FIXING UNSAFE SCHOOLS

Local districts report few problems, but not all comply with request

By Robert Mayer
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS - The Glenn Perry school needs a new roof. It leaks in many places. For that matter, the school needs a new electrical system, which at nearly 40 years old has been repeatedly spliced and expanded and is now well outdated and approaching dangerous. "I know that water and electricity don't mix," Superintendent Karen Ernest said.

Local responsibility - A5

Castleford, too, needs attention to its facilities. The school's sidewalks are laden with cracks, and a couple of classrooms still contain asbestos tiles. Also, its playground equipment is antiquated and needs to be replaced.

But with plans to address the deficiencies, those schools are on top of their problems, district officials indicated. Well, they'd better be, anyway. By submitting lists of unsafe conditions to the Idaho attorney general's office, the schools have tacitly agreed by law to develop plans to fix such problems.

All Idaho public school districts were asked to submit such lists as part of the state's effort to end a long-standing school facilities lawsuit. But only around a third of the state's districts complied, and those that did, did so reluctantly, feeling caught in a Catch-22 situation - or, as Twin Falls Superintendent Terrell Donicht puts it, "Damned if you do and damned if you don't."

If a school district lists unsafe conditions, he said, it then must agree to fix those problems - regardless of whether it has the money - lest the district open itself up to a lawsuit. At the same time, if a district doesn't list characters are really fun. I am just going to enjoy it so much," said Ellie Riley, 10, interviewed on a London school playground as she looked forward to the thick new book - the British edition is 768 pages, the longest yet in the tales of Harry and his pals at Hogwarts School of Witchcraft and Wizardry. (The American edition runs 870 pages, but has the same content.) Harry's latest daring escapades and battles against the evil Lord Voldemort remained beyond reach until 12:01 a.m. today, when the first copies were to go on sale in Britain - with simultaneous launches in Australia, South Africa and New Zealand. The book will be released in the United States beginning at 12:01 a.m. local times.

At London's King's Cross railway station, the bookstore chain WH Smith re-created the gateway to Platform 9 3/4, where Harry, Ron and Hermione catch the magical Hogwarts Express to school. More than 100 of the chain's stores planned to open at midnight, with sleepovers, costume competitions and even professional falcons on hand with owls to give the launch a Hogwarts aura.

Like daylight? Today's your day

TWIN FALLS - Don't let the cool weather fool you - today is the first day of summer, and with that it's the longest day of the year.

The sun rose at 6 a.m. and sets at 9:20 p.m., producing 15 hours and 20 minutes of sunlight. Even then, the northwest horizon should remain lit through a lingering dusk until 11 p.m.

The showers that visited the area Friday were expected to move to the eastern portion of the state. As such, outdoor adventures in south-central Idaho should TUCSON, Ariz. - Summerhaven is what the name suggests: an oasis in the pines, 6,000 feet above and a world away from this desert city.

For the hundreds of thousands in Tucson, it's a treasured escape from triple-digit heat in the summer and a place to throw snowballs or ski in the winter. For the 100 or so who call it home year-round, it's a tight-knit community with a rich history and, even after a devastating wildfire, a future.

Summerhaven lies near the summit of 9,150-foot Mount Lemmon in the Santa Catalina Mountains, which dominate Tucson's northern horizon. Just an hour from most parts town by way of a winding, 30-mile road, it's a popular getaway.

Craig draws editorial scorn

But Air Force dispute won't hurt Idaho in long run, observers say

By Chris Collins
States News Service

WASHINGTON - The New York Times had a beef with U.S. Sen. Larry Craig, R-Idaho. So did the Chicago Tribune, Boston Herald and Cleveland Plain Dealer. A barrage of national media criticism has targeted Craig for stalling the promotion of more than 200 Air Force officers in response to the Pentagon's refusal to deploy four C-130 cargo planes to an Air National Guard base in Boise.

But lucky for Craig, he's not running for president.

"Now and then a member of the House or Senate will do something so obvious that it calls the country's attention to one of the more repugnant aspects of Congress's normal operating procedures," the Times said in a lead editorial. "Now it is Senator Larry Craig."

The Boston Herald ran an editorial under the headline "Sen. Craig's obsession," and the Chicago Tribune said "this appalling case" was only to "assuage one senator's personal pique. This is an astonishing abuse of power."

Other newspapers have lambasted Craig for taking "a stubborn stand," and have called his actions "apparently spiteful" and even "blackmail."

"Craig is acting like a spoiled brat who can't get his way," editorialized the Star-Gazette of Elmira, N.Y.

In Nebraska, the Omaha World Herald said Craig is "taking pettiness to a new level," and the Plain Dealer suggested Craig "should be grounded" and called his actions "extortion." The Cincinnati Enquirer said "Craig was blackmailing the Air Force in the dark shadows."

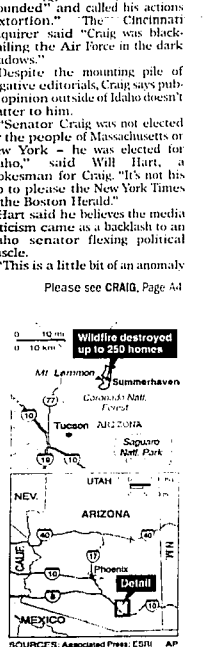

Despite the mounting pile of negative editorials, Craig says public opinion outside of Idaho doesn't matter to him.

"Senator Craig was not elected for the people of Massachusetts or New York - he was elected for Idaho," said Will Hart, a spokesman for Craig. "It's not his job to please the New York Times or the Boston Herald."

Hart said he believes the media criticism came as a backlash to an Idaho senator flexing political muscle.

"This is a little bit of an anomaly" unsafe conditions, then it might appear that all is well when, in fact, it isn't.

Glenns Ferry school officials want to repair their facilities. However, district voters and shut down a $3.4 million bond issue to do that. Castleford, with its 20 percent student poverty rate, has little money in its community to take care of its building problems.

However, in Magic Valley, those two districts appear to be the exception, rather than the rule. Of those Magic Valley school districts that responded to the attorney general's request for lists of unsafe conditions, most said that they had no safety problems. Those that did indicate unsafe conditions listed dates by which they expected to have the problem solved.

Improved facilities

Now in its 15th year, the school facilities lawsuit began with 49 Idaho school districts - several from the Magic Valley - seeking greater state responsibility for repairing or replacing unsafe school facilities.

After all, the districts said, the state constitution says Idaho must provide a "uniform and thorough" education system. At that point, it was difficult for many districts to afford maintenance and upgrades of their buildings.

The Wendell School District - with its condemned school and a community that refused to pay to replace it - was among several Idaho districts to become a sort of national poster child for the problems that schools face.

Things have improved in the last decade. Numerous districts - including Wendell - have been able to pass bond issues to build new facilities and keep their buildings in good shape, taking advantage of a legislative change that provides state funding to pay for interest on bonds. The number of school districts taking part in the lawsuit has since dropped to a dozen or so, and none are from the Magic Valley.

"I do believe we're in excellent shape regarding the condition of our buildings," said Filer Superintendent Bill Foushars, whose district features a relatively new high school.

Murtaugh Superintendent Dennis Osman said the same thing.

The Twin Falls district enjoys high praise from the nearly $600,000 it receives annually from a plant facilities property tax levy that its patrons have approved every 10 years for the last several decades, Donich said.

Still, with Idaho the only state that not only doesn't have a budget for school facilities, but also requires a super-majority of voters to pass bond issues, the state's school districts say it's difficult to repair deteriorating facilities.

"The state is doing all it can to shirk any kind of responsibility," Donich said.

Indeed, the attorney general's office said a recently passed law that suspends the school facilities lawsuit reiterates the philosophy that when it comes to providing safe schools, it's up to the local districts and their patrons to make it happen - not the state.

In the meantime, Attorney General Lawrence Wasden is trying to lure away those districts listed as plaintiffs in the lawsuit, hoping that a solution can be made outside the court system.

And while they're at it, state officials want all other districts to come forth with their problems as well, so that when the new school year opens this fall, all unsafe conditions can either be fixed or at least on their way to correction, said Michael Gilmore, deputy attorney general and lead counsel for the state.

"We want to have a paper trail," Gilmore said. "We want to have an objective set of documents."

That's because the state is likely to soon take uncooperative districts - those that have glaring facilities problems and aren't moving to fix them - to court.

Confusion

Only about half of Magic Valley districts responded to the attorney general's request. Some of the lukewarm response stemmed from some confusion.

"I am not sure what you mean by 'unsafe conditions within your school district,'" wrote District Superintendent Peter Bolt. "I do not know if anyone in my district is qualified to provide a proper analysis of and determination of an undefined 'unsafe condition' item."

Ernest struggled, too, at the definition of "unsafe."

The Glenns Ferry school's roof isn't on the verge of collapse, nor are there exposed live wires. But a leaky roof and old wiring system do create the potential for hazard, she said.

"Are kids in imminent danger? No," Ernest said. "I wouldn't want anyone to think their child is coming into a building that's dangerous."

Then there's the deteriorating parking lot. Ernest herself just slipped on the loose gravel while cutting her car's lawn mower list.

Is that dangerous and need immediate attention? She said she's not sure.

Those that did list items, such as the Shoshone district, simply read off the list of items already found by the state building inspector during his annual inspections, not wanting to add anything else.

Gilmore said "unsafe" can be broken into two categories: imminent and serious.

Imminent danger, such as a sinkhole in the playground which puts students at risk, would require officials to shut down that area immediately. Serious danger is less threatening, and a school district is allowed up to a year to resolve it.

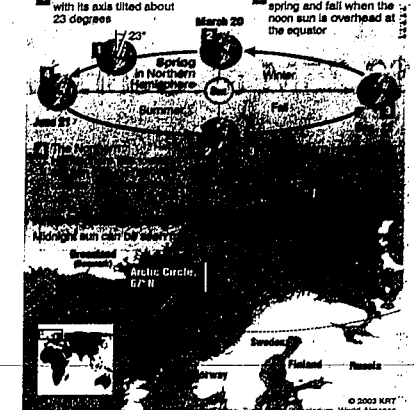

Superintendents unsure of conditions may always turn to the state Division of Building Safety for guidance, Gilmore said.

In addition to the annual state inspections, it's also up to the school districts, per state law, to review its facilities as well.

"To our knowledge that is widely ignored by the districts," Gilmore said.

feel free to spend a full day with little chance of rain, weather forecasters say.

It's just the cooler temperatures - expected to be in the low 70s, nearly 10 degrees below normal - that might bring a summer sensation.

"It's normal in the scheme of things. This happens from time to time," said Jim Murray, meteorologist intern for the National Weather Service in Boise.

Friday's weather, more akin to spring, stemmed from a large mass of cold air from the Pacific Ocean moving into the northwest.

While most of the unstable air should have moved east by this morning - and with it, thunderstorms - the cool weather should stick around for a few more days, beginning a warming trend by the middle of next week.

"The lengthened days are produced by the Earth tilting on its axis, which allows the sun to reach northern latitudes. From here on, the Earth begins slowing its tilt back, bringing with the movement shorter days."

Summer solstice means "sun stands still." That is, the length of the days around the solstice are fairly close in duration. But as the sun begins its southward march toward winter, the rate at which the days shorten increases, gradually slowing again as the first day of winter approaches. The cycle then continues back toward summer.

Craig

because of the perception from newspapers that Idaho is a small state," Hart said. "They think, 'How dare they do this.' But they forget that the Constitution allows this for every senator."

Craig stalled the promotion nearly four weeks ago when the Air Force refused follow through on what Craig called a commitment. The story was first reported by the New York Times after an Air Force official informed a Times reporter.

Hart said the state spent nearly $45 million in upgrades and expansions to the Boise base in anticipation that the Pentagon would deliver the planes. An "undisputed" promise was made in 1996 that the planes would eventually arrive, Hart said.

A spokesman for the Air Force declined to comment on whether such a pledge was made.

There are still 18 officers who are waiting to be promoted to the status of brigadier general or higher, Hart said.

Under Senate rules, senators may put a hold on any nomination made by the president by simply informing their respective party leader. The hold delays a vote indefinitely unless the Senate majority leader forces a vote on the issue.

Usually, the Senate acts as a rubber stamp for most noncontroversial nominations, such as those in the military, but it is not uncommon for senators to use the rule on behalf of their constituents.

Hart said Craig did not make a secret hold on the Air Force officers, as he informed fellow senators in addition to Senate Majority Leader Bill Frist.

"He doesn't believe holds should be secret," Hart said. "But he believes holds are a necessary tool."

A resolution discussed at a Senate Rules and Administration Committee hearing last Tuesday would require holds made by senators to be published in the Congressional Record two days after the hold is placed.

The committee's legislative director, Alex Polanski, said Craig's hold "came up in passing" during the hearing.

Sarah Binder of the Brookings Institute was a witness at the committee hearing and said that Craig's actions will likely not result in any negative long-term effects.

"I don't sense that there will be any senatorial backlash," Binder said. "It's only different because he had the audacity to put holds on so many officers, but senators have a fairly high tolerance of other senators using the rules to their advantage."

Hart said fellow senators from "both sides of the aisle" have expressed support for Craig's tactics.

Sen. Mike Crapo, R-Idaho, expressed support for Craig and said that Craig had "clearly" made his point with the Air Force and is appropriately releasing his holds on the nominees.

"This will ultimately work out for Idaho," Crapo said.

Before making his hold, Craig had held dozens of meetings with Air Force officials, Hart said. Now, after getting the attention of the White House and repeated talks with the secretary of the Air Force, James Roche, a compromise might be in sight.

"The talks are ongoing, and there is limited progress," Hart said. "We hope it will be over soon."

What newspapers are saying in Idaho

Here's what Idaho's major newspapers have said about U.S. Sen. Larry Craig's blockage of Air Force promotions:

• Idaho Press-Tribune, Nampa: Craig's moves are admirable, but his tactics aren't. "We agree with Craig, Idaho needs to keep its military base. But we don't think military officers' promotions should be held hostage. It's a form of blackmail. And we don't like it."

— June 12 editorial

• Idaho Spokesman-Review, Spokane, Wash.: Craig went too far to hold military promotions and do so secretly, but the Air Force is in the wrong too. "The bottom line? Craig should release his prisoners to continue serving their country. And the Air Force should fulfill its promises."

— June 10 editorial

• Idaho State Journal, Pocatello: Craig's tactics are both called for and point-making. "Our congressmen sometimes have to bellow a bit louder to be heard and to achieve adequate representation for their constituents."

— June 12 editorial

• Coeur d'Alene Press: Craig's actions are warranted by unfilled Air Force promises.

"Craig is simply asking the Air Force to live up to its word. In Idaho, a deal is a deal and a man is only as good as his word. Perhaps things are different in Washington."

— June 12 editorial

• The Idaho Statesman, Boise: Although Craig's tactics have received attention, the attention has focused on the dispute and not the real issue of what makes sense for Gowen Field and for the military.

"Craig has made his point. He can continue to make his case for the C-130s. But it's time for him to let all of the Air Force's rising stars get on with their careers."

— June 12 editorial

• Lewiston Morning Tribune: Craig's miscalculated efforts are bound to fail.

"In truth, if Craig were committed to openness, he could have avoided the subterfuge himself, by publicly declaring what he was up to at the outset. Now that the military has done that for him, he says he is 'a little disappointed.' Sure he is."

— June 11 editorial

• Post Register, Idaho Falls: Although Craig's frustration is justified, his tactics are not. "In politics, what goes around comes around. Craig is setting a precedent here — and Idahoans will have to live with the ultimate consequences."

— June 12 editorial

• The Times-News, Twin Falls: Craig's grandstanding isn't weakening military preparedness, and his actions force the Air Force to address how it will honor past commitments to its Idaho air base.

"Craig has a duty to serve the nation as a whole, but he is also Idaho's senator. That means he should watch out for Idaho's interest, even if it pays poorly in The New York Times."

Fires

Summerhaven lies near the summit of 9,150-foot Mount Lemmon in the Santa Catalina Mountains, which dominate Tucson's northern horizon. Just an hour from most parts town by way of a winding, 30-mile road, it's a popular getaway.

Its population swells in the summer and on weekends as people head to cabins, second homes and campgrounds. In all, the mountaintop has about 700 homes, ranging from primitive cabins to pricey residences, a handful of businesses, campgrounds and a one-room school.

"It was an island of beauty and wildness and that's what made it special," said Richard Greenberg, who has had a vacation home there for 18 years. He didn't know his home's fate as he walked around the fire command center at the base of the mountain.

It was Summerhaven's idyllic location, a canyon studded with ponderosa pine, Douglas fir and aspen, that made it so vulnerable. The forest is tinder-dry from years of drought; bark beetles have killed many of the weakened trees.

Last year, a 30,000-acre fire that started far downhill drove relentlessly toward Summerhaven but was stopped a few hundred feet away.

The Aspen fire started in what officials described as the worst possible spot less than two miles downhill in a steep area that offered firefighters little chance of stopping it. Pushed by 60 mph gusts, it surged through a large swath of Summerhaven in about an hour Thursday on its way over the crest of the mountain.

As fire officials briefed residents Friday evening, Lyn Gunther of Tucson wasn't optimistic about her $200,000 cabin, which was nearing completion. She was looking forward to celebrating the holidays there and had just picked out dishes and grout tile when the fire broke out. "My family is just devastated," she said. "My two grandchildren and son were really counting on this."

Jennifer and Bill Richardson said they saw their cabin, which they recently renovated, go up in flames on television. They were downhill when the evacuation order came and couldn't retrieve any belongings, though a neighbor rescued their dog.

"We're not sad," Jennifer Richardson said. "We had our heads around the fact that this could happen any day."

The Richardsons and a few dozen other year-round residents waited for information Friday at a resort hotel that offered a ballroom as an information center and rooms for those needing them.

Les Patterson sobbed as she watched television footage of the devastation.

For those who live there, Summerhaven is a way of life as much as a location, Patterson said. It's a place where Tucson residents and other visitors are called "flatlanders" and where neighbors know each other by name and hold shelling parties when snow falls.

"It's a completely different lifestyle," Patterson said. "That's the one thing that most of us are mourning."

Summerhaven started about a century ago with a homestead. After the Depression, Randolph Jenks bought most of the acreage from the defunct Summerhaven Land and Improvement Co. and added private land through mining claims.

Kerry, Lieberman say they will block anti-abortion court choices

Chicago Tribune

ST. PAUL, Minn. — Democratic presidential candidates John Kerry of Massachusetts and Joseph Lieberman of Connecticut said Friday they would block any Supreme Court nominee who did not vow to uphold the 1973 decision that legalized abortion nationwide.

The U.S. senators made their pledges in separate speeches to Democratic Party leaders at a weekend meeting here.

As the end of the current Supreme Court term approaches, and speculation grows about a possible retirement among the justices, Democrats fear the Bush administration will nominate a conservative judge who could tip the balance and overturn the landmark Roe vs. Wade ruling.

"There are three words that ought to motivate everybody to guarantee that we have maximum output in this election of 2004 and they are simple: the Supreme Court," Kerry said. "If this president tries to send us a nominee to the court who is determined to turn back the clock on the rights of women to choose or the constitutional rights of Americans, I will filibuster that nominee."

While no justice has publicly signaled an intention to step down, court observers speculate that Chief Justice William

Sen. Joe Lieberman

Sen. John Kerry, D-Mass., meets Brian Hawkins of Concord, N.H., Thursday in Newport, N.H., and Heather Stone, left, also of Concord, and Mary Ann Boston of Claremont.

Rehnquist, 78, as well as Justices Sandra Day O'Connor, 73, and John Paul Stevens, 83, are the most likely to retire soon.

"If I feel that President Bush nominates to the Supreme Court a justice that I don't feel is independent or I feel is on an ideological mission or who has basically prejudged cases before they are heard," Lieberman said, "I will either join, or if necessary lead, a filibuster against that nomination."

All nine Democratic presidential hopefuls support abortion rights, but the remarks by Kerry and Lieberman on Friday delivered by satellite from Washington, underscored the degree to which Democrats are prepared to fight a nominee inclined to help overturn Roe vs. Wade.

Interest groups on both sides are bracing for the prospect of a vigorous fight over abortion rights, which Democrats say could help the party win swing voters in the next election. Conservative strategists are hoping to persuade the Bush administration to fill any vacant seat with a justice who opposes abortion rights, while moderate Republicans hope the issue doesn't dominate the 2004 presidential campaign.

Candidate Dean says his son faces burglary charge

MONTPELIER, Vt. (AP) — Democratic presidential candidate Howard Dean said Friday that his 17-year-old son and four other teenagers were cited in a burglary for attempting to steal liquor from a Vermont country club.

Dean, who canceled several campaign appearances, said his son, Paul, and teammates on the high school hockey team apparently were discovered early Friday morning at the Burlington Country Club by a police officer on routine patrol. Dean said it was his understanding that his son would be charged as an accessory.

"Children do stupid things and this is one of them," Dean said in a telephone interview with The Associated Press from a Minnesota airport where he was awaiting a flight back to Vermont.

Art Cyr, a detective in Burlington, Vt., said the incident occurred between 1:30 a.m. and 2 a.m. Friday, when the police officer spotted Paul Dean seated at the wheel of a car near the country club and questioned him, learning that the burglary was in progress.

Suspect shooters' cases go to court

By Sandy Miller
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — Prosecutor Grant Loebs called Mari House to the stand.

The 28-year-old woman limped slowly to the witness stand, her body trembling. She carefully avoided all eye contact with the 22-year-old defendant, Dustin Hunt.

"Why are you limping?" Loebs asked her in the Friday morning preliminary hearing for Hunt.

"I was shot three times in the left leg," she said, her voice quivering.

Hunt and 21-year-old Michael Kral, both of Buhl, were both bound over to District Court on charges of aggravated battery with a weapon enhancement — charges that could bring them 30 years in prison. Kral is also charged with being a felon in possession of a firearm. Each was being held in the Twin Falls County Jail Friday on $1 million bond.

Kral waived his right to a preliminary hearing Friday. His attorney, Tim Williams, explained that although his client is competent, he does have some mental health issues that need to be addressed.

Williams said his client had tried to commit suicide several times.

When asked to identify Hunt, House slowly lifted her arm and pointed her shaking hand at the defendant sitting at the table with his attorney, Bill Hoffield.

House, speaking through tears, went on to tell her side of what happened to her in her home during the early morning hours of May 16.

She testified that Hunt and Kral came to her back door about 1:30 in the morning. The door opened up into her bedroom. She said about 10 to 15 minutes later, she was lying on her stomach on her bed talking to Kral, who was sitting on a couch behind her. Hunt got up and went into the living room. Suddenly she felt pressure on the back of her head. She jumped up and saw Hunt, who was wearing a red sweatshirt, in her living room, which was dimly lit with Christmas lights. She was standing in the doorway of her room when she saw Hunt with a gun and then three flashes of a yellow flame.

Dusty was in the middle of the living room," she said. "He turned around and shot at me."

She said it was the first time she saw either of the two men with a gun.

She said Hunt ran out her front door. Kral had already left.

Hoffield asked her how the gun was pointed at her. She said she didn't know. He asked her if she had heard the gun go off. She said no — her ears were ringing. He asked her if she had taken drugs that day. She said no, but that she had taken only one question for House on his redirect.

How many times, he asked her.

FIRST BOOKS FOR FIRST READERS

Susan Waters, a volunteer with First Book, sorts children's books in the city's warehouse in Twin Falls. The 100,000 books are being distributed to schools and other organizations around the state.

Thousands of books go to local children

By Rachel Hartgen
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — Giving a child the opportunity to read and own a book leaves a person with "warm fuzzies," volunteer Cheryl Leforgee of the Twin Falls Library Foundation said.

Leforgee had just finished four hours of sorting books into boxes for Idaho schools and organizations to pick up Friday.

From "Clifford" to "The Berenstain Bears," more than 100,000 books are being distributed among 50 Idaho schools, organizations, libraries, YMCAs and other organizations. In turn, the book recipients will put new books into the hands of children who might not have ever had their own books.

"There are so many children out there we assume have books," Leforgee said. "This program enables children to have a book of their own."

First Book Event

What: The First Book program, along with U.S. Sen. Mike Crapo, will hold a special ceremony to acknowledge the program and the 100,000 books distributed throughout Idaho. After a brief speech, Crapo will read a short book and award the "Spirit of Idaho" award to Lincoln Elementary School reading volunteer "Grandma" Gay Reese.

to low-income families, has teamed up with Scholastic Books and U.S. Sen. Mike Crapo to bring the program to Idaho for the first time.

Boxes of books filled the Twin Falls City Council's storage facility this week, overflowing their containers. More than 100 local volunteers from all walks of life volunteered to organize the 100,000 books into smaller boxes by age levels, said Heather Tiel of Crapo's Twin Falls office.

"The outpouring of support from this community has been tremendous," Tiel said.

The massive project was completed Thursday evening, just in time for scheduled pickups this weekend.

Late last month, four semi-trucks arrived in Twin Falls with the brand-new books donated to the First Book organization by Scholastic. The books range from beginning reading to adult to books in Spanish.

The Idaho book recipients were then chosen by the First Book application process.

Founded in 1992, First Book is a national nonprofit organization giving children from low-income families the opportunity to read and own new books. First Book seeks to work with existing literacy programs to distribute the new books to children. Within the last two years, First Book has provided almost 15 million new books to children, according to the organization's Web site.

This is the first time Idaho has hosted the program, but Tiel hopes it won't be the last.

"We've had such a great response, we hope to see them back in the future," Tiel said.

Following the book deliveries, a First Book event is scheduled today from 1 to 3 p.m. at the Twin Falls City Council's warehouse, where Crapo, Twin Falls Mayor Lance Clow, Idaho Superintendent of Public Instruction Marilyn Howard, Idaho Education Association President Kathy Phelan, members of First Book and a Scholastic representative are scheduled to be in attendance.

Elmer Kissinger, 69, of Twin Falls, was released from Magic Valley Regional Medical Center, a hospital spokeswoman said.

Kissinger's wife, Lorraine, was killed in the crash, said Shoney Howell, Twin Falls County Sheriff's Office spokeswoman.

Lorraine Kissinger, 66, had been driving a 1995 Mercury Sable about 11 miles south of Nat-Soo-Pah on Shoshone Basin Road when she lost control, Howell said. The car rolled and hit an embankment. The accident was reported at about 3:15 p.m. Thursday, Howell said.

Motorcyclists roar into Elko for jamboree

By Karen Terrell
Times-News correspondent

ELKO, Nev. — Hundreds of motorcyclists are rolling into Elko to take part in this year's jamboree today and Sunday.

Organizers of the event anticipate the crowd will surpass numbers for the two previous years. Vendor spots have been sold out and there will be live music during the day, said Dave Hucksaby, Elko Motorcycle Jamboree Inc. president.

Tonight, Quiet Riot will appear in concert in the downtown parking corridor beginning at 7 p.m.

Last year a large police presence deterred criticism from many attending the jamboree. This year law enforcement is keeping a lower profile while patrolling the downtown area.

Comments from the crowds of people milling around the corridor Friday afternoon were positive and highly supportive of the changes Finding probable cause to believe that a crime was committed and that the defendant committed the act, 5th District Magistrate Judge Kevin Cassidy bound Hunt's case over to District Court. Both Hunt and Kral will be scheduled for arraignment and hearings in about a week, Leeds said.

According to an affidavit filed by Twin Falls police officer Curt Gambrel, at about 1:56 a.m. May 16, Twin Falls police officers Gary Rinehart and Anthony Barnhart were dispatched to the Twin Falls home of House's neighbor, Kirk Rinehart, to check out a report that a woman had been hit with a hammer. They entered the residence and found House lying on the floor, blood on her pants and shirt. Barnhart noticed a wound behind House's head, the affidavit said. Rinehart's friend, Karen Sheets, was also inside Rinehart's residence.

Rinehart explained that House lived in the residence behind him and had come to his door bleeding, asking for help. He said he didn't hear any fighting or noises coming from House's residence, the affidavit said.

House told Rinehart she was attacked in her home by two people, and one of them was Kral, according to the affidavit. House was then taken to Magic Valley Regional by paramedics. Twin Falls police Sgt. Brian Pike and

Rain slows down
Cassia County fires

BURLEY — Mother Nature on Friday helped stop two Cassia County wildfires which had been started the night before.

Rain and high humidity throughout most of the day Friday allowed the 1,500-acre German 12 fire to be contained by 2 p.m., according to Bureau of Land Management Public Affairs Officer Sky Huffaker.

Huffaker said that fire, 12 miles northeast of Rupert, was expected to be under control by 9 p.m. Friday, at which time firefighters would demolish it.

The 115 fire personnel, with 21 engines and two water tenders were at the fire, she said. Originally, BLM personnel had asked for aerial assistance, but the rain prevented the need for an air attack, Huffaker said.

The German 12 fire started around 8 p.m. Thursday.

The Cave Gulch fire, a lightning-caused fire south of Oakley, spread to 8 acres by late Friday afternoon. Containment was expected for 6 p.m. Friday and BLM officials expect the fire to be under control by 6 p.m. today.

Difficult, steep terrain and limited access slowed the fire suppression efforts at the Cave Gulch fire, Huffaker said.

A helicopter dropped water on that fire all day. Some rain also fell on the fire, which is still being fought by a team of firefighters.

Four other fires were reported in southern Idaho Thursday night, all started by lightning strikes.

Cassia County receives drought declaration

BURLEY — An emergency drought designation for Cassia County was authorized Friday by Gov. Dirk Kempthorne.

Cassia County brings to 13 the list of Idaho counties where a drought emergency has been declared.

The drought declaration allows irrigators to work with the Idaho Department of Water Resources to secure temporary water rights and make modifications to existing water rights. The designation is in place until Dec. 31, unless extended or terminated by Water Resources Director Karl Dreher.

According to a press release from Mark Snider, the governor's spokesman, inflow to the Oakley Reservoir is forecast to be 28 percent of average.

The automated snowpack survey equipment on Magic Mountain along the western boundary of the Trapper Creek Basin indicates the lowest snowfall totals since 2000. The snow pack is more than 24 inches below average, resulting in severely restricted irrigation supplies to parts of the county.

The drought declaration was requested by the Cassia County Commission and was approved by Water Resources.

Other counties that have been declared drought emergency areas are Blaine, Bingham, Owyhee, Power, Madison, Lincoln, Fremont, Butte, Clark, Bonanza, Custer and Caribou.

state, providing money for so many buildings would require deep cuts in education programs as well as a large tax increase, Newcomb said.

"You've got to be careful what you ask for, because you might not like the answer," he said.

As such, it's incumbent on the communities to support their schools. And for the most part, they've been doing that.

Since the start of the lawsuit, schools have made great strides, largely because the local patrons have stepped up and approved bond issues. Just in the last few months, Buhl, Camas County and Dietrich school districts ran successful bond elections. The state has stepped in to cover interest on bond payments.

Still, some districts continue to struggle.

Jerome is notorious for its community resistance to support bond issues. Glenns Ferry and Shoshone voters rejected bond issues this year.

Part of the problem might be personality problems between the districts and their patrons, Newcomb said. Part of it might be ineffective campaigns that don't sell a message.

Idaho's requirement for supermajority passage of bond issues means that school districts must appeal to the communities at large, not just the parents within the schools. It's essential to convince the populace that the strength of community is a function of the quality of its schools, Newcomb said.

For those few school districts that truly can't afford to fix their property and repeatedly fail to muster bond issue passage, the new law allows local district judges to step in and authorize "educational necessities" levies, which, in essence, forces local taxpayers to support their schools.

A judge must go through a multi-step process: first, District Attorney General Michael Gidycz must certify that the district is not offering anything above and beyond what the state requires. If so, the district must divert that money from the levy, be it the football team or the cheerleading squad, toward the unsafe condition.

Second, the judge must determine that the school district is using its money efficiently. For instance, a district that spends money to add more teachers than required to lower the teacher-to-student ratio would not be considered to be using money efficiently.

Finally, has the district used all its allowable levies?

If all three criteria are met, the district judge authorizes the levy.

Cassidy took issue with the second paragraph in the story that said "despite the girl's testimony" and the earlier discovery of writings by the man in which he fantasized about forcing girls to have sex with him — the charge was dismissed by Magistrate Judge Kevin Cassidy.

Those writings were described in an April 21 affidavit by a Gooding police officer. But Cassidy said Friday that he told the reporter that none of the information regarding such writings was made part of the record during the April 29 preliminary hearing.

Cassidy also questioned another paragraph in the article that said he "dismissed the case because there wasn't enough evidence," but he refused to discuss the specifics.

Cassidy Friday explained he dismissed the case because there was no substantial and competent evidence on every material element of the crime charged.

"I did not say there was not enough evidence. I quoted the legal standard," he said.

Cassidy said he did not comment on the case because it would be against the Idaho Judicial Canon of Ethics. He said it would be unethical for a judge to comment on any case that could be refiled.

Cassidy explained that he dismissed the Gooding case "without prejudice" which means the prosecutor can refile charges. If the case comes before the same judge, that judge will disqualify himself from hearing the case again. So Cassidy especially had a problem with a quote in the article from Gooding County Prosecutor Phil Brown, who said, "I disagreed with the judge. There was more than enough probable evidence on every material element of the crime charged."

Environmentalists, feds clash over waste

BOISE (AP) - Attorneys for environmental groups and the U.S. Department of Energy clashed over application of the federal nuclear waste disposal law on Friday in a case that could force complete removal of highly radioactive waste from sites in Idaho, Washington and South Carolina.

U.S. District Judge B. Lynn Winnill, who described the written arguments from each side of the dispute as "rather dense" at times, promised a ruling within a month.

The Energy Department wants to mix group with residual material from highly radioactive liquid and sludge dumped into tanks at federal facilities in the three states. The material resulted from reprocessing spent nuclear fuel for bomb construction.

The government claimed the waste is not subject to the law requiring highly radioactive material to be disposed of in an underground dump like the one planned for Yucca Mountain, Nev.

But if the law does apply, the department argued that the material is exempt from the disposal requirements and that the way it intends to handle it will make it no more dangerous than low-level nuclear material.

"You can dispose of that waste in a manner that protects public health and safety," Justice Department attorney Barry Weiner told Winnill.

But Geoffrey Fettes, representing the National Resources Defense Council and the Snake River Alliance, accused the government of trying to downplay the danger of the radioactive material.

"High-level waste should not be a burden to future generations," Fettes said.

The states of Idaho, Washington, South Carolina and Oregon and the Shoshone-Bannock Tribes filed briefs in support of the environmental groups.

As much as 100 million gallons of material were stored over the years in 239 tanks in the three states.

EPA revises Yellowstone pollution data upwards

YELLOWSTONE NATIONAL PARK, Wyo. (AP) - The Environmental Protection Agency says a new plan allowing for continued use of snowmobiles in Yellowstone and Grand Teton national parks may cause more pollution than expected.

EPA officials, in a recent letter to the National Park Service, detailed "remaining concerns" about the plan, which has yet to be finalized but could take effect this winter.

Among other things, the EPA said the Park Service should set "hard limits" on emissions from the cleaner, quieter snowmobiles that would be allowed into the parks each day.

"There's still an opportunity to have some substantive comments considered," wrote Cindy Cody, director of the National Environmental Policy Act program in the EPA's regional office in Denver. "The earlier the better for them to start work on (the suggestions) now."

Park officials, in a review of the plan, said they used computer models to help predict the effects of the machines. They said the modeling may have underestimated the level of hydrocarbons and carbon monoxide that could be released by snowmobiles.

"The impacts might be less than what might occur," said John Sacklin, Yellowstone's chief planner. "We acknowledge that in our documents, it's clear to everyone as they read it."

But he noted that the plan allows for changes, if necessary. The EPA said more emissions than expected could create haze in parts of the park and affect human health. It is asking the Park Service to set limits on how high emission levels can get before changes are made. Under the plan, the superintendent has discretion in deciding whether to make adjustments.

Park officials have called the snowmobile plan an appropriate balance between the current, virtually unlimited access for snowmobiles and a ban that was called for during the Clinton administration.

Kimberly trims spots for teachers

By Margaret Jones
Times-News correspondent

KIMBERLY - To help balance next year's school budget, the Kimberly School Board is eliminating one teaching position and leaving one unfilled.

First year high school math and science teacher Curt Marschner will not be rehired for the coming year. Third grade teacher Sue Claiborn is moving to Fairfield and has resigned, and the district will not replace her.

Enrollment has dropped from last year and if enrollment remains the same, school officials say the two teaching positions will not be necessary.

The school board approved the district budget of $6,570,167 for the 2003-04 school year during Thursday's board meeting, a $6,015 decrease from this year due to reduced state funding. The district did have some carryover to make up the reduction.

In other school board business this week:

- Old bus - Board members voted to call for a retired 71 passenger 1985 GMC bus. Interested buyers can leave their bids with the district office located in the intermediate elementary building on Center Street.

- Athletic budget - The board accepted an athletic budget of $47,000 prepared by athletic director George Armosa. The athletic program is funded with gate receipts from ball games and is used primarily for officials, scorekeepers, ticket takers and supplies.

- Health contract - The board approved a $3,075 contract with the South Central District Health Department for nursing and educational services.

- Meeting - On July 17 the board will select a board chairman, vice chairman, treasurer and clerk and will set meeting dates for the coming year.

- Recognition - Dr. Jim Wright, who is retiring as board chairman and 12-year board member, was honored with a plaque and cake.
- Homecoming - Homecoming week will be Sept. 29-Oct. 3. The visiting team will be Gooding with the barbecue at 5 p.m. on Oct. 2 followed with the game at 7 p.m.

LOST CAUSE

Crews from Corona de Tucson and Three Points Fire Department attempt Thursday to put out a large pile of felled trees that was behind a home on Sabino Canyon Road in an effort to save it.

Crews saw trouble early

TUCSON, Ariz. (AP) - Firefighters knew when they saw the flames they had little chance of stopping a wildfire before it swept through a mountain-top vacation hamlet, destroying 250 homes, a top fire official said Friday.

"By the time this thing ignited, it was pretty much a foregone conclusion this thing was going to go where it wanted to go," said Larry Humphrey, commander of the fire team battling the Aspen blaze on Mount Lemmon.

Winds up to 60 mph drove the fire through dry pine country and up the streets of Summerhaven in about an hour Thursday, reducing some homes to smoking rubble while leaving others untouched.

On Friday, firefighters moved through the community's charred streets, digging lines to protect what was left of Summerhaven - which had an estimated 700 homes and cabins and a handful of businesses before the blaze - and to defend outlying homes and transmitter towers.

Crews were also clearing out vegetation from around a nearby observatory, and were prepared to burn around the area if the fire approached.

By late afternoon, the fire made a run toward some of the homes firefighters were defending and the towers, but it wasn't clear whether it had damaged any structures, officials said.

Air tankers were kept on the ground Friday afternoon because of high winds.

Humphrey said he expects the fire, which had grown to about 3,200 acres by Friday, to eventually burn tens of thousands of acres because there is no good place to stop it. Humphrey said more homes could also be lost in Summerhaven.

Improving space remains focus for Jerome library

By Dixie Thomas Reale
Times-News correspondent

JEROME - The question of what to do with a $950,000 gift undoubtedly generates a great wish list.

On Thursday, discussion focused on the need for more space and more resources at the Jerome Municipal Library.

Around 20 people attended a public forum in the high school auditorium to exchange ideas concerning a possible library expansion.

The gift was made possible by Evelyn Crowder, a lifelong school teacher who died in 2001 and bequeathed $950,000 each to Jerome schools and the city of Jerome to be used on libraries.

Jan Babcock, a member of the Crowder advisory committee and a library board member, said Crowder had requested the money be used for the purchase of books, computers or programs for use by the public. The money could be used to construct or expand the library or to establish programs that would benefit the public, especially children.

Con Paulos said he was a good friend of Crowder and thought she would want the money left intact. The library board could use the revenue generated from the investment of the money to make payments on loans and leave the original amount alone.

The money earns around $40,000 a year right now, Babcock said.

Toni Henderson suggested the library needed a larger community room that also had a piano for music programs.

Carolyn Lowder wants a larger variety of books. She said she was surprised that Jerome was not connected with other libraries for interlibrary loans.

Babcock said libraries have changed over the years. Libraries are now the heart of the community where people meet and gather.

The Jerome library runs a lot of children's programs and 200 children regularly attend. But space is limited, so children must sit outside on the grass. If the programs are to continue, the library needs more space, said Bill Allred, library board chairman.

Among the board's interests:

- The children's area is too small and needs to be expanded and have windows on the southeast. It needs to be well-lit with open space to allow for reading areas and space for the reading programs. An area is also needed for children's computers.

- Power and network connections for laptop computers should be installed in several areas of the library to encourage people to bring in their own laptop computers.

- Staff needs both public and private work areas.

- Several cozy reading areas could be located throughout the library.

- The library needs a peaked roof. The flat roof has presented problems in the past. It has been repaired several times and is leaking.

Allred said he wants to hire an architect to start to get started soon on designs to present to the community, the City Council and the ad hoc committee.

City attorney Rob Williams said the city would have the final say as to what is done with the library.

Filer drops coaching, library positions

By John E. Swayze
Times-News correspondent

FILER - The school district has eliminated a few coaching and library positions and taken other steps to help cope with $300,000 in funding cuts.

The School Board on Wednesday heard concerns from faculty and approved an $8.6 million budget for the 2003-2004 school year.

"Most of those cuts were in curriculum from the previous year," said business manager Justin Lanning.

The budget cuts have forced reductions in staff and funding for several programs, including:

- Administrative training funds have been reduced from $55,000 to $3,412.
- "Our principals got together and voted to take a cut here rather than take a hit in the textbook budget," said Superintendent William Fessalans.

- Elimination of assistant librarian positions at Filer and Hollister elementary schools.

- The elimination of two football and one track coach positions will save the district $5,000.

Some positive points in the budget were $50,000 in revenue from the state lottery and an 80 percent reimbursement from the state on the district's $314,034 transportation budget.

Fourth-grade teacher Alton Patrick said she understands that budget conditions can change, and she left the board with some advice.

"Elementary education provides the building blocks for education, and without them students won't need our fancy high school and programs," she said. "You need to come and see us before any changes are made."

In other business, board member Lyndia Gwyn was recognized Wednesday for her work as the district's zone two representative. She is stepping down after filling a one-year vacancy left by Gary Davis in 2002.

Andrea Hoffland, the zone's new representative, was elected on May 1. Her three-year term will begin next month.

The board scheduled a public hearing to discuss increasing the Associated Student Body athletic fee from $45 to $60 for students who participate in school sports.

Superintendent Fessalans said that cuts in the general fund have created the need for an increase.

The hearing will be at 6:45 p.m. on July 16 in the Filer Elementary School library.

A date for the 2004 graduation has been set for 7:30 p.m. Monday, May 24, in the College of Southern Idaho gymnasium.

Cassia wind turbine OK'd in close vote

By Shari Chaney
Times-News writer

BURLEY - The vote was close, but Cassia County resident Jeffrey Mitchell received approval to build a wind turbine on his property at 70 E. 300 S.

By a 4-3 vote, the Cassia County Planning and Zoning Commission approved Mitchell's plan. Board members Dee Yeaman, Joyce Ward, Rod Lake and Vaughn Cook voted in favor of Mitchell's proposal.

Commission members Bruce Beck, Randy Robinson and Clayne Zeilinger Jr. voted "no."

Several conditions were placed on Mitchell's conditional-use permit for a turbine which can't be taller than 160 feet.

Mitchell must take down the turbine if he stops using it or moves, Cassia County Administrator Kerry McMurray said. Lake said conditions should reiterate the board approved a single turbine for personal use only.

Children, and others, should be kept away from the base of the turbine, Ward said, perhaps with a fence.

Mitchell should have a contract in place to sell the power, Beck said, and show he has insurance to cover a wind turbine.

Board members will review the findings of fact on the issue, which McMurray prepares, at their July 17 meeting.

Utah's Dugway shifts focus to defensive mission

DUGWAY PROVING GROUND, Utah (AP) - The U.S. Army used this Rhode Island-sized military zone for decades to perfect some of the most awful weapons of war, once blasting mountain caves with nerve gas to simulate an attack on holed-up Japanese troops.

But times and Dugway's mission have changed at this testing ground 65 miles southwest of Salt Lake City. Now the mostly civilian work force is perfecting various defenses against chemical and germ warfare - work that has taken on urgency with fears of more terror attacks on U.S. soil.

Battlefield sensors and charcoal-lined soldier suits are tested at Dugway, which also trains the National Guard teams taking responsibility for responding to lethal domestic attacks.

As recently as the 1991 Persian Gulf war, "we just didn't have any good detectors," said Army microbiologist Jeff Mohr, who runs Dugway's heavily guarded Life Sciences laboratory, responsible for countering the threat of nasty pathogens.

"In the last 13 years we've made remarkable strides in detecting" chemical and biological agents before they can take a toll on military troops, he said.

Dugway has a separate chemical lab that tests new generations of gas masks, protective suits, shelters and a lightweight, hand-held detector that has yet to be released to soldiers.

In evaluating different fabrics that promise to make chemical suits more comfortable, durable and fire- and water-resistant, "The Army is eager to improve its suits," said Steven Brimhall, chief of Dugway's chemical lab, which stores the lethal stuff behind a double-padded, heavy steel door.

In their most promising device yet, scientists are developing a laser-beam detector to scan the horizon for distant chemical agents and biological particles. And Dugway is deploying an eight-wheeled Stryker personnel carrier outfitted with the latest gear that can move into a chemical zone and take samples for immediate testing.

"This is serial No. 1," said Brad Rowland, a chemist and technical director, showing off the first modified Stryker, which looks like a glorified SUV. It is undergoing field tests until November.

In 1995, Dugway narrowly escaped a round of military base closures. Now it has a fast-growing, $130 million budget.

A testing area waits for trainees to learn how to handle chemical and biological situations June 11. In a remote area of the Dugway Proving Ground in Utah. At left, a sample of lethal GB nerve agent is transferred from a locked storage room in the Combined Chemical Test Facility.

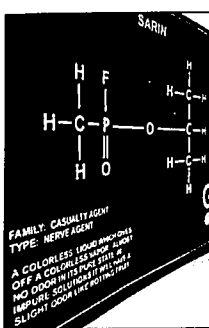

"A lot of it has to do with world events," said Commander and Col. Gary Harter, 45, who joined the Army as a chemical corps officer in 1980 and is midway through a two-year stint as Dugway commander. "Now these programs are reaching maturity."

Dugway also is experimenting with some of the world's most sophisticated weather-monitoring systems and computers. They can plot the flow of gases over urban and mountainous terrain under various wind conditions. Salt Lake City was the site of one overnight experiment using a harmless gas before the 2002 Winter Olympics.

"The content of vertical mixing" of the gas with atmospheric winds "was much more than we expected," chief Dugway meteorologist James Bowers said. His division also provides weather reports for military bombing ranges across the West.

The Army established Dugway in 1942 to counter the chemical and biological threat of Japan and Germany, and later, the Soviet Union.

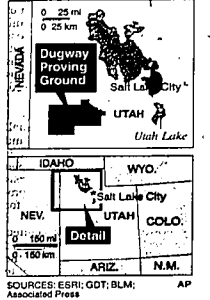

"The Russians were capable of making 2 tons of dry anthrax a week at the height of their program," said Mohr, who served as a

U.N. weapons inspector in Iraq in the early 1990s. Over a restricted military zone of 1,300 square miles, bordered by an even larger bombing range, Dugway historically experimented with weapons ranging from incendiary bombs to all kinds of chemical and biological agents, including botulinum, brucellosis, anthrax, bubonic plague, and tularemia. "Dugway is a good place where you get lots of space to practice," Brimhall said.

Harter said Dugway hasn't released a live agent outdoors since 1968, when a mist of VX nerve agent killed a reported 6,400 sheep in nearby Skull Valley. The mishap was blamed on a stuck valve on an F-4 Phantom fighter testing an airborne sprayer.

Leader blasts feds for bypassing tribe in nuke issue

FORT HALL (AP) - The outgoing leader of eastern Idaho's Shoshone-Bannock Tribes blasted top federal Energy Department officials for failing to make definitive agreements on transporting nuclear waste across the reservation.

Blaine Edmo said nothing ever came of the general understanding that the tribes would on an equal footing with the rest of the region under terms of the 1995 agreement then-Gov. Phil Batt struck with the department for cleaning up waste at the Idaho National Energy and Environmental Laboratory.

"All of the economic opportunity afforded to the shipping agreement between Governor Batt and the DOE has never reached Fort Hall," Edmo told Bill Magwood, director of the department's Office of Nuclear Energy, Science and Technology, and INEEL director Beth Sellers.

The two federal officials met with the tribal council for 90 minutes on Thursday. "Every one of these communities around us has received some kind of opportunities that we have not," Edmo said. "That's why I get back to partnership and participation. We need to see some real demonstration that that's what is taking place. It's easy to talk about it, but let's see if we can get something done."

The tribes temporarily disrupted a federal waste shipment across the Fort Hall Reservation on Oct. 25, 1995, shortly after Batt signed the cleanup agreement. The tribes were skeptical that the government would fulfill its part of the bargain.

Magwood tried to assure tribal leaders that the Energy Department wanted them involved in the INEEL's new responsibility as the nation's leading nuclear energy research facility.

"We have the opportunity to provide some new benefits and opportunities to the Shoshone-Bannock Tribes in perhaps some more creative ways than have been thought about before," he said.

The specifics of a formal agreement with the tribes will be worked out in coming months, Magwood said.

Hundreds of sheep die after eating toxic plants

SODA SPRINGS (AP) - More than 300 sheep grazing near a former phosphate mine died last month after eating plants contaminated with selenium, a waste product from mining.

The sheep were part of a two-year study sponsored by the University of Idaho and the J.R. Simplot Co. to determine how animals react to selenium in the environment.

The sheep were grazing by the now-defunct Conda phosphate mine, which is owned by Simplot.

Scientists blamed a plant called Curlycup, Gunweed, which absorbs high levels of selenium from the soil. Selenium is a naturally occurring element that is toxic in high levels.

Greg Moller, University of Idaho associate professor of environmental toxicology, said researchers did not anticipate the deaths.

"There's no doubt there's tragedy here. This was not planned," Moller said. "Last summer, the research team gave 72 sheep varying levels of selenium in vegetation and water, and only one elderly sheep died, Moller said. They allowed the 1,400-animal band to graze in the mining area beginning May 19 this year. By May 25, the sheep began to die.

Preliminary tests show the Curlycup Gunweed plants had selenium levels about 40 times the recommended maximum. Simplot spokesman Rick Phillips said researchers did not include the plant in their earlier tests.

"Gunweed wasn't even on the radar," Phillips said.

The Conda mine was opened in 1906. Simplot bought the mine in the 1960s and closed it in the 1970s. Because mining guidelines were less stringent in the past, Phillips said, the contaminated soil is probably near the surface.

Phillips said the research was a breakthrough. "It's shocking to see so many sheep die, but we're learning so much more than we did before," Phillips said.

The sheep owners will be reimbursed. In 2001, more than 150 sheep died from selenium poisoning in the Conda mine area. In 1996, horses in the region died from selenium poisoning.

Democrats should sift out weaker candidates

In the old days of vaudeville, when an act was laying an egg there was a guy with a long-handled cane who would hook it around the neck of a hapless performer and drag him off the stage to spare him further embarrassment and relieve the audience of further pain.

Regrettably, there is no such useful person standing in the wings of the 2004 Democratic primary campaign to weed out from the ranks of the hopefuls the sad collection of bogus presidential pretenders who have turned the party's nomination contest into a combination of a goofy amateur hour and a sublimated perp walk.

ROSS K. BAKER

But it can be done. The Democrats must start tossing candidates overboard to have a fighting chance to defeat George W. Bush next year.

The contenders

There are a bare half-dozen quality candidates among the nine Democratic hopefuls. These are people who have held significant offices and who have performed creditably in those positions and, consequently, have some claim on an office with the awesome burdens the presidency entails. A President Dick Gephardt or a President Joe Lieberman are not too difficult to imagine. Likewise, a John Kerry or a Bob Graham could also be pictured in the Oval Office. These are four men who, by length and distinction of service, cannot easily be dismissed.

Missouri's Gephardt, who tried unsuccessfully for the nomination in 1998, has had a long and distinguished career in the House of Representatives, beginning in 1977 and culminating in his accession to the post of minority leader in 1995.

Lieberman, the unsuccessful vice presidential candidate in 2000, is a respected member of the Senate from Connecticut. John Kerry, in the Senate since 1985, has always struggled to get out from under the long shadow cast by his Massachusetts colleague, Ted Kennedy, but his distinguished war record and his service on the Foreign Relations Committee have marked him as a person with an intelligent global perspective.

The entrance of Florida's Graham, which was delayed by a multiple-bypass heart operation, brings into the field one of the most thoughtful members of the Senate and a genuine expert on strategic intelligence. He has emerged as one of the most effective critics of the president's Iraq policy.

The pretenders

A more unconventional candidate is former Vermont Gov. Howard Dean. His tiny New England state is not a very auspicious base for a presidential candidate, and Dean himself is a person of some notable contradictions.

While governor, he enjoyed the support of the National Rifle Association and was reviled by Vermont liberals for his fiscal conservatism. Now, however, he is the darling of the party's left wing for his strong stand against the Iraq war.

While Howard Dean is out of a job, Dennis Kucinich actually has one, representing Ohio's 10th Congressional District. Kucinich, whose anti-war position was even more categorical than Dean's, espouses a politics more consistently liberal than Dean's. While serving as mayor of Cleveland in 1977, he allowed the city to default on its obligations rather than sell city utilities to his creditors demanded. Defeated in 1979, he spent several years wandering in the political wilderness before being elected to Congress in 1996. Having plunged his city into bankruptcy, he offers himself as the person to solve the vastly greater problems of an entire nation.

The effort by former Illinois Sen. Carol Moseley Braun can only be characterized as quixotic. Her brief period of heroism was gained in 1993 by scuttling Sen. Jesse Helms' effort to extend the copyright protection for the insignia of the United Daughters of the Confederacy. In few other areas did she distinguish herself and, in most, demonstrated that she could be politically clueless and ethically obtuse. She was defeated for re-election in 1998.

Sen. John Edwards of North Carolina is not so much an improbable candidate as he is a presumptuous one. He had served less than two-thirds of his term before being attacked by severe acute respiratory syndrome. His principal distinction in adult life has been as a plaintiffs' attorney in tort cases in which he was able to wring huge verdicts out of sympathetic jurors. So detached from politics was Edwards that he could not remember whether he was registered as a Democrat or a Republican. It mattered little, however, because he rarely bothered to vote. Edwards' haste to advance to the White House on his slender credentials is unseemly.

The hopeless

The candidacy of the Rev. Al Sharpton adds a squalid note of dishonor to the field of hopefuls. Unrepentant traducer of an innocent young attorney in the notorious Tawana Brawley case, Sharpton has experienced a perverse exaltation courtesy of some journalists who are amused by his epigrams. One searches in vain throughout history to find a claimant for the nomination of a major party so utterly sullied by his own words — unless it is Pat Buchanan.

“It seems that defunct politicians, rabble-rousers and other wanna-bes now use the Democratic primary as a kind of Goodyear blimp to advertise their dubious wares.”

But to say that the field needs to be thinned requires us to ask the question, “Does this large crop of aspirants have more bogus acts than those of years past?” The answer is, resoundingly, yes.

It seems that defunct politicians, rabble-rousers and other wanna-bes now use the Democratic primary as a kind of Goodyear blimp to advertise their dubious wares. The party leaders oblige them by taking them seriously, including them in debates where they consume time better devoted to those with serious resumes and plausible chances of winning a general election. It is a measure of the feebleness of party leaders and their fear of alienating any party constituency that the bit players are not banished to the sidelines.

It is, however, to the discredit of the Liebermans, Gephardts, Kerrys and Grahams that they do not challenge the ego-trippers. Their willingness to confer legitimacy on these misbegotten candidates invites voters in November 2004 to judge these serious candidates by the company they kept in 2003.

Bush's Rx plan has a Clintonian edge

As George W. Bush looks ahead to his election campaign, he is taking a page out of Bill Clinton's book.

The political book that is Bush is doing so by supporting the Senate's bipartisan compromise plan to help seniors pay for the soaring cost of prescription drugs, accepting a costly new federal program despite some objections from his conservative political base.

It is reminiscent of the way Clinton accepted a welfare reform bill in 1996, despite denunciations from many Democratic liberals.

The goal, in both cases, was for the president to get credit for becoming a campaign plodger and a long-standing goal of his political opposition.

White House strategists clearly hope that passage of the prescription drug measure, now widely anticipated within weeks, will remove a top Democratic issue from next year's election agenda, just as they hoped to reduce the long-standing Democratic advantage on education by enacting the president's “No Child Left Behind Bill.”

Of course, neither the drug nor the education measure can achieve its promised goals by next year. The prescription drug bill won't take effect until 2006, and many states will take nearly that long to implement education reform.

Besides, both Senate and House versions of the drug bill have gaps in benefits that could reduce the relief that many seniors need from soaring drug costs. They also fail to include the reforms Mr. Bush once said were necessary to preserve Medicare. As a result, they will do little to ease the inevitable fiscal crisis when the retirement of baby boomers increases pressures on the Social Security and Medicare programs.

Similarly, despite repeated efforts by Bush and top aides to hail the administrative progress of his education plan, it already is increasing financial and regulatory burdens on the states, in part because the administration has refused to seek the funds that the initial legislation promised.

But the Bush administration displayed less concern about budget problems than any Republican administration with memory, despite severe problems in many states and a federal deficit that is soaring toward a record $400 billion this year.

Why worry? The bulk of these problems won't hit until after Bush faces the voters in 2004. It all suggests that the president and his top adviser's (spell that, K-A-R-L, R-O-V-E) are at least as interested in dealing with the politics of major issues as in dealing with their substant issues. In other words, get potential Democratic issues off the table for 2004 — and deal with the consequences later.

That's true for areas beyond prescription drugs and education.

For example, even some economists favorable to the administration question whether the latest tax cuts will do much to boost an economy that has lost a record number of jobs since Bush took office. But they starve federal programs and put Democrats on the defensive by forcing them into a corner where the GOP can label any proposal to scale back the cuts as a Democratic tax increase.

A similar pattern exists abroad.

The war against terrorism might not have found Osama bin Laden, though it overthrew Afghanistan's Taliban regime. The war against Iraq might not have eliminated Saddam Hussein, though it erased his government.

Chaos reigns in both countries. Weapons of mass destruction remain on the missing-in-action list. And neither undertaking has guaranteed that Americans will be safe from the scourge of terrorism nor brought long-term stability to the Middle East.

But those ventures have given Bush the aura of a strong leader and left Democrats in danger of being labeled as weak on national security if they question any aspect of the administration's position, including its claims of success.

In due course, Americans will have to decide whether the policies pushed by Bush are as successful as the policies that have helped to inspire them. At this stage, there is considerable room for doubt.

A few months ago, actor and Idaho resident Bruce Willis, a prominent spokesman for reforming the foster care system, reached out to Sen. Larry Craig, R-Idaho, for help in highlighting the issue. Willis is co-chair of the Congressional Coalition on Adoption.

Craig's office started working on the matter, putting together a meeting last week in Senate Majority Leader Bill Frist's office, followed by a press conference with other lawmakers and a screening of the new movie, “Rugrats Go Wild.” Willis is the voice of Spike the dog — for foster kids and members of Congress and their families.

At some point a couple of days before the event, Sen. Hillary Rodham Clinton, D-N.Y., showed up on the attendance list, apparently invited by Frist. So the press conference was had and the attendance was substantial. Willis spoke, Craig spoke, coalition co-chair Sen. Mary Landrieu, D-La., spoke and Frist spoke. Clinton and a number of senators stood behind the speakers.

Then word spread on the Hill of Clinton's press release announcing the event: “Senator Hillary Rodham Clinton (D-N.Y.) and Senator Bill Frist will hold a press conference following a meeting with Bruce Willis, national spokesman for Children in Foster Care.”

Clinton and Frist holding a press conference? Well, Idaho is a small state and Craig doesn't have a book to promote. Umbrage was taken, we hear.

Perhaps it takes a village to run a good foster care program. After all, it takes four C-130s for the Idaho Air National Guard to get any military officers promoted.

Goodbody wins Jr. Olympics heptathlon

BOISE — It's hard to keep up with Wendell junior-to-be Jaynie Goodbody.

On the track, that is.

Goodbody set a state record with 4,125 points in the girls 15-16-year-old heptathlon Friday, winning the USA Track and Field Junior Olympics two-day event at Timberline High School in Boise.

Goodbody shattered the previous meet record of 3,972 points set by Homedale's Jessica Zaticca in 1997.

Megan Perner of Centennial took second behind Goodbody with 3,888 points.

Goodbody advances to the Junior Olympics regional meet next Thursday and Friday in Butte, Mont. A win there qualifies her for the national meet July 29-30 in Miami.

Goodbody won four of the heptathlon's seven events, which are the 100-meter hurdles, high jump, shot put, 200-meter dash, long jump, javelin and 800-meter run.

She won the 200, 800, javelin and shot put events. She ran the 200 in 25.40 seconds, the 800 in 2 minutes, 35.4 seconds and the 100 hurdles in 16.5. She long jumped 4.8 feet, 5 inches and high jumped 4.8. She threw the 8-pound, 13-ounce shot 34.25 feet and the javelin 90.2.

Her father, Steve Goodbody, credited Goodbody coaches Jeff Jeffries, Kent Seifert and Jack Nelson and Bliss coach Nick Smith, a former decathlete at Idaho, with helping prepare his daughter for the meet.

Goodbody successfully defended her 100- and 200-meter state dash championships in May.

Larson resigns as Wood River hoops coach

HAILEY — Wood River boys basketball coach Jeff Larson resigned Thursday to take a job in Washington state.

"Jeff is just an awesome, awesome guy and we wish him all the best," Wood River athletic director Ron Martinez said.

Martinez has some interesting options to fill the position, with John Boatwright and John Kildford recently hired on to coach at Wood River.

"Boatwright graduated from Mexico in 1970, played for Utah State and professionally in Europe for nine seasons. Kildford has coached at the junior college level in the past. And, finally, Wood River volleyball coach Tim Richards is experienced in basketball."

Wood River also promoted assistant coach Dan Martin as head football coach to replace John Blackman, Martinez said.

Filer cowgirl has shot at breakaway buckle

By Joe Paisley
Times-News writer

POCATELLO — A week of rodeoing comes down to one final performance for Filer cowgirl Andrea Sparks and other athletes entered in the Idaho High School Finals Rodeo.

The top 20 competitors in each event advanced to this morning's final go at the Bannock County Fairgrounds in Pocatello with buckles, saddles and berths in the national finals on the line. Action begins at 11:15 a.m.

High school state rodeo

Sparks knows what it will take to qualify for the breakaway nationals competition after she followed up Tuesday's outstanding time of 2.85 seconds with a solid 3.23 Friday night.

Consider that another cowgirl recorded a time of 2.88 seconds but broke the rope barrier Friday morning and you get an idea how good Sparks' time was Tuesday morning.

"I really pushed the barrier on the first one," Sparks said.

The 2003 Sixth District All-Around cowgirl is hopeful she can win the state buckle, but like most top competitors has nationals on her mind as well.

"If I catch all three, I go to nationals," Sparks said. "But I want to win state because nationals are real tough."

The state all-around title isn't out of her reach either after a strong barrels run earlier in the week. She joins Gooding's Italy Jo Eames as two area cowgirls in the running for the big buckle.

The Saturday entrants were announced after The Times-News' press time late Friday night. Megan Lewis of Filer should advance in breakaway roping as well after a time of 4.23 seconds in the first Friday performance.

Another area competitor awaiting last night's announcement was Gooding cow-boy Cliff Toome who followed up Tuesday's

Gettin' it ship shape

Local family prepares for annual Idaho Regatta

By Scott Thompson
Times-News writer

DECLO — Get your motor running.

Boat racers from all around the country are starting that rally cry as they prepare for the 28th annual Idaho Regatta in Burley, which starts next Thursday.

Nene know more than the Moyle family about what it takes to get a boat ready for the race. Local Don Moyle is one of the race's co-founders and has been a big part of the previous 27 editions of the event.

So, if the Moyle race team looked completely ambivalent to the fact that they didn't have the headers on their boat, "Wildfire," Thursday with racing just days away, it's because they've been there, done that.

"That's just a minor little part, isn't it?" it was asked.

And everybody laughed uproariously at the team camp between Burley and Declo.

Just a few years ago, the Moyles worked late into the nights and into the early mornings replacing a blown engine during leading up to the Regatta.

"We raced that year, though," Don said, proudly.

So, what's a missing header on order from California by, "snail

Ready to Regatta?

The Idaho Regatta gets up and running Thursday, with the Show and Shine showcase around the Rupert Square from 5-8 p.m. upstairs at Doc's Pizzeria. A trout dinner will be served from 6-8 p.m. on the square.

The annual parade goes around downtown Burley Friday beginning at 10 a.m., followed by practice runs from 11 a.m. to 5 p.m. A shootout will follow after 5 p.m.

Races resume at 11 a.m. Saturday, running to approximately 5 or 6 p.m. The highlight will be the Crockett national championship.

A party will be at the parking lot at the Burley Inn from 8 p.m. to 2 a.m.

Races again heat up Sunday at 11 a.m., running until 5 p.m.

Race organizers expect 50 to 60 boats, which is about the same as last year's turnout.

"mail?" as Moyle crew chief Shane Kloor put it.

Of course, it's probably comforting to know that their backup headers — on loan from friend and rival Glen Dilworth — were on the boat when the Moyle team won in Parker, Ariz., earlier this year.

Since the Moyles already ran this year, they don't have that much work to do on the boat.

"Other than general maintenance, there isn't a lot of work required," said Mark Moyle, who has taken over driving duties from his father.

The Moyles will lean down the jets and carburetors on the engine since it was set-up for sea level in Arizona. With much less oxygen in the air at 4,200 feet here on the Snake River, they will need to make that change.

"I thought about leaning down the driver too but that didn't go over very well with him," Mark said. "So, I abandoned that."

Even though the Moyles say there isn't a lot of work to do to prepare the boat, they have a six-person pit crew.

How many are useful, though? "About two," Mark Moyle said, looking at his father and Kloor.

"Even the driver, you better keep your eye on him, too."

It seems to have been a smooth transition, putting Mark behind the wheel instead of his father.

"I'm not as sore," Don said. "I have as much fun watching as I do driving."

Mark isn't so sure.

"I would think it would be hard on him, racing for 30 years," he said. "And then just watching."

Don admits he's constantly giving advice — even during the race from the shore when his son has no chance of hearing him. "I'm always saying, 'Go faster' or 'Go slower' or..." he said before interrupting his own thought. "Maybe we should get a radio."

“ We know this course. There's not a lot of surprises. We let the guys from out of town practice.

"I could always unplug it," Mark said, smiling.

The Moyle's race in the Competition Jet class, which is making a resurgence around the country after dwindling to just a few craft — almost all of them from south central Idaho.

"It almost became an Idaho class," Mark said. "Because my dad got into it, a lot of his friends got into it."

In this year, there will be four locals racing in the comp jet class — the Moyle's, Burley's Dilworth,

Ibrahim, 26 others withdraw from NBA draft

By Kevin Hall
Times-News writer

College of Southern Idaho center Sani Ibrahim pulled his name from consideration for Thursday's NBA draft.

But that doesn't mean he's returning for his sophomore year at CSI.

Ibrahim is in Sarasota, Fla., working on his game and trying to relax after a tireless month saw him work out with several NBA teams and attend the three-day NBA pre-draft camp in Chicago.

And with former CSI assistant coach Jay Cyriac, who recruited Ibrahim last season, off to Chicago Sunday to begin a new position as director of basketball operations at DePaul University, Ibrahim has more reason to stay back East.

"He's kind of torn because I'm not going to be there but he said he would think about it for the next couple of weeks," said Cyriac, who spoke to Ibrahim by phone on Tuesday.

Ibrahim most likely would transfer to another junior college or play in Europe next season before making another attempt at the NBA.

A call to Ibrahim was not immediately returned Friday.

Ibrahim averaged 14.6 points and 11.0 rebounds for CSI last season. He worked out for NBA teams Memphis, Atlanta, Denver, Chicago and Detroit.

Ibrahim was one of three college freshmen — along with Antonio Lawrence of San Jose State and Erzen Lorbek of Michigan State — who pulled their names back.

In all 27 early entries dropped out of the NBA draft, which takes place Thursday at 5 p.m. MDT and will be televised live by ESPN.

CSI's Beach weighs decision

By Kevin Hall
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — Guy Beach told his team Friday that he may be leaving.

But he also told them that he could be staying for his third season as the College of Southern Idaho men's basketball coach.

The confusing crossroad Beach finds himself at will be decided next week when Beach, 39, meets with CSI President Jerry Meyerhoeffer.

Beach is torn between the two. On one hand, he knows if he is ever to become a Division I head coach, a return to the NCAA ranks is a move in that direction.

At Fresno, Beach would get a hefty raise, work with a friend and be put in charge of running the offense, all while having a say in the day-to-day operations at a basketball hot spot.

Those kinds of opportunities are far beyond what he had at Texas-El Paso and Weber State, jobs he held before accepting the Carson City two-season gig.

On the other hand, Beach says he wants to keep his head coaching job with a Golden Eagles team that has a solid shot at making the national tournament. With sophomores Aking Elting and Dante Sawyer back and all-everything transfer Daniel Artes in the fold, CSI will contend for the region title.

Whether direction Beach decides to go, there will be hurdles to overcome.

Fresno State is digging out of a mess left by former coach Jerry Tarkanian and several former administrators.

The program put itself on a two-year probation, a self-imposed ban from the postseason this past season, and cut three scholarships after it was learned that a former team statistician and an academic adviser participated in a cheating scandal with three former players, reported the Fresno Bee on June 10.

The Bee also reported that four former administrators failed to sufficiently report violations that primarily involved men's basketball players, according to an NCAA enforcement staff-issued letter.

That letter was part of a joint Fresno State-NCAA investigation that focused on the university's alleged lack of "institutional control."

Much has changed, but Lewis is still the champ

LOS ANGELES — A lot has changed in the heavyweight world since Lennox Lewis put a whipping on Mike Tyson a year ago in Memphis.

There are two intriguing new belt holders, one big deflated contender and no sign of Tyson.

Rookie rips game-winning home run in 11th inning of first major league game

MIAMI (AP)—Miguel Cabrera, in his first major league game, hit a two-run homer in the bottom of the 11th inning to lift the Florida Marlins over the Tampa Bay Devil Rays 3-1 Friday night.

Alex Gonzalez doubled with one out in the 11th. The 20-year-old Cabrera sent the next pitch from All Levine over the center-field wall for his first big league hit.

Cabrera, the most highly touted prospect in the Marlins' organization, was hitting .365 with 10 homers and 59 RBIs in 68 games at Double-A Carolina when he was called up Thursday. He played primarily at third base in the minor leagues, but started in left field Friday.

Cabrera was 0-for-4 before homering. He grounded out to end the ninth, stranding two runners and sending a large portion of the announced crowd of 12,515 heading for the exits.

Armando Almaraz (4-4) pitched a scoreless 11th for the win. Levine (2-5) took the loss.

Yankees 5, Mets 0

NEW YORK — Andy Pettitte shut down the New York Mets for seven innings and the Yankees got consecutive home runs from Alfonso Soriano and Derek Jeter to win the opener of the Subway Series.

Jason Giambi also homered as the Yankees once again got the better of the heated intra-city rivalry, beating the Mets for the 11th time in 31 regular-season meetings. The Yankees also won the 2000 World Series against the Mets in five games.

The Yankees have won seven of their last eight games, including a sweep since being no-hit by six Houston pitchers on June 11. A sellout crowd of 55,386 sat through sporadic rain which was heavy at times.

Steve Lincecum (5-5), coming off his second career one-hitter Sunday in Anaheim, held the Yankees in check except for the third inning. He allowed two runs, two hits and five walks in seven innings.

Pettitte (7-6) allowed five hits and struck out eight.

Braves 6, Orioles 3

ATLANTA — Robert Fick hit a grand slam and Greg Maddux pitched no hit ball into the sixth inning, lifting the Atlanta Braves over the Baltimore Orioles.

Fick drove in five runs, matching his career high. His second grand slam of the season came in the fourth against Sidney Ponson (4-1).

Maddux (6-6) didn't give up a hit until Brian Roberts doubled into the right-field corner with two outs in the sixth. John Smoltz got his 27th save in 29 chances.

Baltimore's Melvin Mora, the leading hitter on the American League at .361, left the game after being hit on the right hand with a pitch in the first. He was listed as day-to-day.

White Sox 12, Cubs 3

CHICAGO — Miguel Olivo's grand slam capped a six-run first inning as the White Sox routed the crosstown Cubs in the most lopsided game since the Chicago rivals began interleague play in 1997.

The White Sox, struggling as the third-place team in the AL Central, made the most of wild Cubs pitching — 10 walks — and some shaky defense to pull away early.

Sammy Sosa, in his first home game since serving a seven-game suspension for using a corked bat, was mostly cheered when introduced although some fans mixed in a very noticeable share of boos. Sosa was traded from the White Sox to the Cubs in 1992.

He also had trouble with the sun in right field, losing one ball and trapping another during a four-run White Sox fourth. He was 0-for-4 with a walk.

Former Cubs first-round draft pick Jon Garland (5-6) allowed eight hits and two runs in six innings to get the victory.

Chicago starter Shawn Estes (6-6) couldn't find the plate and lasted just one inning.

Royals 10, Cardinals 4

ST. LOUIS — Jose Lima

earned his first major league win since last August and the Kansas City Royals got four RBIs from Ken Harvey in a victory over the St. Louis Cardinals.

The Royals are 2-6 the last two seasons against the Cardinals, but punished St. Louis as Matt Morris (7-5) to even the series at 11-11 overall.

Raul Ibanez had three hits and drove in three runs for the Royals. Dextrel Fowler homered on the second pitch of the game, and Harvey and Angel Berroa also connected for Kansas City.

Lima (4-0) gave up two runs and four hits in 5 1/3 innings in his second start since his contract was purchased from Triple-A Omaha on June 15. He struck out two and walked three.

Lima's last big league victory came with the Detroit Tigers on Aug. 19, 2002, against Seattle. He was released last Sept. 11 by Detroit and spent two months with the Newark Bears of the independent Atlantic League this season, going 6-1 with a 2.33 ERA before signing a minor league deal with the Royals on June 11.

Astros 12, Rangers 3

ARLINGTON, Texas — Craig Biggio had four hits and Adam Everett homered as the Houston Astros beat Texas, sending the Rangers to their fifth straight loss.

Rodriguez, playing a day after being hit in the face by a throw in Oakland, hit his 18th homer in the eighth, a solo shot that made it 5-3. He also had an RBI double in the first.

Wade Miller (5-7) allowed two runs on six hits in six innings for the victory. John Thomson (4-9) took the loss.

Stacy Rodriguez homered for the Rangers, who dropped 17 of 19 their worst stretch since also going 2-17 from Aug. 5-25, 1973.

James gives one final show

Projected No. 1 pick works out for Cavs days before draft

By Tom Withers
Associated Press writer

CLEVELAND — LeBron James passed his final, albeit, audition for the Cleveland Cavaliers.

"We're still taking him No. 1, I'll tell you that," general manager Jim Paxson joked after watching James work out for more than 30 minutes Friday.

There was never any doubt. Under the attentive eye of Paxson, Cleveland coach Paul Silas and a huge media throng, James showcased his awesome skills to the Cavaliers one final time before they select the 18-year-old with the top overall pick in Thursday's NBA draft.

Wearing a gray Cavaliers T-shirt, black shorts and a pair of Nikes (what else?) James shot jumpers, 3-pointers and finetuned his free-throw shooting on the club's fourth-floor practice court in Gund Arena.

The 6-foot-8 high school star from Akron was admittedly tired from a three-day trip for interviews, TV appearances and parties in New York. But he did everything the Cavaliers asked.

And Silas, who had never seen James play in person, came away impressed.

"I liked everything about his demeanor," said Silas, hired earlier this month. "I talked to him about the game. He understands how to play. He shoots the ball. He can handle it, and as we get into this thing, he'll get better and better."

As James was shooting free throws early in the workout, Silas stopped him in mid-shot and offered some advice. Silas instructed James to take a longer look at the basket before shooting.

James did, and promptly made his next eight attempts. For Silas, it was an important moment.

"I mentioned a few things to him, and he accepted them and did them," said Silas, who will guard during summer league games. "That just shows you he loves the game. He loves to play the game. I sense that from him and that's important. That will go a long way with him integrating himself into the team."

Cleveland Cavaliers coach Paul Silas, left, watches LeBron James during a workout Friday at Gund Arena in Cleveland. The Cavs are expected to take James with the first pick in Thursday's NBA draft.

James and Silas seemed to hit it off well during their brief time together. They laughed at an inside joke, and Silas playfully teased James when he clanged a few jumpers off the rim.

"He's a great guy," James said. "I'm still learning about him and he's still learning about me. So once our relationship grows, I think we'll have a great bond."

Although he may not own a Paul Silas throwback jersey, James knows that his soon-to-be coach was an NBA All-Star who can help make him into one, too.

"Everything he has to say, I'm going to listen to because he's been there," said James, who signed a $90 million endorsement deal with Nike last month. "I haven't even stepped out on the court yet. I'm just looking forward to learning a lot more about the game, and a lot more about life."

James has added some noticeable muscle to his chiseled body since his senior season ended. During the league's pre-draft camp in Chicago, James was measured at 6-7, 245 pounds with just 6.7 percent body fat.

James has done some other sculpting — to his shot.

"I changed it a lot," said James, who averaged 31.6 points, 9.6 rebounds, 4.6 assists and 3.4 steals this season. "I was shooting a high school shot and not really going at it. I changed the shot, and a lot more are going in. So, I'm going to stick with it."

As hectic as his life has been the past few weeks, James knows it's only going to get crazier.

Since his high school graduation, he has traveled to Chicago, to Nike's headquarters in Oregon and to New York, where he did an HBO interview, made an appearance on MTV with Magic Johnson and attended a party with rap star Jay-Z and other celebrities.

Next week, it's back to New York for more interviews, meetings and a night he has always dreamed of.

When NBA commissioner David Stern announces, "With the first pick in the NBA draft, the Cleveland Cavaliers select," the whole world will know what's coming next.

James can't wait.

"Everything is going right," he said. "I'm living out a dream right now. I'm accomplishing some of my goals that I wrote down when I was a kid. I wouldn't change none of it."

Ayers steps up to lead 76ers

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Randy Ayers was hardly Philadelphia's first choice to replace Larry Brown. Or second, third or even fourth.

Ayers is the 76ers' final pick, though.

The assistant was promoted to head coach Friday, taking over a team that went to the NBA Finals just two years ago.

The former Ohio State coach spent the last six seasons as Brown's assistant. Brown resigned last month and is now the Detroit Pistons' coach.

"At the end of the day, it became clear that Randy was the guy," team president Billy King said. "I believe in this team. We have the same vision. With some tweaking, I believe we can go far."

Ayers' hiring was first reported Thursday by The Associated Press.

"He joins a team that went 48-34 last season and won a first-round playoff series against New Orleans before losing to Detroit in six games."

"I feel I have a good relationship with all of the players," Ayers said. "We've had some highs and lows."

He said he has developed a bond with Allen Iverson, Eric Snow and Aaron McKie.

During a news conference, Ayers was asked to explain the biggest difference between Brown and him. Before he could respond, 76ers chairman Ed Snider interjected: "The biggest difference is he won't quit each year" — a clear swipe at Brown, who threatened to quit after each season and at least once during the season.

"I have great respect for Coach Brown," Ayers said. "The biggest thing he taught me was game management. He managed the game better than any coach I've been around. But we will be more involved. We want to push the ball with the guards and be more creative."

Ayers also said he wants the team to take more 3-pointers. Brown wasn't a fan of the shot.

Ayers was far down on King's list of candidates. King initially tried to get permission to speak to Portland coach Maurice Cheeks, a former 76ers star. Also, former Knicks coach Jeff Van Gundy and Kentucky coach Tubby Smith said they weren't interested in the job after speaking to King. Van Gundy took over in Houston, replacing Rudy Tomjanovich.

King also interviewed former New Jersey Nets assistant Eddie Jordan, who was hired by Washington on Thursday, former Atlanta coach Mike Fratello, Hawks interim coach Terry Stotts, 76ers assistant Mike Woodson and Miami Heat assistant Bob McAdoo.

Ayers went 124-108 as coach of the Buckeyes for eight years. He led Ohio State to four postseason appearances and was the AP

"He's somebody who knows the players, knows what we're about, knows our style, plus he's been under the best coach in the world for years so he had to learn something."

— Allen Iverson, on new head coach Randy Ayers

Coach of the Year in 1991 after putting the Buckeyes went 27-4 and won the first of consecutive Big Ten championships.

His stay at Ohio State ended with four consecutive losing seasons and off-court troubles. As a result of 17 rules violations, the Buckeyes were put on probation by the NCAA.

Ayers was selected in the third round of the 1978 NBA draft by Chicago. He was cut before the season and played one year of pro ball in Reno, Nev., before getting into coaching.

Snow, McKie and Keith Van Horn were among the six players that attended Ayers' news conference. Iverson, perhaps thinking he was going to practice, arrived late.

"He's somebody who knows the players, knows what we're about, knows our style plus he's been under the best coach in the world for years so he had to learn something," Iverson said.

Texan takes aim at freediving record

By Jim Vertuno
Associated Press writer

AUSTIN, Texas — A month from now, Tanya Streeter will take a deep breath, hold her nose and hang on tight as a weighted metal sled slides down a rope into the ocean depths. Eyes closed, she won't see how the light fades with every hundred feet down.

Enduring painful pressure on her eardrums, she'll listen for the metal tap-tap of the safety divers stationed every 100 feet or so, giving them a blind wave as she sinks past.

Her heartbeat will slow. Her lungs will compress to the size of fist under the enormous pressure of the water as she goes deeper.

She hopes to reach the end of the line — more than 300 feet deep, where the waters are silent and dark — blow a kiss to the sea and start back up, pulling and kicking toward the fresh air at the surface, all in about four minutes.

If she succeeds, she will hold yet another world record in freediving, an extreme sport that sends men and women to unbelievable depths on sheer lung power, and also claimed the life of a popular world-record holder in October.

Diving with an angel and a devil

A 30-year-old Grand Caymanian who moved to Austin three years ago, Streeter is one of the most recognized female freedivers in the world, having already set records in the sport. Her next record attempt is scheduled for July 19 in Turks and Caicos, a group of small islands in the Caribbean.

Last year, she set a world record — since broken — with a 525-foot plunge in the "no-limits" category. In that discipline, she rode down on the sled and resurfaced using a harness with an inflated bag that rocketed her back to the surface. Decompression was not needed because she didn't breathe in any air during the dive.

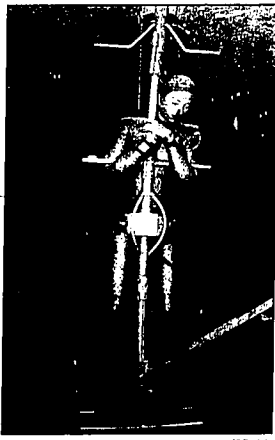

Her next competitive attempt, in the "variable ballast" category, won't go as low. As a women's world record as recognized by the International Association for the Development of Apnea, one of the sport's governing bodies, is 312 feet.

Streeter says this dive will be more difficult because she'll have to swim back up under her own power, burning energy and oxygen all the way up.

"It's going to make going to 525 feet seem easy," she said.

All of it would seem impossible to the average swimmer doing underwater laps in a backyard pool or the weekend snorkeler whose ears hurt 20 feet down. Streeter's deepest dive took her to a depth equal to the height of 52-story building.

Streeter says she's not a freak of nature, just a strong-willed endurance athlete who has learned to harness her maximum lung power.

Tanya Streeter tries for a freediving record Aug. 27, 2002, off the coast of Providenciales, Turks and Caicos.

She does exercises to expand her ribcage to give her lungs more room for deeper breaths. Breathing techniques and strict mental discipline allow her to hold the oxygen for a long period of time. Training at a local pool as well as running, cycling and lifting weights put her in optimal physical condition.

"There's nothing freakish about me or other freedivers," Streeter said, noting her 5-foot-7, 120-pound frame. "Physically, I'm not the best equipped."

Bigger and stronger divers, especially men, should be able to go much farther than her, she says. Streeter's husband and manager, Paul, is also a freediver. Much larger than she, he won't dare test the depths his wife does.

"I don't have the mindset" for the deep dives, the former construction manager says.

His role is to manage the dive. He'll put together the scuba team that will monitor Tanya's progress from top to bottom and check her equipment to ensure success. He'll also dive in to meet her on the way up.

Mental toughness and the ability to shake off fear while plunging as deep into the ocean as humans can go without panic is the key to setting records and survival.

"Not everybody can do it," Streeter said. "If your mind is not prepared, your body will not let you do it."

"Every time I dive, I have a devil on one shoulder and an angel on the other," she said. "The devil is saying 'You didn't get a good enough breath... Is that your leg hurting?' And the angel is saying 'Don't be a loser. You're just inventing all that stuff.'"

By the time she hits bottom, she says, "I am at peace."

The pain in the ears, the compressed lungs and the blind descent would panic the average person. Streeter can't see where she's going or how deep she is because she keeps her eyes closed in the salt water. She won't wear a mask because she can't spare the air needed to equalize the pressure around her face as she comes up.

"It would pretty much suck out my eyeballs," she said.

Death-defying depth

The origins of freediving can be traced to fishermen who held their breath searching for shellfish.

Today, it's a sport where international associations regulate record attempts and divers jockey for sponsorship money in a crowded public arena full of extreme adventures. Streeter honors her contracts by insisting sponsors' logos be seen in any publicity photographs, even when she's just sitting on her couch at home.

A certified scuba diver, she got hooked on free diving in 1997 with encouragement from her husband's spearfishing buddies.

"They'd shoot fish, and it would be too deep for them to get," Paul Streeter said. "So they'd send her down after them."

Four months of training produced an American record on her first competitive dive, a 175-foot mark in the "constant ballast" category, which requires a diver to be completely unassisted by a sled during the dive.

Now every record draws more attention and rivalries in quest for depth. The publicity has been both positive and negative for the sport.

Audrey Mestre, 28, died Oct. 12 after plunging into deep waters near La Romana, Dominican Republic, in a "no-limits" dive with a target depth of 561 feet. She was trying to break the world record of 531.5 feet, set by her husband, Francisco "Pipin" Ferreras in January 2000.

Although the Streeters consider Ferreras a "maverick," the accident shook Tanya and the death hit the freediving community hard.

"I'd lie awake at night thinking about it," she said.

With the right precautions, they say, the sport is safe.

"I wouldn't do it if it was a dangerous sport," Tanya Streeter said. "I won't skydive. I don't even like flying."

Arena League coach dies in single-car crash

ORLANDO, Fla. (AP) — Arena Football League coach Fran Papasadero was killed in a crash after losing control of the car he was driving.

The 34-year-old coach of the Orlando Predators was driving alone on a city street Thursday night when the car overturned several times, police said Friday.

It was not immediately known if speeding, alcohol or drugs were involved. Lt. Charles Robinson said. He did not know if Papasadero was wearing a seat belt.

Papasadero replaced Jay Gruden, the brother of Tampa Bay Buccaneers coach Jon Gruden, as coach in 2001 when Gruden returned to play quarterback for the Predators. Papasadero was an assistant with Orlando for four seasons.

"I already miss him so much," Gruden said. "He was a breath of fresh air whenever he walked into a room. He was the life of the party, always going to put a smile on everybody's face. That's going to be irreplaceable."

Under Papasadero, the Predators went 12-4 this season, and won a playoff game before losing in the league semifinals.

In Tampa, where the Arizona Rattlers and Tampa Bay Storm will play in Arena Bowl XVII on Sunday, the league briefly halted preparations to remember Papasadero.

"Off the field, Fran was a generous, caring and fun-loving man. But, when it came to winning, he was as fierce a competitor as there was in the AFL," commissioner David Baker said. "We are thankful for the impact he had on the game and our league."

Papasadero began his Arena career as a lineman for the Albany Firebirds in 1993. He played five seasons, making stops in Massachusetts, St. Louis and Nashville.

Magic Valley report

Not taking to the skies

Passenger boardings for SkyWest Airlines — a Delta Connection carrier — at the Twin Falls airport:

May 2003: 1,962
That's an 11 percent decrease from the 2,212 SkyWest boardings in May 2002. For comparison, May boardings totaled 2,294 in 2001 and 2,357 in 2000.

Year-to-date 2003: 11,661
That's a 22 percent decrease from the 14,891 boardings in the first five months of 2002. By that point last year, boardings were running just 1 percent below the comparable 2001 total. (The totals don't include charter flights.)

The most recent May's boarding numbers reflect Delta Air Lines' one-month suspension of the evening flight, which arrives in Twin Falls from Salt Lake City at 7:11 p.m., three times a week, at $105 a ticket. It was seen the return of the evening flight, though the airport's number of daily departures back to five.

Idaho businesses, teacher win awards

POCAHELLO — Three Idaho businesses and a high school teacher received Governor's Export Marketing Awards on Friday during World Trade Day events at Idaho State University. Given for excellence in export marketing, the awards were presented to AMI Semiconductor of Pocatello, Hess Farms, Products of Malad, P & L Produce LLC of Parma and Kelli Kurbay, a Bonanza High School teacher in Boise. No Magic Valley companies were among the winners this year, though some have been in recent years. "International trade is critical to the health of Idaho's economy," Gov. Dirk Kempthorne said in a statement. "The companies recognized today exemplify the best Idaho has to offer vibrant businesses with strong and technically competent employees that continue to thrive during challenging economic times."

Roughly one-third of Idaho's raw goods and manufactured products are exported to Singapore, the United Kingdom, Canada, Japan, Mexico and Asia, state officials said.

The value of Idaho products shipped abroad reached $2 billion in 2002. Products exported include high tech components like computers and semiconductors, raw and processed food, paper and wood products, transportation equipment and metal products.

According to the U.S. Department of Commerce, more than 24,000 Idaho jobs depend on Idaho exports. Export-related jobs typically pay 17-48 percent higher than the average private sector wage.

World Trade Day is sponsored by the Idaho Export Council, a partnership between industry, the state of Idaho and the U.S. Department of Commerce.

United aims to emerge from bankruptcy soon

CHICAGO (AP) — The airline that made the largest bankruptcy filing in aviation history in December announced it may emerge from bankruptcy as early as this year, but warned it still faces significant financial hurdles.

Officials of United Airlines, the world's second-largest carrier, said Friday that they're targeting between October and March to exit Chapter 11 instead of the 18 months originally predicted, executives said.

Chief financial officer Jake Brace said United's overseas bookings have improved sharply from a month ago, when air travel had dropped off because of the SARS virus and the war in Iraq.

"There are a lot of things we need to do to get out," Brace told reporters after a hearing in U.S. Bankruptcy Court. "One of those things is exit financing."

The Elk Grove Village, Ill.-based carrier is finalizing a business plan that will underpin the reorganization plan it has to file by Oct. 6. United also intends to reapply for federal loan guarantee from the Air Transportation Stabilization Board.

Tourism picks up in M-C

Mark Davis, front, and Travis Terry prepare beams for a picnic pavilion at a city of Heyburn park adjacent to the Mini-Cassia Visitor Center. The center has experienced growth in visitor numbers over the past few years.

Visitor numbers, available activities have risen in the past three years

By Lorraine Cavenor
Times-News correspondent

HEYBURN — Mini-Cassia has been enjoying greater numbers of tourists, along with a flourish of activity to accommodate future tourism growth.

Leading sales, an indicator of tourist activity, made a significant jump over the past three years. In the period from May 2002 to May 2003, Mini-Cassia lodging sales suffered a slight decrease, but they still were more than $365,000 above the level of two years earlier, according to Idaho Department of Commerce tourism statistics.

While many feared a tourism slowdown as a backlash from the Sept. 11, 2001, terrorist attacks, Idaho has seen a different outcome.

"The good thing for us is that most of our travelers come by automobiles or RVs," said Ron Gardner, public information specialist for the Commerce Department. "We're seeing a bit of benefit. People are more inclined to take short trips close to home. There has been an increase in weekend family vacations."

Some of those vacations appear to be fueling an increase in visitors to the Mini-Cassia Visitor Center.

Joan Asson, executive director of the Mini-Cassia Chamber of Commerce and Visitor Center, said visitors have steadily increased over the past few years since the center opened in 1998. The first couple of years were fairly slow for the center until a bill was installed. Staff then noticed a dramatic increase in visitors.

The count of visitors who signed the center's guest register in 2001 was 1,908, compared with 1,313 for 2000. In 2002, 2,402 visitors logged in the register.

"That is a 26 percent increase over 2001," Asson said. "I'm thrilled with the increase."

Asson has also seen a number of visitors who stopped a year or two ago and have returned this year.

"They are staying a few days and visiting sites that we talked about before," she said.

type of thing that can fit with family vacations. The facilities — restrooms, arboretum and walking path — have seen an increase in use, even as they're joined by new boat docks, park pavilions and more trails, said Earl Andrew of the city of Heyburn, who is overseeing expansion of the Heyburn recreation facilities.

New business takes to the Snake River

BURLEY — Since the Snake River Queen's first cruise on Memorial Day weekend, owners of the 7-ton paddle-wheel boat have been surprised by its initial success.

Jay Carrick, who owns the boat with his wife, Char, his nephew Dave Zannon and Zannon's wife, Kris, said the group has advertised little but has drawn customers from all over the state.

"We've been surprised with the response," Carrick said. "It's been good. We already have repeat customers."

The cruise — a 3 1/2-hour trip toward Milner Dam and back — features history of the river presented by Char Carrick, a teacher at Heyburn Elementary School. She tells about places such as Henry Scholde's homestead site, one of the first of the area. Starr's Ferry.

Burger King makes another bid to boost sales

Chain hopes new, juicier burger can help turn around declining sales

Knight Ridder News Service

MIAMI — For the second time in two years, Burger King is routing a burger bid promises to taste like it came off your back-yard grill.

Promising to be the juiciest offering in Burger King's history, the Great American Burger — scheduled for launch by June 29 — is the first step in Chief Executive Brad Blum's efforts to rejuvenate the Miami-Dade fast-food chain's declining sales.

The new sandwich features the same hamburger patty that comes on a Whopper. The difference between the two: the bread and some of the condiments.

The Great American Burger is made on a higher-quality, bakery-style bun and dressed with American cheese, pepper bacon, tomato, onions and a full leaf of iceberg lettuce. But the real secret is in the mix of four sauces: ketchup, mayonnaise, seasoned mustard and a savory brown sauce similar to an au jus.

Industry experts say it makes sense for Burger King to attempt to turn around its deteriorating sales and profitability by focusing on burgers, which have long been the chain's strength.

"They've got to get customers back in their stores," said Ron Paul, president of Technomic, a Chicago restaurant consulting firm. "The advertising has really got to get consumers' attention that this is a different taste: wetter, meatier and juicier."

But Burger King has to do better than it did in 2001 and 2002, when previous management also tried to introduce a line of burgers that tasted as if they came off the back-yard grill. The Burger Lover menu didn't do well in restaurants and was quickly yanked.

The difference is that those sandwiches used two smaller patties, which frequently ended up getting overcooked and turning into virtual hockey pucks. Burger King found that consumers prefer a larger, single-patty sandwich that they need two hands to eat.

The Great American Burger offers that alternative, weighing in at more than 20 percent heavier than the Whopper. With a recommended price of $2.59, the Great American Burger will be the second-highest-priced sandwich on the Burger King menu, only behind the Chicken Whopper.

For now the burger is scheduled to be offered until July 27. At the very least it will remain a summer offering timed to coincide with the outdoor barbecue season.

Best Buy warns of fraudulent Web site

Newsday

Best Buy Co. Inc. said its Web site is being imitated, but the company is not at all flattered because the imitators are thieves trying to steal consumers' credit card and other information.

In what could be one of the largest such frauds against a retailer, the United States' largest electronics chain said it became aware late Wednesday afternoon of "an unauthorized and deceptive spam e-mail" to consumers entitled "Fraud Alert."

Dawn Bryant, a Best Buy spokeswoman, said in an interview that the Minneapolis-based company had received "thousands" of calls from across the country, Canada, France and Australia.

The calls continued to come in Thursday, and are expected to continue throughout the week-end, as consumers check e-mail on their home or work computer, Bryant said.

The e-mail claims to come from the BestBuy.com Fraud Department, said Best Buy, which is preparing to open a Twin Falls store. The e-mail directs consumers to a Web site Bryant said is "nearly identical" to a Best Buy site. She said many consumers became suspicious and called Best Buy when the site asked for such personal information as credit card and Social Security numbers.

Bryant said police and the FBI have been alerted. FBI special agent Paul McCabe, assigned to the bureau's Minneapolis office, said in a phone interview that an investigation has begun and is in its early stages.

"We believe this is a sophisticated criminal operation," McCabe said, declining to elaborate. McCabe said it is unknown how many consumers were affected by the fraud. "We are working closely with Best Buy," McCabe said. He added that those arrested could be charged with mail, wire, or identity fraud, crimes that carry jail terms of five to 25 years.

Best Buy says consumers should immediately delete the "Fraud Alert" e-mail without opening it. Those who have opened it and replied, Best Buy said, should contact their bank or credit card companies. Best Buy said none of its computer systems have been compromised.

Mallory Duncan, vice president and general counsel at the National Retail Federation, the trade organization in Washington, D.C., was testifying on Capitol Hill Thursday about credit card security — separate from the Best Buy situation.

Duncan said the Best Buy matter "underscores the need for more prosecutorial involvement" in retail cyber credit card fraud. Duncan said the credit card fraud perpetrated on Best Buy was the largest he had seen.

COMMUNITY IN CRISIS

Josh Taylor, left, talks to his wife, Donna, while sons Jonah, 4, center and Jarrel, 10, listen in Thursday Benton Harbor, Mich. The Taylor's house was burned to the ground in riots that occurred in Benton Harbor that followed the death of a motorcyclist during a police chase.

Town looks inward after riots

Chicago Tribune

BENTON HARBOR, Mich.—As Michigan Gov. Jennifer Granholm arrived Thursday to "promote healing" after two days of rioting here, new questions were being raised about the role of police in connection with the death of an African-American motorcyclist—the incident that sparked the violence.

"The state of Michigan must put its arms around this community," Granholm said, standing before a neighborhood church four blocks from where homes burned and people threw bricks on Tuesday night. "Some people (in Benton Harbor) feel hopeless and that underlying issue of hopelessness must be addressed, whether it is through education or jobs."

The governor spent two hours meeting with ministers, community leaders, and the family of Terrance Shurn, whose death after a high-speed chase with police touched off rioting Monday and Tuesday nights. Authorities estimated the value of burned homes at $500,000.

Granholm said she would appoint a "reconciliation team" from her staff and the community to recommend how the state could help ease tensions and create opportunity in this town of 12,000.

Michigan State Police released preliminary findings into the death of Shurn, who lost control of his Honda 900 high-performance motorcycle and struck a tree stump and a building early Monday. Shurn, 28, died at the scene from a torn heart artery, said State Police Lt. Joseph Zangaro.

Zangaro disputed claims from some witnesses who said the police car bumped the motorcycle, causing it to spin out of control. The Benton Township police squad car pursuing Shurn was at least three lengths behind the cycle at the time of the crash, he said. State police said they are investigating only the cause of the accident. A separate assessment into whether the officer exercised good judgment is under review by Benton Township police.

Gov. Jennifer Granholm addresses a news conference Thursday in Benton Harbor, Mich.

"There was no contact between the police car and the motorcycle," Zangaro said.

But as word of the agency's findings spread through the town Thursday, that seemingly served to heighten the longstanding mistrust of police in a predominantly black community that has seen more than its share of disputes with police over the years.

An 11-year-old boy was struck and killed in September 2000 during a pursuit by Benton Township police. Another man died in April while being taken into custody. Numerous complaints have been aired over the years about racial profiling and harassment, officials acknowledged.

"I don't know why this is a question," said Johnnie Williams, a longtime friend of Shurn's who said he witnessed the crash and was interviewed by police Tuesday.

"This looks like another case of police looking out for their own," Williams said, standing near a long scratch in the asphalt that investigators marked with orange paint. "Just look at the road and you can see tire tracks, and a big scuff mark where the squad car hit the bike the first time," Williams said. "The squad car bumped the motorcycle a second time."

Everett Taylor, who lives a block from the crash site, said he noticed a dent on the hood of the police car that pursued Shurn through her neighborhood. It also had blood splattered on the hood as well, she added.

"So, they want the community to believe them, after all the wrongdoing that been going on here," Taylor, 31, said sarcastically.

Addressing questions about why there was not a videotape of the incident, Zangaro, the state police investigator, said neither of the police cruisers was equipped with a camera.

Benton Township Police Chief Jim Coburn said he instructed his officers to stop pursuing motorists unless there is hard evidence to suggest a felony has been committed. And Coburn, whose officers are mostly white, noted there are tensions with residents of the mostly African-American community of Benton Harbor.

SOURCES: Associated Press, ESH, AP

"They really want me to keep my people out of Benton Harbor," he said. "We can do that. If we come into this city, we will notify the city (police)."

At a rally at a church, some 200 Benton Harbor residents appealed for an end to the violence while venting their frustrations with police.

"The violence is over," said Columbus Franklin, 29, to cheers from residents gathered at the Bobo Brazil Community Center.

"Now it is time to turn our attention to justice. We want justice for Terrance and we want justice for everyone else who has been harassed by police in our own community."

'Something out of the Dark Ages'

Four teens face charges in connection with beating fellow teen to death, robbing him

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Jason Sweeney had money in his pocket and plans to see his teenage sweetheart when he headed out the door to see her on the last Friday in May.

For a 16-year-old from a blue-collar section of Philadelphia, the end of the work week couldn't have seemed much brighter. But he never made it back home that night.

According to police, Sweeney's girlfriend lured him to a vacant gravel path by the Delaware River where three teenage boys were waiting. They attacked Sweeney with a hammer and hatchet until his heart stopped, authorities said.

The four teens — after a group hug — then robbed the victim, dividing up the $500 that Sweeney had earned at his construction job and went on a drug binge, police said.

"We took Sweeney's wallet and split up the money, and we parted beyond redemption."

— Dominic Coia

Sweeney's wallet and split up the money, and we parted beyond redemption," Dominic Coia, 18, told detectives, according to a transcript of his June 3 confession. Coia, his younger brother, Nicholas, 16, and Sweeney's friend, Edward "Eddie" Batzig Jr., 16, are charged with first-degree murder and could face the death penalty if convicted. Sweeney's girlfriend, Justina Morley, 15, is also charged with murder but is too young to be executed.

The brutal nature of the crime stunned even the veteran city judge assigned to Tuesday's preliminary hearing.

"This is something out of the Dark Ages," Judge Seamus McCaffery said in upholding the murder charges against the four. "I'm not so sure we can call ourselves a civilized society when stuff like this happens."

In the hours before the slaying, as Sweeney changed out of his work clothes and showered at his family's cozy brick rowhouse in Fishtown, the defendants met nearby in Batzig's basement.

"We must have listened to 'Helter Skelter' about 42 times," Dominic Coia told police, referring to the Beatles song that also fascinated serial killer Charles Manson.

In 1969, Manson and his followers killed nine people in the Los Angeles area in what prosecutors said was an attempt to start a race war that Manson believed was prophesied in "Helter Skelter."

Sweeney's mother, Dawn, works as a bank teller while her husband, Paul, who grew up in Fishtown, runs a small construction company. Then son had been working there after dropping out of 10th grade, with plans to join the Navy when he turned 17 next month.

Jason had spent his 16th birthday with Batzig at Dawn Sweeney's house in Florida.

Afterward, Dawn Sweeney told her son to end the friendship. She thought Batzig was heading down the wrong path, she said.

Jason came from a home that none of them had. Dawn Sweeney said Wednesday about her son's alleged assailants: "We love our kids, and our kids love us. We enjoy spending time together."

The Coias had been raised by their father since their mother left when they were young, said defense lawyer Charles Minichilli, who hopes to negotiate a plea for Nicholas, his client. Lee Mandell, a lawyer for Dominic Coia, said he will try to have his client's confession suppressed.

All four defendants are charged as adults, but defense lawyer William Brennan hopes to have Morley's case moved to juvenile court. She has a history of depression and had been on medication for about a year, Brennan said.

In his police statement, Batzig said he struck his friend in the head with the hatchet four or five times, as hard as he could. Philadelphia Medical Examiner Ian Hood testified that the attack broke all but one of the bones in Sweeney's face.

After the murder, Dominic Coia told police that the group looted heroin, cocaine and the tampon of Xanox with the victim's money, according to his police statement.

Melissa Sweeney, the dead teen's 15-year-old sister, said juvenile crime was not unique to places like Fishtown.

"Everywhere you go, you find kids like this," she said Wednesday as she and her mother played a board game in their living room. "It's just a question of how much the neighborhood can take the bad."

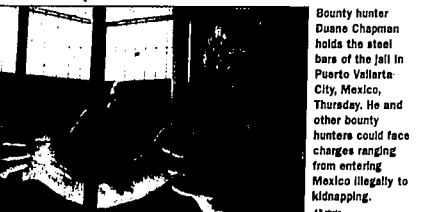

Bounty hunters condemn tactics used to nab Max Factor heir

LOS ANGELES (AP) — When a bounty hunter goes by "Dog" captured convicted rapist and cosmetics heir Andrew Luster, he grabbed the national spotlight, as well as time in a Mexican jail and the disdain of his colleagues.

"He represents all of the things that bail agents are trying to get away from — the cowboy image, the renegade, bring 'em home dead or alive," said Penny Harding, executive director of the California Bail Agents Association, which represents 500 bail bondsmen.

Duane "Dog" Chapman — his nickname is Dog spelled backward — crossed a line with his tactics, starting with crossing the border into Mexico and grabbed Luster as he stood at a taco stand Wednesday, fellow agents said.

While Luster, 35, was arrested and turned over to the FBI, who returned him to California, Chapman was thrown in a Mexico jail and faces potential charges ranging from entering the country illegally to kidnapping.

Bounty hunter Duane Chapman holds the steel bars of the jail in Puerto Vallarta, Mexico, Thursday. He and other bounty hunters could face charges ranging from entering Mexico illegally to kidnapping.

"In my schools, we tell them cross-border stuff is a no-no," said Mel Barth, executive director of the 3,200-member National Association of Bail Enforcement Agents. "You don't go into a foreign country and try to kidnap."

Bounty hunters work for bail agents, tracking down those who fail to show up in court after bail has been posted. They usually are paid 10 percent to 15 percent of the bail amount. It's a deal because bail companies lose the full amount to the court if a fugitive fails to show up for six months.

Chapman's incentive in this case was unclear because Luster, a Max Factor heir and trust fund recipient, made his own $1 million bail, authorities said.

Convicted of drugging and raping three women between 1996 and 2000, Luster fled in January before being sentenced in absentia to 124 years in prison. A $10,000 reward was posted, but it wasn't clear if Chapman qualifies.

Despite Hollywood's guns-and-fists image, professional bounty hunters say they rarely resort to violence. "We always quote our biggest weapon is the phone," said Craig Stephenson, who has been catching fugitives for 18 years.

"An American is easy to get out of Mexico," he said. "You have him arrested locally on immigration violation with the locals. They'll send him over."

In fact, the FBI was only hours behind Chapman, said spokeswoman Laura Bosley in Los Angeles.

Before coming to Mexico, Chapman, 50, had told reporters he hoped that, by capturing Luster, he would reap a reward. He refused to discuss Luster when he spoke briefly with reporters Thursday from jail. "Nothing about Luster. Nothing about Luster. That's it. I'm done," he said.

Attacks persist; clerics rail against U.S. Iran rejects greater nuclear inspections

FALLUJAH, Iraq (AP) — Attacks against U.S. forces showed no sign of letting up Friday after a rocket-propelled grenade slammed into a power station in Fallujah, injuring two American soldiers and blacking out much of the city — a center of anti-American hostility.

At Friday prayers, imams preached anti-American sermons, claiming Jews are buying up real estate in Iraq, based on groundless rumors, the warnings from pulpits, on leaflets and in Iraqi newspapers reflected Iraqis' fear and anger over the U.S.-led occupation.

After weeks of sniping and ambushes around Iraq, American forces raided nine locations Friday "to isolate and defeat noncompliant forces throughout Iraq," said the U.S. Central Command. It did not specify where the raids took place.

Five people were detained and several small arms were seized in the sweep, continuing an operation dubbed Desert Scorpion that began Sunday after the deadline passed for Iraqis to turn in banned weapons without penalty.

In Fallujah, 40 miles west of Baghdad, assaulters fired rocket-propelled grenades at two U.S. armored vehicles guarding the gates of a power station before midnight Thursday. The rockets missed, but a transformer and ignited a fireball that lit the night sky.

One soldier suffered a concussion from the impact and another was bruised. The platoon called for reinforcements, and about 40 Iraqis were arrested trying to flee, said Capt. James Brownlee of the 1st Infantry Division.

The attack knocked out one of the two transformers at the power plant that provides nearly half the electricity to this city of about 200,000 people.

Salvage against power and water installations has been a key element of anti-American resistance. The U.N. Development Program reported Thursday that power deliveries to Baghdad fell to 500 megawatts from 1,300 megawatts two weeks ago because of sabotage and persistent high temperatures above 100 degrees.

In Samarra, an ancient town 75 miles north of Baghdad, an armored patrol was ambushed for the second consecutive night. The patrol wounded and captured an assassin who fired an automatic weapon on the vehicles Thursday night, said Col. Don Campbell of the 4th Infantry Division.

As the Americans asserted their control through the region, rumors swept Baghdad that many of the American soldiers are Jews and are buying property in Iraq. Jews had a powerful community in Iraq until they began emigrating in the 1940s and 1950s, before and after establishment of Israel.

"The Jews are buying real estate, homes, shops, and agricultural fields, taking names, to do to us what they did with Staff Sgt. Dan'l Dobson from Auburn, Ala., and Sgt. Dennis Fowler from Kent Island, Md., undergo an initiation after being promoted Friday in Habaniyah, Iraq. Both men are part of A Company, 3rd Battalion, 7th Infantry Regiment, code-named Attack.

Above left, Doa Saleh, 9, looks at a packet of antibiotics prescribed to her for stomach pains by a U.S. Army military doctor Thursday at a clinic in Habaniyah, 34 miles west of Baghdad. Military doctors are visiting local clinics treating civilians for mostly minor illnesses. Palestine," said the preacher at the Mother of All Battles Mosque in Baghdad. Thaqer Ibrahim al-Shomari, "Be careful, and don't reveal to sell. The country is dear and the land is dear."

The imam was referring to a program by Jewish organizations in the early 20th century to buy Arab land in Palestine to create communal settlements, one of the engines for Israel's founding.

Similar warnings against selling property were plastered on the walls of Baghdad University in leaflets signed by "a jealous citizen."

"My Muslim brother, do not sell your house no matter how high the price. Do not leave this beloved country," said the flyer. "It does not matter who is being, because the Jews are behind it."

There was no evidence supporting any such claim. There are an estimated 40 to 60 Jews left in Baghdad compared to 250,000 six decades ago.

Also Friday, a previously unknown group threatened more attacks on U.S. soldiers. In a video tape broadcast by Lebanon's Al Hayat-LBC satellite television, the National Iraqi Commandos Front vowed to avenge Iraqis killed by coalition forces.

TEHRAN, Iran (AP) — Iran said Friday it would continue to limit the operations of the U.N. nuclear watchdog agency, setting the stage for a confrontation with the United States.

The International Atomic Energy Agency has said it expects Iran "to grant the agency all access deemed necessary" to defuse suspicions Tehran is operating a clandestine nuclear weapons program.

President Bush, who has called Iran and North Korea members of an axis of evil, has said he and other world leaders will not tolerate nuclear weapons in Iran.

In London, a senior U.S. official said that while military action against Iran to stop it developing nuclear weapons is far from the thoughts of Washington, it remains an option as a last resort.

John Bolton, undersecretary of state for arms control and international security, insisted Iran can not be allowed to develop a weapons capability that could destabilize the whole region.

Asked by British Broadcasting Corp. radio whether the Bush administration reserved the right to take military action against Iran, he said: "The president has repeatedly said that all options are on the table. But that is not only our preference, it is far, far from our minds."

Iran's state television said the head of Iran's Atomic Energy Organization, Gholamreza Aghazadeh, would not permit environmental sampling at "some locations." It did not name the locations.

The refusal indicated a hardening of attitude toward the U.N. nuclear watchdog group.

"We've had no problem concerning environmental samples, but we've been telling the IAEA that this location is not a nuclear location, so that if you want to take environmental samples, it is outside the framework of the protocol," Aghazadeh said. He did not identify the location.

"If we accept to operate outside the framework of the protocol, it will have no ending ... and tomorrow ten other locations may be named," Aghazadeh added.

Inspectors were turned away from a site at Kalaye, west of Tehran, earlier this month after they came to take environmental samples. The Iranians have allegedly tested centrifuges at the Kalaye site.

A Western diplomat familiar with the dispute said Aghazadeh appeared to be referring to the Kalaye site.

Tehran would be obligated to open the site to environmental sampling by IAEA experts only if it signed an additional protocol — something the U.N. agency urged Iran to do at its board meeting in Vienna, Austria, this week.

Judging by Aghazadeh's reaction, Iran is turning a cold shoulder to this request.

The diplomat, who spoke on condition of anonymity, said the protocol was crucial — "to put the pieces of a nuclear puzzle of a country together, it is not enough to go to declared nuclear sites."

IAEA spokeswoman Melissa Fleming said the agency had no comment on the report.

Liberia's indicted leader renounces own peace pledge

MONROVIA, Liberia (AP) — President Charles Taylor renounced his peace pledge to cede power in Liberia, announcing Friday he will serve to the January 2004 end of his term — and might run again.

The vast majority of our people, including chiefs and others, are now protesting that I can't step aside without their approval," the Liberian warlord-turned-president told reporters in the capital, Monrovia.

Taylor's announcement, on a call-in talk show broadcast on radio and television, drew heated challenges from callers who accused the president of reneging on a promise he had made at the June 4 opening of Liberian peace talks.

"I said I was 'prepared' to step aside," Taylor answered, stressing "prepared." "I didn't say I was not going to run."

"I have a large following in this country," he said. "It is in the interest of peace that I'm prepared to step aside, but let nobody think that our backs are against the wall, so we are going to accept anything."

A spokesman for one of Liberia's two rebel groups said it was "not an option" for Taylor to remain in power.

Eugene Wilson spoke in Accra, capital of nearby Ghana, where Liberian rebels and political parties including Taylor's were pursuing political discussions called for in a cease-fire signed Tuesday.

That deal, with the backing of the African Union, West Africa's leaders bloc, the United States, the European Union and the United Nations, calls for political discussions within 30 days leading to a transition government that excludes Taylor.

Powell sees progress in Mideast peace plan

JERICO, West Bank (AP) — Secretary of State Colin Powell pored over detailed territorial maps with the leaders of Israel and the Palestinian Authority in separate meetings Friday, praising the leaders for efforts toward a eventual peace settlement and urging speed on the Palestinians.

In return, he was assured the Palestinians would move quickly to take over from Israeli forces responsibility for security on the Gaza Strip.

Prime Minister Ariel Sharon told a news conference after his meeting with Powell that Israel would "exhaust every avenue" in the search for peace. He cautioned, however, that fulfillment of the U.S.-backed "road map" was contingent on the Palestinians' curbing terrorism.

"The Palestinian Authority must fight terror organizations, it must disarm them, it must make sure that their infrastructure no longer exists," Sharon said.

Powell said he was encouraged by the steps Israel has taken in recent weeks, including release of some Palestinian prisoners and dismantling of structures in the occupied territories that settlers built without government authorization.

Powell's praise for the Israelis contrasted with his subsequent admonition to Palestinian leaders.

"When I meet with Prime Minister Abbas this afternoon, I will urge him to move quickly, very quickly, to implement security reforms and to come forward with specific plans to take responsibility for security in Gaza and Bethlehem," Powell said.

On Gaza, at least, Powell received assurances he was seeking from Mahmoud Abbas.

"The Palestinians told us they want to move on Gaza," a senior State Department official said, commenting after Powell and Abbas had an afternoon meeting in this West Bank town, a 30-minute drive from Jerusalem.

Militants attack American family

JERUSALEM (AP) — Hamas militants killed an American man Friday and wounded his wife and elderly parents, all Americans, as they drove through the West Bank to a wedding celebration — underscoring the difficulty of ending violence in the region that threatens a U.S.-backed peace plan.

Also Friday, a Palestinian militant was killed in a clash with the Israeli army in the Gaza Strip.

Violence has endangered the plan since President Bush launched it at a June 4 summit in Jordan with Abbas and Sharon.

Sixty-eight people on both sides have been killed since then. Abbas has been unable to persuade violent Palestinian groups to stop attacks on Israelis, a key demand of the peace plan.

In the attack Friday, Tzvi Goldstein, 47, was hit by gunfire as he drove with his wife and parents near the West Bank town of Ramallah. Goldstein, who held both Israeli and U.S. citizenship and moved to Israel 15 years ago, was heading to a celebration in Jerusalem a day after his son's wedding.

Don't touch!

There are a few things I don't understand about the current monkeypox outbreak.

The name, for example. From everything I've read, monkeypox doesn't have any more to do with monkeys than chickenpox has to do with chickens or smallpox has to do with Gary Coleman. Scientists seem to think prairie dogs are to blame. The theory is the prairie dogs got it from a Gambian giant rat, although nobody seems to know how. My guess is they met in an Internet chat room and e-mailed DNA samples to each other. But I could be wrong about that.

VALUE SPEAK
Joseph Walker

All the doctors seem to know is that the infection in humans originally came from close contact with infected prairie dogs. Now, let me just say this about prairie dogs: THEY ARE NOT REALLY DOGS!!! Are we clear on this? They are rodents - you know, like rats, which explains their attraction to their Gambian counterpart.

In the American West, farmers and ranchers pay hunters who can't get enough killing during deer season to take out as many prairie dogs as they can find. They are pests, pure and simple (the prairie dogs, not the hunters). Trying to make pets of prairie dogs because they have the word "dog" in their name is like trying to get feathers out of a can of tuna because it has the words "Chicken of the Sea" on the can.

According to the Center for Disease Control (CDC), in humans the illness produces fever, headache, aching muscles, chills, drenching sweat and sometimes a rash. A rash on the head, torso and extremities. The lesions are firm, whitish and filled with pus. In a week or so, they crust over and turn into scabs. This, it seems to me, is a high price to pay for the thrill of petting an overgrown rat.

And the CDC agrees. In fact, they recommend that you avoid contact with any prairie dogs. Gambian giant rats - especially if they appear to be ill. Normally, one would think that this is a natural thing to do. Most people I know avoid prairie dogs and Gambian rats - giant or otherwise - like the monkeypox.

But for some reason, some people seem to enjoy monkeypox. I know with prairie dogs. It's the same reason - people - agree to appear on Jerry Springer, or crooks agree to be interviewed by Mike Wallace for "60 Minutes."

For these people, I would like to point out that you can tell a sick prairie dog by the fact that he may be missing patches of fur, have a visible rash on the skin or have discharge from the eyes or nose.

You're not eating dinner, are you?

The CDC further advises that you wash your hands thoroughly after any contact with prairie dogs, Gambian giant rats, or any ill animal. But I have a better idea. STAY AWAY FROM PRAIRIE DOGS AND GAMBIAN RATS. PERIOD!!! Isn't that easier? Just stay away from them. Don't go near them. Don't touch them. Don't play with them. Don't take them to preschool. Don't bring them with you on the bus. Just say no to rodents.

Simple, huh? But effective. In fact, it's the only real answer. And if not touching prairie dogs and Gambian rats helps us through the monkeypox outbreak, perhaps we can apply that same philosophy to other medical crises we face.

Just think of the impact on lung cancer rates if we all did that tobacco. Fatalities resulting from drunk driving would be eliminated if drivers didn't touch alcohol. And sexually transmitted disease would become a thing of the past if people didn't touch - well, if they all practiced abstinence before marriage and fidelity after. Just don't touch.

Hey, it worked in kindergarten. And we're a lot smarter now than we were then.

God's table

Twin Falls Methodists discover hidden treasure

By Joan Bean
Times-News correspondent

TWIN FALLS—An antique communion table took center stage at First United Methodist Church when pews and floors were being refinished. A plaque that had been turned to the wall revealed that the table had historic significance.

The Rev. Jim Frisbie, the church's pastor, said the table was in the back of the sanctuary and had been used for utilitarian purposes, to hold literature and such. The plaque was noticed when the table was moved.

It reads: "This communion table is from the First Methodist Episcopal Church in South Baltimore, Maryland, presented to the First United Methodist Church by Dr. and Mrs. William F. Passer in 1969."

The word "Episcopal" was used as an adjective to indicate that a church had bishops, Frisbie explained. He said when his congregation began looking closely at the old table, the people discovered that the construction indicated a very early origin.

The 24-by-36-inch table is held together with wooden pegs. The top is an inch-thick slab of marble, on a pedestal with single legs on each side going down to a four-foot structure below.

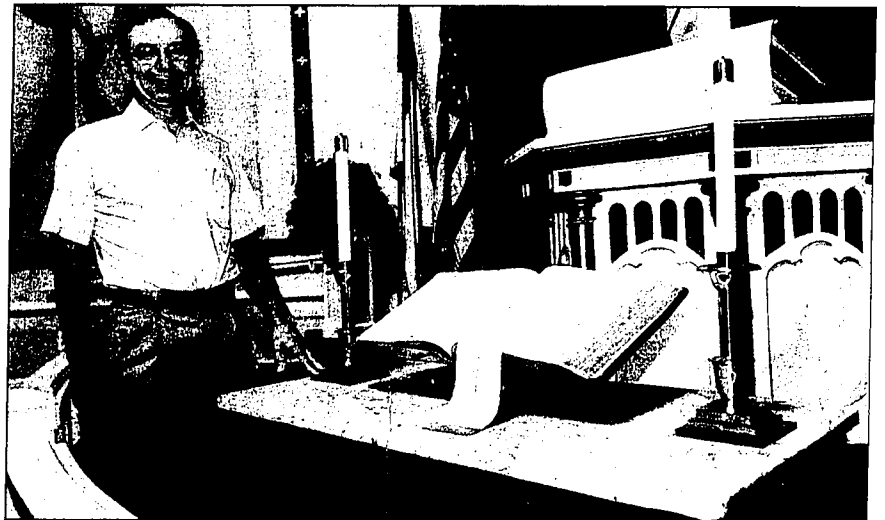

"With all of the centennial stuff going on, we found that we're somehow in possession of something that takes us back 200 years right at the time we're looking at the 300th anniversary of the birth of John Wesley, who was the founder of our denomination in 1703," Frisbie said.

English cleric Wesley first started the Methodist movement, which Frisbie described as a return to Scriptural Christianity within the church of England. But against the backdrop of the American revolution, followers of the same movement broke off and formed their own denomination.

"And out of that came the Methodist Church, both in England and America," Frisbie explained. "At present, the Wesleyan family of Methodists has grown to about 75 million worldwide."

After the Twin Falls Methodists began studying their antique table, Frisbie sent off digital photos and queries to the Lovely Land Museum in Baltimore, where the denomination was founded in 1784. Frisbie has not received any information about the monetary value of the table, but a historian told Frisbie the table's construction indicates it dates to about 1800.

"That would put it to be consistent with the table," Frisbie said. Please see TABLE, Page C2

First United Methodist Church Pastor Jim Frisbie stands behind a communion table that was donated to the church in 1969 by Dr. and Mrs. William F. Passer. The table, believed to be from the 1800s, had been sitting in the back of the church with the donation plaque up against the wall until it was moved to accommodate refitting of the church floor and pews. Only then was the table's importance discovered.

Methodists reflect on founder's anniversary

The Dallas Morning News

He started one of the world's largest denominations - unintentionally - but never joined it himself. He died with 70,000 devoted followers, but never found a happy marriage. A man of astounding accomplishment - and not a few paradoxes - John Wesley, the founder of Methodism, stands among the tallest figures in Christendom.

June 17 marked the 300th anniversary of his birth. Methodists worldwide commemorated the tercentenary with conferences, festivals and special worship services.

Even though he died in 1791, his influence is still very much alive.

"He not only founded a church," said the Rev. William K. Quick, a visiting professor at Duke Divinity

John Wesley School. "He founded a movement that has grown faster (worldwide) in the last 10 years than in any other period of its history."

Even though Wesley, an ordained priest, never left the Church of England, some 78 denominations within the World Methodist Council - with 76 million members worldwide - consider him a spiritual father.

Just as many a Christian asks, "What would Jesus do?" modern Methodists still consider, "What would Wesley say?" His writings remain part of the United Methodist Church's official teachings and a timely yardstick. When delegates at the United Methodist general conference considered their stance on homosexuality a few years back, Wesley's words were quoted from both sides of the debate.

The term "Methodism" came from Wesley's description of his approach - to Christianity, the methodical pursuit of holiness. Wesley viewed the practice of religion as more pragmatic than dogmatic. He balked at the Calvinist notion of predestination and at the idea that faith alone could bring salvation. He insisted that conversion to his method - he did not envision it, at first, as a separate denomination from the Anglican church - must be followed by a life of personal holiness.

"He combined a quest for holiness, a commitment to ecumenism and evangelism, and a catholic spirit, which overlooks differences in minor teachings as long as there is agreement on essential doctrines," said Scott Jones, a Wesley scholar at Southern Methodist University's Perkins School of Theology.

To begin to understand Wesley and his impact in his time, think of someone with the stature of

Couple believes Jesus would drive fuel-efficient car

Knight Ridder News Service

DETROIT - When the Rev. Jim Ball and his wife began their cross-country trip, they weren't sure how other drivers would react to the "What Would Jesus Drive?" signs on the doors of their Toyota Prius.

"We thought we might get a few interesting gestures along the way," Ball says.

That's a polite way of saying they knew fingers would be pointed at them, but which ones?

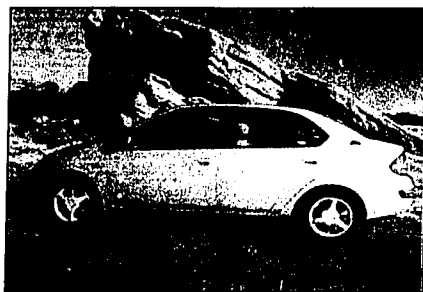

In Arkansas recently, a couple of men on motorcycles rode alongside their car. One of them pointed to the sign, then gestured to his own motorcycle, to indicate Jesus would be an easy rider, too.

"If couldn't quite argue with that," Ball says with a laugh. "They're pretty fuel efficient. I gave him the OK sign."

Ball, executive director of the Evangelical Environmental Network, and his wife, Kara, are spending part of the summer on the road to promote the "What Would Jesus Drive?" campaign.

The couple started their journey on May 29 in Austin, Texas, and plan to end it in Washington, D.C., on July 7. Along the way, they're making frequent stops to meet with religious and political leaders, preach and do interviews on Christian radio.

Their swing through the Bible Belt is another step in a campaign that started in November, when

The Balls are driving a Toyota Prius, a hybrid car that combines a gas engine with an electric motor.

Ball and his national coalition of evangelical Christians came to Detroit to kick off "What Would Jesus Drive?" and to join a delegation of interfaith religious leaders pushing for cleaner cars.

The publicity from that visit led to a high-octane national debate on whether there are moral aspects to fuel efficiency.

Critics dismiss "What Would Jesus Drive?" as a cleverly named crusade that obscures the fact cleaner cars are hardly a pressing moral concern. If Jesus were around today, they argue, he'd have more to worry about than transportation options.

Supporters of the movement say it relates to Jesus' most basic teaching: Love your neighbor. Taking care of the planet, their thinking goes, is akin to taking care of all God's creatures.

To drive the point home, Jim and Kara Ball are traveling in their 2003 Prius (PRE-E), a hybrid car that combines a gas engine with an electric motor. They bought the vehicle in October for about $20,500.

The journey is like many other religious revivals that have swept through the Bible Belt.

It also has the trappings of a classic summer road trip: snack food, long hours, which tourist sites to see.

Calling by cell phone just outside of Little Rock, Ark., Jim Ball, who's from Maryland, describes the couple's routine.

While Ball talks, his wife does the driving. At the moment, she's doing 64 mph in the right lane of a freeway where the speed limit is 70 mph. As usual, the other cars are passing them.

The weather's been good so far. So has the behavior of the drivers they meet. The couple haven't encountered the kind of road rage that would force them to contemplate another potentially intriguing topic - how would Jesus drive? Still, Ball is happy to contemplate the question.

"How we treat others in our vehicle, in terms of our driving, is certainly part of being a Christian," he says. "Aggressive types of driving, I don't think the Lord would want us to be doing that, things that put people in harm's way. We really haven't encountered too much of that yet."

The long hours on the road are usually spent doing phone interviews or navigating. Every once in a while, there's time for sightseeing. In Austin, they saw North America's largest urban bat colony, which lives under a bridge over the Colorado River.

As for the condition of the Prius, Ball says it's doing great. He stresses he's not out to promote a specific automobile and says he makes sure to tell people about other hybrid cars, current and upcoming.

Still, the Prius is a star of the trip. Wherever the Balls go, people want to look under the hood and examine the battery pack.

Ball says newcomers are surprised when the internal combustion engine goes off and the car, still running, turns quiet. They ask a lot of questions about the dashboard readout that tells where the energy is coming from at any given moment.

"We're giving them a tour, so to speak, of the car," says Ball.

He's urging the politicians he meets to consider using fuel-efficient cars for their government fleets. The mayor of Little Rock told him he'd never considered fleet purchases from a religious perspective before.

"A lot of people haven't," says Ball.

During the trip's final stop in Washington, D.C., Ball and other religious leaders plan to meet with representatives of the White House and Congress.

And when that happens, Kara Ball sounds as if she has her speech prepared.

"I'm trying to remember the last time we put gas in the car," she says. "We left Texas, we've been in Arkansas, we certainly won't need to fill up before we get to Nashville."

"We don't give it a thought."

Billy Graham, Mother Teresa's compassion for the poor and, at least by 19th-century standards, the ubiquity of Oprah.

Wesley traveled over 250,000 miles across Britain, mainly on horseback, preaching over 40,000 sermons during his lifetime, said 19th-century author of "On the Trail of John Wesley."

Wesley was born on June 17, 1703, in Epworth, England, the 15th child in a family of 19. His father, Samuel, was an Anglican priest; his mother, Susanna, a deeply disciplined woman of Puritan heritage. He attended Oxford with his brother, Charles (who went on to become a central figure in Methodism and one of England's most famous hymn writers). In 1738, John Wesley attended a service at a religious society in Aldersgate Street, London, where he had a "moment of grace" that profoundly affected him.

"Methodism was born that night," said Quick. From then on, it seemed, Wesley seldom stopped preaching. His fervor and penchant for extemporaneous prayer made enemies within the Church of England.

Wesley was far more successful in love than in ministry. His marriage in 1751 to Mary Vazelle was, by all accounts, a disaster. He refused to pare back his brutal preaching schedule. She grew weary of this and went home.

He preached his final sermon just six days before his death, in 1791, at age 87. Although he earned considerable sums from his writings, he died with only 10 pounds and a teapot to his name. Everything else, he'd given away to charity.

As Methodists celebrate the tricentennial of Wesley's birth, many hope that the United Methodist Church, the largest U.S. Methodist denomination, with 8.1 million members — will use the occasion, and their founder's example, to revitalize itself. While Methodist denominations are growing in Africa, Asia and Latin America, the United Methodist Church is shrinking in North America. Reports from last year's annual conference indicated that the church lost 43,200 U.S. members between 2000 and 2001.

"Today, the United Methodist Church is polarized between churches that are focused on works of mercy and those that focus solely on personal holiness to the exclusion of social action," said Steven Manskar, director of Accountable Discipleship for the United Methodist General Board of Discipleship. "Neither side can get along with the other. I think that would break Wesley's heart."

Wesley once wrote, "Give me 100 preachers who fear nothing but sin and desire nothing but God. Such alone will shake the gates of hell and set up the kingdom of heaven on earth."

Said Quick, "We're still looking for those 100 preachers, by the way."

temporary with Francis Asbury and some of the early leaders of the Methodist movement in this country," said Frisbie, adding that Asbury was the emissary that Wesley sent to America to oversee the work in the colonies before the American revolution.

Frisbie said the timeline of all this history is especially significant right now. The church recognized the birthday of John Wesley this week and also acknowledged its own centennial: The first Methodist pastor was appointed to Twin Falls in June 1903, before the city was even founded.

When that pastor reported back to the annual conference in 1904, he said, "The Twin Falls project is so crude as not to merit immediate effort, but bears watching."

By 1905, the church was up and running.

"In fact," Frisbie said, "it was chartered three months before the city was."

Jerome First Church of God Pastors Karen and Peter Page take K.C. Davis and Nate Pace for a ride in Lenny and Beverly Meyers' mule wagon, which will be available at the church's cow pasture revival next weekend. The children are the Meyers grandchildren.

To our readers
The story about Burley pastors visiting Russia was mistakenly promoted as running in today's religion section. It will appear next Saturday instead.

Jerome First Church of God is sponsoring the cow pasture event and potluck picnics for folks from all denominations and faiths. At the potlucks, the church will supply the main dishes — barbecued beef on Friday and Saturday and turkey on Sunday. The church will also supply paper plates and table service. Guests are asked to bring a side dish to share.

The men of the Jerome church recently attended a retreat in Caldwell. Church member Lenny Meyers said he had never met Davis, who spoke at this event.

"He fired up the audience and brought the retreat to life," Meyers said.

So Meyers approached him with a proposal for the Jerome revival. He told Davis that he had always wanted to do a revival in a field. Davis was interested.

Beverly Meyers, Lenny's wife, said church members will set up hay bails for seating, tents for shade, motor homes and lots of other places for folks to sit. Or people can bring their own folding chairs.

Brian Hildreth, of Twin Falls, will sing on Friday, XBAU, a local Christian Band, will perform on Saturday evening. There will also be games for the children, wagon rides and lots of fun, planners say.

Area church finally gets a pastor

By Steve Turner
Times-News correspondent

TWIN FALLS — Members of the Magic Valley Church of Christ say they are excited to have a new minister, after nearly five years without one.

Bill Clark and his family moved to town this month, after Clark was selected to be the Church of Christ pastor. Before the move, the family lived in Dallas, Texas, where Clark was attending The Center for Christian Education.

Clark and his wife, Jackie, have been married for 21 years. They have two boys — Caleb, who will attend the College of Southern Idaho; and Jason, who will be a senior at Twin Falls High School. Jackie Clark is a special education teacher who hopes to teach in the Magic Valley this fall.

While he serves as minister of the Magic Valley Church of Christ, Bill Clark will continue his education toward a master's degree in biblical counseling through Heritage Christian University. "We are eager to meet new friends and become involved in the new community," Clark said. He said approximately 70 people attend his church and 18 of them are young people, so youth ministry will be a major focus. He says the goal of the church, located at 2002 Filer Ave. E., is "to learn and apply the biblical principles taught in Scripture to build strong individuals, homes and communities."

One of the church's community outreach programs involves helping at Heritage Retirement Center, where members lead bible studies and singing. Also, Clark takes an annual mission trip to Russia, and will probably go again in January.

The Clarks are avid outdoor enthusiasts. "We love to camp, hunt, fish and just explore the great outdoors that God has created," Bill Clark said.

And the family is not unfamiliar with this part of the country. Clark was raised in Coeur d'Alene; and, before their move to Dallas, the family lived in Nampa.

"We are excited to be back home," Clark said, "and we are ecstatic that God has allowed us to minister in the most beautiful place in the country."

Pope faces divisions in Balkans

VATICAN CITY (AP) — Pope John Paul II flies into the thick of ethnic and religious divisions with a visit Sunday to Bosnia-Herzegovina, promoting efforts for reconciliation on his second trip to the former Yugoslavia in two weeks.

The pope recently returned from a five-day visit to Croatia, a Roman Catholic bastion in the Balkans. This time it will be a day trip to Banja Luka, a predominantly Serbian Orthodox city where Catholics are a small minority.

Throughout his nearly 25-year papacy, John Paul has been in the forefront of efforts to combat violence and foster peaceful coexistence, including in areas where Catholics have been accused of helping to fan nationalist sentiments.

John Paul spoke of his visit during his public audience Wednesday in St. Peter's Square, saying Bosnia's Catholic community was "committed to an important path of reconciliation and harmony."

The frail 83-year-old pope, who suffers from Parkinson's disease and knee and hip ailments, also asked for prayers to help him complete the trip.

During a Mass in Banja Luka, the pope will beatify a Bosnian Croat, Ivan Merz, who took a vow of celibacy and devoted his life to the Church in the early 1900s. He will also meet with political leaders and non-Catholic representatives, who are expected to include a delegation from the Serbian Orthodox Church in Belgrade.

The Mass will be celebrated in front of a monastery damaged by Serb shelling in 1995 and rebuilt after the war.

Minor league baseball team recruits Christians to park

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Minor league baseball players warmed up before a recent Nashville Sounds game to the salacious song "Girls, Girls, Girls" by Motley Crue.

But over at the concession area, a different tune was playing — a trio called Common Bond was crooning, "Here I am Lord, a vessel to be used. I'll go where You lead me. I'll do anything for You."

With heavy competition for the sports dollar, Nashville's Class AAA team is trying to lure more Christians into the stands in this city some call the buckle of the Bible Belt.

The team is staging five "Faith Nights" this season, offering church groups a game, a concert by a contemporary Christian act, fireworks, a hot dog and soft drink for as little as $10. It's a contrast in marketing for a team that also attracts the party crowd with a cheap beer night called "Thirsty Thursdays."

"These are blatantly Christian nights," said Brent High, a Sounds program manager who was brought in this season specifically to attract more youth and church groups. "It's a very new idea, but it's been wonderfully received by the area churches."

The first faith night attracted about 4,500 fans, still less than half-fall at the Sounds' Greer Stadium but a 40 percent increase from the same night last season.

Eric Kilby, left, on baritone saxophone, Kenn Hughes, on trombone, Scott Steward with his daughter Courtney, 3, on trumpet, and Michael Kemp on tenor saxophone, perform with the Christian contemporary band, Denver and the Mile High Orchestra, before the start of a Nashville Sounds, Class AAA, minor league baseball game May 23 in Nashville, Tenn.

High said other minor-league teams have staged church-oriented promotions — such as Baptist

Night and Lutheran Night — but he's not aware of any that have put on a full-fledged Christian concert series. At least one other team — in Washington state — has called him asking about it.

Jim Ferguson, spokesman for St. Petersburg, Fla.-based Minor League Baseball, also didn't know whether other teams had tried the promotion, but believes the idea merges nicely with one of the biggest selling points of the franchises. "It's very friendly from a financial standpoint," Ferguson said. "A family of four can come to the average minor league ballpark and spend $40 or less for tickets, hot dogs, drinks, parking and a program."

Minor league baseball peaked in 1949, when 448 teams in 59 leagues drew 39.8 million people to the parks. The second-best year was last season, when just 176 teams in 15 leagues drew attendance of 38.6 million.

High said the Sounds — AAA affiliate of the Pittsburgh Pirates — drew 298,000 fans last season and are on pace to attract between 350,000 and 400,000 this year.

Still, the Sounds must compete for fans with the NFL's Tennessee Titans and NHL's Nashville Predators, teams that didn't exist when the Nashville baseball team first hit the field in 1978. College athletics also can cut into the attendance base.

"Minor league baseball does a great job of tapping into local interest groups and sub-segments," said Rick Oliver, an economist who has done several studies on sports in Nashville. "They're tapping into a big market, and a legitimate market. I give the Nashville Sounds full credit for going after it."

Catholic bishops, lay board profess harmony on abuse reforms

ST. LOUIS (AP) — After days of outside criticism of their commitment to ridding the church of sexual abusers, the nation's Roman Catholic bishops insist their reform plan remains on track.

And they got a strategic boost from prominent Washington, D.C. attorney Robert Bennett, a member of the National Review Board, a lay monitoring panel whose chairman quit in disgust Monday.

Following a closed-door session Thursday, Bennett said "the overwhelming number" of U.S. bishops fully support the board's efforts. The meeting involved all bishops, three review board members and staffers conducting a review board investigation of the extent of past abuse. "If we don't get cooperation, we'll name names," Bennett added. With tensions seemingly resolved, the bishops are holding more private sessions all day Friday on whether to call an extraordinary national meeting, known as a "plenary council," to address the American church's problems.

The bishops' only public event scheduled for Friday is a midday news conference with Archbishop Michael Sheehan, temporary leader of the Phoenix, Ariz., diocese, where Bishop Thomas O'Brien resigned after a felony arrest over a hit-and-run accident in which a minor died.

On Friday night, Survivors Network of those Abused by Priests, a group of abuse victims that is skeptical of bishops' performance, began its first national assembly at a nearby hotel. The president of the U.S. hierarchy, Bishop Wilton Gregory of Belleville, Ill., said Thursday's private session helped bishops understand the review board's work. The flashpoint in recent weeks has been the board's survey of the extent of abuse cases, which is being conducted by the John Jay College of Criminal Justice. Refusal by California's bishops to file questionnaires caused a flare-up between Cardinal Roger Mahony and review board chairman Frank Keating and, in part, Keating's Monday resignation.

But lawyers for the California bishops and John Jay staffers worked out a compromise, announced Thursday.

Review board member Paul McHugh, former psychiatry director at Johns Hopkins University, said the bishops' lawyers were worried about complying with California law on confidentiality and employee rights.

The solution, he said, was providing information "in indisputable" to John Jay without changing the questionnaire itself.

Kathleen McChesney, director of the Office of Child and Youth Protection on the bishops' staff, said she and the review board believe "the issues raised thus far have been sufficiently addressed and everyone is moving forward."

Once the questionnaires are filed, the next big project is an audit of all 195 dioceses by McChesney's office on whether they are complying with reform measures the national hierarchy approved a year ago.

Archbishop John Myers of Newark, N.J., who had been critical of McChesney, said those differences have been resolved. He was irritated over McChesney's comments on statutes of limitations in filing abuse cases because state laws vary, and the fact that McChesney spoke to a New Jersey chapter of the lay group Voice of the Faithful.

Mother worries about child's visit to friends

DEAR ABBY: Last week, my 6-year-old daughter went to play at a classmate's house for the first time. When she came home, she told me that she and her little friend had seen a naughty video. Then she gave me a description of a couple engaged in an explicit sex act!

When I questioned her further, I was relieved to learn that she hadn't actually watched the video—she had seen a picture on a video cover that had been left lying around. Even so, I was horrified because I felt a part of my child's innocence had been stolen. I deeply regret that I allowed her to go to her friend's home.

Now I don't know if I should confront the mother. I value our friendship and would not want to alienate her. My husband says to let it go and not allow our daughter to visit that friend's house anymore. The car play her instead. However, I feel strongly that the mother should know about the incident. What do you think, Abby?

—CONCERNED PARENT IN SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

DEAR CONCERNED PARENT: Both girls are far too young to be exposed to adult entertainment. I agree with your husband that your daughter should not play at the friend's house. However, the mother should know what happened—so tell her, woman to woman.

DEAR ABBY: I am in the midst of a romance with a wonderful young man I'll call Bob. I'm crazy about him; and we're planning on a future together. His parents are the nicest people in the world.

There is only one problem. They are both chain smokers, and secondhand smoke seriously irritates my lungs. It has made me so sick that I've been bedridden for a week.

Bob understands completely—he's a nonsmoker—and has talked to his mother and father at length about my sensitivity to smoke. They claim they're trying to stop and that they will not light up around me. But it's not happening. Every time I see them, they're sitting on the other side of the room with the windows open—smoking.

DEAR ABBY

Abby, I have tried to be nice about it. I love Bob and I like his folks. I don't want to lose him. What should I do?

—SMOKE-FREE IN THE DEEP SOUTH

DEAR SMOKE-FREE: Your health must come first. If you cannot manage the addiction, under no circumstances should you be in a house, car or restaurant with them. If Bob loves you, he'll back you up.

DEAR ABBY: I am 15 and have been going with my boyfriend, "Chris," for only a month when I found out that my friend is moving to Arizona at the end of August. When I told Chris, he said he didn't see the point of our relationship if I'm leaving, and he broke up with me.

My problem is I have very strong feelings for Chris, and I'm going to be here all summer. That's a long time. Chris and I still talk and have met casually on different occasions, but he thinks I should concentrate on getting ready to start my "new life" without him. What's your opinion, Abby?

—TEXAS "MISSY"

DEAR "MISSY": Chris may have a point. Maintain a friendship with him, but don't expect an exclusive relationship. Give him marks for being practical and rational. Stay in contact after the move. Who knows where things might lead when you are both older.

'Finding Nemo' has teeth

By Brandon Fibbs
The Gazette (Colorado Springs)

COLORADO SPRINGS, Colo. — Dentists need better PR.

Just peruse some of the movies featuring dentists and you'll get the idea that these tooth doctors are harbingers of evil, twisting their thin dentist mustaches and cackling.

If a bumbling and sadistic W.C. Fields didn't drill the negative image into our psyches with "The Dentist" (1932), then a pain-loving Jack Nicholson certainly did in "Little Shop of Horrors" (1960).

For those lucky enough to have seen these classics, Sir Laurence Olivier's frightening performance as an ex-Nazi doctor loose in both New York City and Dustin Hoffman's mouth in "The Marathon Man" (1976) were enough to scare anyone off the dentist's chair forever.

And now comes the latest truer-than-truth in a long line of slanderous movies about dentists. Ladies and gentlemen, we give you "Finding Nemo." You may not realize it from the previews, but not all of Pixar's new masterpiece takes place underwater.

In fact, the whole reason anyone has to find little Nemo (a young clown fish) in the first place is because he has been scooped from the ocean and resettled in an aquarium that sits ... dum dum dum ... in a dentist's office!

The poor fish that call the small aquarium home find their only entertainment in watching the doctor drill away at root canals. They exchange technical orthodontic banter like pros, debating whether or not the dentist is using the correct tools and lament missing any part of the particularly messy procedures.

"Most of it was right on, and what wasn't was really close," said Dr. Roy Robbins of All-Care Family Dentistry in Colorado Springs.

Unless you were a dentist, you wouldn't know the difference. "What's this? Is he actually praising the film? Didn't he see the scene in which a giant pelican breaks into the office and wreaks havoc, scaring a lobby full of small children? Or when the dentist, distracted, accidentally yanks a tooth from a writhing patient?"

"I was impressed," said Dr. Joe Wilson of A Healthy Smile Dental Center. "I thought the movie was very good, and actually pretty accurate."

Angela Yowell of Citadel Terrace Dental Group also was impressed by the veracity of the film, particularly in the discussions of a root canal procedure and a tooth extraction.

Cancer's sign enters sun

IF JUNE 21 IS YOUR BIRTHDAY ... your personality is a study in contrasts: forward but retiring, reserved but dynamic. Foreign countries — their history and the lifestyles in them — fascinate you. You are interested in literature and philosophy. This year brings opportunities, including short-distance travel and the possibility of buying a boat, house or large item. There's financial ebb and flow, getting and spending.

ARIES (Mar. 21-Apr. 19): The moon entering your sign this morning helps you to make up your mind. Last-minute changes are concluded to your advantage. Later today an unusual challenge could be fortuitous.

TAURUS (Apr. 20-May 20): Abiding to rather rigid standards may prevent you from having fun. Let your hair down and join in a wildfall could be in store today. Your compatible sign is Aries.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Mercury and Venus, in tandem in your sign, bring a new sense of self-awareness. You take a second look at your appearance and how you come across. A video camera reveals all.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Today is the summer solstice, the longest day of the year, and the sun enters your sign. This should give you renewed vigor. Acknowledgement for work and career brings accolades and criticism.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): An introduction proves extremely valuable. You may be going on a blind date, which could prove amusing and turn out better than you expected, with a sharing of interests.

With release of fifth book, Harry series keeps getting better, better

By Deepti Hajela
Associated Press writer

It was worth the wait. And then some.

Fans of J.K. Rowling's series about the boy wizard Harry Potter have been without a new book in the best-selling series for three years.

But all those starved for another taste of life in the wizarding world are getting a rich feast in "Harry Potter and the Order of the Phoenix" (Scholastic, $29.99), the deeply satisfying fifth book in the seven-book series about the orphaned Harry and the evil foe who has been trying to do away with him for years.

Rowling has always had a seemingly inexhaustible supply of imagination, humor and wit, and each of her previous books has had more than its share of adventure and mystery. This one does as well, but what makes it stand out is its scope.

Everything is bigger in this fifth book, starting with the number of pages — the 670-page tome is by far the longest of the series. At this rate, the seventh book might have to be published in two volumes.

Harry's world now extends far past the grounds of Hogwarts School of Witchcraft and Wizardry, all the way to London. He comes in contact with people who aren't just the fellow students and teachers he normally deals with. He has to start thinking about the future, about what profession he'd like to take up after finishing school.

And most striking, the range of emotions is larger, and not just Harry's. Rowling's tone started to darken in the fourth book, and that doesn't stop here.

Yes, there are laughs and jokes between friends, pranks from the Weasley twins. But this isn't the same 11-year-old Harry readers met in the first book. This Harry is now 15, a teen-ager who has survived several encounters with Lord Voldemort, the evil wizard who killed Harry's parents and tried to kill Harry as a baby.

At the end of the fourth book, Harry had narrowly escaped from Voldemort, who regained the powers he lost when he tried to kill the boy all those years ago. Harry and his friends went to warn the wizarding world of the danger, but the powers-that-be don't want to hear it.

This fifth book opens about a month later, with Harry back among non-magical folk, desperate for any news about what Voldemort is up to. He's frustrated by the lack of information from his wizard friends, wondering if they're aren't telling him anything, because they don't have faith in him.

Rowling goes right into the action, with trouble coming for Harry almost immediately, followed by a reunion with his friends where he gets some answers but not nearly enough of them. It's a dangerous time for them all, watching out for both Voldemort and those in the establishment who are desperate to silence any voice that would disturb the status quo.

Back at school, things aren't much better. There's more work, disturbing changes in the way classes are taught, and Harry is constantly bothered by mysterious dreams.

And there's another death — a surprising one that will undoubtedly be difficult for Harry to bear. Nothing is simple anymore, not even Harry's relationships with the people he is closest to, and that's where Rowling really extends this series past the genre of children's stories.

There is all kinds of emotional interplay here, with seemingly everyone dealing with fear, confusion, frustration, regret. And Harry has to rethink his views of some people, after seeing they may not be the complete jerks or heroes he thought them to be. (Not everyone, though. Malfoy? Still an evil little sod.)

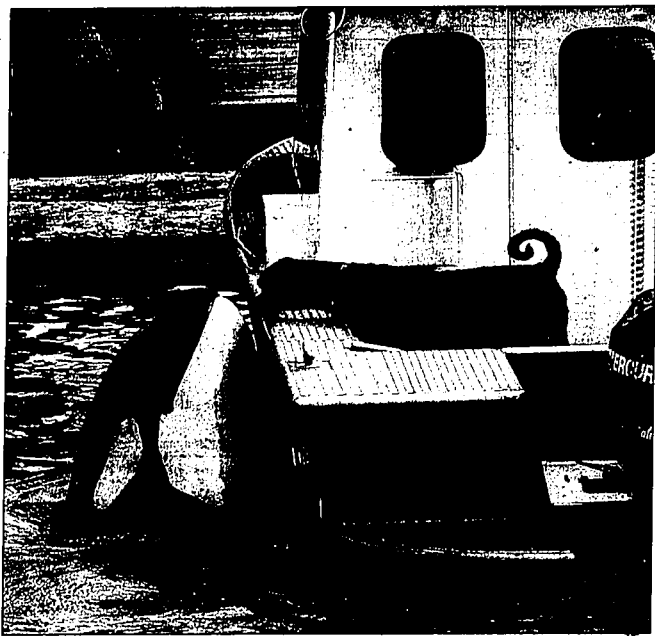

It all makes for an engrossing read.

Rowling must have some huge digram that helps her keep track of all the characters and threads she has seamlessly woven into this ongoing tale, because the tapestry is incredibly complex. There are references to all of the other installments and, more importantly, answers to some questions fans have been wondering about since the first book.

That includes the most important one, which Harry and fans have wanted to know since the beginning: Why had Voldemort tried to kill him when he was a baby?

The response — and what it means for Harry's future — is a doozy and will have legions of fans salivating for book six.

Assuming you, too, have had some bad depressions, what brought on the worst of sams? Behavioral researchers at the University of Minnesota tried to pin down the most common cause. Unsurprisingly, people quarrel in the matter most often said loved quarrels started their worst down times. They concluded: That which makes you happiest is what can make you saddest.

THE ACES ON BRIDGE

Bobby Wolff

"Diamond cut diamond."

—John Ford

Because South was playing a new minor suit forcing over a one-trump rebid, his jump to three spades was invitational, but North had a maximum and good fit, enough to accept the invitation.

South bid the hand well, but he failed to shine in the play. He won the heart-queen lead with dummy's ace and played three rounds of diamonds, discarding a heart from hand. Now, without seeing any possible danger, he played the spade queen from the dummy. East won the ace and got the defense exactly right when he cashed the heart king and then played a fourth round of diamonds. Whether declarer ruffed high or low, he tried to lose a second trump trick, and that meant four losers in all.

It is all very well to be wise after the event, but declarer should have seen the danger of an over-ruff in diamonds. Since he still had an unexpended heart loser after three rounds of diamonds, he should have played the fourth round of diamonds himself, discarding his heart loser. Now he must always make his contract, since there is no longer any plain suit for the defense to lead to create a trump promotion.

This maneuver is a variation of the loser-on-loser theme. You have not gained a trick by the side-slip. What you have done by leading the fourth diamond at the right moment is to prevent the defense from weakening your trump suit, and it is a useful weapon to have at your disposal.

♦ K Q 7
♣ Q 2

ANSWER: Bid one no-trump. Doubling is acceptable, but your flat hand-pattern suggests no-trump. Because the range for a protective one no-trump is 12-15, you are absolutely right on values for the one-no-trump call.
