T.F. County will buy build

Commissioners now look for best financing

TWIN FALLS – Housekeepers at the ounty Courthouse might soon be able to nove out of that basement hallway and into real office – one big enough to hold a ecent-sized desk and a computer. County commissioners Friday approved. a real offic

Eastland Drive.

"It's 'very' important,' because 'we' can become much more efficient and provide better services to our customers,' commission Chairman Gary Grindstaff said.

Utah based Stock Building Supply West has agreed to shave S1.8 million property, and commissioners expect the final cost will be between S3.1 million and S3.2 million.

The county will now send out a request for proposals to find a bank that will give them the best deal on financing. The county had been talking with Wells Fargo Bank on a 10-year, 53.2 million-lease-purchase agreement, with an interest rate of 4.93 percent. The county's payments would begin in June, with the county paying $120,000 every six months - or $240,000 a year. The 10th and the 16th payments would be balloon payments of $1 million each, commissioners have said.

But Wells Fargo wouldn't include a prepayment clause to allow the county to pay off the lease as soon as possible, Grindstaff said. Local banks expressed interest in the project, so commissioners will look for the best deal the country can get on financing. Renovations are expected to cost about $700,000 and would be taken out of county reserves.

The transaction must be completed by March 28.

Three cows came from BSE herd

Vet: Two remaining will likely be killed

The Times-News and The Associated Press

BURLEY - A local dairy acquired three cows that were herd mates of a Washington cow that tested positive for mad cow disease, officials say. In addition to one cow that has died, two more were still alive at the dairy on Friday. None of them showed any signs of bovine spongi-form encephalopathy, said Clarence Stroky, Idaho state veterinarian.

Studies show dairy products do not contain or transmit BSE and that consumers can be assured that Idaho's dairy products are safe, the Idaho Department of Agriculture said.

Eightyone herd mates of the sick Washington cow were imported from Alberta, Canada, to Washington, where they were freshened and then sold to daries. A massive epidemiological investigation is under way to track down all of them.

"It's not tumsual for an investigation of this type to have multiple states involved," said Ag Department spokeswoman Julie State officials announced State officials announced.

State officials announced Thursday afternoon that a dairy near Burley had acquired one of the herd mates but that it had died suddenly, although the cow's cash listory didn't indicate any signs of BSE. It died before the Washington cow was ever discovered. Its carcass was sent to redering.

The U.S. Department of Agriculture then announced late Thursday night that two more hed mates are at the Burley dairy. "They will in all likelihood be dilled, Siroky said during a press conference Friday afternoon in Boise.

Foreign markets remain closed to American beef

The Associated Press

WASHINGTON - While consumer confidence in U.S. grown beef has not declined noticeably, foreign markets remain closed to American beef amid a debate about—the extent of restriction.

The World Organization for Animal Health, which sets international trade standards for animal Health, which sets international trade standards, which also had a mad cow case last year, might go too far.

The massive epidemiological study under way in the United States to attempt to locate all of the herd mates of the Washington cow found to have BSE is not just about American food safety but easing foreign market concerns.

The decline in beef exports is expected to lead to a $5.5 billion, or 10 percent, decline in net famincome in 2004, according to Global Insight, an economic consulting and forecasting company, Japan, the largest importer, wants the United States to ease.

U.S. officials have rejected ber of cattle tested for the disease.

U.S. officials have rejected testing at anywhere near the level the Japanese and some U.S. consumer groups want.

Agriculture Secretary Ann Veneman told a congressional committee Wednesday that tests would be run on roughly 4,000 cattle this year, twice last year's total, and would focus on co-called downed animals that cumout stand or walk unaided as well as cattle that die on the farm. That number falls well below the recommendations of the animal thealth organization.

The group said all animals that die on the farm or are terminally all should be tested. Veneman said there are 400,000 such cattle in the United States each year.

At the same time, however, USDA is proparing to license rapid tests – similar to those in use in Europe and Japan – that could be completed in hours. Mad cow testing currently takes several days at USDA labs in Ames, Iowa.

Among advocates of additional testing are some who believe more tests would yield more cases of mad cow disease. Rep. Eal Blumenauer, D-Ore, among several lawmakers pushing for more aggressive testing, complained that government officials are more interested in protecting the beef industry than consumers.

BSE is a threat because humans can develop a similar brain-wast-ing illness, a variant of returfield-falsob disease, from eating contaminated beef prod-

USDA officials said the parts most likely to carry infection priain, spinal cord and lower intestine — were removed before the meat from the infected cow was cut and processed for human consumption. Those products have now been banned altogether from the U.S. food supply, and other restrictions have been added to prevent them from inadvertently mixing with beef headed toward market.

Agriculture officials have inestucts. USDA officials said the parts Agriculture officials have insisted that the U.S. beef supply is safe. They recommended a recall of more than 10,000 pounds of meat from the sick cow and other animals slaughtered with it on Dec. 9.

Most of the meat went to suppliers and stores in Oregon and Washington, while small amounts reached California, Idaho, Montana and Nevada. As of Thursday, USDA. officials said they did not know how many pounds of beef had been returned.

Candidates chill in New Hampshire

ANCHESTER, N.H.—
It's crazy here. There are Democratic presidential contenders racing all over the Granite State, wooing the living snot out of the voters. You can't go to the mall here without having to shake hands with, at bare minimum, Joe Lieberman.—
Why the wild wooing? In a word, Jowoo I mean, Iowa. The caucuses there nounger in a nean, Jowa. The caucuses there shook up the Democratic race, producing two big surprise winners, Sen. John Kerry of Massachusetts and Sen. John Edwards of North Or Possibly South Carolina. In exit polls, many Iowans said ut these men

BARRY they'd decided on these men because they are both named hisy'd decided on these men

"because they are both named John."

One big loser in lowa was Rep.
Dick "Dick" Cephardt, who did so pondy that he not only dropped out of the Democratic race, but also has renounced his U.S. citizenship.

But the biggest shock was the poor showing of former Vermont Gov. Howard Dean, who did far worse than expected in lowa, then gave his now-famous postcaucus speech, in which he sounded as though he'd been gargling with paint thinner, and then, out of nowhere, emitted a scream that was a pitch-perfect imitation of a small-hipped woman giving birth to an upright piano.

It was a heartfelt scream, no question about it, and it has recolved far more attention in this race thun, say, Iraq, But somehow it did not come across as presidential. ("Four score and seven years ago, YEEEAAMAAARGGH.")

as presidential. (Four score and seven years ago, YEEEAAAAAAARGGH.") ately to soften his image by wearing suits, smiling, no longer ending speeches by breaking boards with his forchead, etc.

boards with his forehead; etc.
But these measures may be too late, as almost all the experts now predict that Kerry will win in New Hampshire, which probably means he won't.
The candidates had their last debate here Thursday night as St. Anselm College. Outside, it was roughly 870 degrees belowzero, but hundreds of campaign activists showed up to wave signs and shout at each other.
This always strikes me as strange! I mean, what's the point of holding a Dean sign and shouting "DEAN! DEAN! of holding a Dean sign and shouting "DEAN! DEAN! DEAN!" for three straight hours in the bitter cold when the only person who can see or hear you is holding a Kerry sign and shouting "KERRY! KERRY! KERRY!"? Does anybody's min RRY!"? Does anybody's mind changed? After a while, do KERRY!"? Does anybody's mind get chanjeed' After a while, do incse-people become convinced. Joy each other and swap signs? The debate itself was civil and non-combative, by which I mean, horing. The candidates managed to turn pretty nucle every question into a little campaign speech, no matter what they were actually asked:

BRIT HUME: Can you name the prine minister of Pakistan?
CANDIDATE: Brit, this campaign isn't about individuals. This campaign isn't about individuals. This campaign isn't about minister of Pakistan?
And so on. In my view, the highlight was when Peter Jennings asked the Rev. Al Shapton who he would appoint as chairman of the Federal Reserve Board. The Rev. Shappton - who clearly had as charman of the rederal Reserve Board. The Rev. Sharpton – who clearly had given this question no thought whatsoever – nevertheless mar aged, right on the spot, to produce this answer, which I am quoting verbatim from the debate transcript:

"Oh, in the Federal Reserve Board, I would be looking for someone that would be tooking for someone that would set standards in this country, in terms of our banking; our – in how government regulates the Federal Reserve as we see it under Greenspan, that we would not be protecting the big businesses; we would not be protecting banking interests in a way that would not, in my judgment, lead toward mass employment, mass development and mass production. I think that – would I replace Greenspan, probably. Do I have a name? No."

I could not agree more, and I'll fell you why: The cold has killed most of my brain cells. Nevertheless, I'll be reporting to you from Now Hampshire for the next few days, trying to gauge the mood of the voters here. Right now, I would summarize it in one word:

Reservists in Iraq feel second-class treatment.

The dean of military sociologists, Charles Moskos, toured Iraq recently listenties to American soldiers, interviewing them and surveying their opinions and gripes. He found morale was good among regular soldiers and was markedly lower among reserve component soldiers.

In a preliminary report written for the acting secretary of the Army, Les Brownlee, Moskos, a respected author and professor emeritus at Northwestern University, says he found a "higher level of morale than was anticipated" among regular anticipated" among regular Army soldiers.

Moskos noted "exceptional levels of performance under very demanding conditions" and said he had no recommendation for major changes in command policies affecting the troops. He did have suggested changes in personnel policies.
In contrast to the high morale of regular soldiers, Moskos says, he found lower morale among reserve components Army, Reserves and Army National Guard. The sociologist said that 'the complaint that reservists were second-class citizens in Operation Iraqi Freedom was frequently, heard."
Moskos said that among major issues raised by reserve component soldiers were these:

Reservists often serve longer in Iraq than do activeduty soldiers and are less likely to know the end date of their deployment.

Stop-loss orders (which prevent soldiers from leaving the military because of retirement or because their enlistement period has ended) affect reservists more than regular soldiers.

Promotions for reservists are often stalled because their home unit can't promote them while they are on active duty in Iraqi used and poorly treated.

Moskos also observed that the nickname or shorthand for local Iragis among soldiers is "hajjis" or "hadjis," and that this seemed to have no special negative meaning, in marked contrast to such GI pejoratives as "ragheads" used in the last Gulf War or "gooks" and "slopes" used in Vietnam. In the Arab world hajji is a title of respect, given someone who has made the obligatory Muslim pilgrimage to Mecca.
Moskos added that race-relation problems in Operation Iraqi Freedom appear minimal, rent among black troops that Jessica Lynch was the object of overplayed propaganda compared to the similar experience of Shoshana Johnson." Moskos had a series of recommendations he forwarded to the acting secretary of the Army:

• Consider producing a video/DVD similar to the famous "Why We Fight" movies directed by Frank Capra in World War II.—Ils said themes could include—"serving a just cause, the evils of the Hussein regime, stepping into history, the new Greatest Generation. (This) is a shaping experience that they will look back upon with pride for the rest of their lives."

• Have incoming non-commissioned officers and junior officers take a three-week course on Arab culture and learn a few Arab expressions. This could be akin to the three-week German course for new company companders in the old LIS. Army course for new company com-manders in the old U.S. Army

Military police should be given a combat medal equivalent to the combat medal given to medics in hostile fire zones.

 Establish an Iraq Combined Action Program modeled after the Marine program that put squads of Marine riflemen with the Marine program that put squads of Marine riflemen with a Vietnamese platoon living in a village. Moskos recommended that in Iraq the locally recruited Iraqis be offered "extraordinary inducements" such as high pay, guaranteed pensions and perhaps even American clitzenship.

• Consider permitting alcohol use on a limited basis in Iraq. Limited official drinking, now allowed at leave centers in Qatar, "would reduce illicit drinking."

• Explore the use of shortdrinking."

• Explore the use of short-term 15-month active-duty enlistments to perform duties currently done by reserve com-ponent forces.

Attend to museum needs

As we celebrate Twin Falls' centennial year, there has been little heard about the historical muse since been outgrown. This would be a good time to make plans for its future.

As the country continues to consider the Anderson Lumber property, it might want to consider that site as a future home for the and adequate off-road parking. As plan is long overdue

When the previous administration was blessing the countryside with volves imported from Canada, the missed some choice location—Cantral Park, N.Y., Climit Mountains.

An article in the paper stated that the wolves had reduced the Yallowstone clik herd to less than half (19,000 to less than 9,000). How long will it take the wolves to wipe out the remaining clik? Most popular ladah will tall you the idaho elk population is way down where the wolves row here yet wolves to short of the wolves to short of the wolves to where the wolves to wolve the Federal Wolf Recovery people have an answer for this We will kill a couple of wolves and that will set an example for the remainder of the pack not to kill any more livestock.

I was glad to see that Idahos and Montana's plans to sustain the wolf population met the Federal Wolf Recovery Team's approval. What is puzzling is why this is necessary anyway. The wolves imported from Canada are different sub-species from the Idaho wolf. So if they weren't here in the first place, how can they warrant being classified as endangered? Also, many years ago it was decided that the wildlife belonged to the state excepting a few migratory bird species) even though much of the land where the wildlife lived belonged to the federal government in the name of the people of the United States. If that decision holds true, where does the Federal Wolf Recovery Team get off letting their wolves kill off our cik, deer and other wildlife?

Bomb kills two in attack on U.S. supporters

BAGHDAD, Iraq (AP) – A bomb planted in a meeting room exploded after a gathering of the Iraqi Communist Party, killing two men in an apparent attack on supporters of the US-backed government, officials said Priday.

The attack in Baghdad on Thursday appeared aimed at undermining the Communists, who have become the most organized political group in the country since the collapse of Saddam Husseln's Baath party. The Communists have one representative on the U.S.-backed, 25-member Iraqi Coverning Council.

The bombing came as U.S. forces arrested a father and son suspected of launching a mortar and rocket barrage that killed two U.S. soldiers at an outpost.

The attacks were part of a spate of assaults that killed 11 people on Wednesday and Thursday in central Iraq, where Saddam loyalists are waging a guerrilla war. NEW YORK — Three names have been removed from the list of those killed in the World Trade Center attack, bringing the death coll to 2,749 which could stand as the final count, the medical examiner's office said Friday.

The official list of those missing for the first time now matches the number of death certificates the city has issued for attack victims, said Ellen Borakove, spokes-woman for the medical examiner.

Borakove said the three names were removed this week after officials could not confirm that they were killed in the trade center attack.

Only 1,538 of the confirmed victims have been matched to remains. More than 1,200 others are listed solely on the basis of court-issued death certificates, which were provided to families who could prove their loved ones were in the trade center at the time of the attack.

Heading to Winter X Games go prime time

EXTREM

DENVER - Snowboarders will slide off rails, motorcyclists will flip over a 70-foot gap, and snowmobilers will trade paint on Aspen's slopes. Tattooed teens will cheer every McIwist in a moshpit atmosphere, and all the action will be under the lights, live on prime-time TV.

The Winter X Games are going to be raid dude!

lights, live on prime-time TV. The Winter X Games are going to be raid, dude!
"Everyone knows what the X Games are, and everyone's always excited to watch and know everything they can about it, so to have it live is such an awsome step," said Gretchen Bleider, last year's super pipe gold medalist. The Winter X Games were created in 1997 as a way to tap into the younger generation's interest in pushing the limits of traditional skiing. This year's event, Saturday through Tuesday, will feature 250 athletes from around the world competing in 10 events. Those include skiers and snow-boarders in the super pipe and doing tricks off rails and kickers; Moto X best trick, a dangerous combination of motorcycles and a snow-covered rung; and snowmbile racers banging machines on uphill and oval courses.

And for the first time in their eightyear history, the Winter X Games will be aired live.

"Simply put, it was time," ESPN's Melissa Gullotti said. "It's a testament to action sports and action sports athletes that they are seen on the same level as mainstream sports."

Action sports certainly had a role in revitalizing the ski industry, which hit a hull in the early 1990s.

Aging baby boomers, who fueled skiing's popularity for decades, were staying off the slopes, and the younger generation seemed more interested in skating like Tony Hawk than hitting the hills.
Then came snowboarding.

By stripping the wheels off skateboards and adding some bindings, the ski industry found a new vehicle to help carry it into the future.

In 1992-93, snowboarders represented abour 8 percent of skier visits: nationwide, with 4.4 million riders. By 2002-03, the numbers climbed to 17 million riders and accounted for 29 percent of the market, turning snowboarding into a $168 million industry.

Snowboarding has even helped rekindle interest in skiing.

Rryant attorneys raise race issue in trial

Bryant attorneys raise race issue in trial

EAGLE, Colo. - Kobe Bryant's attorneys suggested in open court Friday that the Los Angeles Lakers star may have been falsely accused of rape because he is black.

The comment from attorney Pamela Mackey came during a legal squabble over the notes of a rape crisis center worker who sat in on a police interview with Bryant's 19-year-old accuser. The defense wants access to the crisis center.

Inga Causey, attorney for the Resource Center of Eagle County, said releasing more details about Bryant's accuser would lead to fewer women reporting rapes. She said rape reports dropped in Florida after William Kennedy Smith was acquitted, a case in which his accuser's medical background was targeted by defense attorneys.

At that point, Mackey urged the judge to focus on the Bryant case and avoid the "political agenda of the rape crisis center."

Judge Terry Ruckriegle said he would decide later whether to hold a full hearing on turning the notes over to the defense.

Snowboarders, skiers compete at Pomerelle

By Tressa Toner
Times News correspondent

ALBION – Music thundered through the frees and the police siren screamed down the slopes while skiers and snowboarders from all over the region competed recently in the Slop Style Competition held at Pomerelle Mountain.

"The police car was awsome with the siren going and the blue light flashing," said Zack Alexander, ski area snowhoard supervisor. He helped build the ski slope obstacle course over a two-week span for the event.

the event.
"We had five rails, the table top kicker, a lot of jumps, huge tires and a police car that made it a lot of fun and a pretty awesome course," Alexander said.

Thirty-four contestants competed in five differ-ent divisions. A local radio station provided the

"The music really pumps you up and gives you a beat to do your stuff," said I win Falls resident Rick Gooding, 45. "My favorite jump was the table top kicker. I landed it perfect. But sliding down the Rainbow Rail, well, it wasn't perty.

"The rails are really hard, especially for old perpel like me. Everyone works so hard so people can come down the hill and not get wounded."

Upcoming events at the ski area include the Big Air Competition Feb. 7; the freestyle competition, Feb. 14; and Kids Day, Feb. 21. Call (208) 673-5599 for more information.

Trophies and medallions were awarded to the top three contestants in each division.

Take it to national level, area bowlers

TWIN FALLS - Last week we covered the City Tournaments, so this week let's, go to the national level.

The ABC's 101st Tournament received its 16,105th entry recently making it the second largest rational vountament ever, with achance at approaching the all time record. The deadline to enter is Feb. 14.

This year's tournament will be in Reno, Nev. at the National Bowling Stadium. This is the same location where the largest ever rournament was held in 1995 when they had 17,295 entries. 1995 was the first year the tournament was held at the venue.

Reservations can be made by calling 1 (877) 539-7930 or enter on line at abctournament.com. Entry forms are available at your local bowling center.

The 85th Annaul WIBC National Tournament will be in Wichita, Kansas April 15 and recently exteded to July 6, July 5 for team and July 6 for Singles and Doubless-Entries—are—fast-approaching 9,000.

WIBC added telephone operators to handle the incoming calls for reservations. Call 1 (414) 423-9006.

LET'S GO BOWLING Thelma Tucker

During both ABC/WIBC
Tournaments there will be the annual meetings where once again this year the vote will take place for the single-membership organization proposal. WIBC and ABC have confirmed their strong commitment to become a single-membership organization under the United States Bowling Congress banner.

The final report on the proposed United States Bowling Congress (USBC) as approved by the ABC/WIBC Board of Directors is now available on bowl.com.

National Tournaments are a terrific experience and lots of funsor—"Let's Go Bowling."

Accident at home claims life of Burley toddler BURLEY - A 2 1/2-year-old Burley boy was killed in a Friday accident at his home, Cassia County Sheriff Jim Higens said.
Higens said the name of the child wouldn't be released until all relatives could be notified.
Cassia County Sheriff's Department dispatchers received a call for help at 12:36 p.m. Friday from a female who sounded frantic, Higens said.
The woman hung up before the dispatcher was able to get all the necessary information. But the phone number and address were recorded as part of the county's enhanced 911 emergency phone system, the sheriff said. Two deputies were sent to that address.

In the meantime, the parents of the child had taken him to Cassia Regional Medical Center, Higens said. Cassia County Undersheriff Cary Bristol and another deputy were at the hospital on an unrelated matter and when the parents arrived with the boy, Bristol notified the sheriff's department of what had happened.

Hospital employees were not able to save the boy and he died at about 1:30 p.m., Higens said.

The accident remains under investigation, the sheriff said intial reports indicate the child was run over by a snowmobile trailer that was in the family's drivway.

Court expedites review of law's constitutionality directing the courts to raise local property taxes to repair unsafe buildings. In an order signed by Chief Justice Linda: Copple Trout, the court set April 16 for arguments on the constitutionality of the law. No extensions of deadlines in the condensed schedule for submitting written arguments will be permitted; the order sald.

It is the first time the Supreme Court has waded into the case since Dec. 30, 1998, when the justices wide unanimously to keep the school district challenge for more state support alive after then-4th District Judge Daniel Eismann dismissed the case.

700. The Supreme Court's last ruling The Supreme Court's last ruling set in motion the events that led to a February 2001 order from 4th District Judge Deborah Bail that the state's current system relying solely on property tax for school building needs is unconstitutional and that the Legislature must provide every student a safe place to learn.

For two years, Bail declined to clear the way for an appeal of that-ruling, trying to force the Legislature and school districts into a settlement.

Idaho is the only state that provides no direct support for a public school construction and still requires a two-thirds majority to approve local construction bonds. The state does provide some subsidy for bond interest.

But legislative leaders have adamantly rejected Bail's suggestion that the state must pay for at least part of local school maintenance and construction. Last year the House and Senate passed the law unilaterally terminating the lawsuit and shielding the state from any financial responsibility by ordering districts to list their building, safety problems and directing the district courts to mise property taxes to pay for the improvements if no other way is available.

Bail's decision came in one of six suits filed by Attorney General Lawrence Wasden against school districts to force them to comply with the 2003 law. Second District Judge John Bradbury agreed with Bail and declared the law unconstitutional. The judges in the other cases have either not ruled or said-they would wait for a Supreme Court ruling on the law's validity. In its order on Priday, the high court shelved the appeal of Bail's original 2001 ruling until after it evaluates the 2003 law. Advocates contend that if the law is upheld, the legal battle is over since the underlying lawsuit is dismissed.

While some of the most serio

Andrew Emrich, an attorney with the U.S. Department of Justice, told Brimmer that the Park Service prefers the 2003 rule because it took into account new technology that resulted in cleaner, quieter machines. But he also said there is legal precedent for Sullivan reverting to a 2001 rule that called for the eventual ban. Various business owners also took the stand Friday to outline their losses since Sullivan's ruling. Bob Coc, owner of Pahaska fleeper Resurt near Yedlowstone's east entrance, said he had to lay off 22 employees on Christmas Eve and three more Jan. 1. His resort is now closed three days a week.

"It's been devastating," he said. Revenues for Jan. 1.20 were of 549,400 from the same period in 2003, Coc said. Selling his snownobiles and purchasing snowcoaches would be too costly and impractical because of the danger of going over Sylvan Pass, which is more traversable by snowmobiles, the said.

Clarene Law, who operates four hotels in Jackson, said that from Doc. 20-Jan. 22, business was off 5122,200 compared to last season. She said the snowmobile ruling is likely the main reason.

Chatwin said he tried to comply with the order but was eventually rold the would have to leave. On Friday, he said he wasn't budging. Jeffs - considered by the faith's followers to be its "prophet" - could have assigned Chatwins wife. Lori, 32, and their children to another man in town, but she stood by her husband. "I'm not going to leave him," she said Friday.

More than three dozen news reporters and law enforcement officers descended on the town, which along with nearby Hildale, Utah, forms what many believe to the the center of the American polygamist movement.

Friday's news conference came about two weeks after word first leaked about Jeffs' move to kick the men out of the sect. More men were kicked out by Jeffs after the initial purge, Chatwin among them. The church owns most of the buildings in town, including he homes.
Ross Chatwin compared Jeffs oddoff Hitler, and said under his rule the towns could be compared to concentration camps "with comforts." He said by talking he could put himself in danger in a secretive community notorious for retaliating against malcontents. But he said he did it to encourage others to stand up to Jeffs, espe-

Three 16-year-old girls are known to have run away. Two are in foster care in Phoenix and the other is in state custody in Utal. There have been disputed reports of nearly 15 other children who have fled the towns, although some may have returned, antipolygamy advocates say.

The mainstream Mormon-church abandoned polygamy a century ago as the Utalı territory sought statehood, but the fundamentalists refused to give up the practice. John Y. Barlow founded the twin communities, then known as Short Creek, in 1935.

The men of the fundamentalist church are taught they must have at least three wives to ascend to heaven, but many take more. It was estimated that Jeffs had 35 to 75 wives.

ing to a new study by conservation groups.
But dam-proponents said the study is flawed and intended pri-marily to increase support for removing the dams, an issue so hot that President Bush has vowed repeatedly to protect the dams. The study was commissioned by American Rivers, Idaho Rivers United and the National Wildlife, Federation, which contend the dams are a major barrier to the recovery of salmon runs, which are protected under the Endangered Species Act.

"An updated rail system would offer farmers an affordable and effective way to ship grain to market, protect existing businesses in southeastern Washington, and improve the prospects for attracting riew business," said Roh Masonis, regional director for American Rivers.

But a spokeswoman for U.S. Reg. George Nethercutt, R.Washi, whose district includes the dams, said there is no evidence that breaching the structures would improve salmon runs.

Federal judge rejects effort to keep Commandments monument in park the removal of a Ten Commandments monument from a city park. When and if the stone tablets will be returned to the original donor, the Fraternal Order of Eagles, is another matter. The Generation Life group led by Brandi Swindell joined the Rev Bryan Fischer, a conservative Christian activist, and the Fastor's Policy Council on Thursday to file a complaint against the City Council to block the action. But U.S. District Judge Edward Lodge turned down Generation Life's request for an order Keeping the monument from beginped from the public park to the Eagles' property. Lodge said Generation Life argues "they are threatened with the prospect of having their religious beliefs and rights removed and violated not only from Julia lic square, in layor of replacements by another religion; the religion of nontheistic beliefs.

"In the event the removal is deemed unlawful, the monument could be restored to its original position," Lodge said.

Lodge gave both sides two weeks to submit written arguments on the issue and said if he needs a hearing before issuing a decision, it will be on Feb. 5.

The monument sponsored the Eagles was placed in a quiet corner of the park in 1955.

The monument controversy left the city caught between two groups. Kansas preacher Fred Phelps wants to erect his own antigenymonument at the site.

The City Council voted Tuesday for return the monument to the Eagles, which will display it at the entrance to their building in Boise. That appeared to solve legal concerns of having a religious monument on public property.

The Eagle Lodge supported the city's action, though Phelps' organization said it would keep pressing for his request to buy land for a grantler monument condentning Matthew Shepard, a Laramie, Myo., gay man who was murdered in 1998.

Then the Christian consortium sued to block the monument's removal.

The quest for water on Mars which could indicate life – has fascinated scientists for centuries.

The Mars Express, launched last year by the European Space, and the discovery with its infrared camera while circling the planet's south pole.

Scientists have long believed the planet's south pole.

Scientists have long believed the planet's poles contain frozen water, but previous findings – including MASA'S Mars Odyssey orbiter's evidence of large amounts of ice—ware based more on inferences, European scientists said.

While the Mars Odyssey has indirectly shown the presence of water—at the pole using temperature moritors, the European camera has for the first time been able or "literally map the polar cap" using infrared technology that shows where water molecules are present, said scientist

Jean-Pierre Bibring.

"You look at the picture, look at the fingermint, and say this is water ice." said agency scientist Allen Moorehouse. "This is the first time its been detected on the ground. This is the first direct confirmation."

If Mars once had surface water, it had the potential to support life, although members of the European project have stressed that it was too early to draw conclusions.

In 2001, NASA's Mars Odyssey turned up evidence of lots of ice mixed with the soil, as little as 18 inches from the surface.

Phil Christensen, an Arizona State University professor involved in NASA's Mars Projects, said the European findings bolstered such data.

"That is a very nice confirmation of the other measurements that have been previously made," he told AP by telephone.

Boise Cascade wins purchasing contract

BOISE - Boise Cascade has won a five-year contract to provide office

BOISE—Boise Cascade has won a free-year contract to provide office shippiles and paper products to a not-for-profit educational buying cooperative.

The exclusive contract between Boise Office Solutions and the Educational and Institutional Cooperative Service could bring Boise Cascade products to more than 1,500 calleges, universities and prey schools throughout the nation under a group-purchasing program, officials said.

"Boise Office Solutions is very critical to partner with Eat to simplify the office products procurement process for its members while providing the benefit of customized, individual—service—that will allow each organization to concentrate on their core business," Boise Office Solutions CEO Chris Milliken said.

Boise Cascade Corp, which has operations in Magic Valley, distributes office products and building materials and manufactures paper and wood products.

None of their furniture is like any-thing anyone would learn to make in a how-to class at Home Depot or buy the the local Furniture Mart. And that's what has caught the eye of ritzy mountain manison owners and appre-ciative cabin dwellers, who snap up the Musser brothers' one-of-a-kind pieces almost as fast as they make them. "Everything we've ever done has been rough," Tom says between the buzzing of saws and the squealing of hearing aids. "It's the only way we know how to do."

The Musser brothers were born and spent seven decades on a ranch in Escalante Canyon northwest of Delta.—Jand their grandparents homesteaded in 1886. The tables, rockers, footstools, benches, magazine racks and shelves they now create are made of ed in 1886. The tables, rockers, tootstools, benches, magazine racks and shelves they now create are made of the same kinds of wood that dotted the 6,800-acre ranch: scrub oak, tamarisk, Russian olive, black walnut, elm, aspen and pine. Each piece is branded with a 'Bar XN' and a number code, just the way the Mussers always brandea, and numbered the thousands of cattle they ran.

In their ranching life, chairs were something to sit on after the work was done. Tables were a place to eat biscuits and steak.

So furniture making wasn't their first choice when they had to sell the ranch in 1988 because they couldn't take care of it anymore. These two brothers, who together don't add up to the weight of one Marlborn man and are no taller than corral posts, initially hired themselves out as coweys. At an age when most men are gingerly easing themselves in and out of golf cars, the Mussers were chasing cattle, shoeing horses and mending fences.

But Tom had a car accident in 1992 and "stove up" his back, so the brothers began looking for something a little less grueling, Neither ever considered working without the other. And not working was not an option.

"Why, Tom, he'd have just sat there in a chair like a lump and died if he wasn't doin," said his wife, Pat.

The brothers had been visiting a friend at his woodworking shop in Delta. When he died six years ago, they decided to make things of wood. Without ever having built anything more than 25 miles of split cedar fence and 124 ranch gates that, they proudly note, "all swung," the two set to work on furniture.

They started with wood gleaned from the ranch and a wall full of inherited tools they admit they still have no idea how to use. They took no classes, and they didn't consult books or watch "This Old House." They simply began to look at a gnarled branch and envision a place of furniture.

As Tom puts it, "We just do what the sticks want."

"They weren't burdened with any knowledge of woodworking," notes their friend and landlord, Delta City Councilman Barry Bullard, who has a Musser piece of furniture in every room of his house.

Initially, the Mussers gave their creations away, But one day, the pair showed up at the Apple Shed gallery in nearby Cedaredge, politely doffed their sawdust-covered hats and asked where Connie Williams if she would like to buy some furniture. She initially offiered to take their pieces on consignment, but the Mussers said that wouldn't do.

"I said we'd probably be dead before we could collect on it," Jack recalls with a wink, a mudge and a flash of gleaming dentures.

They needn't have worried. Their urmiture has sold fuster than they have aged. They urned their numbered symbols into theat 1,638th piece of furniture—a bleat.

Wal-Mart sees future in RFID technology

BENTONVILLE, Ark. - Linda Dillman was astonished that replacing the bar code with a chip would cause such a tempest.

Since the Wal-Mart Stores Inc. chief information officer announced the company's plans in June, some of the retailer's biggest suppliers have muttered under their breaths about its powerful influence.

Technology companies peppered Dillman with questions about a fair price for the chips. Consumer advocates, meanwhile, wanted to know whether the thips would invade customers' privacy.
To all, Dillman has a simple answer
Get ready, because change is coming, Wal-Mart is positioning itself at the front of an inevitable technological revolution, even if it means dragging others into a future they're not sure they want, Dillman said.

"I had no idea we'd get a reaction like this," she said. "But the fact that this is happening in public doesn't change our focus on making sure it happens."

Radio-frequency identification, or RFID, was afready one of the most exciting and furiously debated topics in the technology world when Wal-Mart stepped into the middle of it.

Now attention turns to three Wal-Mart warehouses in the Dallas area, where the world's second-largest company plans to start its conversion.

RFID chips beat bar codes by reducing human error and opportunities for theft, business executives said. Bar codes require a level of human interaction for scanning that RFID chips do not.

"We can track our product from the time it leaves through the whole delivery system," said Dennis Mullen, chief executive of Birds Eye Foods Inc.
"If it gets stuck somewhere along the line, we can take corrective action."
RI'DI tags contain a small chip and an antonna, usually coiled, to broadcast a signal. They were originally attached to Allied planes in World War II to distinguish them from enemy aircraft.

Over the years, RFID chips have been used in everything from anti-theft devices in clothing shops to Exon Mobil Corp.'s Speedpass, which allows customers to pay for their pas wirelessly. As chips became capable of storing more information in a tiny amount of space, technologists began exploring even more uses for RFID.

RFID

ontinued from D1

Retailers, technology firms and consumer products companies have spent the last few years coming up with a complex numbering system to identify RFID-tagged items in stores.

That system is now close to reality, leading technology companies such as Texas Instruments Inc., Microsoft Corp. and Corp. to believe RFID is on the cusp of explosive growth.

If Wal-hurr had not scized upon RFID technology, someone else would have, many business executives say, Wal-Mart is part of the standards organization that will make RFID tags work in the retail industry; but so are big competitors such as Target Corp.

"People who cannot come up to speed on this technology and will make RFID tags work in the retail industry; but so are big competitors such as Target Corp.

A can of soda, for instance, could be tracked from manufacture to warehouse to store to a customer's RFID-equipped refrigerator.

That scenario unnerves privacy advocates, who worry about a corporation's being able to track a customer's every move.

Wal-Mart's plan, thus far showhere close to that vision, Dillman said in an interview at the company's northwest freamas headquarters.

"The retailer is asking suppliers to a tack RFID chips to their trates and cases of products. At this point, only those large short individual products.

Most suppliers have until 2006 to add the chips, but the top 100 stoppliers have to do it by 2005, the retailer says.

The RFID chips, like bar codes, will contain information about the products inside the crates. Readers the size of clock radios are to be planted in Wal-Mart's warefugues to wirelessly detect radio waves emitted by the chips.

Wal-Mart, its suppliers, and technology companies are busy working on ways to make even those tough products RFID readable.

The idea is to make sure each crate of products is always visible when it passes under a reader. And there would be no human intervention—employees wouldn't have to check which way the tags faced or if a crate had been moved.

RFID's "big win," Dillman believes, is in the backroom of Wal-Mart stores, a place that is even more susceptible to human with its 2005 deadline. The grumbling goes on in private, but Dillman has heard it.

"There aren't people who are going to come to us and say it."
Dillman said. "We hear it from the background noise."
The chief complaint, of course, is about money. An RFID chip costs 20 cents or more, and the

And if they want to take advantage internally of RFID's capabilities, they have to pay for readers, software, employee training and more.

Called Orkut, the service allows users to link up with friends of their friends and aims to "increase the overall satisfaction of social life." It is much like the hot Sunnyvale, Callif, online dating service Friendster but possibly with more features.

The launch comes just three but possibly with more features.

The launch comes just three months after Google entered talks to acquire Friendster reportedly for $30 million – and was rebuffed.

The project was developed by a Google engineer and a few of his colleagues, and is still in testing mode, according to Google spokeswoman Eileen Rodriguez. She said Google encouraged its launch but otherwise is taking a hands off approach.

Orkut is the latest of dozens of similar social networking services that have started over the past year, so it is too early to say whether it will have any success.

For the time being Google syst has no plans to use the personal information supplied by Orkut users for searches.

Like Friendster, Orkut www.orkut.com – only accept people invited by someoge already on the network.

time field trip.
Forty-one students witnessed the first ETM-3 to ever be launched at the Thiokol Center near Brigham City, Utah. The ETM-3 is a reusable, solid rocket motor.

Ann Osterhout, James Miller, Tara Bagley, Marvin Scow and school board representative Brian Duncan also attended the event with the junior and sophomore students. There were more than 5,000 spectators from different areas in the western United States at the launching...."These-students-have-also-been-working hard this trimester building rockets," said advisor Scow. Twenty-one students made and launched rockets, They had to launch their rockets, and safely bring back an egg, representing an astronaut, without cracking it. The rockets were launched with 100 pounds of pressure... "Out of the 21, only 11 of them brought back the rocket and their 'astronaut' successfully," Scow said.

Brett Searle launched the highest rocket at 1,302 feet and 289 feet per second, but he was not able to successfully-bring-back-his-matronaut."

The academy students each have a mentor, which they are required to contact at least once a month. These mentors help the students throughout the year with any problems they may have in engineering. The mentors work at a different companies around the area, including Kraft, Amalgamated Sugar, Black Hills Power, Christensen Machine Shop and the State Highway Department.

Thank your friendly Freeway Samaritan

There are three things you don't want to hear when you're driving. The first is, "Are we there yet?" Second is, "It think I'm gonna be sick." And third is, "Fire!"
For the past 25 years, I've heard the first two things plenty of times from my five children. But I hadn't heard the third one until driving home from work last Monday.

OK, I didn't actually hear it. But I saw it on the lips of the gentleman driving the car next to mine. Now I'm not the freshest spark plug in the motor pool, but the fact that he was saying it while animatedly pointing underneath my car seemed to suggest that I had a problem.

Of course, I had just heard — and felt — something pop in the ... um ... you know, the part of the car where the engine is, And I was experiencing a sudden loss of power. This also alerted me to the possibility of automotive trouble on I-15.

VALUE SPEAK Joseph Walker

Which isn't an altogether new experience for me. My Toyota is just a couple of years short of being officially designated as a "classic." It's been a good little car — excellent mileage, metry dependable and fairly zippy — for nearly a quarter of a million miles. But lately jit's been showing signs of age, and we've been having signs of age, and we've been having. you know. issues. The noise, shudder and sudden loss of power reminded me a lot of when the alternator when out. Or was it the idder ama? Or the U-joint? Or the serpentine belt? Or the autosequencers?

No, wait—that was on the Starship Enterprise.

Which is why I was uncertain

I'm easily confused, especially when it comes to mechanical technology. Which is why I was uncertain about how to respond to a fire raging amidst the oil pans and aga tanks three feet in front of me. Do I keep driving as fast as I can and hope the rushing air will blow the fire out? Do I head for the nearest fire station? Or do I just ignore it and hope it goes away (my technique of choice for when the "Service Engine Soon" light comes on? Thankfully the gentleman driving the car next to mine had a firmer-grasp of the situation than I did. He started pointing emphatically to the right side of the freeway, and then pulled in front of me, slowed down and started pulling over himself. I followed him to a relatively safe stopping place, then scrambled out of my car and opened the hood so I could ... well, I wasn't exactly sure what to da. So I did what I do every time I open the hood of my car: I stared at it and hoped the testosterone would kick in and fill me with insight and wisdom as to the innerworkings of my vehicle. Everything looked the same as it always didcompletely incomprehensible. Only this time there were flames and stuff.

"Oh, you would've just thrown some snow on it."

"Yeah," I said. "That's exactly what I was going to do."

What? There was snow?

Tim refused to leave until the highway parto arrived. He got a blanket out of his car and tried to wrap it around me, even though I was wearing a jacket and he just had on a shirt. As we stood there chatting, we discovered that we had known each other in high school, even though we went to different schools. We had actually competed against each other a time or two, and had feared and respected each other. And now, here we were standing by the side of a busy interstate, a Freeway Samaritan and the owner of a Prodigal Toyota.

Which is a mixed parable, I know, but at least it's better than hearing "Fire!" again.

—Plans-for-the aging structure-at-161-Sixth Ave. E., have been in flux for several years, with letters circulating among priests, bishops, architects, engineering firms, parish councils and preservation groups. Today, the church owns land off Falls Avenue that is targeted as a potential site for the 1,200 families-and-growing congregation.

"We were in Mass once when they were talking about a new church and I thought, 'Oh, no matter what happens, I want to preserve in words and pictures this building because it is so beautiful and unique." Marcantonio recalled.

The result is "On Holy Ground: The History, Art and Faith of St. Edward the Confessor Roman Catholic Church." Inside the book's 112 pages, readers meet people who tell the stories inside the walls of the building that is their hallowed home.

St. Ed's is where Twin Falls Catholics are baptized, receive their First Holy Communion, marry and worship—with all of the living that's interwoven among those passages – and the church has been entrusted with each member's story, through the years.

The people began gathering to celebrate Mass in November 1904, a month after the final plat for the Twin Falls townsite was filed. The first church building, at the corner of Second Avenue East and Fifth Street East, was a small wooden structure, circa 1905, that has since been reborn as apartments.

But the completion of St. Edward's, in 1921, paid worthy tribute to an area that was blooming with faith.

During the three years when Marcantonio was poring over books and newspapers and family histories, she recorded the facts: The church building, constructed by Twin Falls architect Ernest H. Gates, resides within an historic district and showcases a terra cotta exterior and cagliola ornamented interior. Its windows were hand-painted on hand-blown glass from Germany. Its towers rise 75 feet.

Mel Gibson's new film isn't pope's passion

By Joanna Molloy and Corky Slemaszko New York Dally News

Pope John Paul's right-hand man personally put the kibosh Monday on claims that the pontiff plugged Mel Gibson's controversial new movie about the Crucifixion of Christ.

Archbishop Stanislaw Driwisz, the Pope's personal sechetary, said the pontiff did not give a thumbs up to "The Passion of the Christ," as the producers have claimed. NASA project expedites questions of alien beliefs

As the Mars rover explores the red planet, back on Earth in California, theologian Kevin A. Lewis doesn't expect the machine to have a close encounter with an extraterrestrial. But if it does, he has a ready perspective. Lewis believes E.T. would just as likely be a creation of God as are humans.

Christians are called to spread the good news to spread the good news

In response to Mitch Moseleys letter on morality: Mr. Moseley, I think you need to take another look at real Christianity. If you are as well versed in the Bible as you claim, then you might review a few basic tenets of the faith.
Very few Christian people are "zealots" you claim we are.
We are followers of Christ and, as such, we are called to spread the good news, and love God and others more than ourselves. We all stumble and perhaps even cause others to question our beliefs at times, but we are-human, living in a fallen world. Nobody is perfoct and anyone, religious or not, can behave "self-rightcously."
You claim to live by your own "moral compass." Are we to understand that your values are superior? Do you think your relativistic ideas are "enlightened" and anyone who follows Christianity is a fundamental bigot? It is obvious you don't believe in any form of deity, that is your right – God does not force himself on anyone. But freedom does allow me to speak my mind and be a Christian without condemnation from people such as yourself. yourself. KRISTEN KECK

Lewis once declared religion as nonsense, as well. "Christianity was mainly-associated for-methit ugly architecture, ugly music, and bad poetry," he wrote when we will be a supported to me the word Interference. But Christianity placed at the center what seemed to me a transcendental Interferer.

Like Freud, Lewis, born in England in 1898, suffered from depression and struggled with close relationships. At 9, his mother died, Lewis embraced atheism as an adolescent, survived the horrors of the trenches during World War I and established his candemic career as a literary scholar.

He found himself drawn to Christians for friendship. In 1925, a much-admired intellectual antheist admitted to Lewis one evening after dinner that suit stantial evidence actually supported the Gospels as history. Lewis read the New Testament for the first time - in Greek - and noticed that, unlike the great myths of literature, the story of Jesus was not a beautifully crafted tale; rather, it was one written by uneducated Jews who wrote what they saw, or what they were told.

The New Testament myth, they argued, was the one myth that was true. Shortly after that discussion during a motorcycle ride to a zo—Lewis accepted Jesus as his Lord and Savior. Following his transformation, he wrote "Chronicles of Narnia," allegories of the Christian faith, and "The Screwtape Letters."

Churches embrace 'Purpose-Driven' program

COLUMBUS, Ga. — Glenn Anthony Baptist Church has found its purpose.
"It's incredible. Pve done every program known to man. This is probably the most life-changing, church-changing study out there, said the Rev. Eddle Beach, Glenn Anthony's pastor.
"The Purpose-Driven Life," the book series birthed at a California megachurch called Saddleback, megachurch called Saddleback, continues to make its way across the country, with 8,000 churches from 50 states and 19 countries participating in 2003.

The study is compacted into 40 straight days, often with Sunday sermons directed at the week's theme. Churches report an average of 22 percent growth in worship attendance, and 79 percent growth in small-group attendance, according to the Purpose-Driven Web site.

"People bean to see God's will for their lives, instead of anything materially or relationally," said the Rev. David Rathel of Rivertown Church, which kicked off his 40-day series last Easter Sunday, "It was super for our church," which jumped from two small-group Bible studies to eight after the series, he said, adding that he counts "Purpose-Driven" as "the greatest devotional book in the nation right now."

Kelly Minter, "Wrestling the Angels" (Cross Driven) Kelly Minter has a sweet voice and an open heart for the Lord that makes her a pleasure to lis-ten to. There's real strength in her gentle music, which draws from folk, opp, country and rock influences, yet maintains a consistent fluidity. All the songs are penned by her, and she also plays acoustic guitar on several cuts. Kelly is most poetic in "Captives Dance". "Soothing our sorrows we've sung our psalms/We've fled our pharaohs for far too long." ble's at her most pragmatic in "Love Has Come" with the no-nonsense lyrics: "Burning the candle, both ends have held mecaptive/I have misplaced the sacred for what won't matter." Also notable is "This Is My Offering" with a measure of grandeur provided by the Prague Symphony Orchestra and the autobiographical title cut that makes a stand for perseverance. The album reflects a period in Kelly's life in which she grappled with God's plan for her life. "I pulled the title for the record, and for the song itself, from Genesis where it talks about Jacob wrestling the Angel of God all night to the point of exhaustion," Minter said. "Even in his weary state, Jacob said, 'I will not let You go until you bless me.' He refused to excuse himself from the trial until he received what the Lord desired to give him."

Religion in the media-

"The questions about E.T. actually help us to think through the relationships of the various Abrahamic traditions to each other: God's covenant with Christians through Christ does not need to supersede God's promises to Jews through the covenant. It's the love of God expressed in these different ways. Similarly for Muslims."
The first religious implication of discovering life on Mars is that it would tend to confirm the Darwinian theory of evolution, said Ted Feters, president of Pacific Lutheran Theological Seminary in Berkeley: "Mars plays a special role here becaus NASA and other scientification plays a special role here because NASA and other scientists are entertaining the theory that life on Mars and life on Earth may have evolved from a single source. This needs to be investigated. I believe the Christian faith is compatible with the best of science, and this includes evolutionary biology. The possible discovery of extraterestrial human life or something comparable could require theologians of the Christian, Jewish and Muslim traditions to expand their doctrine of creation."

The Bible speaks of only two kinds of intelligent life apart from God – angels and humans, Lewis said. "If there were a third kind of being, the implications are that it does not affect Christianity at all because in that Sible, God did not declare everything that there ever would be." Faiths, that hold a different thing that there ever would be."

Faiths that hold a different view of human beings than the monotheistic religions would have fewer problems embracing the notion of life on other planets, said Carol S. Matthews, who is doing religious research through the Kluge Institute at the Library of Congress. "Although a human life is considered an important opportunity in Hinduism and Buddhism, for example, human life is not the most important or precious thing in the universe. All life is equally precious."

"If you are going to find intelligence, you are going to have a soul," Lewis said, "God, angels and humans have personalities that are not grounded in the physical,"

Clayton said he thinks E.T.s' souls and spirits would be different: "Our soul is linked to the bodies we have. The Christian view is that we are a psychophysical unity, a unity of the soul and body. The New Testament teaches that the resurrection of the spirit alone does not make us full persons; only the resurrection of the body and the spirit. So we would expect that E.Ts. with different bodies would have a different sort of soul and spirit."

Lewis believes E.Ts. would have the capacity for rational thought, self-awareness or consciousness, morality and a communal or corporate existence in that they would live in community.

"What we need to spend most of our time on is how to have loving families and loving communities, genuine peace on Earth and good will toward men, how to stop violence and hate, and how to love God with all our heart, mind and strength," he said.

The building's style is not common to southern Idaho,

Marcantonio explained. "We're out in the desert, but you could see this type of church in Venice." Marcantonio, 50, is community page editor at The Times/News. She earned a degree in mass communications at the University of Southern Colorado and has worked as assignment editor at IMVFTV and executive editor of the Lincoln County Journal, the Gooding County Leader and the Northside News. Marcantonio self-published 1,000 copies of "On Holy Ground," borrowing the title from Father Robb Keller, the priest who led the Hock in the 1990s. Keller "sensed tremendous history in the building," Marcantonio wrote, "in that holy ground, as he called it."

A dollar from the sale of each copy goes to St. Ed's and a percentage goes to Bonnie Dodge, who handled the book's layout and photography. Marcantonio hopes to cover he own costs with the rest.

Dodge wrote in the DOOK'S Pro-logue.

Marcantonio says she's hoping the book will help others look at the landmark building through their own life experiences.

"Even if a new church is built, I have to say I would love to have them keep this building, because it is gorgeous and it is a part of history," she said. "I want future generations to appreciate the sto-ries behind the buildings."

Ministers, marathoners clash in Maryland city

FREDERICK, Md: - Pealing bells are at odds with pounding feet in the city of clustered feet in the city of clustered spires.

Supporters say the Frederick Marathon showcases this picture-sque community, which features five downtown steeples on-its seal. But some churches say street closures during last year's inaugural race reduced attendance at Sunday morning service's by up to 25 percent. Their opposition to a repeat performance has grown so heated that one pastor likened it to a war. Still, the marathon is scheduled for Sunday morning, May 2. As organizers prepare for it, ministers are using their ecumenical clout to force compromises.

Since the Frederick Area Ministerial Association raised its voice in a letter to Mayor Jennifer P. Dougherty in November, the city and volunteer marathon committee have announced changes to the race time and route, along with plansfor staggered street closures and other measures to reduce driver backups.

But some ministers aren't com-backups.

But some ministers aren't com-forted by the concessions. The Rev-Robert-Manthey, pastor of Calvary United Methodist Church, said the marathon still will disrupt traffic to and from church. Furthermore, the annual Frederick Festival of the Arts, scheduled for the first weekend in June, aims to move next year from a downtown park to the downtown streets. And then there's July 4, perhaps the biggest annual downtown event. It falls on a Sunday this year.

"It grows," Manthey said.

"It grows," Manthey said.

"It grows," Manthey said.

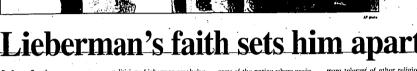

"First it's one Sunday, now two Sundays, now three Sundays."

There are 15 houses of worship downtown, averaging one every other block in the historic district. Poet John Greenleaf Whittier described "the clustered spires of Frederick" in his 1863 ballad, "Barbara Fritchie."

—An Influx of commuters and high-tech industry in recent decades have brought the coffee-leed, time-crunched, fun-seeking realities of modern life to the theory of $3.000, which is $45 miles from Washington.

"I think the city reflects the changing character of our nation." Manthey said. "We're a microcosm of what's happening, where faith issues – the sacred don't have the priority they had at one time."

The Rev. Paul Mundey of the Frederick Church of the Brethren, lamented the repealing of "blue laws," which prohibited commerce on Sundays, and said he was disappointed that city officials recently attended a Sunday grand opening of a new Bounday grand opening of a new Bounday sand op many chrows news sorted many other Democrats of his generation, Sen. Joseph Lieberman says John E Kennedy in spired him to seek public office. He mentions Kennedy in speeches, invokes his name in debates and praises him in interviews.

MANCHESTER, N.H. - Like

But the Connecticut senator is tied to his fellow New England Democrat by more than politics. Just as some voters questioned whether Kennedy's Roman Catholicism might conflict with his loyalty to America, 44 years later some are asking, more subtly, how Lieberman's strong Jewish faith affects his positions on Middle East policy and how it might influence his presidency.

"I always say that I am runnia for presidency and the with the product of the present of the product of the product gion, but on experience."

Like virtually all American politicians, Lieberman says he's a staunch supporter of Israel because the country is a democ-racy and an ally of the United States. But he also supports the creation of an independent Palestinian state and says he'd make peace between Israelis and Palestinians a top foreign-policy priority.

Palestinians a top foreign-policy priority. In New Hampshire, where some 10,000 Jews are less than 1 percent of the population, voters interviewed by Knight: Ridder-sial Lieberman's Judaism wasn't a factor in their decision, but many also said they were unsure about voting for him because he was lewish.

about voting for him because he was Jawish.
"It concerns me as a voter," said Franz Potter, a registered independent who attended a house party for Lieberman Iast week in Bow, N.H. "I wonder if he could deal with the Israeli-Balestinian concept with an open mind. I just see that the Middle East is such a linchpin for peace around the world. I just worry that he can't be objective."

—As—Kennedy—did—in—1960, Leberman may find that his faith is a more pointed issue in parts of the nation where prejudice against blacks and Jews ran highest. State Rep. Gilda Cobb-Hunter. D.S. C., said Jadgerman's religion made him practically unelectable in South Carolina, calling his Judaism "the 800-pound elephant in the middle of the room." It think here what you're going to find is a reluctance on the part of voters to say publicly that religion is a problem, but privately I believe it is a problem for a number of voters." Cobb-Hunter said. Lieberman's deep religious faith appeals to some voters, however. "That Methodist, and I admire that he draws strength from his religion," said Betty McElderry, a Lieberman supporter from Oklahoma. "His religion has heliped shape him." I think he is more tolerant of other religious because he is Jewish."

Unlike Kennedy, Lieberman is a strict observer of his faith Fevry Friday before sundown, he stops campaigning for 24 hours to observe the Sabbath. He prays frequently and tries to follow a kosher diet. Ironically, the conservative Jewish press is among his harshest critics. A column in the Israel Jewish press is among his harshest critics. A column in the Israel Sational News in December called Lieberman "more danger-cust than (Palestrinan leader Yasser) Ardat."
Mitchell Berger, a South Florida lawyer, speculates that some Jews may be atraid to put someone from their faith in the spotlight. "There is a Holocaust mentality in the Jewish community that if Jews become too visible they'll get killed," Berger said.

Evangelicals field teams of volunteers to the Super Bowl

Fort Worth Star-Telegram

Tom Landry would love what will be going on amid the hoopla surrounding the Super Bowl in Houston next month.

The former Dallas Cowboys coach, I think, will be nodding approvingly as thousands of volunteers - pro athletes, ministers and ordinary citizons - speak out for their faith before the game Feb. 1 at Reliant Stadium. Many evangelicals, led by Baptists from throughout Texas, will be holding Super Bowl watching events and other activities, including block parties. Some 2,000 Baptist volunteers will hand out visitors guides at the airport as they share their faith in subtle and nonsubtle ways.

ways.

During his lifetime, Landry, a United Methodist, often spoke at Fellowship of Christian Athletes dinners, encouraging Christian athletes to share their beliefs. But he told me in memorable interviews years ago that he preferred demonstrating his faith by example, rather than with words.

ferred demonstrating his faith by example, rather than with words.

Evangelicals will hand out religious literature at a downtown street festival, participate in a hunger-relief program involving Larry Jones Feed the Children organization and assist during the "NFL Experience," at which visitors can get autographis from athletes and test their football-throwing and -kitching skills.

"There are times we will be more aggressive and times when we will be subtle," said Tim Knopps, coordinator of the Southern Baptist Super Bowls.

"We get al little bit of flat super Bowls.

"We get al little bit of flat stimes," he says, but adds that people usually politely thank those who approach them.

About 20 Baptists will be handling props during the halftime show. "They won't be wearing John 3:16 Tshirts," said Knopps, referring to one man who is often seen on TV wearing a shirt emblazoned with the gospel berse of salvation. "We tell these volunteers that their first job is just to be the best volunteer they can be, but there are times when there is a lull in their work and they talk. When somebody asks

It gives them an opening to talk about their faith.
Katheryn Bechtold, Super Bowl volunteer manager, says church personnel are among the best workers.

"All we ask of our volunteers is that they be warm and friendly and nice," she said. "And their affiliation (with a church or some other group is not something we bring up."

One of the miraculous things about the Super Bowl effort is that conservative and moderate Baptists are working together on the evangelism project, which is coordinated by the denomination's North American Mission Board.

coordinated by the denomina-tion's North American Mission Board.

Members of rival state conven-tions, the moderate-led Baptist General Convention of Texas and the conservative Southern Baptists of Texas, are providing part of the $50,000 in funding. Volunteers from both camps have been stiting side by side in evangelism training sessions, including two that were planned for this weekend.

"There's been no division," said the Rev. Roy Guel, an associ-ate pastor at Sagemont Baptist Church. "There's no talk of church politics. Regardless of the minutiae of the different philoso-phies, our main goal is to lead folks to a saving knowledge of Christ."

THE ACES ON BRIDGE

Bobby Wolff

We won't be fooled again - The Who

West leads the heart ace against four spades and continues with a heart to East's jack. East cashes the heart king, on which West pitches a diamond, then switches to the club jack. What witches to the club face. What when the club ace, then eash the ace and queen of spades. If trumps are 3-2, there is no problem. If East shows out on the second round, you finesse against West's spade jack, cash the club king. ruff a club in hand, cross to dummy's diamond queen, draw the last trump, and claim. But here, when you cash the spade ace, West deviously follows with the nine.

West deviously follows with the fine.

You might now naively try to pick up a hypothetical jack fourth of spades with East. Your plan mul be to play a spade to dummy's king and a spade to your cight. Then you would play of a your top diamonds and try to ruff a diamond in the dummy. Finally you would cash the club king and make your spade queen at tries. 3. The trouble with following this approach is that it would require East to hold five hearts, four diamonds and two clubs, as well as his four spades.

monds and two clubs, as well as his four spades.

Since 15-card hands are relatively rare, continue with your original line and congratulate West after the deal for his imaginative falsecard. But don't tell him that he could have set the hand by pitching a club, not a diamond, on the heart king. There is no point in making enemies unnecessarily!

ANSWER: Bid three no-trump. When you invited game by bidding three clubs, your partner suggested extras (probably 6-4 in the minors). With a decent heart the minors of the three no-trump figures to be your side's easiest game.
