Brandon Pate of Recialm Lumber and Construction walks past a window on the top floor of the old Beakon Bean mill in Gooding Wednesday. The mill is being torn down, and the lumber, old-growth red fir, is being sold to build a ski lodge in Colorado.

So, even though the mills days are over, its timber will live on in a luxurious ski resort. Most of the Gooding timber will be used to rebuild the Irwin Mountain Lodge located high in Colorado's Rocky Mountains.

The illusion of history

Using reclaimed lumber in new structures is a practice slowly gaining popularity, said John Acha of the Colorado consulting firm Acha Builders.

The problem with new wood is that it looks, well, new. Today's timber is a hybrid, genetically altered to grow fast with minimal

In addition to its aged appearance, the Gooding timber has another plus mammeth size.
Unlike today's use of steel beams for support, vesterday's structures relied solely on wood to hold up the floors and ceilings. As such, the lumber's circumference had to be large to hold up the tall structure.

One question has to do with who gets tested. The board of education says everyone will be tested, even those who have no proficiency in English or are spicial-education students.

"We understand federal legislation allows exemptions for limited English students – a three-year exemption; said Jerry Hutchins, the testing director for the Blaine County School District. "But the state board has no exemptions. We don't understand that." State board member Karen McGee said thar's exactly the way the board wants it.

"Do' I think these students should take the test? Absolutely, Because I expect them to achieve as much as anybody else," McGee said. "Do we need to give them special accommodations? Absolutely. SALT LAKE CITY - A Kansas minister is intent on encetting a monument denouncing a gay university of Wyoming student beaten to death, and he's citing two Utah cases to do it.

To mark the fifth anniversary of he killing, the Rev. Thou shalt not lie with mandard as with womankind; it is abomination. Leviticas 18-22."

Phelps, who led an anti-gay protest at Shepard's funeral in Casper, claims that the presence of a Pen Commandments display in the city park means that all monuments must be allowed.

Chinese astronaut returns safely to earth

JIUQUAN, China (AP) - China's first astronaut in space returned safely to Earth on Thursday when his craft touched down on time and as planned after 21 hours in orbit, the government said. China's mission

The craft carrying Yang Liwei touched down on the grasslands of Inner Mongolia in northern China as planned, at dawn

Thursday, the official Xinhua News Agency said. Minutes later, he emerged from the cap-sule and waved at rescuers, according to images broadcast by state felevision. by state television.

"We don't have the staff," Hutchins said. Plus, sometimes the meaning of a math question suffers in translation, he added.

But there also seems to be problems in the data that comes back from the testing company, Hutchins said. For example, there is a requirement for 95 percent of students to be tested, but the rules for determining who those students are hasn't been determined.

Valley Superintendent Laural

Nelson pointed out that registration for that 95 percent takes place about eight weeks before the test. By the time the test arrives, students have left the district while others have entered.
McGee agreed there are some problems along those lines. But she said she's amazed at how smoothly things have actually worked.
"There have been a few glitches, but it's so much less than I thought it would be,"McGee said"I think both the districts and the contractor could do better, and certainly we as a board need to do a better job over oversight of both pathways."
On the other hand, Nelson said,

a better jurous averages.

On the other hand, Nelson said, the test is helping teachers in the classroom see students' weak-nesses. That's because the test is designed as a "levels" test, which means students work through a series of questions or problems until they reach a point in a subject where they can't go further. So, if a sophomore, for example, is taking a math test, he or she might be able to do basic Algebra but has problems with only certain segments of Geometry. The instructor would then know which concepts need more attention.

In addition, Nelson noted, the test-talso-allows a district as a whole to see where its curriculum

"I think it's a well-designed test, but it's only a beginning," she said. "It's going to go on for-ever, so it will only get better and better and better."

Also at tonight's meeting the board will discuss the following topics:

• No Child Left Behind - The board is required by federal law to consider what on the ISAT would be considered "proficiency," what would put a school madager of sanctions if its students don't do well on the test, how a school could appeal being put on a list for sanctions, and whist those sanctions are. The board also will discuss a reward system for schools where students do well on the ISAT.

The use of old timber also means no new trees have to be cut down, he added.

The Gooding wood is especially valuable because there isn't any old-growth red fir standing anymore, said Bodenhofer, who is in charge of the building's demolition. Built in 1910, the mill used 100-year-old trees, he said.

"The wood is dry. There's no mold, no infestations. It's beautiful wood," he said.

And there's lots of it. Some 50 railroad cars were needed back then to haul the timber to the Gooding mill, he said. He estimates that it will require around 150 semi-trickloads to take all of it to Colorado.

Terri Schiavo, 39, had the tube reproved at the Timpa Bay-area hospice where she has lived for several years, said her father, Bob Schindler. Attorneys representing her husband, Michael Schiavo, said it will take between a week and 10 days for her to die.

The parents want Terri Schiavo to live, and her husband says she would rather die. She has been in a vegetative state since 1990, when her heart stopped because of what doctors said may have been a chemical imbalance.

Bob Schindler said he and his wife, Mary, went in to see their daughter shortly after the tube was removed and gave her a kiss and hugged her. He said his daughter was not as responsive as they say she normally has been.

"She's OK for the next couple of days," said Suzanne Carr, Terri Schiavo's sister. "We are just going to try to work some magic."

Several right-to-die cases across the nation have been fought in the courts in recent years, but few, if any, have been this drawn-out and bitter. meeting of the pharmaceutical industry.

The FDA commissioner called on drug manufacturers and distributors to help develop firesh and innovative ideas for keeping the drug supply secure.

Organized crime is becoming attracted to prescription drug sales because there is money to be made by faking costly medications, McClellan said.

In addition, some counterfeit drugs come from foreign sources, raising concerns as Americans increasingly look outside the United States for less costly drugs.

McClellan toured a packed trade show displaying a range of technologies aimed at preventing the sale of counterfeit drugs.

Manufacturers showed off tiny bar codes that can be painted on pills, tamper-resistant packaging sporting hard to copy holograms and even tiny DNA-encoded microchips.

The case has drawn international attention for the fierceness of the family fight.

The tube removal came just hours after Gow, Jeb Bush told the Schindlers that he was instructing his legal staff to find some means to block a court order allowing Michael Schiavo to end his wife's life. Even the family's lawyer has said their legal remedies have been exhausted.

"I am not a doctor, I am not a lawyer. But I know that if a person can be able to sustain life without life support, that should be tried," the governor said, adding the "ultimate decision of this is in the courts."

ing hard to copy holograms and even tiny DNA-encoded microchips.

"What surprises me is how many technologies, there are," McClellan said. Many of the ideas come from other industries and have not been previously used on pharmaceuticals, he said.

While no one argues against the need for safe and effective medicine, drug importation has become a complex political issue because many drugs can be bought cheaper in other countries, ordered by mail or over the Internet. Imports are the source of many counterfeit drugs.

The FDA says it cannot guarantee the safety of imported products, while critics charge the agency is trying to undermine congressional efforts to let people buy less costly drugs.

In recent months, government officials have decided not to ratise the national atert level to crange or "high risk" each time they docum a serious terrorism threat. The vote was 9-6.
The panel also said Inamed must do more research tracking womens health for 10 years after implants, a time when many say their devices begin breaking and causing painful disorders. So far, lammed's research tracks women's health for three years.
Still, after two days of debate, the panel ultimately agreed with Inamed's argument that it is not fair to restrict women's access to silicone implants when research suggests they break and cause other, problems no more frequently than today's main alternative - implants filled with salt water.
The decision came after emonative - implants lines where mater.

The decision came after emotional testimony pitting woman against woman: those who say implants broke inside their bodies to leave them permanently damaged and those who want implants they say feel more natural to repair-cancer-ravaged breasts or make their breasts bigger.

If women keep their implants long enough, they all may break eventually, panelists said.

The question is how to tell: Saline-filled implants deflate so fast that women know they've brone, but silicone leaks slowly and may not cause immediate symptoms. Because women may not be able to get all the leaking silicone out of their bodies, "we have to hold this to a different standard," argued adviser Dr. Amy Newburger, a New York dermatologist.

Mewburger, a New York dermatologist.

The FDA ended routine sales of silicone breast implants in 1992, restricting them to breast cancer patients in strictly controlled clinical trials.

Seeking to restart broader sales, lanamed Corp. argued that the implants have been exonerated. Indeed, studies to date show little evidence the implants cause major diseases such as cancer.

But the FDA worries that rare disease issues arent settled, and that subsets of women – especially the small proportion who have silicone leaking through scar tissue into the breast or beyond – might be more vulnerable to painful conditions like fibromyalgia.

"I wanted to be more beautiful. Instead, my breasts became hard, scarred and ugly," Rebecca Smithiles, of Michigan, told the FDA panel. She as one of more than 100 women, plastic surgeons and consumer advocates who spoke over the two days.

Trade, not taxes, should be Dems' mantra

Political rhetoric and political reality are two quite different things. As a rule, candidates for high office do not confront the hard facts of governmental life until after they have been elected.

Thus it is only now, after the recall election is over, that Arnold Schwarzenegger and his team of advisers are being pressed on how they would close the looming deficits in the California budget while rolling back the ear tax increases at a back the car tax increases at a cost of $4 billion and still protecting school programs from cuts -and selling all this to a Democratic Legislature.

A similarly striking vacuum exists among the rivals for the Democratic presidential nomination. All nine of those worthies agree on one thing: President Bush's tax breaks for wealthy Americans must be rolled back, either to reduce budget deficits or to finance new health care benefits or both. Some would go much further and eliminate all the reductions Bush has pushed through Congress in the past three years. Former Vermont Gov. Howard Dean and Rep. Dick Gephardt of Missouri take that position, while retired Gen. Wesley Clark, and Sens. John Edwards of North Carolina, John Kerry of Massachusetts and Joe Lieberman of Connecticut would let middle class families keep their tax cuts and limit the roll-backs to high-income households. Yet none of the candidates—or their policy advisers—are asked the obvious question: What if the House of Representatives, which must originate revenue bills, remains under Republican control in 2005?

That is the likelihood, after all. None but the möst upbeat of permocratis holds out much hope.

None but the most upbeat of Democrats holds out much hope for reversing the majorities Republicans have held in the lenges, the most optimistic Democratic prospect is to shave a few scats off the GOP's margin. And few things in political life are more immutable than the opposition of House Republicans to any talk of tax increases. The last time rates were raised on anyone, in 1993, not a single Republican in the House or Senate voted for President Clinton's tax bill. This fact of political life did not intrude last week when the American Enterprise Institute, a

American Enterprise Institute, a conservative think tank, had the good idea to invite three former Clinton administration domestic Clinton administration domestic policy officials to help explain what a Democratic president would do about the economy. Gene Sperling and Bruce Ree spokesmen for any of them.

Shapiro offered the notion that major policy differences amoig the candidates. The other, he said, is trade, where some would defend an aggressive effort to lower barriers to commerce, as Clinton did, while others would reject new trade pacts unless they included stiff requirements for other nations to improve environmental controls and labor standards.

I think Shapiro is dead right in saying that the trade debate is both serious and consequential. More and more members of Congress of both parties are reacting to the growing trade imbalances and to the 'outsourcing' of jobs to China, Mexico and other low-wage countries by seeking tighter controls on the terms of trade.

If a Gephardt or a Dean were seeking tighter controls on the terms of trade.

If a Gephardt or a Dean were in the White House, it is not hard to imagine a sharp change from the liberal trade policies of Clinton and Bush — no matter which party is in control which party is in control of Congress. Restrictive policies the control of th

Lieberman.

But the tax debate that consumes the Democrats may well be an academic exercise. When I asked Reed and Sperling if the possibility of a Republican House thwarting any rollback in tax cuts ever emerged in their consultations with the candidates, they both said no. "Notic of the candidates has the luxty of thinking about that," Reed said.

THE WHOLE HING

of thinking about that," Reed said.

Sperling said it is possible that even if Republicans remain in control of the House, a Democratic president "could try to get people back to the table to negotiate some of the hard things," as Clinton did in 1997, when the final steps that helped produce a few years of budger "surpluses were taken.

But taxes were not raised in "1997, and Reed conceded," Olitrexperience was that it was hard to get a Republican Congress to take up a subject that did not interest them."

All this leads me to think that while the tax debate commands the headlines, it is the trade debate among the Democratic hopefuls that may mean more to be countried that the control to the countries that the product of the countries there are the countries that may mean more to the countries that the product of the product of the countries that the product of the countries that the product of the pro

The big game, salmon and trout we have here are an irreplaceable treasure. Idaho has some of the best hunting opportunities in the country. Wilderness designation for the Boulder-White Clouds will protect our hunting and fishing opportunities by preserving qualitywildlife habitat. This area is different than many of the wilderness areas in the state in that it is easily accessible by 1934. The area's accessibility makes this wilderness a very valuable economic asset to the negion.

Please give Congressman Simpson your support on this. We need to keep some of Idaho the way it is for our kids and grand-kight to enjoy. The White Clouds are, the place to do this and the limbs is now. time is now.

Complaints about news advertisements are hollow

Why would anyone complain about a newspaper having too many advertisements? It's not like they are required to read many adversements? It's not like, they are required to read them. If they object, they could get their news from TV or radio and would have to sit through the commercials.

My father owned a newspaper in South Dakota during the Depression. If a subscriber tried to quit the paper because it was too expensive for them at the time, he would simply continue to deliver the paper at no charge in order to keep up the circulariop numbers so that the advertisers would not quit.

Heartbreak and jubilation

Cubs-come so close after so long, but Marlins still prevail

By Steven Wine Associated Press writer

CHICAGO — The Florida Marlins were black caps Wednesdays befitting their role as spailer against those lowble losers, the Chicago Cubs. But give the Marlins credit: For bad guys, they're pretty darned good.

And they're headed to the World Series, cul-initiating a wild ride for a team that began the season with few fans and modest expectations. Josh Beckett, working on two days' rest after pitching a two-hit shutout Sunday, came out of the bullpen to stymic Chicago again and help Florida win 9-6 in Game 7 of the NL championship series.

championship series Tuesday night.

"I had my eyes glued on the approaching ball the entire time and was so caught up in the moment that I did not even see Moises Alou, much less that he may have had a play," Bartman said in a statement.

"Had I thought for one second that the ball was playable or had I seen Alou approaching, I would have done whatever I could to get out of the way and give Alou a chance to make the catch." The Z6-year-old Bartman, a youth baseball coach, was escorted by security guards from Wrigley Field after he was threatened by angry fans and pelted with debris.

A police guard was posted outside the suburban Northbrook home where he lives with his parents. His brother-in-law — who read the statement to the media-said Bartman was "hidding somewhere. He just wants to move on and he wants the Cubs to win."

Bartman apologized to Cubs fans and explayers, including Ron Santo and Ernie Banks.

The Gazette

ENGLEWOOD, Colo. – Getting off his couch Monday, Denver Broncos quarterback Jake Plummer managed to sideline himself for four woeks.

In a freak accident Plummer, a Boise native, broke the third metatarsal bone in his left foot while at home watching television Monday, an injury that is related to the sprained left foot injury he suffered Oct. 5 in a game at Kansas City.

Plummer said he felt "a little pop" in the foot as he got off his couch Monday. The Broncos, not initially thinking it was a break, treated Plummer on Tuesday but the foot did not improve. Plummer got an X-ray on Wednesday morning that showed the break.

The timetable on Plummer's recovery is four weeks, which means he would miss Sunday's game at Minnesota, next week Baltimore and a Nov3 Monday night game at home against New England. He would then return after the bye for a home game against San Diego on Nov.16. Until Plummer returns Steve Beuerlein will start.

The injury is a strange one, even for a team that dealt with quarterback Brian Griese spraining his ankle tripping over his dog last season. The injury was so unexpected Beuerlein and No.3 quarterback Danny Kanell said they thought a practical joke was being played on them when they heard the news.

"I don't know if it's as fluky as it gets, but it's certainly shocking," trainer Steve Antonopulos said. "Inean, one day the gay is running and doing everything and the next day our't dealing with a fractured foot." Antonopulos said the "stress reaction," or trauma in the area, from the initial injury probably contributed to him breaking the bone.

That trauma wouldn't have shown up on the initial Xray taken after the game against Kansas City.

"That's the only way to explain it," Antonopulos said. "You just-don't get up from watching TV-don't get up from watching TV-don't get up from watching TV-multiple and fracture a bone."
Plummer was pretty upbeat; when he had his weekly press-conference Wednesday, for which conference Wednesday, for which he came in wearing a walking boot on his left foot. Team trainers will use a bone stimulator on Plummer's foot, which Antonopulos said expedites the healing.

ninday Davenport had surgery on her left foot Wednesday in Los Angeles and will miss the rest of the season, including the WTA Championships.

The operation removed a small nerve that was bothering her between two toes, according to her agent, Tony Godsick.

"It was a difficult decision to have the surgery at this time, because it means missing the Championships, where the best compete against the best Compete against the best compete against the best compete against the start of next season."

The nerve had been hampering the former No. 1-ranked player since the spring.

It forced her to pull out of her fourth-round match at the French Open and the final of a hard-court rournament in New Haven, Conn., just before the U.S. Open. Davenport then had a cortisone shot to numb the pain, and although she never looked completely comfortable, she reached the semifinals at the U.S. Open.

NBA plans to realign, create two new divisions

NEW YORK (AP) – The NBA plans to switch to six five-team divisions for the 2004-05 season, when the Charlotte Bobcats become the league's 30th team. The proposal, 'which includes having three divisions per conference instead of two, is expected to be approved formally by the board of governors, deputy commissioner Russ Granik said Wednesday. The board of governors also decided Wednesday that the WNBA will take a four-week break during its 2004 season for the Athens Olympics. No WNBA games will be played Aug. 2-31; the Olympics are Aug. 13-29. The gap at the beginning would allow national teams to practice.
WNBA commissioner Val

The WNBA still must decide whether teams will be allowed to practice during the hiatus. NBA commissioner David Stern reiterated the league's support of the WNBA, saying it "is here for the long run. It strengthens women's sports and helps develop new fans for basketball."

Some legal experts said the evidence of the woman's previous sexual partners and her admission she was excited to meet Bryant makes the prosecution's case appear weak.

Eagle attorpey Jim Fahrenholt called the hearing "a disaster for the prosecution."

Most, though, said they expected the judge to order a trial for Bryant, which would probably not take place until next summer, at the earliest.

raise that number to six units.
In 1959, the planning and zoning commission drafted an ordinance that raised the number of units from two to four, but the City Council never adopted it.
Any park already in the city with less than six units would be grandfathered in under the new ordinance. It would go a long way toward improving the appearance of the mobile-home parks in the city, Rothweller said.

The size and space per unit requirements in mobile-home parks will not change, only the number of units. Currently two units can be placed on a $,000 square-foot lot so the space per unit is roughly 2,500 square feet. As six-unit park would need to be at least 15,000 square feet.
The ordinance will be discussed again on Oct. 25 at the planning

Idaho Deputy Attorney General Michael Gilmore had sought to exclude the testimony of Kress, who has led a coalition of school districts in their 13-year struggle to force the state to pay for repair or replacement of is writing off $15.5 million of its investment in the controversial University Place project in Boise. The write-off at the close of the fiscal year on June 30 was offset by $10 million in income for the year so that the foundation's net assets dropped from nearly $170 million in 2002 to barely $164 million this July.

The write-off has no effect on the $28 million owed by the foundation to the university and to its own Consolidated Investment Trust.

The foundation repaid $2 million of that last spring and another $1 million this summer.

"The debt is out there," said Gary Mahn, the former state commerce director who is chairman of the foundation board's Audit and Finance Committee. "The question is how we're going to pay that debt."

The asset write-down recognizes that the foundation will be unable to recover $10 million in predevelopment costs for the Idaho Water Center, $4.3 million for the proposed learning center and $1.3 million for the proposed auditorium.

However, Mahn said the foundation still believes it can recover up to $13 million from the Water Center project, the land on which the rest of the complex was to be built and the proposed health professions building.

"We still own some valuable land in Boise, and we believe that land will become more valuable over time and help us liquidate that debt," Mahn said.

New cancer treatment could save women pain

BURLEY – New developments in breast cancer treatment could reduce pain and disfigurement. Dr. Eric Harris presented information about the sentinel lymph node biopsy procedure to Cássia Regional Medical Center employees and the public on Wednesday. The procedure comes from the theory that a tumor will drain cancerous cells to one or two lymph nodes.

Wednesday. The procedure comes from the theory that a tumor will drain cancerous cells to one or two lymph nodes. Harris said if those lymph nodes. Harris said if those lymph nodes are removed, the cancer can be taken care of with a smaller inciscion, less pain and less citance of lymphedema and nerve injury. The procedure comes as medical experts search for less invasive, yet successful, treatments for breast cancer. Harris went through the evolution of treatments beginning in 1894 when the radical mastectomy was introduced. "It was a very morbid operation," Harris said, but it produced results and defined treatment for the next 75 years. A radical mastectomy removes skin, tissue, lymph nodes and muscles. In the 1970s, a modified radical mastectomy was introduced, Harris said. The muscles were left on the chest and fewer lymph nodes were removed. The success rates remained much the same as those for radical mastectomies. So doctors began to look at how to save the breast.

Breast conservation therapy is the newest treatment. It includes removing lumps, but not the breast, Harris said. On the threat, Harris said. The nuscles were left on the chest and fewer lymph nodes were removed. The success rates have stayed even with rates for mastectomies.

And the newest development is the sentinel lymph node biopsy, Harris said. The procedure is not rule also grown on, but not in most rule last year, the procedure is in a trial stage.

But Interior Secretary Bruce Babbitt declared the fish endangered in 1998 – later revised to threatened – and warned any damage to its habitat would subject the county to potentially hundreds, of thousands of dollars in fines.

Local protests included a parade in 1999 uniters and others across the country sent to Elko to help the volunteers in their bid to rebuild the road by hand. And Gibbons brought a congressional field hearing to the town in July 2002 to criticize the Forest Service's decisions. Elko County Commissioner Charlie Myers said Wednesday he wished Vaught would have given the county more notice of his plans for the helicopter, but said the agency clearly had the authority to do what it did.

"I think the volunteer group could have done it a lot cheaper, but whether or not at the same level of safery, I can't make that call. I certainly think it was Mr. Vaught's call," he told KELK Radio in Elko.

Edgy skit gets UI fraternity banned from homecoming

MOSCOW (AP) - Poke gentle funat the University of Idaho's 1-6 Botball record all you want. This aim at the opposing team. But don't mention Cooch Tom Cable, the school's achievement at louding mules or its controversial real estate dealings, because your performance career could be stopped in mid-skir. The Phi Delta Theta fraternity was banned from homecoming competitions last week after its members performed a skir that homecoming officials said went too far. "It's pretty much known that we're not good at football," Phi Delta Theta President Thys DeVies. said. "Last year there were a lot of references made to Cable's coaching ability, and everyone laughed at that. So this year, along the same lines, we were joking about some of the events going on, like the cloning of the mule."

or the mule."
De Vries said fraternity members placed a "cloning machine" on istage and put a cardboard cutout of a mule in one end. A member portraying Cable then popped out the other end.
"One of the jokes was, I thought we cloned mules, not jackasses," De Vries said.

The performance continued with a gag referring to the school's financial shortfalls on a satellite campus construction project that cost former university President Robert Hoover and former financial vice president Jerry Wallace their jobs.

But just as the continue of the property of the continue of Committee President Drew Coyle, 21, said the fraternity was disqualified because it violated quidelines against mean-spirited content. "Homecoming is designed to be a festive and fun time, and the material that was in their skit was inappropriate, it was rude and it violated the rules," Coyle said. Fraternity members countered the skit was simply a spoof that had the audience—along with the judges and some committee members—cracking up. The fraternity will only be allowed to participate next year in some homecoming activities if pology letters are sent to Cable, the homecoming activities if apology letters are sent to Cable, the homecoming activities if apology letters are sent to Cable, the homecoming activities of a pology letters are sent to Cable, the homecoming activities if apology letters are sent to Cable, the homecoming activities if apology letters are sent to Cable, the homecoming activities if apology letters are sent to Cable, the homecoming activities if apology letter and everyone else who was verbally defamed by the actions of the fraternity members," Coyle told DeVries.

Utah suspends monitoring for West Nile virus until next year

Meet the Jack's Inn

There it stood in the Saturday paper: a picturesque scene of river horeline, cabins, rowboats, pick-ups and a gas station. Though the shoto-was in black and white, the nemories it brought back were in inemories it brougan uses, was vivid color.

Seeing a shot of Island Park's Mack's Inn evokes sadness and longing. The lodge burned to the ground in 1989, Though partly rebuilt, the resort stopover has been a shell of its old self, rarely attracting the swarm of anglers, boaters, campers and other vagabonds who used to drop by.

CROSSING THE DIVIDE David Cooper

When I was growing up in east-ern Idaho, the northern shore of Henrya Luke was our family's get-away. Days of fishing, snooping at the hatchery, and listening to aspens were soothing to the soul. But before long, we'd be longing for some kind of action "in town." That Left two options: Drive north to West Yellowstone, or head to Mack's I'm.

That iea.

The transmission of new Mack's Inn.

West had all the friendly trappings of a tourist town, with some local shops we'd never fail to frequent. But Mack's seemed to have the genuine feel of a mountain getaway deep in the Idaho woods. People coming by for bait, beer or a boat seemed to be a bit louder and more colorful then people you'd meet in a city.

Tishing from the nearby bridge Tsishing from the nearby bridge pies always a lesson in humility. The fish could be spotted easily africage in the crystal water of Henrys Fork, but never snagged. We spent many hours lying on the bridges sidewalk, dangling worms in front of rout that would watch—and do nothing. I guess they liked the setting at Mack's as much as I did, and found no reason to leave.

But Mack's importance as an outbe appreciated until you took a float trip from farther up Henrys

Fork.

Starting just below Big Springs, we would inflate our eight-man raft and embark on a winding three-hour tour through the cool marshes of the South Fork.

You do the math. If a three-mile stretch of river is a three-hour journey, your speed is something short of the warp range. And that's saying nothing about the two or three times you get out to re-inflate the raft.

The lazy sojourn always had its moments, though. Wildlife would poke its head out of the foliage like friendly neighbors dropping by. Like clockwork, each trip always included an up-close sighting of a bull moose, sometimes two.

When you're a kid encountering a moose, you quickly learn it's not Bullwinkle. It doesn't help when older brothers tell you the beast can smell fear, will charge frequently, and likes to eat children dren.

So with anticipation pounding in your juvenile chest, each turn in the river would feel like a brush with mortality. But each time we crossed a moose's path, it would give us a curious look, then lower its majestic rack and continue munching on watercress.

The journey would wind down just before sundown, and Mack's inn Lodge would appear on the horizon. The sight was a comfort to a kid who had been trembling in the presence of wild mammals just moments before. You can be a young Grizily Adams for only so long, before you need some Oreos, root beer and Fac-Man.

Man.
Talk is, some investors in Island
Perk want to rebuild Mack's Inn totits and glory, complete with a new-lodge, restaurant and more stores. If they do, Til be one of the first ones back. The moose and I

The valley's wondrous weather

Changing seasons and skies keep things lively

Bill Studebaker Times-News correspondent

"We had some weather today"
That's how, a local weathermanused to start his weather report. I thought, "Now that's brillian."
At first, I thought he might mean some weather. You know, there had been a fierce storm, but no, he said it on bluebird days,

As season turns to season, if I might make a phrase with the logic of the local weatherman, we wish upon a star for perfect conditions: winter should be white, crisp, clear, calm – and short.

contaitons: White crisp, clear, calm – and short.

Spring should be warm with soft soaking rains and wild, reckless flowers that scatter over hill and dell.

Summer should be hot but not sultry, dry but not too dry, and the evenings long with a slight breeze – the breath of barbecue and laughter. The summer sky is cloudless – just blue sky by day and starry by night.

Just a few days ago, I was camping high up in the mountains, above the dust and smoke – and far away from the pools of city light. I woke about 1:30, and I looked up, and the stars were so bright that I had to put my sunglasses on just to lie there and admire them. I drifted back to sleep, and when I awoke again, there was just one pale star above me.

After a long, particularly hot summer, the clouds were a relief, even though they promised high winds, drenching rain – unsettled conditions – I felt joy.

The Magic Valley's four horizons (north, east, south, and west) shouldered different cloud formations. This is part of the magic of the Magic Valley. Its breadth, 80 miles top to bottom, and width 100 miles side to side, permits different weather patterns on the same visual plain.

In late summer, almost on any rise, it's possible to look across the valley and see some weather, see clouds as they mount over the South Hills, loom along the flat western border, puff above the blue ridges of the northern mountains, and drift away in gray sheets to the east.

The sky becomes a changing play. Clouds take on shapes, dogs, horses, clowns, and, yes, castles. The sun as it passes over shoots down rays, strata of light Scotty could use to beam us up. It appears as though we could romp upon the escalating thunder heads.

We know this is some weather.
Only the brilliance of the stars rivals the fluff of clouds.

The weather, however, is never an excuse for staying indoors. Weather is the outdoors. It's what we enjoy while being there. Hunter, fisherman, skier, hiker, climber, boater, or lazy-day lounger take what they get. No whining. "Unromfortable." you might be thinking. No one's being asked to go outdoors naked. Take along shade or shelter. Hats and coats work. Fair-skinned folks might favor sun screen. Thin-skinned folks might favor layers of poly and down. Or, you might want the "cool" all the time. It'd be heaven.

en. Everyday the same? I don't think so. I prefer "some weather" in my days. Right on, Mister Weatherman.

Pack light for that backcountry hunting trek

With luck, there will be plenty to carry back

The Associated Press

OGDEN, Urah – These days of drought diminished deer herds and crowded public hunding stress call for extreme measures.

"The pretty much a 15 mile-aday guy when I hunt, said Donnie Howell, camping manager at Sportsman's Warehouse. "In Urah, that's about the only way you can get sway from the bodies."

While having other hunters sround can force the deer to move and make them easier to see; a slow, careful trek into the back-woods can reveal the big one, and a deeper knowledge of the prey.

"If you're out there, you're going to be seeing sign on the ground, trails, water holes. Hearing things. There's a lot of stufft that you'll notice that you won't if you just go out for a few hours in the morning and the evening." Den Zumbo said.

But harvesting: a big buck out there comes at a price. So it helps to have the right tools.

"The advantage that hunters have today is that everything's gone lighter," said Jeff Spencer, one of the owners of Kenn's Sports in Ogden.

In particular, guns – with shorter barrels, synthetic stocks and lightweight manufacturing techniques – have dropping the animal is the easy part.
"It's no secret the work really starts when you shoot an animal," Zumbo said. Some of the best hunting stories make very little mention of the size of the rack. They involve animals taken down far from a vehicle and dragged or carried several miles to a car.

It doesn't have to be several miles to be a backbreaker, either.

"It is rough. It's one of the toughest things you'll ever do," Zumbo said. "Drag a deer for 300 yards and you'll feel like you walked 10 miles."

Zumbo remembers one kill above Bountful. Four hours of dragging that animal, by himself, through thick brush. The distance?

Bob Askerlund, Mountain Green, once hunted in the Dolores Triangle near Moab. He and a hunting partner went around opposite sides of a large mesa. By 8 a.m., he'd hiked four miles and shot a large four-point. Those same four miles would take 12 hours to remrace. A large deer can weigh over 250 pounds. After field dressing, a deer that size would still weigh around 200.
Askerlund's trophy was taken in the days before cellular phones and two-way radios.

That's a small deer. The average buck - 160 pounds - has 75 pounds of edible meat, and bid deer can have well over 100.

Mike Casey, hunting manager at Smith and Edwards, advises such meat hunters to take along a tamel tarp to keep the meat - and the backpack - clean.

Then, the key is to have enough space in your pack (and your hunting partners) to fit it in. Here's where smart packing comes in. On a long hike, when hoping to add 100 pounds to the return trip, it 800 of to go light.

Here's a list of things not to bring: Soda pop, canned foods, two boxes of shells, a Dutch oven. "Some guys'll load a backpack full of iscorice and pop and think, Well, I'll eat it all and wort have to pack it out," Casey said. But that energy can be used more effectively.

It's important to be prepared for an emergency, but after a certain point, the weight can be your worst enemy.

"You couldn't go on one of those trips and bring everything you might need," Casey said. "I usually cut down in the clothing area."

Kayak tours offer 'soft adventure travel

BIG PINE KEY, Fla. - A caravan

RIGFINE KEY, Fla.—A carsean of keyaks snakes through a narrow opening in a mangrowe forest in the backcountry waters of the lower Florida Keys.

Inside, the sun poeks through a canopy of twisted branches above and illuminates the leaf-stained red water below.

The path along this natural treek was cut away in the early 1900s, likely by European sertlers, and now provides a glimpe of the unique keys ecosystem to tourists and locals who take the time to observe baby snappers fighting the current and transtula-looking tree crabs climbing the branches. "The slower you go, the more you see," said knyaking guide Bill Keogh, who offers daily guided tours.

Kayaking is growing in popularity among tourists looking to get away from it all in the Florida Keys, said Harold Wheeler, marketing director for the Monroe County Tourist Development Council. The tourism council doesn't keep statistics on kayaking, but rentals and padding lessons are sprouting up all over the Keys. "It's what we consider soft-adventure-travel," Wheeler-said-"Al tot of people are interested in that soft adventure now."

The draw of Big Pline Kayak Adventures is the 44-year-old Keogh, who has become an expert on the Keys ecosystem during the past decade as a guide.

He explains which sea grasses are edible, points out the difference between a heron and are gret and tells how mangroves during huricane season for better dispersion. Keogh focuses on the details of the environment, not the distance covered in a kayak.

"We don't go fast and we don't go far."

The trip begins about 30 miles east of Key West on Big Pine Key. Nestled in the overlapping Key Deer National Wildlife Refuge and Great White Heron National Wildlife Refuge on the backroads of the island, a giant yellow kayak greets visitors in front of the marina at Old Wooden Bridge Fishing Camp.

Keogi sets each visitor inside a plastic kayak and leads the small group out to the open water, where thick seaweed sometimes pokes through the water and traps errant kayaks.

where thick seawed sometimes pokes through the water and traps errant kayaks.

First he paddles under a large concrete bridge that leads to No Name Key – the only inhabited island in the Florida Keys without electricity, he says. A black cable under the bridge delivers the necessities – cable and telephone service. They use solar power and generators for electricity, he said.

That's about the only human development to be seen on the three-hour, mile-long tour. Instead, Keogh reveals that the water that looked, so calm is buzzing with activity.

"Did you see the fish jumping?" Keogh asks.

He points to a loggerhead turtle swimming into the shadow cast by the bridge.

Here the kayaks stop and the people grow quiet. The birds draw closer. One, stalking a fish, comes about 10 feet sway from a kayak. It darts its head down then filips its head up and straightens its neck to swallow.

the water, others reapply sun-screen.

Then he leads the group into the narrow creek through the mangroves for the rest of the tour.

Soon the kayakers abandon their paddles in favor of grabbing the mangrove branches with their hands and pulling themselves upstream. The path widens to about the length of a path of the partial than the path of the specific path of the path of the up stream, then stops because the stream is too shallow at low tide.

Deep inside the mangrove, shaded by the canopy of branches, one of the kayalors. Gina Whalchel, pulls out her singled, and gets out of the boat to see the baby mangrore suspens up close. The rest of the kayakers pause and listen to the dromin of the cleads bugs, sticking their lands in the water to feel the seawed and relaxing in the cool shadows of the mangrove forest that feels much farther than just a few miles off U.S. 1. "Being in the mangrove forest to me is one of the most special places to be," said Whelchel, who recently moved back to Sugar Loaf Key. "You can barely hear the drone from the road." Keogh gets out of the boat and stands in the water. He reaches to a branch that is covered with mangrove tree crabs – black creatures about the size of a quarter that look more like tarantulas than crabs.

He picks one up and lets it walk across his hand, but the little crab got away from him and crawled on his back, much to the amusement of the kayakers.

Soon he leads the group back out of the creek, as the current carries them through the man-grove tunnel. Crabs scurry up the branches as the path opens up into the bay.

"Pretty-much-I'm-really-happy-with that little creek up there,"

Keogh said, "I could spend every day of my life up there."

Stocks pull back from 16-month highs

NEW YORK (AP) - Wall Street retreated modestly from 16-month highs Wednesday after investors welcomed another batch of strong earnings but worried that stock prices might monetheless be too high.

"The market-scored such a healthy gain in October that we're seeing a little bit of profit raking as we wait for the rest of the third quarter reports to come in," said lynn Reaser, chief conomists and senior maker street and senior senior maker street and senior s to 1.4 percent and 1.2 percent, respectively. Investors have pushed stocks to 52-week highs in recent days as investors become more confident that quarterly earnings will be better than expected. But analysts caution that the market could see declines if expectations become too high and companies don't meet them.

"The markets right now are extended technically," said A.C. Moore, chief investment strategist for Dunvegan Associates in Santa Barbara, Calif. "I think there's been a little bit of emotional buying in the last couple of sessions. That tends to result in somewhat of recoil or a settling drawn."

Jury deliberates in case against former Rite Aid exec

HARRISBURG, Pa. (AP) – A jury began deliberating Wednesday in the fraud case against Rire Aid's former chief counsel, the first major corporate executive to go on trial in the recent string of scundals to rock Wall Street.

Prosecutors charged that Franklin C. Brown, 75, helped backdate letters in a conspiracy to inflate the drugstore chain's income and drive up its stock. They also said he tried to mislead internal and federal investigators and line his pockets with millions in shareholder dollars. Defense attorney Reid Weingarten argued that Brown, who spent 30 years at the company, wanted "to help Rite Aid, not to rip off Rite Aid."

"If he was acting in good faith, even if he was incorrect in his legal judgments, he was not guilty of any crime," Weingarten said. Brown faces 11 charges that could amount to a life sentence.

As a result of the alleged accounting fraud, Rite Aid was forced to retroactively reduce its earnings by 3.6 billion in 2000.

Five other former top Rite Aid executives have pleaded guilty but have yet to be sentenced. All except former chairman and chief executive Martin L. Grass testified against Brown.

Rite Aid, the nation's third-largest drugstore chain, has more than 3,000 stores across the country.

One of the types of plans omployers are publing most aggressively is known as "coinsurance," in which members are responsible for a fixed percentage of the total cost of care, employees might be encouraged to choose a generic equivalent over a name brand, as new plans force members to pay for a percentage of the bill instead of a co-payment for a fixed amount.

pay for a percentage of the outsided of a co-payment for a fixed amount.

A concept that was popular before the days of managed care, co-insurpnee is also applied to hospital care. Employees will be asked to monitor quality and pricing reports from local hospitals. To avoid premium increases, many employees will have to choose coverage with greater restrictions, such as plans that require them to see a primary-care physician before they can have access to a specialist.

Also, employees are being guided to so-called consumer-driven plans, in which members pay higher amounts out of pocket before insurance kicks in.

Employers say they have little choice but to pass a greater share of expenses on to their staffs. Driven by greater demand for health care services, rising prescription drug prices, costly research and an aging population, employers are expected to face their fifth consecutive year of double-digit cost increases.

Though the reader increases.

secutive year of double-digit cost increases.

Though the rate of increase has stabilized somewhat, employers will still face a 12 percent cost increase in 2004, amounting to a $742 hike per employee from this year, according to Towers Ferrin, a consulting firm that specializes in human resources issues.

Those who have dependents and seek comprehensive options will feel the rate increase most severely.

will feel the rate as-severely.

Employers revious of resolve to pass or more costs and decision-making to employees will encourage people to pay greater attention to benefit changes this year than ever before, experts said.

year than ever before, experts said.

Already, employees have been paying higher premiums. Towers Perrin said that all health plans on average will cost $314 per month next year.

Employee contributions to premiums for single coverage will rise to an average of $59 a mouth next year, compared with $48 in 2003. Family coverage will cost an employee on average $196 a month in 2004, compared with $160 this year, the firm said.

But the increases don't reflect the true cost of care because employers have been picking up so much of the bill.

Employers say workers will.

so much of the bill.

Employers say workers will wake up to the reality of health care costs only when they are forced to pay a percentage of the bill out of their own pockets, such as through co-insurance.

The thinking is that co-pays luli-employees into being apathetic consumers.

consumers.

Cost-sharing through co-insurance has been particularly popular for pharmaceutical benefits lar for pharmaceutica occurred plans.

With a plan based on co-pays, an employee might pay $20 for a 30-day supply of 40-milligram Prozac capsules, which are used to treat depression.

But with co-insurance, the employee would pay $35 - that's 20 percent of the $180 reall price for the drug. Most plans cap the and time-consuming approvals when members want care. Largely aimed at younger, single and healthy workers, these plans help reduce demand for health care by passing on medical bills to employees over a fixed care by passing on medical bills, or employees over a fixed amount.

For example, an employer might contribute $1,000 for a staffer to spend for all health care services in the first year, once that amount is exhausted, the employee pays the bills up to a deductible of $2,000. Then the core medical benefits of a PFO kick in.

Consumer-driven plans the plans may discourage employees too much from seeking care, potentially resulting in higher catastrophic payouts, said Lindsay Boykin, a consultant at Benefits Corporation of Texas.

As a way to skirt this dilemma, an employee might consider introducing a consumer-driven plan in which preventive well-mess programs are paid for by the employers are also cutting costs by simplifying their offerings, said Rik Lindah, a benefits consultant at Watson Wyatr's Dallas offica.

Many employers stress the need for educating employees through wellness programs or paid for by the companies have set up kloss and Web sites that produce programs or paid conditions, exercise schedule, physician visits and other medical information.

Farmer grows $1M book deal

MOSCOW (AP) - An organic farmer known for promoting her two ways yet of simple, wholesome living has signed a two-book deal.

Many Jane Butters's two tones will be printed by Clarkson. Potter, a publishing branch of Random House that specializes in illustrated lifestyle books including Marths Stewart's cook-books and Paul' Allen Smith's gardening guides.

Butters' first book, "Mary Jane's Gathering Place," is scheduled to be published in spring 2005.

The second is tentatively due out in 2006. Butters, 50, has come a long way from when she bought her five-acre farm on Paradise Ridge south of Moscow 18 years ago.

She started growing organic produce, then branched out into camping food made with trops that didn't require pesticides.

The farm grew into a business and people turned to her to learn organic techniques, to the Tavachtians.

sample farm life.

Though she still gardens daily and is regularly followed around her property by a beys of Rhode Island reds, her interests have taken her beyond food crops and into flowers, crafts, art, and address.

taken her beyond tood crops and into flowers, crafts, art, and advice.

A respected friend encouraged her to compile her ideas about wholesome living into a book.

Tithought, a book? I'm nor a writer, a les said.

But tapping into her domestic ideas over the past 18 months, Butters has produced three issues of Maryl sneefzrm, a lifestyle magazine and catalog for the organic foods she produces.

Butters does much of the writing and photography herself. A friend passed on her magazines to an agent who urged her to put a book proposal ungether.

So Butters took several months and amassed 40 pages of coacept, contents and personal history.

The agent shopped the proposal around to publishers this summer.

Research and Treatment Center, said his lab will test chemical compounds for the firm. The work is intended to lay the groundwork for new cancer fighting drugs.

The agreement will give UNM-researchers access to Chemical Diversity's vast library of chemical compounds, Sklar said. In return, UNM and the firm will share ownership of any promising work that emerges from the research.

STC owns the patent on Sklar's laboratory techniques and helped the center develop a business plan, he said.

If the research goes well, Sklar said, venture capital firms could help finance New Mexico-grown blotech companies that could use the research to begin developing useful drugs.

Both UMM and Chemi al Diversity would profit from the sale of those drugs, he said.

"If we had our own blotech industry here in New Mexico, potentially we could develop compounds further, and that's the vision that STC has," he said.

The book tells the story of Calixto, who faces false accusations of political crimes in El Salvador resulting from a 1979 coup. He must leave his family behind and travel "with his stomach empty but his soul full of hope," northward to the United States.

The program is made possible by a grant from Human Pursuits of Salt Lake City, Utah with funds from the National Endowment for Family realizes business dream

HAZELTON — A long-held dream of owning their own busi-ness finally came true for a family on Cinco de Mayo this year. Sophie Flores and her mother, Soila Macias, had wanted to start Solla Macias, had wanted to start arestaurant for several 'years.

Meanwhile, Macias' brother,
Kamon Galindo, and his wife,
Sophie, had been attending craft shows around the valley selling his wood crafts and her wreaths, dolls and silk flowers for years.
The Galindos also dreamed of covering a cray.

ane Galindos also dreamed of opening a store.

But "everything cost money" and rents for store fronts in Twin Falls were prohibitive for folks working on limited funds, Ramon Galindo said.

working on limited funds, Ramon Galindo said.
Macias had lived in Hazelton for 40-plus years and liked the town. Ramon Galindo, Sophie Flores and Macias had all graduated from Valley High School. Hazelton was homé.
Macias approached Ramon with a proposition: each pay half of the rent on a store front in Hazelton and they share the space. She'd use her half of the building for a restaurant and the Galindos could use their half for their gift shop. The deal was made.

made.
"We knew we could always make the rent," Ramon Galindo said.

The restaurant features tacos, tamales, burritos, tortillas, candy and Mexican sodas.
"Nothing too elaborate at first until 1 get used to what my customers want." Macias said.
The gift shep is filled with Ramon's wood crafts and Sophie Galindo's wreaths, silk flowers and dolls. They supplement their crafts with plants, pictures, select furniture, pinatas, blankets and Sophie Flores works full-time in he medical field and helps out occasionally.

The families declined to discuss start-up costs and the income their business is generating. They used money from their savings to used money from their savings to get started.

The Galindos also had an inven-tory of merchandise already built up when they moved into the building.

Technically, the name on the state sales tax permit for the gift shop is Valley Craft Shop, but "Las Flores" is painted on the window of the store. Macias daughter, Sophie's sur name is Flores. It means flowers in English, and the Galindos gift shop is filled with silk flowers that Sophie Galindo made. The name fits; Las Flores it is.

The families help one another. The Galindos help Maciae with her lunch crowd, and Maciae waits on gift shop customers after the Galindos have gone for the day.

So far, the response to Las Flores has been good.

"Local people are glad they don't have to run to Twin Falls to get that gift at the last minute." Sophie Galindo said.

The growing Hispanic population in the Eden-Hazelton area also appreciates the restaurant with authentic Mexican food, Maciaes said.

CHEVY '87 Blazer 4x4, new engine, good shape, $2800/offer, 208-738WIE AGESTON BRUDES

In the World Champtonships held in Rhodes in 1998, two dishibited in Rhodes in 1998, two dishibited in Rhodes in 1998, two dishibited in the ingroup at the end of the round robin. Japan and Spain, who met on today's hand, were both still in with a chance — although both teams eventually fell just abort of their objective.

On today's deal, Artur Wasik, once of Poland but now playing for Spain, reached five clubs after West had shown a two-sulter at his first turn. The defense led the spade ace and switched to a dlamond. You might care to consider how you would have played the hand now.

Wasik took this in hand and, since he could not get to dummy, played the ace of clubs and the club jack around to East's king. East exited with a diamond, runtifed by wasik, who by now had had the opportunity to get a complete count of the hand Masik decided correctly that since West had two trumps and had shown five spades and five diamonds, hip possessed a singleton heart. In that case, the odds favored his singleton being the nine or 10 as runting in dummy and led the heart lack covered all round and pinning the heart 10. Then he went back over to dummy's last trump and finessed in hearts again, making his contract.

ANSWER: You should pass. Yes, it might be right to raise to game here, but bear in mind partner was under pressure. He might easily be minimum, balanced, with four spades. Worse, your trumps are poor, and your club king is not pulling its weight. Partner might have jumped to game with a maximum invitation here.
