's these pesky moths — called "miller" by the hundreds — that greet you by the hundreds at your front door at night, fly into your mouth and nostrils when you get in your car, and fill your laundry room and hang against the screens as they try to escape in the mornings.

Attracted to light, the nocturnal pests hover near light bulbs at night and hide in the cracks of cars for warmth.

As dawn approaches, the millers search out dark places to rest.

The infestation started a couple of weeks ago. And ever since, all it seems Magic Valley residents can do is endure.

"The good news is that at this point in the moths' lives, they are pretty much harmless."

They did their damage earlier this spring when they were in the cutworm and army worm stage, said Steve Salisbury, who works for the University of Idaho Extension Service. The population was so huge it took over many Magic Valley alfalfa, sugar beet and grain fields. It was the largest in 20 years. In fact, the problem was so daunting that farmers were given an unusual concession from the government allowing them to spray for the insect, Salisbury said.

Last winter's mild weather is to blame. It did not provide the usual freezing and thawing cycles that keep insect populations in check, said Jo Ann Robbins, who also works for the extension service.

Salisbury said the fields that started the most were near desert areas.

"They are overwintering in clump grass," he said. "Some guys would go out to the desert with their shovels and turn over grass clumps and find eggs and larvae all over inside the clumps."

While the cast end of Magic Valley seems to have been hit hard, Bill Haxen — who is with the extension service in Gooding County — said farmers haven't had to spray for cutworms and army

U.S. to pull troops back from DMZ

The Washington Post

TOKYO — U.S. troops soon will withdraw from the tense Demilitarized Zone between North and South Korea, bringing an end to 50 years of guard duty that began at the end of the Korean War, officials said Thursday.

A joint statement by U.S. and South Korean officials said American troops will be pulled back to positions at least 75 miles from the DMZ, and will abandon a large base they occupy in downtown Seoul. The move will free U.S. troops to be more mobile, replaced by soldiers in a modern South Korean army, officials said.

No precise schedule has been announced for the change, although U.S. officials have said the new deployment may begin this year. The South Korean government seeks a delay until current tensions ease over North Korea's nuclear program.

Officials said the move would not immediately reduce the 37,000 American troops posted in South Korea.

The statement said the redeployment would "enhance security" and would be done "taking careful account of the political, economic and security situation on the peninsula and in Northeast Asia."

Foreign officials, under prodding by Secretary of State Donald Rumsfeld to create a more mobile and agile force, insist the American defense against North Korea remains strong even if its soldiers are not manning bunkers and watching the mine fields at the DMZ.

The redeployment was not a surprise. In April, Rumsfeld announced that troops stationed near the DMZ might be shifted south, to other countries in the region or even brought home. U.S. officials have been negotiating with their South Korean counterparts to set the details. Agreement appears to have been costly for the United States. Last week, the U.S. military announced it will spend an additional $11 billion over the next three years in new equipment and defense systems for South Korea, including upgraded missile systems and reinforced military intelligence.

The DMZ was established along the armistice line drawn to end hostilities of the 1950-53 Korean War, in which American and South Korean troops fought North Korea and Chinese forces to a standstill.

The bulk of patrols along the DMZ already are conducted by South Korean troops, part of a well-equipped, well-regarded 650,000-member military force. American troops will continue to train with them at positions near the border, Thursday's statement said.

In fact, deterrence along the border has remained high. U.S. ability to call in overwhelming air attacks and firepower — and including, ultimately, on a nuclear threat. American troops have been called a "tripwire" — a force whose

Military shift

The United States will dismantle bases and move more than 37,000 troops farther back from areas near the Demilitarized Zone (DMZ) separating South Korea from communist North Korea some time in the future.

Troop realignment

Phase 1 — Troops will first move from bases near the DMZ to two major ones, Camp Casey and Camp Red Cloud.

Phase 2 — These same troops will eventually move to "hub bases" at least 75 miles south of the DMZ. Nearly 7,000 at Seoul headquarters will also move.

sacrifice in case of an invasion by the million-man North Korean army would guarantee U.S. retaliation.

Americans increasingly have chafed at that role, especially during the periodic public protests against U.S. troop presence in South Korea. Officially, American officials deny the demonstrations — which swelled last year after a U.S. armored vehicle accidentally ran over two young girls — prompted their considerations.

Bush tells U.S. troops Iraq war was justified

CAMP AS SAYLIYAH, Qatar (AP) — President Bush said anew on Thursday that war to rid Iraq of destructive weapons was justified, and he said the truth about Saddam Hussein's ability to create and use deadly germs and bombs would come in time.

"We're on the look. We'll reveal the truth," Bush said in a speech to 1,000 cheering troops as he wound up a seven-day tour of Europe and the Middle East. He flew back to Washington along a path that took him over Baghdad.

At 31,000 feet, Bush sat on a bench and gazed out a left-side window of Air Force One along with Secretary of State Colin Powell, National Security Adviser Condoleezza Rice and White House chief of staff Andrew Card.

He pointed out landmarks, including two airports, a predominantly Shiite area known as Saddam City and the site of the first night's attack. Four F-18 fighter jets escorted in pairs at each wing, a protection routinely afforded presidential aircraft.

The fly-over was the closest Bush has come to the former battlefield.

Lawmakers reach drug deal

WASHINGTON (AP) — The drive to provide prescription drug benefits under Medicare gained ground on Thursday as leading members of the Senate Finance Committee unveiled a $400 billion bipartisan plan to offer equal coverage to all seniors, regardless of how they receive their health care.

As outlined by Sen. Charles Grassley, R-Iowa, and Max Baucus, D-Montana, the measure also envisions creation of a new managed care option for Medicare along the lines of preferred providers organizations that are in widespread use in private industry.

These plans would offer preventive health coverage as well as protection against catastrophic health care expenses, neither of which is currently available under the government-run program.

The White House said President Bush was encouraged by the agreement. At the same time, Bush stopped short of an endorsement.

The president prefers an approach that offers a more generous drug benefit to seniors who will enroll in a Medicare preferred provider organization than to those who remain in the traditional program.

ments of the Endangered Species Act. That plan, mirroring the 2000 agreement, focused on restoring the Northwest salmon runs through improvements to habitat and hatchery operations and harvest limitations without breaching dams. Federal officials said 2.5 years ago that dam breaching would again be discussed toward the end of the decade if the current approach failed.

Kempthorne said some of the measures under way to preserve salmon are working, such as placing screens at irrigation diversions to keep returning adults in the main river rather than getting lost. "While the increases in some anadromous stocks certainly are attributable to more favorable ocean conditions, we believe that the investments made by the region in habitat improvements and maintain passage are contributing to the positive results," the new document said.

Kempthorne and the other governors said they were not prepared to abandon that river management strategy, and he called the federal court objections to it technicalities.

U.S. District Judge James A. Redden ordered the federal government to rewrite the plan and then gave it a year to adjust hydroelectric dam operations to better protect wild fish in the Snake and Columbia rivers.

Since Redden's ruling, conservationists and four Northwest tribes with treaty fishing rights have insisted on reopening the debate over breaching the four dams in eastern Washington. Short of that, the tribes' and environmental groups are calling for changes in dam operations to restore stronger and more natural river flows for the fish.

Ashcroft

who were deported. Mr. Attorney General, how many of the 515 individuals ..."

Sensenbrenner broke in to say her time had expired. "Walters continued, '... were linked to Sept. 11.'"

Sensenbrenner allowed Ashcroft to answer the question. Ashcroft said that "in deference to other members of the committee" he would not "top the complete answer." Then he said that all detainees arrested and held were here illegally. Department policy, "for which we do not apologize," he said, was that "before we would release them ... we wanted to have them cleared."

Those FBI clearances took on average nearly three months, the report found, after immigration officials gave deportation or voluntary departure orders, leaving the detainees, who had no ties to terrorism, in secret and often harsh jail conditions.

Led by Rep. John Conyers, D-

Mich., a longtime Ashcroft critic and the committee's ranking minority member, Democrats are looking ahead to a series of future oversight hearings that will examine the Justice Department and its anti-terrorism measures, Democratic aides said. Notably, Conyers did not question the attorney general Thursday. Ashcroft did note that he would not tolerate abuse in the jails, another allegation of the report, and said Justice Department officials would continue to investigate four of 18 abuse cases brought to their attention.

The attorney general was appearing before the committee for the first time in 20 months, when in September 2001 he testified on the legislation that would become the Patriot Act.

Among the issues that likely will be taken up will be Ashcroft's three new measures: clarifying the definition of "material support" for terrorist; toughening penalties for terrorist acts to include the death penalty and life sentences; and to permit pre-trial detention of suspects in terrorism prosecutions.

Yasser Arafat remains Mideast player

By Rafi Neeman
Associated Press Writer

RAMALLAH, West Bank — While Palestinian Prime Minister Mahmoud Abbas flew around the region in recent days, meeting with Arab leaders, President Bush and Israeli Prime Minister Ariel Sharon, Yasser Arafat sat in his mostly destroyed office — directing his premier every step of the way, Palestinian officials said.

Despite his involvement, Arafat was furious to see his deputy taking his place at center stage at the summit Wednesday with Bush and Sharon in Aqaba, Jordan, a Palestinian official said Thursday on condition of anonymity.

"Arafat, who has been confined by Israel to the West Bank for more than a year, was also upset that Abbas did not mention the Israeli siege in his speech at Aqaba, the official said. Israel has indicated that if Arafat leaves the West Bank, he will not be allowed to return.

On Thursday, Arafat criticized the summit's achievements. "Unfortunately, the Israelis did not give anything," he said.

The United States and Israel have worked to sideline Arafat and remove him from peace contacts, — but the veteran FLO leader refuses to fade away. He remains the undisputed leader of his people and has worked feverishly in the past few days to prove it.

He delayed a pre-summit meeting between Sharon and Abbas, publicly greeted a released Palestinian prisoner in a show of power and saw to it that he would have effective veto over any peace agreement between Israelis and Palestinians.

On Wednesday, he was in constant phone contact with the Palestinian delegation during Abbas' meeting with Bush and Sharon, according to another Palestinian official.

He made two adjustments to Abbas' final declaration and was briefed by Abbas on the phone for 20 minutes after the meeting, the official said.

Some of Arafat's international cachet is gone and some of his authority may be seeping to Abbas, but "Arafat still has tremendous power," Palestinian legislator Haman Ashkawi said.

Israeli officials say they do not care, and have instead focused on their successful efforts at keeping him out of the summit.

"People can say what they want, but Arafat was not there," Justice Minister Yosef Lapid said.

Arafat was once widely feted by world leaders. Just a decade ago, he stood before the world and shook Israeli Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin's hand on the White House lawn as the Oslo accord — the first interim peace agreement — was signed.

Israel and the United States now accuse Arafat of failing to stop terror attacks — at best — during 32 months of Palestinian-Israeli violence. At worst, they accuse him of orchestrating many of the attacks.

Either way, they have refused to deal with him anymore.

Under intense international pressure, Arafat reluctantly appointed Abbas in April.

Now he sits in his compound, the Muqata, as Abbas is courted by world leaders instead.

Once the symbol of Arafat's rule, the Muqata now lays in a permanent state of half ruin.

U.N. peacekeepers face child soldiers in Congo

African civil wars use an estimated 300,000 children under age 18.

By Sudasan Raghavan
Knight Ridder News Service

BUNIA, Democratic Republic of Congo — When he's sitting on a chair, Rene Bahati's thin legs don't reach the ground. His slender fingers look too feeble to pull a trigger. But he says he's killed at least one person, some of them unarmed civilians, for every year he's lived.

Rene Bahati is 10 years old. "I shot them all," he said in a dull, emotionless voice. "I didn't feel anything."

Rene is growing up in a "family" of beer-drinking, drug-taking thugs who lope houses and rape women for fun. School was a camp where he learned to shoot and stab people. A brutal ethnic war has become his playground, and his favorite toy is a Soviet-made rifle.

Child soldiers have long been fixtures in Africa's lingering civil wars. An estimated 300,000 children younger than 18 are fighting in 30 nations, a third of them in sub-Saharan Africa, according to the United Nations. In the Democratic Republic of Congo alone, dozens of militias and armies have utilized juvenile fighters called "kadogos" or little ones, some of them as young as 8, since 1996, when a rebellion began that toppled U.S.-backed strongman Mobutu Sese Seko.

But for the first time, Rene and others in the Democratic Republic of Congo may face a new, more formidable enemy: U.N. peacekeepers with shoot-to-kill orders.

"It's going to be an issue for the (foreign) soldiers," said Kristine Peduto, a U.N. child protection officer in Bunia, the largest town in the embattled province of Ituri. "Are we going to shoot these children?"

Some 1,400 troops from France and other nations are expected to arrive soon with a mandate to restore order, with force if necessary, to the northeastern town of Bunia, the latest region infected by Congo's four years of civil unrest.

Child soldiers fight in east Ituri province.

The main obstacles are the rival Hema and Lendu tribal militias that are vying for control of gold- and diamond-rich Ituri. Both are made up mostly of child soldiers. Neither is likely to disarm voluntarily.

Easy to mold and cheap to hire, children make good and obedient killers. Many are plucked from villages or refugee camps at an age at which they don't know right from wrong and pressed into military life.

Others join under peer pressure or out of desperation: Promises of fat paychecks to send home to their families and food to fill their bellies are common.

"It's a huge problem not just for Ituri, but for all of DRC," said Patricia Tome, a U.N. spokeswoman in the country's capital, Kinshasa. "It is jeopardizing the future of an entire generation."

In some instances, aid workers say, parents offer a son to a ruling militia in exchange for not paying taxes. Girls are kidnapped for the sexual amusement of older soldiers or to cook.

The kadogos often are used as guards at checkpoints or to carry their superiors' bags. But in Ituri, where an estimated 50,000 people have been killed since 1995, U.N. aid workers are noticing a disturbing trend: Drugged-up children are being sent to the front lines.

"The fathers are not going. They are sending the kids," Peduto said. "The kids think it's a game. You can give them drugs and a gun, and they become small Ramboes."

Liberian president accuses opponents of coup attempt

MONROVIA, Liberia (AP) — Liberian President Charles Taylor, charged with war crimes in neighboring Sierra Leone, claimed Thursday his government foiled an attempted coup and that rebels were moving toward the country's capital.

There were reports of scattered fighting about six miles west of Monrovia on Thursday, but it wasn't clear if the clashes were part of a larger, coordinated rebel attack. In the past, Taylor has been accused of relying on public support by inflating reports of fighting with the rebels, who control about 60 percent of Liberia.

Speaking to journalists in Monrovia, Taylor said the coup attempt was launched Wednesday by "certain officials" supported by unidentified foreign diplomats while he was in Ghana for peace talks with the rebels. Taylor said he had "accepted the resignation" of Liberian Vice President

Moses Blah as a result of the coup attempt.

He added that "as I'm talking to you, there's massive fighting going on ... with units trying to enter Monrovia."

Panicked villagers fled the sounds of gunfire Thursday coming from a bridge over the For river west of the city. Liberian defense officials said loyalist and rebel troops were fighting there.

In Monrovia, troops patrolled streets in army trucks while other soldiers on the city's outskirts blocked thousands — mainly displaced people staying in temporary camps outside — from seeking sanctuary in the capital.

Taylor's claim came a day after a U.N.-sponsored war crimes court in Sierra Leone charged him with crimes against humanity for a 10-year terror campaign in which tens of thousands of people were killed, raped, kidnapped or maimed in Sierra Leone.

Study: Women pregnant with boys eat more

LONDON (AP) — Women pregnant with boys tend to eat about 10 percent more calories than women carrying girls but don't gain more weight, new research indicates.

The study, published this week in the British Medical Journal, suggests that women who eat more in part — why newborn boys are heavier than girls and suggests that signals between the fetus and the mother drive the appetite during pregnancy.

Boys are on average 3.5 ounces heavier at birth than girls. The study by researchers from the Harvard School of Public Health and the Swedish Institute for Environmental Medicine in Stockholm, Sweden, is the first to examine whether that difference could be due to the mother eating more.

Magic Valley's economic growth looks promising

The future belongs to those who plan for it. And in the case of southern Idaho's economic development plan, the future offers plenty of promise.

Business Plus III, the latest version of the Magic Valley's regional economic development consortium of businesses and industries, has met its goal to raise $1.44 million for recruiting industries into the area. In fact, the Business Plus III campaign will surpass the fundraising goal leaders previously had set.

What does this mean for the Magic Valley and its residents? First and foremost, it means an even greater ability to attract employers to the area. Business Plus III leaders are aiming to use the money to bring 2,000 jobs from technology, manufacturing, food processing and other sectors, into the six-county area. The goal is to have those jobs pay average annual salaries of $22,500, or a direct total payroll of $45 million.

That goal would lead to a better standard of pay and improved benefits for Magic Valley workers. Those jobs also create a multiplying effect on the local economy, with more money spent on services, homes, education, and more growth on area tax rolls.

In addition to the Business Plus III fundraising effort, voters in Burley deserve praise for passing an $18 million revenue bond issue and $7 million general obligation bond issue, toward construction of a 5-million-gallon-per-day wastewater facility. That new system will provide a significant boost to the Minicassia area's industrial recruitment efforts and its long-term future.

Both the Business Plus III fundraising and the support for new Burley infrastructure signify a responsible effort by business and citizens to plan for growth in the local economy.

Some Magic Valley residents may frown upon that prospect. Growth in a rural area like southern Idaho can create significant change, such as more construction and traffic, cost of living increases, and more government expansion. Those factors may threaten the way of life many residents are accustomed to.

But if Magic Valley communities want to solidify their economic strength and provide residents with greater quality of life, the key is to assemble a diverse of industries around them.

In the interest of full disclosure, the publisher of this newspaper is a member of Business Plus III leadership panel. But to us, that admission is more of a boast. Helping plan the Magic Valley's long-term economic progress is something to be proud of.

The Business Plus III campaign is how it includes a wider range of communities from Paul to Buhl, and Shoshone to Twin Falls. Having that regional blend of communities is what helps rural areas flourish. Magic Valley successfully attract industry.

Our view: Fundraising efforts of Business Plus III, and voter approval of new infrastructure in Burley, bode well for the regional economy.

What do you think? We welcome viewpoints from our readers on this and other issues.

FCC reasons that more is better

Former President Ronald Reagan once defined an economist as someone who sees something happen in practice and wonders if it will work in theory.

On Monday, the Federal Communications Commission stirred up the media economists by allowing major companies to expand their holdings. From now on, they can own local TV stations that reach 45 percent of the U.S. market, up from the current 35 percent. In some places, one company will be permitted to own both a TV station and a newspaper. And, in certain big markets, a media company can have more than one TV station (but not more than one of the top-rated four).

According to the critics, this ruling is another milestone along a decades-old road to media totalitarianism. That is so detached from reality, you can almost hear the Gipper chucking, "There you go again."

True, five companies — Disney, Viacom, General Electric, AOL Time Warner and News Corp. — already command 80 percent of the TV audience. But that's progress.

Liberal legend has it that once there was a Golden Age of Broadcasting. That was back in the middle of the last century, when, thanks to rigorous federal regulation, disinterested philosophers — newsmen like Edward R. Murrow and Walter Cronkite — ruled the nation's airwaves. That, of course, is a crock. In the good old days, TV was dominated by three networks, all run by very rich businessmen. Their product was so bad that Newton Minow, former President John F. Kennedy's man at the FCC, dubbed American TV "a vast wasteland."

News broadcasts were especially awful — 15 minutes (later expanded to 30) of papabulm so homogenized that you could barely tell one network from another. Radio news, also dominated by the Big Three, was

Among the many opponents of broadcast diversity, National Public Radio stands out. That's because NPR is itself a monopoly. Whatever audiences Fox and Rush and the capitalist ruffians have rounded up are the product of competition. NPR got its franchise the old-fashioned way — by government fiat.

Nothing wrong with that, but there's no reason right-wingers should not have a similar subsidized radio voice.

Another public broadcasting network — let's take a page from baseball's second league and call it American Public Radio — would contribute not only intellectual diversity but greater civility to the electronic square. (There's already an NPR affiliate in Minnesota called American Public Radio, but giving up its name would be a small sacrifice for the First Amendment.) With the addition of APR, right-wingers no longer would need to shout to draw a crowd. Cerebral conservatives, now rarely heard, would have a place on the dial.

For years, Republicans in Congress have tried unsuccessfully to force balance on NPR. Instead, they should emulate the FCC's competitive instincts and grow the public media. When it comes to opinions and venues for expressing them, more is always better.

equally tepid. Analyst Edward Epstein memorably referred to this kind of bland, Olympian distillation of conventional wisdom as "news from nowhere."

The latest FCC decision is part of a process of liberalization that, along with new technologies, has broken the control of the Big Three over the nation's airwaves. Thanks to partial deregulation, we have more sources of information than ever before. Not only that, TV and radio news no longer are presented from just one point of view.

This is the critics' real problem. The wrong sort of people have gotten their grubby hands on the nation's transmitters.

Rupert Murdoch, for example, was the poster boy for the liberal campaign against liberalization. Clear Channel Communications, purveyor of the dreaded Rush Limbaugh, was another disturber of the peace.

Among the many opponents of broadcast diversity, National Public Radio stands out. That's because NPR is itself a monopoly. Whatever audiences Fox and Rush and the capitalist ruffians have rounded up are the product of competition. NPR got its franchise the old-fashioned way — by government fiat.

NPR claims to be nonpartisan. In fact, it is a predictable organ of left-leaning news and views.

How would Congress survive a terrorist attack?

It is Inauguration Day, and al-Qaeda detonates a small nuclear device on Pennsylvania Avenue. The explosion kills or incapacitates the president-elect, the vice president-elect, his unconfirmed Cabinet and most members of Congress.

Who is in charge?

A radio-ribbon panel sketched that nightmare scenario Wednesday and proposed some solutions.

"What literally was the stuff of Tom Clue novels is now something that we have to deal with," said Norman Ornstein of the American Enterprise Institute.

In fact, it nearly happened on Sept. 11, 2001. United Flight 93 reportedly was headed for the U.S. Capitol when passengers fought its terrorist hijackers and forced the plane to crash in Pennsylvania.

Though most officials have focused since then on protecting the executive branch, Ornstein, Rep. Brian Baird, D-Wash., and others have recognized that terrorists would create a serious problem if they could wipe out a majority of the Senate and the House.

Sen. Lloyd Bentsen resigned to become treasury secretary. But in 1991, it took 68 days for Sam Johnson to be elected and sworn in after Rep. Steve Bartes resigned to run for mayor of Dallas.

That is no problem in normal times. But it would be disastrous if terrorists were to kill or incapacitate most House members. Texas has had firsthand experience with the problem. In 1993, appointed Sen. Bob Krueger took office a day after Besides, if the president and vice president were killed, the speaker of the House would be next in line to be president — assuming there is a speaker.

That is why the commission decided to focus on Congress in its first report, which proposes a constitutional amendment giving lawmakers authority to fill mass vacancies.

It stressed the need for fast action. As former Rep. Lynn Martin, R-Ill., put it, "None of us really think it's going to happen. But we can't guarantee it."

The panel outlined two alternatives: a bare-bones amendment giving Congress authority to set rules to fill vacancies or a more complex measure with the details.

It sees governors filling House vacancies temporarily, as they do now with senators, current members drawing up a list of potential successors to ensure ideological continuity, or perhaps a combination of the two.

Panel member Ken Duberstein, a former White House chief of staff, said he is optimistic something can be done within the commission's two-year target.

"That would be terrific — as long as we don't have a catastrophe in the meantime," he said.

Texas Sen. John Cornyn, who heads the subcommittee on the Constitution, said he will hold hearings, noting that "it will be far too late ... after a catastrophe strikes the Capitol building."

House leaders are forming a special joint committee to study this and related issues.

This wouldn't be the first time Congress has updated the Constitution in such a way. It happened in the 1960s after President John F. Kennedy's assassination left House Speaker John McCormack, D-Mass., and Senate President Pro Tem Carl Hayden, D-Ariz., in line to succeed President Lyndon Johnson.

The idea of the two aging congressional veterans becoming president spurred Congress to pass the 25th Amendment, creating a way to fill a vice-presidential vacancy or deal with possible presidential disability.

A decade later, the amendment was used twice in a year when bribery charges forced Vice President Spiro Agnew to resign and the Watergate scandal forced President Richard Nixon to quit.

Former House Republican leader Gerald Ford wound up as president. Ford's former New York Gov. Nelson Rockefeller fell as vice president, and the general consensus was that the amendment had served the country well.

It is a useful reminder that the time to deal with such problems is now, before terrorists strikes again.

Walker leads the way in battle against alcoholism

I read with great interest The Times-News feature on Archie Walker and the opening of the new Walker Center in Gooding. Archie Walker is one of the few genuine heroes left in our society. He has tackled one of the huge problems in our nation in a head-on manner and is getting positive results with his efforts.

I well remember when Archie was a guest a number of times on my old radio talk show. He was very intelligent, humorous and blunt.

I still shudder when he openly (and correctly) stated that the churches of America were one of the worst resources for dealing with the monstrous alcohol problem in America.

The answer in most Protestant churches today seems to be "if you can't beat 'em, join 'em." In

It's the economy, genius

Martha's mess is no major imbroglio

The Democratic Party is on life support. There is a letter conflict over the firing of a number of black staff members (not to mention ideological clashes), and a Hispanic group is complaining the party is ignoring its issues. Polls indicate the soccer moms who voted for Bill Clinton are now primarily concerned about security. They are pledging their allegiance to President Bush, who in their view is better able to protect America than any Democratic presidential candidate. Some female pundits have even suggested how "hot" Bush looks in a flight suit. Who knew that sex-age could work for a Republican?

Then there is the ultimate issue: the economy. While down the post-9/11 economic recovery, the facts are getting in their way. The Wall Street Journal reports that between Oct. 9, 2002, and May 9, 2003 (Oct. 9 being the market's low), the Dow Jones Industrial Average jumped 18.1 percent. If that pace continues, the Dow will be up 31 percent for that 12-month period. The S&P 500 Stock Index went up 20.1 percent since last Oct. 9, an annualized return of 34.4 percent. Even the NASDAQ, the home of those once high-flying technology stocks, is up 36.4 percent since Oct. 9, an incredible annualized rate of return of 62.5 percent.

Financial advisor and analyst Ric Edelman tells me (full disclosure, he's also my personal financial advisor), "If you're thinking the stock market is in the doldrums, you haven't been paying attention. The truth is that the stock market has been turning around, and it's looking much better than it has at any time in the past three years." In an interview, Secretary of the Treasury John Snow predicted an economic upturn will be visible "by the fourth quarter of 2003, and the outlook will be a 'little lag' while the tax cuts kick in." We're now in the implementation phase of changing the withholding tables and preparing to send out to 25 million families the checks for child credits. Lower tax rates will be in effect by next month. And when people have more of their money to spend, they'll do something with it, and it will be good for the economy." To the critics—moderate Republicans and liberal Democrats—who charge that the tax cuts are a boon to the rich and do nothing for the poor, Snow responded, "That's creative and inventive, but wrong economics. What the tax plan does is create a bigger and stronger economy. This bill will help everyone in the American economy." Snow said we are "already in a recovery, but it's too slow and not robust enough." He believes that as people have more disposable income, more of the unemployed will go back to work. He said the deficit "doesn't concern me terribly now. Longer term we may need to worry more about Social Security and Medicare, but right now the deficit is manageable and modest. The real deficit is the deficit in growth rates and job creation, and that's what this (tax) bill addresses." Snow predicted growth rates "in the high 3s, maybe over 4 (percent), and when you do that you put a lot of people back to work and you begin to address the deficit the right way." Confirming a personal prejudice of mine, Snow said, "We don't have a revenue problem. The government gets plenty of revenue. What's wrong is that the government spends too much money. The president has made it clear he wants to rein in that spending." Snow said Congress "should limit discretionary spending to the size of the increase in the typical family budget. That's 4 percent. We ought to try to limit the government's appetite to 4 percent at the most."

If the administration's economic forecasts come true, George W. Bush will be unbeatable in 2004. That's what worries his opponents, who have nothing new to say about the economy, or anything else, other than their standard class-warfare rhetoric. This administration's success could produce a 40-plus state electoral blowout and add to Republican congressional majorities, which might approach Ronald Reagan's 1984 reelection in which he captured 57 percent of electoral votes could produce.

If you're a Democrat, you should be worried.

It's sure been fun poking fun at Martha Stewart! Really, has there ever been a juicier target for ridicule? Plopping Miss M on TV. Putting out those preachy magazines. Acting like she had it all figured out—how to spin a bird's nest out of caramelized sugar, how to lacquer fondant on a four-tier wedding cake, how anything—no matter how awful—can be improved with a little bag of potpourri.

After Wednesday, she'll need a 30-pound sack. "It's a good thing," Martha told us many times over the years in that aristophony accent of hers. Meaning, it seemed: "Do like I'm telling you, and your life could be as perfect as mine."

Of course, such people are begging for payback. You can ask Bill Bennett about that, now that he's left the casino. You can ask the TV preachers who got caught with their trousers down.

And now you can ask defendant Martha, who was looking anything but perfect at the courthouse underneath that light umbrella.

No, federal indictment is never a good thing.

On this way to the bold-faced humiliation, how 'bout one deep breath and a little perspective here?

The Martha Stewart case isn't exactly Enron, where thousands of workers saw their whole life savings vaporized.

Martha isn't WorldCom, where the three-card-monte accounting reached $9 billion high.

She isn't even Arthur Andersen, where 28,000 employees were blithely sacrificed on the altar of executive greed.

Compared to the big boys of corporate sleazebag, Martha Stewart is small potatoes indeed. So small, in fact, she'd never make the cut in one of those famous summer salads of hers.

"Use the fingerlings," she'd probably advise. "Far more flavorful."

Despite the delicious embarrassment of a prin perfectionist extraordinaire, two things were hard to deny Wednesday:

1. If Martha weren't famous, we wouldn't be here.

2. And neither would she.

If the claims of the indictment are borne out, this was one greedy woman making one questionable stock trade—then trying to hide her tracks when the regulators got near.

Even U.S. Attorney James Comey seemed to understand that, despite his stern demeanor: "This is a criminal act about lying, he told after the nine-count indictment was unsealed."

That didn't stop the federal prosecutor from assembling a set of criminal charges that could send the 63-year-old good-living maven to prison for 30 years and sock her with $2 million in fines.

He left the insider-trading issue to the Securities and Exchange Commission, which is filing a civil suit.

The evidence for that charge was found too flimsy for a criminal trial.

Martha's lawyers, Bob Morvillo and John Tighe, kind of hid a point when they emphasize the absence of the underlying charge. "It is most ironic," that Ms. Stewart faces criminal charges for obstructing an investigation which established her innocence.

Why? they asked.

"Is it for publicity purposes because Martha Stewart is a celebrity?" It is because she is a woman who has successfully competed in a man's business world by virtue of her talent, hard work and demanding standards?

Is it because the government would like to be able to define securities fraud as whatever it wants it to be? Or is it because the Department of Justice is attempting to divert the public's attention from its failure to charge the politically connected managers of Enron and WorldCom who may have fleeced the public out of billions of dollars?

There's a difference, it's been said, between insider traders and the rest of us. The difference is the quality of their tips.

Sadly, the rest of us are never tempted by secret information we could make easy money from.

If we were, who knows? Maybe we too would be dumping our last-100 shares, moments before they fall.

Flower theft ruins a day to honor son's grave

On the Day of Memorial, my wife and I decorated our son's grave with statues and flowers. We invested money and time to this special day and very special person who had a lot of friends and enemies, none that I can think of.

All that effort was destroyed because some disgusting being felt that they had to steal the stuff. If I was to find them, I would take their forehead with their name.

It is truly sad that there are people out there with no respect for themselves and others as well. A real, real and world.

Lawyer-lovin' Sierra Club is no farmer's ally

Divide and conquer. What a unique liberal strategy, Mr.

the Sierra Club are notorious and well documented, whether they concern hydroelectric power, timber harvest or agriculture. Your list of propaganda have worked in some parts of the United States (for example, California, where I'm certain most of your operating money comes from), but most the people of Idaho are far too smart to fall for this scheme.

This was proven when your radio advertisements were forced off the air by strong public opposition.

I have lived for most of my life in an agricultural community in close proximity to a 5,000-cow dairy and a large pork-producing farm. I'll be the first to admit that at times odors are created by these operations, but they are nothing that can't be tolerated. In fact, I consider these operations and the families that own them assets to the community and great neighbors. I've always said that I would rather live with 5,000 cows than 5,000 lawyers. Furthermore, if 5,000 lawyers moved in next door, I wouldn't whine and cry about it—I would move.

While I am on my soap box, I would like to remind Bill Chisholm that he has failed to answer two previously posed questions. If I remember right, they were: How many taxes do you pay and how many jobs do you create? I assume the answer to both these questions is zero. I also often read in your letters to the editor that you claim the minority is inflicting undue suffering upon the majority, insinuating that you are part of the majority. I wonder how many elections do you have to lose before you realize that you are a member of the minority?

Man pleads guilty to explosives counts

BOISE—A Payette man has pleaded guilty to federal explosives charges in connection with a Dec. 1 incident in the Magic Valley. Robert Arvo Johnson, 30, was arrested on Interstates 84 near Twin Falls after a report of a driver threatening another motorist. Investigators found numerous high-grade explosive devices in Johnson's van, along with a wrist strap fitted with 22-caliber bullets and a fuse and several cardboard boxes filled with bullets, fireworks and black powder. At the time of his arrest, Johnson told investigators he armed himself because he feared one of his co-workers had connections with the Qaeda terrorist network, according to police reports. Johnson entered his guilty plea Wednesday before U.S. Magistrate Mike Williams. Sentencing is set for Aug. 11.

Crime Stoppers offers reward in shooting case

TWIN FALLS—Crime Stoppers is offering up to $1,000 for information leading to the arrest and conviction of those involved in Monday's drive-by shooting in Twin Falls. Anyone with information may call Crime Stoppers at 733-5387. Callers may remain anonymous. People may also call the Twin Falls Police Department at 311 or at 735-4357. Police are looking for a gold or light-colored Honda car with custom wheels in connection with the shooting, which injured 14-year-old Whitney Newlan.

Newlan remains in stable condition at a Boise hospital, according to a Twin Falls Police Department news release. She had suffered two severed arteries and a damaged esophagus. Around 11:47 p.m. Monday, one of two bullets fired from a car entered into the back of the 14-year-old, wounding Newlan. Her father, Alan Newlan, according to reports. Police say the bullet that struck her entered her father's back, was recovered and is undergoing forensic analysis. The bullet had lodged near Whitney Newlan's rib.

School zone speed limits remain in effect

TWIN FALLS—School zone speed limits remain in effect during the summer even though Tuesday was the last day of classes in Twin Falls. "The school zone speed limits are in effect year-round," said Sgt. Matt Hicks of the Twin Falls Police Department. "The City Council decided to keep the limits year-round because of students going to summer school and using school playgrounds." The limits, usually 20 mph, remain in effect from 7 a.m. to 7 p.m. Monday through Friday, Hicks said. About 1,300 students are enrolled in summer school, and hundreds use school playgrounds, Hicks said.

Fee hike hearing draws one

By Brandon Fiala
Times-News writer

Customers would pay 38 percent more

TWIN FALLS—Although area residents could soon pay $200 more per year for natural gas, only one person attended a fee increase hearing Thursday in Twin Falls held by the Idaho Public Utilities Commission. And Pike Teinert was from Boise. Southern Idaho natural gas customers could expect to pay an average of $18 more per month starting July 1 under a plan filed by Intermountain Gas Co. The 38 percent increase for residential customers who heat both their homes and water with natural gas will be considered by the PUC. A decision is expected near the end of the month. Although just one person attended the Thursday hearing where nearly a dozen PUC and gas company officials conducted a presentation, there is concern about the increase, PUC spokesman Gene Fadness said. "People are very concerned about this rate increase in a bad economy," he said. The PUC has received more than 100 written comments about the increase from southern Idaho residents, Fadness said. Many people writing were against an increase, while others understood the need but wanted a less drastic increase, he said. Teinert, an energy consultant at Energy Strategies Group in Boise, drove to Twin Falls because he had missed the hearing in his area. He said he was concerned about market volatility and wanted to develop technologies to empower Idaho consumers. The company also asked for a 33 percent increase—about $12 per month on average—for residential customers who use gas only for space heating. Commercial customers could see an increase of about 43 percent, or about $78 per month on average. Fadness said the increases are the largest one-time increases proposed by Intermountain Gas Co. However, the higher gas prices are partially offset by cheaper electricity bills. The PUC approved a 19 percent rate decrease for Idaho Power Co.'s residential customers in May. Fadness wouldn't say if the PUC will approve the gas increases. A statement from Intermountain Gas said the increased costs of buying natural gas spurred the request for the price hike. The company also said corporate earnings would not increase as a result. Fadness said the current wholesale price for natural gas is $5 per million British thermal units, or BTUs, while gas customers are paying $3.20. The gap between the two is why the company is seeking fee increases, he said. "Natural gas is a commodity whose price fluctuates as supply and demand changes, just like the price of other commodities," Intermountain Gas President Bill Glynn said in a press release. "After enjoying prices this past winter that were approximately 30 percent below year-earlier prices, producer prices have increased." Last year, Intermountain Gas reduced its residential rates by 28 percent—after rates skyrocketed more than 50 percent from mid-2000 to mid-2001. If the PUC Please see GAS, Page B3

Police charge CSI security director

The Times-News

TWIN FALLS—The director of security at the College of Southern Idaho has been charged with domestic battery against another CSI employee stemming from an incident at the director's home on Monday. According to a police report, Rod Pooler had been fighting with the woman, a CSI custodian, throughout the day. Police say they had been called to Pooler's residence earlier in the day. A 911 call sent the police out for a second time. Police say the phone line was yanked out of the wall during the 911 call, and Pooler is also being charged with destruction of a telecommunication line. When police arrived at 5:15 p.m., the woman showed visible signs of domestic violence, according to the police report. "Any time that occurs, we have to make an arrest," said Sgt. Dan McAtee of the Twin Falls Police Department. "They (marks) were on her and not him." Pooler was arrested on the misdemeanor charges Monday night and released Tuesday on $5,300 bond. He pleaded innocent, and a jury trial has been set for July 15 at 3 p.m.

Meanwhile, Pooler has been instructed to not have verbal contact or other confrontation with the CSI custodian on campus or elsewhere. Pooler's supervisor, CSI Director of Maintenance Randy Dill, declined to comment. "It's a personnel issue," he said. CSI President Jerry Meyerhoeffer said the college will conduct its own in-house investigation.

Fifth Harry Potter book coming soon

By Jennifer Sandmann
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS—The hype about Harry doesn't matter to many fans smitten with J.K. Rowling's best-selling series. All they want is a copy of the soon-to-be released fifth book—and fast.

It has been three long years since book No. 4 ended with Harry facing the return of the evil Lord Voldemort. Twin Falls bookstores are taking reservations from Magic Valley readers who want to be sure to get their copies of "Harry Potter and the Order of the Phoenix." The book can be reserved online from national retailers such as amazon.com, which is offering a guarantee to have the book at your doorstep on the June 21 release date. Local booksellers say they still have unreserved copies, but that even with the unheard-of number of first-run books available, the best chance of taking one home in two weeks is putting in an order soon.

"There has been a few books that rival this, and one was number four," said John Radford, manager of Barnes & Noble Booksellers in Twin Falls. Barnes & Noble will host a "Harry Potter magic" party beginning at 10 p.m. June 20 with games and prizes. The book goes on sale at the stroke of midnight. Should the store sell out, fans can order the book online. It will take as long as it did three years ago to order in more copies. "Harry Potter and the Goblet of Fire" sold 3 million copies within the first 48 hours the book was on the shelves. Barnes & Noble didn't get their hands on copies from the first printing had to wait several weeks.

Harry Potter's American publisher, Scholastic Inc., announced in February that it planned to unleash a first printing of 6.8 million copies—an all-time U.S. record. By May the number had grown to 8.5 million copies of a nearly 800-page book. Hastings Books in Twin Falls has ordered 300 copies of book

Death penalty not on the table in murder case

The Times-News

BURLEY—The prosecutor won't seek the death penalty as the case against Jesus Guzman continues. Cassia County Prosecuting Attorney Al Barrus said Wednesday because Guzman has been charged with first-degree murder, Guzman could face the death penalty. "We've looked at the circumstances and the requirements for the death penalty and have decided this case doesn't meet the requirements. We do believe there are times when the death penalty is appropriate. This isn't one of those times." Jesus Guzman

Guzman, 21, is accused of beating Guadalupe Arredondo on May 24. Arredondo died May 27 as a result of a blow to his head suffered during that beating. Guzman remains in the Minicassia Criminal Justice Center. At his Monday arraignment, the judge ordered he be held without the possibility of bond. His preliminary hearing is scheduled for June 13. Guzman and Arredondo had a number of other men were reportedly involved in a brawl behind the Burley Burgers Eat restaurant the night of May 24. Several witnesses to the incident told police they saw Guzman hit Arredondo with a golf club. Guzman faces a second charge of enhanced penalty because he allegedly used a deadly weapon in committing the crime. Guzman was originally charged with aggravated assault, but the charge was changed to murder after Arredondo died.

Buhl plans after-school program activities for kids

By Mary Lou Potts
Times-News correspondent

BUEHL—As the school year wound down in Buhl, the middle school staff busily planned next year's new after-school program for students performing below average. During the five-year program, called Academics Plus Activities—or A+—75 students from sixth, seventh and eighth grades will stay after school four times a week for assistances in math and language arts, and two days a week there will be sports and art instruction. At the end of the day, parents will be asked to participate with their children for half an hour to assist with homework or to improve their children's skills. Students are chosen on the basis of test scores, free lunch qualification, ethnic background and teacher recommendation. The program will operate Monday through Thursday. Instruction will take place from 3:15 to 5 p.m. and the parent-student interaction will last from 5 to 6:15 p.m. Snacks will be provided. Two of the instruction days will be mandatory and two will be optional. A federal grant in the amount of $1,497,978 from 21st Century Community Centers pays for the five-year program. The state retains $6,000 for evaluation purposes. Hatch Net of Twin Falls, the Buhl Arts Council and the Magic Valley Boys & Girls Club will partner in the program. The Eighth Street Center will be used for many activities. By the third year, the Boys & Girls Club in Buhl should have taken over the activity portion of the program plus some of the academic segments. Idaho Standards Achievement Test scores and Standardized Test of Assessment in reading will be used to monitor student progress. The software program that will be the foundation of the program has a Spanish component for math for grades six through eight and language arts for up to the sixth grade. The school will advertise for a full-time director to administer the A+ program on a 10-month contract, starting two months before the school year commences. The assistant director will be Leahy Blick, a talented and gifted instructor and English-as-a-second language teacher. Three teachers will instruct and guide during the program each day, and six certified teachers will be hired to work every other day. Two aides will be hired to assist and dispense snacks. Two volunteers will each work six hours per week helping where needed. Guest activity instructors are also on the program one week a month. Activities could include dance, movement and arts and crafts. Consultants will be used for staff development, budget planning and project design. "Some students' abilities are as high as the average high academic achiever but have less support at home," said Byron Stutzman, middle school principal. "This program will give the students the added support they need." Times-News correspondent Mary Lou Potts can be reached in Buhl at 543-8854.

Idaho state motorcycle cop stops runaway freight train

BOISE (AP) — An Idaho State Police motorcycle officer jumped aboard a runaway locomotive Thursday afternoon and brought it to a halt after a 22-mile chase. No one was hurt in the noon-hour incident, but officers raced from intersection to intersection in the Treasure Valley's western suburbs to block traffic. The Union Pacific locomotive was first reported loose and rolling downhill at about 40 mph in west Boise, police said. As the 400,000-pound engine rolled out of town, P.U. Duane Prescott crossed his motorcycle to a railroad crossing in Nampa and waited for it.

Meanwhile, officers leaping across the valley leaped another engine was sitting on the tracks just a few miles away. "Railroad personnel were not able to get that train moving in time to get it out of the way. There was going to be a train crash," Idaho State Police Capt. Stephen Jones said. As it approached Prescott, the runaway engine had slowed but was still traveling at about 20 mph. Prescott tried to climb aboard with an railroad employee, but it was going too fast and they missed it. That's when Prescott hopped back on his bike and motored down the tracks, passed it, then jumped again as the engine rolled past him. This time, he made it. Communicating on his police radio with an engineer, Prescott was able to manipulate the engine's control levers and bring it to a halt. When it started to reverse itself, railroad employees finally were able to stop the engine completely by laying ties across the tracks. Police are continue to investigate how the locomotive broke loose. The only damage was to Prescott's motorcycle, which was scuffed when he jumped aboard the engine.

Court approves judge's involvement in trial

BOISE (AP) — The Idaho Supreme Court upheld the drug trafficking conviction of an eastern Idaho man on Thursday even though the trial judge helped prosecutors clarify a key point in their case against him. Heriberto Sandoval-Tena claimed 7th District Judge Gregory Anderson acted improperly when he advised prosecutors that their crime laboratory witness failed to testify on the amount of methamphetamine Sandoval-Tena had — a crucial fact in a trafficking case. Anderson then let prosecutors recall the expert, even though they had already rested their case, so that the information could be placed on the record.

Justice Gerald Schroeder, writing for the court, said Idaho judges currently have authority to directly question trial witnesses to clarify evidence and maintain efficient courtroom operations. If that is appropriate for a district court, Schroeder wrote, "by analogy, it may certainly suggest a question to counsel in the interest of clarifying the evidence." "While trial judges should certainly show restraint in coaching counsel during a trial," the justice wrote, "bringing to light such an omission in the testimony furnished by the expert by clarifying the evidence and completing the record."

Sandoval-Tena was convicted and sentenced to the mandatory minimum three years in prison. Anderson raised the question about the expert's testimony because he was concerned that his admission of the written crime laboratory report might be overturned on appeal and there would be nothing else in the record about the amount of drugs involved. The court voted 4-1 to overturn use of the report against Sandoval-Tena, ruling that it failed to meet any exception to the prohibition against hearsay evidence. But the majority also said the report had no effect on the case since the expert verbally testified to every fact in it. The jury had the same information, whether it saw the report or not, the court held.

Birth-control chemical reduces fertility in adult male trout

SEATTLE (AP) — Synthetic estrogen, used in many oral contraceptives, may be just too effective. Scientists say estrogen residue from sewage treatment plants that ends up in waterways may still be potent enough to keep male rainbow trout from fertilizing fish eggs.

A study by scientists with the U.S. Department of Energy's Pacific Northwest National Laboratory has shown that when exposed to relatively low levels of the substance, a mature male rainbow trout's fertility levels decreased by as much as 50 percent.

"We know that this particular chemical is in many surface waters around the world," said James J. Nagel, a University of Idaho associate professor of zoology who helped conduct the study. "It's conceivable that this could be affecting the reproductive capabilities of wild fish."

The 1999 study was published in the June 2003 issue of the journal Environmental Toxicology and Chemistry.

Working with the National Marine Fisheries Service said the study's results are an indicator that further research is necessary to determine how often the man-made chemical occurs in the environment.

"It's a good initial study," said John Stein, director of the environmental conservation division of NMFS's Northwest Fisheries Science Center. "It raises a number of questions that are worthy of further study."

Scientists working at PNW's marine sciences lab in Sequim exposed adult male rainbow trout for 62 days to three different concentrations of ethinyl estradiol — 10, 100 and 1,000 parts per trillion. The sperm of exposed fish were harvested, then used for in-vitro fertilization of eggs from a healthy female rainbow trout. After 28 days, a measurable decrease in fertilization was observed in the treated trout, compared with a control group.

In some cases, a 50 percent drop in fertilization was seen in semen collected from the trout exposed to the lowest concentration.

Researchers say that's important because 10 parts per trillion is a level of synthetic estrogen found in some surface water samples.

"We can see that adult fish aren't immune to the effects of estrogen in waterways," said PNW toxicologist Irvin Schultz, another study leader. "Our results indicate that the fertility of a healthy male trout that has developed normally can be impaired if that exposure takes place during a critical sexual maturation stage before spawning."

The study's findings were upsetting but expected by some.

"While it's disturbing, it's not surprising," said Kaitlin Lovell, salmon policy coordinator for Trout Unlimited in Portland, Ore. She said synthetic estrogen is "affecting everything from fish to frogs."

Several scientific studies have previously shown the adverse effects of estrogen on juvenile fish, including instances of male fish developing female organs.

The PNW study, however, was unable to determine what caused the reduction in fertility for adults. Scientists found neither a change in sperm motility nor a reduction in hormone levels, Schultz said.

"There was no correlation," he said, noting that additional research, particularly studies of wild species, would be needed.

Estrogen and other hormones often make their way into rivers and lakes via sewage-treatment plants, which are not obligated to monitor for their presence, Environmental Protection Agency spokesman Mark MacIntyre said.

"There are no provisions that wastewater plants have to adhere to," he said, noting that his agency is aware that hormones have harmful effects and has scheduled an emergency pollutants workshop this August in Chicago.

Jury finds man guilty in stabbing case

CALDWELL (AP) — Half a year after his first trial ended in a hung jury, Jeremy Sanchez has been found guilty of six felony charges related to the beating, stabbing and robbing of a Washington woman three years ago.

A jury deliberated four hours before finding Sanchez guilty of robbery, conspiracy to commit kidnapping, aggravated battery and aiding attempted first degree murder. Third District Judge James Morfit dismissed a charge of aiding first-degree arson.

Sanchez, 28, was one of four people accused in the attack on Linda Lehman in rural Canyon County. His first trial in November ended with a hung jury. A new jury was brought in from Nez Perce County for the second trial, which began last week.

Sanchez' mother, Cheryl Sanchez, said the verdict will be appealed.

"I just don't believe it. I know in my heart he didn't do anything. I just knew he didn't have anything to do with it," she said.

LeBrane told police in June 2000 that four posturs forced her off Interstate 84 and beat and robbed her.

Kenneth Wurdemann pleaded guilty to lesser charges last fall and is awaiting sentencing. His brother, John Wurdemann, was convicted of seven felony counts and sentenced to four life terms in prison. Sarah Pearce is scheduled for a jury trial next month.

Forest Service proposes doubling logging in Sierras to ease fire threat

RENO, Nev. (AP) — Accelerated logging in the Sierra Nevada is more likely to ease fire threats, protect wildlife, create jobs and ultimately have more old-growth forests a century from now, the Forest Service said Thursday.

Without a sharp increase in logging aimed at thinning overstocked forests across 11.5 million acres of the Sierra, fish and wildlife habitat will face far greater risk from wildfires, the agency said in an environmental study.

The study analyzes the Forest Service's proposal to ease logging restrictions imposed by the Clinton plan the agency adopted in 2001 under President Clinton for the 11 national forests in the Sierra from south of Yosemite National Park to north of Lake Tahoe.

Industry officials have pressed the Bush administration to log larger tracts that were off limits under the Clinton plan.

"Clearly, the most significant environmental problem facing our national forest today is the risk of catastrophic wildfire," said David Blachol, president of the Sierra Forest Foundation. "Dealing with that risk... is clearly an issue not fully addressed under the previous plan."

But environmentalists scoffed at the idea of logging the forests to save them.

"It appears the Forest Service's solution to restoring and protecting the Sierra Nevada is to continue logging on top of logging on top of logging," said Jay Watson, regional director for The Wilderness Society in California.

"We'll harvest levels would nearly triple during the first decade, from an estimated 157 million board feet annually under Clinton's "Sierra Nevada framework" plan to 448 million board feet under the proposal, the agency designated Thursday as its preferred alternative. Logging levels would drop after that.

The region produced as much as 1 billion board feet of timber a year during peak levels of the 1980s and 1990s.

The revisions "would continue the framework's preservation of all large, old trees, but would more effectively reduce the risk of fire that threatens those trees and habitat for wildlife, such as the California spotted owl," said Jack Blackwell, regional director of the Forest Service's Pacific Southwest region.

The bigger volume of wood would come primarily from increasing the size of the trees that could be cut — from a maximum of 24 inches in diameter under the old plan to up to 39 inches.

Environmentalists who backed the old strategy said removing bigger trees that are less susceptible to fire will increase fire threat.

The Forest Service said making trees larger than 2-feet thick off limits to logging makes it financially impractical for timber companies to bid on projects aimed at removing small trees that pose the greatest fire risk.

"We want to remove dangerous fuels by cutting a few medium-sized trees to help offset the costs of removing many more small-diameter trees, which are unusually dense and have little or no commercial value," Blackwell said in a statement from Vallejo, Calif.

"This would allow us to stretch our budget dollars to do more of this badly needed fuel reduction, especially near communities but also in our strategically selected areas of low fire risk and fire spread across broader landscapes," he said.

Teen gets eight years for beating death

CALDWELL (AP) — A 3rd District judge has sent 17-year-old Cole Ray Scott behind bars for a minimum of eight years for the beating death of a Colorado man in a city park.

Scott was one of three Caldwell men accused of beating to death Cary Sturgis, 41, who was in town to visit family when he failed to return home the night of Dec. 6. His body was found the next morning in Pioneer Park, just before the city's holiday parade.

Twenty-year-old Dane Connor Lawson and 18-year-old Eric Mark Owen were also charged in connection with the crime. Scott and Owen reached plea agreements earlier this year. Lawson, 18, is scheduled for a trial later this year.

Scott pleaded guilty to involuntary manslaughter and aiding and abetting robbery. Owen pleaded guilty to voluntary manslaughter and robbery.

District Judge Gregory M. Culet delayed Owen's sentencing so he can review additional details of the plea bargain.

But Culet accepted Scott's recommended sentence, which confines him for three to five years with the Idaho Department of Juvenile Corrections, and then a minimum of five years in the adult prison system.

Scott's father, J.R. Scott, said it wasn't his place to decide if the sentence was fair. J.R. Scott said he hopes the judge used his best judgment.

Colorado seeks help in road dispute

WASHINGTON (AP) — Colorado Gov. Bill Owens is asking the Bush administration to work with the state to end a logjam over the ownership of thousands of miles of roads across federal land that counties claim they are entitled to.

In a letter to Interior Secretary Gale Norton, Owens' natural resources director asked the secretary to work with Colorado to establish a process to handle counties' claims to rights of way across national parks and wildlife refuges.

Environmental groups were outraged by the suggestion and Rep. Mark Udall, D-Colo., sent a letter to Owens this week that he "has very serious concerns with the approach your administration seems to be proposing."

But Greg Walter, executive director of the Colorado Department of Natural Resources, said he would like to resolve the decades-old dispute over road ownership. "It's been fought about for a generation. I'd like not to fight about it for another generation," he said.

In April, Norton and Utah Gov. Mike Leavitt announced an agreement setting up standards and a process for handling road claims. It was the result of closed-door negotiations to resolve a lawsuit by the state and did not include Colorado or other interested parties.

Norton hailed it as a model agreement that could serve as the pattern for similar deals between the department and other Western states.

The disputes stem from a Civil War-era mining law — Revised Statute 2477 — which guaranteed states and counties the use of highways across federal land. It was repealed in 1976, although states and counties were assured continued use of highways that existed before that time.

However, there is no agreement on whether wandering dirt paths qualified as roads. Moffatt County, for example, has claimed thousands of miles of roads.

Walter said Colorado law recognizes a county's claim to passable routes, even if it crosses solid rock and there is no evidence of a constructed road.

His letter, sent to Norton last month, identifies a series of changes the state would want made to the Utah agreement if it is to apply to Colorado, including leaving open the possibility of the counties claiming rights to roads in national parks, monuments, refuges and areas being considered for wilderness designation.

Access reversed by roads would not be eligible for wilderness designation.

"That lays bare their intent, which is to defile wildlands and make them available for development instead of protections," said Suzanne Jones, assistant regional director of The Wilderness Society. "It's clear they're catering to anti-wildlands interests."

Buyers snap up 1,010 federal acres at Vegas sale

Proceeds will be used for schools, resources, wildland protection

LAS VEGAS (AP) - It took less than two hours for developers to snap up 1,010 acres of southern Nevada land from the Bureau of Land Management on Thursday, bidding a combined $232.3 million in an auction overseen by Interior Secretary Gale Norton.

"We got a bargain," said Jim Dumas, a commercial property manager who bid $6.68 million for two parcels totaling .25 acres. "Everyone predicts Las Vegas is going to continue to grow. There's a big land rush on."

Norton, in a nod to the city's key industry, said the crowd of more than 500 people overflowing the Clark County Commission chambers was "one of the smartest and rulling the dice in favor of conservation."

"This allows us to carry forward our mission and to accommodate the large numbers of people moving to this area," Norton said. The federal agency holds periodic auctions under the 1998 federal law Thursday's sale raised $11.6 million for schools in Nevada and $2.2 million for the Southern Nevada Water Authority, BLM spokesman Phillip Guerrero said.

Most of the remaining 85 percent of sale proceeds will be anneted back to Nevada to buy and set aside sensitive wildlands. Thursday's auction offered 36 parcels totaling 1,030 acres. Three parcels, totaling 20 acres, didn't sell. They will be offered for auction on the Internet, Guerrero said. After the auction, Norton toured the Clark County Wetlands Park, a fledgling wildlife preserve between Las Vegas and Lake Mead. It was set aside with money raised during 12 previous BLM land sales, which have disposed of 4,000 acres and generated more than $33 million.

The Focus Property Group of Las Vegas bought Thursday's largest parcel, bidding $113.5 million for 385 acres northwest of the city. The checkerboard property, bordering the Red Rock Canyon National Conservation Area, had been appraised at $58.2 million.

Secretary of the Interior Gale Norton attended the BLM land auction Thursday at the Clark County Government Building in Las Vegas.

Utah governor avoids boycott with wilderness pledge

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) - A threat by the outdoor equipment industry to pull a lucrative sales convention out of Salt Lake City Wednesday in a 20-year stalemate over how much of the state's wilderness should be protected.

But neither Leavitt nor industry leaders could announce anything close to a breakthrough Wednesday in a 20-year stalemate over how much of the state's wilderness should be protected.

For years, conservation groups have pushed for an all-or-nothing 9 million acres - three times what Utah's political establishment has been willing to tolerate. More recently, outdoor industry leaders were upset that Leavitt's

"We have a natural endowment of land that's unparalleled."

- Mike Leavitt, Utah governor

April 9 settlement of a state lawsuit with Interior Secretary Gale Norton dropped wilderness protections from nearly 6 million acres of federal land in Utah.

Frank Hugelmeyer, president of the Outdoor Industry Association, had said he was seriously considering pulling a twice-a-year trade show he says brings $24 million to Utah's economy.

But after meeting with Leavitt on Wednesday, Hugelmeyer and other trade officials said they were satisfied that the governor shares an understanding of the economic potential of making Utah a destination for outdoor sports.

"We have a natural endowment of land that's unparalleled," Leavitt said after the meeting. "We think by working together we'll find ways" to protect it. Hugelmeyer said the show would return in August and February - though he refused to speculate beyond that. The semi-annual convention has been hosted in Salt Lake City for the past seven years by the Outdoor Industry Association, which represents 4,000 U.S. manufacturers, retailers, suppliers and sales representatives and distributors.

What both sides said they didn't discuss was the amount of land deserving of protection.

"When you get into the numbers game, you start angering people," said Riley Cutler, shop owner of Wasatch Touring. Leavitt and industry officials said they would work between now and the next trade show to break the stalemate.

Fairfield hires new city clerk

By Amy Ballard Times-News correspondent

FAIRFIELD - In a step toward greater government stability, the Fairfield City Council swore in Boni Peters as city clerk last month. Peters, who with her husband, Scott, runs a restaurant business in Fairfield and Gooding, started work May 21. She had been sworn in May 15 to fill the vacancy left when former City Clerk Celia Brown resigned April 16.

Brown's letter of resignation stated that she wished the new mayor to be able to start fresh, and that she was tired of residents attacking her personally. "I want the city to progress. I want the best for Fairfield and all its citizens," Brown told The Times-News.

When asked to elaborate on the circumstances of Brown's resignation, Peters said, "The city voted to move forward." Peters will earn about $11,700 a year for a 25-hour week.

Mayor David Hanks, who himself took office only on April 10 following the Jan. 7 resignation of Matt Croner, said of the new clerk, "We were lucky to get her."

Hanks had recommended Peters partly because of her qualifications and knowledge of government procedure. Peters worked four years for the Kimberly School District as a business manager, receiving high recommendations for her service.

Hanks said he had also recommended Peters because of her personality. In light of recent turmoil in Fairfield's city office, the clerk must have public relations skills so that residents feel welcome to seek information and approach the City Council.

There has been discord within city government for months. Between Jan. 7 and April 10, when Fairfield was without a mayor, City Council President Kenneth Lee declined to step in as interim mayor, resulting in two-to-two deadlocks on important issues such as hiring a mayor.

At the April 10 City Council meeting, Lee and Councilman Larry Jones changed their votes to hire Hanks in order to allow city government to go forward.

City officials say they hope to see resident confidence rise with an audit scheduled for this fall and the hiring of new employees.

In addition to the hiring of new staff, more cosmetic changes are taking place at the city office building, including new interior paint and a more visitor-friendly desk arrangement in progress. The City Council has already acquired a new computer system for the office. CPA Lisa Donnelly of Lewiston, Braga and Donnelly in Twin Falls set up financial software. Donnelly will also perform the formal city audit this fall.

In addition to hiring Peter, the council created a permanent assistant city clerk position. Sharon Smith of Fairfield, who acted as interim clerk and had substituted for Brown, was offered the position. Having accepted, Smith will work unspecified hours as needed.

Vandalism counts increase in Hagerman

By Sandra Wisecover Times-News correspondent

HAGERMAN - Reports of vandalism and thefts from vehicles were up recently in Hagerman, according to the police chief.

"We haven't had any reports for quite some time," Chief Joe Gardner told the City Council Tuesday.

The new Hagerman Food Town construction site was vandalized when a beacon light was broken off a fork lift and taken. Keys were also stolen from a scissors lift at the construction site.

The rest rooms on the south side of the park have been vandalized several times this year, with toilet paper and towel dispensers torn down. Tissues have also been plugged with paper and toilet bowls. Recently, the Hagerman Youth Association storage shed at the park has also been reported.

Thefts from two unlocked vehicles also occurred in April. A stereo was taken from one vehicle.

Anyone with information about the recent incidents is asked to contact Gardner by calling City Hall at 837-6636.

Incidents of noise disturbance were also reported during April. "With the weather warming up, people need to remember their neighbors are outside and their windows are open," Gardner said.

In other police business, stop signs may go up as the result of complaints from residents about the excessive speed of vehicles on East Avenue.

"East Avenue runs north and south from one end of Hagerman to the other," Gardner said. "We are talking about placing two stop signs on East Avenue at the intersection with Main Street, to split it up and slow them down.

People forget it is still a city street. They travel 40-50-60 miles per hour on it."

The issue was tabled and will be discussed at the council's June 17 meeting.

Calls in April included seven agency assists, two citizen assists, two simple assaults, four animals calls, three traffic violations, three domestics, one unattended death, two activated alarms, one warrant service, 19 extra patrol/fire calls, five disturbing the peace calls, one indecent exposure, two property damages and two thefts.

Officer James D. Pruett will complete the Peace Officer Standards Training on Friday, June 13.

Other council business included: A Project update - If funds are available, a new sidewalk will be built on Salmon Street, between State and Second. Next on the downtown improvement project list are more lights and more asphalt.

Park report - City Superintendent Richard Scruggs reported wedding and watering at the city park have been the focus for this past month.

Park ordinance - Council passed Ordinance 1020, banning the use of air compression brakes or engine brakes within the city limits. An infraction carries a $50 fine. Signs will be placed at the city limits.

Youth recreation - One baseball diamond has been renovated for use by the Babe Ruth baseball team, said Michelle Arriaga of the Hagerman Youth Association.

The association has done extensive work to the mound, infield and fencing and is now working on cleaning up around the other diamond used by little league baseball and girls softball teams.

Road to popular river launch closes

SALMON (AP) - The springtime rush of the Salmon River has washed out the road leading to a popular starting point for floaters.

The road to the Corn Creek boat launch was closed below the Cache Bar boat ramp May 30. A landslide last summer pinned the entire river against the road bed. "Essentially, the road is lost because the road bed is so far gone," said Gail Boer, a Forest Service spokesperson in Salmon. "It's unsafe to travel on."

River levels peaked well above historic levels May 31. Officials are trying to repair the road, but the extent of the damage will not be known until runoff recedes and engineers can determine the extent of the damage, Boer said.

Plans are underway to move the river permit check station from Corn Creek to Cove Creek, approximately 18 miles upstream.

New York Times editors resign amid turbulence

NEW YORK (AP) — The New York Times' top editors resigned Thursday after a tumultuous five weeks that began with the exposure of Jayson Blair's journalistic fraud and grew into a drumbeat of criticism of the newspaper's management style at one of the world's most distinguished newspapers.

Executive Editor Howell Raines and Managing Editor Gerald Boyd left moments after speaking to hundreds of staffers in an emotional meeting in the Times newsroom — the same spot where they celebrated a record seven Pulitzer Prizes just a year ago.

Given the events of the last month ... Howell and Gerald concluded that it was best for the Times that they step down," Raines said in a resignation letter. "With great sadness, I agreed with their decision."

Joseph Lelyveld, 66, the paper's former executive editor, was expected to retire to take over as interim executive editor. No one will be named interim managing editor.

As sad as it is, what happened today is like landing a body," said Susan Tift, a former Times reporter and co-author of "The Trust: The Private and Powerful Family Behind the New York Times." "You've got to have leadership that the newsroom can get behind. Joe Lelyveld can do that with great ease."

Spokeswoman Catherine Mathis said the search for new editors would take place "both inside the Times and outside."

None of the executives who spoke at Thursday's meeting mentioned the Blair debacle, which the Times had called "a low point" in its 152-year history.

The scandal engulfed the newsroom in recriminations, and Raines and Boyd, 52, were dealt much of the blame, particularly for sending Blair to cover the Washington-area sniper case when the paper's metropolitan editor had raised concerns about numerous mistakes in the young reporter's previous stories.

The case brought to the surface criticisms of Raines' management style, which many staffers characterized as uncooperative and overbearing.

"I hope things settle down and we get a decent executive editor who's reasonable," said Jerelle Krasus, an director for the newspaper's weekend section. "Howell Raines is someone who is feared."

Blair, 27, resigned from the newspaper on May 1. The Times said an initial investigation found him to have "committed frequent acts of journalistic fraud."

As an outgrowth of that investigation, the newspaper said it would form a committee to review newsroom policies, including hiring practices, the use of unidentified sources and freelancers, and byline

Times resignations

New York Times Executive Editor Howell Raines and Managing Editor Gerald Boyd resigned Thursday amid scandal involving writer Jayson Blair's fraudulent reporting for the paper.

On May 14, three days after the newspaper published a story detailing Blair's serial plagiarisms and fraud, Raines told staffers he knew he was considered "inaccessible and arrogant."

"You believe the newsroom is too much, that my ideas get acted on and other get ignored. I heard that you were convinced there's a star system that singles out my favorites for elevation," he said.

Two weeks later, one of those star reporters resigned. Pulitzer Prize-winning writer Rick Bragg left shortly after being suspended for a story that carried his byline but was reported largely by a freelancer. Bragg declined comment Thursday on the resignations.

In the Times' third-floor newsroom Thursday, Raines told the staff: "Remember, when a great story breaks, go like hell." Some staffers were in tears. Minutes later, he left the building on 43rd Street.

Raines' tenure, which began just days before the Sept. 11, 2001, terrorist attacks, was the shortest since Washington columnist James B. Reston served as executive editor for 13 months in 1968 and 1969.

Central Iraq attack claims U.S. soldier

FALLUJAH, Iraq (AP) — Guns drawn and tensed for battle, U.S. forces locked down a neighborhood for a house-to-house search Thursday, targeting attackers who killed one American soldier and wounded five others in the latest eruption of anti-occupation violence.

It was at least the sixth U.S. soldier killed in Iraq over the past two weeks.

The assault came a day after more than 1,500 soldiers from the U.S. Army's 3rd Infantry Division which helped take Baghdad — moved into Fallujah and surrounding areas in central Iraq. They are engaged with sniping attacks on U.S. occupying forces in the region.

Anger in Fallujah grew in late April after confrontations between residents and American forces left 18 Iraqi dead and at least 76 wounded. Residents have accused U.S. troops of using excessive force and of not respecting Islamic practices.

One soldier was killed and five wounded by rocket-propelled grenade launched at an Army checkpoint near a police station at about 12:30 a.m. Thursday. The wounded were airlifted to a military field hospital. No identities were made public.

France nabs pair in terror crackdown

PARIS (AP) — French authorities investigating the Sept. 11, 2001, terror attacks in the United States have arrested two men — a Moroccan and a German believed to be a top al-Qaida recruiter — in the last two days at the Paris airport. Judicial officials said Thursday.

The officials said they believe there's a link between the two suspects.

On Sunday, Karim Mehdi, a 34-year-old Moroccan, was taken into custody at Charles de Gaulle airport in Paris, the officials said on condition of anonymity. He had arrived from Germany and planned to leave to the French island of La Reunion off southwestern Africa.

Mehdi allegedly was planning a terror attack against tourists complex on the island, the officials said. Further details about the site or timing of the attack were not immediately available.

On Monday, Christian Ganczarski was apprehended at the airport and was to appear before an anti-terrorism judge in the coming days, the officials said on condition of anonymity.

Ganczarski also allegedly had links to the April 2002 suicide bombing of a historic synagogue on Tunisia's tourist island of Djerba that killed 21 people, including 14 German tourists, the officials said.

German authorities allowed Ganczarski to leave the country in December because there was not sufficient evidence to arrest him, German officials said at the time.

Ganczarski was being investigated for suspected membership in a terrorist group after being traced as the recipient of an intercepted phone call from Nizar Nassim, the leading suspect in the Djerba bombing who believed to have died in the suicide mission.

Mehdi's arrest was the first in France since French anti-terrorism forces opened an investigation into the Sept. 11 attacks just a few weeks after they took place in 2001.

Snack attacker kills at least 16 on bus in Russia

VLADIKAVKAZ, Russia (AP) — A female suicide attacker detonated a bomb Tuesday on a bus carrying soldiers and civilians to work at a military airfield near Chechnya, killing at least 16 people. It was the third suicide attack in a Russian Caucasus in less than a month.

No one claimed responsibility, but suspicion fell on Chechen rebels who have been fighting Russian forces for more than 3.5 years. Russian soldiers are reported killed in rebel attacks in and around Chechnya almost daily.

The attack dealt a further blow to the Kremlin's efforts to portray Chechnya as increasingly stable after a decade that has seen two wars and widespread lawlessness. Authorities immediately set up checkpoints on all roads leading into Chechnya, causing a massive traffic jam as troops searched cars and checked documents, Russia's TV3 television reported.

U.S. soldiers conduct a house-to-house search Thursday in Fallujah after an attack earlier in the day.

Scores of Army military police sealed off the area and went into houses. At least one man was taken away in plastic handcuffs — apparently for weapons possession. Military police also photographed crowds of spectators, a standard intelligence-gathering tool.

"You're basically trying to sell a product, and the product is 'Please surrender at your earliest possible convenience,'" said John Pike, a military analyst with GlobalSecurity.org, a consulting group based in Arlington, Va.

During the war, psyops detachments helped engineer the surrender and desertion of thousands of Iraqi soldiers. They dropped leaflets describing the proper way to hand over weapons. They carried a mobile radio station that told Iraqis the U.S. invasion force was on its way.

On the ground, the teams carry Sony MiniDisc players packed with bizarre sounds: commands in Arabic, helicopter and tank noises and sonic shrieks to clear crowds. One unit in southern Iraq deceived the Iraqi military by blaring recorded sounds of advancing tanks, Ayers said.

"We got the Iraqis to look in one direction when the real tanks came in the other direction," said Ayers.

Since the war's end, the psyops mission has changed to a "safety and stabilization" message. Teams roam Baghdad asking Iraqis about their daily problems and their opinions of the progress made under the U.S. occupation.

Information Radio, one of the U.S.-led coalition's three radio stations, broadcasts 24 hours a day. It warns Iraqis to watch for unexploded munitions, reports on moves to create a new government, explains food distribution efforts and carries other U.S. messages.

The job is similar — but tougher — than the marketing of, say, Coca-Cola, Ayers says.

"Cola is a product you already want to buy. Coke just has to convince you to buy its brand," Ayers said. "Iraqis don't want to buy our product. But we still have to sell it to them."

American troops try to win Iraqi hearts

BAGHDAD, Iraq — Sheik Abdul Jabar leaned forward in his chair, stroked his beard and delivered a warning to the U.S. Army Psychological Operations soldier seated across from him.

"We don't want anyone to touch our women," the Shiite cleric said as his companions in turbans and headscarves nodded. Then came other grievances, including a vague warning about U.S. soldiers displaying pornography.

"You talk to that soldier's boss, and immediately something will be done. I guarantee it," said Sgt. Eric Viburs, of the Army's 346th Psychological Operations Company, based in Columbus, Ohio. The tension eased, Marlboros and Kupa Cola were passed around, and soon Viburs was practically faint.

The Americans aren't merely interested in the cleric's friendship. They want to enlist him as a mouthpiece in the poor Shiite Muslim neighborhood where he is a leader.

Across Iraq, dozens of three-person "psyops" teams are pursuing similar missions: befriending community leaders and using them to boost Iraqis' opinions of the United States and distribute its messages.

The Army's Psychological Operations force in Iraq is the largest in U.S. history, with 11 companies and almost 1,000 psyops personnel in the country or in support roles in the United States, said Lt. Col. Glenn Ayers, commander of the 9th Psychological Operations Battalion based in Fort Bragg, N.C.

Their mission is to persuade Iraqis to do the Pentagon's bidding: report unexploded munitions, vacate a building, support U.S. troops, give up.

It's a mission as old as war itself.

Trooper: Texas governor gave tips on missing Dems

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — Republican Gov. Rick Perry had a greater role than he previously revealed in the hunt for more than 50 Democratic lawmakers who left the state to block passage of a bill, according to testimony from a state trooper.

Bill Crain, who led the search last month, said in a deposition released Wednesday that Perry was impatient with the search's progress and at one point gave troopers a tip on where to find one of the missing legislators.

Texas Department of Public Safety documents released separately Tuesday indicated that Perry had personal contact with DPS officers during the search, ordered by Republican House Speaker Tom Craddick.

Fifty-five Democrats disappeared into Oklahoma for nearly a week to prevent a quorum in the House, blocking debate on a Republican bill to redraw congressional districts — a task usually done once a decade, after the census.

Crain testified that during the search for the legislators Perry handed him a letter saying the newborn twins of missing state Rep. Craig Eiland were at a Galveston hospital. Crain testified that the governor told him, "I want the Texas Rangers to go by and locate Mr. Eiland."

Perry had downplayed his role, saying he had no contact with his involvement was in trying to determine whether extradition from out of state was possible.

Court finds doctor should not have fired pregnant worker

ALBANY, N.Y. (AP) — A doctor discriminated against his pregnant secretary when he fired her because his wife's unfounded suspicions of an affair were causing her to be paranoid, a state's highest court said Thursday.

The lower Appellate Division ruled last year that the reason for the firing didn't amount to discrimination. But the Court of Appeals said that because substantial evidence of discrimination existed, was irrelevant whether evidence of the doctor's wife's plan of trying to save his marriage.

Court records stated that New York City ophthalmologist Raines

Miril fired Mayra Rivera-Maldonado three months into her pregnancy. In 1990, The state Division of Human Rights awarded backpay in 2000, but the doctor sued to annul the state's award.

During her pregnancy, Rivera-Maldonado requested two days off for medical appointments. Shortly after, according to court records, the doctor's wife screamed at her: "Why are you so nice to my husband? ... All of the clothes you wear, my husband bought them. ... I know where you live. ... He's the Get out."

The doctor's wife, whose name was not given in the court papers, had no supervisory role in the office, the court records stated.

Liars contest winner goes into politics

CHARLESTON, W.Va. (AP) - The winner of the state's annual tall-tale telling contest is planning a career in politics.

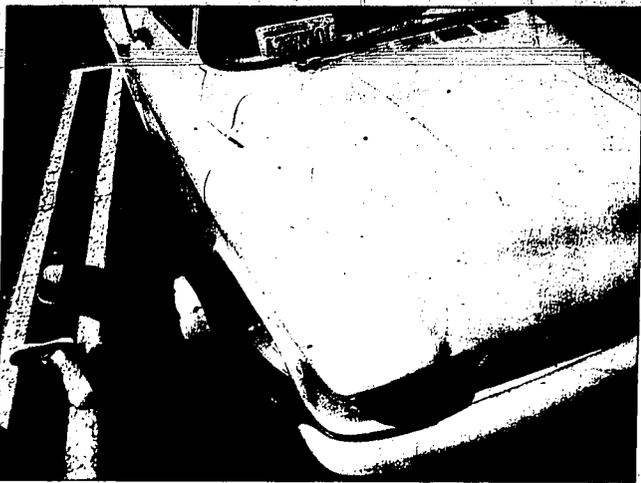

Justin Wood, 17, a junior at George Washington High School, was named the biggest liar in last month's Liars Contest, held in conjunction with the 27th annual Vandalla Gathering.

"I'm just a natural liar, I guess," said Wood, the recently elected class president who plans to major in political science at either American University or George Washington University.

Wood won the junior competition last year and based this year's monologue on fame attained from the 2002 victory, saying prizes followed him through Charleston, and Nike courted him to endorse "Air Liar" sneakers.

But his lie went in truth: He came up with the idea after being recognized in a restroom. Wood won a cash prize of $100 and a golden shovel.

He bought the car two days ago and said burning up starters on hot days is common with old cars.

Woman wants to stay in touch with former in-laws

The problem is I am in a new and serious relationship with another man, and I'm afraid if I tell him I still communicate with my ex's mother, he'll get berserk. There may be a subtext going on in their relationship. It's possible that he's actually trying to sabotage her weight loss.

I know. My soon-to-be-ex-husband sabotaged every attempt I made to lose weight throughout our more than 20 years of marriage. He was always subtle about it. For instance, he'd tell me I'd been working hard and "deserved a treat" - or he needed a treat and then he'd keep offering me "just a bite." It was amazing how suddenly he wanted to eat fatty meals at fast-food restaurants.

My husband worried I would lose so much weight that I'd decide I could do better than him. "Big Girl" should keep her eyes and ears open and stuck to her diet.

Creeps prepare for film about sex researcher Alfred Kinsey

BLOOMINGTON, Ind. (AP) - In preparation for his next role, actor Liam Neeson is researching sex-research pioneer Alfred Kinsey.

Neeson and members of a film team visited Indiana University's Kinsey Institute this week to view its sex-research collections and get acquainted with the Bloomington area, including the Elm Heights house where Kinsey and his family lived.

The trip is part of the team's preparations for a film on Kinsey expected to be released next year. It will be directed by Oliver Stone, and Bill Condon, who wrote the screenplay. Laura Linney will play Kinsey's wife, Clara.

The university's Kinsey Institute for Research in Sex,

Gender and Reproduction made its collections available, as it does for other researchers, said Nancy Lethem, director of development.

Kinsey collected histories of people's sex lives and published his findings in two groundbreaking and controversial books, "Sexual Behavior in the Human Male" in 1947 and "Sexual Behavior in the Human Female" in 1953. He died from a heart attack in August 1956 at the age of 62.

Condon has said sources for his screenplay were Jonathan Gathorne-Hardy's 1998 biography "Sex, the Measure of All Things: A Life of Alfred C. Kinsey," and "Sex and the Scientist," a 1989 television documentary produced by Diane Ward.

Judge rules against former Boise mayor

BOISE (AP) — A judge has refused to dismiss two charges against former Boise Mayor Brent Coles alleging he illegally accepted a trip to the 2002 Winter Olympics.

Judge Daniel Hurlbutt, a retired district court judge appointed to handle Coles' case, rejected the motion from attorney Mark Manweiler this week.

Manweiler declined to comment on the decision, but said he probably would not ask for a change of venue despite public scrutiny of the case.

Coles resigned Feb. 14, just hours after the state Attorney General's Office charged him with two misdemeanor charges for accepting the trips, which were paid for by Blue Cross of Idaho.

At the time, Blue Cross of Idaho provided dental insurance for city employees.

The insurance company spent $5,216 on airfare, hotels, food and Olympics tickets for Coles and his wife.

Blue Cross of Idaho later received an $11 million contract to provide all health insurance for city workers.

Mark Manweiler told Hurlbutt that the state failed to accuse Coles of a crime because the trip was not prohibited by state law and the mayor had no control over what company got city health insurance contracts.

Deputy Attorney General Michael Henderson argued that Coles had a voice in the matter because he was mayor, and that not considering the trip beneficial would open a loophole allowing special interests to legally bribe officials.

The trial is scheduled to begin June 23.

In a separate case, a grand jury indicted Coles on May 6 of five felonies stemming from his alleged misuse of public funds. That trial is scheduled for Nov. 4.

Coles' former Chief of Staff Gary Lyman was indicted on 13 felonies and one misdemeanor, including illegal wiretapping, misuse of public funds and grand theft.

His trial is scheduled for July 7.

Priest Lake man drowns in swift creek

SANDPOINT (AP) — A 71-year-old Priest Lake man is dead after his small tractor was swept downstream in a creek swollen with spring runoff.

Marvin S. Dike was helping a friend with some road work Tuesday, Bonner County Sheriff's Sgt. Geoff Rusko said.

Under most circumstances, Dike's mid-size tractor and other vehicles could easily drive across the creek at the crossing north of Nordman.

"In the summer, it's only a foot or two deep," Rusko said. "This time of year, it's five-to-10 feet deep."

Both men were on the tractor as Dike attempted to cross the creek at about 3:10 p.m. About halfway across the 30- to 40-foot wide creek, the current picked up and the tractor and carried it downstream, Rusko said. Dike fell off when it hit a Forest Service Bridge. He disappeared under the brush along either side of the bank.

A search helicopter located Dike's body in a five-foot deep hole about 300 yards downstream from the bridge.

Yellowstone road reopens after washout

YELLOWSTONE NATIONAL PARK, Wyo. (AP) — Firehole Canyon Drive has reopened to the public for the summer, Yellowstone National Park Superintendent Suzanne Lewis said Thursday.

The road just south of Madison Junction was closed May 14 because of a large washout in the roadway.

It remained closed for three weeks because of the nature of the road damage and the heavy equipment working in the area, Lewis said.

Firehole Canyon Drive is a two-mile-long popular side road on the west side of the park. The washout occurred about a mile from the entrance.

Bar owners complain about police checkups

Cops target taverns in northern Idaho

COEUR D'ALENE (AP) — Northern Idaho bar owners are fuming over what they said are raid-like bar checks by dozens of law enforcement officers.

Uniformed officers from Coeur d'Alene and Post Falls police departments, the Kootenai County Sheriff's Office and the Idaho State Police entered about 10 area taverns on Saturday night.

Some patrons estimated the number of officers at more than 50, though police said it was more like 15 or 20.

A manager of the Torch Lounge, a bikini bar in Coeur d'Alene, said there were about 30 officers. When police arrived, she said there were six customers in the bar.

"It was overkill," said Corbie Maynard, an assistant to the club's owner. "There were not enough dancers, workers and customers combined to match the police 1-for-1," she said. "They were in the bar for about 20 minutes."

She said police immediately took command when they entered the bar.

"They came in, said, 'no one in or out, turn off the music, turn on the lights,'" she said.

Maynard said the bikini-clad dancers left the stage and went into the dressing room, where they showed their ID cards to police.

"They scared the crap out of my dancers," Maynard said.

Coeur d'Alene Police Chief Tom Cronin said nine of his officers took part in Saturday's checks, which probe for underage patrons and make sure liquor licenses are in order.

Cronin acknowledged that when the officers go in, they lock the doors.

"We don't know who's in the bar," he said, and they don't want anyone running out.

Kootenai County Sheriff's Sgt. Mike Sweet said five deputies were part of the group check. Post Falls Police numbers were not available, nor were the total number of probation officers and State Police troopers.

The number of violations reported was not available.

Both Thornton and Cronin said using a large number of officers helps to limit the time a bar is closed for a check.

"The more people we have the quicker it goes," Thornton said. "We don't want to disrupt business."

Police charge trespasser in INEEL incident

ARCO (AP) — An eastern Idaho man police described as "very, very paranoid" has been charged with criminal trespassing following an incident that left parts of the Idaho National Engineering and Environmental Laboratory shut down for hours on Wednesday.

Frank William Sparkman told a Butte County magistrate that he was a "victim of circumstance."

He posted a $1,000 bond and was released on the condition that he not enter any federal or state building while his case is pending.

"I simply don't feel I'm guilty of anything," Sparkman said.

He said he was following a road he thought led out to the desert when he came upon the signs instructing visitors to check in.

He said he didn't read and then asked how an explosion might affect the materials stored at the complex.

Ann Riedesel, a spokeswoman for one of the INEEL contractors, said Sparkman stopped at a remote station of the Radioactive Waste Management Complex, asked to rest and then started asking about bombs.

"There was just enough questionable behavior that our guys knew to notify security," Riedesel said. "We typically don't have people just drop in out here."

Art of metamorphosis

Botanist-turned-painter finds his materials in the commonplace

By Steve Crump
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS - Clay, ash, coffee grounds. Art is wherever Teri O'Brien finds it. "I've found I can achieve marvelous effects with the most unlikely of materials," said the bearded, 66-year-old Australian-born botanist. "When they interact with different chemicals."

His medium is called reaction art, and it involves exposing pigments applied to a piece of paper - some conventional, like watercolor; others not - to a physical reaction by applying household chemicals as common as chlorine bleach.

The result is abstract art in multiple dimensions: one image when viewed from above, quite another when held up to the light. "It's really quite a remarkable transformation," O'Brien said. "And I'm never exactly sure how it will turn out."

O'Brien, who moved to Twin Falls about two years ago, learned the elements of the technique a decade ago and has been refining it ever since. His materials range from canvas-sized to book-marked, no two quite the same.

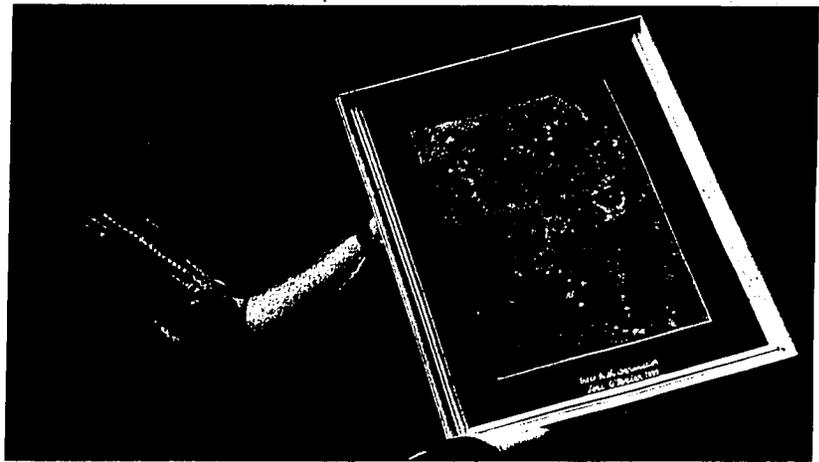

But there's serious chemistry at work here. O'Brien knows how the iron, magnesium, potassium and other elements in the chemicals he uses will react with each color.

But precisely how they will metamorphose the unconventional materials that he gathers and applies to paper with fingers and brushstrokes is frequently a surprise. And it can be any kind of paper - O'Brien doesn't work with canvas - ranging from paper towels to butcher paper. Each, with its varying thickness and composition, has different properties.

"One thing that appeals to me about this style of art is that the materials are inexpensive," he said. "It's art for every man."

The beauty of abstract art, more than most styles, truly is in the eye of the beholder. The observer picks out shapes from its murky images and identifies them, consciously or subconsciously, as things he or she recognizes.

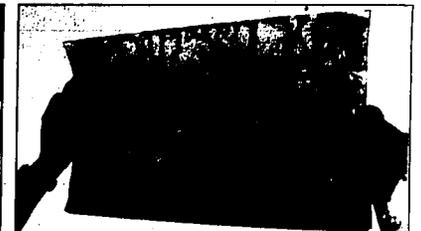

Reaction art produces all kinds of such

Artist Teri O'Brien holds one of his paintings, "There is No Separation."

As seen in these two photos of the same piece of work in O'Brien's "Earth, Air, Fire and Water" series, his art changes with the addition of light.

specters, and entirely different images when observed from different angles.

It's most revealing is when backlit, adding translucence and depth to its two-dimensional picture.

Although O'Brien sells his paintings commercially, his goal is to teach the technique to people in rehabilitation from mental illness.

"Achieving something, making something is such a great step toward recovery," he said. "And this type of art anyone can do."

O'Brien, whose resume lists a doctorate from Harvard University, was on the faculty on Australia's Monash University for 23 years, but he's had a variety of careers, including running an eco-tourism company in Australia and working as a photographer, microscopist and photomicrographer.

He's even had experience in wastewater management.

"There are so many unlikely materials, like the charcoal from a barbecue pit, that are beautiful when used in a certain way," he said. "It's great fun."

Luminaries Stigers, Frishberg headline Jazz in the Canyon

The Times-News

TWIN FALLS - Two jazz luminaries take center stage during the fifth annual Jazz in the Canyon Weekend that starts Thursday.

International pop singing star and jazz saxophonist Curtis Stigers, as well as Grammy-nominated pianist and bandleader Dave Frishberg, a legend in the jazz industry, will share the spotlight on June 14 in Centennial Park on the Snake River. Set against the backdrop of canyon walls and the Perrine Bridge, Jazz in the Canyon is a day of jazz music featuring local, national, and internationally known performers, spanning three days of jazz music at various Twin Falls locations. Tickets are available by calling 208-734-ARTS (2787).

Jazz in the Canyon begins at 11 a.m. on June 14 with different local and regional jazz groups performing every hour. Headliners Frishberg and Stigers will take the stage at 5 p.m. and 7 p.m., respectively. Tickets are $15 for adults and children under 13 are admitted free. Jazz in the Canyon Weekend is sponsored by the Rotary Club of Twin Falls, with major corporate support from First Federal Savings Bank.

Tickets to Jazz in the Canyon are available by calling 208-734-ARTS.

"It is such a coup to have Curtis Stigers and Dave Frishberg on the same stage," said Dr. Chris Scholes, artistic director for Jazz in the Canyon Weekend. "Both performers have made huge impacts on the jazz industry. Stigers has even recorded one of Frishberg's tunes, so I wouldn't be surprised to see these two performers jamming together before the night is over."

Starts Thursday

Jazz in the Canyon Weekend begins on Thursday with Jazz and Wine, an evening of jazz music and wine featuring the Jeff Baker Group from Boise. The evening is sponsored by the Magic Valley Arts Council and is held at Kimberly Nurseries. Tickets for Jazz and Wine are $20 per person or $38 for two.

A funny thing happened to singer and saxophonist Curtis Stigers on his way to becoming a contender in the jazz arena: He scored big as an international pop singer.

His 1991 self-titled debut album sold nearly 2 million copies, bringing Stigers to worldwide attention, and spawning several hit singles, including the self-penned top 10 "I Wonder Why." He scored another major success in 1992 with the song "What's So Funny About Peace, Love, and Understanding," included on the soundtrack to "The Bodyguard," one of the best-selling recordings in history. Stigers has made numerous appearances on "The Tonight Show with Jay Leno," "Late Night with David Letterman," and has toured the world with several artists including Elton John, Eric Clapton, Bonnie Raitt and Rod Stewart.

As a teenager growing up in Boise, Stigers apprenticed with the late great pianist Gene Harris, who had settled in Idaho after a distinguished career as a bandleader and performer.

"Every Tuesday, (Harris) would be in the lobby bar of the Idahoan Hotel and I would stop in with my horn," Stigers said. "Gene was the first person who ever said to me, 'Hey, you know, you're a good singer. That might be your thing.'" He ended up becoming a mentor and a dear friend, and the song "Swinging at 10th and Main" is my way of saying thanks and goodbye to my biggest influence.

Stigers left Boise in 1987 for New York City as an ambitious 21-year-old. He began a regular engagement on Manhattan's Upper West Side that showcased his voice and stylistic interpretations, and soon led to his first recording contract in 1991.

His second release, 1995's "Time Was," further explored pop and soul, and 1999's "Brighter Days" found the singer exploring singer/songwriter territory, featuring writing collaborations with Carole King and Jules Shear. In 2001, Stigers released "Baby Plays Around," which features favorite jazz standards. In his latest release, 2002's "Secret Heart" on Concord Records, Stigers has brought all his experiences to bear, weaving a coherent style through a diverse repertoire of originals, selections from acclaimed modern songwriters such as Steve Earle and Randy Newman, and fresh takes on the songs of Cole Porter, Johnny Mercer, and Henry Mancini, among others.

Frishberg has enjoyed a career remarkable for its diversity. Long known as one of the outstanding pianists in jazz, Frishberg has also established himself as an internationally recognized composer and lyricist, as well as a solo performer with a loyal following.

On June 13, nine different bands will play in five venues around Twin Falls. Concerts will be held at the Outback Steakhouse, Javi Twin Falls, Woody's Sports Bar and Grill, the Creekside Steakhouse, and at the corner of Main Avenue and Shoshone Street.

Jazz at Main and Shoshone will feature two jazz groups playing an open-air concert on the street in front of the new Magic Valley Bank building. Tickets are $5 and admit music lovers to all venues all evening.

'2 Fast 2 Furious' arrives in Magic Valley theaters

New to the valley

• '2 Fast 2 Furious' - If you thought a sequel to The Fast and the Furious could possibly exist, well, Diezel & Diesel - wrong! The original wasn't about Diesel - it was about the cars. The street racing sequences were shot and edited brilliantly, which made the movie a surprise hit of summer 2001. Two years later, we have a needless sequel, and a shameless opportunity to cash in yet again. But director John Singleton knows the movie needs to be about the cars, and takes unashed glee in polishing every gully-pyrene sugar to bring a blindingly high sheen. This time, Paul Walker drives souped-up street racers in Miami instead of Los Angeles, and these clips are his ticket. PG-13 for street racing, violence, language and some sensuality. 100 minutes.

Continuing

• 'Anger Management' - A hap-hazard Jack Nicholson-Adam Sandler vehicle, a clash-of-the-titans collaboration between symbols of quite different generations. But these three films are his ticket. PG-13 for street racing, violence, language and some sensuality. 100 minutes.

• 'Beat It Like Beckham' - A smart, lively and altogether warm-hearted dramatic comedy that blends tradition and modernity on screen. Co-written and directed by Gurinder Chadha (the excellent Rajni on the Beach), it tells the story of a dutiful Indian daughter and passionate British soccer player who idolizes David Beckham, England's premier soccer professional, the cultural equivalent of Michael Jordan. What's especially gratifying about the film is that it's wise enough not to make the Indian parents into less-than figures of fun. Their opinions about soccer may be wrongheaded, but neither they nor the tradition they represent are disrespected by either their daughters or the film. With Parminder Nagra, Keira Knightley, Jonathan Rhys Meyers, Anupam Kher, Arsho Panjoli and Juliet Stevenson. (1:52, PG-13, for language and some sexual situations.)

• 'Bringing Down the House' - In this odd-people comedy, Queen Latifah plays a married couple who breeches the circuit of Steve Martin's power lawyer. The alliance of one of the funniest and most under-the-radar comics in comedy with the hip-hop diva, it seems like comic kismet. Just the thought of Martin, who does upright white guy better than anyone else, bouncing against Latifah's implacable wall of cool is irresistible. It isn't that you don't laugh - it's that too often you wish you hadn't. The comedy of mismatched partners works only if the laughs are at each player's expense. Here, Latifah sasses Martin every which way, but somehow the joke is usually on her. Screenwriter Jason Filardi and director Adam Shankman squeeze humor out of her looks and friends, mining entertainment from her nominal cooties. (1:41, PG-13, for language, sexual humor and drug content.)

• 'Bruce Almighty' - Jim Carrey has fun playing God while He (Morgan Freeman) takes a much-needed breather. But this modest fable about a frustrated Buffalo, N.Y., TV newsmen learning the dangers of using divine powers selfishly and the need to understand one's true gifts and worth, takes place in a synthetic, airless universe, overloaded with special effects and spectacle and marred by a jumbled, jarring production design. Even so, staunch Carrey fans are likely to be undeterred. With Jennifer Aniston, Philip Baker Hall. (1:41, PG-13, for language, sexual content and some crude humor.)

• 'Daddy Day Care' - Directed with flaccid intention by Steve Carr and written by Geoff Rodkey, the setup finds Eddie Murphy as a family man who gets his derriere kicked first by his boss (he's canned), then by a congregation of rubicund scene-stealers (he opens a day-care center). The kid who plays Murphy's son is terminally adorable, if distracted, and Regina King makes an pleasantly bland spouse as Donna Reed. The less said about Anjelica Huston, doing her witchy-woman thing, the better, although Jeff Gurnin and Steve Zahn as Murphy's cohorts, are welcome relief. (1:33, PG, some material may not be suitable for children.)

film, this new comedy stars Rene Zellweger as the sort of sensible career-girl Day perfected, brimming with health and untapped sexual potential, who swoons into the clutches of a granite-jawed paragon of heterosexuality - then embodied by Hudson (Hollywood's most famous closeted homosexual), now by Ewan McGregor. Director Peyton Reed gets the film's look and, in moments, its disingenuous innocence, but you have to wonder what he and the screenwriters, Eve Allert and Dennis Drake, thought they were parodying. Trying to send up a movie as self-consciously artificial as 'Fellow Traveler' is like deploying a double negative: The satires cancel each other out. If the filmmakers weren't so determined to make fun of Day and Hudson, they would have discovered that somewhere in their movie is a great romance dying to break out - one in which the talk is faster and funnier and the pillows are proudly embroidered 'his' and 'his'. With David Hyde Pierce. (1:36, PG-13, for sexual humor and dialogue.)

• 'Finding Nemo' - The fifth animated feature from Pixar (the 'Toy Story' movies, 'A Bug's Life' and 'Monsters, Inc.') features Albert Brooks as an overprotective father fish who undertakes an epic search for his son. With Ellen DeGeneres, Willem Dafoe and Geoffrey Rush. Written and directed by Andrew Stanton. (G.)

• 'Holes' - Louis Sachar's young adult novel has been turned into a movie with a younger crowd in mind, but older adults savvy enough to disregard labels will find it surprisingly rewarding. Working from a screenplay by Sachar himself, director Andrew Davis has come up with a sweetly entertaining fable about strange doings in a juvenile correction facility in Texas that switches tones between the comic and the menacing. It's a difficult but finally satisfying balancing act - that succeeds, despite a few hiccupy Sids LaBeouf, Sigourney Weaver, Jon Voight, Patricia Arquette, Tim Blake Nelson and Dale Hill. (1:51, PG, for violence, mild language, and some thematic elements.)

• 'Identity' - A psychologically complex variation on Agatha Christie's classic 'Ten Little Indians' stars John Cusack, Ray Liotta, Amanda Peet and seven others at a desolate Nevada motel during a storm. The guests keep dying but Albert Brooks as a fustoot doctor who's altered about the whereabouts of secret agent (Michael Douglas) whose son is marrying his daughter. With Robin Tunney, Candice Bergen, Ryan Reynolds and David Salzman. Directed by Andrew Fleming from a screenplay by Nat Mauldin and Ed Solomon. (1:36, PG-13, for suggestive humor, language, some drug references and action violence.)

• 'The Italian Job' - Mark Wahlberg stars as a double-crossed thief who pursues his former partner to L.A. in this high-speed remake of the 1969 Michael Caine film. With Edward Norton, Charlize Theron, David Sutherland, Seth Green and Frankie G. Directed by John Dahl. (PG-13, for violence and some language.)

• 'The Lizzie McGuire Movie' - The Disney Channel's terminally self-conscious middle-schooler graduates from the eighth grade and goes on a summer class trip to Rome, where she's mistaken for an international pop diva. (Don't you just hate when that happens?) Sticky-sweet and strident, but you sort of see the point and the movie-star potential of Hilary Duff in the marquee role. With Adam Lamberger, Yari Gellman, Alex Borstein and Robert Carradine. Directed by Jim Fall. (1:30, PG, for mild thematic elements.)

• 'The Matrix Reloaded' - Let's start with all the things it is: the highly anticipated sequel to one of the most influential, admired (four Academy Awards) and popular (nearly half a billion dollars in worldwide theatrical gross) of films; the first part of a simultaneously shot two-part epic; the sequel to the original (the second part, 'The Matrix Revolutions', comes out in November) that together cost upward of $300 million and has taken four years to come to the screen; an elaborately choreographed, rigorously stylized science-fiction epic rife with cool heroes, intriguing villains and eye-opening action set pieces that show us the money in uncertain terms. Saying what the film isn't, turns out to be a lot less complicated. It's simply not as satisfying as the original. Even the return of stars Keanu Reeves, Laurence Fishburne and Carrie-Anne Moss, as well as writer-directors and conceptual godfathers Larry and Andy Wachowski, can't change that. (2:18, R, for sci-fi violence and some sexuality.)

• 'Wrong Turn' - A hack-nosed, short-cut becomes a nightmare for a group of young people in the West Virginia wilderness. With Jeremy Sisto, Kiana Dushku, Devonon Harrington and Emmanuel Chirqui. Directed by Rob Schmidt.

(R, for strong violence and gore, some language and drug use.)

• 'X-Men United' - Brisk and involving with a streamlined forward propulsion, it's the kind of superhero movie we want if we have to have superhero movies at all. It's also an improvement over the initial 'X-Men' venture, yet, paradoxically, it wouldn't be as satisfying as it is if that first one hadn't existed. Director Bryan Singer, the key members of his production team and no fewer than nine stars and the genetic mutants they portray return from the 2000 original, all benefit from having the previous effort behind them. With Hugh Jackman, Halle Berry, Ian McKellen, Patrick Stewart and Brian Cox. (2:13, PG-13, for sci-fi action violence, some sexuality and brief language.)

Future looks grim for Neuheisel

UW coach admits to betting on NCAA basketball

SEATTLE — University of Washington officials met Thursday to discuss the future of football coach Rick Neuheisel, a day after he acknowledged breaking NCAA rules by betting on men's basketball tournaments the past two years.

No decision was immediately announced, and UW Athletic Department spokesman Jim Lee Huntsman, the university's interim president, was in meetings with athletics officials and did not immediately return a phone call from The Associated Press seeking comment.

The Seattle Times reported Thursday that Neuheisel participated in informal NCAA basketball pools the past two years. Two NCAA investigators and one from the Pac-10 Conference questioned him Wednesday after receiving a tip that he put up $5,000 and won about $20,000 by picking Maryland in 2002, the newspaper reported.

NCAA spokesman Jeff Howard told the AP on Thursday that he could not comment about or confirm the investigation. The NCAA manual specifies that coaches, staff members and athletes may not knowingly "solicit or accept a bet on any intercollegiate competition for any item (e.g., cash, shirt, dinner) that has tangible value."

Emerging from a meeting with the investigators, Neuheisel acknowledged to The Times that his college coaching career could be on the line.

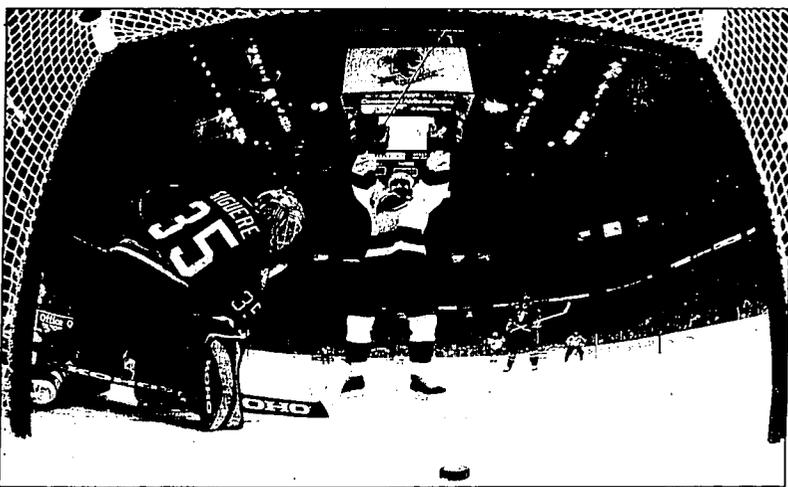

"I never in my wildest dreams imagined I was doing anything like this," Neuheisel said.

Devils silence Ducks' attack

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. — So much for momentum. Right-checking, low-scoring hockey also were missing in Game 5 of the Stanley Cup Finals on Thursday night at Continental Arena.

It was replaced by offensive outbursts and wacky bounces, one of which resulted in the winning goal.

Jay Pandolfo got credit for it. A Brian Gionta rebound went in off Pandolfo's right skate to give the Devils the lead for good in a wild 6-3 victory over the Mighty Ducks of Anaheim that moved the Devils within three games of their third Stanley Cup in nine years.

Back ahead in the series 3-2 after losing two overtime games in Anaheim, the Devils can clinch the Cup with a victory in Game 6 on Saturday night at the Arrowhead Pond. The home team has won all five games in the Finals.

The six goals were the most Anaheim goaltender Jean-Sebastien Giguere has given up in the playoffs. The Devils benefited from good fortune and the correct interpretation of a rule they know very well.

It's 70B. It states: "A puck that deflects into the net off an attacking player who does not use a disinct kicking motion, is a legitimate goal."

Twice it had worked against them — once when interpreted incorrectly and cost them a goal in an overtime loss in Detroit on Thanksgiving and the other time when the officials made the proper ruling and awarded a goal to Washington on Dec. 28.

So when referee Bill McCrory initially waived off Pandolfo's goal, which snapped a 3-3 tie 9:02

Serena's Slam streak stops at French Open

The Associated Press

PARIS — It started in the very first game, when a few fans applauded an errant forehand. By the final set, thousands loudly cheered missed serves.

And when Serena Williams abruptly shook hands without speaking a word to Justine Henin-Hardenne, the woman who had just ended her Grand Slam winning streak, full-throated boos echoed from the upper stands.

Rattled by the rough crowd and unable to lose a gritty opponent, Williams lost to Henin-Hardenne 6-2, 4-6, 7-5 Thursday at the French Open, ending her bid for a fifth straight major title. Williams had won 33 straight Grand Slam matches — dating to last year at Roland Garros, the sixth-longest streak in history.

DuPont course, golf rival hamper Sorenstam at LPGA

The Associated Press

WILMINGTON, Del. — Annika Sorenstam ran into familiar foes Thursday in the LPGA Championship, losing to the punishing DuPont Country Club and Wendy Ward.

Sorenstam shot a 1-under 70, leaving her three strokes behind

Golf

Hee-Won Han and two behind Ward, her nemesis from the Solheim Cup.

It still left Sorenstam in a tie for sixth and in a good frame of mind as she tries to capture the one major championship that has given her fits the last five years.

On a windy day in Delaware, only six players broke 70.

Sorenstam struggled on the backline last year in the second round on her way to a 76, and that looked to be the case again Thursday.

She made two bogeys, from an awkward lie in the bunker on No. 13 and from the rough on No. 15, and had to make an 8-foot par putt in between. She kept it together with a 6-foot par putt on the 18th, then finally got it going.

Short birdies putts on the second and third holes put her under par, and even a 6-foot birdie miss on the par-5 ninth, her final hole, didn't dampen her spirits.

Ward made six birdies in a round of 68, tied with Joanne Mills.

Defending champion Se Ri Pak had three bogeys over her final five holes for a 72.

Karrie Webb, who won two years ago, also had a 72.

Funny Cide frenzy peaks as Belmont draws near

The Associated Press

NEW YORK — East Cide, West Cide, and on the World Wide Web, a fairy tale named Funny Cide is unfolding in thoroughbred racing.

The next chapter in this extraordinary saga will be written Saturday, when Funny Cide attempts to win the Belmont Stakes and become the first Triple Crown champion in a quarter-century.

"It's something you always dream about but you never think it can come true," says Jose Santos, Funny Cide's jockey.

Welcome to Funny Cide frenzy, now in full swing and about to reach fever pitch at 3:38 p.m. EDT — post time for the 1.5-mile Belmont, the final and most grueling leg of the Triple Crown races.

"The anticipation is building," says Jack Knowlton, general partner of Sacketya Stable, a group that includes six high school pals from Sacketts Harbor, N.Y., who shelled out $75,000 to buy Funny Cide. "It was almost unbearable before the race. I can't imagine what it'll be like before the Belmont."

And word is out: Funny Cide is a superstar, owned by a bunch of "regular guys," trained by journeyman Bobby Tagg and ridden by New York regular Santos, wrongly linked to carrying something illegal when he won the Kentucky Derby.

"The whole story is why America loves him," Tagg's assistant Robin Smullen said this week. "The story about paying $75,000 for him, him sort of being the underdog, and it's the ninth horse — these people have never owned. It's all that more than it is actually Funny Cide."

"But, of course, it's because of Funny Cide."

At Belmont Park, there's a sign at the front gate welcoming race fans to Funny Cide's home track, groomers and hotwalkers are walking around the backstretch wearing "We Love Funny Cide" buttons, and artist LeRoy Neiman showed up one morning to begin work on a Funny Cide portrait.

Even trainer Bobby Frankel, who will send out Empire Maker to try and spoil the party, is paying attention.

"You got a New York bred, and you got a gelding," Frankel said. "And you got guys (owners) I read about the other day that I was interested in. Racing needs things like this. Even the Santos thing, bad or good, gets people thinking about racing."

Win or lose Saturday, Funny Cide will be the talk of the town.

Williams loses no-hitter, but Cards win Major League Baseball

ST. LOUIS (AP) - Woody Williams took a no-hitter into the eighth inning as the St. Louis Cardinals beat Toronto 13-5 Thursday night in a game the Blue Jays played under protest.

Williams held Toronto hitless until Orlando Hudson tried for one out in the eighth. He also hit a bases-loaded triple and drove in four runs.

The Blue Jays lodged their protest in the second inning after an umpire's reversal on a fly ball cost them a triple play. With Eduardo Perez on second base and Tino Martinez on first, Mike Matheny hit a shallow fly ball and left fielder Frank Francisco tried for a shoestring grab. Third-base umpire Kerwin Danley ruled it was a catch, and the Blue Jays trapped Perez and Martinez off base.

Cardinals manager Tony La Russa sprinted onto the field to argue, and after the umpires huddled for several minutes, they ruled it a base hit and the St. Louis runners re-emerged from the dugout, leading the bases.

Mariners 5, Phillies 4

PHILADELPHIA - Mike Cameron's three-run homer off Jose Mesa in the ninth inning led the Seattle Mariners to their ninth straight victory. After rallying in the top of the ninth, the Mariners escaped a bases-loaded jam when Kazuhito Sasaki struck out first baseman and retired Bobby Abreu on a fly ball.

Cubs 8, Devil Rays 1

CHICAGO - Sammy Sosa hit an RBI single in the first inning and reached on an error during Chicago's seventh run third as the Cubs routed the Tampa Bay Devil Rays 8-1 Thursday.

Sosa, in a batting tailspin since coming off the disabled list Friday, went 1-for-4 and is now 4-for-24 in his last six games. He is still waiting to learn what his punishment will be for using a corked bat.

Yankees 10, Reds 2

CINCINNATI - Hideki Matsun responded to a bases-loaded demotion with a two-run homer and three doubles as the Yankees earned a long-awaited win in Cincinnati.

Continued from D1 into the second period, the Devils argued vehemently Video replay backed up their argument and the goal was allowed to count.

Jamie Langenbrunner added two third-period goals, giving him a career-high 11 in the playoffs, as the Devils cruised to the victory and the sellout crowd of 19,040 said goodbye with chants of "We want it Cup!"

The first four games of this series gave no hint of the offensive explosion that happened Thursday. The teams combined for 12 goals in four games, including a 10 overtime win for Anaheim in Game 4, but had totaled seven by the end of the second period of Game 5.

They tied four in the opening period after not scoring any in the St. Louis' So Taguchi watches his two-run double in the eighth inning against the Toronto Blue Jays Thursday in St. Louis. The Cardinals won, 13-5.

The Yankees won the 1961 World Series against the Reds, but got swept when they returned in 1976 against the Big Red Machine. They also dropped the first two games of their interleague series, and some of the 42,292 fans that showed up for the final game waved balloons with '76 inscribed in red.

Pirates 5, Red Sox 4

PITTSBURGH - Kenny Lofton homered and hit a tiebreaking sacrifice fly in the eighth inning for the Pirates, who snapped a three-game losing streak.

Braves 6, Rangers 4

ATLANTA - Jay Lopez hit a tiebreaking homer in the seventh inning as the Atlanta completed a sweep of Texas.

Lopez, who had missed five straight games with a sore hamstring, led off the seventh by knocking a 6-1 pitch from Aaron Fultz 1-1 to the left-field stands.

Rockies 7, Indians 4

DENVER - Bobby Estalella homered and drove in three runs and Larry Walker had three RBIs

Marlins 2, Athletics 0

MIAMI - Rookie Dontrelle Willis pitched seven impressive innings against the team he grew up rooting for, outdueling Oakland's Tim Lincecum.

Oakland had not been shut out since a 1-0, 10-inning loss to Anaheim last Sept. 17.

Astros 11, Orioles 1

HOUSTON - Roy Oswalt struck out a season-high 11 and Brian Hunter drove in four runs with four hits as the Houston Astros completed a three-game sweep.

received his reward with a redirection goal off a nifty pass from Brian Rafalski only 42 seconds later.

Then, it was the Mighty Ducks' turn to respond. They did so by taking advantage of a rare defensive zone breakdown by the Devils' top defensive pair of Scott Stevens and Rafalski on the ice with Madden's checking line.

Stevens went for the hit on Paul Kariya in the right corner, but Kariya got the puck to Sykora in the bottom of the right circle. Sykora drew Rafalski to him before feeding Steve Rucchin, who had gotten free from the check of Brian Gionta in the slot. Rucchin beat Brodeur inside the left post to tie it.

Gionta, who had an apparent first-period goal correctly disallowed because he batted it in with his right forearm, benefited from a fortunate bounce to get a goal that counted and gave the Devils a 3-2 advantage 3:12 into the second.

Gionta tried to surprise Giguere with a quick shot from the right corner, but it deflected off Ozoilinski's stick and then was inadvertently batted in on the short side by Anaheim's Mike Leclerc.

The Mighty Ducks answered again, capitalizing on another Devils' breakdown to pull even on Sammy Pahlson's second of the playoffs at 6:35.

The weird bounce continued to work in the Devils' favor, though, as they retook the lead at 9:02 on a goal that went in off the outside of Pandolfo's right skate.

Cubs' Sammy Sosa awaits his penalty

CHICAGO (AP) - The bats have been checked and the interviews done. Now all Sammy Sosa can do is wait to see what his punishment will be for using a corked bat.

Bob Watson, baseball's vice president in charge of discipline, met with Chicago Cubs manager Dusty Baker and general manager Jim Hendry at Wrigley Field before returning to New York on Thursday afternoon. A decision could come as early as Friday.

"There's really nothing we can speculate until we hear from the commissioner or Bob," Hendry said Thursday. "Hopefully we'll get some news tomorrow. Whether that becomes in effect or whether it's something you can appeal will probably be determined by what we hear from the commissioner's office."

Sosa was in the clubhouse during Watson's visit, and Cubs officials initially thought the two had talked. But Sosa said after the game he hadn't spoken with Watson.

Hunter matched his career highs in hits and RBIs. Morgan Ensberg homered and drove in four runs for Houston.

Padres 5, Tigers 1

SAN DIEGO - Keith Lockhart hit a go-ahead homer in the sixth inning as San Diego avoided a three-game sweep.

The Tigers (16-41) are once again saddled with baseball's worst record, having given it up for one day to the Padres. San Diego (18-43) pulled previous points ahead. The Padres also snapped a five-game losing streak to the Tigers dating to the last three games of the 1994 World Series, which Detroit won 4-1.

National League

Brewers 8, Mets 7-3

NEW YORK - Ben Sheets pitched seven sharp innings as the Milwaukee Brewers completed a doubleheader sweep of the New York Mets on Thursday, 5-3.

The Mets, who lost their first game 8-7, saw second-game starter Tom Glavine (5-6) leave with an injured elbow after allowing five runs, four hits and five walks in one-plus innings.

Sheets (6-4) retired the first nine batters he faced and went more than seven innings for the third consecutive start in the first game, which was Milwaukee's first win at Shea Stadium since Sept. 11, 2000 - nine games.

Richie Sexson and Eric Young each homered and doubled in San Francisco's first win at Shea Stadium since Sept. 11, 2000 - nine games.

Seven players, including former Grand Slam guy off to another shaky start by missing six greys on the front line. She recovered with a 7-2.

Continued from D1. I've had to fight. So it's just another fight," Williams said. "It definitely does make it harder, but I've just got to be able to be a little stronger next time."

Instead of a fifth straight all-Williams Grand Slam final - Serena's sister Venus lost in the fourth round - Henin-Hardenne will play No. 2 Kim Clijsters in the first all-Belgian final.

Neither owns a Grand Slam title. In Friday's men's semifinals, ninth-seeded Albert Costa will face the man he beat in the 2002 championship match, giving him a career-high 11 in the playoffs, as the Devils cruised to the victory and the sellout crowd of 19,040 said goodbye with chants of "We want it Cup!"

The first four games of this series gave no hint of the offensive explosion that happened Thursday. The teams combined for 12 goals in four games, including a 10 overtime win for Anaheim in Game 4, but had totaled seven by the end of the second period of Game 5.

They tied four in the opening period after not scoring any in the women's tennis," said Henin-Hardenne, who lost to Venus in the 2001 Wimbledon final.

"Maybe it's time to give someone else a chance."

She earned her shot by racing to an early lead Thursday, then hanging in when the pressure appeared to get to both players and the crowd really became a factor.

With Williams ahead 3-2 in the final set, Henin-Hardenne's forehand sailed long - but there was no call. Instead of continuing the point, Williams yelled, "Out!" She beckoned chair umpire Jorge Dias, who agreed.

Two more errors by Henin-Hardenne, plus a forehand winner by Williams, gave the defending champion a service break and a 4-2 lead.

The next game, Henin-Hardenne hit another shot Williams thought was out. Again, Dias concurred after checking the mark on the clay.

Up 30-0, Williams sent her first serve into the net, and some in the crowd cheered. She got her second serve in, but lost the point on a forehand into the net.

Williams then faulted - to resounding cheers - but told Dias she should be allowed to redo the serve because Henin-Hardenne raised a hand to call time. After a discussion, Dias told Williams it would stand as a fault; she wound up losing the point on one of several poor drop shots in the match.

"I'm not upset with her," Williams said, then paused. "Actually, OK, I was a little disappointed with her because she started lying and fabricating, it's not fair. I understand that people want to win these days, but ..."

Two more first-serve faults were greeted by cheering. A forehand into the net by Williams, followed by a forehand winner down the line by Henin-Hardenne, let the Belgian break back to 4-3.

Even Nets' players second-guess coach

By Chris Sheridan Associated Press writer

SAN ANTONIO - There was plenty of second-guessing Thursday at the NBA Finals, most of it centered around Nets coach Byron Scott, New Jersey forward...

NBA Finals San Antonio vs. New Jersey San Antonio leads series 1-0 On TV: Today, 6:30 p.m. (ABC, Ch. 3)

Martin defended him one-on-one. But in the second half, Martin went to the bench with 2:28 remaining in the third quarter. He stayed there until 6:56 remained in the game, with Duncan scoring nine points in Martin's absence...

"I did kind of expect (Mutombo) to be playing for a championship, but I'm sitting on the bench," Mutombo said. "You should go find that man and ask him."

"I was brought in to help the organization win a championship. We're playing for a championship, but I'm sitting on the bench," Mutombo said. "You should go find that man and ask him."

"No, we don't talk," Mutombo said. "The other part of the problem for the Nets was their offense. New Jersey was unable to execute its half-court and couldn't find anybody who could make a shot in their fast-break court."

Kidd was 4-for-17 from the field as New Jersey shot just 37 percent to offset its advantages in offense, rebounding (13 to the Spurs' 10) and turnovers (The Nets committed eight to San Antonio's 12).

There have been only seven sweeps in the history of the NBA Finals, but only two coaches who are 4-0 in Finals series in championship-round games.

One is Brian Hill, whose Orlando Magic were swept by Houston in 1995. The other is Scott, whose finals record is now 0-5.

SAN ANTONIO - There was plenty of second-guessing Thursday at the NBA Finals, most of it centered around Nets coach Byron Scott, New Jersey forward...

"I did kind of expect (Mutombo) to be playing for a championship, but I'm sitting on the bench," Mutombo said. "You should go find that man and ask him."

"I was brought in to help the organization win a championship. We're playing for a championship, but I'm sitting on the bench," Mutombo said. "You should go find that man and ask him."

"No, we don't talk," Mutombo said. "The other part of the problem for the Nets was their offense. New Jersey was unable to execute its half-court and couldn't find anybody who could make a shot in their fast-break court."

Kidd was 4-for-17 from the field as New Jersey shot just 37 percent to offset its advantages in offense, rebounding (13 to the Spurs' 10) and turnovers (The Nets committed eight to San Antonio's 12).

There have been only seven sweeps in the history of the NBA Finals, but only two coaches who are 4-0 in Finals series in championship-round games.

One is Brian Hill, whose Orlando Magic were swept by Houston in 1995. The other is Scott, whose finals record is now 0-5.

Neuheisel is toast at Washington

BLAINE NEUNHAM

What if it had been one of Washington's players caught wagering in high-stakes pool on the NCAA men's basketball championships? Instead of its coach...

The player, even though he hadn't paid attention when counseled about the dangers of gambling, even though the pool had nothing to do with illegal gambling, even though he played football and not basketball, would lose his eligibility.

Rick Neuheisel is about to lose his. The NCAA will make a big deal out of this even if many, including Neuheisel, is shocked that it is.

Jack Sikma, the former Sonics great, said he also was involved in the neighborhood auction pool on the 2002 NCAA basketball tournament.

"It was a kind of office pool, just another way to go about it," Sikma said. "I don't think any of us thought it was inappropriate. We were just having fun."

"I'm totally stunned. I hate to see Rick hurt by something like this. He will be."

The NCAA is more concerned about gambling in college athletics than it is about recruiting violations. Its punishments have been swift and harsh.

A year ago, Florida basketball player Teddy Dupuy was declared ineligible for his final season for gambling on college sports.

A year before that, an assistant football coach was fired and suspended from college coaching for two years after he repeatedly gambled $200 to $300 on college and pro games.

A head coach such as Neuheisel, and especially someone already under NCAA sanctions, will be treated at least as sternly.

You can understand Sikma's confusion, and his compassion for a friend. When does an office pool become something sinister? It isn't illegal in this state, it isn't run by the mob. It's just rich guys having fun.

But when the money bet on a team is in the thousands, which it apparently was, when one college coach bets on another college team, when inside information could be important, when players could be influenced, then the NCAA gets involved big time.

To his credit, Neuheisel didn't try to sidestep the issue. Or lie about it. He admitted involvement in the pool in 2002 and again this year. But the latter cost him the NCAA. Had sanctioned him and his university president had told him to walk the straight and narrow.

Even his boss, athletic director Barbara Hedges, admitted (Wednesday night) that he should have known the NCAA rules, which don't differentiate between organized gambling and an office pool.

"You can't minimize this," Hedges said. "The university will take this seriously. I do believe Rick should have understood the rules. He just didn't relate them to the particular situation he was in."

It shouldn't have escaped Neuheisel that there is no office pool in the UW athletic department for NCAA basketball tournaments.

Hedges might not have to decide whether this is the straw that breaks her coach's back, the culmination of problems that began in Colorado and embarrassing followed him at Washington. The NCAA may give her no option but to find a new coach. Washington can't conduct a program with a coach who is suspended for a season or two. Or would want to, given Neuheisel's regrettable track record.

For many, the casual betting among friends is less embarrassing to the university than Neuheisel's decision, earlier this year to lie about his interview with the San Francisco 49ers.

But it all adds up, from the beginning when he didn't understand the rules about when he could and couldn't recruit athletes, to what may well be the end, when he didn't realize that he shouldn't be gambling on college sports.

He was more thoughtless than arrogant about the rules this time, but the stakes got so much higher when gambling was involved.

Hedges said all Neuheisel had to do was ask for an interpretation if he was confused about rules. He never asked about gambling. Neuheisel seemed perfect for college coaching. His ability to relate to kids, his passion for the game and all that surrounded it.

In the end, one mistake might take him down, but it was an attitude, an arrogance, that put him in the position to take the fall.

What will Hedges do?

She seems to have no choice but to fire Neuheisel, and at this late date, it would be difficult to fill with offensive coordinator Keith Gilbertson, who has head-coaching experience, or go after another link to the past, Gary Pinkel, the Missouri coach. If she doesn't act, the NCAA will.

Southwestern Mississippi running back Derrick Nix, center, fights past Cincinnati defenders for a first-quarter touchdown run Oct. 29 in Hattiesburg, Miss. Nix is scheduled to have a kidney transplant on Friday.

Former S. Miss star prepares for transplant

By Ralph D. Russo Associated Press writer

HATTIESBURG, Miss. — Former Southern Mississippi tailback Derrick Nix spends his days lifting weights and playing basketball, as most football players do during the offseason.

With bulging biceps and rippling abs, the 23-year-old looks more like a man preparing for NFL minicamp than kidney transplant surgery.

"If you see him, he looks like he can line up and play for somebody this fall, actually this week," said Southern Miss assistant coach Tyrone Nix, Derrick's older brother and workout partner. "I wish we had him back."

An ordeal that began for Derrick Nix in 2000 with a simple ankle sprain reaches a culmination of sorts Friday when he receives a kidney transplant from his oldest brother, Marcus, in a Birmingham, Ala., hospital.

Nix won't play football again but if the new organ takes, he could still live a long life. "We're very cheerful and looking forward to getting it over with and putting it behind us," Nix's father, Preston, said recently from his home in Attalla, Ala.

Derrick Nix has undergone dialysis treatment since December. How he got to this point could be decided in the courts.

He has filed a lawsuit against the makers of anti-inflammatory drugs Vioxx and Celebrex, which he claims caused a condition called focal segmental sclerosis. The disease prevents the kidneys from properly filtering waste from the blood.

Nix is seeking compensation for the loss of an NFL career. Representatives for Pfizer, which makes Celebrex, and Merck, which makes Vioxx, said the companies stand behind the safety of their products.

Nix declined numerous requests to be interviewed for this story. His attorney, William Couch, did not return several messages left at his office.

Nix is the only player in Southern Miss history to run for more than 1,000 yards in his first two seasons. But life changed for Nix after his first games late in his junior season, when he twisted an ankle against Memphis.

Nix was prescribed anti-inflammatory drugs to treat the sprain. His doctors alleged the drugs caused a condition called membranous glomerulonephritis, a kidney disease that causes a drastic loss of proteins. Symptoms include high blood pressure and fluid retention. Nix put on 50 pounds and was constantly fatigued.

He was put on medication and sat out the rest of the 2002 season. A slow recovery forced him to face a medical redshirt in 2001.

He was cleared to play in 2002 and made a remarkable return, averaging 158 yards rushing in his first three games.

But there were troubling signs. The most obvious was when he vomited on the field against Illinois after scoring a touchdown.

"You didn't know whether it was medication he was on. You didn't know whether it was the layoff, getting his endurance back," Golden Eagle coach Robert Reid said. "I knew he didn't have the same endurance that he had before."

Still, he missed only one game and ran for 1,194 yards. But tests after the season revealed his condition had worsened.

Jon Thornton, a nephrologist who treated Nix, declined an interview request. He said through a spokeswoman that Nix's attorney had requested he not speak publicly about the athlete.

Dr. Michael Fleener, director of nephrology at the University of Mississippi Medical Center, said it is common to see patients with kidney ailments that can be traced back to Vioxx and Celebrex.

Fleener, who has never treated Nix, said people with healthy kidneys can safely and effectively take Celebrex and Vioxx. For patients with pre-existing kidney conditions, the drugs can do damage.

"People think they're like candy and they're not. They're like kidney poison," Fleener said. The transplant will cost about $150,000. Insurance carried by Nix's father is covering most of his medical expenses. And he's still covered under an insurance policy at Southern Miss.

The school also set up a student-athlete medical fund to help Nix with expenses down the road. Nearly $200,000 has been raised.

By all accounts, Nix isn't remained upbeat throughout the ordeal, expressing neither bitterness nor despair.

"He's tougher than I ever thought he would be," Tyrone Nix said. "His determination is bigger than mine would ever be. If my boy were to grow up to be like him, I'd be the happiest person in the world."

Neuheisel

Continued from D1 jeopardize my employment," he said. "I don't think I would ever put myself in that situation knowingly, but I'm hopeful I can be the coach at Washington. I'd certainly like to be."

Huskie's athletic director Barbara Hedges told the newspaper she learned of Neuheisel's involvement in the betting pool late Wednesday and promised "a careful review of the facts."

"Gambling is a serious violation of NCAA rules," Hedges said. "You can't minimize this. The university will take this very seriously."

Neuheisel said he was part of a four-member "team" that had the overall winner in both years he participated in what he described as a "pizza-and-beer" gambling game.

Neuheisel said his group split its winnings but he would not discuss dollar amounts.

Under the auction format, participants bid on each team. The highest bid gets that team in the tournament.

"I was there (at the auction) really because most of these people were buddies of mine from my neighborhood," Neuheisel said. "Their kids went to the same school as my kids and I was an invitee..."

Obviously, it was a game of contention, but I never imagined that I was doing anything wrong.

"I never in my wildest dreams imagined I was doing anything to jeopardize my employment. I don't think I would ever put myself in that situation knowingly, but I'm hopeful I can be the coach at Washington."

Neuheisel, 42, has a 33-15 record in four seasons with the Huskies. Under a six-year contract extension he signed in September, he makes $1.2 million a year, and a five-year option could keep him at Washington until 2015.

The kind of pool Neuheisel described is not against state law unless a bookmaker is involved, but NCAA rules forbid any form of gambling on college sports by athletes and coaching staff.

Institutions can be sanctioned in such cases if violations were known to college officials or if the NCAA finds they should have known.

"There are a lot of questions and we don't have a lot of answers," Hedges said.

In hindsight, Rick realizes he should have known," she said. "It's clear that gambling is prohibited on any kind of college sports regardless of what the circumstances are. I do believe Rick should have understood the situation. He just didn't relate it to the particular social situation he was in."

"Rick was forthcoming. That is to his credit."

NCAA measures to combat gambling by coaches, players and staff include pre-season talks, by consortium officials to athletes, locker room posters and efforts to deny credentials to cover major NCAA events to newspapers that publish gambling pool spreads. Many college athletic departments ban even ordinary, small-change tournament brackets that are commonly filled out in offices nationwide during so-called "March Madness."

"If an athlete or coach put $1 in a pool, certain there would not be a significant penalty," said Bill Saum, the NCAA's director of agent, gambling and amateurism activities. "If there is a significant amount of money in the pool, there would be a significant penalty."

The Times reported that the NCAA investigators also questioned Neuheisel about two potential minor violations.

Neuheisel's most recent indiscretion was in February, when he issued a statement through the university denying he had been interviewed for the San Francisco 49ers head-coaching vacancy — then admitted he had in fact been interviewed.

Thursday is the deadline for the Huskies to report to the NCAA that Neuheisel has fulfilled all compliance requirements concerning 50 minor violations that were committed while he was coach at Colorado from 1995-98.

As the last requirement on the list, Neuheisel attended a regular NCAA compliance seminar Wednesday with athletic department officials from many schools.

Judge orders jury back in ex-QB's gambling trial

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. (AP) — A jury could not reach a verdict Tuesday in the gambling case of former Seminole quarterback Adrian McPherson and will try again Friday.

After nearly seven hours of deliberation, the six jurors sent a note to Judge Tim Harley notifying him that they were unable to reach an unanimous verdict.

Harley then called them into the courtroom and asked them to return Friday. He also said he would provide a transcript of testimony the jury requested from two of McPherson's boyfriend friends, which the athlete placed illegal bets over the Internet on college and pro games.

Defense attorney Grady Irvin Jr. objected to providing the transcript.

because we weren't dealing with bookies or lines or anything like that. We were just friends, like we were betting on golf holes. It seemed pretty harmless."

One of the participants in the 2002 pool was Seattle SuperSonics great Jack Sikma, who told The Times: "I don't think any of us thought it was inappropriate. We

"I do want to give them sufficient time to deliberate," Harley told Irvin.

Earlier Thursday, testimony by Florida State football coach Bobby Bowden prompted a request for a mistrial, but Harley denied the motion.

Bowden testified that he had heard rumors McPherson was gambling in June 2002, but an investigation found nothing. Irvin asked for a mistrial because the judge had limited prosecutor's case to alleged Internet gambling activity by McPherson last October and November.

Prosecutor George Cappleman said he had no comment on Bowden's testimony.

McPherson faces 60 days in jail and a $500 fine if convicted and most likely would be banned from playing college sports again.

Pac-10 will bail out WSU's Rose Bowl losses

PULLMAN, Wash. (AP) — The Pacific 10 Conference will pay $225,000 to Washington State to partially cover the Cougars' losses from last season's Rose Bowl.

Washington State had asked for relief from $538,000 in debts. The school contended the late date in which the Cougars learned they would be playing in the game, Dec. 7, and the poor national economy, kept ticket sales low.

The Cougars also contributed to their own problems by declaring to many boosters that tickets to the Rose Bowl would not be available.

By the time it became clear that demand for tickets would not be as great as for the 1998 WSU appearance in the Rose Bowl, it was too late for many people to make arrangements to fly to California.

The Pac-10 will take the subsidy out of its 2002 season bowl game fund.

Georgia players who sold rings won't face punishment

ATHENS, Ga. (AP) — Nine Georgia football players who sold their Southeastern Conference championship rings will not be penalized by the NCAA.

The NCAA Legislative Review and Interpretations Subcommittee cited a lack of precedent in issuing its ruling Wednesday, which means the players will not be ineligible.

Though they are cleared of NCAA violations, Bulldogs coach Mark Richt said he will discipline the players. No game suspensions will be included.

Among those who sold their rings: receivers Fred Gibson and Michael Johnson, linebacker Tony Taylor, and defensive linemen Kedric Golston and Darrius Swin. Reserve cornerbacks Tim Jennings and Kenny Bailey, along with walk-on Trey Young, also were involved.

On May 8, the NCAA membership services staff interpreted the selling of the rings as a violation, making the players ineligible. The university appealed to the subcommittee because the rules were interpreted differently throughout the country.

The subcommittee agreed with the membership services staff that from now on selling such rings will be a violation with NCAA penalties.

Saudis cancel $15B project with ExxonMobil

WASHINGTON - Saudi Arabia on Thursday canceled a proposed $15 billion natural gas project led by ExxonMobil after oil companies turned down its final terms in a major break between Saudi rulers and the U.S. oil industry, analysts said.

Another $10 billion in Saudi gas projects headed by ExxonMobil Corp. and Royal Dutch/Shell Group are also likely to be scrapped, industry analysts said.

The report was not confirmed by Saudi officials.

The giant gas initiative, a key strategy for expanding the Saudi economy, has been in trouble for months. A score of foreign oil companies were preparing to tap large gas reserves and build power, chemical and desalination plants in what would have been the first direct foreign energy investment in Saudi Arabia in a generation.

But a breakdown could also signal Western oil companies' uncertainty about political stability in Saudi Arabia, said Simon Wardell, research manager with World Markets Research Center in London.

LP sells 34,500 acres of timberland in N. Idaho

PORTLAND, Ore. - Louisiana-Pacific Corp. Thursday announced it had finalized the sale of about 34,500 acres of timberland in northern Idaho to Grouse Peak LLC and Patriot Investments LLC of Boston for around $21 million.

Grouse Peak LLC and Patriot Investments LLC are managed by Forest Capital Partners, a private equity timberland investment firm.

"We are aggressively pursuing our remaining timberland sales and the completion of our divestiture program. This sale brings us one step closer to this accomplishment," said Mark A. Suwyn, Louisiana-Pacific chairman and chief executive. "These proceeds will be applied toward our debt-reduction program."

Palm plans to purchase struggling Handspring

LOS ANGELES - Struggling Handspring Inc. Wednesday announced it will be sold to Palm Inc. for about $200 million in stock.

Handspring was worth more than $9 billion at its peak, but the company's market value shriveled along with demand for hand-held organizers.

Particularly hard-hit was Handspring's signature Vizio line of devices that married organizers with cell phones, cameras and music players.

Palm, based in Milpitas, Calif., lost $82 million in its 2002 fiscal year. Microsoft, Menlo Park, Calif.-based Handspring lost $91.6 million.

Analysts said the acquisition will give the combined companies a better chance of cracking the market for all-in-one devices.

Mobile phones are far more popular than PDAs, with more than 480 million expected to be sold this year, according to market research firm Gartner Inc.

Summer to improve, but airlines far from recovery

FORT WORTH, Texas - Passenger traffic on U.S. airlines is likely to rise during June, a consulting firm said last week, but experts cautioned that a full recovery will take time.

By cutting flights, airlines are finally closing the gap with the drop in demand for air travel, said Tom Klein, group president of Sabre Airline Solutions. However, he added that it "doesn't mean that supply and demand in the market have balanced."

Sabre forecast that passenger traffic will increase 3 percent to 4 percent during June, compared with June 2002.

Meanwhile, airlines will be offering 6 percent fewer flights during the month because of schedule reductions.

The top six airlines lost nearly $11 billion last year, the worst year on record for the industry, and two carriers - United Airlines and US Airways - filed for bankruptcy. Most airlines including American, predict more losses this year.

Competition blunts profits for Albertsons

The Associated Press

BOISE - The nation's sluggish economy combined with intensified competition to blunt first quarter earnings for the country's second-largest food and drug retailer, Albertsons Inc., reported Thursday.

Chairman Larry Johnston predicted little improvement through 2003 and lowered the Boise-based corporation's profit target for the year by 38 cents per share of common stock.

The company said net income during the February-April quarter totaled $172 million, or 47 cents a share, on revenues of $8.9 billion.

Wall Street had expected net income of 50 cents a share, according to analysts surveyed by Thomson First Call.

"Worsening economic conditions, a more cautious consumer and an intensifying competitive environment are making 2003 even more difficult than we had originally anticipated," Johnston said in a statement.

The stock was down $2.11 a share to $19.71 in early trading on the New York Stock Exchange. A year earlier, Albertsons ran up $400 million in costs to get out of unprofitable markets and posted a loss of $165 million, or 40 cents a share, on essentially the same sales volume of $8.9 billion. Without the one-time charges, the company earned 57 cents a share, beating analysts' expectations.

Gross profits during the three-month period that ended May 1 were 28.6 percent of sales, down eight-tenths of percentage point from a year earlier to reflect the campaign to lower prices. But, same store sales were off 1.2 percent while comparable store sales fell nearly 1 percent short of last year's first quarter.

Albertsons President Peter

Lynch said customer service levels, price competitiveness and private label penetration did improve during the quarter. Operational cost cutting totaled $482 million through the first quarter, just short of the mid-2003 target of $500 million, but Lynch said it fell short of offsetting higher occupancy, employee benefit and worker's compensation costs.

Johnston said steps to defend market share, drive up sales and attract new customers "will ensure our long-term competitiveness."

But he scaled back earnings expectations for 2003 to $1.70 to $1.75 a share from the $2.08 to $2.13 he predicted three months ago.

"The first quarter yielded a much tougher-than-expected economic and competitive climate," he said. "Even as the year ended, we saw no improvement."

After closing more than 400 stores the previous two years, Albertsons reported a net increase of 10 outlets during the first quarter. It opened 32 new food and drug stores while closing just 22.

Albertsons employs 200,000 workers at about 2,300 stores and other facilities in 31 states.

REVERSAL OF TRENDS

Small public firms consider going private

The Associated Press

NEW YORK - Companies dove into the public market during the roaring '90s, when it was easy to grab capital and turn investors' heads. Now some smaller businesses are quietly retracing their steps to private life.

With share prices declining, thinly traded public companies are finding it harder than ever to attract investors, particularly institutional funds that can boost volume and pique the interest of analysts by buying large chunks of stock.

As post-Enron reforms make running a public company more complicated and costly, a growing number of businesses are deciding that the rewards no longer justify the expense and risk.

"The whole point of being a public company is trying to build capital. So if you can't have access to capital, what's the point?" said David Clark, who took ready-to-eat lunch maker Pierre Foods private last year with partner James Richardson. "The market was just not playing the role for us that it was supposed to... and it was very expensive."

Forgotten

Clark, a former banker, spent days in New York courting analysts and fund managers in a vain attempt to energize the stock, first issued in the 1970s under the name Fresh Foods. At one point a couple analysts began covering the company but later dropped it without explanation, and the share price fell further.

"We just could not get the big money guys interested in us," said Clark. "I conclude it's along."

Martha Stewart quits top posts, fights indictment

The Associated Press

NEW YORK - Martha Stewart took her defense straight to the public Thursday, writing in a newspaper ad, "I am innocent" and "will fight to clear my name" in a federal insider trading case that pressured her to step down as head of the retail and media empire that made her a fortune.

The queen of home decor resigned late Wednesday as chairman and chief executive officer of Martha Stewart Living Omnimedia, the company she used to stamp her style on everything from magazines and TV screens to bed linens and bath towels. She plans to stay on as creative chief and a member of the board.

Stewart's resignation came hours after federal prosecutors in New York charged her with obstruction of justice, conspiracy, securities fraud and lying to investigators.

She pleaded innocent on all counts before a federal judge, saying "not guilty" in a calm, deliberate tone and with little expression on her face.

The indictment stems from Stewart's sale of nearly 4,000 shares of InClone Systems on Dec. 27, 2001 - the day before a disappointing Food and Drug Administration report that sent the biotech company's stock price tumbling.

If convicted, she could be sent to prison.

Also indicted was Peter Bacanovic, Stewart's former broker at Merrill Lynch, who prosecutors say illegally sent word to Stewart that the family of InClone founder Samuel Waksal was planning to unload shares.

Bacanovic also pleaded innocent to all counts against him, including perjury and obstruction of justice.

In an open letter published as a full-page ad in USA Today on Thursday, Stewart said, "I want you to know that I am innocent - and that I will fight to clear my name."

"I simply returned a call from my stockbroker," Stewart wrote. "Based in large part on prior discussions with my broker about pricing, I authorized a sale of my remaining shares in a biotech company called InClone. I later denied any wrongdoing in public statements and voluntary interviews with prosecutors. The government's attempt to criminalize these actions makes no sense to me."

Grand jury indicts Martha Stewart

Martha Stewart stepped down as chairman and chief executive officer of Martha Stewart Living Omnimedia Wednesday after a grand jury indicted the home-stylus guru on federal charges for her involvement in an insider stock trading scandal.

June 6, 2002 - The House Energy and Commerce Committee, which is investigating InClone trading, says it is probing Stewart's sale.

June 12 - Samuel Waksal is arrested, accused of dumping his InClone shares and advising family members to sell.

Sept. 10 - The House committee asks the Justice Department to begin a criminal investigation into whether Stewart knowingly lied to lawmakers.

Oct. 2 - An assistant to Stewart's stockbroker pleads guilty and agrees to testify against Stewart.

Oct. 3 - Stewart resigns from the NYSE board.

June 9, 2003 - Company says federal prosecutors are seeking a criminal indictment against Stewart "in the near future."

June 4 - Stewart steps down as chairman and chief executive officer of her media empire after a federal grand jury returns a nine-count indictment against her and broker Peter Bacanovic.

U.S. retailers report modest gains in May

The Associated Press

NEW YORK - The nation's largest retailers reported only modest sales gains for May, as rainy weather in certain regions and a weak job market kept shoppers from splurging for yet another month.

"It is a little better than expected, but we still haven't broken out of a sluggish pace yet," said Michael Niemira, vice president of Bank of Tokyo-Mitsubishi.

Among the retailers releasing their May results Thursday was Wal-Mart, which reported a 2.1 percent increase in sales at stores open at least a year, known as same-store sales.

Analysts had expected a gain of 2.2 percent. Total sales were up 10 percent. Apparel stores for the most part reported sluggish sales, with a few exceptions such as Gap Inc., which said same-store sales rose 10 percent. Total sales for Gap were up 14 percent.

Same-store sales gains considered the best indicator of a retailer's strength.

Stears, Roebuck and Co. posted a 1.9 percent decline in same-store sales in its domestic business, smaller than analysts projected. Total sales were down 1.3 percent.

Bank of Tokyo-Mitsubishi Ltd.'s same-store sales tally for seven results was up 2 percent in May, slightly higher than expected.

"There's a lack of fashion excitement. The weather - which has been uncooperative," said Kurt Bernard, president of Bernard's Retail Consulting Group, based in Montclair, N.J. "But the big concern is high unemployment. Whatever improvements the economy has made, it has yet to filter through to Main Street, and the employment picture."

The Labor Department reported that the number of American workers filing new claims for jobless benefits rose to a five-week high last week.

Few need to make changes for tax bill

Knight Ridder News Service

SAN FRANCISCO - The federal government may end up owing you overpaid taxes for the first half of the year because of the new tax package, but think twice before trying to tap it, experts said.

The IRS recently posted new tax tables to reflect the decreased and expanded tax brackets, which employers will use to set new withholding rates for their employees for the second half of the year.

As a result, many wages earned in the first half of the year will see slightly higher paychecks when earned in July 1, but they may want to err on the side of caution when it comes to trying to recoup the relative overpayment for the first half of 2003, said Jackie Perlman, a senior tax research analyst for H&R Block in Kansas City, Mo.

"Self-employed people, on the other hand, have more control over their payments and can recalculate their remaining estimated taxes for the year, she said."

"If you want to take advantage of lower rates right away, you have to change your withholding and in most companies, that should be done for you," Perlman said. "If you want to get even."

Mortgage rates in U.S. continue falling to new lows

WASHINGTON (AP) — Mortgage rates around the country fell to new lows this week, good news for people looking to buy homes or refinance.

The average rate on a 30-year fixed mortgage fell to a record low of 5.26 percent for the week ending June 5, Freddie

Mac, the mortgage giant, reported Thursday in its weekly nationwide survey. It marked the fourth straight week and the ninth this year that rates on this benchmark mortgage fell to an all-time week by low. The previous low rate of 5.31 percent was set last week.

Tax

Continued from D6 more back, you would have to increase your exemptions ... by filing Form W-4.

But taxpayers who want to avoid giving the government an interest-free loan may underestimate other aspects of the tax changes and end up owing penalties, she said.

Exemptions

Among the elements to consider accounting for are expected advance on the child tax credit, increased to $1,000 per child from $600, and a dividend tax rate slashed to 15 percent. Taxpayers also need to weigh whether increased exemptions are appropriate and estimate any pay raises they're anticipating this year, Feriman said.

Expectant parents will want to change their withholding, but that would be the case with or without a tax credit, she said.

First-time homeowners are especially likely to manipulate their exemptions and run the risk of miscalculating, said John W. Roth, a writer/analyst with the federal tax group at tax publisher CCH in Chicago.

"Quite often when people take out a mortgage for the first time, they can go in and increase the number of exemptions they know the interest they'll be paying for the mortgage will lower their tax liability more than they would have before the mortgage interest," he said.

"That way they have money in their pocket during the tax year rather than waiting for a refund.

"The danger is you have too much withheld. So now you have a big tax liability — you end up owing money rather than breaking even."

Taxpayers in the 10 percent and 15 percent brackets will see an expansion of the bracket size, meaning more income will be taxed at a lower rate, but like other situations, it may be difficult to gauge whether that will merit making changes, Roth said.

"If for some reason people have dividends, that would have to be taken into account. Now that you're paying less for dividends, that means you've got to lower your tax liability."

Conversely, small-business owners who normally estimate their taxes are wise to make adjustments, Perlman said. "If you do pay estimated taxes, you do need to rethink a little what you're going to pay because you may very likely have a lower tax bill next year."

Time value

While there's an opportunity cost for receiving an IRS refund, many taxpayers enjoy receiving credit of personal income tax to tinker with their withholdings or exemptions to reclaim their overpaid taxes up front, said Martin Nissenbaum, national director of personal income tax planning at Ernst & Young.

"For the ordinary Joe, he's probably happy getting a bigger refund next year but not thinking quickly."

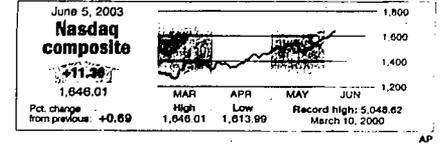

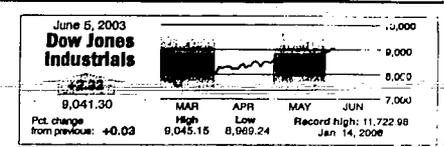

122 million tax returns filed for tax year 2002 were due refunds as opposed to owing money, according to the IRS. The average refund amount was $1,965.

Even so, the time value of money isn't a dire argument for making adjustments because of the low-interest-rate environment, assuming taxpayers save their refund checks, Nissenbaum said. Many interest-bearing savings accounts are paying below the inflation rate.

"In the old days, when people used to make a decent return on their investments, it made a lot of sense to get your money back sooner rather than later," he said.

Taxpayers tempted to tinker need to remember to include all their sources of income in their recalculations, he said. "If you're not paying estimated taxes, you pay your taxes through withholding on all your income, not just your wages."

Those who lost their jobs halfway through the year have no choice but to wait for a refund when they file their tax returns, Nissenbaum said. "They'll be getting a larger refund next year but not thinking quickly."

Stocks show limited gains to sustain rally

NEW YORK (AP) — Investors set aside disappointing employment data and lukewarm retail sales reports Thursday, limiting their profit-taking in a market that eked out incremental gains and kept stocks at their highest levels in months.

The gains, albeit small, sustained a rally that drove the Dow Jones industrial average Wednesday to its first close above 9,000 in nearly 10 months.

The Dow finished virtually even Thursday but the number of advancing issues significantly outpaced the number of declining ones.

The Dow closed up 2.32, essentially unchanged, at 9,041.31. That followed a rise of more than 100 points on Wednesday, when it closed above 9,000 for the first time since Aug. 22.

The broader market also finished higher. The Nasdaq composite gained 11.36, or 0.7 percent, to 1,646.01. The Nasdaq is trading at levels not seen since May 2002.

The Standard & Poor's 500 index was up 3.90, or 0.4 percent, to 990.14. The S&P is at levels not seen since March 31.

At the end of Thursday's trading, the Dow had risen 20.2 percent and the S&P had gained 29.5 percent and the S&P had climbed 23.7 percent since March 31.

Analysts said that despite the limited nature of Thursday's gains, the fact that there was not a broader sell-off indicates a growing sentiment by investors that the market has bottomed.

"We've been in a long and deep bear market and investors feel like the worst is over, and what appeals to them more than anything is a set of the stocks that have gotten hit the worst," said Richard E. Cripps, chief market strategist for Legg Mason of Baltimore.

Stewart

Continued from D6 The charges against her carry a maximum penalty of 30 years in prison and a $2 million fine for Stewart, and 25 years and $1.25 million for Bacanovic. Any sentences would likely be much lighter under federal guidelines.

Following the indictment, the Securities and Exchange

Commission filed a civil complaint seeking to ban Stewart, 61, from ever leading a public company and to limit her activity as officer of a public company.

At a hearing before U.S. District Judge Miriam Goldman Cedarbaum, Stewart was released without bail until her next court appearance Thursday.

their last performance review. Of that group, 54 percent said the company's financial state was the reason, and a third blamed the overall sluggish state of the economy.

With so many companies looking for a way out, private equity firms are bargain-hunting. "It's the best market in history for buyouts," said Peter Nolan, a managing partner at Leonard Green, a Los Angeles firm that specializes in friendly buyouts of retail companies.

For stockholders, a buyout can be good news: Shares are often purchased at a premium over the trading price. An amicable deal can also benefit managers by increasing their stake in the surviving company.

One factor that can tip the scales is cost associated with the Sarbanes-Oxley Act. That law became law in July following a series of corporate scandals. Aimed at making management more accountable to shareholders, it requires executives to sign off on financial statements and holds them criminally liable for inaccuracies.

Investors were paid $7.25 per share in cash, a substantial 75 percent premium over the stock's $4.20 trading price. Cost was a consideration for the buyout, but not the main one.

A Word From The President ...

Welcome to the 2003 Parade of Homes!

As you go through the homes, I think you will find 2003 is a special year for new home construction in the Magic Valley. The builders participating in this years Parade have put together a wonderful event with a nice variety of homes.

Take your time and enjoy looking at the homes! Dont forget to vote for your choice of the Best Overall homes and enter to win a prize in the drawings.

Earl Williamson, President MVBA 2003

Members of the Magic Valley Builders Association are proud to present 20 different designs in 4 price categories. You will find the variety greater than in past exhibits as we have 16 different builders showing their wares. With interest rates at their lowest level in 40 years, now is the time to consider a new home. We truly have something to fit anyone looking for a new home.

The majority of the homes are decorated and will be staffed by professional builders or licensed realtors. Our members are friendly people who can answer your building or market questions. Be sure to ask about special features in each home.

There is no charge to attend the Parade of Homes. We are continuing our tradition of giving opportunities to win some great door prizes. To enter the drawing you must go to all 20 homes, get your entry stamped at each home and vote for your favorite home in each price category. All entries meeting these criteria will be placed in the drawing for the prizes.

The Magic Valley Builders Association is a proud member of the community. We have a long history supporting the community, individually, as well as an association. We are also proud to be affiliated with the Idaho Building Contractors Association and the National Association of Home Builders. Home Builders truly Care.
