Roberts' suspension stands

Commission ruling will make it tough for former principal to regain teaching certificate

By Robert Mayer
Times-News writer

BOISE — The state's educator ethics commission Wednesday upheld former Bickel Elementary School Principal Mary Lee Roberts' five-year suspension of her teaching certificate.

In addition, the Professional Standards Commission kept a condition that for Roberts to apply for reinstatement, she must prove that she successfully completed the Drug Court program and that she has had a clean drug history during her suspension.

The fact that Roberts was recently kicked out of Drug Court was not taken into consideration. Thus, as it stands, the decision makes it impossible for Roberts to regain her Idaho certificate.

Neither Roberts nor Roberts' attorney, William Hollifield, could be reached for comment Wednesday.

In March, a three-member commission panel concluded at a Twin Falls hearing that Roberts' act of mailing herself a pound of marijuana last summer violated the section of its code of ethics that prohibits educators from

Judge upholds dairyman's conviction

By Jennifer Sandmann
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — A judge Wednesday upheld dairyman Jack Tuls' animal cruelty conviction.

The case will be set for sentencing. Potential penalties for the misdemeanor offense include a fine ranging from $100 to $5,000 and up to six months in jail.

The case stems from an Idaho Department of Agriculture investigation at Tuls' former Dutch Touch Dairy near Filer. Fifth District Magistrate Judge Randy Stoker denied Tuls' motion for acquittal or a new trial.

Because Tuls waived his right to a jury trial, the judge had decided the case. The defense asked him to reconsider his ruling, which he affirmed Wednesday.

The Ag Department concluded that animal cruelty occurred at the dairy in connection with the treatment of sick and dying cows and turned the case over to Twin Falls County for prosecution.

Prosecutors charged Tuls with a single count of animal cruelty.

The judge said he reviewed and

A group of Cub Scouts rushes to get candy raining out of the sky after a 'candy cannon' went off Wednesday. The Snake River Council of the Boy Scouts of America is holding Cub Scout day camp at the College of Southern Idaho through Saturday. Officials expect nearly 1,000 boys to attend the camp.

Senators: Troops are likely staying put

Knight Ridder News Service

WASHINGTON — The Republican chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee and the panel's senior Democrat called Wednesday for President Bush "to level" with the American people and tell them the United States will have to maintain a major presence in Iraq for years.

In some of the strongest criticism of the administration's Iraq policy yet from Capitol Hill, Sen. Richard Lugar, R-Ind., the panel's chairman, and Sen. Joseph Biden, D-Del., its ranking Democrat, challenged Bush to solicit more help from NATO — including France and Germany, both of which opposed the war — and from the United Nations to stabilize the shattered country.

The pair, who along with panel member Sen. Chuck Hagel, R-Neb., visited Iraq last week, said the administration and Congress must come up with a long-term plan for Iraq, a move that probably would require stationing many U.S. troops there for years, as well as billions in reconstruction money.

Lugar's and Biden's high-profile criticism in separate appearances on Capitol Hill underscored growing concern in Congress about the Bush administration's policy on postwar Iraq, and their flexing of bipartisan muscle signals the likelihood of more assertive oversight from Congress in the months ahead.

"This is not a partisan thing," Biden said. "There's a gigantic gap between expectation and reality in terms of what the administration, in my view, had anticipated."

Lugar said it was time for Congress and the administration to "level" with the American people about the commitment it would take to stabilize and rebuild the country. He indicated that he plans to begin hearings on the administration's plans for postwar Iraq in coming weeks.

"This idea that we will be in just as long as we need to and not a day more — we've got to get over that rhetoric! It is rubbish!" Lugar said. "We're going to be there a long time."

Biden was even more emphatic. "The notion that we can get down to 30,000 Americans at the end of the year, as (Defense

Secretary Donald Rumsfeld suggested six weeks ago, I think is absolute fantasy, absolute fantasy. We need to get more troops in. They need to be more effective. We need to take a look at how we get more NATO forces in," Biden said.

Biden said that "maybe the most important impression I came with is that our folks on the ground really are doing a tremendous job. But no one back home understands how monumental this undertaking is going to be, how long it's going to take, how much it will cost, how many troops it will take. The president needs to level with the American people about this," Lugar and Biden faulted the administration for its assumptions about postwar Iraq, including the "decapitation theo-

Thousands help dedicate memorial on anniversary of Little Bighorn

The Associated Press

LITTLE BIGHORN BATTLEFIELD NATIONAL MONUMENT, Mont. — The early morning service was anything but mournful for George Amiotte and the hundreds of American Indians who gathered with him on a grassy ridge to pray and dedicate a memorial to their heroes — the warriors who won the Battle of the Little Bighorn.

"I know the spirits of our ancestors dwell here," Amiotte, a Sioux from Pine Ridge in South Dakota said, his long gray-tinged hair pulled back and decorated with feathers.

"It's a great day to be alive." Wednesday marked the 127th anniversary of the battle in which Sioux, Cheyenne and Arapaho warriors wiped out Lt. Col. George A. Custer and men from the 7th Cavalry on this hill above the Little Bighorn River.

The day also was set aside to dedicate a memorial that Indians have said was long overdue — one that honors the Indians who fought off an invading cavalry force.

Palestinian militants OK cease-fire; Bush remains skeptical

The Baltimore Sun

JERUSALEM — Three Palestinian militant groups agreed Wednesday to halt attacks on Israel for three months, an accord that remained tenuous as violence continued on both sides and local militia leaders said a formal truce was still days away. Underscoring the fragility of any agreement, an Israeli helicopter Wednesday fired missiles in Gaza that wounded a Palestinian militant and killed two bystanders. Earlier, Israeli soldiers fatally shot and killed two men who had fired on a tank, also in Gaza.

Israeli police meanwhile arrested two Palestinians with a 22-pound bomb northeast of Tel Aviv. And authorities in Jerusalem were put on high alert Wednesday night due to a report that a suicide bomber had infiltrated the city.

Palestinian officials cautioned that formal announcement of a cease-fire could still be days away. The tentative deal includes Hamas and Islamic Jihad, two Islamic movements known for suicide bombings, and the Aqsa Martyrs' Brigades, an armed faction of the mainstream Fatah party headed by Yasser Arafat.

A cease-fire would be an important step in advancing an U.S.-backed peace plan and could lead to an Israeli military withdrawal from much of the Gaza Strip. But President Bush, as well as Israeli Prime Minister Ariel Sharon, are pressing Palestinian officials to disarm Hamas and other groups, a step that Palestinian leaders could prompt a civil war.

"It's one thing to make a verbal agreement," Bush told reporters in Washington after word of the apparent cease-fire became public. "But in order for there to be peace in the Middle East, we must see organizations such as Hamas dismantled."

Of the agreement, Bush said: "I'll believe it when I see it."

Qadura Faris, a Palestinian legislator who participated in the negotiations, said militant leaders in Damascus, Syria — Khalid Mashal of Hamas and Ramadan

Shalah of Islamic Jihad — signed a case-fire agreement. Also agreeing to its terms were representatives of Fatah in the West Bank city of Ramallah.

Palestinian officials said Wednesday that the cease-fire agreement included a moratorium on attacks against Israeli soldiers and civilians living inside Israel as well as in settlements in the West Bank and in Gaza.

But the same officials said the agreement calls for Israel to stop targeting militant leaders for assassination, and also to end military forays into Palestinian-controlled areas of the West Bank and Gaza Strip, conditions Israeli leaders have already rejected.

Saeed Erekat, a Palestinian legislator, said that the cease-fire accord is not conditional on Israel reigning in its army. "The road map calls for both sides to end violence," he said. "Both sides have to bring quiet."

Sharon told a parliamentary committee Tuesday that he would continue to order airstrikes on Palestinian militants who are on their way to commit attacks, even in areas returned to Palestinian control.

"If the Palestinians take security responsibility for an area, they will be responsible for maintaining the cease-fire and will have to act to eliminate terror," he said. "If we identify an intention to commit a terror act, we will demand they take immediate action to foil it. But if they don't do so, we will act on our own."

Sharon and his aides have repeatedly criticized attempts by Palestinian Prime Minister Mahmoud Abbas to negotiate a halt to the violence instead of confronting the groups head-on. This week, a senior Israeli army officer for the West Bank and Gaza, Maj. Gen. Amos Gilad, told Israeli Radio that a cease-fire was "a threat to peace" and would lead to "murder on a wider scale."

In its missile attack Wednesday in Gaza, Israeli targeted Mohammed Seiyam, a local leader of Hamas who was riding in a white Peugeot. Doctors said they had to amputate one of his legs.

More than 8 million could lose overtime pay, study says

WASHINGTON (AP) — More than 8 million professionals would lose their overtime pay under a Bush administration proposal to change the types of jobs that must receive more money for extra work, says a study by a union-supported think tank.

The analysis being released Thursday by the Economic Policy Institute is among the first to assess how many workers might be affected by the Labor Department's revisions to the overtime rules, which were proposed in March.

Businesses and labor unions agree that the current Fair Labor Standards Act regulations are confusing and antiquated. But they disagree about how to update them.

The Labor Department estimated that under its proposal, at least 644,000 well-paid, white-collar workers would lose overtime pay for working more than 40 hours a week, while 1.3 million lower-wage workers now exempt from overtime would become eligible, or must receive a raise.

Overall, nearly 22 million workers could be affected, though specific jobs and their status could not be determined, officials said. But the institute says the department "woefully underestimates" the changes that would occur if the proposal is implemented.

In 78 job classifications that the group examined out of 257 white-collar occupations, an estimated 8 million workers would lose their right to overtime pay.

Another 1.3 million people would lose overtime pay under the proposed salary test that exempts all nonmanual workers earning $65,000 or more, regardless of their duties.

The new definitions of professional, administrative and executive employees remove specific duties and education requirements, giving employers wide latitude to reclassify their workers, the study says.

Among the millions of jobs that will lose overtime, according to the study, emergency medical technicians, paramedics, licensed practical nurses, draftsmen, surveyors, reporters, editors, chefs, cooks, dental hygienists and health technicians.

Workers covered by union contracts will not be affected.

Labor Department officials say the changes remove the focus on low-wage earners, which the law was intended to protect. Business groups long have complained that the convoluted rules require overtime pay for already well-compensated and highly skilled professionals while ignoring those at the bottom.

Grand jury indicts man in Louisiana serial killings

BATON ROUGE, La. (AP) — Derrick Todd Lee, suspected in the killings of six southern Louisiana women, was indicted on one murder charge Wednesday.

East Baton Rouge Parish prosecutors said they will seek three more indictments against Lee, who was indicted in the murder of Charlotte Murray Pace, 22.

Assistant District Attorney John Singsfield said prosecutors chose the Pace case first because it "had evidence of better quality and better quantity." He added that prosecutors will seek the death penalty.

SMITHSONIAN CEREMONY

Amadou Toumani Touré, President of Mali, enters the opening ceremony of the 37th Annual Smithsonian Folklife Festival in Washington Wednesday.

From Timbuktu to Tennessee, artists turn out for folklife event

WASHINGTON (AP) — Toe-tapping bluegrass, the plaintive sound of bagpipes and the rhythm of a masked African dance troupe transformed the National Mall into a cross-cultural playground Wednesday.

The performers turned out for the start of the Smithsonian's 37th annual Folklife Festival. This year, the 10-day festival features the cultures of Appalachia, Scotland and Mali.

The three cultures share musical traditions, said Jean Haskell, co-curator of the Appalachian portion of the festival. "There is so much of Scottish and Irish influence on Appalachian music, and the banjo is an instrument out of west Africa," Haskell said.

Bluegrass musician Ralph Beard of Blountville, Tenn., got people dancing as he played the fiddle during the opening ceremony. Among them was Douglas Meade, a neighbor of Blair's who says he traveled to Washington to support his friend and his roots.

"We've got to promote our culture. We need to be proud of who we are and where we come from," Meade said. "We've got to dispel the stereotypes about Appalachia."

Festival visitors can sample Appalachian food such as collard greens and hear storytellers spin their tales on a front porch designed to resemble those found in the mountains of West Virginia or Kentucky.

The Scottish portion of the festival highlights the country's golf tradition and offers visitors a chance to try their hand at a putting green. Exhibits also will demonstrate Scotland's whiskey-making and weaving traditions.

Visitors who check out Mali's contribution to the festival "will learn first of all that Timbuktu really exists," said Vanessa Adams, a Peace Corps volunteer who has lived in Mali and helped organize the festival.

Now a small trading town on the edge of the Sahara, Timbuktu was a much bigger trade center under the Mali empire 600 years ago. It had three of West Africa's greatest mosques and was a center of Arab physics, astronomy and mathematics as well as religion.

"People often say that mountains, they never meet. And today we just tried to prove the opposite. We have brought Timbuktu to Washington," said Mali's president, Amadou Toumani Touré, who attended the opening ceremony.

Senators decry treatment of immigrants after 9-11

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Justice Department's mistreatment of illegal immigrants arrested after the Sept. 11 terrorist attacks — some prisoners were dragged by their arms, slammed into walls and told "you're going to die here" — was wrong and should never happen again, senators said Wednesday.

"Neither the fact that the department was operating under unprecedented trying conditions nor the fact that the 9-11 detainees were in our country illegally justifies entirely the way in which some of the detainees were treated," said Senate Judiciary Chairman Orrin Hatch, R-Utah.

However, the department is working to make changes and should not be condemned as long as those changes are made, said Sen. Charles Schumer, D-N.Y.

"I think the Justice Department didn't do a fine job, but under the circumstances, as long as they move to make changes, they don't deserve the opprobrium that I have heard from some quarters about this," Schumer said.

The Senate Judiciary Committee is investigating a report by the department's inspector general on the Bush administration's actions toward the 762 foreigners held on immigration violations after the Sept. 11, 2001 attacks.

The report said the Justice Department classified illegal immigrants swept up in the investigation as Sept. 11 detainees without quickly investigating whether they had anything to do with the attacks. It took an average of 80 days for some to be cleared, while more than a fourth took more than three months.

Critics say Pentagon's rules for military terror trials are unfair

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Pentagon's rules for trying terrorism suspects before military tribunals are unfairly stacked in favor of prosecutors, critics said Wednesday.

The guidelines for the military tribunals allow suspects and their civilian lawyers to be barred from some proceedings, restrict defense investigations and don't allow for review by independent courts, said military law experts and human rights groups opposed to the system.

"These (rules) are fundamentally contradictory to the American tradition of a fair trial," said Michael Noone, a professor at Catholic University's law school and a retired Air Force colonel.

President Bush has ordered the military to prepare for commissions to hold trials for terrorism suspects who are not U.S. citizens. No trials have been ordered yet, but candidates for the tribunals include some of the alleged al-Qaida leaders in U.S. custody after the 680 or so al-Qaida and Taliban suspects held at the Navy base in Guantanamo Bay, Cuba.

British forces hunt comrades' killers

MAJOR AL-KABIR, Iraq (AP) — British forces hunted on Wednesday for Iraqis who killed six of their colleagues during a shooting rampage in which gunmen overpowered a group of badly outnumbered military police — including four cornered inside a police station.

But British troops stayed out of sight in this southern Shiite town, where residents are angry over the deaths of four Iraqis, allegedly at the hands of British soldiers.

The violence in Major al-Kabir, 180 miles southeast of Baghdad, shattered the peace that had reigned in Shiite-dominated southern Iraq since the fall of Saddam Hussein and spurred British authorities to consider reinforcing its troop presence in Iraq.

Unlike recent attacks on U.S. forces near Baghdad — blamed on remnants of Saddam's regime or the ousted dictator's Sunni followers — the violence here came from Shiites enraged over the death of their neighbors and over weapons searches in homes and schools.

"The people considered it an invasion of privacy," said Abu Zahra, a 30-year-old vendor.

On Wednesday, the police station was most of the British were killed bore the marks of a gunbattle, with walls pocked full of bullet holes. Broken glass and bloodstains covered the floor.

The mayor's office — where the day's unrest began with a protest that turned violent — also showed signs of a siege, with grenade shrapnel in a bathroom and damage from an explosion on a sidewalk.

On Tuesday, about 100 residents protested the British weapons sweeps in a four-hour demonstra-ed outside the mayor's office, where a dozen British troops were posted, witnesses said. Protesters threw rocks, and British troops fired back with rubber bullets before switching to live ammunition, the witnesses said.

Local police and Iraqi witnesses said four Iraqis were killed, and that armed residents then killed two British military policemen.

Shortly afterward, the witnesses said, some Iraqis went to their homes to get weapons. At least 20 armed Iraqis stormed the police station, where four British military police were located along with Iraqi policemen.

One British soldier was shot and killed at the station's doorway; the three others were slain after Iraqis stormed the station and cornered them in a single room, said Salim Mohammed, a member of a municipal security force.

A British military spokesman, Capt. Adam Marchant-Wincott, said he could not confirm the Iraqi witness accounts. He said he could not say whether the British forces had fired at demonstrators but added that they would do so only if their lives were threatened.

Task of rebuilding Iraq remains with military

The Washington Post

BAGHDAD, Iraq — Two months after the fall of Baghdad, the critical task of postwar rebuilding and governance of most Iraqi cities remains in the hands of U.S. military personnel, almost all of whom lack expertise in government administration and familiarity with the Arab world.

Some current and former U.S. officials involved in the reconstruction effort contend that the failure to more quickly involve civilian reconstruction specialists in the postwar occupation has delayed resumption of local government operations and led to resentment among the nearly 20 million Iraqis who live outside the capital.

"The reliance on the military has been a mistake," a senior U.S. official here said. "You need civilians in an operation like this. This is both a political and a military operation. We need to emphasize the political dimension more."

Although there are about 1,000 people working for the U.S.-led civil occupation authority in Baghdad, almost all of them are based in a vast presidential palace complex on the banks of the Tigris River. Outside the capital and a few other large cities, the job of local administration and reconstruction remains the responsibility of the military's civil affairs teams, which are staffed largely with reservists.

The teams were established and trained to provide emergency humanitarian aid, deal with refugees and perform basic infrastructure repair — not rebuild town governments, set up courts, disburse salaries, sort out agricultural problems or many of the other chores they have been forced to perform in postwar Iraq.

"We've been given a job that we haven't prepared for, we haven't trained for, that we weren't ready for," said a senior civil affairs officer in central Iraq. "For a lot of the stuff we're doing, we're making it up as we go along."

Although their mandate is to work with the civilian population, civil affairs personnel are soldiers first. They wear fatigues, carry weapons, deploy around Humvees and report up the military's chain of command. They have little communication, if any, with civilian reconstruction officials in Baghdad.

Their continued involvement in reconstruction — and the absence of civilian personnel — has perplexed and annoyed many Iraqis. "We would rather deal with civilians," said Rasool Said, 51, a local tribal leader in Bani Salim, a dusty farming town about 30 miles north of Baghdad. "The military men are there to wield power. It is the civilians who do humanitarian work."

In Bani Salim, the jobs of mayor, utility manager, public security chief, school superintendent, agricultural problem-solver and general complainant have fallen to Capt. Gary Cavanaugh, a U.S. Army reservist who normally works as a respiratory therapist in

New Hampshire. Although he has no prior experience in civil administration, Cavanaugh is saddled with a variety of complex reconstruction duties, from getting electricity running again to screening candidates who hope to run for a new town council.

"What we're doing now is never something we expected to do," he said. "We figured we'd provide some emergency assistance and then we'd be out of here."

Cavanaugh's boss, Lt. Col. Randy Grant, a hospital training administrator from Colorado Springs, said he had assumed that if his unit were asked to perform tasks other than humanitarian assistance, it would be given specific instructions. But, he said, none were issued.

"I had an expectation that when all the fighting was said and done, somebody would hand you a book and say, 'Here's the game plan,'" said Grant, who is responsible for the province of Diyala, which sprawls from Baghdad's northeast fringe to the border with Iran, about 60 miles away.

U.S. officials involved in the reconstruction said the decision to rely on military civil affairs units outside Baghdad was driven by a personnel shortage in the civil occupation authority. "We didn't have the people to head out to each province," the senior official said. "Before the war, nobody stopped and said, 'Aren't we going to need a bunch of people in the provinces?'"

The military guys said they had the people to do the job, and since this operation was run by the Pentagon, they went along with it," the official said.

Some people in the occupation authority believe the U.S. government needs to create a modern version of the old British colonial service, dispatching legions of young diplomats and others with specific technical experience to small towns and provincial capitals. "But that would have required a degree of planning in which the United States government did not engage," the official said. "Getting the military for postwar governance should have been the last option, not the first."

Iraqi companies fight for roles in rebuilding effort

Los Angeles Times

AL MAT BRIDGE, Iraq — Beneath a bombed-out highway overpass in Iraq's western desert, Ibrahim Jassem is doing his best to head off the next invasion.

The 53-year-old road-grader operator was hired early this month to help build a bridge bypass, under one of the first reconstruction subcontracts awarded to an Iraqi company. If Inc. had been a point of picking a local company, Jassem's job might have gone to a foreigner, perhaps from Jordan. But the people are looking for jobs — engineers, equipment operators," said Jassem, who went without work for two months and has a wife and eight children at home. "Why should Iraq depend on outsiders? We have our own."

Jassem's employer, Baghdad-based Al-Bunna Trading Co., was chosen under what amounts to a preferential hiring program for subcontractors. San Francisco-based Bechtel says it expects 90 percent of the work done under its $1.1-billion prime contract to go to subcontractors, and it plans to steer two-thirds of that business to Iraqi companies.

Some prominent Iraqis say

that's not good enough. Voluntary efforts like Bechtel's are a start, they say, but what is really needed is a preference program with teeth. They want the U.S.-led coalition to require foreign investors and business owners to become partners with Iraqis as a condition of doing business here. Otherwise, they say, Iraqi companies may get left at the postwar starting gate.

Some Iraqis need to come first," said Hareth Zuhairi, an Iraqi-British businessman whose Al-Zuhairi Group landed a subcontract from Halliburton Co. to provide labor and procurement services for allied authorities in Baghdad. He's hiring only Iraqis, and so far has put about 400 on his payroll.

Zuhairi is helping organize a coalition of business and industry associations to lobby for reconstruction work, pressure contractors to hire Iraqis, and promote a proposal to require 51 percent Iraqi participation in new business ventures.

"Iraqis can't stand up to Kuwaiti and Saudi contractors," he said. "Some of them will go belly-up. The rest will be bought out while the big fat cats of the (Persian) Gulf who have had a 40-year head start will eat them alive."

Sabotage hinders reconstruction effort

Knight Ridder News Service

BAGHDAD, Iraq — The top American administrator in Iraq said Wednesday that efforts at reconstruction were being held back by a campaign of sabotage.

L. Paul Bremer, the head of the Coalition Provisional Authority, said most of Baghdad had been without electricity for some two days because a central power line from the northern town of Baiji was destroyed.

"It's almost certain that 'the saboteurs are rogue Baathists or remnants' loyal to former leader Saddam Hussein," Bremer said. He didn't give any details of what, exactly, happened to the line.

He also didn't say whether looting, rather than sabotage, might have been responsible. Much of the country's physical infrastructure — including some wiring — can be sold as scrap metal. After the war, looters were carrying valuable hardware — generators, wires and pipes — through Baghdad.

A spokesman at the central authority, but the U.S. Army's media operations said he could give no further explanation.

Bremer gave no date for when all the lights will come back on in Baghdad, said an aide, but said that coalition officials are working hard to fix the Baiji line.

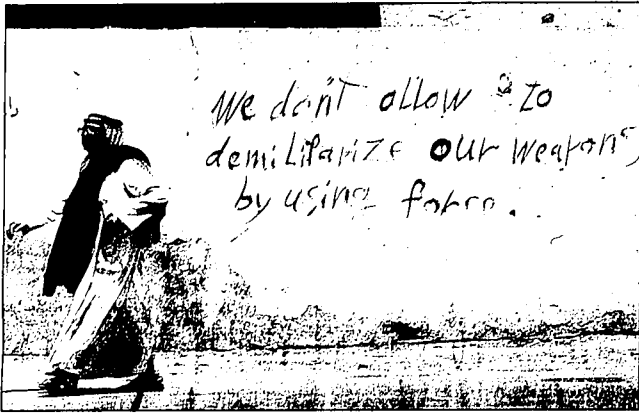

There's no bigger subject these days than the lack of electricity in Baghdad, where temperatures flirt around the 120-degree mark because the water-treatment plant on the electrical grid, that too, has been affected, and some looters have resorted to drinking from the polluted Tigris River.

Many residents are getting angrier and angrier.

"I can't wait security for Americans in Iraq, but we must make things better for Iraqis," said Hussein Hamzawi, who runs a printing shop.

The price for a quarter block of electricity in Iraq has risen from about 38 cents to 1,500 dinars during the past week.

"But, hot, hot, I can't sleep. I can't eat. It's making me sick," said Kareema Kardon, 63, who walks more than a mile and a half from her home to work as a house cleaner, earning 1,500 dinars a day.

A man walks by writing on a wall denouncing the use of force to collect weapons from Iraqi homes at Amarah, south-east of Baghdad.

"We don't need anything from the Americans but water and electricity."

Kardon had been sleeping in the road for hours until this week, hoping for night breezes. She stopped after a falling bullet grazed his left thigh.

Coalition officials say maintaining utility service in Baghdad, and the country as a whole, is difficult because it's made up of a hodgepodge of equipment of different ages from a wide range of countries. Before the war, Bremer said, Iraq generated only about 65 percent of the power it really needed, with the capital city sucking a lot of electricity away from outlying provinces.

Correcting the situation, Bremer said, will take months, if not years, and hundreds of millions of dollars.

The continuing shortages of basic services in Baghdad worsen an already tense situation, in which one U.S. soldier was shot by a sniper this month and another our satisfactory. He said he urged President Bush in his talks Tuesday to establish an Iraqi government as quickly as possible.

The Bush administration is eager to make the security force more international, both to lessen the perception of U.S. dominance and to ease the burden on U.S. troops. More than 40 countries have agreed to send soldiers, according to Pentagon and State Department officials, but without a firm commitment from Pakistan or India, the total is only about 20,000 soldiers.

Yemeni troops attack

Islamic militants, killing six

HATAT, Yemen — Yemeni troops attacked an Islamic militant group's mountain hide-out Wednesday, killing at least six militants and capturing 11 others, after negotiations for their surrender fell apart, the government said.

The military had been surrounding the hide-out for days, seeking the surrender of gunmen who fled there after attacking a military medical convoy last weekend, wounding seven soldiers.

The gunmen belonged to the Aden-Abyan Islamic Army, a group sympathetic to al-Qaida that has been linked to last year's attack on a French oil tanker off the coast that killed one crewman. The government has been negotiating through clan leaders with the group, holed up near the village of Hatat, 280 miles south of the capital, Sana'a. The group was refusing to surrender, a clansman involved in the talks told The Associated Press.

U.S. officials take suspected al-Qaida despite court order

BLANTYRE, Malawi — U.S. officials flew five men suspected of helping funnel money to al-Qaida out of Malawi, despite a court order preventing their deportation, Malawian officials said Wednesday.

The men were arrested Sunday night with assistance from the CIA and handed over to U.S. authorities Monday night, Malawi intelligence officials told The Associated Press on condition of anonymity.

Director of Public Prosecutions Fahad Assani said the men were handed over to U.S. authorities but he said he had not been informed of their whereabouts. "These people are out of reach for us. It's the Americans who know where they are," Assani told the AP.

Officials in Malawi said the five suspects had been on the CIA's "watch list" since the twin 1998 truck bombings of U.S. embassies in Kenya and Tanzania. U.S. authorities blame Osama bin Laden's al-Qaida network for the attacks, which killed 231 people, including 12 Americans.

Air Force pilot in mistaken bombing refuses lesser charges

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — A fighter pilot who mistakenly bombed Canadian soldiers in Afghanistan last year, killing four, refused to accept the Air Force's offer of lesser charges Wednesday and could now face a court-martial on charges including homicide.

The Air Force had offered Maj. Harry Schmidt the option of avoiding military court by instead going to a civilian criminal hearing. He turned that offer down Wednesday, leaving the Air Force a range of options, including prosecuting him on criminal charges, giving him a letter of reprimand or doing nothing.

Schmidt's lawyer, Charles W. Gittins, said in an emailed statement that the pilot believed he could not get a fair administrative hearing. The hearing would have been overseen by Lt. Gen. Bruce Carlson, who Gittins said has already determined Schmidt is guilty. Carlson on Tuesday refused to recuse himself from the case.

If convicted at court-martial on the most serious possible charges — aggravated assault, involuntary manslaughter and dereliction of duty — Schmidt could face up to 64 years in prison.

"Imposition of punishment in my case is a foregone conclusion," Schmidt wrote in his response to the Air Force's offer. He cited a June 16 memo from the 8th Air Force to Air Force headquarters that refers to Schmidt's "lack of judgment" and his violation of flying regulations and procedures.

An Air Force spokeswoman did not immediately return a call for comment Wednesday.

Carlson last week recommended the administrative hearing for Schmidt. At the same time, he recommended dropping charges against Schmidt's partner in the mission, Maj. William Umbach, and allowing Umbach to retire.

The two Illinois National Guard pilots had been the first Air Force pilots to face the possibility of homicide charges as a result of friendly fire during combat.

Schmidt, 37, has maintained he did nothing wrong, saying the Air Force gave him no warning that allies would be performing live-fire exercises the night of April 17, 2002, when he dropped the laser-guided bomb. He said he mistook the Canadians for Taliban fighters.

The bombing near Kandahar killed Sgt. Marc Legner, Pvt. Richard Green, Cpl. Ainsworth Dyer and Pvt. Nathan Smith and Sgt. Marc and wounded eight other Canadians. They were the first Canadians to die in combat since the Korean War.

The case against the two U.S. pilots has been closely watched in Canada, where many were outraged by the bombing and the two days it took President Bush to publicly apologize.

Relations of the Canadian soldiers were disappointed when Carlson last week recommended that Schmidt be punished for lesser offenses, including failure to ensure that the troops he attacked were not allies and to obey when air controllers told him to "stand by" before he dropped the bomb.

Maddox, segregationist governor, dies

Former Georgia official maintained his beliefs to the end

ATLANTA (AP) — Lester Maddox, who was elected one of the last of the South's first-class segregationist governors in 1966 after he and his friends used pick handles and a gun to scare blacks away from his fried-chicken restaurant, died Wednesday at 87.

Maddox never backed down from his stance on segregation, even after Alabama's George Wallace and many of the other hard-line Southern governors eventually said they were wrong to fight integration.

"I think forced segregation was wrong. I think it was just as wrong to force integration," he told The Associated Press in 1996. And if he had it to do it over again, he said, "I'd fight even harder."

"That puts a stain on the legacy," said state Rep. Tyrone Brooks, a civil rights veteran. Maddox served as governor from 1967 to 1971 after being elected as something of a fluke in a disputed contest that had to be decided by the Legislature. Despite his views on integration, he was more moderate as governor than most expected, appointing more blacks to key positions than any of his predecessors.

"In spite of all that, he couldn't shake the yoke of racism and segregation," Brooks said. "If Lester had said, 'I was wrong,' I believe the vast majority of African-Americans would have said, 'OK, we forgive you.'"

Maddox had battled cancer since 1983 and cracked two ribs earlier this month when he fell at an assisted-living home. He later developed pneumonia and died in an Atlanta hospice.

The flamboyant restaurant owner often seemed more caricature than flesh. His slick pate and thick glasses were fodder for cartoonists, and he was known for quaint sayings and outrageous gestures like riding a bicycle backward. "How you, chief?" was one customary greeting. Another: "It's great to be alive. A lot of folks aren't, you know."

A high school dropout born in a working-class section of Atlanta, Maddox gained national attention in 1964 when he brandished a pistol and chased black protesters from his Pickrick restaurant the day after the Civil Rights Act was signed into law. Whites from his restaurant chased the protesters with pick handles. Maddox closed and then sold the Pickrick rather than serve blacks.

He would adopt the pick handle as his political symbol during his gubernatorial campaign and thereafter, and sold souvenir picks and pens.

Maddox's showmanship and his anti-integration stance won him a following in Atlanta, where he made two unsuccessful bids for mayor.

He captured the Democratic nomination for governor in 1966, despite being written off by moderates and liberals as a colorful crackpot.

Former Georgia Gov. Lester Maddox brandishes a small pistol during an unsuccessful attempt by three black men to desegregate his restaurant July 3, 1964, in Atlanta, Ga. The day after the Civil Rights Act was signed into law. He closed and then sold the restaurant rather than serve blacks, but later, during his 1967-71 governorship, pursued a policy of relative moderation on race.

In the general election, he trailed Republican Howard H. "Bo" Callaway, but wrote in votes for other candidates assured that neither received the required majority, throwing the election to the Democrat-dominated Legislature, which picked Maddox.

Despite his reputation, Maddox began his term in office with a vow that "there will be no place in Georgia during the next four years for those who advocate extremism or violence."

But in 1968, Maddox refused to close the Capitol for the funeral of the Rev. Martin Luther King Jr., and expressed anger that state flags were being flown at half-staff.

Maddox got high marks from critics for choosing capable administrators to run state operations during his term and for making the office accessible to anyone through a program called "Little Peoples Day."

And supporters loved "Old Lester" for the way he denounced the Atlanta newspapers as "fish-wrappers" or condemned the latest ruling from the U.S. Supreme Court.

Barred from seeking a second term, he was elected lieutenant governor, using the post to spar with his successor, Jimmy Carter. He ran for governor again in 1974 and lost. A final comeback bid in 1990 saw him finish last in a five-person race. "I'm still a segregationist. I just told you I'm a segregationist. I've told you that 15 times. When are you going to start believing me?" he said in 1973.

Wallace was among Maddox's heroes, but toward the end of his career Wallace sought to make amends on segregation. Maddox said he still regarded Wallace as "my buddy," but told the AP that Wallace "was either a liar then or he's a liar now."

Former state Rep. Matt Towery, a longtime Maddox friend, said the former governor "believed what he did was proper in the 1960s. He was unapologetic for it." But Maddox "did not have a racist bone in his body when I came to know him in 1969."

Bush nudges GOP to back Medicare bill

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Bush nudged conservatives to support a Medicare prescription drug and modernization bill on Wednesday, pledging all the "effort and energy" needed to prevail on showdown votes in Congress.

"We have an historic opportunity to seize the moment," Bush said as House GOP leaders made last-minute changes in their bill to build support. Across the Capitol, senators sought elusive compromise on an issue that laid bare deep-seated differences between Democrats who favor the existing government-run program and Republicans eager for free-market competition.

"We're working on it," said House Speaker Dennis Hastert, R-Ill., as GOP leaders also fielded complaints from lawmakers opposed to proposed cuts in payments to doctors who administer cancer drugs, to reductions in projected spending for hospitals and to a provision imposing higher costs on seniors needing home health care.

Rep. Gil Gutentag, R-Minn., who favors legalized importation of lower-cost prescription drugs from Canada, sat down to lunch with Health and Human Services Secretary Tommy Thompson in the Capitol. Afterward, he said he remained undecided on the bill, adding that Thompson declined to give clearance to a Senate-passed plan to allow Canadian pharmaceuticals into the United States.

Senate Democrats pressed their case for a more generous prescription drug benefit in a day-long debate. But few of their proposals, if any, were expected to succeed, and Democratic leader Tom Daschle of South Dakota said "perhaps as many as half of our caucus, perhaps more," would support the bill anyway.

While the outcome of the day's Senate votes seemed inevitable, the more unpredictable development was a move in the Capitol's back rooms and in the White House, where Bush met with Republicans unhappy to be voting on legislation that creates a program of universal health care.

"I didn't come here (to Congress) to create new entitlements," said Rep. Mike Pence, R-Ind., who was among the lawmakers invited to meet with Bush. "I can't vote for a universal drug benefit."

Republican officials, speaking on condition of anonymity, said two dozen more conservatives were threatening to withhold support from the bill, either on the grounds cited by Pence or because it fell short on provisions to introduce free-market competition into the program.

"I never thought it was going to happen," said Donlin Mayhew, a Northern Cheyenne. "But today it did happen and I'm very glad so many people came out — came out to see what kind of people we are, the proud people we are."

National Park Service officials estimated that 4,000 people attended a dedication ceremony that featured speeches from tribal leaders, Interior Secretary Gale Norton and Sen. Ben Rayburn-Nelson, R-Colo., a Northern Cheyenne who helped push the legislation authorizing a memorial.

The ceremony also paid tribute to Lori Pietsewa, a Hopi Indian who died in the war with Iraq.

"You have given the ultimate price and that is why we are here today," Montana Gov. Judy Martz told Pietsewa's family as she embraced them.

Congress authorized a memorial to the Indian participants of the Battle of the Little Bighorn in 1991, in legislation that also changed the battlefield's name from Custer Battlefield National Monument. But lawmakers didn't provide funding for the Indian memorial until 10 years later.

On June 25, 1876, Custer and about 260 men attacked an Indian village along the Little Bighorn River. But Custer badly miscalculated the size of the force that he and his 7th Cavalry troops would face. By some estimates, as many as 2,000 Sioux, Cheyenne and Arapaho warriors routed Custer and counter-attacked.

The cavalrymen, including Custer and Indian scouts, died in the battle. The Indians were estimated to have lost fewer than 100 warriors.

The dead cavalry have been honored for more than a century with a grant of obelisk atop Last Stand Hill, with white headstones marking where Custer and his men fell.

Their memorials now share the battlefield with a very sculpture of Indian warriors, the stone circle — a sacred symbol to many tribes — and an open space for tribal ceremonies.

Sioux, Cheyenne and Arapaho tribal members arrived before dawn to set up camp. From the hundreds of onlookers, some camera-toting tourists and many Indians who hummed and swayed to the thundering beat of traditional Indian drums.

Indian activist Russell Means made a surprise appearance at the dedication ceremony, riding in on horseback and walking onto the stage before the other speakers had arrived.

"I want to tell you a little of the history here before the government reverts it," he told the crowd, many in it cheering as he introduced himself. Means said he had been among Indian activists pushing for a memorial since the 1970s.

The memorial's location along the battlefield ridge-top is important, he said, because it will be the last thing visible as visitors leave.

"The memorial is not about war. It's not to remember war," he said. "The last thing you'll remember when you're leaving is us."

re-reviewed the case and looked at it "inside out" and "upside down."

Witness testimony at trial described a cow that had been left for at least two days lying on in the dirt, covered with mud and manure, near death and apparently dehydrated. Witnesses testified that Tuls was managing the dairy at the time and was in charge of daily operations.

"He should have seen what was there," Stoker said Wednesday. "I don't think he can escape criminal conviction in this case."

Not even testimony by Tuls, had he taken the stand and said that he had not seen the cow, would have convinced him otherwise, the judge said.

Attorneys debated Wednesday whether the judge could find Tuls guilty based upon criminal negligence. Prosecutors provided no evidence that Tuls directly handled the cow.

After Stoker upheld Tuls' conviction, defense attorney Anthony Valdez stood up and continued to argue for acquittal.

Stoker told him it was time to wrap up the case. He had agreed to hear the motion for acquittal out of concern that he might have erred in his ruling, the judge said. But after listening to the trial over again on tape, Stoker said it was "very clear" that criminal negligence was the direction the case was headed at trial.

He asked whether Valdez planned to have witnesses testify on Tuls' behalf at the sentencing hearing.

Valdez said dairymen had been prepared to testify at the original June 4 sentencing date but that he was unsure if they still would be available.

"I'm not sure how my credibility with them carries now. I don't know if they're still willing to do this," Valdez said.

Tuls did not attend Wednesday's hearing. He sold his Dutch Touch Dairy in May.

Valdez said the case for Twin Falls County's Deputy Prosecutor Wells Ashby.

Look for solid experience in Bob Fort's replacement

While Idahoans like to think our state is mostly free of pilferage in public office. That's why the Brent Coles scandal in Boise enraged so many people.

And it's why Bob Fort's sudden resignation as Twin Falls County clerk is so disappointing. Fort has been a likable figure in county government and a Republican Party circles for more than a decade.

But county commissioners apparently found something embarrassing when they examined Fort's spending records.

We don't know yet what they found. Lips are zipped all over the courthouse, and official statements allude only to "potential misuse of county monies."

Whatever it was, it prompted Fort's immediate resignation. Fort has said nothing, and no one should prejudge the case. But his resignation may speak for itself.

Misuse of public funds is uncommon in Idaho, but an occasional incident is probably inevitable. When modestly paid executives handle millions of dollars, temptation can be intense.

County commissioners and Prosecutor Grant Loebbs appear to have handled this case correctly so far. Because Fort was an elected official, his courthouse colleagues have limited authority. Technically, they couldn't even compel his resignation. Calling in the Idaho attorney general was the proper step.

The AG's investigation needs to be swift and vigorous, with a thorough public airing of the results. If criminal prosecution is appropriate, it too should be vigorous. Idaho should not tolerate misuse of precious tax money.

Meanwhile, county and Republican Party leaders are seeking a replacement to finish Fort's term.

(Fort, a Republican, was re-elected in November.) Some suggestions:

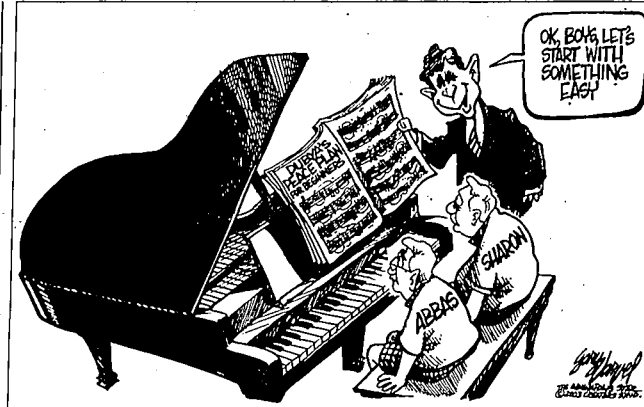

• The clerk's job covers elections, record keeping and the county's cash flow. So Fort's replacement needs broad competence in accounting and management.

Business experience would be a plus.

• Current courthouse employees should receive no special consideration. In fact, if irregularities have taken place in Fort's department, choosing an outsider has some appeal.

• Because the clerk is a partisan elected official, the new one will need solid GOP credentials. But taxpayers can't afford to have this job awarded on a solely political basis. Both the commission and the GOP central committee should focus on real qualifications, not politics.

Fort's resignation has rattled the courthouse. Even if the new clerk is a short-term caretaker until the next election, leaders must choose someone with the skills and reputation to restore confidence in the office.

Medicare: Cataclysmic compromise

ANNE APPLEBAUM

Around this town, "bipartisan" is a magic word. When something is described as bipartisan, that's code for "good" or "moral" or "the kind of thing sensible people support." If something is partisan, on the other hand, that's code for "shortsighted" or "mean and nasty" or "the kind of thing that reasonable people oppose." Partisan measures are what politicians take to get elected by their narrow-minded constituents. Bipartisan actions are what they take for the good of the country.

Up to a point, there's something to this. When Republicans and Democrats work together on unexpected issues, it's hard not to feel a warm and fuzzy glow. Recently, I met a group of national, multiply pierced, funkily dressed activists who praised a conservative Republican, Sen. Rick Santorum, because of his work on African debt. It was a genuine pleasure.

But "bipartisan" can also be a code word standing for something no less nasty and no less political. Sometimes when politicians compromise it's because they have reached across the vast gulf that divides them and decided, for the sake of the American people, to find a middle ground. Sometimes they compromise because, having looked closely at the political calendar, they have decided to pass a bill, any bill, before the next election. And sometimes, a little bipartisanism would make the bill a lot better.

To see what I mean, look no farther than the bipartisan plan to fix both a prescription drug entitlement and a private option to Medicare, versions of which are now plodding through Congress.

The full, ghastly details have been revealed elsewhere, so I won't do it here.

Suffice to say that the left hates it because it is too complicated and too expensive for the elderly. Seniors will pay a fortune in premiums and deductibles and copays before they get anything from the government (assuming they can even figure out what they should get from the government).

The right hates it because it is too complicated and too expensive for the taxpayers. Although the drug benefit will cost a mere $400 billion over 10 years — assuming it doesn't cost a lot more — Congress will still be left micromanaging the plan, which may not actually produce a viable new private option anyway.

For even the insurance industry hates it. A surprising number of companies have already said they might not even try to provide health plans for seniors who choose to opt out of traditional Medicare, given how rigid the parameters are.

All of these criticisms have a point: Unless the plan is altered, seniors will still not have a decent drug benefit, billions of dollars will be spent anyway, and the reforms Medicare needs won't happen.

Given the oceans of ink spilled on Medicare, and the years spent trying to "think outside the box," it's not surprising that many around Washington feel let down by this plan, particularly those who have been talking for years about Medicare's growing costs. In response, the bill's Republicans backers say this is "just a beginning." Down the line they'll make the private options more attractive somehow, and make them bring down costs somehow, even if the insurance companies are too spoiled to participate right now.

As for the bill's Democratic backers, they just shrug and say that down the line, of course the drug benefit will grow.

Down the line, though, we're all going to retire and suffer the consequences of our actions. What no one wants to talk about are some of the cataclysmic consequences of a halfhearted compromise.

Here's one: The plan is passed, the private option fails completely, the nation concludes that the private sector can't be trusted with health care, and we end up with socialized medicine.

Here's another: The plan is passed, the drug benefit increases over time, we end up with very high taxes forever.

Can that be the real intention of the Republicans who have been pushing this legislation, or even all the Democrats who are supporting it? It seems unlikely. Their real intention, as many will privately acknowledge, is to get something passed before the next election so that they can tell senior voters they've got a drug benefit.

Instead, all those who favor real Medicare reform should consider their names on the short-sighted bipartisanism and cease trying to compromise with those who don't share those goals.

Anne Applebaum writes for the Washington Post.

Take responsibility for your own pet

I'm writing to you regarding the letter to the editor signed by Dr. Bennett criticizing the Humane Society for not euthanizing a 14-year-old dog, who, in his or her words, has cancer, arthritis and is in total pain night and day.

To this, I would say take responsibility for your own pet and don't expect the Humane Society to be the welfare system for animals.

If everyone who brought home an animal took full responsibility for it — i.e., spay or neuter, vaccinate and have yearly medical examinations — there would not be so many unwanted animals at the shelter bringing it over its capacity on a daily basis. So please show your pet how much you love it by ending its suffering at your own expense.

It is, in my opinion, this type of "negative press that undermines the hard work the wonderful staff at our Humane Society performs selflessly every day."

I am also sure there are many people that miss Laurie Simonds very much, but please don't accuse the staff at the Humane Society for not being helpful because nothing could be further from the truth.

Rich people shouldn't complain about taxes

I have some questions for you regarding fairness.

How fair is it that a multimillion-dollar corporation a few years back got away without paying one cent in taxes due to tax breaks and tax loopholes? Meanwhile, a local mother that I know struggles to survive with the two incomes her and her fiancé bring in to the household. She currently has five kids that are in that household.

She refuses to take child support from her ex-husband, stating she conceived them so she'll support them. How many already middle-income women would take on that full responsibility, even when they can't afford it?

She doesn't want to sign up for Medicaid for her children because that would make her feel like she's taking money from the government. Currently, she is working two full-time jobs and getting a maximum of three hours of sleep a day, just to get by.

An already well-off chief executive officer can steal $400 million from the company he runs and only get probation and about a 5 percent fine on the stolen money. However, a son in a struggling family steals a little food so they can actually have a home-cooked meal most of us take for granted and he gets up to a $500 fine or six months in jail or both.

So when you justify wealthy people have to pay a huge $5,000 per year in taxes on a $300,000 per year income, think of who you're going to help with your "dire circumstances. No, 'myself' isn't an option this time. Will you ever get summoned to court because you can't afford to pay a bill?

There is nothing wrong with being wealthy, as long as you aren't clutching that money and grinning because you can spend a very small portion of what you got in life. Trickle-down? Prove it.

Women's voices echo from the ranks of the United States military

J.R. LABBE

Women have served in the U.S. military since the day Deborah Sampson, posing herself off as Robert Shurtliff so she could join the Continental Army's Massachusetts Regiment and fight in the Revolutionary War.

OK, it wasn't called the United States then, nor would Sampson's service have been sanctioned by the powers that be if her gender had been revealed. Those facts in no way discount her efforts to serve her "country."

From the Civil War (which saw women from both sides acting as spies, scouts and saboteurs) to Operation Iraqi Freedom (in which women served as pilots and were held as POWs), women have nursed, cooked, translated, clerked, guarded, trained, fought and died alongside the men.

Almost 2 million American women today proudly call themselves servicewomen or veterans. Many of those veterans were among the more than 400,000 women who served in all branches and in all military theaters during World War II.

Yet for a while it appeared that the female voice would be missing from the memorial under construction on the National Mall to honor the more than 16 million people who served in the U.S. armed forces during World War II.

The American Battle Monuments Commission is responsible for the development of an appropriate memorial "dedicated to all who served in World War II." Note the "all." The commission's charge doesn't say "dedicated to the men who served."

Army Brig. Gen. Evelyn "Pat" Foote was one of President Clinton's appointees to the commission, which was authorized by Congress in 1994 to oversee the design, site selection and fundraising campaign for the memorial.

Foote was well-qualified to represent women in uniform on the commission. Before her retirement, she held various command and staff positions in Europe and Vietnam and served as commanding general of Fort Belvoir, Va.

While Foote served on the commission, she said in a phone interview last week, three quotes from women were among the dozens being considered for inscription on 17 granite panels that will surround the memorial.

Those three quotes disappeared from consideration when the Clinton appointees were replaced by Bush appointees in 2001.

Foote was the first to raise a red flag about the exclusion of female voices. And she raised it in front of one person guaranteed to cry foul — loudly.

Helen Thomas, as in the doyenne of the White House press corps and syndicated columnist.

Thomas penned a piece in February for the Hearst newspapers that lauded Foote's efforts by way of a letter-writing campaign to have women's voices represented alongside those of President Franklin D. Roosevelt, Adm. Chester Nimitz and Gen. Douglas MacArthur.

Now, Foote has her detractors among the military echelon. An article on the Center for Military Preparedness Web site describes the Alliance for National Defense, which Foote leads as president, as "an organization led by some of the most doctrinaire advocates of Clinton-era social engineering in the military."

Foote believes that women should be included in the Army's highest combat forces. She thinks that co-gender basic training is a good idea. She has been labeled an activist and — gasp — a "feminist."

One may not cotton to her concepts of be all you can be; that doesn't mean she was wrong in championing the inclusion of a quote from a woman on the memorial's stone walls.

And it appears that Foote was successful.

"The commission has had a change of heart," Foote said. "A quote attributed to a woman was reintroduced and has been approved by the fine arts committee."

In the commission's defense, images of women were included from the get-go in the memorial's bas-relief sculptures. Commission spokesman Mike Conley told Thomas that one of the bronze images will depict "Rosie the Riveter," who worked in factories turning out planes and tanks for the fighting men.

But Rosie's uniform wasn't government issue. She supported the war effort, but she wasn't on the front line.

So when the memorial is dedicated on Saturday, May 29, 2004 — Memorial Day weekend — look for the inclusion of these words on one of the South Carolina granite panels that make up the eastern rampart wall.

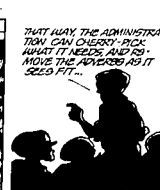

"Women who stepped up were measured as citizens of the nation, not as women ... this was a people's war and everyone was in it."

The speaker? None other than Col. Oveta Culp Hobby, the first director of the Women's Army Corps, the first woman appointed by a U.S. president to a Cabinet position — and a purchased, bona fide Texan.

Salute that, y'all.

Vaccine scares may pose more serious health threat than SARS

KATHY READ

Baseless Internet-generated scares about a preservative no longer used in childhood vaccines in the United States suddenly are looming as a much more serious threat to public health than diseases like SARS or monkey pox.

The scare tactics have raised concern among parents about the safety of common childhood vaccines that have caused such once lethal killers as mumps, measles, diphtheria and tetanus.

And the panic they've triggered among parents has attracted the attention of some of the nation's personal injury lawyers — who see the potential for mega-buck payoffs from claims that vaccines may cause neurological disorders including autism.

Although debunked by numerous highly credible scientific studies and decried by leading medical groups, those claims have spread over the Internet like wildfire. They have been given added visibility by Rep. Dan Burton, R-Ind., an 11-term conservative who repeatedly has championed the charges at hearings of his House Reform Subcommittee on Wellness and Human Rights.

How dire is the situation? Consider that in the early 1980s some 15 companies manufactured vaccines for children. Today, only four manufacturers are left in the United States. The others abandoned the market due to escalating liability stemming from baseless claims, which compounded the problem that the economics of the vaccine business have never been good.

The biggest victims, though, could be children. If history repeats itself, companies could again be driven out of the immunization business. Without widespread availability of vaccines, childhood diseases would stage a mass comeback — afflicting millions of children and sending thousands to premature deaths.

Before the measles vaccine was developed, the disease killed half a million children in the United States. Compare this with SARS, which, to date, has claimed 745 lives worldwide — none in the United States.

The recent vaccine lawsuits began two years after the U.S. Public Health Service and the American Academy of Pediatrics recommended that thimerosal be removed from infant vaccines.

The decision was driven by concern about a theoretical risk for some children who may be exposed to levels of mercury that came close to or exceeded the Environmental Protection Agency limit for known safe levels of exposure to methylmercury — a different and more toxic form of mercury than the ethylmercury-based thimerosal.

This recommendation was made as a precaution. There was no evidence showing thimerosal was unsafe in amounts used in vaccines. However, rather than wait for more data to emerge, the public health community chose to invoke the precautionary principle — otherwise known as "better safe than sorry" — and requested that manufacturers eliminate thimerosal in vaccines.

Methylmercury and ethylmercury are not the same. Although the words "methyl" and "ethyl" differ by only a single letter, their different effects are illustrated by the difference between "ethyl alcohol" and "methyl alcohol." Ethyl alcohol is the sometimes intoxicating ingredient in beer and wine; and methyl alcohol is the highly toxic ingredient in wood alcohol, that can cause permanent blindness after drinking only a thimbleful.

A recent study on thimerosal exposure was published in November 2002 in the British medical journal The Lancet. Researchers at the University of Rochester tested info — who had received thimerosal-containing vaccines and compared them to infants seen at a clinic that used mercury-free vaccines. Of the 33 infants exposed to thimerosal, all tested below EPA's limit for the more toxic methylmercury exposure, which itself includes a 10-fold margin of safety.

The phasing out of thimerosal as a preservative in vaccines began in July 1999. If thimerosal were the autism culprit, we should see a dramatic drop in autism rates over the next few years. However, the litigation is trying to rush to judgment before the evidence is in.

Despite the complete lack of science, the thimerosal lawsuit flood has begun.

As a result vaccine manufacturers, children's hospitals and physicians alike now face the threat of lawsuits that may jeopardize mass inoculations and punch large holes in the public health armor that shields American children from many of the dread diseases of the recent past.

Congress can — and should — remedy this emergency situation by passing legislation ensuring that claims against vaccine makers do not circumvent the Vaccine Injury Compensation Program that was enacted by Congress in the late 1980s and has worked effectively ever since.

This is a reasonable and rational way to ensure America's school children continue to have adequate protection against the dread diseases that regularly purged their ranks less than five decades ago.

Boeing suffers from subsidies of European competitor Airbus

Suppose you had asked, say 15 years ago, this question: What American company is most dominant in its global industry?

The answer would not have been Microsoft (1988 worldwide sales: $591 million), Dell Computer (founded 1984) or even IBM.

It would have been Boeing. Since 1958, when it introduced the first U.S. commercial jet (the 707), Boeing had gone from success to success. As late as 1990, Boeing sold 62 percent of the world's commercial jets. Its closest rival, McDonnell Douglas, was at 23 percent, and Europe's Airbus trailed at 15 percent.

No more. Boeing's eclipse is one of the fascinating and momentous business stories of our time. In 2003, Airbus — now the only other major maker of big commercial jets — is expected to win more orders than Boeing, and the gap could widen. Airbus is developing a monster jet (the A380) that will seat 555 passengers and threaten Boeing's 747. At last week's Paris Air Show, Airbus announced 64 new orders for its planes; Boeing announced four.

It seems inconceivable that the U.S. government would let Boeing slowly abandon the commercial jet business. Airlines need price competition, and jets are too important for U.S. exports and new technologies (advanced materials, electronics).

Herein lies the larger implications. Already, critics say that the Pentagon's willingness to lease 100 converted Boeing 767 commercial jets as midair tankers represents a disguised rescue. Moreover, Boeing's troubles could intensify U.S. European tensions because Airbus' success stems partly from massive government subsidies that still continue on a smaller scale.

The story of Boeing's distress comes in three parts: bad luck, bad management and bad government policy. Even before September 11, air travel suffered from the bursting of the 1990s' economic "bubble." Then came the terrorist attacks. From 1981 to 2000, global air travel rose at a 5.1 percent annual rate; it declined 3 percent in 2001 and was flat last year. Airlines canceled or delayed hundreds of orders. In 1999 Boeing and Airbus delivered 914 jets (620 for Boeing, 294 for Airbus); this year they expect to deliver 580 (280 for Boeing, 300 for Airbus).

ROBERT J. SAMUELSON

Beyond bad luck, Boeing became — like many industry leaders before it — overconfident. It fell behind in some areas. Airbus used CAD/CAM (computer-aided design and manufacturing) to build planes before Boeing. Says economist Douglas Irwin of Dartmouth College, many Airbus planes have common cockpits — a feature highly popular with airlines because of training costs. Notes Richard Aboulafia of the Teal Group, a consulting firm, Boeing has skimped on research and development to fatten current profits, he argues.

"They decided to take a product development holiday for the last eight years," he says. Boeing introduced its last new plane in 1995.

Finally, there's government policy. Subsidies to Airbus totaled $26 billion through 1989, estimated one U.S. study. OK, early subsidies were necessary for Airbus' survival; the Europeans didn't want to depend forever on U.S. planes. But after two decades (Airbus began in 1970) the United States should have demanded their elimination. Instead, it agreed in 1992 to permit subsidized government loans to pay for a third of the development costs of new planes. Bad move.

The result is the A380, whose start-up costs (at least $10.7 billion) couldn't have been financed privately. It will hurt sales of Boeing's biggest jet, the 747.

"Airbus has been incredibly aggressive in discounting; the A380, offering 30 percent to 40 percent off list prices," says Irwin.

Of course, Boeing isn't in extremis. After merging with McDonnell Douglas in 1997, it has a huge defense and space business. Last year Boeing's profits totaled $492 million on sales of $54 billion, down from $2.8 billion and $58 billion in 2001. Still, the company seems to be having an identity crisis. In 2001 it moved its headquarters from Seattle (where jets are assembled) to Chicago to show that it's more than a plane company.

Boeing's history is taking huge risks — and reaping huge rewards; both the 707 and the 747 (introduced in 1970) were great gambles that paid handily. Can Boeing now reclaim some past glory? The answer may depend on the 7E7, a new wide-body plane being studied that would seat more than 200 and have lower operating costs than today's planes. High development costs (perhaps $8 billion, according to BusinessWeek) have reportedly stirred strong internal opposition. If Boeing proceeds, it might request subsidies comparable to Airbus'. Already, it has threatened to move production out of Seattle if other localities offer bigger tax breaks on subsidies.

Failing to proceed would cast doubt on Boeing's long-term commitment to commercial jets. Asked about that recently, Chief Executive Officer Phil Condit told the Financial Times, "We are going to be in commercial aircraft for a long, long, long time."

That's an emphatic answer, but a decade ago even the question would have been absurd.

Lightning bolts miles in sky

Gigantic lightning jets that shoot upward from cloud tops to 50 miles high in the upper atmosphere have been documented for the first time by scientists, the journal Nature reports.

Ionosphere

The upper atmosphere, or ionosphere, is made of gas particles electrically charged by ultraviolet rays of the sun.

Lightning jets

Unlike regular lightning bolts, these jets spread out in the extremely thin air of the upper atmosphere to make spidery tree-like formations. They disappear in less than a second.

Reseachers: Lightning shoots up

The Associated Press

Scientists have discovered a startling secret in the sky: gigantic jets of lightning that shoot upward from cloud tops to nearly 60 miles into the upper atmosphere.

Unlike the familiar lightning bolts, these brilliant jets spread out in extremely thin air to form shapes resembling giant trees or carrots some 50 miles tall, according to a study by researchers in Taiwan.

"These things are so spectacular, and so startling, and we're just finding it this late in the game," said Wai Lyons, of FMA Research in Fort Collins, Colo., an atmospheric scientist who specializes in lightning research.

"It's sort of like biologists announcing, 'we've discovered a new human body part,'" Lyons said. "We thought we knew everything that was up there, and lo and behold, we don't."

The study, led by Han-Tsung Su of the National Cheng Kung University in Taiwan, used low-light cameras on the southern tip of the island to capture images of five gigantic lightning jets streaming upward from thunder clouds over the South China Sea in July 2002.

The enormous jets typically disappear in less than a second and are very difficult to see with the naked eye, researchers said.

The study, which appears today in the journal Nature, also found that four jets generated extremely low frequency radio waves that could interfere with global radio communications, said Victor Pasko, a Penn State electrical engineer.

"So we know now that these kinds of events can produce some perturbation in those radio signals," said Pasko, who wrote a Nature commentary on the study.

In the 1990s, Pasko documented another form of lightning, blue jets, that also stream upward but do not reach as high or spread out as far as the jets reported in the new study.

Video: Opponent punches woman after the bell

ST. PETERSBURG, Fla. (AP) — A woman who died after a Toughman amateur boxing match was hit repeatedly in the head even after she walked on wobbly legs to her corner, a videotape of the match reportedly shows.

The tape shows Stacy Young, a mother of two, taking several blows to the head and being unable to defend herself before she collapsed June 14, the St. Petersburg Times reported Wednesday. The tape, reviewed by a Times reporter, includes shots from the crowd for the fight to stop, the paper said.

Young, 30, was declared brain

headed to the safety of her corner, her opponent, 20-year-old Sarah Kobie, followed and threw three punches to Young's head. Young collapsed and suffered a seizure while her family watched.

Toughman promoter Art Dore was the announcer at the match, at one point calling it "a real cat fight," the videotape shows.

Young was the fourth person to die in a Toughman bout in the last nine months. She is the only woman killed in the 24-year history of the competitions.

Dore did not return a call seeking comment Wednesday. He has denied that the events are dangerous, but temporarily halted the traveling show after the death.

The Times did not identify the source of the videotape, but said police have a copy.

Officials link sickness to rabbits

LINCOLN, Neb. (AP) — Two men who moved over a nest of rabbits, killing some of them, and another who cleaned the mower developed a rare disease known as rabbit fever, authorities said.

The federal Centers for Disease Control and Prevention is investigating. The disease, also called pneumonic tularemia, is generally treatable with antibiotics but can lead to pneumonia.

The illness is caused by a bacterium found in wild animals, particularly rodents and rabbits. People can become infected through bites by infected animals or infected insects, handling carcasses, eating contaminated food or, in rare cases, inhaling the bacterium. It is not transmitted person-to-person.

The CDC became interested because all three had the rare inhaled form of the disease, said Lancaster County health official Tim Timmons. "We want to know how that occurred," Timmons said. All three were briefly hospitalized and have fully recovered, he said.

The United States averaged 124 cases of tularemia in 1999 and 2000, according to the CDC, and three to four cases a year are typical in Nebraska.

IN BRIEF

YFCA will host tennis social Friday

TWIN FALLS - The Twin Falls YFCA is hosting a summer tennis social and raffle drawing for two tickets and a trip to New York City for the 2003 U.S. Open on Friday from 6-9 p.m.

There will be a potluck barbecue served and anyone interested is invited to attend. The YFCA will provide the main course and guests are asked to bring desserts, salads, chips or other dishes.

Cost is $5 per person and junior players are welcome. Tennis will commence after dinner with doubles and mixed doubles with a 15-minute rotation.

Raffle tickets are $100 each with sales limited to 300 tickets. The drawing will be held at 8 p.m.

For more information, call 733-4384.

Autocross event comes to Jerome High School

JEROME - A two-day autocross will be held at the Jerome High School parking lot Saturday and Sunday.

The sport involves navigating a course designated by pylons in the fastest time possible. The event challenges a driver's ability and the car's handling characteristics.

All makes and models of cars or pickups are welcome, but no motorcycles.

The cost is $15 per day and all drivers and passengers must wear helmets, which will be provided, as necessary.

Registration and tech inspection runs from 8:30-9:30 a.m. each day.

ACC invites Miami, Virginia Tech to join

The Associated Press

GREENSBORO, N.C. - When the ACC's invitations finally went out, one guest was expected, another was a surprise - and two got snubbed.

The Atlantic Coast Conference ended its six-week expansion saga Wednesday by inviting only Miami and Virginia Tech to leave the Big East and join its league.

Boston College and Syracuse, which also were candidates for expansion, were left behind.

Miami and Virginia Tech are the Big East's two dominant football schools, and the move to go to 11 schools wasn't one of the expected scenarios after the ACC voted May 13 to expand.

"These two institutions represent and share the values for which the ACC has long been known," said Clemson President James F. Barker, head of the league's Council of Presidents. "We feel they will be a great addition to our family."

Barker said the invitation to Virginia Tech, a dark horse candidate that was added last week at the insistence of Virginia, was "subject to final completion of the conference bylaw requirements" - a site visit that was under way Wednesday in Blacksburg, Va.

Big East lawsuit will move forward

Having been invited to join the Atlantic Coast Conference, Virginia Tech withdrew Wednesday from the Big East's lawsuit against the ACC, Miami and Boston College. The decision to invite Virginia Tech to the ACC instead of Boston College and Syracuse quickly changed the legal lineup.

Within hours after learning of Virginia Tech's departure, the four Big East presidents remaining as plaintiffs in the lawsuit said they are prepared to dismiss Boston College as a defendant. The litigation meanwhile is continuing. Connecticut Attorney General Richard Blumenthal said a preliminary hearing before a state judge will proceed as scheduled Thursday to determine venue and scheduling. Virginia Tech had initially joined the June 5 lawsuit, filed in Hartford, that accused the ACC, Boston College and Miami of taking part in a conspiracy to expand and ultimately weaken the Big East.

Virginia Tech's governing board, meeting earlier Wednesday, unanimously authorized president Charles Steger to negotiate a deal with the ACC. Voting at a hastily

"Since this is a new proposal, we will evaluate it before making a decision," she said. ACC commissioner John called meeting in Roanoke, Va., the Board of Visitors gave Steger the authority to make the decision himself, and he said he was "inclined to accept" the offer.

Miami President Donna Shalala said school officials were disappointed that Boston College and Syracuse weren't included.

Swofford said he didn't expect any problems with the invitation to either school, "but that's in their hands."

Boston College said the Big East was discussing future conference configurations among all its members. Its statement noted that Miami and Virginia Tech are included in those discussions, which is likely to mean that that Big East is making the would-be defections a counterproposal to keep them from leaving.

The ACC presidents voted to expand on May 13, and conference officials visited Miami, Boston College and Syracuse to assess their facilities. Miami Tech came into the picture last week, as part of a compromise suggested by Virginia president John T. Casteen III.

Towering Milicic leads strong Euro rookie class

The Associated Press

AUBURN HILLS, Mich. - The Detroit Pistons are not the only NBA team raving about Darko Milicic. They are the one that plans to make 7-foot, 245-pounder from Serbia and Montenegro the second player taken in Thursday night's draft.

If the Utah Jazz had the first pick, Alberto Dal Cin, their director of international scouting, would make a strong push to draft Milicic ahead of the Cleveland Cavaliers' first overall choice of LeBron James.

"Personally, I would take Darko ahead of LeBron James because he has more skills and can play more positions," Dal Cin said. "There are very few can't-miss players, but I have no doubt that Darko is a can't-miss player."

I think Darko can play center, power forward or small forward. Nobody knows if LeBron is a point or a shooting guard. And Darko will not bring the same kind of problems and expectations that LeBron will because he has already signed a $90 million shoe contract."

Donn Nelson, Dallas' president of basketball operations, said the rest of the Eastern Conference must be winning that a team as good as the Pistons are set to add a player like Milicic.

Nelson said Milicic impressed him and a slew of NBA scouts last year in Dallas during the Global Games, a competition featuring high school stars from all over the world.

Nelson would take James if Dallas had the top pick, but said the Mavericks would discuss the possibility of drafting Milicic or former Syracuse star Carmelo Anthony, who is expected to go to Denver with the third pick.

"If your need is center or power forward, Darko is your guy," Nelson said.

Roddick lets Rusedski lose cool, match

The Associated Press

WIMBLEDON, England - Andy Roddick knows how it feels to get so riled by a call that a tornado of anger swirls and swirls until it renders the racket useless.

It was nice to be on the other side of the net this time: Greg Rusedski's profanity-filled tirade at the chair umpire over a disputed point was the beginning of the end of their blistering showdown at Wimbledon on Wednesday.

Roddick stayed focused and won the final five games, including his only breakers of Rusedski's serve, to advance to the third round with a 7-6 (4), 7-6 (1), 7-5 victory.

"I know he might be a little mad," Roddick said, "so if I was going to get back into it or try to take over, then that was probably going to be my time."

This entire fortnight might just be his time. The No. 5-seeded Roddick is looking more and more like a player ready to claim his

2000 Olympic gold medalist will train for 2004 Games

The Associated Press

POCATELLO - Pole vault world-record holder Stacy Dragila has moved from southeastern Idaho to Arizona.

Dragila, an assistant coach at Idaho State who holds the indoor world record in the women's pole vault and won the 2000 Olympic gold medal, moved to Phoenix, Idaho State coach Dave Nielsen said.

"She's trying to prepare for the Olympics," Nielsen said. "I think it's a good move. It wasn't a split with real hard feelings."

Dragila, 32, has considered moving from Idaho since winning the Olympic pole vault three years ago but stayed on despite the less than ideal training atmosphere.

She suffered a foot injury last year but has recovered to claim 13 first-place finishes so far this year.

Dragila, a native of Auburn, Calif., joined the Idaho State track and field coaching staff six years ago. She graduated from the university in 1995 with a degree in physical education.

LeBron James seeks the right look

CHARLOTTE, N.C. (AP) — When teenage phenom LeBron James steps onstage at Madison Square Garden as the No. 1 pick in the NBA draft, he wants to look the part of a rich and successful professional athlete.

So he turned to Charlotte clothier Cary Mitchell, who has dressed dozens of lottery picks in recent years — and is designing the uniform for the NBA's newest team, the Charlotte Bobcats.

"He'll be looking sharp," Mitchell said about James, who will make his highly anticipated debut in a cream-colored suit Thursday night.

For Mitchell, an added twist made the James assignment even more exciting.

The young athlete's mother, Gloria James, planned to wear an outfit out from the same Italian cloth as her 6-foot-8 son's show-case attire — James' way of paying tribute to the woman who raised him.

James — who led his Akron, Ohio, high school team to three state titles — already has received more attention as a high school player than many pros do in their entire careers, including a Sports Illustrated cover and ESPN broadcasts of his high school games.

He has promised to make a fashion statement with his draft night suit. "It's pink," he joked Tuesday after posing for a layout in the men's fashion magazine GQ.

Mitchell, a 1983 graduate of Charlotte's Johnson C. Smith University, has designed clothing for many high-profile professional athletes, including Tiger Woods, Jim Duncan, Vince Carter, Ken Griffey Jr., Yao Ming and Emmitt Smith.

And dressing James won't be Mitchell's only task Thursday. Syracuse forward Carmelo Anthony, expected to be the No. 3 overall pick by the Denver Nuggets, also plans to wear a Cary Mitchell suit.

"I can't tell you exactly what I'll wear. Hopefully, you won't laugh at it," he said during a news conference Wednesday.

Last year's No. 2 pick, Jay Williams of Duke, was the first player to meet NBA commissioner David Stern dressed in a Mitchell suit. In all, six of last year's top 12 draft picks wore Mitchell creations.

The rest of the year, Mitchell designs custom clothes for a number of clients and offers wardrobe consulting.

His latest venture has him designing the uniforms for the NBA's new Charlotte Bobcats franchise. His company, Cary Mitchell Designs, is working with consultant NVU Productions, and Reebok on the new team's threads.

"Cary is an innovator in the apparel design field who understands the needs and tastes of today's professional athlete," said Ed Tapscott, executive vice president and chief operating officer of the new club.

The Bobcats will join the league for the 2004-05 season; Mitchell expects their uniform to be unveiled at next February's NBA All-Star Game.

"It had the right feel, with me being the local guy who is known already by a lot of people in the NBA," Mitchell said of his involvement with the new team.

Jazz look at AP Player of the Year David West

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — David West is content with not being among the players projected to go the highest in Thursday's NBA draft.

Even as the reigning Associated Press Player of the Year, the only thing West is sure of entering the draft is that he will probably go sometime after players like LeBron James, Darko Milicic and Carmelo Anthony.

West knows somebody will take him in the first round and he'll go from there.

"That's no big deal. That's the way life has been going. They said I couldn't play in college. I was only recruited by one school," West said after working out for the Utah Jazz on Tuesday. "I didn't expect anything to be different when I made this transition to the NBA."

West received the AP's top player honor after averaging 20.4 points and 11.8 rebounds as a senior at Xavier, where he was a four-year starter. At 6-foot-9, 240 pounds, he's listed as the same size as Jazz forward Karl Malone, whose future with the team won't be decided until free agency begins next month.

West said he would be comfortable backing up Malone and learning from the NBA's second-leading scorer if the Jazz can resign him — and get West in the draft. If Malone leaves Utah after 18 seasons in pursuit of the NBA title, he's never won, the Jazz would have a huge hole at power forward.

"Depending on what happens, you get a chance to come in and learn behind one of the greats," West said. "Either way, it's a win-win situation."

West expects to go somewhere in the middle of the first round, which would probably exclude the

David West

Jazz unless they make a deal to move up from the No. 19 pick they hold.

Kevin O'Connor, Utah's vice president for basketball operations, said a deal is possible, but any talks so far have been strictly preliminary.

"The fortunate thing is we think it's a fairly deep draft, so I think we can get a player that we like at 19," O'Connor said. "But that doesn't mean that we wouldn't try to improve. We've got to try and get younger and that's what we're looking to do."

Tuesday was West's last stop after a long tour of NBA cities that lasted nearly two months. The workouts and traveling have been exhausting, mentally and physically, and West says he's ready for a team to take him — whenever it happens.

"People said I wasn't going to be able to play in college and I did — and did pretty well," he said. O'Connor said the Jazz have five or six players in mind that the team feels will be available when it picks Thursday night. He refused to name names or positions.

O'Connor, Jazz coach Jerry Sloan and his assistants took a look Tuesday at Serbian forward Aleksandar Pavlovic, North Dakota forward Jerome Besley and Southern Methodist guard Quincy Pondexter.

Utah's final group of prospects, including Duke's Dahnray Jones and Matt Carroll of Notre Dame, worked out Wednesday at the Jazz's new practice building.

hotel for the annual interview session, three of whom received the star treatment just a few hours after they rang the opening bell at the New York Stock Exchange.

Three years ago, the league had the three top picks — Anthony, Milicic and James — speak at a formal news conference.

Anthony went first, saying he was underdog, admitting he had never seen Milicic play and revealing that his sneaker endorsement deal with Nike would be worth $18 million to $20 million over five years.

Milicic took the stage second, answering questions in Serbian even though he clearly understood plenty of English — not even waiting for his translator to relate several of the questions before beginning his answers.

He said he has been a big fan of the Sacramento Kings, "like 40 percent of Yugoslavia," admitted he had never seen James play and said he already visited Pistons center Zeljko Rebrack and dined with coach Larry Brown and team president Joe Dumars to prepare for his move to Detroit.

James took the stage last, providing thoughtful answers to many questions but ducking anything remotely controversial.

James also wouldn't be baited into debating the merits of the league's desire to set a minimum age of 20.

"David Stern is the head of this league. Whatever decisions he's going to make, I'm going to support it," said the 18-year-old James, who will become the second player in league history selected first overall directly out of high school.

After Toronto decides what it will do with the fourth pick — Georgia Tech forward Chris Bosh and Texas point guard T.J. Ford are among the Raptors' top choices if they keep it — the Miami Heat will choose fifth.

"This pick is the first step to rebuilding the franchise," said coach Pat Riley, who selected Connecticut's Caron Butler with the No. 10 pick a year ago.

The Los Angeles Clippers select sixth, followed by the Chicago Bulls, Milwaukee Bucks, New York Knicks and Washington Wizards.

Picks 11-15 belong to Golden State, Seattle, Memphis, Seattle and Orlando — and that's where some of the dealmaking might pick up speed.

Last year's draft unfolded slowly, but before the night was over there were 11 trades made — six of them involving first-round picks from the 16th slot to No. 29.

There were seven draft-night trades two years ago, the biggest of which sent Elton Brand from Chicago to the Clippers for Tyson Chandler. A year earlier, there were eight deals.

Draft

That's why the Pistons have had their eyes locked on Milicic since Memphis landed the second pick in the NBA draft lottery and had to give up three picks to finalize a five-year deal for Otis Thorpe.

"It's been my dream to play in the NBA," Milicic said through an interpreter Tuesday. "I've been waiting for this day for so long."

Detroit was the only team in the Eastern Conference with 50 wins last season, but it was swept by New Jersey in the conference finals in part because of a lack of scoring options. The Pistons desperately need a power forward or center to score next to Ben Wallace, who became an All-Star just by defending and rebounding.

"When you see his ability to do things at that height and size, it gives you cause to be excited about this kid, you realize you're watching something very unusual," Joe Dumars, Detroit's president of basketball operations, said of Milicic.

Dumars and Marc Corstain, Milicic's agent, are underbitten by the lawsuit Milicic's European team has threatened against Corstain and any NBA team attempting to sign the 18-year-old because it has him under contract through 2009.

NBA teams are not prevented from drafting players under contract to foreign teams. However, league rules stipulate an NBA team can pay no more than $350,000 toward buying out a player's contract.

"It's a negotiations play," Corstain said Tuesday. "There will be a settlement and Darko Milicic will be a Detroit Piston."

Picking Milicic seems to be a popular choice in Detroit even though fans have seen only highlights of him shooting 3-pointers and dunking.

"The more tape you watch of this kid, you realize you're watching something very unusual," Dumars said. "The highlights really don't do justice."

Milicic leads an impressive rookie class of European players, with as many as 10 foreign-born players projected to go in Thursday's first round of the draft.

Dal Cin first saw Milicic two years ago in Europe, where he has played professionally and lived on his own since he was 14. His first salary was $100 a month.

"He caught my eye right away and I've loved his game and his attitude ever since," Dal Cin said. "He can score inside and out. He can put the ball on the floor. He passes like (Sacramento's) Vlade Divac."

Nelson has been impressed with Milicic's demeanor.

"The thing that makes him special beyond his physical package is his toughness," Nelson said. "There's something about being from the former Yugoslavia that makes you have a lot of street toughness. With his background, he will not back down from anybody in the league and will push himself to succeed."

AROUND THE VALLEY

Agriculture accident claims man's life

JEROME - A 33-year-old dairy worker was killed Wednesday afternoon after he was run over by a front-end loader on a north side dairy.

Police did not want to release the man's name until his next of kin was notified, an Idaho State Police news release said.

The accident occurred around 3:45 p.m. on the dual-lane A Dairy on the Lincoln and Jerome county border. The worker slipped and fell off the loader, the release said. The accident is under investigation.

Rollover puts T.F. teen in critical condition

JEROME - A Twin Falls boy was in critical condition Wednesday following a single vehicle rollover Tuesday evening.

Sandi Muminovic, 16, of Twin Falls, was in critical condition at Saint Alphonsus Regional Medical Center in Boise, an Idaho State Police spokeswoman said.

Muminovic was driving a 1993 Ford Probe southbound on Silver Beach Road at a high rate of speed about 7:30 p.m. Tuesday when he came over a hill and swerved to avoid a slower car, according to an ISP news release.

Muminovic lost control, drove off the road and rolled several times, according to the release. He was taken to Magic Valley Regional Medical Center and then flown to Saint Alphonsus with head and spinal injuries.

Muminovic was wearing a seat belt.

Republicans seek new T.F. County clerk

TWIN FALLS - Due to the resignation of County Clerk Bob Fort, the Twin Falls County Republican Central Committee will hold a meeting at 7 p.m. Wednesday at the Marvin Hemphillman County Building at 246 Third Ave. E.

The committee will choose three candidates to serve out the remainder of Fort's four-year term which began in January.

County commissioners will make the final decision on who will fill the post, which pays $42,619 a year.

All Republican candidates interested in the position should submit their resumes to the Twin Falls County Central Committee at P.O. Box 1733, Twin Falls, ID 83303, or call Mike Mathews at 735-0712.

Deputy County Clerk Pricilla Bolton is serving as acting county clerk until commissioners choose Fort's replacement.

Police offer drug class today in Twin Falls

TWIN FALLS - The Twin Falls Police Department is offering a public drug awareness class today to combat drug use in the community.

As part of "Operation Zero Tolerance," the department is offering monthly meetings designed to educate people about drug-related issues. The class is geared for parents, employers and anyone interested in learning how to spot drug use and how to report such activity.

The first meeting is at 7 p.m. today at the Varsity O'Leary Junior High School auditorium. The class will be taught by a police department instructor.

For more information, call Twin Falls police at 311 or 735-7200.

T.F. band presents feel-good music

TWIN FALLS - The Twin Falls Municipal Band presents another episode of "Music that Feels Good All Over" tonight at City Park. Emphasis will be on music good for the soul.

Featured selections include a new and special arrangement of the national anthem subtitled "A Love Song to Our Country," hits from Lionel Richie and J.B. Bach, and a medley of familiar gospel melodies.

The weekly free concerts start at 8 p.m., whatever the weather.

Jerome police officer sues city, county

By Brandon Flala
Times-News writer

JEROME - If you work for Jerome city or county, Dan Chatterton might be suing you. The detective sergeant of the Jerome Police Department recently filed a complaint against Jerome County, the Jerome County sheriff, Jerome County Commission, city of Jerome, city attorney, City Council, city manager, state of Idaho, Police Officer Standards and Training Council and others, according to a complaint and demand for jury trial filed last week in U.S. District Court.

Most of the people listed, including county commissioners and City Council members, are sued not only in their official capacities but individually as well, according to the complaint.

And for good measure, the complaint also sues John Does one through 50 - people who aren't known yet but might exist. "There may be others," said K. Ellen Baxter, Chatterton's lawyer.

Chatterton is seeking $823,730 in what he contends are lost wages, benefits, promotions and other damages, according to a tort claim filed Nov. 27 in Jerome County.

Chatterton has previously sued the Twin Falls Police Department and city of Twin Falls - settling the case for $35,000, according to reports.

Baxter said the large number of defendants is normal in such a case.

"All of these people were involved in the events that occurred in one fashion or another," she said.

The lawsuit is based on the contention that Gregory Johnson, a Jerome city police officer, in 2000 made an unfounded allegation against Chatterton - said that Jerome County Sheriff Jim Weaver and the others named in the lawsuit promoted and investigated that allegation until July 2002, according to court documents.

According to the complaint, Johnson falsely charged Chatterton with pointing his gun at him during a joking conversation.

The investigation caused Chatterton to suffer criminal charges, de-certification proceedings and loss of salary and benefit increases, according to the complaint.

Chatterton was an investigator with the Jerome County Sheriff's Office when Weaver took over after winning the 1996 election.

Nation's legislators honor Newcomb

The Times-News

BURLY - Idaho House Speaker Bruce Newcomb, R-Burley, is being honored by his colleagues from around the nation as the best state legislator in America this year.

Newcomb is the first legislator from a Western state to receive the prestigious William M. Bulger Award. He was chosen from a pool of 35 other legislative leaders from around the nation.

The award is named after its first recipient, the former president of the Massachusetts Senate.

Established in 1996, the Bulger Award is jointly sponsored by the State Legislative Leaders Foundation, the National Conference of State Legislatures and the Council of State Governments.

Bruce Newcomb
R-Burley

Lawmakers and other government observers from across the nation nominate state legislators for the award.

Newcomb said he doesn't know who nominated him and was surprised to make the short list, much less get the award.

"I was just flabbergasted," Newcomb said. "I thought, 'How could someone from a class of 22 in Burley, Idaho, have a chance?'" Newcomb attributed much of the reason for the award to his willingness to take the lead on throwing out term limits for elected officials in 2002.

In February, Newcomb was invited to speak to the John F. Kennedy School of Government at Harvard University. Though he touched on a number of topics, the one most people were interested in learning about was how the Idaho Legislature became the first legislature in the nation to vote out term limits, he said.

The speaker's election of his program to oversee state agency operations and encourage efficiency in the legislative process are also reasons for giving the award to Newcomb, a press release said.

In regard to his worthiness, Newcomb self-deprecatingly used the analogy of the Peter Principle - a theory first introduced in a humorous book by L. Peter. The theory exposes that in bureaucratic organizations, people tend to be promoted up to their level of incompetence.

"The Peter Principle is alive and well," Newcomb said. "You can do well above your level of competence."

With the award, Newcomb receives $10,000 payable to the charity or institution of his choice. He is scheduled to be honored in July at the National Conference of State Legislatures annual meeting in San Francisco.

Judge halts school building reports

The Times-News and
The Associated Press

BOISE - A district judge on Wednesday ordered Attorney General Lawrence Wasden to stop demanding that school districts file reports on building conditions under a law intended to undermine attempts to get state cash for building needs.

Only about a third of the state's school districts have responded to Wasden's requirement. In south-central Idaho, about half of the school districts complied.

The order by 4th District Judge Deborah Ball followed last week's state Supreme Court directive halting further proceedings in the school district lawsuit against the state until Ball determines the validity of the new law.

Ball said both sides in the dispute would file written arguments on the law in July, and she set Sept. 2 for trial if one is required.

The law essentially voids the pending lawsuit while Wasden directs all 114 school districts to file reports on unsafe school conditions and how they will be eliminated. If the districts cannot afford the repairs, the new law lets judges impose higher property taxes to pay the bills. The school districts that have been fighting the state in court since 1990 for financial help with school needs claim the law unconstitutionally attempts to void their lawsuit.

While the Supreme Court's order called for suspension of all proceedings in that case pending a determination of the new law's legality, Wasden said school districts still had to have their building condition reports filed by June 30.

Ball's order clearly suspends that requirement.

The attorney general has disputed the contention that the state is responsible for school buildings and said last month he believes very few of the hundreds of schools in Idaho are unsafe.

Of those Magic Valley school districts that responded to the attorney general's request for lists of unsafe conditions, most said that they had no safety problems. Those that did indicate unsafe conditions listed dozens by which they expected to solve the problems themselves.

The original lawsuit, filed by 22 school districts and three dozen parents, claimed it was the state's responsibility to provide enough money so that all schools provided equivalent learning opportunities. Over the years, the courts narrowed the focus to only unsafe school buildings.

Two years ago, Ball ruled the current system for financing school construction unconstitutional, declaring the Legislature responsible for assuring that every student have a safe place to learn.

Idaho is the only state that provides no direct financial help with school buildings and still requires a two-thirds majority to pass locally financed school construction bonds.

Since Ball's ruling in 2001, the Legislature has taken limited steps to improve the system that critics say still falls far short of the court's mandate.

Longtime lawyer and community figure dies

By Almoe Durand

Times-News correspondent

SHOSHONE - A life-long Magic Valley resident, retired judge and former Lincoln County prosecutor died last week at his Twin Falls home.

Howard E. Adkins, 92, in July was slated to receive recognition from the Idaho Bar Association for his 60 years practicing law. Adkins was the youngest prosecutor ever elected in Idaho, and at the time of his retirement the oldest.

"Howard was a pillar to the community and especially the church," said longtime family friend Legie Hamaker. "He was instrumental in the new church built when the first one burnt down. I remember particularly that he tried to make sure that people always were appreciated for what they did, through certificates and such. He was always looking for the best in everyone."

"It was the only thing he wanted to be. He admitted his father, a rancher, very much, but he knew he did not want to be a farmer," Eden said.

He worked hard during the Depression to gain an education and proved to be quite successful in paying his way.

After college, he spent a couple of years teaching grade school in Marley before becoming an attorney. He was elected Lincoln County probate judge in 1936, serving until 1945 when he was elected county prosecutor.

Richfield School Board votes for block schedule in 2004

By Jeanette Chambers
Times News correspondent

RICHTFIELD—With all but two high school teachers in favor, the School Board gave the go-ahead earlier this month to start next school year with a block schedule. Students will take four classes for 85 minutes each instead of the current 50 minutes, allowing a more concentrated effort on each subject, according to Carol Bastion, a teacher who researched the block schedule.

In a survey of teachers taken before the School Board's decision to approve the block schedule, all but two were in favor of the schedule.

With this schedule, Bastion said, students will be able to get two years worth of credits in one year. During an advisory period in the middle of the day, character education will be presented to all students. That will also be the time for announcements, class meetings, extra tutoring, make-up testing, support groups and other non-academic business.

When one of the above is necessary, students will be expected to have a reading list of books and be involved in "silent sustained reading."

Students will be assigned to staff members. They will see every day who they will be responsible for that same group of students for at least the year and perhaps longer.

Graduation requirements will be increased to reflect expectations for students.

Other School Board business includes:

• Student policy changes—Theo Perkes, school principal, announced new changes in the student handbook to the dress code and other policies.

Girls will no longer be able to wear shorts or mini-skirts that do not meet minimum requirements. From a kneeling position, skirts must be no more than 8 inches from the floor. And tops or shirts must cover the midriff with arms held above the head.

Also, there will be no CD players in classrooms and students may no longer bring guests to school.

• New hires—Superintendent David Hocklander mentioned that, pending the board's approval, one new person has been hired to fill an English teaching position, and there are four candidates applying for the sixth-grade teaching position and two for the music position.

Hiring is contingent on references.

Ray Huntington Flavel

Ray Huntington Flavel, 80, of Twin Falls, went home to his Heavenly Father Friday, June 20, 2003.

Ray was the youngest son born to William and Caroline Flavel. He was born on September 30, 1922, in Spanish Fork, Utah. He had three sisters, two step-sisters, and one brother. Ray spent most of his early life in Richfield, Idaho. Later going to Utah, he met the love of his life Fay Marie Gulickson. They married on June 1, 1941, in Salt Lake City, Utah. They later had two children: a daughter, Judy Fay, and a son Jack Ray. He was a very loving and devoted father, and always had time for his children. His wife and children were always number one in his life. They lived most of their lives in Utah and Idaho. Ray was a hard worker and took pride in everything he did. He loved working with his hands. He was a great carpenter, and he enjoyed driving, dancing, camping, R.V.-ing, traveling, motorcycleing, and spending time with his family and friends. Ray served his country as a young man in the Army, during World War II, in over-seas active duty for 19 months.

Ray retired from the Castelford School District, and later moved to Twin Falls. After retirement, he and his wife volunteered as camp hosts during the summer months.

They enjoyed meeting new people and spending time together. They also loved the beauty of the outdoors.

Ray was a member of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. He had many friends in his life but always kept his faith. On their 60th wedding anniversary, Ray and Fay were married in the Boise Temple.

Ray was loved and will be missed by loved ones and friends, for his kind and fun-loving ways and his wonderful sense of humor. Ray is survived by his wife, his loved one, Lady, a daughter Judy (Dan) Johnson of Jackson, Wyoming, his son Jack (Kay) Flavel of Twin Falls, Idaho, five grandchildren: Larry (Lanny) Johnson of Roseville, California, Corey (Amy) Johnson of Rockspire, California, Ryan Flavel of Twin Falls, Idaho, Kristi (Bart) Hamilton of Higley, Arizona, and Brock Flavel of Twin Falls, Idaho. Four and counting: granddaughters, Whitney, Britney, Saigo, and Bailey Johnson. Four great-grandsons, Chance, Tanner, and Brayden Johnson. Ray was preceded in death by his parents William and Caroline, and a step-mother, Fernia (Sweet) Flavel. Three sisters: Estella Stanger, Mary Nesbit, and Rosetta Deeds, and a brother, Ray Flavel.

A graveside service will be held for Ray on Thursday, June 28, 2003, at 11 a.m. at the Sunset Memorial Park in Twin Falls. A viewing will be held from 6-8 p.m. Wednesday, June 25, 2003.

Services are under the direction of Parke's Magic Valley Funeral Home in Twin Falls.

JEROME

Dorothy Michaelson Smith

Dorothy Michaelson Smith, a long-time resident of Jerome, Idaho, passed away on June 22, 2003, in Sandy, Utah.

Born February 12, 1916, in Smithfield, Utah, Dorothy was the fifth of ten children—born to Nels Michaelson and Susan Harmon. Raised in Northern Utah and Southern Idaho, she married Samuel Winslow (Win) Smith of Jerome, Idaho, on June 12, 1935. The couple settled in Jerome in 1948. Dorothy and Win had four children, three sons and a daughter, Sally, who died at birth.

Dorothy was trained as a beautician and operated "Dorothy's Beauty Nook" in Jerome for the last 15 years of her residence there. Except for a brief period of time in Fort Collins, Colorado, she spent her retirement years in Eagle, Idaho.

She is survived by her sons and their wives: Bruce (Karon) Smith of Lowland, Idaho, Kenneth (Carole) Smith of Sandy, Utah, and Dennis (Vicki) Smith of Roy, Utah, eight grandchildren, thirteen great-grandchildren, and by her younger sisters Cleotild Carlson of Pocatello and Donna Williams of Butte, Montana.

Graveside services will be held at 2 p.m. Saturday, June 28, 2003, at the Sunset Memorial Cemetery. Friends may call at the Hove-Robertson Funeral Chapel Saturday from 1 p.m. until 1:30 p.m. and on Sunday at the cemetery shortly before service time.

Camas schools refinance bonds

By Amy Ballard
Times-News correspondent

FAIRFIELD—In a move to save thousands of taxpayer dollars, the Camas County School Board voted this week to refinance the bonds used to pay for district building projects.

The School Board accepted on Tuesday a bond refinancing resolution presented by bond administrator Bob Hildeman of U.S. Bank and lead attorney Mike Moore of Moore, Smith, Buxton and Turck.

Refinancing the district's 1993 bonds, which will retire in 2013, will bring $49,000 in savings because of current low interest rates.

Upon refinancing those bonds and the 2003 bonds, the district's total amount of debt will be $420,000 less than was originally projected to voters. Funds generated from the bond sale will go to the district on July 15.

Hildeman said today's low interest rates—would give the district a head start on paying for its upcoming building project, eliminating the need to cut corners to meet the bid.

In other School Board business, Superintendent Ed Marshall said 57 applications have been submitted for the position of construction manager.

The applications have been given to Design West Architects for review.

T.F. Post Office holds appreciation day

Postmaster Rob Peters proclaimed Friday as Customer Appreciation Day.

The community is welcome to visit the post office, enjoy refreshments and meet Peters and his staff. The event will be held at both locations in Twin Falls. Refreshments will be served from 10 a.m. to noon at the downtown Post Office, 253 Second Ave. W., and from 12:30 to 2:30 p.m. at Pioneer Station, 1375 Fillmore St.

Tours will be given at Pioneer Station so customers can get a behind-the-scenes look at how the mail gets processed and delivered every day.

"Most of our customers don't really understand the complexity of our business until they see what we do first-hand," Peters said. "We've had a lot of challenges as an organization in the last couple of years, but our customers have stuck by us. We truly enjoy being the tie that binds our community together with the rest of the nation and the world."

Muzzle Braun comes to T.F. tonight for fundraiser

TWIN FALLS — Muzzle Braun and his boys are coming to town tonight to help pay for a playground.

Braun, the redoubtable country crooner from Clayton, and his band, the Toots country-rock band that includes Braun's boys, Willy and Cody — will play a benefit for St. Edward's Catholic School.

It's scheduled from 6:30-9 p.m. at the St. Edward's Parish Hall, 206 Seventh Ave. E.

Proceeds will go toward resurfacing the playground at the school.

Magic Valley In brief

Tickets, which are $10 for adults, $5 for kids and $25 for families, are available at the door.

T.F. receives city achievement award

TWIN FALLS — The city of Twin Falls was named the city of the year award on Friday from the Association of Idaho Cities for improvements to fire engine service testing.

A plaque was presented to Twin Falls officials during a celebration dinner at the 56th Association of Idaho Cities Annual Conference in Coeur d'Alene.

The Twin Falls Fire Department's test site at Shoshone Falls for its annual service test on all its rated engines had posed significant problems. Since then, the department has been building a facility that would suit the department's needs, but preliminary estimates were figured at $200,000.

Capt. Mark Petruzzelli discovered the department already had the elements needed to perform the service tests and, as a result, designed a system allowing the fire department to perform a service test on each fire engine using equipment the department already had and minimizing preparation, cost and time.

Federal court date set for bank robbery suspect

BURLEY — Larry Archuleta, who has been charged with one count of bank robbery, is scheduled to go to trial in U.S. District Court in Pocatello July 21.

Archuleta is accused of robbing the Burley branch of First Federal Savings Bank on April 28. The robbery occurred about 4:30 p.m. that day.

According to police reports, Archuleta reportedly gave a bank teller a note which indicated he had a weapon and demanded money. The teller gave the man an undisclosed amount of money and he left the bank. No weapon was displayed.

After reviewing security videotapes from the bank, police identified Archuleta as the suspect and issued a federal probation warrant of arrest for him on April 30. Archuleta is on federal probation for bank robbery, stemming from a 1998 conviction in Eugene, Ore.

Archuleta, 25, was arrested in Ogden, Utah, May 4.

A pre-trial conference for Archuleta is scheduled for July 9. Assistant U.S. Attorney Jack Haycock said.

Archuleta pleaded innocent to the bank robbery charge at his federal court arraignment, Haycock said.

Owner gets probation in Burley dog bite case

BURLEY — Burley resident John Stamper received a suspended jail sentence Wednesday in connection with a dog bite incident in Burley a year ago.

Stamper, 86, was sentenced to 180 days in jail and the jail time was suspended by Judge Michael Crabtree in 5th District Magistrate Court in Cassia County.

The judge ordered a withheld judgment be filed. He fined Stamper $300 and ruled that Stamper can own only one dog at any time. Stamper was placed on supervised probation for one year.

Stamper pleaded guilty to one count of harboring vicious dogs in exchange for the county prosecuting attorney's recommendation.

that Stamper not serve any time in jail. The plea agreement also outlined the $300 fine, limited dog ownership, probation and withheld judgment issues.

Stamper was accused of owning three dogs that mauled Jose Cuevas on June 16, 2002. Cuevas was 3 years old. The dogs have since been killed by animal control authorities.

Cuevas was playing at his grandmother's house at the time of the incident. His grandmother and Stamper lived in the same trailer park. The boy underwent surgery for his injuries and was hospitalized for several days after the attack.

Rupert starts selling carnival tickets

RUPERT — Bargain hunters can save money by purchasing advance tickets to the carnival planned in Rupert during the city's Fourth of July celebration.

Pre-sale tickets are on sale now at The Bookstore, Tots to Teens, Ace Hardware, Showkase, Lily's and the Mini-Cassia Chamber of Commerce.

Buying early saves a person $7 per day pass, organizer Donna Cameron said. The pre-sale tickets cost $13 for a day pass. At the gate, day passes will sell for $20 each.

Pre-sale of carnival tickets will end near noon on July 2.

The carnival operates July 2-5 at the Minidoka County Fairgrounds. Mothers ride free on July 5, Cameron said.

The carnival opens at 5 p.m. July 2 and 3. On July 4 and 5, the carnival opens at 1 p.m. Cameron said the rides operate until around 11 p.m. or midnight, depending on the weather and the crowd.

Inland Empire Shows operates the carnival.

Today
9 a.m. — Golf scramble, Burley Municipal Golf Course
6-8 p.m. — Fish fry, show and shine, Rupert Square
5-8 p.m. — Race registration, Doc's Pizza, Rupert

The cost is $8.50 for adults and $4.50 for children 10 and younger. Musical entertainment is planned in the gazebo during dinner.

Racers will have their boats parked around the square during the fish fry and spectators have the chance to vote for their favorite boat.

Seating on the square is limited, and organizers suggest people bring lawn chairs.

Racers must register between 5 and 8 p.m. Thursday, upstairs at Doc's Pizza, on the square.

Kimberly, T.F. put land use planning on hold

By Margaret Jones
Times-News correspondent

KIMBERLY — The cities of Kimberly and Twin Falls plan to hold any plans regarding Kimberly's area of impact until Twin Falls has a better idea of what it would want to do with the land.

Officials with both cities and Twin Falls County commissioners met Tuesday to discuss a portion of Kimberly's impact area that the city of Twin Falls expressed interest in taking over.

Kimberly would need to know how this land would be developed, Sorenson said. It is a mayor's obligation to the residents to know what goes into an impact area, he said.

The impact area is that zone which a city prepares for eventual annexation.

Twin Falls is reviewing its area of impact and is interested in the area between 3300 East and 3400 East and north of Kimberly road that is in Kimberly's impact area.

The eastern half of this section of land is in Kimberly's impact area and the western half lies in Twin Falls' impact area.

Twin Falls City Manager Tom Courtney has said the city has had requests from residents living in the section east of 3200 East to hook up to city services. Access to city services would lead to further development of the area.

Kimberly Mayor Jim Sorenson said he would receive fierce opposition from residents in the strip of land in Kimberly's area of impact if it became part of Twin Falls' area of impact.

The officials who met Tuesday came to the agreement that the areas would be left as they have been for the last several years.

Twin Falls City Attorney Fritz Wondrich said the city would continue to update its comprehensive plan, and if a situation arose in the future that would involve the two cities, they could have another meeting.

Citing harassment and isolation by his superiors and others at the department in the wake of that case, Chatterton later sued the department and the city of Twin Falls.

The lawsuit was settled for $35,000. The Times-News reported in December 1995.

Rupert holds off on sewer rate increase

By Shari Chaney
Times-News writer

RUPERT — Sewer rates will remain unchanged until at least July 15, City Council members decided Tuesday.

Rupert City Administrator Roger Bagley said the council postponed a possible rate increase until the July 15 meeting, when the topic will again be on the agenda.

The council spent a good portion of Tuesday's meeting discussing a proposal to increase residential sewer rates from $21.50 to either $28 or $32 a month.

Increases are also planned for commercial and industrial sewer customers.

Engineers from the consulting firm Forsgren and Associates told the city raising rates now will result in lower costs later as city officials plan to build a new sewer plant.

Higher rates would allow the city to set aside money before starting construction on a new plant. A reserve fund would allow for prepayment of loan reserves, off payment for matching grants and help keep capital expenses down, Forsgren's Rick Noll said.

All these factors will keep monthly sewer rates down in the future, he said.

Council members were concerned about increasing sewer rates and asked for more information about how higher rates fit into the timeline of building the new plant, Bagley said.

Bagley and Noll both warned the council the clock was ticking on plans for a new sewer plant.

Rupert's existing plant is overloaded and the city is required to work toward the new plant under terms of an agreement with the Idaho Department of Environmental Quality.

There was also some concern about "phantom BOD" in the Rupert system. Three weeks ago, engineers told the council the plant treats an amount of biochemical oxygen demand comparable to the level generated by a city with 60,000 residents.

Rupert has a population of just under 6,000.

Engineers Tuesday told the council about 40 percent of that phantom BOD had been traced to its source, Bagley said those preliminary tests must be confirmed and other tests finished.

Council members want the sources of the BOD identified before rates change so the correct users are being charged for the waste, Bagley said.

Other council business included:

• Park fees — The council discussed and then tabled until Aug. 5 a proposal to establish user fees and policies for the Rupert Square, a group of tennis courts, the swimming pool and Civic Gymnasium.

Council members debated the idea of charging user fees to groups who already do a lot — either financially or in man-hours — to improve the community, Bagley said.

The proposal calls for a required clean-up deposit of $250 when using the Civic Gym, baseball fields, tennis courts, soccer fields or sand pit volleyball for tournaments which charge an entry fee.

Soccer fields and tennis courts would carry a $10 per hour fee. Baseball fields will also have a $10 per hour fee if city employees participate the fields.

The proposed fees for the Civic Gymnasium are $75 for four hours and $15 per hour for additional hours. If a group rents the gym more than 20 times per year, the fee drops to $50 for the first four hours.

• Tort claim — A tort claim from Mike Biermann of the Brit Inn was denied by the city.

Biermann said while Kleopeter Inc. employees were preparing the city and sidewalks portion of the construction project on North Street, the outside power clean out was broken, allowing gravel into the sewer pipe.

Bagley said, trying to flush the line, inadvertently forced the gravel into the building. Biermann won his claim for $1,286.

• Urban renewal appointment — Scott Irvin was appointed to the urban renewal board.

• Intersection agreement — The council approved an agreement with the Idaho Department of Transportation for improvements at the intersection of Idaho Highway 24 and F Street.

Bagley said the work will mostly involve updating the traffic signals. The city's share of funding for the project is expected to be $60,000.

Woman goes to prison for promoting false back cure

BOISE (AP) — A Meridian woman was sentenced to 13 months in federal prison and ordered to repay her victims $795,000 for falsely promoting a cure for spinal cord injuries and other serious illnesses.

Neuralyn was sentenced to serve three years under supervision after she is released from prison.

Vigil and ex-husband Tom Vigil ran the Alternative Medicine and Biophysics Research Institute in Nampa, promoting a product called Neuralyn on the Internet.

More than 100 patients, mostly paraplegics or quadriplegics, paid up to $10,000 each for treatment in Nampa or affiliated clinics in Utah and Colorado that purportedly would help them move or walk again by regrowing nerve cells.

Federal officials said Neuralyn involved updating the traffic signals. The city's share of funding for the project is expected to be $60,000.

Tom Vigil has so far eluded arrest.

The California pharmacist, who supplied the Neuralyn, has been placed on probation and ordered to pay restitution to victims after cooperating with investigators.

Rainbow Family grows, so do incident reports

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — As members of a countercultural group begin gathering in the Wasatch-Cache National Forest, 1,344 Rainbow Family members at last count — the infractions against them are adding up.

Each summer, the Forest Service dispatches a special Incident Management Team to police the annual gathering of the group. And each year, the team keeps a tally of the infractions racked up.

In its report this week, which includes 18 categories from "DUI" to "assault," it also lists the number of warnings, violations, arrests and infractions.

So far there have been 43 violation reports, 75 warnings, 47 infractions and four arrests for various infractions. Law enforcement officers responded primarily to "traffic and vehicle" incidents. They handed out 47 warnings and noted 16 violations.

The next largest category was "drug related" in which 12 incident reports were filed, along with three warnings, 11 violations and two arrests. The report lacks specifics on which drugs were involved.

With a group that has the potential to draw nearly 20,000 people to the Little West Fork Black's Fork area, about 70 miles east of Salt Lake City on the north slope of the Wasatch-Cache National Forest, it's not surprising that there might be some arrests.

Missing so far from the tally: any incidents of nudity.

Deputies were called to Hull's home on May 27 to investigate a 911 hang-up call.

They found the cats in the garage and a "overwhelming" odor of urine. Many of the caged animals warded the previous tort claim notice to its insurance carrier.

Jerome County Commissioner Veronica Lierman said she hasn't been served yet.

was such a fair and honest person, an honest lawyer," said Emma Bruun, a secretary to Adkins for three years while he was a prosecutor. "He did a lot of volunteer work for the community."

He helped a lot of people by donating his work as a lawyer

Bruun also knew Adkins through time he served on the Lincoln County Housing Authority board as well as the First Baptist Church board.

In 1977 he left public office and continued in private practice in Shoshone until retiring.

Grant Gerber, Jarbridge Shovel Brigade attorney, declined to comment on the ruling since he hasn't received an order.

Gerber, O.O. "Chris" Johnson and John Carpenter were the original founders of a volunteer movement to reopen the roadway and were subsequently named in legal action brought by the federal government which led to the settlement agreement.

Woodbury said the two environmental groups will have 60 days to appeal Hagel's actions. At that point, he noted, the county will have to make a decision on whether or not to counter-appeal.

Bob Vaughn, supervisor for the Humboldt-Toiyabe National Forest, said the office was not available for comment. He has previously said the settlement agreement is good and rebuilding the roadway is still the objective.

Jim Winfrey, head of the environmental impact statement team on South Canyon Road, said his work is going forward and public input collected recently on various plans for rebuilding the roadway is being studied.

"We have always known they (the environmental groups) have been in the background," he said.

Forest officials will be holding a conference call today with attorneys to determine the next steps in light of the ruling.

Grant Gerber, Jarbridge Shovel Brigade attorney, declined to comment on the ruling since he hasn't received an order.

Gerber, O.O. "Chris" Johnson and John Carpenter were the original founders of a volunteer movement to reopen the roadway and were subsequently named in legal action brought by the federal government which led to the settlement agreement.

Woodbury said the two environmental groups will have 60 days to appeal Hagel's actions. At that point, he noted, the county will have to make a decision on whether or not to counter-appeal.

Bob Vaughn, supervisor for the Humboldt-Toiyabe National Forest, said the office was not available for comment. He has previously said the settlement agreement is good and rebuilding the roadway is still the objective.

Jim Winfrey, head of the environmental impact statement team on South Canyon Road, said his work is going forward and public input collected recently on various plans for rebuilding the roadway is being studied.

"We have always known they (the environmental groups) have been in the background," he said.

Forest officials will be holding a conference call today with attorneys to determine the next steps in light of the ruling.

Mayan site evokes sense of magic in the Yucatan

It's a sunny afternoon, and we are driving south from the city of Merida into the hilly farmland of the southwestern Yucatan.

The villages along the way are primitive, and the people friendly as we pass through their homeland. We are traveling in search of the ancient city of Uxmal (Oosh-Mahl).

In the years between 700-900 A.D., Uxmal was the largest Mayan site in the Puuc region. The word Puuc describes two things, the hilly area and the distinct style of architecture.

During the 800s, Uxmal underwent a burst of growth, and became home to more than 20,000 people.

In the year 1200 A.D., Uxmal lost its reign, and populations began to decline. The city was then used only as a ceremonial center.

The word Uxmal means three built because many of the temples and palaces had been rebuilt over existing structures anywhere from three to five times.

Father Lopez de Cogulha first explored Uxmal in the 16th century. Excavations began there in 1929.

under the direction of Danish archaeologist Frans Blom.

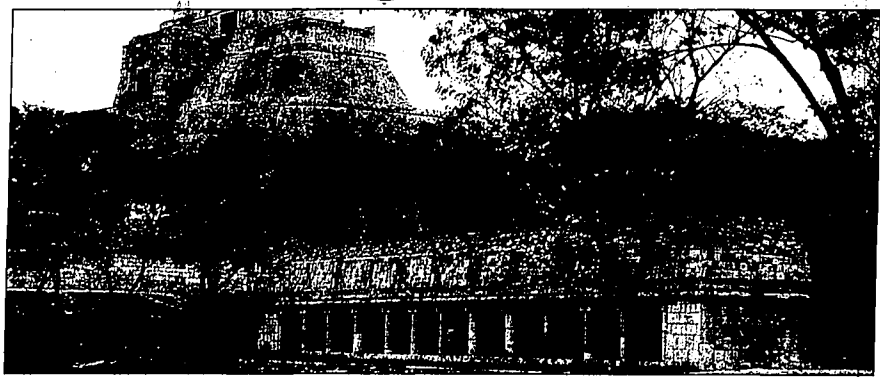

Arriving late in the day we decided to take in the evening light and sound show.

The next morning we awoke to a symphony of song by the birds of the jungle. We were excited to tour the ruins, so we were off to see the site.

A Mayan legend of a dwarf magician who built the temples, palaces and roads in one day. The main and largest pyramid, the Temple of the Magician, gets its name from this old story. Archaeologists tell us that this elaborately decorated, oval-shaped pyramid is the result of four centuries of construction. Five temples have been found inside this structure.

The Puuc city of Uxmal is well known for its beautiful architecture as demonstrated on every structure there. The short columns, intricate carvings, lattice work on stucco relief and endless images of the rain god, Chac and the serpent god, Kukulcan give Uxmal a style of its own.

The Nunnery consists of four beautifully decorated buildings set around a grassy courtyard. The House of the Governor is distinct with a two-headed jaguar standing guard on a platform at its entrance. Nearby the Great Pyramid is a massive nine level structure, which is only partially excavated.

My favorite structure is the House of the Turtles. This is a magnificent example of Puuc architecture. Carved turtles circle the upper edge of the building above rows of tightly stacked columns.

Many other structures here have been beautifully restored, also. Uxmal offers its visitors a unique look at the amazing talents of the ancient Maya.

Peruvian wins residency drawing

By Betty Taylor
Times-News correspondent

TWIN FALLS — Elizabeth Carlos is the lucky winner. She didn't get a car or vacation, but she won residency in the United States.

Carlos, a native of Peru, won a global drawing for residency. She and her husband, Jose, have been in the country for more than eight months, living with friends until they can find a home in the Twin Falls area.

"We want a job that has good benefits and pay so that we can buy a home," Carlos said. "I like this beautiful, clean place that gives lots of opportunity to get better."

She recently completed the English as second language program held in Wendell.

The drawing was part of the congressionally-mandated Diversity Immigrant Visa Program that is administered on an annual basis by the Department of State. It makes available 50,000 permanent-resident visas annually to people from countries with low rates of immigration to the United States.

The program makes permanent-residence visas available to people meeting the simple, but strict, eligibility requirements. Applicants for Diversity Visas are chosen by a computer-generated random lottery drawing. The visas, however, are distributed among six geographic regions with a greater number of visas going to regions with lower rates of immigration, and with no visas going to citizens of countries sending more than 70,000 immigrants to the United States.

Elizabeth Carlos was a lottery winner of the Diversity Immigrant Visa Program.

States in the past five years. Within each region, no one country may receive more than seven percent of the available Diversity Visas in any one year.

An applicant must have either a high school education or its equivalent or two years of work experience within the past five years in an occupation requiring at least two years of training or experience to perform.

There is no fee charged to enter the annual Diversity Visa program, although a special case processing fee will be payable later by people whose entries are selected and processed for the program.

The month-long Diversity Visa entry period begins each fall at noon on the first Monday in October and lasts for 30 days. Each year, millions apply for the mail-in registration period. Applicants may be in the United States or in another country and may be mailed from the United States or from abroad.

HUD starts Spanish Web site

WASHINGTON — Housing and Urban Development Secretary Mel Martinez has launched a new Spanish-language Web site, espanol.hud.gov, in an effort to help more minorities access information about HUD's housing programs.

"Espanol.hud.gov is one part of our overall plan to increase minority access to HUD's extraordinary homeownership and educational materials," Martinez said. "Today's announcement is another step towards achieving the Bush Administration's goal of helping more minorities achieve the dream of homeownership."

"Espanol.hud.gov" unites the HUD's English-language site materials under one bilingual umbrella for the first time. In addition to a new look and easier navigation, Espanol.hud.gov offers comprehensive information about home buying and rental tips, complete home and rental information, list of available HUD homes, loan counseling and financial resources.

In 2000, the Census Bureau reported that the Hispanic population now totaled 35 million, or about 13 percent of the total population. To reach this growing population, last year President Bush announced a goal to create 5.5 million new homeowners by the year 2010, and issued "America's Homeownership Challenge," a call to the real estate and mortgage finance industries to work in partnership to help achieve this goal.

The Blueprint for the American Dream Partnership, created last year by Martinez in response to President Bush's call, is a coalition involving many segments of the housing industry.

BSU alumnus testifies for student aid

WASHINGTON, D.C. — Gonzalo Callison of Caldwell, an alumnus of Boise State University, testified May 14 on behalf of the Council for Opportunity in Education before the Subcommittee on Labor, Health and Human Services, and Education Committee on Appropriations of the United States House of Representatives.

The council was recommending a 2004 fiscal year appropriation of $1 billion for the Federal TRIO Programs. The programs are authorized in Title IV of the Higher Education Act as a complement to the student financial aid programs. TRIO helps students to overcome the class, social and academic barriers that prevent many low-income and disabled individuals from enrolling in or graduating from college, Callison said. Currently, there are almost 2,700 TRIO projects at more than 1,400 institutions of higher education and community agencies.

In fiscal year 2003, TRIO projects served more than 874,000 students, two-thirds of whom come from families with incomes below 150 percent of the poverty level, in which neither parent graduated from college. TRIO programs work with young people and adults from sixth grade through college graduation, Callison said.

Callison participated in the Boise State University TRIO Upward Bound program, which he said changed his life and gave him an opportunity for real success in college.

The council represents more than 1,400 colleges, universities and agencies sponsoring TRIO programs.

Gonzalo Callison of Caldwell testifies before the Subcommittee on Labor, Health and Human Services, and Education Committee on Appropriations of the United States House of Representatives.

Virgo looks over new agreement, moves on

IF JUNE 26 IS YOUR BIRTHDAY...you're a perfectionist, moving slowly but safely. You thrive on mental stimulation and are good at business. With the sun separating from Saturn, you sense coming changes. Financial and legal affairs go your way, but avoid risk. Rely on the solid and the stable as there may be hidden problems. This year sees you laying foundations for a future that involves more responsibility and more freedom. In November, love blossoms. ARIES (Mar. 21-Apr. 19): An idea you had brings unexpected financial gain. You need an outlet for your energy. If it's not the gym, it could be a charity. You're looking for a personal challenge. Taurus (Apr. 20-May 20): You're been having second thoughts about a matter and want to give somebody a piece of your mind. You may be profiting from others' labor. Appreciate their contribution. GEMINI (May 21-June 20): The day starts much to your liking. Someone hovers in the background offering advice. Your resourceful skills help to save a situation at work. Don't let others influence you. Keep your expectations high. CANCER (June 21-July 22): You should be bored and frustrated. Your skills are not sufficiently appreciated. Let someone else help you create order out of chaos. Warning: Contracts signed today will be difficult to undo. LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): There's a tendency to be influenced by others' demeanor today. A loyal friend has news. Your self-image needs assurance and feedback; you're also influencing those around you in a positive way.

HOROSCOPE
Jeraldine Saunders
VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): You are double checking a new agreement. You may have to let go of a relationship. Take care of old issues and move on. Gemini is in the picture. LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): You are making an important contribution to a project. Signing on the dotted line today could have long-lasting consequences. This is a day to further your self-interest. SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): A long-term project may come your way. Be absolutely sure you can fulfill what's required. If you cannot comply, there could be consequences. SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): On the work front, you may be compromised. Someone else's illness or injury may put your plans on hold. Focus on evening brings a social get-together. CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Your patience and concentration are being tried. Any task takes twice as long. Saturn, your ruler, is not letting you off the hook that easily. Cancer is helpful. AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Your sociable mood could be contagious. You create an atmosphere of love and laughter that makes your company desirable. A long-standing problem should be ironed out. PISCES (Feb. 19-Mar. 20): You are introspective. Somebody may burden you with a secret. You are tempted to pry into affairs that don't concern you. Your charitable nature offers a helping hand at an event.

Custodian throws away smelly library art exhibit

BOULDER, Colo. (AP) — It's art to some, yes, but apparently not to the custodian who threw away the newest exhibit at the Boulder Public Library. After being pulled out of the garbage, "My Favorite Place to Walk in Boulder: Or Found Trash Objects" officially opened Friday at the downtown library. The display features common trash found by University of Colorado art students in otherwise scenic spots citywide. "This is a slightly different kind of art," said Karen Ripley, director of cultural programs. "It's not meant to be beautiful."

"One of the comments our maintenance guy made was that it smells," said Ripley, who saved the artwork. She said the odor could have been coming from a soggy brown leather clog found in a drinking fountain. When the janitor dumped the display, there were no signs or barriers to indicate it was anything but what it looked like: a pile of rubbish, Ripley said. Intended as a social commentary on ecology, the exhibit includes a green Frisbee, a plastic cookie cutter, a cigarette package and a drink coaster. # Eminem makes fun of Jackson

LONDON (AP) — The real Slim Shady stood up and made fun of Michael Jackson by dangling a baby doll over a hotel balcony. Rap artist Eminem also wore a surgical mask over his face Tuesday in an obvious swipe at Jackson, who dangled his baby, Prince Michael II, over a balcony railing in Berlin in November. Eminem, who was staying at the Art House Hotel in Glasgow, went

Earthworms live to old age of six

Any young man in search of a romantic partner ought to go watch a parade. Our Love and War man didn't say that. None other than Ovid in his "The Art of Love" wrote it. Ovid was of the opinion that parade-watching was a great way to meet girls. A 6-year-old earthworm is about as old as it's going to get. A lot of men dabble at cooking, but how many American men actually do most of the household cooking?

A. About 15 percent, if the surveytakers have it right.

Tuesday doesn't come out any too well on "favorite day of the week" surveys. Only 1 percent of the people polled voted for it. A few generations ago, it was known as Ironing Day, even as Monday was Wash Day. Tuesday was none too popular then, either.

Art authorities a couple of centuries ago decreed that blue paintings were dull. For no other purpose than to prove them wrong, it's said, Thomas Gainsborough in 1779 painted his renowned "Blue Boy."

Q. Flax, wool and cotton were the first three natural fabric fibers discovered by humans. What was the fourth?

A. Silk.

If George Washington had worn modern shoes, they'd have been size 13.

Lost class rings find way back

OCONOMOWOC, Wis. (AP) — Tom Snyder lost his high school class college class rings. Today, more than 50 years later, he has both of them back. His high school class ring was found by Jean Neumann, who now lives in a house the Snyder family once called home. Neumann was cleaning some cabinets when the ring, with the initials "TS," came tumbling down. Lori Foy was moving earth in her back yard when she found Snyder's class ring from the University of Notre Dame. "I was digging and loosening up the dirt when I heard this clank sound, like I hit metal," said Foy, who also lives in a house once occupied by the Snyder family. Foy cleaned the ring and saw the initials "TS" and "1951" inscribed. She knew Snyder and his connection to her home, so she didn't have a hard time figuring out who the ring belonged to. She and a friend gave Snyder a call. "I was sleeping...so I said I would come over the next day, but they insisted it had to be now," Snyder said. He's taken both rings to a jeweler to be reset.

Support groups exist for those with eating disorders

DEAR ABBY: I was deeply touched by the letter from "Fed Up in Fort Myers, Fla." regarding a young girl affected by her mother's bulimia. The children at school call her cruel names, and so does her mother.

Eating disorders are widespread illnesses that affect all segments of society.

They may affect not only the body, but also the mind — and appropriate treatment is necessary.

Abby, I would like to invite your readers to contact the National Association of Anorexia Nervosa and Associated Disorders (ANAD) for free resources and referrals.

Through our hotline and response to mail and e-mail inquiries, ANAD provides counsel and information to thousands of anorexics, bulimics, compulsive eaters, their families, and also the health-care community in all parts of the globe. Our referral list includes more than 1,500 therapists and inpatient/outpatient programs in the United States, Canada and several other countries, including Great Britain, Germany, Australia, New Zealand, France, Italy, Spain, Mexico, Colombia and more.

—VIVIAN HANSON MEEHAN, PRESIDENT, ANAD

DEAR VIVIAN: Thank you for the information. After printed the letter from "Fed Up," I received hundreds of others from readers of both sexes peppering me with questions about eating disorders. Readers, if you or someone you know needs help or information, ANAD can be contacted by phone: (847) 831-3438; fax: (847) 433-4632; e-mail: anad20@att.net; or the Web site: www.anad.org. Read on.

DEAR ABBY: I would like to comment on the letter from "Fed Up," the 13-year-old girl whose mother is bulimic and who is ridiculed in school by other kids because she is overweight.

I was trained in another country to become a teacher. Our psychology teacher explained to us that, since parents cannot be present in school to protect their children, it is therefore the teachers' and the principal's full responsibility to protect the students from physical and emotional abuse by other students.

I am one of many educators who believe that it is the parents' responsibility to discipline their children and teach them proper social conduct. That said, this is how I handle my responsibility.

Every year on the first day of school I present the rules of conduct in my class to the new students. I tell them that I expect everyone to behave and respect each other.

I tell them that I am well aware that some children like to call names and hurt other children's feelings, but I do not tolerate this kind of behavior. I say, "If anyone hits you or hurts your feelings — tell me immediately." I will call the parents of the abusive student and tell them what their child did, and that I will not admit their child in my class the next day unless accompanied by one of his/her parents. I expect the parent to sit in our classroom the entire day and make sure that his/her child does not hurt anyone.

I then ask the students, "How many of you think your mother or father will have the time to sit in our class the whole day?" No one raises a hand. No student ever dares to abuse another student in my class.

I hope that child's letter will cause people to think and change the discipline policies that exist in many U.S. schools — and I hope that other caring teachers and principals will follow my psychology teacher's instructions and prevent abusive students from hurting helpless students.

—RETIRED TEACHER IN ATLANTA

DEAR TEACHER: It there were more teachers like you, I would not receive the hundreds of heart-breaking letters I do from students who are harassed, bullied and taunted by their classmates. Obedience to you.

African rulers hang onto power, fearful of government reprisals

By Laurie Goering
Chicago Tribune

NAIROBI, Kenya — For 24 years Daniel arap Moi was the most powerful man in Kenya. Now the former president spends his days relaxing on his cattle farm near Lake Nakuru, cutting ribbons at grade schools and looking for a new role in public life, perhaps as a regional peace negotiator.

Leaving office hasn't been easy, however, for Kenya's big man. Among other indignities, Moi may face questioning in the disappearance of $34 million in public funds. Kenyan anti-graft officials said this month.

Giving up office is rarely comfortable for Africa's longtime presidents, and many cling stubbornly to power long after their popularity has withered. For some, leaving office means facing prosecution for misdeeds; others simply miss the power, money, travel and red carpets. Rare is the African president who finds a multimillion-dollar book contract or presidential library awaiting him.

Finding ways to ease transitions in leadership and setting up smoother rules of succession are keys to making Africa's decades-long presidencies a thing of the past, analysts said.

Whether it is by enforcing term limits or by creating university chairs and foundation positions to lure defunct leaders into a new kind of public life, "you have to break this cycle of perpetual rule while these guys are in office, so they don't feel they have to stay there for their own survival," said John Stremlau, head of international relations at Witwatersrand University in Johannesburg.

"There's a growing consensus around Africa that the old men ought to leave," he said. "African people don't feel they really have to have the big man anymore. The public is fed up with the great indispensable man."

As a younger generation of African Union leaders urge a new era of good governance on the continent, Africa finds itself still burdened with plenty of unpopular big men.

Since he was voted out of power in December, Moi's face has begun to fade from Kenya's currency. His son has been ousted from the ex-ruling party's shadow Cabinet. On Nairobi's streets, his passing motorcade is more likely to be greeted with hisses than cheers.

Yet even if his administration was best known for its rampant corruption, Moi could be valuable as a mediator of regional disputes, observers said.

"He is quite good at being a senior statesman," concedes conservationist Richard Leakey, Moi's longtime political nemesis and, for a time, a top minister in Moi's government.

President Robert Mugabe, who has ruled Zimbabwe since independence in 1980, has jailed the leader of the country's opposition on treason charges and now is seen even within his own party as a tyrant driving his once-wealthy nation to economic ruin.

In poverty-stricken Togo, President Gnassingbe Eyadema, Africa's longest-ruling leader at 36 years, just won a new term but only after his government fired rubber bullets and canisters of tear gas into crowds of protesters during voting. During the country's last elections, in 1989, Eyadema stopped vote counting in the middle of the process and declared himself the winner.

Uganda's Yoweri Museveni, a key African reform leader of a decade ago, famously declared he would spend no more than 10 years in office; he is in his 16th.

And in Liberia, President Charles Taylor, wanted for embezzlement, refusing to leave office, despite facing international war crimes charges after a decade of fomenting brutal conflicts throughout much of West Africa. Taylor's 50 percent of the leadership of Africa could be having to worry, maybe tomorrow, about some little zealous prosecutor somewhere who comes running with his racist redneck behavior," an angry Taylor said last weekend.

Perhaps the newest and most novel tool in luring big men from power is Boston University's new African Presidents in Residence program. Each year, one ex-African leader will be offered a fellowship including stipend, airfare and security in exchange for conducting lectures on and off campus.

Kenneth Kaunda, who led Zambia for 27 years after independence and later faced treason charges, recently completed the first fellowship, and organizers are in the process of choosing a second fellow.

Charles Stith, former U.S. ambassador to Tanzania and head of Boston University's African Presidential Archives and Research Center, says the university sees the program as "an incentive, a model — though not the model — of what life after the presidency can be."

While potential fellows must have contributed to progress toward democracy and free markets in their countries, the university's work is not about fishing a perfect candidate from a sometimes murky pool of contenders.

"We are not in the business of confining ourselves," Stith said. "These leaders are who they are and to the extent that they are flawed it is one of the things we have to accept."

An even more effective tool for confining the ambitions of African presidents may be term limits, analysts say.

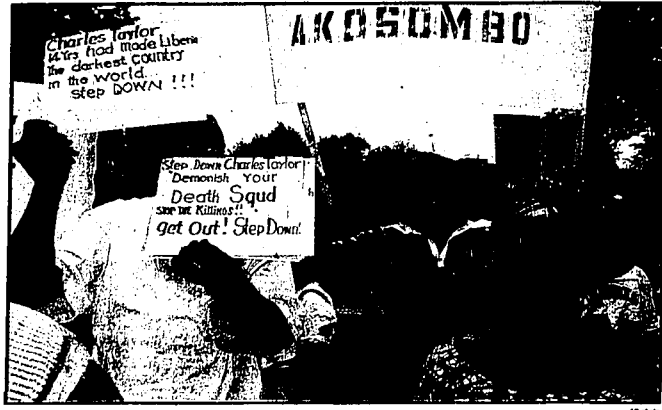

Since they gained independence from colonial rulers, many African nations have set U.S.-style limits, a restriction presidents from Malawi to Namibia have tried recently to overturn.

"Term limits" are the most fundamental element in trying to ensure that power is not abused, particularly in patrimonial states like Africa," Stremlau said.

"Restraints on the executive are the absolutely crucial element of institutionalized democracy, even more than free and fair elections."

"The idea is to prevent them from getting too deep into the power game, too hungry with power," said Gichira Kibara, head of the Kenyan Center for Democracy and Governance, and another backer of term limits. "It's easier to make sure the new president doesn't go the way of the old than to convert the old into something else."

For those already deeply entrenched, fear of prosecution — on charges from theft to war crimes — is usually a major reason for refusing to leave office. Top government officials in Africa as much of the world enjoy immunity from prosecution while in office. Leaving power can mean facing charges or at least tough questions, like those awaiting Moi, and sometimes in the international arena.

Liberian immigrants Gordon Troh, right, and Georgia Selli, center rear, and others rally in Boston Friday to call upon the U.S. to use its influence to restore peace in the African republic of Liberia.

Liberian conflict spills over into U.S. complex

MONROVIA, Liberia — Shells exploded in a U.S. diplomatic complex in Liberia's besieged capital Wednesday, causing injuries among thousands of people seeking refuge as civil war engulfed Monrovia, a U.S. official said.

A U.S. Embassy official said authorities had no details on the numbers of casualties, but there were no reports that Americans were injured. The embassy is across the street from the high-walled residential complex where at least three explosives landed.

Earlier Wednesday, U.S. authorities admitted tens of thousands of refugees into the residential complex as rebels attacked the city with rocket-propelled grenades, mortars and small arms, among other weapons.

It marked the first time since 1996, during the height of Liberia's 1989-1996 civil war, that authorities opened the compound as a refuge for Monrovia's people.

Army gets approval to kill 15,000 kangaroos on base

CANBERRA, Australia — The Australian army will kill as many as 15,000 kangaroos to keep a southeastern army base from being overgrown by a military spokesman said Wednesday. The Defense Department said the plant-eating marsupials threatened the environment in the 94-acre Puckapunyal training ground near Melbourne, said Brigadier Mike Hannan.

Animal activists vowed to protest, saying the real problem was a fence surrounding the training ground that prevented the kangaroos from roaming freely. Animal Liberation Australia spokeswoman Rhea Linden said more killing could not be justified.

"Kangaroo numbers are severely reduced, not only because of the slaughter last year but because the drought has taken its toll as it has on wildlife everywhere," she said.

A friend you can oink about

In France folks hunt truffles, freedom truffles, with pigs.
They put pigs on leashes, and with the tenacity of blood hounds, the pigs pull the handlers into the forest. A pig doesn't tree a truffle. They rooted it up, and they set up a hunt as lonesome as any hound holler I've heard.

And, there's a guy in Mississippi who's trained a pig to retrieve. He'll throw a tabby cat into the river, and the pig will rush in. It doesn't leap like a Labrador, but it swims to the cat, grabs it, and brings it ashore. Good pig.

I've heard that pigs clean up snakes. By "cleaning up" I mean, when some one's breaking new ground, putting a piece of the desert to good use, he'll or she'll run pigs around the property for a few days. The pigs will eat the snakes. Rattlers mostly.

DOG-EARED TALES
Bill Studebaker

I've also heard pigs were driven ahead of the guys digging the canals through the Magic Valley. The swine herd snorting for snakes and shade must have been a sight.

You must remember Arnold, the pig star on "Green Acres"?

Arnold's role was to show disgust for human behavior and to establish the hillbillyness of the otherwise aspiring white middle class. Often treated with contempt, he'd be chased out of the house - where he lived.

Living with pigs is a pretty common notion. Recently, stranger than ordinary folks have been buying wrinkly, short pigs, pot-bellied pigs, as pets. They put them on leashes, take them for walks. They pet them, both them, and talk to them.

"Oh, you're a cute little piglet. Come to Momma. You're such a good pig. Lie down on your rug. I'll be back in a minute. If you're good, I'll get you a pig biscuit."

People sleep with dogs. I'd guess people sleep with pigs.

That's as good as a pig can do - take over the master bedroom. They could go one step further and have breakfast in bed.

I've been told pigs are clean, given the chance to know. I've seen pigs walk right into a mud hole and lay down. When they came out, I wouldn't say they were clean. If Gertrude Stein had thought about it, she would have said, "A pig is a pig is a pig."

My son Eric was reading meters for a utility company. His job required that he travel up and down city alleys. Sometimes he could read a meter by just looking over the fence, or with his little telescope he could focus on the dials and get a reading from his truck.

But there are those meters hidden by flowers, behind barrels, twisted sideways, or in dark and dank corners. Such conditions required him to walk through the backyard, right up to the house, bend over and read the meter.

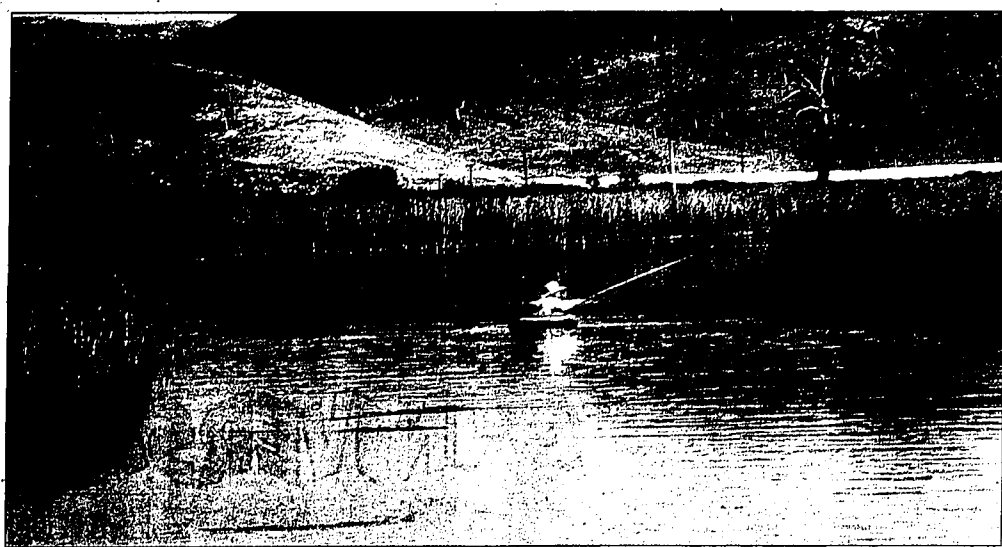

Often he was confronted by dogs. Most dogs he could placate with a doggie biscuit or by saying something in Doglish (that's Dog plus English): "Good boy. Nice girl. Hey you." He became accustomed to dealing with dogs, cats, pigeons, and pets of the most variety.

He was most surprised however when he was bent over reading a meter and he heard a pig grunting up behind him. He turned, looked, and running toward him was a 200 pound boar. He didn't know English. He didn't have a pig biscuit with him.

There was a solid row of lilacs to his left, a seven-foot cedar fence to his right, and his back was against the wall. So, he reached in his pouch and started throwing dog biscuits everywhere. With the nose of a truffle hunter, the boar slithered in the brakes. The hunt was on. The pig went for the biscuits.

The boar picked up a biscuit, chewed. It picked up another, chewed, and with its beady little pig eyes, watched Eric move cautiously toward the gate.

Eric said, "I had dogs that never slept but I read meters and dealt in biscuits, but that pig figured it out the first time. I could get by with a couple biscuits with most dogs, but the pig took a lesson. After a while, I heard him Arnold, and practiced piglish: 'Arnold, you're a pig pig.'"

Anglers in float tubes kick their way around the challenging banks of Silver Creek preserve.

Float tubes, pontoon boats add that extra kick to fishing

By James J. Krulich
Times-News correspondent

Float tubes and pontoon boats seem to be everywhere. They appear on the tops of vehicles, stored in the beds of pickups or tied securely to trailers.

And as these flotation devices pass by on the highways, they also appear in wide arrays of colors and styles. Some float tubes are round; others are shaped like horse shoes. Pontoon boats vary predominately in length and width.

So how does an angler determine which flotation device he should select? Well, the answer doesn't come in the form of a clear-cut, one-sentence response. Flotation devices are available in different styles to accommodate the particular needs and uses of fishermen. The following information should help a would-be float-tuber or potential pontoon owner to make an intelligent decision.

First, examine float tubes as they pass by on a car or on a lake. As stated previously, some are round, shaped like a doughnut. One of the major advantages to this particular design is cost. This round design is how a myriad of float tubes were initially introduced. Subtle design changes were added: more pockets for storage and backrests to name a few. The round design allows for relatively easy storage in the back of a vehicle or on top of the roof (with a bungee cord or two).

Where to tube

Looking for a good place to set out on a maiden tube voyage? Southern Idaho offers anglers plenty of ponds and lakes for good float tube fishing.

- Salmon Falls Reservoir - Plenty of rainbow and smallmouth bass at this time of year.
- Magio Reservoir - A good water year has plenty of rainbows, perch and some browns.
- Hagerman Wildlife Area - You can catch bluegills, trout and largemouth.
- Dierkes Lake - Well-stocked trout, and bluegills are abundant.
- Cary Lake - Perch, bluegills and largemouth bass are on the menu.
- Dog Lake - Located north of Gooding, a fine spot for bluegills, trout and tiger muskies.
- Billingsley Creek (lower section) - Swampy conditions and deep water make tubes a must.
- Lake Walcott - Catch your bigger rainbows on this larger body of water.

The downsides of this style are two: Many of the round tubes contain an inner tube that is heavy. An angler who lacks flexibility or agility may have difficulty entering the tube because he or she has to lift one leg and then the other over the device. While this movement doesn't sound extremely difficult, try this movement with Daffy Duck fins attached to the feet. Also, keep in mind that the float tube wants to float away on the surface of the water (one must back into a float tube because a fisherman must kick fins to propel himself - the movement is always backward).

"U-shaped or horse-shoe-shaped float tubes have distinct advantages," said Jack Hegdahl, owner of Southern Idaho Angler in Twin Falls. "Because the tube is open, it's easy to access. Additionally, the weight of the eurothane bladder (used to inflate the tube) is much less than those commonly used in most conventional round-shaped tubes. In fact, just during the past two years, the design of the eurothane bladder has changed dramatically. They're four times stronger and much lighter than they were just a few years ago."

"In addition to the lighter weight, many of the open-ended tubes have straps so they can be conveniently transported. With the lightweight and ease of transportation, these features make them ideal for use in high mountain lakes or locations where

Trek to Yellowstone's Grebe Lake offers an education as well as good fishing

By Chris Hunt

YELLOWSTONE NATIONAL PARK, Wyo. - The forest of dead, skeletal trees - some bleached from 15 years of lifeless exposure, and some just erect twigs of charcoal - creaked and groaned with each gust of backcountry wind. Our footprints crunched into the volcanic soil - the rubber soles of our hiking boots worked the trail like millstones, grinding in tiny pebbles of obsidian together as if they were black, glassy corn kernels.

The sky, a deep azure, was crisscrossed by jet contrails to the average airline passenger that day. Yellowstone was likely a visual footnote to their journey. Perhaps their captains made mention of the world's first national park appearing outside their windows 30,000 feet below. Perhaps not.

To the average 4-year-old, though, the park - and this particular trail - was a wonderland of discovery.

"What's that noise, Daddy?" my daughter asked at least a dozen times as the four of us hiked the 3 1/2-mile trail to Grebe Lake.

"What makes that sound?"

The answer varied.

"That's a leopard frog," I answered as we passed by a tepid spring, overgrown with sedges and rushes.

"That's a woodpecker."

"That's just the wind blowing through the trees."

OUTDOORS

Magic Valley Angler's Guide

The Magic Valley fish report is for the week of Thursday, June 26. Updated conditions from Magic Valley Outfitters and Blue Lakes Sporting Goods are listed for family fishing waters and major rivers in the Magic Valley/Wood River regions. Check Idaho Department of Fish and Game regulations for restrictions.

Mald River: FAIR. Decent pocket water for streamers and big dries. Best flies are clousers, sculpins and stimulators, along with elk hair caddis and Adams.

Silver Creek: FAIR/GOOD. It's been windy on the Picabo plains which is adversely affecting the hatches and trout. When conditions are calm PMD's Callibaetis, Baetis, Caddis, and Green Drakes are out at various times of the day. Callibaetis are showing up in good numbers on the still water sections of Silver Creek on warm, calm days. The PMD hatches will improve as we move into July and our weather patterns stabilize. Green Drakes are hatching on the upper Conservancy waters.

Big Wood River: FAIR. Cooler weather has dropped the Wood to 3.03 ft. down 3/4 of a foot since last week. Although wading is difficult in some areas, the Wood is just beginning to fish with some promise. Anglers are catching fish on nymphs in the side channels and in the slower water sections. Stoneflies and green drakes are making a debut and will be on center stage in the coming weeks. Have some green drake nymphs, stonely nymphs, bead head trout nymphs, and a few copper junks (red and copper) in your vest as well.

but some monsters remain. Try clousers, sheep series, 208 sculpin, Adams, caddis and beetles.

Big Lost River: FAIR. The Lost is flowing at 684 cfs. Although wading is still difficult due to high water, the fishing along the banks and in the slower water sections can be very productive. Large attractor nymphs are your best bet, as well as stonely nymphs. Be on the look out for Golden Stones and Little Willow stones as we enter into July. With the reservoir being full, expect higher water conditions this summer.

Trail Creek & Warm Springs: FAIR/GOOD. Trail Creek is still running high, as this is one of last rivers to clear. Warm Springs is running clear and anglers are hooking fish with nymphs and some dry fly attractor patterns.

Magic Reservoir: FAIR. Fish are stacking on the shelves around 12 feet of water. Fly fishermen are using ducktails, midge pupae and buggers, others should try trolling rapalas and fat fish.

Miller Dam: GOOD. The bass are extremely active because of great water temperatures and forage. Trawl in rapalas, frenzies, bouncers, worms and fwy jigs.

C.J. Strike Reservoir: EXCELLENT. The bass and crappie are active as always. Water temperature is between 60 degrees and 68 degrees.

Fish Creek Reservoir: POOR. Great place to get away but the fishery is slow moving. Night crawlers early and late, as well as ducktails, are recommended.

Little Wood Reservoir: FAIR. Fishing is hit or miss for trout to four pounds. Evening is the best time. Powdermill, marshmallows, night-crawlers, midge pupae, ducktails, sheep creeks and huggers, are all worth trying.

Camas Reservoir: FAIR. The water is running fast. Try using night-crawlers, mill worms, and jumbo midge pupae as indicators.

Salmon Falls Creek Reservoir: GOOD. Plenty of small bass and trout with the occasional walleye. Trotting weed, ring rings, and rapalas along with jigging pale plastics are the best bet.

Clear Lake: FAIR. Beginning to get mossy. Clear Lake specials are still effective, with ducktails and buggers.

Billingsley Creek: GOOD. Great spring creek water in the low 50s. Use PMDs, Adams, elk hair caddis, wooly buggers, clousers and Jansens minnow.

Salmon/Steelhead report: EXCELLENT. The water is just right on the Little Salmon and the fishing on the South Fork of the Salmon will be outstanding. Use too, tuna, egg sucking leeches, arctic leeches.

Lake Walcott: FAIR. The warm water has put the trout down but the bass are still active. Use frenzies, rapalas, rattle trons and jiggling plastics.

F&amp;G: Leave baby animals alone

JEROME — June is the peak fawning and calving season for Idaho's deer, elk and antelope herds. With camping and the outdoors season well underway, well-meaning citizens often find baby animals that seem to be abandoned. The Idaho Department of Fish and Game is asking people to leave them alone.

"We have people calling us or bringing baby animals to the office every year," said Randy Smith, Fish and Game Regional Wildlife Manager. "Even though their intentions are good, it isn't the best thing for the animals."

Mother animals often leave their young as they forage. If they return to find people milling around the baby animal they will often leave the area and come back when the people are gone. By then it is sometimes too late and their baby is gone.

"If people bring young animals into the office we only have two options," Smith said. "We can attempt to return them back into the wild, which seldom works because the animal is too young to survive on its own. The second choice is to place them in a zoo. Either way the animal is generally removed from the wild forever."

It is illegal for people to be in possession of wild animals. State or federal laws protect most all wildlife. People found possessing a wild animal without a permit can be issued a citation and the animal will be removed from their control. Animals raised in confinement are often destroyed because of the possibility of disease and lack of ability to survive on their own.

Smaller animals, like rabbits and songbirds, should also be left alone. In nature, mother knows best.

Redfish Lake hosts two wildflower events

STANLEY — The final two events hosted by Redfish Lake Visitor Center during "Celebrate Wildflower Month" are scheduled on June 26 and 28.

Join Nancy Williams at 9:30 a.m. on Thursday, June 26, at the visitor center. She will conduct an informative wildflower walk and share the abundance of wildflowers that have resulted from moist spring and warm summer temperatures. Nancy lives near Stanley and has numerous suggested locations for those who love flowers and hike the Stanley area.

within 25 yards of other wildlife. Anyone who encounters a bear should not run. Yellowstone officials say, but should try to stay out of sight and downwind. If the bear has seen you, slowly back away and do not drop your pack.

If a bear charges, experts generally recommend standing still as you wait for the bear to stop and then slowly backing away.

and simply cooked the trunks. Today, many of those baked trees are bleached white, a contrast to the blackened trunks that burned all the way through. And, just a few yards away, living, standing timber escaped the blaze unharmed.

Grebe Lake offers a unique fishery to Yellowstone visitors. Native Arctic grayling swim its waters, and what the fish lack in size, they make up for in sheer beauty. They have a large, sail-like dorsal fin that distinguishes them from their trout cousins, and their bodies are a metallic silver. They're a very muscular, solid fish, with a lot of energy.

Imagine trying to maneuver a 7- or 9-foot boat into a vehicle. Pontoon boats require a trailer or numerous ropes and cords for transportation.

A final suggestion should also provide some useful information. Visit with fishermen, anglers who are just leaving a lake or pond. Ask numerous questions. As long as you don't ask about the fishing, they'll surely tell you.

Outdoors in brief

Author Scott Earle will be featured Saturday, June 28 at 10:30 a.m. Scott will conduct a wildflower walk. Participants will meet at the visitor center. After the walk, Mr. Earle will be available to sign copies of his wildflower book, "Idaho Mountain Wildflowers." His book features over 300 images of mountain wildflowers and shows Scott's lifelong love of nature, of mountains and of photography.

Redfish Lake Visitor Center is located five miles south of Stanley, and open daily from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m.

Other events scheduled are: Moraine Hike: Friday, June 27, 10 to 11:30 a.m.; Meet at the center for a hike in the Fishhook Creek area.

Native American Rock Shelter Tour: Friday, June 27, 2 p.m. Meet at the visitor center, participants will use their own vehicle for the two mile drive.

Junior Ranger: For kids ages 6 to 10.

Thursday: "Animals and Where they live," 10 to 11 a.m.

Friday: "Amazing Animals," 10 to 11 a.m.

Saturday: Stanley Lake Overview, 1 to 2 p.m., "Do You Know About?"

Saturday, 1 p.m.; "Animal Olympics."

"Salmon, Wonders from the Ocean," Tuesday, July 1, 10 a.m. Meet at the center for an introduction to our three salmon and a walk to salmon locations.

Evening Programs: Thurs. — "Hiking in the SNRA," 8:30 p.m. campfire, 9 p.m. program.

Friday, "Totally Terrific Trees," 7:30 p.m. campfire, 8 p.m. program.

Saturday, "Gold Fever in the Stanley Basin," campfire 8:30 p.m.; 9 p.m. program.

Cross-Country ski group plans trail maintenance

TWIN FALLS — Members of the High Desert Nordic Association will clear cross-country ski trails in the South Hills on Saturday, June 28.

Participants are asked to bring chainsaws and hand tools and to meet at the Magic Mountain ski lodge parking area at 9 a.m. These helping should also bring adequate drinking water and lunches. Plans call for removing down timber and other obstructions from the cross-country ski trails and placing additional trail markers.

Officials urge Yellowstone visitors to be wary of bears

YELLOWSTONE NATIONAL PARK, Wyo. (AP) — Park officials say it is the time of year for visitors to be wary of bears, especially in the Lamar and Slough Creek areas.

Bear warnings have been posted for both areas. Meanwhile, the Pebble Creek Campground and West Thumb Geyser Basin have been closed because of brain problems there.

Recently, a woman was with her family in the West Thumb area when a bear came out of the woods, stepped onto the boardwalk in front of her and stood on its hind legs.

The woman fell to the ground and lay still while the bear, thought to be a grizzly, bit her twice without breaking the skin. The bear ran off when the woman's husband screamed at it.

The previous day, a young grizzly bounced on an unoccupied tent in the Pebble Creek Campground. The bear crushed the tent and rolled around on it, park officials said. The owners were not around.

Park officials caution against approaching a bear under any circumstances and warn that it is against the law to approach within 100 yards of bears or

Yellowstone

The trail is generally flat — there are a couple of gentle inclines but nothing terribly treacherous — and it receives a fair amount of traffic, mostly from fishermen who want a backcountry angling experience and the chance to catch rare Arctic grayling, a Yellowstone native that's now relegated to Grebe Lake and the upper reaches of the Gibbon River. Grebe Lake is by far the most dependable place in the park to catch a grayling in Yellowstone, and the hike is just long enough to keep the casual anglers from making the trip.

It took about 90 minutes — with the obligatory rest stop that included the distribution of straw-burying bug spray — to get to the shores of Grebe Lake. We looked at a leisurely pace and stopped often to watch chipmunks or to answer the endless questions a 4-year-old is wont to pose.

Nestled at the foot of 9,397-foot Observation Peak, the lake is small by Yellowstone standards, but plenty big enough to allow visitors to spread out along its banks and enjoy a nice June day in relative peace. It's a cold, spring-fed lake that serves as the headwaters of the Gibbon. For anglers, it's a great fishing lake because it's easy to wade out 30 or 40 feet before casting to the grayling and the rainbow trout that swim Grebe's waters. Some die-hards tote float tubes along the trail, and that gives them a really good chance to pursue the bigger rainbows that hang out in deeper water.

The trail is easy. It's mostly flat and very scenic. It provides hikers with a unique wildlife education. You can see fire's role in natural forest management and come to appreciate the sheer power of an out-of-control forest fire. In 1988, the fire burned through the Grebe Lake area so quickly, that it scared the bark from many trees and simply cooked the trunks. Today, many of those baked trees are bleached white, a contrast to the blackened trunks that burned all the way through. And, just a few yards away, living, standing timber escaped the blaze unharmed.

Grebe Lake offers a unique fishery to Yellowstone visitors. Native Arctic grayling swim its waters, and what the fish lack in size, they make up for in sheer beauty. They have a large, sail-like dorsal fin that distinguishes them from their trout cousins, and their bodies are a metallic silver. They're a very muscular, solid fish, with a lot of energy.

Float

some walking is needed in order to reach the water."

Other considerations for a novice to the "float" world should consider dealing with inflation. Whether round, U-shaped or pontoon, anglers should always consider inflation and expansion. When the day wears on, air expands. Air contained inside a tube or pontoon also expands according to increasing temperatures. A tube contained in the back of a hot truck could burst if some air is not released. An altitude gain, such as a trip over Galena Summit, may also merit dropping the air pressure in a tube or pontoon a few pounds.

Pontoon boats (also called kick boats) have several advantages, Hegdahl said. "The fishermen has a better view since he's farther above the water. Secondly, less of the angler's body is in the water, so pontoon boats may be warmer."

"Mobility is also a factor. Most pontoon boats come with ears, so there's greater mobility on large bodies of water. Fishermen also have the option of using fins (hence, the term kick boat)."

Another factor to consider is that pontoon boats are useful on water that contains current, unlike float tubes (float tubes should not be used on moving water that contains anything above a very modest current). Pontoon boats of 9 feet or longer are the general rule of thumb for moving water.

Pontoon boats also have some detractors. Smaller pontoons are generally around 7 feet in length.

Imagine trying to maneuver a 7- or 9-foot boat into a vehicle. Pontoon boats require a trailer or numerous ropes and cords for transportation.

A final suggestion should also provide some useful information. Visit with fishermen, anglers who are just leaving a lake or pond. Ask numerous questions. As long as you don't ask about the fishing, they'll surely tell you.

Turkey calls: An American folk art

By Dean Foslid
For AP Special Edition

BEACH LAKE, Pa. — Earl Mickel is big on communicating. That means he talks some serious turkey.

He can coax chicks, cuts and cackles from any of his 4,000-plus turkey calls — believed to be the largest such collection anywhere.

A folksy narrative flows from the two books he wrote about talented turkey callmakers. The now out-of-print editions selling originally for $23 and $40, respectively, fetch $200 or more on eBay — if you can find them.

Mickel also is perched high on the pecking order of turkey call historians. He puts many thousands of miles on his truck each year speaking to clubs and civic groups about turkey calls, turkey callmakers and turkey hunting.

All that because turkey calls — working and decorative — have become highly valued folk art.

"Everybody I talk to has waiting lists," Mickel said. "Custom call makers just can't fill the orders."

There's something of an ironic twist in that for Mickel, he's all but pricing himself out of the collector's market by helping publicize turkey calls and callmakers.

Another part of the appreciation equation is that turkey hunting has grown so popular over the past few decades. Back in the early 1970s, or about the time the National Wild Turkey Federation was founded, there were an estimated 1.3 million wild turkeys and 1.5 million turkey hunters in the United States. Largely through trap and transfer efforts sponsored by the federation and state wildlife agencies, there now are some 3.6 million wild turkeys in 49 states and about 2.6 million turkey hunters. Only Alaska is without gobblers.

"We have more turkeys in more places than when the pilgrims arrived," Mickel said.

Many modern-day hunters are wild about anything turkey — or turkey-hunting-related, which explains the popularity of custom-made turkey calls. "I started collecting seriously in the 80s," Mickel said. "I was on the ground floor of the thing. I was the first guy to write a book about turkey calls. (1994) That helped push sales, some. It has jumped from just turkey hunters collecting calls to 'everyman.'"

Many of the calls in Mickel's collection are too large, too fragile or too decorative to be carried into the woods. They were made to fit on coffee tables or in display cabinets, but all can bring in a strutting tom. There are friction calls, diaphragm calls and trumpet calls. They're made from wood, bones, horns and hoofs, aluminum, copper, brass, slate, glass, turtle shells, coconut shells, clamshells, foam and rocks, among other things. Some have been crafted into palm-sized slates with wood holders and bone-tipped strikers. Others are hand cut and rough hewn "music boxes" — working calls made to be carried in the pockets of hunting vests. But they're no less artistic. Each has been tuned into something that can mimic a talkative turkey.

All are designed to fool one of the smartest birds in nature — to bring big, bearded gobblers down from their roosting trees or entice scattered turkey flocks to regroup and approach within shotgun range.

The Mickels live on a Currier & Ives-fashion farm in Northeast Pennsylvania. Their 250 acres are a picturesque mix of meadows, ponds and woodlands — prime critter country. Dozens of wild turkeys and scores of whitetail deer were picking their way across an expansive, snow-covered yard the day a reporter came calling.

Joined by some party-crashing crows, they were dining on ear corn and stale Krispy Kreme doughnuts arranged in piles or placed in feeders near the house. The birds scattered briefly when a low-flying bald eagle glided overhead.

Earl's wife, Janene, catalogs the many calls in the collection and helped gather background for his books. She tastefully blends antiques with the many call displays, turkey-theme paintings, bird mounts, beards, tail feathers and turkey statuettes.

"The highest-priced call I bought was a box call for a little over $11,000," Mickel said. "There are calls out there now going for $20 to $30,000."

"I collect turkey calls because I like to. And I like the guys who make them. When I'm not hunting turkeys, I'm hunting turkey calls."

Although the collecting craze is relatively recent, there's nothing new about turkey calls. Wingbone calls well over 800 years old have been found by archaeologists digging around former Indian encampments.

The first advertised turkey call emerged in the 1880s and was sold by the British Gun and Implement Co., Mickel said.

Henry Gibson patented the first box call in 1897. "He probably didn't make the first box call, but he was astute enough to patent it," Mickel said.

Some of the biggest names in call-making, along with Gibson, include Tom Turpin, Mike Lynch and Neil Cost. Cost, who died last year, liked to describe the art of building turkey calls as "removing everything from a piece of wood that didn't sound like a turkey."

He is credited with developing the so-called "boat paddle" call, where he used a wood screw to attach a paddle-shaped top to a shallow box. Scraping the pieces together produces all sorts of realistic turkey tones.

Turpin considers Cost the Stradivarius of callmakers. It was a Cost call — the so-called "Fat Lady" — his very last — that Mickel paid $11,200 for via an eBay auction.

"What makes a call collectible? The popularity of the callmaker, the numbers produced and the death of the callmaker," Mickel said.

"Signed calls are always more valuable than unsigned calls. Mass-produced calls will never be very collectible. Condition is important."

Mickel suggests that people new to collecting look for callmakers who have designed their own calls, have already begun building reputations and who will produce a limited number of calls — each hand made.

"There's nothing more American than wild turkeys, turkey hunting and turkey calls," he said. "It's truly an American art form — true only to the U.S. of A."

"Turkey Callmakers, Past and Present: Mick's Picks: Stories and History of Callmakers," by Earl Mickel, and "Turkey Callmakers, Past and Present: The Rest of the Best," by Earl Mickel with Howard Pommer are self-published and available through Internet searches. "Turkey Calls: An Enduring American Folk Art," by Howard L. Harlan, also can be found via Internet search.

Simplot exec to lead business lobby

TWIN FALLS — Fred Zerza, a corporate vice president with J.R. Simplot Co. in Boise, was elected chairman of the Idaho Association of Commerce and Industry this month.

Zerza, Simplot's corporate vice president of public relations and governmental affairs, succeeds Steve Thomas, partner in the Boise law firm of Moffatt-Thomas. Zerza's one-year term starts July 1.

"Idaho is going through some very difficult economic times now, even in this tough atmosphere, I've seen IACI work very successfully on a wide range of policy issues important to the business community," Zerza said in a statement. "The organization has played a leadership role in protecting the economic development incentives that have helped Idaho's economy grow in the past, and that will help us pull out of this current economic downturn in the near future."

Zerza heads a new slate of officers that includes Park Price of Pocatello, president of the Bank of Idaho, as IACI's chairman-elect; Dan Hatch, vice president for operations of Basic American Foods in Blackfoot, as secretary; and Mike Mooney, district president of Key Bank in Boise, as treasurer.

Continuing as vice chairman are Mark Benson of Potlatch Corp. in Lewiston; Trent Clark of Solutia Inc. in Soda Springs; Diane Crookham of Crookham Co. in Caldwell; Mark Litterer of Wells Fargo Bank in Boise; Evelyn Loveless of Global Travel in Boise; and John Roberts of Washington Group International in Boise.

The organization's other board members include one Magic Valley man, Stephen Hartgen, publisher of The Times-News in Twin Falls, was re-elected to a three-year term which ends in 2006.

The Boise-based business lobbying group has about 300 members, representing all kinds and sizes of Idaho business. Steve Ahrens is president.

General Mills posts higher quarterly earnings

MINNEAPOLIS — General Mills Inc. on Wednesday reported fourth-quarter earnings of $225 million, nearly four times the $57 million earned a year earlier when it had high costs related to its acquisition of Pillsbury.

Earnings were 59 cents a share for the three months ended May 25 compared with 15 cents a share a year earlier. Excluding one-time items mostly related to the deal for Pillsbury, earnings would have been 64 cents a share, up from 25 cents a share a year earlier.

The latest results beat by a penny a share the consensus estimate of analysts surveyed by Thomson First Call.

Sales for the food manufacturer totaled $2.55 billion in the fourth quarter, up from $2.32 billion a year earlier.

For the full year, General Mills — which has agricultural operations in Magic Valley — earned $917 million, or $2.43 per share, up from $458 million, or $1.34 per share a year earlier.

Sales totaled $10.51 billion, up from $7.95 billion in fiscal 2002. For fiscal 2004, General Mills anticipates per-share earnings ranging from $2.85 to $2.90, an increase of 17 percent to 19 percent, including restructuring and other exit and merger-related costs of 10 cents to 15 cents per share.

Propane company announces distribution

TULSA, Okla. — Heritage Propane Partners LP — the owner of 64 propane operations in Twin Falls and Rupert — announced a full distribution of 63.75 cents per common unit for its fiscal third quarter, which ended May 31.

The distribution represents an annual yield of about 8.2 percent, the Tulsa-based partnership said. It is payable July 15 to unitholders of record July 7.

Heritage is the nation's fourth-largest retail marketer of propane, with more than 650,000 customers in 29 states.

Dealership employee gets customer back on the road

By Loretta Burkhardt
Times-News correspondent

TWIN FALLS — Service consultant Jama Bloxham at Rob Green Pontiac Buick GMC does not measure every transaction in dollars and cents.

What really counts is meeting the customer's needs, said Bloxham, who has been with the Twin Falls dealership for more than four years.

And her course of action is straightforward.

"I try to treat every customer the way I'd like to be treated," she said.

Her ability to empathize with the person across the counter has landed her this month's Southern Idaho Business customer service award.

This month's customer service award winner, Jama Bloxham, center, works at the service desk at Rob Green Pontiac Buick GMC in Twin Falls, with General Manager Dimbo Bivens, right.

"It was her willingness to help me out," said Alberdi, who owns and operates Valley Brake & Truck Parts LLC.

While checking over his vehicle before leaving on a business trip to Portland, Ore., Alberdi noticed a taillight on his new GMC Envoy wasn't working.

Though the burned-out light went undetected until the day of departure, he wasn't overly concerned. He knew the service department at the GMC dealership would be open and he could whine in and get it replaced. After all, how hard could it be to replace a bulb?

His problem turned out to be a little more complex than anticipated.

At the dealership, a technician discovered a glitch in the taillight module. To fix it, the entire module on the new vehicle would need to be replaced.

And that was only half of the problem.

The other half was the element of time.

Since the necessary part was not in stock, it would need to be ordered. And because it was a weekend, that could take up to three days. But Alberdi needed to be at a scheduled meeting the fol-

Fed cuts key interest rate by one-quarter point

The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The Federal Reserve cut a key short-term interest rate Wednesday by a one-quarter percentage point to its lowest level in 45 years. The aim is to energize consumer spending and business investment and help the economy snap out of a funk.

Fed Chairman Alan Greenspan and his Federal Open Market Committee colleagues reduced the federal funds rate from 1.25 percent to 1 percent, the lowest level since 1958.

The funds rate — the interest banks charge each other on overnight loans — is the Fed's main lever for influencing the economy. The vote was 11-1 with Fed member Robert Poole dissenting. He favored a larger, half-point reduction in the funds rate.

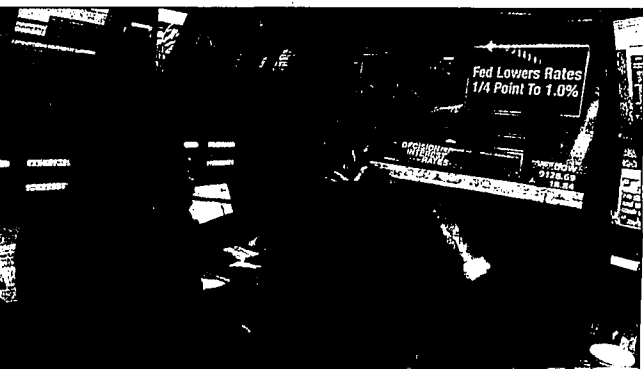

The action marks the first reduction to the funds rate since November and the 13th since January 2001, when the Fed embarked on an aggressive rate-cutting campaign to rescue the economy from a developing recession and the fallout from the Sept. 11 terror attacks.

With the lowering of the funds rate Wednesday, commercial banks were expected to cut their prime lending rates — the benchmark for many consumer and small-business loans — by a similar quarter point, from the current rate of 4.25 percent to 4 percent, the lowest level since May 15, 1959.

"The economy ... has yet to exhibit sustainable growth," the Fed said in a statement. "The committee judged that a slightly more expansive monetary policy would add further support for an economy which it expects to improve over time."

The Fed's next meeting is Aug. 12.

"Fed policy-makers are sending a message that the economy seems to be leveling out and conditions are in place for better economic performance in the coming months," said Lynn Reaser, chief economist at Banc of America Capital Management. "They are providing one additional nudge to help achieve that growth."

Reaser said that if the economy were to weaken, the Fed wouldn't hesitate to reduce rates again at the August meeting, but she said she didn't believe that would turn out to be the case.

Economists say a reduction in the funds rate also helps ward off the economically dangerous threat of deflation, a widespread decline in prices, something that could emerge from a stagnant economy.

"The probability, though minor, of an unwelcome substantial fall in inflation exceeds that of a pickup in inflation from its already low level," the Fed said Wednesday.

Although Greenspan and his colleagues say the chance of deflation is remote, the central bank still must be alert because of deflation's potential to wreck the economy, analysts say. Fed policy-makers raised the specter of deflation at their last meeting May 6.

The United States' last serious deflation occurred during the Great Depression. A bad case of deflation can lead not only to widespread price declines, from goods and services to real-estate and stocks, but also to job losses and pay cuts.

Wednesday's rate cut comes as the economy struggles to get back on firmer footing.

The quick, postwar economic boom that some economists had hoped for hasn't materialized. For the most part, businesses have been reluctant to ramp up capital spending and hiring, major factors holding back the economy's ability to return to full health.

Consumers, meanwhile, have been the main force keeping the economy afloat. Even they, however, have been more inclined to spend cautiously than to splurge amid the muddled economic climate and sluggish job market.

The economy grew at a mediocre 1.9 percent annual rate in the first three months of 2003. Economists don't believe the economy fared much better in the current April-June quarter and may have done worse. Forecasts of the second-quarter economic growth rate range from 1 percent to more than 2 percent.

The latest batch of economic reports released Wednesday morning highlighted the split personality of the economy's uneven recovery. Manufacturers saw demand

Dell chief urges 'fair use' labels on films, music

Knight Ridder News Service

AUSTIN, Texas — Dell Computer's chief executive, Michael Dell, this week called for the makers of music, movies and other content from being removed from consumers can and can't do with the content.

Dell said confusion over so-called fair-use rights is one of his "pet peeves."

"What is fair use? People don't know," he said.

Dell, 38, said he wants to see clear labeling of entertainment content that tells buyers what they are entitled to do with it.

Dell Computer is a Magic Valley employer, with a tech-support and customer-service call center in Twin Falls.

The computer industry has been the target of criticism by the entertainment business, which has accused tech companies of selling products — such as CD burners and movie-copying software — that promote music and movie piracy.

Dell said competition would drive consumers to buy products from companies that allowed more freedom of use with their content.

The entertainment industry has been responding by developing ways to prevent digital content from being removed from physical media, such as copy-protecting CDs. They are also pushing new formats, such as Audio DVD, which are harder to copy.

"Piracy is a very serious problem for the film industry," said Rich Taylor, spokesman for the Motion Pictures Association of America. "We're grateful for any JEROME — If you know Norman Nailbon, be sure he sees this story.

The state is safeguarding unclaimed property for him, and for hundreds of other people and businesses whose last known addresses are in Jerome.

The Idaho State Tax Commission is looking for those folks, and hoping they'll call to claim the property.

It's stuff for which Idaho businesses have been unable to find the rightful owners, such as payroll checks, contents of safe deposit boxes, tax refunds, stock dividends, workers' compensation benefits and the like.

Jerome

The Times-News on Thursdays prints names of a sampling of unclaimed-property owners whose last known addresses are in Magic Valley communities. The first installment of the Jerome list appears today, and the tax commission said the people and businesses it listed here own unclaimed property worth $100 or more.

Watch for more Magic Valley names in coming weeks.

Fed cuts key rate by one-quarter point

In an effort to bolster the economy, the Federal Reserve cut the federal funds rate Wednesday by a one-quarter percentage point — its lowest level since 1959.

Fed

for their products drop in May for the second straight month, while home sales soared, stoked by super low mortgage rates.

Still, economists are hopeful the economy will pick up more speed in the second half of this year, with some predicting a growth rate of around 4 percent. A new round of tax cuts signed into law by President Bush last month should help that from analysts say.

Even so, economists aren't expecting a quick turnaround in the job market. The nation's unemployment rate climbed to a nine-year high of 6.1 percent in May as businesses cut 17,000 jobs. Depending on the strength of economic growth in coming quarters, the jobless rate could hover in that range or move higher, economists say.

Stocks fall after Fed cuts rate

NEW YORK (AP) — The Federal Reserve's decision to cut interest rates by a quarter-percentage point disappointed Wall Street Wednesday, sending the Dow Jones industrials down 98 points.

Analysts said investors were largely expecting a quarter-point reduction, but many were hoping for a half-point cut.

"Traditionally, what you see on Fed decision day is a rally until you get to just before the announcement, then we pull back a little bit," said Jeff Swensen, senior trader at John Hancock Funds.

"It's really symbolic," added Swensen, referring to the quarter-point cut. "There are other stimuli in the market that are going to help increase economic activity in the second half."

According to preliminary calculations, the Dow Jones industrial average closed 98.32, or 1.1 percent, at 10,111.53, having gained 36.90 on Tuesday. Earlier in the day, the blue chips rose as much as 51 points.

The broader market also finished lower. The Nasdaq composite index slipped 2.98, or 0.2 percent, to 1,602.63. The Standard & Poor's 500 index fell 8.14, or 0.8 percent, to 975.31.

The Fed voted 11-0 to cut the federal funds rate by one percent, the lowest level since 1958, noting that the economy had not yet shown sustainable growth. The Dissenter, Fed member Robert Poole, supported a half-point cut, but the vote was 10-1 in favor of the compromise.

Ed Peters, chief investment officer at Panagora Asset Management, said the market's reaction after the decision wasn't surprising. "When corporate earnings came in at the low end of expectations, markets are usually disappointed," Peters said. "The same will hold for the rate cut. Any positive impact is already priced in."

A pair of government reports, meanwhile, offered a mixed assessment of the economy. The Commerce Department reported Wednesday that new home sales jumped by 12.5 percent in May from the previous month. The seasonally adjusted annual rate of 1.16 million was the best month ever, the figure also beat analysts' expectations.

But in a separate report, the department said durable goods orders fell by 0.3 percent in May from April. The reading was weaker than the 1 percent gain economists were forecasting. Stocks have rallied in the past three months on expectations of an improving economy and another report Wednesday said that the Fed might raise rates if the economy wants to see stronger proof the recovery is firmly on track, analysts say.

Dell

acknowledgment that downloading music and movies without paying for it is not only wrong, but illegal."

The judge said the courts have made it clear what the copyright laws are and declined to comment on whether film studios should provide more detail about the laws on illegal piracy.

In January, leaders from the movie association, Recording Industry Association of America, Business Software Alliance and Computer Systems Policy Project met with federal officials to discuss policies dealing with digital piracy.

Some of the policies echoed Dell's statement — public awareness of the "rights and wrongs" of digital piracy and satisfying consumer expectations based on the market.

Nearly all of Dell Computer's PCs now come with CD burners, which is also the case with its major competitors.

In addition, growth of broadband Internet access has made it easier to download music and movies quickly.

Dell also criticized the ability for people to hide their identity on the Internet, citing security issues ranging from hacking to the sending of spam.

"If people can operate in an anonymous fashion, there's too much opportunity for bad things to occur," he said.

Customer

lowering Monday morning.

"So I suggested we take a unit out of a new vehicle on the lot and put it in my rig, and she didn't budge," he said.

That got Alberdi on his way. "You need to do what you need to do," Bloxham said. And besides, "it was a safety issue."

Empathy for the customer is what Bloxham is all about, said her supervisor, Ron Buschman. "She does a good job," said General Manager Bimbo Bivens, who authorized switching the parts.

It would have been easy to tell the customer he would have to wait for the part to arrive and to offer no other solution. Instead,

Boise plunges in high-tech list

BOISE (AP) — Hard times for the state's largest private employer pulled the capital city down in a national ranking of "best performing cities" for 2003.

Boise fell from sixth place to 72nd in an annual study by the Milken Institute. It tracks job growth, salaries, gross domestic product and sales from technological companies.

The blame for the drop can be placed directly on Micron Technology, a Milken researcher said.

"Boise's economy is volatile because its base industry, semiconductors and chips, are very volatile industries," said Ross DeVol, director of regional economics at the nonprofit, independent economic think tank in Santa Monica, Calif.

Cities with high-tech concentrations, overall, saw their rankings drop. But now Boise is in high-tech centers such as San Jose, Calif., and Austin, Texas, dropped 86 and 40 notches, respectively. San Jose ranked No. 1 just two years ago. Now it is No. 147.

Conversely, metro areas with more diversified and traditional businesses such as retail, government and health care moved up in the rankings. Fayetteville, Ark., home to retail giant Wal-Mart, topped the list of places where economies are growing. Las Vegas came in second and growing retirement community Fort Myers, Fla., ranked third.

The singular impact of Micron highlights the need of the region to diversify its industry, area economist John Church said.

"We received the benefits of high-tech in the '90s when high-tech was growing," Church said. "At times, 100 percent of the manufacturing growth in the state was in high-tech and in the '90s in the '90s when high-tech was growing."

"High-tech was the engine that drove the gains of the '90s. When high-tech came to a stop, we stopped."

Bloxham demonstrated a take-care-of-the-customer attitude, and what could have been a three-day wait was narrowed down to three hours, Alberdi said.

Gundars Kaupins, a professor in business management at Boise State University, sees this type of customer service and loyalty as looking at more than the bottom line.

"It's going beyond profits," and is an example of where the organization she represents thinks more of the community than of themselves," Kaupins said.

According to Kaupins, customer satisfaction paves the way to repeat business, resulting in a mutually beneficial long-term relationship between the customer and the company.

Trina Segro, an associate professor of marketing at the College of Business & Economics at BSU, says customer service is about solving problems and responding to individual customer needs.

"This particular customer had a specific need, and the service person understood that. The next customer will have a different need, and the next solution will also be different."

Segro said highly satisfied customers are more likely to spread positive word of mouth about a company.

Burley teen participates in NRA program

BURLEY — Shawna Leigh Uriguen, a junior at Burley High School, was selected to participate in the National Rifle Association's eighth annual Friends of NRA Youth Education Summit (YES) June 23-25.

The summit is an all-expense paid educational experience in Washington, D.C. for outstanding high school sophomores and juniors. While there, Uriguen will study the significance of the U.S. Constitution and the Bill of Rights while developing an understanding of the government and the importance of actively participating in it, organizers say.

Uriguen was selected from numerous applicants from across the country, and is the first from the Min-Cassia area to attend the event. She was required to complete an extensive application that included the submission of transcripts, a five-page essay about the Second Amendment and three recommendations. She received the news that her application was accepted on her birthday, April 25.

Uriguen was president for three years and secretary in the Minidoka Krazy K's 4-H club, and is a member of her school's Renaissance team, Business Professionals of America, and the Rupert Rifle and Gun Club where she has received several awards. She also works part-time at Minidoka Memorial Hospital, and has maintained a 3.26 grade point average.

The NRA launched the summit program in an effort to encourage young people to become active and knowledgeable citizens on both national and local levels, organizers say. All funding for the program is provided by the NRA Foundation through money raised by Friends of NRA, a grassroots fund-raising program organized by local volunteers. Since the program's inception in 1993, Friends of NRA has funded thousands of local projects that include youth education efforts, firearm training and wildlife conservation projects.

T.F. store offers incentives to promote reading

Robert Stuart Junior High has 92 million thanks to give Fred Meyer Department Store and Fred Meyer's media manager, Eddie Packham, for sponsoring our Ninth-Grade Reading Raffles again this year.

Fred Meyer awarded 20 certificates for free compact discs to outstanding ninth-grade readers. With these incentives, our ninth-graders read 92,733,389 words from a total of 1,922 books. This averages to 6.47 books per student each semester. Students also maintained an 84.2 percent average on book quizzes and added 23 newcomers to those who read at grade level (9.9) or higher (the typical adult novel is written for 8.5 grade level).

We want Mr. Packham and Fred Meyer to know how much we appreciate their support as generous, positive community partners.

PUBLISH: June 26, 2003, July 3, 10 and 17, 2003

NOTICE OF TRUSTEE'S SALE

On the 24th day of September, 2003, at the hour of 10:00 A.M., of said day, (recognized local time), in the Office of First American Title Company, 260 3rd Avenue North, Twin Falls, Idaho, in the County of Twin Falls, State of Idaho, First American Title Company of Idaho, Inc., an Idaho corporation, as Trustee, will sell at public auction, to the highest bidder, for cash or cashiers check (cash equivalent), in lawful money, the real property described as follows:

Lot 9 in Block 2 of GOLDEN SPUR SUBDIVISION NO. 5, Fifth Falls County, Idaho, recorded in Book 18 of Plats, Page 4.

The Trustee has no knowledge of a more particular description of the above referenced real property, but for purposes of compliance with Section 60-113 Idaho Code, the Trustee has been informed that according to the County Assessor's office, the address of 834 Bracken Drive, Filer, Idaho, is sometimes associated with said real property.

Said sale will be made without covenant or warranty regarding title, possession or encumbrances to satisfy the obligation secured by and pursuant to the power of sale conferred in the deed of trust executed by TERRY PRATT, a married man as his sole and separate property, as grantor, to FIRST AMERICAN TITLE COMPANY OF IDAHO, INC., an Idaho corporation, as successor trustee, for the benefit and security of First Security Bank, N.A., as beneficiary, recorded May 15, 1998, as Instrument No. 1998001822, Mortgage Records of Twin Falls County, Idaho.

THE ABOVE GRANTORS ARE NAMED TO COMPLY WITH SECTION 45-1506(a)(1), IDAHO CODE. NO REPRESENTATION IS MADE THAT THEY ARE, OR ARE NOT, PRESENTLY RESPONSIBLE FOR THIS OBLIGATION.

The default for which this sale is to be made is the failure to pay when due, under Deed of Trust Note, the monthly payments for Principal, Interest and Impounds of $341.42, due per month for the months of December 1, 2002 through April, 2003 and all subsequent payments until the date of sale or reinstatement, with a monthly late charge accruing from the date of delinquency at the rate of 12.5% per annum, and continuing to accrue from December 1, 2002. The principal balance owing as of this date on the obligation secured by said Deed of Trust is $17,715.15, plus accruing interest, costs and advances. All delinquent amounts are now due, together with accruing late charges and interest, unpaid and accruing taxes, assessments, attorney's fees, and any amounts advanced to protect the security associated with this foreclosure and that the Trustee elects to use the trust property to be sold to satisfy said obligation.

PUBLISH: June 5, 12, 19 and 26, 2003

RESCHEDULED NOTICE OF TRUSTEE'S SALE

On the 30th day of July, 2003, at the hour of 10:30 A.M., of said day, (recognized local time), in the Office of First American Title Company, 260 3rd Avenue North, Twin Falls, Idaho, in the County of Twin Falls, State of Idaho, First American Title Company of Idaho, Inc., an Idaho corporation, as successor trustee, will sell at public auction, to the highest bidder, for cash, in lawful money, the real property described as follows:

Lot 24 in Block 1 of the 1ST AMENDED PLAT OF MAGIC VALLEY MOBILE HOME SUBDIVISION, Twin Falls County, Idaho, recorded in Book 60-113 Idaho Code.

By reason of the automatic stay provisions of U.S. Bankruptcy Code 11 U.S.C. 362, the original sale was postponed, and the sale is being rescheduled and will be conducted as allowed by the expiration or termination of the effect of the stay in the manner provided by the Bankruptcy Code.

The Trustee has no knowledge of a more particular description of the above referenced real property, but for purposes of compliance with Section 60-113 Idaho Code, the Trustee has been informed that according to the County Assessor's office, the address of 1252 Twin Falls Loop, Twin Falls, Idaho, is sometimes associated with said real property.

Said sale will be made without covenant or warranty regarding title, possession or encumbrances to satisfy the obligation secured by and pursuant to the power of sale conferred in the deed of trust executed by JIMMIE D. O'NEAL and HOME MESA SUBD., an Idaho corporation, as grantors, to FIRST AMERICAN TITLE COMPANY OF IDAHO, INC., an Idaho corporation, as beneficiary, recorded October 28, 1998, as Instrument No. 1998012622, and the deed of trust executed by JIMMIE D. O'NEAL and HOME MESA SUBD., an Idaho corporation, as grantors, to FIRST AMERICAN TITLE COMPANY OF IDAHO, INC., an Idaho corporation, as beneficiary, by assignment recorded October 29, 1998, as Instrument No. 1998018409, Mortgage Records of Twin Falls County, Idaho.

The default for which this sale is to be made is the failure to pay when due, under Deed of Trust Note, the monthly payments for Principal, Interest and Impounds of $578.80, due per month for the months of November and December, 2001 and January through April, 2002 and all subsequent payments until the date of sale or reinstatement, with a monthly late charge accruing from the date of delinquency at the rate of 12.5% per annum, and continuing to accrue from November 1, 2001. The principal balance owing as of this date on the obligation secured by said Deed of Trust is $7,715.15, plus accruing interest, costs and advances. All delinquent amounts are now due, together with accruing late charges and interest, unpaid and accruing taxes, assessments, attorney's fees, and any amounts advanced to protect the security associated with this foreclosure and that the Trustee elects to use the trust property to be sold to satisfy said obligation.
