TRAVELING TROOPERS

Don and Virginia Johnson of Twin Falls say they get about eight miles to the gallon in their Holiday Rambler motor home, and it costs upwards of $260 to fill the 127-gallon tank. The Johnsons drove some 10,000 miles last year on various trips around the country, but they have canceled a planned trip to Alaska this summer.

High fuel prices keep some folks closer to home

By Michelle Dunlop
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — When Don and Virginia Johnson refueled the 127-gallon tank of their Imperial Holiday Rambler, they felt a tug in their pocketbook.

The 38-foot, chocolate-brown and tan motor home averages about eight miles a gallon in diesel fuel, and with the price of diesel topping $2.10 a gallon locally, the expense is taking its toll.

"When you fill it up, it doesn't take much to eat up $100-$200," Don Johnson said.

The Johnsons had hoped to drive the motor home to Alaska this summer to build churches with a national group of retired volunteers, but the escalating fuel prices caused them to change their plans.

Coming Saturday

Read about places you can take a vacation without guzzling gas on long trips in Saturday's Times-News.

"We were going to go with a caravan to Alaska," Virginia Johnson said. "But now we won't be going."

"We felt it would be better if we stayed down here this year," Don Johnson said.

Many travelers, like the Johnsons, will exercise caution when making plans this summer, but travel industry observers say folks won't stay home entirely as in years past. In fact, by automobile, airplane and cruise ship, Americans plan to travel more this summer beginning with the Memorial Day weekend — despite surging fuel prices.

"We expect a pretty good travel demand across the board," said Dave Carlson of Idaho's AAA.

Many Magic Valley residents are among the holiday travelers, although they are keeping a wary eye on prices at the pump. In the Johnsons' case, they plan to drive to Redfish Lake next week after returning from recent trips to Texas and Oregon.

Fuel prices are on the rise due to an increased demand brought on by the summer travel season, he said. The rising prices influence all types of vacation transportation, particularly automobile travel.

AAA expects travel across the nation to increase 3.6 percent from last Memorial Day weekend. AAA Idaho predicts that 145,410 Idahoans will travel by motor vehicle more than 50 miles this holiday weekend — that's 2,400 travelers more than last year.

"They'll find ways to make auto travel work," Carlson said.

Several Magic Valley residents seem intent on making travel work for them this holiday.

Melinda Johnson and her husband intend to make a trip to Moab, Utah, but not without a few complaints about the expense of gas.

"It's annoying me," she said. "I've been cursing it the whole time."

Deal leads to suspension of operations in Najaf

Knight Ridder News Service

BAGHDAD, Iraq — The U.S.-led coalition agreed Thursday to suspend military operations in Najaf as part of a deal negotiated by Iraqi leaders with rebel cleric Muqtada al-Sadr to end a bloody standoff in the heartland of Shiite Islam.

Al-Sadr emerges from the agreement virtually unscathed. He faces immediate prosecution on murder charges and doesn't have to disarm or disband his Mahdi Army militia as occupation authorities previously demanded. Iraqi leaders said the deal evened the scales. al-Sadr shed his outlaw image and position himself as a politician, albeit one with an impressive, militant support base.

The U.S.-led coalition, however, still stands to gain if the agreement is successful. Settling the south home to most of Iraq's Shiite majority, is a vital step to

EMPHASIS ON WEIGHT LOSS Dietary panel pushes more fish, grains

The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — A revised food pyramid coming from the government to guide Americans' eating habits should recommend more fish and fiber and fewer refined grains such as white bread, federal advisers decided Thursday.

The advisers, who were instructed by the Agriculture Department to shift the focus of the guidelines from maintaining a healthy diet to losing weight, also recommended that people exercise more and watch less television.

With about two-thirds of American adults overweight or obese, the committee was looking hard at ways in which people could control their weight. The panel favored better portion control, noting that people eat more when they have large portions, and said restaurants

TWIN FALLS — A local dairy is being sued in federal court by the Idaho Conservation League in a test case intended to bring large-scale dairies under state and federal air quality regulations.

Another dairy is being threatened with a lawsuit in a related Conservation League case that attempts to require dairies with more than 450 cows to report air emissions such as hydrogen sulfide and ammonia under federal toxic release inventories.

The Conservation League issued a news release Thursday announcing the developments.

The pollutants are natural products of manure and urine, but they are toxic and can cause eye and respiratory irritation at elevated levels. Neighbors of

Budget prospects shape up

Analysts look at life without temporary sales tax in Idaho

The Associated Press

BOISE — Idaho's state government should have enough money to operate on a no-frills budget in 2006 even as the temporary 1 cent sales tax expires, budget analysts told a panel of legislative leaders Thursday.

However, lawmakers may still have to dip into reserve accounts to fully fund expenses that are projected to be more than $2.1 billion.

"I think we're poised for some positive things," legislative Budget and Policy Supervisor Jeff Youse told a roomful of Republican and Democrats at the Statehouse.

"We're positioned fairly well to allow the temporary sales tax to sunset," he said. "But realistically, we will have to use our cash resources to bridge us through."

Youse tempered his remarks with the caveat that the state's revenue projections of $2.1 billion in 2005 are contingent upon no significant setbacks in the war on terror and no hyperinflation of fuel prices.

The legislative outlook for 2006 shows the state will lose $170 million as the general sales tax reverts from the current 6 cents back to a nickel. Another $81 million will have to be spent on increases in state employee health insurance. Medicaid spending, statutory public school increases and a calendar oddity that puts an extra pay period in the fiscal year.

However, the financial planners expect to see revenue growth of 5 percent that will bring in an extra $97 million. Added to that are potential sources of one-time money, such as $75 million in tobacco settlement case; $54 million in leftover cash from the 2005 budget; $25 million from the temporary extra surcharge on tobacco products passed in 2002; and $20 million from the state's so-called "rainy day" emergency account.

Altogether, Youse said a $251 million deficit could be covered by up to $272 million in resources.

Gov. Dirk Kempthorne said Thursday that he is confident about the budget picture, in part because current revenue projections have been right on target.

But he also expressed reservations about using one-time money in 2006 to balance the budget.

"I'm not ready to state that we will need the reserve funds," Kempthorne said.

House Speaker Bruce Newcomb and Senate President Tom Robb Geddes questioned the number of state prisoners would affect the Department of Correction budget.

large dairies have complained for several years about odors and degraded living standards.

The Conservation League also is targeting controls for particulate matter, or dust.

The group in late January asked K&W Dairy of Gooding County to obtain an air quality permit before opening a new dairy permitted for up to 6,600 cows. The state does not require air permits for dairies, but the Conservation League argues permits should be required for operations with more than 2,300 cows.

Jerome attorney Rob E. Williams said Thursday his client, Adrian Boer, owner of K&W, had not yet been served with a lawsuit and until then couldn't review the details to response.

MEMORIAL

Knight Ridder News Service

WASHINGTON — One of the largest reunions of American war veterans began Thursday as World War II soldiers and their families flocked to Washington to celebrate the dedication of the National World War II Memorial.

Organizers have prepared for 800,000 visitors throughout the holiday weekend, with the heaviest traffic on Saturday for the dedication ceremony and for Sunday's events on the National Mall.

Decorated in worn hats from aging uniforms and pins that refer to their military, former veterans strolled the mall on Thursday reminiscing about the Greatest Generation and the war that unified the nation.

A wide swath of the mall is covered with white-topped tents where veterans trade exchange stories and listen to military and big band music. One tent has a message board where the former soldiers can try to connect with other members from their units. Another tent is for storytelling, former Sen. Bob Dole talked about his war service Thursday. Others will talk about their roles on D-Day or their work as Navajo code-talkers.

"This is something that I personally have looked forward to for many, many years," said Robert Santistevan, 83, of Aztec, N.M., who served with the Army in Europe. "I'm so happy that World War II veterans are being recognized for all of the effort they put forth in defense of the American way of life."

Can I love thee? 'Compatibility patent' lets computers decide

SAN JOSE, Calif. (AP) — Chemists of EHarmony.com and statisticians best determine whether two people will have a happy marriage. At least so claims an online dating service that's patented its matchmaking formula.

EHarmony.com Inc. this month received U.S. Patent No. 6,735,568, which describes a "method and system for identifying people who are likely to have a successful relationship."

Not surprisingly critics and competitors trash EHarmony's process as overly scientific — some dismissing the so-called "love patent" as gimmicky.

But the patent has also sparked a debate more prickly than whether annual incomes should be included in online dating profiles: Can the elusive art of matchmaking be reduced to equations and databases?

Researchers at Pasadena-based EHarmony, founded by clinical psychologist Dr. Neil Clark Warren, maintain that an individual's psychological profile is a better barometer of marital success than purely demographic data.

Sites such as TrueBeginnings.com allow users to screen partners through increasingly complex questionnaires, standing apart from the many online dating services that match people according to simple data such as age, religion and education level.

EHarmony users answer more than 430 questions, ranging from "Do you smoke?" to "How much does the word 'dominant' describe you on a list of one through seven?" and "How often do you feel depressed?"

Researchers compare a person's score with a "marital satisfaction index" based on the responses of 1,347 couples.

Looking for love in all the right places

Nearly one in five of those couples met on eHarmony, which targets people pursuing a "long-term relationship that leads to marriage."

EHarmony researchers rank people in 29 categories, including "sexual passion," "mood management" and "spirituality." The company will only pair two people when it is 95 percent confident their compatibility rating falls in the index's top 25 percent. A dominant individual only gets paired with a wallflower if highly compatible in many other areas.

"Opposites might attract, but in our research they don't stay together," said Dr. Celen Buck-walter, vice president of research at eHarmony, which attracts marriage-minded traditionalists of all faiths and began advertising on Christian radio stations in 2000.

Other online matchmaking services aim to satisfy a much wider range of motivations for pairings. Not everyone is looking for lasting love. Niche sites abound, spanning a spectrum from die-hard bachelors to Jew-

Drunk-driving fatalities soar during the summer

Knight Ridder News Service

WASHINGTON — For highway troopers, the Memorial Day weekend begins a grim season: the 100 or so days of summer when alcohol-linked traffic deaths traditionally reach their peak.

Moreover, while about 40 percent of highway fatalities are alcohol-related on the average day, half or more of all fatalities are booze-linked on summer holiday weekends. The Labor Day weekend tends to be high-est.

John Moulden, president of the National Commission Against Drunk Driving, is worried.

"These summertime statistics are part of a disturbing trend," he said. "Total alcohol-related fatalities, which dropped dramatically over many years beginning in the 1980s, are once again on the rise."

Melinda and Robert Johnson usually travel for Memorial Day holiday and will vacation for four days in Utah despite paying more at the pumps.

"I've been planning this for months," Melinda said. "But I'm not going to change my plans." Although fuel prices have spiked, Johnson, she doesn't foresee changing any future travel plans just yet. Like many in the Magic Valley, Johnson finds a little fuel-price relief by venting about the situation.

"I'm just going to complain about a lot," she said.

And there's a lot to complain about these days. As of Wednesday, the national average for regular unleaded gasoline reached $2.054 per gallon. Idaho saw regular fuel prices of $2.079, 25 cents higher than the national average, according to AAA. Last Memorial Day weekend, Idaho's fuel prices were about 50 cents less per gallon.

While the high prices aren't enough to keep many people home, the prices have forced some Memorial Day travel revelers in the Magic Valley to cancel their plans altogether for this weekend as well as re-evaluate their summer vacations.

Cindy Mueller of Twin Falls finds herself in that situation. Her family typically enjoys camping over the holiday, but they'll stay home this weekend instead. If it weren't for fuel prices, Mueller said, "we'd go up to Featherhollow."

And the Muellers will carefully consider any vacation plans for the summer.

Memorial Day weekend is usually a busy travel holiday, said Roxie Simcoe, a Desert Sun Travel agent. This weekend is no exception.

This year, however, is exceptional compared with the past few, she said. Magic Valley residents are tired of staying home, Simcoe said. She has seen the increase in reservations — especially in air and cruise travel — to prove it.

"I think people are anxious to go," Simcoe said.

Simcoe hasn't heard many people opt out of travel plans this year, she said. Like Carlson, Simcoe said there seems to be a pent-up travel demand from the previous years due to a bad economy and concerns over terrorism.

"Since the first part of the year, people have been excited they're not going to let the bad guy win," she said.

Researchers: Immigrants outlive U.S.-born residents

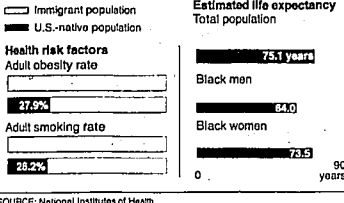

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Immigrants who come to the United States live an average of three years longer than people born here, new research shows in a surprising finding that challenges some common beliefs.

A growing body of evidence indicates the life span difference reflects both immigrants' innate vitality and their reluctance to embrace Americans' drive-thru, drive-everywhere mentality. They also smoke less.

The life expectancy deficit is true for all races but is most dramatic among blacks. Immigrant black men live nine years longer than black men born in the United States, according to an analysis by a National Institutes of Health researcher.

Living the American dream longer

Immigrants are outliving U.S. natives by an average of three years, despite a lower standard of living. The differential is most pronounced in Blacks. One explanation may be immigrants are less likely to be associated with risk factors such as obesity and smoking.

SOURCE: National Institutes of Health

The study reviewed millions of death and health records from 1986-94. Though the numbers are old, more limited studies of recent data suggest the same patterns hold true, although life expectancy is generally rising.

The records showed the average American-born black man could expect to reach 64, while a black man born overseas would likely live beyond 73 if he immigrated. In the case of an African-born man remaining in his homeland, he might well have died before his 50th birthday.

Perhaps most astonishing is that immigrants outlive the U.S.-born population even though they're more likely to be poor and less likely to see a doctor, often a prescription for a shorter life.

Such results may seem counterintuitive, but their explanation makes sense. Lifestyle is a powerful factor.

Blacks immigrants are three times less likely to smoke than American-born blacks, according to NIH research, and far less likely to be obese. Black immigrants drink less and exercise more, according to other federal research.

It is not surprising, then, that national health statistics show black immigrants are far less likely than U.S.-born blacks to die of everything from lung cancer to liver cirrhosis.

Obesity, too, is far more prevalent among American-born residents. Data from the mid-1990s showed that 22 percent of adult immigrants were obese, compared to 28 percent of U.S.-born adults. (Recent numbers suggest about 30 percent of all U.S. residents are obese.)

The smoking numbers were even more dramatic: 18 percent of immigrants smoked, compared to 26 percent of U.S.-born adults.

There are other factors, too, experts say. Immigrants are likely the most physically active, vigorous citizens in their homelands.

They must be resilient to journey here and spread roots. They tend to benefit from stress-reducing social support networks and an outlook that, even when poor, they're better off than before.

Some doctors have long suspected that immigrants live longer. But the findings surprise some immigrant advocates who focus more on federal policies other than health.

"People have a misconception that immigrants have poorer health, but when you look at the empirical data... you almost always find they do better than their U.S.-born counterparts," says Gopal K. Singh, an NIH statistician.

Army orders environmental cutbacks

WASHINGTON (AP) — Army garrison commanders worldwide are being told to drop some environmental protections and cut all temporary employees so the savings can be shifted elsewhere because of the war on terrorism.

An environmental group says some of the programs affected by the changes reduce aircraft collisions with birds, control nonnative species and affect how hazardous waste is handled.

According to a May 11 memo obtained by The Associated Press, Army Maj. Gen. Anders

Andland wrote that the Army will now "take additional risk in environmental programs; terminate environmental contracts and delay all non-statutory enforcement actions" until after the new fiscal year begins in October.

Andland, head of the Army's new Installation Management Activity command, also told commanders to make additional cost-saving changes that affect areas besides environmental programs and temporary employees. Andland ordered a hiring freeze.

Officials can divert the savings from the changes to other efforts, he wrote, but was not specific about which programs the money should be diverted to.

However, he told commanders, "All of you must implement these actions now and ensure resources are best used to support the war effort."

Pentagon spokespersons had no comment.

The Pentagon spends $4 billion on military environmental programs each year, says Raymond DuBois, deputy undersecretary of defense installations and environment.

Counselor Sue-Ann Joy, left, gives academic advice to 11th grader Abbe Anspach at San Rafael High School in San Rafael, Calif., Tuesday.

School counselors find themselves stretched thin

SAN RAFAEL, Calif. (AP) — As they help students deal with college anxieties, peer pressures and problems at home, school counselors see another crisis emerging — their own.

Assigned to handle both the academic and emotional challenges of children, counselors find themselves stretched by demands that average 477 students, and questions about how to best serve all kids.

"I'm trying to do all the things I used to do, but I'm just not able to do it as well," said Sue-Ann Joy, head counselor at San Rafael High School, where district budget cuts have shrunk the advising staff to two full-time positions, or one per 500 students.

In her district, for example, that means less time for advising sophomores about college. Less help for students getting D's, less monitoring to see why some kids aren't in school.

Nationwide, the ratio of students to counselors is about 477-to-1, an average that's dropped since 1992 but is still about twice the 250-to-1 recommended by the profession.

In states such as California — which has just under 1,000 kids per counselor, the heaviest load in the country — counseling is again on the list of possible budget cuts.

Younger children get less service, too, said counselor Laurie Teldier, who covers four elementary schools in San Rafael, a bayfront city between San Francisco and California wine country.

"It's the slow burn," she said. "The kids that don't get the intervention — oftentimes you will hear about them in high school, doing something serious, a suicidal attempt or a serious aggressive act on another student."

At the elementary school level, counselors help students start thinking about careers, build communication skills and develop healthy attitudes about themselves and their peers.

By high school, counselors assist students with study habits, financial aid, college recommendations, class schedules, transitions between grades and high-stakes tests. Yet they also help with eating disorders, girlfriend trouble, deaths of friends and teen pregnancies.

The people who set school budgets know the importance of counselors, but other areas get spending priority, such as helping children with disabilities and raising achievement in the poorest schools, said Dan Fuller, lobbyist for the National School Boards Association.

Jury takes seats for Peterson trial

REDWOOD CITY, Calif. (AP) — After a last-minute switch, six men and six women were selected Thursday to form the jury that will decide whether Scott Peterson killed his pregnant wife.

Six alternates were also selected during an arduous selection process that began nine weeks ago and involved nearly 1,600 prospective jurors. Opening statements in the former fertilizer salesman's murder trial are scheduled to begin Tuesday.

Initially, the final panel included seven men and five women. But one man was excused when he produced a note from his employer and was promptly excused. The man said he would likely lose his salary during the expected six-month trial. It wasn't discussed why he waited so long to announce that conflict.

He was replaced by an alternate juror, a woman.

The morning had begun with 76 jury prospects on hand. In a rapid-fire hearing, prosecutors and defense attorneys whittled the remaining candidates down to the final group. Attorneys used peremptory challenges, which meant they didn't have to explain why they rejected a potential juror.

All the jurors have said they would be willing to sentence Peterson, 31, to death if they convict him of murdering his pregnant wife, Laci, and their fetus.

Their bodies washed onto the shore of San Francisco Bay in April 2003, not far from where Scott Peterson said he spent the morning of Dec. 24, 2002, on his fishing boat.

Enthusiasm will grow for same-gender classes

Even though the Kimberly School District has shelved its single-gender classrooms, officials shouldn't let the idea perish.

The concept of separating boys and girls for core classes in certain grades has significant merits. Magic Valley school districts could use some new enthusiasm into their classrooms by implementing similar programs.

Kimberly Middle School suspended the single-gender program last week after using it for two school years.

The program teaches sixth- and seventh-grade boys and girls in separate classrooms. Last spring, teachers saw noticeable improvement in student performance and expanded the program for the 2003-04 school year.

But Principal Jeff Jones recommended suspension of the program, citing an imbalance in the number of boys and girls in separate classes.

He also said smaller classes — not gender separation — is the real catalyst for higher test scores. With that in mind, the Kimberly School Board said it could return to the format once more teachers are hired. That may or may not happen.

The Kimberly school deserves credit for thinking progressively. But whether class size always correlates to better test scores is debatable. Perhaps devoting more time to analyze the program would help answer that question.

Kimberly's experiment inspired Lincoln Elementary School in Twin Falls to adopt the idea. Sixth-grade classes at that school consist of two single-gender classes and a third coed class. Principal Beth Olmstead said the coed class is available when parents don't want to try single-gender classes. Only two families opted out this year.) The coed class also helps balance the numbers, so that equal numbers can be in the single-gender classes.

After one year, Olmstead is pleased with the program. At Lincoln the boys and girls separate for core classes, but they reunite for computer instruction, music, PE, recess and lunch. Olmstead says the teachers have noted that the separate classes of boys and girls are both testing well — but so is the coed class. Socially, she says it's been positive, especially for the girls.

Parents seem to like it, kids like it ... and teachers are positive about it. Olmstead said. She added that the program will be used for at least three years "to see if it's even making a difference."

That's fair, considering how classes change from year to year. Odds are, other schools will be willing to give the concept a fair shot as well. The Department of Education, by loosening Title IX enforcement, is making it easier for districts to jump on the single-gender bandwagon.

Will it work in every instance? Maybe not. But the idea has worked before. And in an era when students struggle to keep their attention focused in the classroom, the program offers refreshing possibilities.

Our view: One district's suspension of single-gender classes doesn't diminish the idea's merits. What do you think? We welcome viewpoints from our readers on this and other issues.

Cosby knows what he's saying

Bill Cosby is a lot of things — comedian, actor, educator and philosopher.

A few days ago at ceremonies in Washington marking the 50th anniversary of the Supreme Court decision known as Brown v. Board of Education, which ended mandated segregated schools in the United States, Cosby said things about the state of young black America that not many could get away with.

Cosby can because he has put his money where his mouth is, donating millions to black colleges.

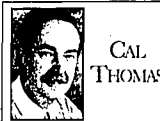

Reading Cosby's remarks causes one's jaw to drop. In an age when public figures often put their spoken or written words through the political correctness filter, Cosby was bluntly frank, exhorting black parents for failing to properly rear their children and saying they were the cause of high school dropout rates, crime and other social ills.

Here are a few sound bites as transcribed by Washington Post reporter Tamill Harris:

• "I am talking about these people who cry when their son is standing there in an orange suit. Where were you when he was 2? Where were you when he was 12? Where were you when he was 18 and he got some you didn't know that he had a pistol? And where is the father?"

• "... we cannot blame white people ..."

• "People putting their clothes on backward. Isn't that a sign of something going wrong? ... People with their hats on backward, pants down around the crack, isn't that a sign of something, or are you waiting for Jesus to pull his pants up? Isn't that a sign of something when she has her dress all the way up to the crack and get all type of needles (piercing) going through her body? What part of Africa did this come from? We are not Africans. Those people are not Africans; they don't know a thing about Africa."

• "With names like Shantiqua, Taliqua and Mohammed and all of that crap, and all of them are in jail. Brown versus the Board of Education is no longer the white person's problem. We have got to take the neighborhood back ... They are standing on the corner and they can't speak English."

Cosby lamented that too many black parents "are not parenting. They are buying things for their kids — $500 sneakers for what? And won't spend $200 for I looked on Phonics."

Seventy percent of black babies are born to unmarried parents. There's the answer to Cosby's question about where are the parents.

At least one is not there physically (usually the father) and the other is trying to make enough money just to survive.

The mother's ability to keep wait-out her children is limited. This is mostly the legacy of the failed welfare state. Until welfare reform, children were paid when they had babies out of wedlock.

It was a subsidy not unlike the incentives given to illegal immigrants to break our laws and get a check. If you subsidize what you claim not to want, you get more of it.

The other problem has been the "blame white" mentality of so-called "black leadership," many of whom have done well financially, thanks to their unbroken loyalty to the liberal wing of the Democratic Party, but who seem less interested in poor blacks getting theirs.

As Mark Gurek has written for the National Center for Public Policy Research, "Ever since Republicans first passed civil rights legislation in 1966, opponents of more rights and freedom and equal status for blacks have lost every battle. They have, however, convinced blacks that conservatives seek to oppress us."

That's another lie. The attention we give to hating white conservatives, who actually seek to uphold moral virtues and fight for our independence from government, keeps us from paying attention to our own problems.

School choice, which many liberal Democrats oppose with every fiber of their hypocritical beings, would help turn things around for black children.

Instead of a peer pressure to conform to sex, body piercing, ridiculous clothes, academic failure and language few outside their friends can understand, positive peer pressure in private schools would give them the tools they need to succeed on their own and the pride and satisfaction that go with it.

But of "The Cosby Show" on the cable TV channel Nick at Night remind us what all functional families should look like.

Viewers see a man and a woman who love each other and their kids. No government program can create such a family.

But plenty of government programs and failed black "leadership" have contributed to the ones that Bill Cosby rightly and powerfully laments.

Appreciate wildlife now, before it's shot

A few years ago, I used to feed little ground squirrels down near the parking lot at Shoshone Falls. Suddenly, they all disappeared.

A year ago, my friend and I loved to watch porcupines climbing around on the rocks near Shoshone Falls. The man with the gun said he shot 17 of them for parks and recreation. I haven't seen a live one since.

This year, my friend and I kept trying to figure out what furry animal we saw swimming in Deerkes every night.

Not to worry, it was a beaver. But the man who told us that Fish and Game couldn't be bothered moving them, so they killed them.

Years ago, our hamster got out in my kindergarten room. One of my little boys said, "I thought I taught him, teacher?" I thought I taught him kindness, but alas, he must have grown up and gone to work for parks and recreation.

Thank goodness they don't let us do it. We need to keep them alive so someone else can shoot them.

Many students favor changes in dress code

Upon reading the article about the Twin Falls High School dress code on Thursday, May 20, I was disappointed in the portrayal of TFIHS students.

Twin Falls High School is an extremely diverse school, with many contrasting opinions. Yet we feel that only one of these opinions was voiced.

There are many students who are in the support of the proposed dress code, and we feel that your article failed to express this side of the issue.

Contrary to the article's views, the dress code issue isn't that enormous of a problem. From our observations, around 80 percent of the student body is already within the dress code guidelines.

We feel your article made it seem as if the majority of the student's dress is inappropriate. For most adults, The Times-News is the only glimpse of teens in the community. Your words influence the entire community's perceptions of teens today. It's articles like this that satisfy the teenage stereotype.

In future articles, we ask that you would get a wider range of student views to represent the whole school instead of a minute portion.

Don't expect courtesies, kindness in times of war

War or baby-sitting, what will it be?

Here we have pictures of prison abuse. Well, are we at war or baby-sitting? When they show Iraqi people dragging bodies around, what does that tell the American people? Do you think they are treating American prisoners good? No way.

Should we just slap the Iraqi people on the hands and send them some food stamps or welfare?

My answer: no way. Do you think they were nice to the young lady (Jessica Lynch) that they beat and raped? No way.

Do you think any American prisoners of the Vietnam War were treated well?

No way. Just ask Sen. John McCain how it was. Then our great president apologizes for the prison abuse.

Well, it is time to pull out and come home.

We should not have gone over there any way.

Cherish what you have in Twin Falls downtown

Twin Falls, your downtown area is a real treat and a great place to explore!

Main Street is lined with nice and unusual shops, good restaurants and well-kept historic buildings.

It is clean, parking is not a problem and walking along the streets is a real pleasure.

I was born in Twin Falls and have been here for many years. A lot of thought has been shown in growth and maintenance.

As president of a group in my city which helps to improve and maintain historic homes and businesses, I am very impressed with downtown and

Mistakes don't equate to being a felon

When I was 18, I had sex with my 17-year-old girlfriend. I was charged with rape, not "statutory rape," because it does not exist in Idaho.

no more jail time over my head; no more judges, prosecutors, no more ... you name it I will finally be able to put this all behind me and, as every person who ends up wrapped up in the Twin Falls judicial system says, "When this is over, I'm outta here." I am dead serious, too! I'm leaving this place and never looking back.

There's a reason why this country jail is constantly overcrowded, and it doesn't have anything to do with protection of society.

You would not believe how many people I have seen come into this jail for DUI, failure to pay, failure to appear, and my personal favorite, for having consensual sex with their 16- or 17-year-old girlfriends (s.k. including myself, in the past five months).

Now don't get me wrong, I know that location has nothing to do with "who" someone chooses to be.

I've spent 26 months in jail or prison. I was on probation for two years and forced to attend child molester treatment classes.

I've been called a "predator" or "monster," a "rapist" and one has even called me an "animal."

But in just a few short months, this nightmare that has haunted me for the past four years will come to an end. I still don't believe it, but it's true: I will finally be able to move on with my life.

OPINION

Liberal radio: Bad jokes and worse taste

The United States "is on the slippery slope to theatrical fascism." The Catholic Church has been secretly encouraging oral sex for years.

Defense Secretary Donald Rumsfeld "ought to be" "tortured." President Bush should be taken out and shot.

Those are a few nutso nuggets from the hosts of Air America Radio, which calls itself the new liberal voice. With the Iraq torture scandal everywhere, I tuned in, expecting to hear sober policy analysis mixed with glee over President Bush's political pickle.

Instead, I got 10 hours of rancid venom directed at the president, Rumsfeld, Rush Limbaugh, the Catholic Church and anyone else the hosts felt like slamming. If you're a card-carrying lib who likes crude sex jokes and a cartoonish echo chamber, Air America is for you.

"Take one host linking the tale of pulling out the troops with the claim that "that's what the Catholic Church says about premarital sex." Ha, ha.

The network aims to give Dems a media organization to counter Limbaugh and others on the right who dominate talk radio. (What, National Public Radio and The New York Times aren't enough?)

The signing of comedian and best-selling author Al Franken gave Air America a liberal drawing card. But if his three-hour show on Monday was typical, he could sink the ship instead of saving it.

Two attempts at humor were offensive. In his "oy show," set to Israeli music, a sidekick reads news reports — in this case, the murder of the Russian-backed president of Chechnya. Franken's role is to pipe up with a lighthearted "oy, oy, oy." Yep, nothing tickles the ribs like assassination.

Franko also imitated a priest giving communion, saying "Body of Christ" when an imagined pedophile priest was in line but "not for you" when pro-choice politicians came up.

The church was a daylong obsession, as was Limbaugh. He is an "awful man," "a pig" and "a Nazi."

Color me confused. If Franken & Co. hate the pill-popping Limbaugh so much, why imitate his tarpit tone? Sounds like Limbaugh has simply driven them nuts.

Missing was the tension that comes from honest debate. Only Franken had guests voicing even slight distance from the party line, which is that John Kerry is perfect except he should attack Bush more.

The queen of venom, Randi Rhodes, followed Franken in the host slot.

Her imitation of a cracker military type telling a soldier to "insert this fluorescent light bulb into that man's buttocks" was revolting.

She compared U.S. prisons in Iraq to the "Nazis gulag," and said, "The day I say thank you to Rumsfeld is the same day I'll say thank you to the 12 people who raped me."

Rock bottom came when she compared Bush and his family to the Corleones in the "Godfather" saga. "Like Fredo, somebody ought to take him out fishing and phuh," she said, imitating the sound of gunfire.

During a day of torture by radio, I heard ads for Hewlett-Packard, Greyhound and, especially, General Motors. I asked GM why it appeared in such shows.

Ryndee Carney, GM's manager of marketing communications, said the ads were wrongly picked up from an earlier deal with WLBB.

She said the station was ordered to "cease and desist" Tuesday, and added: "GM will not advertise on any Air America affiliates."

What's Behind The Black Wall On The Corner Of Pole Line and Blue Lakes?

BY MILES CARSON

Twin Falls, ID — Everyone's asking but no one has had the answer until now... just what is going on behind the black wall on Blue Lakes Blvd in Twin Falls? I went in search of the story and was floored by what I discovered.

"People are saving a ton of money," revealed Barry Langdon, General Sales Manager of Chevrolet Cadillac of Twin Falls. "I can promise you, you've never seen anything like this before in your life."

In the last several months, the Lithia new car and truck stores in Idaho have set a blistering pace in new vehicle sales. "We've become known as the place to go to for the right selection and an upfront great deal with our Promo Prices," said Barry Langdon. "Add that to the historic rebates and finance offers coming from the manufacturers and it's just set our new vehicle sales on fire."

And that's what's caused the problem. "Too many used vehicles," stated Barry. "We've been taking in trades like crazy and we've been focused on new vehicles sales. The truth is we've got a glut of used vehicles on our lots that we simply have to get rid of them one way or another."

"We are just going to keep cutting prices until the vehicles sell."

Often times, when a car dealer is overloaded with used cars they take them to the nearest used car auction and dump them. In many cases accepting offers that are far less than the car is actually worth. "All of our managers got together to come up with a solution. Frankly we're tired of the auctions getting bargains and then turning around and marking up the same vehicle to be sold to the public," Barry explained. "We decided that if we were going to have to just sell these cars out we might as well give the people in Twin Falls the first chance at the deal. It makes a lot more sense for us to sell a deeply discounted car to one of our neighbors and get a happy customer." Makes sense but why the mystery? Why black out the lot?

"We are just going to keep cutting prices until the vehicles sell."

"All of our vehicles are posted with an incredibly low price on each and every one, but that's just the beginning of the savings," said Barry. "Our mission is to sell every one of these cars by the close of business on Sunday, so we're going to be slashing prices on the spot throughout the sale. We needed to blackout the prices from drive-by traffic because there's a good chance that the posted price is going to be reduced."

In reviewing the inventory included in the sale it's tough to see how the prices could possibly get any better. "Basically we're dealing in," said Barry. "We're just going to keep cutting the price until the vehicle sells."

I also learned that Lithia's Chevrolet Cadillac of Twin Falls will be in-line with Lithia's vast network of lenders to get buyers through the financing process quickly and with a plan that is the most affordable. "We've got a lot of options and can help people get financed for a car even if they've been turned down some where else," said Barry. "of course financing is always on approval from the lender. Our advantage is we have so many more resources to go to for our customers."

Mystery solved. If you're looking for a bargain on a used vehicle, look behind the black wall, you'll be glad you did.

Dentist will host class on diabetes

TWIN FALLS — Diabetes affects millions of Americans each year.

"The disease of the pancreas can cause problems with eyes, nerves, kidneys and the heart. But it can also wreak havoc with a person's oral health."

"One of our main concerns is that diabetes — especially poorly controlled diabetes — tend to have a higher sugar level in their saliva, which makes them more prone to dental care issues," said local dentist John Roberts said in a news release from Magic Valley Regional Medical Center.

Because diabetes reduces the body's resistance to infection, the gums are among the tissues likely to be affected.

"Periodontal diseases are infections of the gum and bone that hold your teeth in place," Roberts said.

"If you have trouble fighting an infection, you're going to have trouble fighting gum disease as well."

Roberts will provide more information about diabetic oral health at a free community education session from noon to 2 p.m. June 7 at the hospital's downtown campus basement conference room at 660 Shoshone St. Registration is required. To sign up, call 737-2166.

T.F. event will honor soldiers back from Iraq

TWIN FALLS — The Western Days Commemorative Dinner will start at 6 p.m. at the Snake River Canyon rim near the Twin Falls Area Chamber of Commerce visitors center.

Any soldiers that are home from Iraq and any other military personnel are invited to come in uniform and join the celebration.

Community dedicates Perrine statue, plaza

TWIN FALLS — The bronze statue of Twin Falls pioneer I.B. Perrine will be installed and dedicated at its permanent home Saturday.

Events surrounding the dedication of the Centennial Plaza will start at about 6 p.m. at the Snake River Canyon rim near the Twin Falls Area Chamber of Commerce visitors center.

Event organizer and commission member Pat Harder said the dedication will take place after the chambers' "Extreme Twin Falls" dinner event which takes place all day across Blue Lakes Boulevard at the Canyon Park east parking lot.

She expects people to start gathering outdoors around the visitors center between 6 and 7 p.m. for the "Extreme Twin Falls" dinner catered by Johnny Carino's and the Outback Steakhouse. Cost of the dinner will be $10 per person.

Afterward, Burt Hulsh will sing the national anthem, the Perrine statue will be unveiled, and brief remarks will be given by various Perrine family members, Twin Falls Mayor Glenda Thompson, Twin Falls Centennial Commission members and sponsors.

Support troops scroll will be sent overseas

TWIN FALLS — The "Support Our Troops Overseas" memory scroll will be available at the Twin Falls Cemetery entrance for people to sign today through Monday.

The Mountain Home Air Force Base will send the scroll to troops overseas.

The Twin Falls Cemetery and Magic Valley veterans and auxiliary will host a memorial dedication service at 1:30 p.m. Monday at the Veterans War Memorial in the Garden of Honor and Valor at the cemetery on the corner of Kimberly Road and Eastland Drive.

PLACES TO PLAY

Walking through what used to be a Civilian Conservation Corps camp site, Sawtooth National Forest public affairs officer Ed Waldapfel, left, and Zeke Zimmerman, outdoor recreation planner for the Minidoka Ranger District, show the rehabilitation project at the Porcupine Springs campgrounds in the South Hills. Soon, all-new camping sites will replace the old ones.

Forest Service improves South Hills campgrounds

By Michelle Dunlop Times-News writer

HANSEN — On a sunny morning a few days before Memorial Day, the South Hills teases its visitors with sensory pleasures not to be savored succinctly until the holiday weekend.

The scent of lodgepole pine and sagebrush fills the air. Recent rains have calmed dusty roads as ground squirrels chance their luck and dart in front of passing vehicles. Golden buttercups beg to be picked amid patches of snow.

Campers this holiday weekend will find not only the splendors of the South Hills, but also several changes to some of their favorite camping spots in the Porcupine Springs and Rock Creek recreation area. Renovations campers can experience this season include limitations on all-terrain vehicle use near the campgrounds, an enhanced water system and an additional trailhead for off-road vehicle access.

Campers who have not recently visited the South Hills will find other improvements — such as the new campground facilities in Loops A, B and C of Porcupine Springs campgrounds — that have been in place for a few years.

The Forest Service designed a plan of action as a result of an environmental study in the Porcupine Springs campgrounds in 1995. However, money to make all of the changes wasn't available at the time.

Last fall, the Forest Service

What's open in the forest

A large number of recreation facilities will be open and available for visitors to the Sawtooth National Forest this Memorial Day weekend:

South Hills

• Roads: All major roads south of Twin Falls and Burley are open. The road from Rock Creek to Shoshone Basin is open. Howell Canyon is closed just above the Pomerelle Ski Area. The Bostetter area is only partially open. Road crews have graded the roads in the Sublett and Black Pine divisions and a portion of the Raft River Division.

• Water: Forest visitors are advised to bring their own drinking water, as campground water systems will not be operational for this weekend.

Open campgrounds:

Schlipper, Birch Glen, Harrington Fork, Third Fork, Steer Basin, Lower and Upper Penstemok, Porcupine Springs and Bear Gulch, Mill Flat, Sublett, Clear Creek and Bennett Springs.

Closed campgrounds:

Pettit, Thompson Flat, Twin Lakes, Lake Cleveland, Independence Lakes, Bostetter and Father & Sons.

Fairfield Ranger District

• Roads: The Couch Summit, Rock Summit and Wells Summit roads are open. The Salt Bowns Road (#4010) and Dollardine Summit remain closed by snow.

The snow level on the Fairfield District is at the 8,000 to 10,000-foot level, with drifts above 6,000 feet in northern exposures.

Campgrounds:

All campgrounds will be open.

Overnight camping fees are $10 a night for single sites in Baumgarter Campground and $20 for double sites. Bowns and Canyon campgrounds are $4 a night.

Ketchum Ranger District

• Roads: Most trails and roads are open, including the road over Trail Creek. However, expect patches of snow on the higher, northern exposures. District visitors are asked to avoid roads and trails that are wet and muddy until the running surface has dried out. The snow level is at about the 9,000-foot level.

• Open campgrounds: District campgrounds open for the holiday weekend include Boundary, Sawmill, Federal Gulch and Copper Creek. Water is available only at Boundary Campground.

• Fees: Fees for overnight camping at Boundary Campground are $10 a night for a single unit and $20 a night for a double unit.

Sawtooth National Recreation Area

• Roads and trails: Most SNRA roads and trails are open. It is suggested that visitors check with the SNRA headquarters visitor center or the SNRA District office regarding road-and-trail closures.

The Fisher Creek Loop Trail is still closed due to snow. Hell Roaring Lake Trail is snow-free, but there are some trees down. The North Fork of the Big Wood trail, in the Big Wood Creek, East Fork of the North Fork, West Fork of the North Fork and the main North Fork, all provide nice three- to four-mile, one-way hikes.

Boundary Creek Trail is melted out to the ridge, which is a steep hike, but offers one of the nicest views of the Sawtooth Mountains. The lower parts of most of the trails are snow-free, with the snow line depending on aspect and tree cover.

• Campgrounds: A wide variety of recreation facilities will be available. Services and fees are in effect at the Murdock, Gaitbou, North Fork and Wood River area. Campgrounds along Highway 21 offering services, and requiring fees, include Stanley Lake Inlet and Stanley Lake. Other campgrounds that are open, but without services and fees, include Iron Creek, Elk Creek, Sheep Trail, Trip Creek and Grandjean.

All of the facilities except Sockeye and Heyburn at Redfish Lake are open with services and fees in effect. Sunny Gopher Campground is closed to ongoing, major reconstruction work. Smokee Bear (Alturas Lake) and Pettit Lake are open, but without services and no fees.

Open campgrounds along the Salmon River corridor, downriver from Stanley, include Basin Creek, Upper O'Brien, Whiskey/Slate Creek, Helman Creek and Marmion Bend. No fees currently are being charged at these facilities; no services are provided.

Due to changing conditions, the Forest Service suggests people who plan to visit the Sawtooth National Forest contact their local Forest Service offices for updates.

For further information, call Ed Waldapfel, public affairs officer for the Sawtooth National Forest, at 737-3200.

Quitting for a day

Local resources help people stop smoking for good

The Times-News

TWIN FALLS — The Idaho Department of Health and Welfare and Project Filter are asking smokers to not light up for a day.

World No Tobacco Day will take place on Monday — Memorial Day — and the two organizations are asking smokers to not only remember the war heroes — but to be a hero to their own families as well by making a commitment to live a longer life.

World No Tobacco Day was created in 1988 by the World Health Organization, according to an Idaho Department of Health and Welfare news release.

"Tobacco continues to kill more people than AIDS, automobile accidents, suicide, homicide, fire, alcohol and drug abuse combined," Carver said in the news release.

There are a variety of supports available for people who wish to quit. Project Filter provides free nicotine replacement therapy for good. South Central District Health offers tobacco cessation classes. Smokers also can find help online by visiting www.idahonoquit.net. QuitNet is the world's largest online smoking cessation program, according to the news release.

The Web site includes:

- Information on withdrawal management.
- Prescription medication information to help with nicotine withdrawal.
- A safe chat room forum with others kicking the habit.
- Expert counselors to provide support with the quitting process.
- Information on how much time is added to a person's life and how many cigarettes they've saved by giving up tobacco.

Carver said an average of 800 Idahoans log on to the site each month. Since its inception in the fall of 2002, more than 2,200 Idahoans have actually registered with QuitNet and taken advantage of its free services.

"QuitNet is available 24 hours a day and is free wherever you live," Carver said. "It is available when those moments of weakness hit and a person needs a little extra help in the struggle to stave off smoking."

For more information on help to quit smoking, call South Central District Health at 734-5900.

Just the facts

• Tobacco is the second leading cause of death in the world, with one in three people currently addicted to tobacco.

• Nine percent of the world population will die because of cigarettes in the next few decades, according to the J.R. Simplot Co. estimate of 46.2 million adult smokers, consuming a total of 483 billion cigarettes per year.

• In Idaho, 23 percent of people age 18 and over currently smoke cigarettes.

• 1,500 Idahoans die annually due to smoking.

Heyburn drops out of animal control agreement

By Chip Thompson Times-News writer

HEYBURN — The way animal control is handled in Minidoka County might be about to change.

Heyburn City Council members voted Wednesday to withdraw from the joint animal control agreement they entered into with the county and its cities in August 1995.

"I'm not sure with one of the major shareholders out that it can hold together," Minidoka County Commissioner Dan Stuppiunas said Thursday.

The Animal Control Board is scheduled to meet at 7:30 p.m. Wednesday at Rupert City Hall to discuss options for keeping the remaining joint-agreement members together.

The remaining entities — which include the county, Rupert, Minidoka, Acquia and Paul — must decide whether they can continue to provide enough resources to provide animal control officers, two part-time shelter workers and the shelter in Paul.

Rupert and Heyburn have been paying the majority of costs under the agreement. The county has paid about half as much as each city, Stapelman said.

The loss of Heyburn's $33,000 annual share means the other entities would have to make up the difference in order to keep the animal control officers and part-time shelter workers in place.

It's a prospect that appears unlikely.

"We just do not have any extra money," said Rupert City Clerk Linda Price, noting that this is the second consecutive year where city employees are not expected to get pay raises.

Heyburn's City Council sent an April 26 letter to the various parties in the joint agreement giving 30 days notice that the city wished to pull out of the pact.

The letter set in motion negotiations and discussions amongst Animal Control Board members and other entities of how to keep the agreement intact.

But Heyburn Mayor George Anderson, citing economic realities facing his city following the closure of the J.R. Simplot Co. processing plant, said that the only option would be to pull out of the agreement or cut Heyburn's share of costs by more than half.

While Heyburn officials have raised the issue of what they perceive as the misuse of the officers by the Minidoka County Sheriff's Department, City Superintendent Scott Spvek insists that Wednesday's decision is purely about economics.

"I really don't have anything to do with how it was run," he

Animal Control Officer Mike Wolff says he may have to move on and look for work elsewhere if Minidoka County's joint animal control agreement collapses.

Shareholders sue IDACORP over power-trading in crisis

BOISE (AP) — A Philadelphia law firm has filed a class-action suit against the holding company of Idaho's largest utility, claiming it misled investors about the financial condition during the waning days of the energy crisis and left investors taking huge losses.

The suit by Schiffrin & Barrow LLP claims that IDACORP and its top officers failed to accurately portray at key moments during the winter and spring of 2002 the financial situation of its energy trading subsidiary.

"This material misstatements and omissions had the cause and effect of creating in the market and unrealistically positive assessment of IDACORP and its business, prospects and operations, thus causing the company's stock to be overvalued and artificially inflated," according to the suit. IDACORP spokesman Russ Jones had no comment on Thursday.

"We know that we've been lied," Jones said. "We haven't seen the filings yet. It's just too early."

The suit, filed in U.S. District Court in Boise on Wednesday, asks for unspecified damages for all shareholders who purchased IDACORP stock from Feb. 1, 2002, through June 4, 2002. For two years before that, the company's power trading subsidiary had made huge returns, catapulting IDACORP to record profits in 2000 and near record profits in 2001 and a one-time appearance on the Fortune 500 list in 2001.

Once the energy bubble burst in 2002, IDACORP moved fairly quickly to get out of the trading business, writing off tens of millions of dollars in writedowns.

The suit claims the company, which owns Idaho Power Co., failed to advise investors at the appropriate time about the negative impact the reduction in price volatility would have on returns, that transactions were becoming shorter term and that the utility might not recover from the lingering effects of drought.

One of the investors, Morgan Powell, who was not identified further, signed an affidavit saying he bought 200 shares of IDACORP stock on March 28, 2002, for $40.52 a share and was forced to sell on June 6, 2002, at just over $26 after the company's announcement about the impact of bursting energy bubble and the drought.

Federal and state regulators found some irregularities in the company's power trading operations and imposed some multimillion-dollar sanctions, but none of the problems came even close to those at Enron and other companies.

Governor may call special session

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — Gov. Olene Walker said Thursday she may call a special legislative session dealing with an abortion law gone bad and two other bills she vetoed but hopes to fix.

Walker said health care executives were not forceful enough warning of problems with the law that prohibits Utah hospitals from performing early abortions on badly deformed fetuses that have little or no chance of surviving birth.

The law left at least one Utah woman unable to use her regular doctor and hospital, delaying a time-sensitive procedure and sending her on a detour to an unfamiliar woman's clinic.

Walker said she checked with health administrators before signing the bill in March "and I felt they were OK with it." But Utah doctors warned at the Capitol that the bill would compound tragic pregnancies.

"I'm very concerned about it," Walker said Thursday at her monthly televised news conference at KUED studios at the University of Utah.

News anchor and Sen. Curtis Bramble, R-Orem, says he's open to amending the law, and Walker said the issue could land on legislators' desks if she calls a special session to deal with the package of items. She said the legislative session hangs on the outcome of negotiations with legislators.

Walker said problems with the abortion law have just become apparent. The issue received publicity a week ago when a legislative session was called to deal with the law.

Walker said she checked with health administrators before signing the bill in March "and I felt they were OK with it." But

Army shows off alternative energy options

ANCHORAGE, Alaska (AP) — Hybrid tankers that can power an entire airfield. Electric chariots that can zip soldiers to their destinations. Fuel cell-powered all-terrain vehicles that can roll along in near silence.

These are among alternative-energy vehicles being developed by the Army, which showed off a dozen prototypes Thursday at Elmendorf Air Force Base.

The Army envisions the vehicles greatly reducing its fuel consumption on the battlefield and at urban posts in the near future with technology other military branches are watching closely. In fact, the Air Force has assigned a representative to the Army's Detroit-based National Automotive Center, which is developing the vehicles through partnerships with manufacturers.

"Our intention is to find common-use items that work not only commercially but with the military," said Army spokesman Eric Rowland.

The open house at an Elmendorf hangar was the show-and-tell portion of a four-day symposium in Anchorage co-hosted by the Army to explore clean energy sources for and from Alaska.

Military and industry engineers and others led visitors around vehicles ready for use and under development. Examples ranged from relatively humble Segway Human Transporters to a three-wheel, amphibious Charriot to a heavy-duty hybrid truck and two versions of a surveillance carrier.

All represent the virtues of energy-saving technology that's so cheaply made that the Army burns 750,000 gallons of fuel a day in Iraq alone, said NAC Director Dennis Wend.

"We can take these technologies and reduce our fuel on the battlefield," he said. "At the same time, we can put these technologies on our bases and be a good neighbor to our industrial partners by sharing information."

Really, however, it's three to five years away for the more advanced equipment, according to Wend. The automotive research center, created a decade ago, has intensified its alternative energy development only in the last few years.

Besides corporate money, the center receives $100 million in federal research and development funds. But a recent $60 million infusion for a two-year pilot program will enable it to develop hybrid battlefield trucks.

"If that works out successfully, we could be looking at another billion dollars to put them into production, to make a few thousand vehicles for the Army's battlefields," Wend said.

Among the more impressive items on display was the SmartTruck II, a technologically enhanced armored truck. The modified Chevrolet Silverado is loaded with gear that would make James Bond proud — luxury seats, a missile launcher, electric generator and far-range surveillance equipment, including night-vision capabilities.

All that would make the hybrid-electric ideal for vulnerable urban settings such as Baghdad, Iraq, according to its developers, which include Integrated Concepts & Research Corp., a subsidiary of the Army's National Regional Corporation Koning Inc.

Then there's the tanklike hybrid-electric diesel truck developed with Oshkosh, Wis.-based Oshkosh Truck Corp., which builds the Army's large off-road vehicles as well as civilian fire and refuse trucks. Painted in camouflage tones, the Oshkosh HEMTT consumes less fuel and puts out reduced emissions compared with its traditionally fueled counterparts.

The vehicle also can produce 350 kilowatts of electricity while its 505 horsepower engine idles. The company tested the vehicle's onboard generator at the Whittman Airfield in Oshkosh, providing lighting for the control tower and a 14,000-foot runway for two hours. It was a hit — signifying numerous applications for the military and civilians alike, said company engineer Chris Yakes.

"There's the fuel economy and the power production capabilities," Yakes said. "It can be used for anything from natural disasters to homeland security."

Sgt. Michael Desmond takes his first ride on a Segway HT, Thursday on Elmendorf Air Force Base, Alaska. Desmond visited the Alaska Clean Energy Symposium, which displayed advanced hybrid, diesel and fuel-cell vehicles for military applications.

Police arrest woman in C-section case in Ohio

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — Melissa Ann Rowland, the woman once charged in Utah with murder for balking at getting a C-section, has been arrested in Ohio and charged with misdemeanor tampering.

Rowland, 28, was arrested at the Chillicothe Municipal Courthouse on Friday, and posted bond from the Ross County Jail on Monday, the Deseret Morning News reported Thursday. Rowland was barred from the courthouse after "yelling and harassing the clerks" Friday afternoon, according to Chillicothe police reports. She left but returned a short time later and was arrested, police reports said.

Rowland was barred from a Chillicothe hotel Tuesday after "causing problems" and failing to pay her bill, the reports said. On Wednesday, police told her to leave a convenience store parking lot she had been loitering in all day because she was "starting to tear stitches from his wrists, which he cut two nights earlier in a Wal-Mart parking lot, police reports said."

During the convenience store incident, he allegedly kicked out a window of a squad car before being restrained.

During this incident, Rowland told police that Brown is her boyfriend and that he was threatening suicide, according to the reports.

Brown's next court appearance is a pretrial conference Friday. A jury trial has been set for June 17.

Salt Lake County prosecutors originally charged Rowland, who admitted using drugs while conduct, the News said. These charges stem from an altercation with police in front of a convenience store early Friday after officers found him trying to tear stitches from his wrists, which he cut two nights earlier in a Wal-Mart parking lot, police reports said.

Brown's next court appearance is a pretrial conference Friday. A jury trial has been set for June 17.

Salt Lake County prosecutors originally charged Rowland, who admitted using drugs while pregnant, with first-degree felony murder after she purportedly refused a C-section until her twins were delivered in January and one was stillborn. The other twin has been adopted.

Rowland's case gained national attention and spurred several activist groups to protest on her behalf.

As part of a plea agreement, Rowland pleaded guilty in April to two third-degree felony counts of child endangerment. She was ordered to undergo a drug treatment program.

Third District Judge Dennis Hughes sentenced her to two terms of up to five years in prison, but suspended the sentence.

She was placed on "good behavior probation" for 18 months.

blocked off a large meadow at the lower end of the Porcupine Springs campgrounds with large rocks found in the area. Although the meadow has greened up some with spring, it still shows tell-tale signs of overuse, with wide, muddy blotches scattered throughout.

The Forest Service has blocked off about one square mile of land from ATV camp travel, including a small stretch of land across the road from the meadow near the lower Porcupine Springs campground, said Ed Waldapfel, public relations officer for the Southwestern Forests. The plan will still be able to walk or ride horses through the meadow.

"The meadow is very tender and sensitive," he said. ATV use in it "totally destroys the vegetation."

The meadow also contains remnants of a Civilian Conservation Corps site that the Forest Service wants to preserve, said Zeke Zimmerman, outdoor recreation planner for the Minidoka Range District. The Southwestern Forests will provide visitors with historical information about the site.

The Forest Service also now provides a new trailhead for ATV users at the north end of the campground.

While working off the meadow, the Forest Service also hopes to protect the campgrounds' water source, Waldapfel said. A unique spring rests at the back of the meadow. That spring will provide water for all campgrounds within the area.

Providing drinking water is a real challenge, Waldapfel said. "Providing clean drinking water is a real challenge."

A solar panel generates the electricity needed to pump water to the sites. The entire water line should be functional by early July. Water services for the upcoming holiday weekend will not be available.

The Forest Service also will remove the meadow's horse loading ramp provided for horse users with handicaps — and relocate it closer to the coral area of the Loop C section of

Campground fees

As a result of the improvements in the Porcupine Springs campgrounds, the Forest Service will charge a fee for staying in the Loop A, B and C campgrounds. Campers can reserve an entire loop for $75 a night. Reservations are on a first-come, first-served basis.

If sites in Loops A, B and C are not reserved, an ATV camp there will cost of $8 a night, for a single space or $12 a night for a double.

Starting Memorial Day weekend, the Memorial Day weekend will charge a $5 fee to stay in one of the Diamondfield Jacks eight camp sites.

the Porcupine campgrounds. The Forest Service, both Waldapfel and Zimmerman said, is committed to making the recreation area as "barrier-free" as possible.

Restrooms in the Loops A, B and C have seen a vast improvement over the restrooms still in mind. Those camping in the Loops A, B and C will find these sites handy to accommodate a greater number of people.

Waldapfel deems the new restrooms as "SST," or sweet-smelling toilets. The facilities also have more of a rustic, outdoorsy look than their fiberglass-roofed counterparts.

said, "The big issue this year is the budget."

Animal Control Officer Mike Wolf said he believed the collapse of the joint agreement would cost the cities more and reduce the level of service to the public.

"I hate to see it happen on their behalf," Wolf said. "If the Animal Control Police Department officers are expected take over animal control duties in the city under the supervision of Spevak."

There will be no additional hires and the city owns a truck that can have a cage installed in it so costs should be minimal, Spevak said.

Wolf said he sees flaws in Heyburn's plan. "If an officer gets a dog call they'll have to go to the station to pick up the truck, and then if they get another call while they're on-scene their patrol car is back at the station," Wolf said.

He also suggested that it might be difficult for the governing regulations governing sanitation.

"If it doesn't work we'll look at other options," Spevak said. "We have to at least try this for the people of Heyburn."

Police search for missing student

Investigators talk to sex offenders and search their homes

CORVALLIS, Ore. (AP) — Police in Corvallis have interviewed a dozen persons of interest in the disappearance of a 19-year-old Brigham Young University student.

But none can so far be considered suspects in the case, Corvallis police department Lt. Ron Noble said at a Thursday press conference.

Authorities have fielded over 450 tips from around the country, Noble said, and are continuing to interview sex offenders in two Oregon counties, but still have no solid leads.

Brooke Wilberger vanished earlier this week from an apartment complex where her sister lives, leaving behind a pair of flip-flops in a parking lot.

Investigators received permission to search the homes of some sex offenders. Noble said the searches were not extensive — just a quick look into nooks, crannies, closets and crawl spaces — and nothing was found.

Hundreds of volunteers are helping in the search, fanning out as far as four miles in every direction from the apartment complex where Wilberger was seen. Wilberger's parents and sister visited some of the searchers Thursday to thank them for looking from dawn to dusk, in the rain, often through dense underbrush, or swampy areas.

"We just love and appreciate everything everyone has been doing," said Cammy Wilberger, Brooke's mother. "We can't even understand the outpouring of love we've been given. We think there must be someone that saw something because it was in the middle of the day in broad daylight."

Police have not said how long the search will continue, but Greg Wilberger, Brooke's father, said volunteers told him that, "they'll be able to search until they can't find any more," he said that the missing woman is devout and studious. Her longtime boyfriend is in Venezuela on a Mormon mission, the family said.

Brooke Wilberger is 5 feet 4 inches tall and weighs about 110 pounds, and has a scar on her right arm from her elbow to her wrist. She has shoulder-length blond hair and blue eyes, and was last seen wearing a gray Brigham Young University sweat shirt, jeans, small hoop earrings and a ring with the initials "CTR" engraved on it, a common Mormon phrase that stands for "choose the right."

Corvallis police spokesman Capt. Robert Deutsch said Wilberger's purse, keys and other personal items had been left in her sister's Corvallis apartment and the missing woman's car was still in the parking lot.

Wilberger was cleaning the bulb covers of the light lamps that line the complex's parking lot Monday morning when her sister left for a few minutes, Deutsch said.

Wilberger graduated last year from Elmore High School near Eugene, where she played soccer and track. Wilberger has three sisters and two brothers. She has been studying speech pathology at Brigham Young.

DOE warns of layoffs if Yucca budget is cut

LAS VEGAS (AP) — The opening of a nuclear waste dump would be delayed and hundreds of workers would be laid off if Congress cuts deeply into the Yucca Mountain project budget, Energy Secretary Spencer Abraham has warned.

"The department 'would be unable to initiate repository operations in 2010,' Abraham said in a letter made public Wednesday.

"This would deprive the nation of a nuclear waste repository for an indefinite period of time," he said.

"The Energy Department has targeted 2010 for opening the repository 90 miles northwest of Las Vegas.

"Congress voted for Yucca Mountain," Energy Department spokesman Joe Davis said Thursday. "They need to support it with full funding to move the program forward."

Congress in 2002 appropriated 77,000 tons of the highest-level radioactive waste at Yucca Mountain. Abraham said laying off about 70 percent of some 2,400 government employees and contractors would cripple the program just before the department is due to submit a license application to the Nuclear Regulatory Commission in December.

In his letter to Rep. David Hobson, R-Ohio, chairman of the Appropriations Committee's Subcommittee on Energy and Water Development, Abraham called it "budget that we receive our... budget request of $880 million."

Hobson, an Energy Department ally, had asked Abraham to report what would happen if the project gets just $131 million.

"That might be all that's available because of the way the Bush administration used its budget request, Hobson said.

Critics of the plan to ship nuclear waste to Nevada called Abraham's response a scare tactic.

"This is just jockeying for more money for the department," said Sen. John Ensign, R-Nev.

Rep. Jim Gibbons, R-Nev., accused Abraham of holding jobs hostage to get more money.

Bob Lusk, chief of Nevada's Agency for Nuclear Projects, said it's a tactic the Energy Department has used in the past to gain congressional support.

Ensign predicted Congress will appropriate the Yucca project the same $580 million it received last year.

Abraham said a delay would affect 139 government and commercial nuclear reactor sites in 39 states, plus government high-level radioactive waste storage sites in New Mexico, New York and Texas.

"The Yucca program pays $400 million a year to 231 federal workers and 2,264 contract employees.

Layoffs would reach beyond the 105 federal and 1,650 contract workers in Nevada, he said.

Idaho has 161 workers studying designs for shipping and storage casks, and 159 people work on the project in California, the Energy Department said.

Another 159 contract workers in New Mexico and Washington state, 126 federal employees in Colorado, and Washington, D.C., and nine contractors in Tennessee, Arizona and Texas would face layoffs.

Abraham said any delays would increase nuclear waste storage and handling costs by $500 million annually.

Press club wants to bar closed meetings

BOISE (AP) — The Idaho Press Club asked a state judge on Thursday to bar the state Legislature from closing any formal legislative committee meetings to the public.

Voters "demand that their government operate in the light of day, rather than behind the secrecy of closed doors," Press Club President Mark Browning said.

Legislative leaders quickly responded that they have done their best to ensure that everything but matters requiring confidentiality on security or legal grounds are handled in the open.

"We have found our level-best not to have any closed-door meetings except when our attorney comes up to brief us on legal issues," House Speaker Bruce Newcomb said. "That's attorney-client privilege."

The lawsuit was filed in response to seven instances in the past 18 months in which House and Senate committees barred the media and general public from officials meetings. Two of those involved briefings on water rights negotiations that had been subjected to a gag order by the district court.

Legislative leaders cited their internal procedural rules as justifying the secrecy. Press Club attorney Allen Orr maintained that rules cannot trump the mandates of the constitution. Judge Kathryn Stickler was assigned the case. Both sides predicted the issue would ultimately be decided by the state Supreme Court.

"The state Constitution requires that 'the business of each house, and of the committee of the whole, shall be transacted openly and not in secret session.' The lawsuit filed in 4th District Court claims secret — or executive — sessions are prohibited.

But another provision in the same article gives the House and Senate the power to "determine its own rules of proceeding."

"There seems to be some ambiguity between what the constitution requires and what legislators think they can do by their own rules," said attorney Deb Christensen said.

But Senate Republican Floor Leader Bart Davis argued that there was no ambiguity if an attempt is made to make those two constitutional provisions compatible. Under that approach, the open meetings mandate covers only the floor sessions of the full House and Senate, he said, while the power to set its own procedures gives the Legislature authority over including its committees will operate, how that committee meetings can be secret.

In the case of confidential information, meetings were closed," Davis said. "But we tried to keep open all the committee meetings possible. Of the hundreds of meetings that have been held since I've been here, only a nominal number for the Arizona Department of Health Services."

The lawsuit does not take on the issue of closed political meetings of party members in each house. Christensen said the legality of those closed caucuses was a matter committee meetings.

Police book teacher due to lake

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — A junior high school teacher was jailed after allegedly threatening to go to a shooting range if she did not get the specific teaching assignments she wanted, police said Thursday.

Sandra Wariner, 57, a math teacher at suburban Bountiful Junior High School, was arrested late Thursday morning after she was on her lunch break.

Wariner was charged with making a terroristic threat, a second degree felony.

The school's principal, Steve Lindsay, notified police Thursday after Wariner allegedly threatened to return to school with her shotgun and shoot him, students, and other teachers, said Bountiful Police Lt. Steve Gray.

"What she was concerned about was the classes she was teaching in the fall," Davis School District spokesman Chris Williams said.

Wariner was apparently having a conversation with several other teachers in the faculty lounge when the principal walked in and the comments were made, said Williams.

"He felt threatened to the point that he had to take some action so he called police," Williams said.

Police searched Wariner's home where they confiscated a shotgun and a .357 revolver pistol, Gray said.

Wariner is on paid administrative leave pending an investigation by the school district.

Williams said that investigation will include looking into Wariner's history. It also will offer her an opportunity to respond before the district takes whatever action it deems necessary.

Officials confirm West Nile cases in West, warn of possible epidemic

PHOENIX (AP) — A top health official in Arizona's largest county warned residents Thursday that there could be a "possible epidemic" of the West Nile virus after confirmation of the first two locally acquired human cases.

Those two, and one case in New Mexico, are the first human cases of West Nile reported in the nation this season. One of the Arizona cases was contracted last fall, but was not confirmed by health officials until this month.

"We're hoping it doesn't grow," said Dr. Jonathan Weisbuch, director of the Maricopa County Department of Public Health. "But when the virus is implanted in a community, we do see a number of cases."

"We could see several hundred cases — a possible epidemic," added Weisbuch. "It is dependent on how effectively we control the growth of mosquitoes."

The mosquito-borne virus, which has inched steadily westward since the first domestic case turned up in New York in 1999, has killed more than 5,500 people in the United States in the past five years.

Health officials said the virus typically causes flu-like symptoms such as fever, nausea, headache and muscle aches. But in some cases, it progresses to life-threatening encephalitis or meningitis. People age 50 and over are generally at a higher risk for severe symptoms.

Experts also say the virus tends to be at its worst in its second year in an area.

Last year was the first for West Nile to appear in areas west of the Continental Divide.

Colorado led the nation last year with 2,947 of 9,862 human cases reported to the federal Centers for Disease Control and Prevention. The disease resulted in 61 deaths in that state.

The virus killed four New Mexico residents last year, all of them in their 70s or older.

On Wednesday, New Mexico reported its first human West Nile case of 2004 in a San Juan County man. Mosquitoes from Pico Rivera, Calif., also tested positive for the virus in the first such laboratory results in Los Angeles County.

West Nile first arrived in Arizona last year and the state had 14 human cases with one death.

A vision drawn from democracy

The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — Architect Friedrich St. Florian was a boy of 12 in the spring of 1945 when he experienced what would be his most vivid memory of World War II — the triumphant arrival of American soldiers in his Austrian village.

"I was particularly impressed by the jeeps," he said. "There were mounted guns in front and the American flag in the back, and they came in, 12 or 15 of them, and I thought they were the most beautiful automobiles I had ever seen. Obviously, I was not very political."

Back then, St. Florian never dreamed he would grow up to design the National World War II Memorial, America's long-awaited tribute to the soldiers, sailors and Marines who fought that storied war. His vision — of a plaza ringed with pillars and full of bronze wreaths, gold stars and soaring eagles — has been praised by some critics and panned by others. But St. Florian, now 71, said he is very pleased with the project that caps his career and has consumed the past eight years of his life.

"For the first time, from an airplane, I had this bird's-eye view of the memorial," he said, recalling a recent arrival from his home in Providence, R.I. "I had always envisioned in my thoughts what it would look like, but you can't really be sure until you see it. And I must say I was very moved."

St. Florian's design was unanimously chosen in 1997 from among 400 submissions. Head of his own architectural firm, he had previously overseen the design of the $450-million Providence Place project in historic downtown Providence, and he has won several national and international design competitions.

Although St. Florian has lived in the United States since 1961 and became a naturalized citizen in 1973, he brought his passport along to the Washington interviews "just in case," he said with a laugh, noting his heavy Austrian accent. It was a requirement that the designer of the World War II memorial be a U.S. citizen.

St. Florian proudly toured the memorial on a recent day, as workers put finishing touches on the landscaping. A dapper man in a bow tie and spectacles, he said he likes to think of future pleasant scenes unfolding there. "I can envision Saturday concerts, with military bands," he said.

That place, St. Florian decided that the memorial, located on the coveted site between the Washington Monument and Lincoln Memorial, should be fashioned as a walking plaza so as not to obstruct the view of the two icons. That had been a point of major concern to early critics of the project.

"I thought about the Roman forums, so to speak," he said. "And the more I had thought about it, it became clear to me that this was a very good method. Because I think the true legacy of World War II... is that we preserved once again our ideals and our principles, that we are a nation of free people living in a free country."

"And so the plaza is really sort of that place where democracy can unfold, where people can sit — and they wouldn't even know they are celebrating democracy — but they can argue and discuss and people will have different opinions."

Some of those differing opinions may have to do with the memorial itself.

Gamblers get caught in video slots

Slot machines can become addictive for many people

By Rick Green
 Hartford Courant writer

Gene Babik pays $20 for a round-trip ticket and climbs aboard the slot bus at Union Station in Hartford, Conn., bound for another eight-hour session at Foxwoods Resort Casino.

Like most, he's got a system, one he works on as often as twice a week. This includes reading gambling publications, watching other players and using his own barometer: a small, battered plastic cup partially filled with quarters. If the cup starts to empty out and he can see the bottom, it's time to shift to another machine.

"I use this for a gauge. If I start breaking bills, I know I'm not going to have a lucky day," said Robert Breen, a clinical psychologist and director of the Rhode Island Gambling Treatment Program. "In terms of whether your mind can handle that, it's overwhelming."

Yet, when it comes to the effects these high-tech devices have on people, Connecticut, with 13,000 of the most profitable slots in the entire world, has its eyes clamped shut. A study to examine the extent of problem gambling is years overdue. Meanwhile, a single machine can generate as much as $400 a day in revenue, and state regulators focus only on making sure Connecticut gets its 25 percent cut.

Now, the number of gambling machines multiplies — from slots to video lottery terminals to electronic bingo devices — to more than 750,000 in North America, so does the unglamorous game of gambling is years overdue. Meanwhile, a single machine can generate as much as $400 a day in revenue, and state regulators focus only on making sure Connecticut gets its 25 percent cut.

Nowhere in the United States — not at Connecticut's megacasinos, in Las Vegas or Atlantic City or on a Mississippi riverboat — will a player see the true odds of an individual play on a machine. Instead, patrons are told of a casino's overall "payout," an average of how much the casino returns on each dollar gambled on all its machines.

"The machine is telling us we can win and we're not going to win big. That is the crux of the fraud," said Roger Horbay, a Canadian gambling researcher who also trains counselors to help problem gamblers. "You are not going to win big soon. The player does not get a rational choice. They are being deceived. It is deceptive entertainment."

The documents state, in part, "It is important to make a machine that is perceived to present greater chances of payoff than it actually has." It is the power of the machine over the individual that has led some researchers and government officials to call for new restrictions on video slot machines.

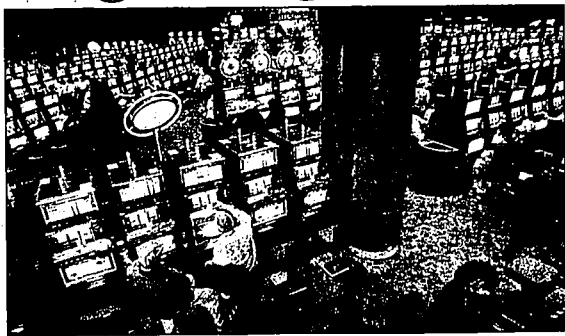

"You can make a bet every three seconds with these machines. It's over-stimulating," said Robert Breen, a clinical psychologist and director of the Rhode Island Gambling Treatment Program. "In terms of whether your mind can handle that, it's overwhelming."

Yet, when it comes to the effects these high-tech devices have on people, Connecticut, with 13,000 of the most profitable slots in the entire world, has its eyes clamped shut. A study to examine the extent of problem gambling is years overdue. can control that exactly... They can map losses that don't close. They can map that display to the whatever they want," he said. "It is a totally controlled environment."

"The arrival of computer-driven slots in the 1980s handed manufacturers a huge opportunity: the chance to create even larger potential paydays and attract more gamblers for longer periods.

"No longer were the number of winning combinations restricted by the number of 'stop' combinations on three old-fashioned mechanical reels.

"Virtual" reels were created, in which the machine or, increasingly, a video screen, simulates spinning wheels with thousands of potential combinations of symbols appearing. At the same time, the odds of three cherries or 7s coming up changed in astronomical proportions.

"The reels displayed on both (modern) mechanical slots and video slots do not represent, in any form, what the odds of winning actually are," Horbay, the Canadian researcher, and a colleague, Nigel Turner, wrote in a recent unpublished paper detailing how slot machines work.

"The design of slot machines' reels encourages a false impression of one's chance of winning. Machines are mapped to ensure 'constant near-miss illusions,' Horbay and Turner say. "It is virtually impossible for the consumer to figure out their chances of winning one of the larger prizes on one of these machines."

And that may be just the point, say casino and industry representatives, who argue that playing slots is entertainment, not a calculated business decision.

"Some of the players actually like the elusiveness of winning, which is part of the game. That's what makes it exciting. It is the lens you view it through," said Connie Jones, director of responsible gaming for International Game Technology, the world's largest slot machine manufacturer. "Maybe part of the intrigue is part of the deception."

The random near win "could be programmed right out of there, if that's what the customer wants," she said. "Would that be fun?"

Connecticut's Division of Special Revenue, which oversees slot machines at the state's two Indian casinos, confines its work to making sure the slots meet legally required "payout" averages of between 80 percent and 100 percent — and that the state gets its 25 percent take.

"Our auditors go over every machine to make sure the state is getting every penny it deserves," said Paul Bernstein, spokesman for the Division of Special Revenue.

State inspectors make sure machines work according to factory specifications, down to checking computer chips and monitoring payout levels of the devices.

Evaluating a machine's impact on the behavior of the gambler is not part of the job. It should be argued, Marvin Steinberg, executive director of the Connecticut Council on Problem Gambling.

"They need to be involved in examining concerns that come from research about the (slot machine) games," said Steinberg, a nationally recognized expert on treating problem gamblers.

Christopher Armentano, director of problem gambling services for the state Department of Mental Health and Addiction Services, said the new fast-paced machines are "absolutely" producing more problem and pathological gamblers, the same way a high-nicotine cigarette hooks a smoker.

Researchers say 1 percent to 2 percent of the population are pathological gamblers. The number doubles within 50 miles of a casino.

Experts say more people are reporting problems from gambling, although the number diagnosed as suffering from pathological gambling, a recognized impulse control disorder, has remained steady over the last 25 years.

Some researchers have questioned this, however, because more stringent criteria are used now to assess whether a gambler has a problem than in the 1970s.

"Although it appears that the prevalence hasn't changed, that actually has more to do with how problem gambling has been measured both in the past and more recently," said Rachel Volberg, a research scientist in Northampton, Conn., regarded as the leading expert on how widespread problem and pathological gambling is.

"You don't have the focus in the right place when you look at the general population," Volberg said.

Armentano says it is obvious more people now have gambling problems, but nobody is counting them.

"One indication is the number of clients we see has risen so dramatically. Another indication is the number of women we see," Armentano said. "Virtually all of them are addicted to slot machines." Recent research in Australia, Alberta, Nova Scotia and Rhode Island suggests that slot machines and video lottery terminals pose a substantial threat to casual players.

For the last three years, researchers at Rhode Island Hospital in Providence have been tracking what they say is an increasingly addictive relationship between high-speed video slot machines and gamblers in Rhode Island and Connecticut.

Video slots are "the most virulent strain of gambling in the history of man," said Breen, the Rhode Island psychologist and co-author of two studies that found that the machines create problem gamblers: four times faster than other forms of gambling.

"We measured the period of time between regular gambling and problem gambling," Breen said.

"What we've found over and over again is that people can enjoy different forms of gambling as part of their routine and leisure activities for many years. But when exposed to video slots the problems progress very rapidly. People transitioned from being non-problem gamblers to losing lots of money, having bad relationships, losing their jobs, their freedom and their good mental health."

Worker's bad habits go unnoticed

DEAR ABBY: I work in a large, open office with five other people. We collaborate on the same projects. When our office was reorganized, we rearranged our desks. I now sit next to a woman I'll call Ginger, who has one of the worst work ethics I have ever seen. Ginger spends much of the day on personal e-mail, playing computer solitaire, taking frequent "smoke" breaks...

DEAR ABBY Jeanne Phillips

Talk to the supervisor privately and tell him or her what you have told me. Say nothing to Ginger, because that's the supervisor's job... Please advise quickly before this gets out of hand.

in child health and development. If he still refuses, the doctor can — and should — report his behavior to the proper authorities.

DEAR ABBY: I have three children. My oldest child is only 10. My parents remember age 10 very well because at that age but that was 24 years ago. I feel things are too dangerous these days.

Is there an age when I can leave them home alone and know that it's OK? — CAUTIOUS MOM IN KANSAS

DEAR CAUTIOUS MOM: I'm sad to say that times have changed, and 10 is still too young. No child should be left alone, unless he or she is big enough and sophisticated enough to fight off or elude an intruder, or handle other emergencies that might arise.

Should I tell our supervisor about Ginger's work habits? Should I say something to Ginger? Thank you for your help, Abby — it's been an awful burden.

— OLD-FASHIONED IN BOULDER

DEAR ABBY: When my 11-year-old daughter takes her bath, my husband sits on the toilet and eats his dinner in the bathroom with her. I find his behavior questionable and have asked him repeatedly to allow her some privacy.

DEAR UNEASY ABOUT MY DAUGHTER(S): Your husband's behavior is inappropriate. Your daughter is old enough to bathe without supervision and should do so. You didn't mention how physically developed she is, but she will soon be a young woman.

Austria enacts strict animal rights laws

VIENNA, Austria (AP) — Austrian lawmakers on Thursday approved one of Europe's toughest animal rights laws, a measure that forces farmers to use cages and bans pet owners from clipping their dogs ears or tails.

where Minister of Social Affairs Herbert Ihaupf drew laughter by holding up a small stuffed toy chicken as he signed the law.

The law, enacted by a unanimous vote of parliament, outlaws the use of lions and other wild animals in circuses and makes it illegal to restrain dogs with chains, choke collars or "invisible fence" — devices that administer mild electric shocks.

A key provision bans the widespread practice of confining chickens to small cages on farms and makes it a crime to tightly bind cattle with ropes.

Q. What started that old line: "Feed a cold and starve a fever?" A. Goes way back. To when people thought the body had a sort of furnace that fired up the furnace with food and a fever was a fire to let the furnace fire die down with a few days.

Word is the slangsters now refer to ancient environmentalists as "duck-squeezers."

Those found guilty of animal cruelty will be subject to fines up to $18,000 in extreme cases.

The Austrian Farm Federation opposed the law, arguing that forcing farmers to raise only "free range" chickens will increase costs.

Lawyers for men accused of theft blame Forest Service

RENO, Nev. (AP) — Lawyers for two men accused of looting American Indian artifacts said Thursday that the real culprit is the U.S. Forest Service because it failed to mark the site near Reno as culturally significant.

Federal prosecutors urged a U.S. District Court jury to hold the two men responsible for stealing three boulders with artwork etchings that tribal leaders say are priceless and more than 1,000 years old.

But the defense lawyers said John Ligon, 40, Reno, and Carol Mizell, 44, Van Nuys, Calif., removed three boulders with the petroglyphs from national forest land and placed them in Ligon's front yard to protect them from an encroaching subdivision.

"He would have never taken them and displayed them in his front yard if he thought they were government property," said Scott Freeman, Ligon's lawyer.

"Ignorance is a legal excuse in this case," he said in opening arguments before U.S. District Judge Howard Michien. A federal grand jury indicted Ligon and Mizell in October on charges of unlawful excavation of archaeological resources and theft of government property in violation of the Archaeological Resources Protection Act.

"Not only are persons who commit such crimes destroying the cultural heritage of Native Americans, but they spoil the opportunity for everyone to enjoy these resources in their natural environment," Dan Hogglen, U.S. attorney for Nevada, said at the time.

The crimes carry potential maximum sentences of more than 10 years in prison and $25,000 in fines.

Among other things, the drawings depict an archer shooting an arrow at a bighorn

Amateur archaeologist John Pickett, an advocate of additional protection of American Indian artifacts on federal lands, stands at a site on Peavine Mountain near Reno, Nev., Jan. 26, where petroglyphs were removed by two men now on trial in U.S. District Court on theft charges.

sheep, a wheel, a lizard and a human figure.

Prosecutors said they would present witnesses who will testify that Mizell was aware that the petroglyphs were culturally significant artifacts protected under federal law.

The site is located on Peavine Mountain within a few hundred yards of backyards in a neighborhood in northwest Reno where hundreds of new homes are scheduled to be built this year.

"There are times people will take artifacts knowingly to sell on the black market... loot or raid or rob a site of antiquities for the purpose of knowingly taking artifacts to their home or to a secret place where they and they alone can view it," said David J. Houston, Mizell's attorney.

"This is not that kind of case," he told the jury.

"The event was precipitated by the desire of Mr. Mizell to protect these rocks, to avoid having these rocks lost, these boulders bulldozed, to avoid having the developers literally chew them up and spit them out," Houston said.

Guardsmen plan to report June 7

BOISE (AP) — A brigade of Idaho Army National Guardsmen will meet on June 7 at their local armories before they move on to Fort Bliss in Texas and deployment to Iraq, Guard spokesman Lt. Col. Tim Marsano said Wednesday. The mobilization involves about 1,000 members of the 116th Cavalry Brigade, with 750 from Idaho, Marsano said.

They will report to their local armories on June 7.

Then it is on to the battalion headquarters either in Lewiston, Pocatello, Caldwell or Twin Falls. From there, they will be driven to Boise on June 9, and take a plane to Fort Bliss near El Paso on June 10.

Hawaii's Hanauma Bay tops list of best beaches

HONOLULU (AP) — Hanauma Bay, a volcanic crater flooded with gem-blue Pacific waters and hundreds of species of tropical fish, has been named the best American beach.

The bay ascends to the top of the 14th annual rankings out Friday from Stephen Leatherman, the Florida environmental scientist known as "Dr. Beach."

"It's a perfect little jewel," Leatherman said in a telephone interview from Miami.

The selection of a stretch of white sand along Oahu's eastern shore is not surprising. Hanauma Bay has appeared on the list a number of times in the past. "We certainly deserve being topped the list all but once in the last nine years. Since the first rankings in 1991, Florida has been the only other state to have a beach occupy the top spot."

"We certainly deserve being topped the list all but once in the last nine years. Since the first rankings in 1991, Florida has been the only other state to have a beach occupy the top spot."

"We're very different than a typical beach park."

Hanauma Bay provides a spectacular vista and superb snorkeling that have lured tourists for decades. Its popularity peaked in the late 1980s, with more than 10,000 visitors coming on its busiest days, and more than 3 million people visiting annually.

The traffic was leading to a decline in the health of the bay's precious coral reef, and in 1990, officials stepped in to begin working to limit access.

In the 14 years since, annual visitor numbers have been halved as restrictions were put in place. Tour buses are no longer welcome. Fish feeding is prohibited. Smoking is banned. An education program is in place that requires new visitors to watch a 30-minute video. Out-of-state adult visitors now must pay $5 to get in.

"It's not a place you come with your volleyball net and hibachi," Hong said.

The restrictions in place have been viewed as a hassle by many, but Leatherman called it "the proper way to manage, basically, a limited resource."

Leatherman says he visits more than 100 beaches each year, using a 50-criteria system to rate everything from sand color to water clarity, parking to wave levels. He is a coastal expert and a professor at Florida International University in Miami.

Also honored on this year's list were Fort De Soto Park, Caladesi Island State Park, Crescent Beach and Cape Florida State Park, all in Florida; Ocracoke Island in North Carolina; Main Beach in East Hampton, N.Y.; Coast Guard Beach in Cape Cod, Mass.; Coronado Beach in California; and Hanalei Bay on the north shore of the Hawaiian island of Kauai.

Police: Woman confesses to filing fake rape report

POST FALLS (AP) — A woman has been accused of filing a fake rape report so her airman boyfriend could get emergency leave to return to the United States from Korea so they could be married.

Rita Endreson, 26, of Post Falls filed the report on May 13, describing her alleged assailant in detail, and then contacted the Red Cross, asking that her fiancé, Bisaro, 24, of Spokane, Wash., be returned from Korea. She identified herself as Bisaro's wife because the special Red Cross program to get service men home in emergencies is only for relatives.

Detectives investigating the rape report quickly found inconsistencies in the woman's story, and when they tried to clear them up, Endreson refused to cooperate, Lt. Greg McLean said.

"Once we learned she contacted the Red Cross, we could see a motive," McLean said.

and was biskered for the misdemeanor. Bisaro made it to Seattle before her story fell apart. He was initially picked up by Air Force authorities there and released. He managed to elude their surveillance so he could still meet up with Endreson, and the two married in Coeur d'Alene on May 17.

Bisaro, who has since been returned to Korea, was being questioned by Air Force investigators about showing his commander what appears to be a bogus picture of a beaten Endreson.

McLean said Endreson had no bruises when she was questioned after reporting the rape.

"These two used lies to abuse the system," McLean said.

The disturbing thing is that this could take away from a person serving in the military overseas who really has a crisis in the family."

The Post Falls officials also want restitution for the more than 100 hours spent by detectives on the fake rape claim.

Hagerman marks Fossil Days with food, fun, folderol

By Steve Crump
Times-News writer

HAGERMAN — Ladies and gentlemen, start your summer. Hagerman's 16th annual Fossil Days celebration, which begins tonight, is the unofficial starting gun for the vacation season in south-central Idaho.

Between 3,000 and 4,000 visitors are expected in this town of 650 between tonight and Sunday. "We've expanded it this year," said Craig Mills, who chairs the Fossil Days organizing committee for the Hagerman Valley Chamber of Commerce. "We have hot-air balloons this year, carnival rides for kids and adults, a hole-in-one contest and expanded entertainment, and we're using Billingsley Creek State Park for the first time."

"The balloons will be tethered near Hagerman all day Sunday, and rides will be offered for 'less than $5,' according to Mills.

"We had hoped to have enough balloons available to launch over Hagerman on Sunday," Mills said. "But we couldn't do it because of the uncertain weather conditions."

This weekend's forecast calls for highs in the 60s with thunderstorms tonight.

"We're hoping the weather's good for the parade Saturday," he said.

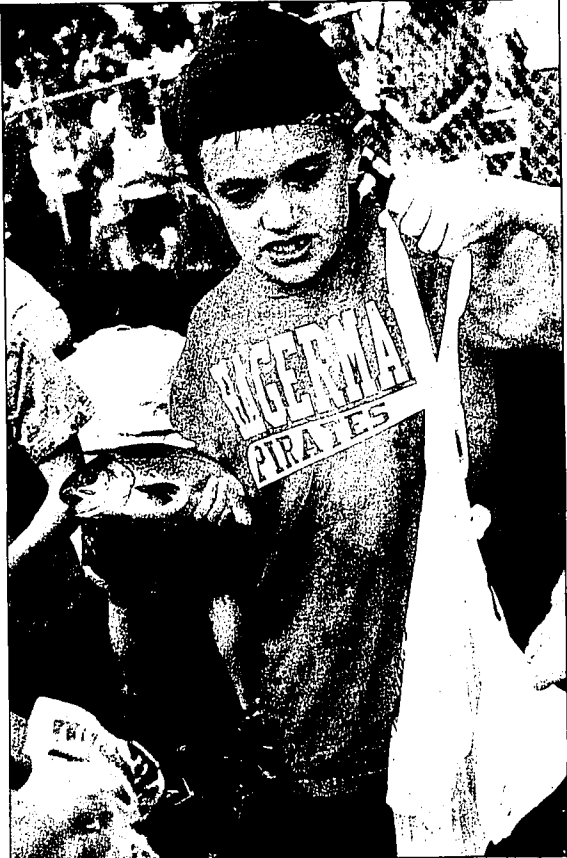

The parade, which starts at 11 a.m. on the south end of Hagerman and travels up State Street to the City Park, is the festival's highlight, featuring a mounted color guard, rodeo queens, mounted riding clubs, antique and classic vehicles, individual riders, horse- and oxen-drawn wagons, and emergency vehicles.

Music, food and children's games will fill City Park in the afternoon and evening, the hole-in-one-contest and the tractor pull will be at the state park, which is located one-half mile north of Hagerman on U.S. Highway 30.

The Fossil Days festival honors the nearby Hagerman Fossil Beds National Monument, a 4,000-acre preserve that contains the remains of thousands — maybe millions — of mammals which gathered around basins in the area in the prehistoric past. The site has been a favorite of paleontologists for years, and it attracts about 10,000 civilians a year as well.

The monument's visitor center is located on State Street across from the high school. It'll be open from 9 a.m. until 7 p.m. today and Saturday and from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. on Sunday. The Research Lab and Collections Building will be open on Saturday from noon until 5 p.m. and the Horse Quarry will be staffed for an open house from 1-5 p.m. on Sunday.

The Lord of the Rings: The Return of the King

Director and co-writer Peter Jackson's triumphant conclusion to his "Rings" trilogy brings it home for everyone. We enjoy the fulfillment of destinies for once-and-future monarch Aragorn (Viggo Mortensen), his resolute love, Arwen (Liv Ullmann), and his two warrior-allies, Legolas (Orlando Bloom) and Gimli (John Rhys-Davies). We also see what becomes of the honorable Gandalf (Sir Ian McKellen), of Theoden (Bernard Hill), Merry (Dominic Monaghan) and Pippin (Billy Boyd), and the scores of others. The movie's good at big- and small-scale stories. Jackson takes us from the extended battles between the dark lord Sauron's forces and the allies of Middle Earth, led by Aragorn, Theoden, king of Rohan, and Gandalf, to the closer-in, more personal conflicts, such as the one between the scheming Gollum-Smeagol (Andy Serkis) and Frodo (Elijah Wood), who carries the all-important ring. Contains intense battle sequences and some frightening images. PG-13.

Welcome to Mooseport

Small-screen nice guy Ray Romano just doesn't have the oomph needed to carry off this comedic belly-flop about a small-town Maine hardware-store owner running for mayor against the ex-president of the United States. And Gene Hackman, as the former prez, can only bring so much edge to the game. The lovely and talented Maura Tierney was wasted as the woman both men are courting, but the film's real crime is the forced parade of quaint wackos and en-dearing oddballs meant to evoke the eccentric charm of "Northern Exposure's" Cicely, Alaska. Contains naked buttocks, a pair of amorous dogs, mild vulgarities and a bit of vague thematic sexuality. PG-13.

ease. What else could account for "Home on the Range," a charmless animated musical about a bovine trio riding herd on a rustler? PG (mild crudeness).

"Kill Bill — Volume 2"

An adrenaline shot to the movie heart, soul and mind, the second half of Quentin Tarantino's long-gestating epic is a blast of pure pop pleasure. It firmly lays to rest the doubts raised by "Vol. 1" as to whether the filmmaker had retained his chops after years of silence and, as important, had anything to offer beyond pyrotechnics and bloodshed. Tarantino has been celebrated for his staccato dialogue and pop-culture pandery, but his covert strength is in putting feeling into images, not words. He has a genius for pop iconography, for surfing the highs and vulgar lows of our throwaway culture, and a true grasp of how we find meaning even among the ruins. With Uma Thurman, David Carradine, Michael Madsen, Daryl Hannah, Gordon Liu and Michael Parks, in English and Mandarin, Cantonese and Spanish with English subtitles. (2-10; for violence, language and brief drug use.)

"Laws of Attraction"

Pierce Brosnan and Julianne Moore star as dueling divorce lawyers in this lamentably unfunny screwball romance that tries to bring the Spencer Tracy-Katharine Hepburn/Rock Hudson-Doris Day formula into the 21st century. It does not succeed. PG-13 (sex, profanity, adult themes).

"Man on Fire"

Denzel Washington stars as a bodyguard out for vengeance after his charge — a precocious, too-cute rich girl — is kidnapped in Mexico City. Bloody killings and busy camerawork ensue in this over-long, over-stylized, Tony Scott-directed rampage. R (violence, profanity, adult themes).

"Mean Girls"

"Saturday Night Live" writer Tina Fey's "Mean Girls" is alternately intriguing then not, and, like its subject, features a lot of lip gloss and girl-on-girl zingers. And like most contemporary movies, "Mean Girls" — which reteams Lindsay Lohan with her "Freaky Friday" director, Mark Waters — has no ending. PG-13 (sexual content, profanity, skanky dressing).

"New York Minute"

A coy, frantic attempt at screwball comedy, lightly seasoned and more than a little

'American Bandstand' returns with an 'American Idol' flavor

LOS ANGELES (AP) — "American Bandstand" is coming back with a new twist, courtesy of the producer of "American Idol."

A revamped version, from original producer-host Dick Clark and "American Idol" creator Simon Fuller, will turn the show's trademark dancing into a regular competition.

In the original, 1950s-era show, studio audience members who did the twist, the swim and other hot dances were aiming to impress the audience, Fuller said Monday.

"We're going to have a lot more fun in that area. The public will be involved in choosing which of the kids is the coolest, the most gorgeous, the best dancer," he said.

"The knows more than a bit about contests: 'American Idol,' which wraps its third season Wednesday with a showdown between Fantasia Barrino and Diana DeGarmo. It is a hit for Fox and has produced fledgling recording stars such as Clay Aiken and Ruben Studdard.

Clark said he's eager to see the program return, whether or not because of the pop culture force it once was.

"I wanted, ever since the show left the air, to find a way and a time and a place to bring it back," Clark said Monday.

Can the resurrected show work today's TV audience? "If you think about it, 'American Bandstand' was probably the original reality show. And to bring it back in the throes of excitement about reality isn't a bad idea," he said.

The original show had occasional dance contests. Clark noted, with the prizes greatly increased in value from records to juke boxes to cars.

On the new "American Bandstand," performances by pop stars and the old show's "rate-a-record" segments will remain in the mix, Fuller said.

form — or lip sync — their latest record and chat with Clark. The audience helped critique songs on a point system, a show trademark.

"Whether performers on the new show perform live or to a recording will be left up to them, Fuller said. "It's a firm believer it should be left up to the artist to choose."

Clark will be a producer but won't return as on-air steward of the new "Bandstand," which is scheduled to debut in summer 2005, most likely on a network and definitely in prime-time, Fuller said.

A search for a replacement host is under way and Fuller hinted at more than one opening. Although the show will be largely Los Angeles-based, it will break away to other cities, such as Miami, to sample the scenes there.

Fuller and Clark will serve as executive producers through Fuller's 19 Entertainment and Clark's production company, joined by Allen Shapiro of Mosaic Media Group, the controlling shareholder in Clark's firm.

Besides creating the "American Idol" format, born in Britain as "Pop Idol," Fuller managed Annie Lennox's solo career and the Spice Girls.

The hit Fox talent contest has expanded his talent roster, with all "American Idol" performers contracted to 19 Entertainment.

Clark's production company handles a number of specials and awards shows, including the American Music Awards, the Golden Globe ceremony and the Daytime Emmy Awards.

Concert features Ladysmith Black Mambazo

The Times-News

HAILEY — Ladysmith Black Mambazo, the 10-man Zulu choir made famous on Paul Simon's "Graceland" album, will perform in Hailey's Hop Porter Park on June 11, the first event in the Sun Valley Center for the Arts summer concert series.

Country artist Pat Green will sing at the River Run Amphitheater in Ketchum on July 29 and bluegrass musician Sam Bush will play the same venue on Labor Day.

Assembled in the early 1960s in South Africa by the late Joseph Shabala — then a farm-boy-turned-factory worker — the group took its name from Shabala's hometown. Their collective voices were so tight and their harmonies so polished that they were eventually banned from competitions in racially segregated South Africa, although they were welcome to participate as entertainers.

Tickets for the Sun Valley Center for the Arts concert series are $61 for all three concerts, or $18 for Ladysmith, $30 for Green and $20 for Bush.

WETCO will present 'Arms and the Man'

The Times-News

TWIN FALLS — Nobody had a lighter touch with war than George Bernard Shaw.

The great pacifist Irish playwright transformed a venal arms profiteer into a moral philosopher in "Major Barbara." In "Arms and the Man," he turned the notion of conflict inside out, making a hero of a "chocolate soldier."

The West End Theater Company will do five performances of the play, two at the Lamphouse Theater tonight and Saturday and three more at the Buhl Middle School Auditorium on June 3-5.

Curtain time is 7:30 p.m. nightly.

Noami Hitchcock is the director; David Blazkiewicz is the technical director.

"Arms," Shaw's first commercial hit, is about a particularly silly border war that broke out between Serbia and Bulgaria in 1885.

The fiancé of a Bulgarian war hero, Raina, rescues a fugitive Serbian soldier, Capt. Bluntschli, in her bedroom.

Bluntschli knows that Raina's intended, Sergius, is a fraud, and a year later all the characters meet again — Sergius is retired from the Bulgarian army; Bluntschli is now a businessman — and farce ensues involving an incriminating photograph in the pocket of an old coat.

In the end, love doesn't conquer all, but Bluntschli's sizable inheritance does.

Members of the cast are AJ Hoffman, Courtney Kuehl, Don Van Kleeck, Rob Bolton, Jamie Larson, Erik Eschler and Tesla Herzinger.

Irish playwright George Bernard Shaw's "Arms and the Man" will be performed at the Lamphouse Theater tonight.

Fantasia Barrino wins title of 'American Idol'

LOS ANGELES (AP) — An estimated 31.4 million people tuned in to watch Fantasia Barrino's tearstained victory at the conclusion of "American Idol," Nielsen Media Research said Thursday.

That was down slightly from the 33.7 million who watched Ruben Studdard beat Clay Aiken at the end of last season.

Fox said viewership is down in general this week because summer is approaching, so it was pleased by the number. Overall, ratings for the full third season of "American Idol" were up about 15 percent over last year, Nielsen said.

Barrino, who won over viewers with her rich, gospel-infused performance of pop tunes, including the Gershwin standard "Summertime," claimed the victory Wednesday for her 2-year-old daughter, Zoella.

"I fought so that my child can have the best," said the 19-year-old single mother from High Point, N.C., who had a 1.3 million-vote edge over Diana DeGarmo when the results were announced.

Speaking to reporters backstage, Barrino said she "always had a dream, always wanted to sing, and it seemed I couldn't get my foot in the door."

She kicked it down in the four-month Fox TV talent contest, emerging from among 70,000 contestants to claim the title, a record contract and a shot at music stardom.

America got it "100 percent right," said Simon Cowell, the usually acerbic "American Idol" judge and music producer who was among those who fell under Barrino's spell.

"There aren't many other artists in America right now that I'd prefer to have on my label," Cowell said after the ceremony. Judge Paula Abdul praised Barrino for having "everything" from her name, to the way she looks, to the way she sounds, to her personality. ... She's just got it."

More than 65 million votes were cast, a record in the hit show's three seasons. Last year, Studdard claimed the title with a slim 134,000-vote margin over Clay Aiken out of 24 million votes cast.

Additional phone lines and an expanded voting window helped swell the tally, Fox acted in response to criticism that overwhelmed phone systems were frustrating viewer attempts to make their voices heard in the competition.

Some observers had said the contest's credibility was at risk when lesser performers triumphed over better ones, particularly Jasmine Trias and LaToya London.

DeGarmo, a bubbly 16-year-old from Snellville, Ga., voiced the contest wasn't necessarily over. "I'm definitely recording an album," DeGarmo said backstage, adding with a smile: "And Fantasia, you better watch out because I'm coming with one."

"There's no deal in place yet, she admitted. "Anybody, please sign me!" DeGarmo said. She's got reason for optimism, since second-place Aiken has edged Studdard in record sales so far.

As host Ryan Seacrest announced the results, Barrino grabbed DeGarmo in a bear hug and twisted her around as tears streamed down her face. "I been through some things but I worked hard to get to where I'm at," she said.

Asked about those who might be critical of her single parenthood, Barrino replied: "I feel like a good mom. I'm a strong woman now. ... Don't look down on me. Pray for me because I'm trying."

The contest judges had essentially crowned Barrino the winner when she dazzled them Tuesday with her performance. But Cowell, Abdul and Randy Jackson, who help narrow down the initial pool of contestants, don't pick the winner — America does, through phone and text-message votes.

Barrino follows in the footsteps of the first two winners, Kelly Clarkson and Studdard. Her first single will be a song she and DeGarmo both tried out Tuesday night: "I Believe," written by Tamya Gray, a contestant from season one.

"Both of you have done an amazing job," Abdul said before the results were announced. "You've made all three of us extremely proud."

"Think about it — you're the top two out of 70,000 people we saw," Jackson added. "You should stand proud."

To fill the two-hour broadcast before the results were announced at the Kodak Theatre in Los Angeles, Clarkson and Studdard sang "The Impossible Dream" with Barrino and DeGarmo, and the two finalists did a feel-good version of the song. Michael and Aronha Franklin duet, "I Knew You Were Waiting (for Me)."

All 12 finalists will go on tour together this summer, something they practiced for Wednesday with a lengthy medley of the series' previous songs.

The "American Idol" finale may seem like the Super Bowl of karaoke, but this year it truly reached the level of momentous sporting event proportions. Thousands gathered at the Greensboro Coliseum in Greensboro, N.C., to cheer for Barrino and at the Georgia Dome in Atlanta to support DeGarmo.

Gray, from the competition's first season, sang "The Star Spangled Banner" and the governors of both states had side bets: Georgia had to send peaches to North Carolina if Barrino won, and North Carolina had to send blueberries to Georgia if DeGarmo won.

Toby Keith sweeps top honors at Country Music Awards

LAS VEGAS (AP) — One year after a disgruntled Toby Keith walked out of the Academy of Country Music awards before being named entertainer of the year, he won the top honor again, and then some.

Keith also took home trophies Wednesday as male vocalist and for his album "Shock 'n Yall" and the video "Beer for My Horses" with Willie Nelson.

"I always kept hoping this night would come," he said as he picked up the night's biggest award.

Keith, who had won only three times before, was named entertainer of the year in 2003, but left the venue after being snubbed for other awards.

"Thank God for blessing us," he said. "Let's all go partyin' and rock out here in Vegas."

Brooks & Dunn added to their record 17 Academy of Country Music awards, beating out Montgomery Gentry and three other groups for the top vocal duo award.

Alan Jackson won single record of the year and vocal event — his 12th and 13th career ACM awards — for "It's Five O'Clock Somewhere," with Jimmy Buffett.

"Thank to the academy and of course all the fans that made this such a fun song to hear on the radio," said Jackson, who entered the program with a leading eight bids among the male-dominated nominations — two of them in the best single category.

Marina McBride won top female vocalist for the third straight year.

 guinnny. "New York Minute" can only manage to simulate the framework of its forerunners without bringing anything fresh to the process.

The set-up has Mary-Kate and Ashley Olsen as bickering sisters who end up on the same train ride to the big city only to somehow get in trouble with a video-piracy ring.

The plot is an overly elaborate excuse for America's Twins to change into skimpier outfits, sverve cars into stationary objects, flutter their eyelashes at bland hunks and have a yelling match in Times Square that amounts to being some substantive emotion to the gratuitous silliness.

Eugene Levy co-stars. Directed by Dennis Gordon. (1.31, PG, for mild sensuality and thematic elements.)

"13 Going on 30"

Jennifer Garner in a star-making role as a 13-year-old who gets her wish to grow up into a cool chick — and then realizes that cool chicks are pretty shallow. PG-13 (sexual candor, drug references)

"Shrek 2"

Can an Oscar-winning animated success generate a successful sequel? The answer is yes. A key reason for this accomplishment is that so much of the talent of the original has returned, including all three of its vocal stars: Eddie Murphy as Donkey, Cameron Diaz as Princess Fiona and Mike Myers as Shrek.

These are people who know how to make the trains run on time, and run on time they do. Less enthralling is the initial conflict-with-the-in-laws plot structure.

Fortunately, "Shrek 2" has two new characters up its sleeve who liven things up considerably — a malicious, completely insincere fairy godmother (Jennifer Saunders) and Puss in Boots (Antonio Banderas).

With the voices of Julie Andrews, John Cleese and Rupert Everett. Directed by Andrew Adamson. Kelly Asbury and Conrad Vernon. (1.36, PG, for some crude humor, a brief substance reference and some suggestive content.)

"Tibet: Cry of the Snow Lion"

The movie, narrated by Martin Sheen and voice overs from a host of other luminaries, including Tim Robbins and Susan Sarandon, is no visual travelope about the wonderful peaks of Everest.

Most of it was shot in Betacam SP before being transferred to film. It's about the misery of a nation. Directed and photographed by Tom Peessay, who took 10 years and nine journeys into Tibet) to make this, the documentary provides a bracingly clear vision of the events that have led to this. Unrated.

"Touching the Void"

The true story of British climbers Joe Simpson and Simon Yates' first ascent up Peru's Siula Grande is told through interviews and dramatic re-enactments in spectacular mountain settings. No MPAA rating (profanity, may be too complex for children under 12)

Inspired by Homer's "The Iliad" as filtered through the sensibility of writer David Benioff and director Wolfgang Petersen, "Troy" is only half silly.

It is also half serious, and not to mention half bloody and half talky, half well-acted and half walked through, half faithful to its venerable sources and half wildly invented.

Yes, that's an awful lot of halves, but this is a movie that's nearly two and three-quarters hours in length. Given everything, it's no surprise that the verdict on the film has to be a split decision.

It's a movie you believe in physically, but believing it emotionally presents a greater challenge. Brad Pitt plays Achilles, the film's major sex object, shamelessly lusted after by the camera.

Compared to him, the face that launched a thousand ships is treated like so much Greek chopped liver. Eric Bana, Orlando Bloom and Peter O'Toole star. (R, for graphic violence and some sexuality/nudity)

"Van Helsing"

While director Stephen Sommers' gift for pulp material and boundless on-screen energy do have an impact, "Van Helsing," like the work of the good Dr. Frankenstein, is an experiment gone awry. Hugh Jackman plays Van Helsing, presented here as a kind of 19th century James Bond, employed by a secret Vatican society to rid the world of evil.

His assignment leads him to Transylvania, where he takes on Count Dracula. Frankenstein's monster and the Wolfman. Unable to be consistently amusing — and overburdened by all its special effects, the film positions itself as an action-adventure extravaganza.

But effects-laden though it is, there's little that lasts in the mind for more than five seconds. Kate Beckinsale also stars. (2.11, PG-13, for nonstop creature action violence and frightening images and for sensuality)

Kids can see 'Pinocchio' for a dollar

The Times-News

TWIN FALLS — One-dollar tickets are now available for the June 19 presentation of Other Hand Productions' puppet show, Pinocchio.

Pinocchio is the annual Arts on Tour summer production for youth, or Arts on Tour Kids. Carlo Gallozzi first wrote Pinocchio as a serial, writing his puppet into misadventures.

But what happened after Pinocchio became a real boy and what does he remember about his early life as a puppet? Other Hand Productions' original adaptation of Pinocchio will keep you guessing.

Here, Pinocchio has learned Gepetto's trade and builds puppets of characters he remembers: the Fox and Cat, Launpwick, and The Cricket. Enter a world between reality and fantasy where a chisel becomes a woodpecker, and huge saws slam shut as the jaws of the Great Shark.

Pinocchio soon shifts from remembering to re-living his adventures.

In addition to a host of beautiful puppets, Pinocchio includes five original songs scored for piano, violin, and accordion.

Tickets are $1 per child. Children as young as three years old are encouraged to attend, and the kids will also enjoy a "cookies and milk" arts reception" outside after the show.

The performance will take place at 2 p.m. in the College of Southern Idaho's Fine Arts Center auditorium.

Tickets are $1 for general admission. Tickets do not include Everybody's Business, Kurt's Pharmacy & Hallmark, Crowley's Old Time Soda Fountain, The Magic Valley Arts Council, the CSI Community Education Center, and the CSI Outreach Centers in Burley, Hallett, and Gooding.

Thibault gets player of the year

SPOKANE, Wash. — Gonzaga University sophomore catcher Kiel Thibault of Jerome was named the West Coast Conference Player of the Year on Thursday as the conference released its 2004 All-Conference team. In addition to Thibault named Player of the Year honors, four other Bulldogs earned All-WCC recognition with two members on the first team and two members on the second team.

Thibault becomes the second Gonzaga player to win the Player of the Year honor joining Nate Cold who won the award in 2002 after leading the nation with 33 home runs.

Thibault finished the season with a .424 batting average to win the West Coast Conference batting title while hitting .432 in league play. The batting average was the second highest in school history, and the fifth-best mark in WCC history as the sophomore led the conference with 87 hits. In addition to being named the WCC Player of the Year, Thibault was also named the first team catcher.

Lakers take command

Kobe dumps in 31 points to put team up 3-1 in series

The Associated Press

LOS ANGELES — Kobe Bryant spent one more day in a Colorado courtroom — and one more night at the peak of his game.

After returning to Los Angeles less than two hours before tipoff, Bryant scored 31 points and led the Lakers to a 92-85 over the Minnesota Timberwolves in Game 4 of the Western Conference finals Thursday night.

Shaquille O'Neal added 19 points and 19 rebounds for the Lakers, who took a 3-1 series lead and moved to the brink of their fourth trip to the NBA Finals in five seasons.

For the third and final time in the postseason, Bryant returned from a hearing in his upcoming sexual assault trial in time to propel the Lakers to a victory with a spectacular performance. He poured in 18 points in the third quarter as Los Angeles took a 15-point lead, hitting open jumpers and difficult layups with equal aplomb.

His previous two playoff games under the same conditions were similarly outstanding. Bryant scored 31 points against the Houston Rockets in the first round, and 42 points against San Antonio in the second round.

Kevin Garnett had 28 points, 13 rebounds and nine assists while desperately trying to keep the Timberwolves close in what he dubbed a must-win game.

But the grim-faced league MVP was no match for the free-wheeling Lakers' most thrilling performance of the series. With everything from Kobe's unbelievable finishes to Shaq's basket-rocking dunks, Los Angeles finally returned to its Showtime roots.

All-Star Sam Cassell's injuries kept one of the starting line-up and limited him to five minutes for Minnesota. Derek Fisher thrived in Cassell's absence, scoring 15 points for the Lakers.

Game 5 is Saturday night in Minneapolis if the Timberwolves win. Game 6 will be Monday back in Los Angeles.

After one of the most tumultuous regular seasons in recent league history, the Lakers have reclaimed the aura of invincibility that surrounded them during three straight championship runs from 2000-02.

The Lakers' infighting and confusion have abated while winning seven of their last eight games — and Bryant's teammates say he's more focused than ever.

Bryant walked into the locker room at Staples Center shortly before 5 p.m. PDT — more than an hour before tipoff, and less than three hours after he left the courthouse in Eagle, Colo., and hopped on a private jet.

The Lakers made a 15-2 run in the second quarter and took a five-point lead to halftime — and that's when Bryant took over. Kobe brought down the house with a third-quarter layup — beating Wally Szczerbiak to the baseline, keeping to feet contact from Michael Olowokandi and reverse-banking a shot off the glass.

Colorado reinstates football coach

The Associated Press

BOULDER, Colo. — Calling it the right thing to do, the president of the University of Colorado reinstated suspended football coach Gary Barnett on Thursday and said no one will lose their jobs for one of the worst college athletics scandals in years.

"I do not believe that coaches and administrators at this university knowingly used sex, alcohol and drugs as recruiting tools," President Lesly Hoffman said at a crowded news conference. "It is clear that in a few isolated instances, recruits attended parties where they consumed alcohol and had sexual encounters. That is unacceptable and we are taking steps to see that this kind of behavior does not occur again."

Hoffman and Richard Bynny, the chancellor of the flagship Boulder campus, also detailed a "sweeping" overhaul of the athletics department intended to boost oversight, clamp down on its autonomy and place a new emphasis on academic achievement.

Barnett and athletics director Richard Tharp will remain in place to help implement the changes.

Lightning show fire in Game 2 rout

By Alari Robinson

Associated Press writer

TAMPA, Fla. — The Tampa Bay Lightning showed they can play defense even on nights when it takes time to show off their flash and dash.

They evened the Stanley Cup final because they did.

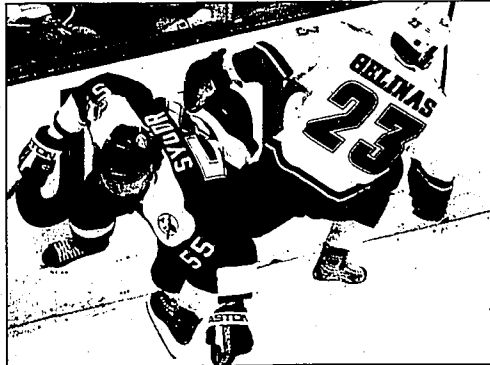

Ruslan Fedotenko ended Calgary's 10-game first-period shutout streak with a goal and the Lightning won what their captain called a must-win game, beating the Flames 4-1 Thursday night.

Game 3 is Saturday night in Calgary, where the Flames are only 4-5. Tampa Bay is 5-2 on the road, but has lost its last two.

The Lightning capitalized on a deficient Calgary power play — 0-for-5 in the first two periods — and their own patience to break the game open with goals by Brad Richards, Dan Boyle and Martin St. Louis in the first six minutes of the third period.

Dave Andreychuk, the 40-year Tampa Bay captain who finally reached the Stanley Cup final in his 22nd NHL season, assisted

CSI's Walker steps back, but stays in batter's box

By Kevin Colbert

Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — It's hard to imagine Jim "Skip" Walker will ever retire. But after 30 years as head coach of the College of Southern Idaho baseball team, the colorful, grizzled skipper is at least taking a step in that direction.

At the beginning of the 2005 season, Walker's son Justin "Boomer" Walker will be the man shouting out instructions and making decisions in the Golden Eagle dugout with Skip will remain with the team as hitting instructor and director of baseball operations.

"You almost can't imagine Skip not being around baseball in the spring," Dixie State College head coach Mike Littlewood said. "It wouldn't be natural."

Skip compiled a career record of 1,061-407 in his time at CSI, good for a .723 winning percentage. He guided the Eagles to 12 region titles, nine JUCO World Series and a national title in 1984. He's also been the U.S. Olympic baseball team hitting coach in 1987 and 1988 and coached the U.S. Junior Olympic team in 1989.

And Walker's been more than just a coach. He's essentially built Walker Field on the CSI campus, from the ground up, making it one of the finest fields in all of junior college baseball.

"It's easy to say he's the program," CSI athletics director Jeff Duggan said. "He's so much of the program that all the trees you see around the ballpark were saplings when he planted them."

And now Boomer faces the daunting task of stepping in for an icon, who also just happens to be his father.

"I think you always hear that the worst job to ever have is replacing a legend," he said. "I mean, shoot. That's the tough thing, I mean, it's a great job. It's where I want to be. I love the school and everything. But if you're always trying to meet or exceed what he's done, it's just not going to happen."

Although Skip has known for at least a year that this would be his final season as head coach, it didn't make the reality of the

Turf war: Philly and Bensalem lay claim to Smarty

BENSALERM, Pa. (AP) — Smarty Jones may need a new nickname.

The Kentucky Derby and Preakness winner has been dubbed the 'Philly Flash' or the 'Philly Flyer' while being presented to the country as Philadelphia's first sports champion in more than two decades.

Who can blame Philadelphia sports fans for wanting to latch on to this undefeated colt? They shed tears over last Stanley Cups. They bemoan the big-game failures of big-time teams. They call the all-sports station and spiky-yak a blue streak. They watch the city build new ballparks but rarely see championships.

Then along comes Smarty Jones, the plucky horse that needs only a win in the June 5 Belmont Stakes for a blue Triple Crown since 1978.

Bensalem started snoring when Pennsylvania Gov. Ed Rendell called the colt's Preakness win a great day for Philadelphia, and the city council started talking about a parade down Broad Street — which hasn't staged a celebration for a pro sports team since the 76ers in 1983.

The governor is from Bensalem and didn't create any rushing chances by turning the puck over in the neutral zone.

Fedotenko scored the most important goal, his seventh in nine games, just over seven minutes in. He took Jassen Culmorum's rebound and pushed it toward the net, then swept the puck past Kiprusoff as it lay in the crease.

Lightning's best player most of the night, skated the puck out from behind the net. That goal, Fedotenko's 10th, held until Kiprusoff gave up three in the third period after allowing only two in his previous three games.

Philadelphia. What do you expect him to do?" DiGirolamo said.

City newspapers and news broadcasts have made only cursory mentions of Bensalem. If at all, but the connection to Bensalem runs deeper than Smarty Jones.

Trainer John Servis has lived in Bensalem for parts of almost 24 years and jockey Stewart Elliott also lives in Bucks County. So does exercise rider Pete Van Trump. And while owners Pat and Roy Chapman have caretakerships in Philadelphia, they reside just outside the city.

Servis has tried to stay out of the debate. "He's a horse that America loves," Servis said. "I think he belongs to everybody. Everybody can root for this horse. It doesn't matter where you're from."

But it's been a burr under the saddle for those in Bensalem who want Philadelphians to take their cheesesteaks and stuff it.

"They keep saying it's Philly's horse. It hasn't done much for Bensalem," said Ellis Salzman, of Bensalem. "Philadelphia should back off."

Lightning's best player most of the night, skated the puck out from behind the net. That goal, Fedotenko's 10th, held until Kiprusoff gave up three in the third period after allowing only two in his previous three games. The outburst came just after Calgary might have been worn down killing off a 5-0-3 Tampa Bay advantage during an extended power play.

WNBA's Sun down Sparks

UNCASVILLE, Conn. (AP) — Katie Douglas scored 25 points and Nykesha Sales added 19 Thursday, leading the Connecticut Sun to its first win, 82-73 over the Los Angeles Sparks.

Sun rookie Lindsay Whalen and Katie Douglas scored seven assists and the Sun shot 51 percent (28-of-55) to snap a two-game shooting slump. The Sun had not shot better than 36 percent in their first two games.

Miyabi Mubika led the Sparks (1-2) with 21 points. Lisa Leslie and DeLasha Milton-Jones each added 12.

It was the second straight 20-plus game for Douglas, who hit 4-of-7 3-pointers. She had 21 points and six 3-pointers on Connecticut's 66-50 loss to Houston two days earlier. On this night, Douglas had plenty of help.

Walker

Continued from D1. situation any easier. It hit him like a ton of bricks when the Eagles recalled him to Dixie State 11-6 nearly two weeks ago during the Region 18 tournament in the team's final game of the year.

"It wasn't so much emotional as it was probably just down," Skips recalled. "It's like, I've done all this and worked all this and worked my butt off and all of a sudden, it's over."

The legacy

Skip's work hasn't gone unnoticed, especially in the Scenic West Athletic Conference.

"It is the conference," Littlewood said. "When I can't in eight years ago, we learned from Skip. We saw how he ran his program, how he did things, his organization, how his team carries themselves."

"We tried to pick up on those things and implement them into our program," he continued. "He's helped me run my program just from watching him. When you say, 'What is his legacy?' I think he is the legacy."

It can be hard to narrow 30 years of memories down to just a few favorite moments, but Walker managed to do so. The first came in the Golden Eagles' first-ever win in the JUCO World Series, in 1975. Although that was the only game CSI won that tournament, it provided a springboard for future success.

Indians 9, Mariners 5

CLEVELAND — Jake Westbrook (4-2) managed to make it through five innings, allowing four runs and seven hits in five innings as the Indians ended their season-high losing streak at seven.

Westbrook managed to make it through five innings, allowing four runs and seven hits in five innings. "Nobody expected us to do anything," Walker said. "I didn't have real high expectations because we weren't really good and we just a club that really overlooked. We played our hearts out."

The second shining moment came during the 2003 season when Walker won his 1,000th game.

"That's something that was always my goal," Walker said. "Only a couple of guys have gotten that milestone."

The game has changed since Walker has coached at CSI. "I'm a guy that has a lot of high expectations and a lot of pressure on players, and it's harder to make those demands work in today's baseball and today's athletes," he said. "Back then, we said, 'Hey, this is the way it's going to be. Let's go play and let's win.' Now, you find a lot of kids don't have the same expectations you do."

Birthday

Or James Bond creator Ian Fleming, former mayor of New York Rudolph Giuliani, or song legends Gladys Knight and John Fogerty.

So most importantly, there's former Hollywood bombshell Carroll Baker, who I share a birthday and a film credit with. Baker played evil mariachi and would-be kidnapper Eleanor Crisp in camp pickup game "Theater's crowning theatrical achievement," "Kindergarten Cop." Baker got to shoot the world's greatest action hero and was paid at least six figures for her role in the movie. My stellar — yet unpaid — portrayal of "Nine-year-old with backpack" No. 3 was left on the cutting room floor.

So maybe I'm still reaching for the stars. But I'll always have a birthday in common with Squalls' knees, streaks shooting and receding hairlines. I've yet to be traded for Muggsy

Lightning

Continued from D1. on Richards' and St. Louis' goals in a game he said the Lightning absolutely could not lose. And they didn't.

Lightning goalie Nikolai Khabibulin, looking far more confident than he did Tuesday, had a shutout until Ville Nieminen scored midway through the third period. Khabibulin improved to 5-0 following a loss, allowing only five goals in those five games. Calgary, sixth-seeded in the Western Conference and one of the most unexpected finalists in years, hoped to win its sixth straight on the road. Despite the final score, it had chances do it.

Mikka Kiprusoff kept it to 1-0 through two periods with a succession of key saves. But the Flames never got their forecheck going like they did in Game 1. They had no odd-

Less than perfect

Williams sisters still manage to capture wins

PARIS (AP) — With favorites falling all around, Serena Williams took herself out of a loss. Her sister Venus spoke French more fluently than she played.

Ever the perfectionists, the siblings weren't too pleased with how things went Thursday at the French Open. Still, both managed to move into the third round — something neither the defending champions nor any American man can boast.

White shadows creeping across the court, and a determined opponent matching her shot for shot, Serena came back twice from substantial deficits to pull out a 4-6, 6-2, 6-4 victory over 17-year-old Russian Maria Kirilenko.

As surprising as it would have been for a six-time Grand Slam tournament champion to lose to a neophyte, it somehow would have made sense at this upside-down event.

While it's the first time in more than 30 years a major's third round won't include a single American man, six U.S. women did make it that far: the Williams sisters, No. 5 Lindsay Davenport, No. 7 Jennifer Capriati, Meghann Shaughnessy and Marissa Irvin.

"I guess it will just be up to us to keep America alive here," said Capriati, the 2001 champion, who defeated Koeta Peschke 7-5, 6-3 after trailing 5-3 in the first set.

"On red clay, everyone is going to be tough. As you can see from other matches, it's tough for everybody."

With Venus and their mother watching in the stands, Serena needed every bit of her substantial resolve to eliminate Kirilenko, the 2002 U.S. Open junior champion.

The slender Kirilenko, ranked 100th, switched speeds effectively, but she also stood firm during extended exchanges from the baseline — even without the benefit of Serena's muscles. After putting her racket on a 120 mph pace, Kirilenko shook her right hand in the air, as if to say, "That stings!"

She even drew applause from Serena for one backhand winner off a drop shot.

First down a set and a break, then trailing by two games in the third set, Serena just kept chatting with herself. She'd slap herself on the thigh while muttering after an error. A "Yes!" or "Come on!" would follow a winner.

She tossed her racket a few feet after slapping a forehead into the net to give Kirilenko a 3-2 edge in the final set — then didn't lose another game.

"I pretty much stood out there and told myself to keep fighting," said the 2002 champion.

"I'm going to be on the practice court all day tomorrow."

Odds are, she'll be there with her sister, Venus, trailed 3-0 against Jelena Kostanic before winning 6-3, 6-3, despite 27 unforced errors — one more than Serena.

As Venus left the court, a local TV reporter asked if they could speak in French. Displaying an impressive accent, Venus said, "I'm very happy to be here in Paris. I hope to win here."

Later, Venus dwelled on her errors, rather than the day's result, which improved her to 17-0 on clay this season.

"I hate mistakes in everything, not just on the court," she said, adding, "Sometimes, I haven't worked hard enough. Sometimes, I've wanted it too much. Sometimes, I haven't wanted it enough. Sometimes, I didn't listen to my coaches. Sometimes, I didn't listen to myself."

Serena insists she ignores fans while playing but they probably helped her Thursday.

During her bitter loss to Ilenia-Fiammette in last year's semifinals, the crowd turned on Williams after she questioned line calls. They stooped to cheating errors.

She earned extra empathy in Thursday's first set by conceding that one of Kirilenko's service returns was in — although it was called out. Serena drew applause, the point was replayed, she missed a forehand, and Kirilenko wound up breaking to lead 5-2. In the last set, with Kirilenko up 4-3 and serving, the fans did the wave, delaying play for about a minute.

Unused to such a spectacle, Kirilenko promptly double-faulted twice, was broken at 15, and never recovered.

"I mostly lost my concentration," she said. "It was terrible."

SORE RIBS, CRAMPS AND RUSSIAN

All appear too much for Ferrero

PARIS (AP) — Juan Carlos Ferrero failed to live up to his nickname Thursday. Numbled by painkillers for sore ribs and overcome by leg cramps, the man known as "the Mosquito" for his boundless energy moved in slow motion, failing to get shots he normally would reach.

As a result, the defending French Open champion lost in the second round to Igor Andrejev 6-4, 6-2, 6-3.

"I couldn't play my best tennis today," said Ferrero, who had never lost before the semifinals in four previous appearances at the French Open.

Ferrero nearly withdrew because of bruised ribs before the tournament and played only after receiving painkiller injections. On Thursday, the ribs felt fine but his left leg began cramping midway through the match.

"It's pretty difficult to stay in the match with two injuries," he said.

While Ferrero lost, top-ranked Roger Federer and three-time champion Gustavo Kuerten advanced. They'll meet Saturday in the third round.

"It's a great match for the tournament and for us," said Federer, the reigning Wimbledon and Australian Open champion, who seeks his first French Open title. "I can get through him ... It's a huge step."

Federer improved to 34-3 this year by beating Nicolas Pietrangeli 6-3, 6-4, 7-6 (6).

Kuerten, a former world No. 1, won his French Open titles in 2001, 2000 and 1997. Since hip surgery in February 2002, the Brazilian hasn't advanced past the fourth round at any Grand Slam event.

Ferrero said he'd be out early in the tournament. The 28th-seeded Kuerten snuffed out sweeping Gilles Elsenker 6-2, 6-0, 6-3.

During the match, Kuerten said he felt pain from his hip in spite of medication.

"I'm trying to take the pain away, but it's not easy," he said, adding that his match against Federer promised to be "a great, great challenge."

Defending champion Juan Carlos Ferrero of Spain returns the ball to Igor Andrejev of Russia during their second round match in the French Open tennis tournament at the Roland Garros stadium in Paris, Thursday.

"It's pretty difficult to defend a title when you're not 100 percent," said the Spaniard, whose departure matched the earliest by a defending men's champion at Roland Garros.

It became worse in the third set. Ferrero stopped chasing down balls and sent basic baseline returns into the net, cocking his head back and roaring in anger when he flubbed an easy forehand.

"In the third set, when I started feeling really in pain, there wasn't too much I could do about my tennis."

Andrejev, a Russian ranked 77th, was playing at Roland Garros for the first time. He closed out the victory with an ace, then collapsed to the clay.

"It's like all the dreams become true," he said. "Center court, the guy who won last year, and he was No. 1 in the world — and I could beat him. It's unbelievable."

Andrejev faces Frenchman Julien Benneteau in the third round.

No. 12-seeded Leyton Hewitt eliminated Jürgen Melzer 6-4, 6-4, 4-6, 6-2. The Australian, a two-time Grand Slam champion, has never advanced beyond the quarterfinals at Roland Garros.

"I don't think with my style of game I can totally be counted out," Hewitt said.

He'll next play No. 19 Martin Verkerk, the runner-up last year. Verkerk hit 17 aces and won when Victor Hanescu retired with cramps trailing 4-6, 6-3, 3-6, 6-0, 3-0.

Time now for Barnett to rebuild reputation

It's easy to ruin a reputation, tough to rebuild it. Colorado football coach Gary Barnett was an obvious target for anyone looking to blame somebody for the dirty and foolish business that seemed to be going on — in Boulder and around the rest of college sports.

To critics, he epitomized the aloof, crass coach, a guy who put winning ahead of ethics, who stood up for his players even if they were wrong, and who turned a blind eye to violations.

The allegations could hardly have been more serious than the ones leveled at Colorado's football program: at least nine women accusing football players of rape since 1997, and reports that the school routinely sought to lure football recruits with alcohol and sex.

Barnett didn't do himself any favors when he said during a interview that one of the women alleging rape, former Buffaloes kicker Katie Hnida, was a "terrible" player. It was a sound bite that got clipped from the questions that led up to it, not a justification for an alleged assault. Still, it was enough to label him an insensitive oaf.

He offended some, too, by saying he would "back" a player accused of assaulting a 19-year-old athletics department worker in 2001.

"I just think he should be gone. Gone, gone, gone — once those words came out of his mouth," Rep. Jan Schakowsky, D-Ill., said, weighing in from Congress just last week. "The fact that he isn't is a very loud message."

University president Betsy Hoffman seized on those sound bites to put Barnett on paid administrative leave Feb. 18, pending the outcome of an independent probe into the football program.

At the same time, the police, district attorney, and state attorney general — appointed by the governor as a special prosecutor in the case — stepped up the investigation into the rape accusations. When all the reports were done, no charges were filed against players and no evidence emerged that Barnett or any other Colorado official "knowingly sanctioned" misbehavior.

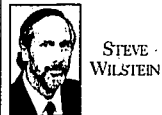

The investigating panel did conclude that sex, alcohol and drugs were common when players hosted high school recruits, and it criticized Barnett for lax oversight and a slow reaction. But the panel also laid considerable blame for the same things on Hoffman, the chancellor and the athletic director.

Colorado has a well-earned reputation as a party school — read that to mean plenty of sex, alcohol and drugs — that goes back long before Barnett showed up five years ago.

If he didn't crack down on his players enough, he didn't exactly encourage them to run wild. He has disciplined 34 players for breaking rules since arriving.

There's blame enough to go around everywhere in Boulder, not least to the students, whether they're athletes or not. Blame the bars, blame the strip joints, blame the parents, blame the culture. Everyone and no one is responsible just as much as the football coach.

Barnett was put back on the job Thursday and he deserved to be. He never should have been put on leave in the first place. Hoffman overreacted to that sound bite rather than just telling Barnett to keep his mouth shut.

Hoffman said the athletics department will be restructured as part of "sweeping" changes to reduce its autonomy and install greater accountability. Athletics director Richard Tharp also kept his job. In the end, not much changed.

"Did coach Barnett say things that I and others have found offensive? The answer is yes. And for that he has paid a price," Hoffman said.

She said Barnett was described by athletes and others as a solid mentor and tough disciplinarian worth keeping.

Barnett did not attend Hoffman's news conference but issued a statement, saying he's "dedicated to leading a socially responsible program that will be a source of pride to the school, athletically and academically."

"To do that, Colorado will have to address issues of the campus culture not just the coaching."

The wounds of this story will not end immediately, Barnett was hurt and so was his family. The school's reputation and the football program suffered. The women who alleged rape didn't see any justice, either because they refused to testify or because prosecutors decided they lacked enough evidence to win in court.

Barnett sensed last week that he would be reinstated after the investigating panel handed in its report. Asked if he felt vindicated, he thought about everything that happened and how the findings would be seen by others.

"We waited so long to get through this process. I'm not sure of the word I'd use to explain how I feel," he told The Associated Press. "I'm not relieved, because I didn't expect them to find anything. I'm not happy, because I didn't want to go through this process. Vindication is probably the best word."

"I knew there wasn't anything there, so I knew they weren't going to do anything important nationally for it to be seen the way it is. For the people who have been out there, skeptical of what's going on, I think it's important for them to see it, not so much that it is for me."

The lessons of this case are many.

Even in the absence of rape charges against any players, it serves as a warning to athletes at Colorado and everywhere else that they risk prosecution if they commit sexual assault.

Colorado and other schools also must become more vigilant about player behavior and more careful about what recruits do on campus visits.

And though serious accusations need to be taken seriously, no one should rush to judgment about who is to blame.

Barnett

The announcement had been eagerly anticipated, in part to see whether anyone would take the fall for a scandal that has helped prompt an NCAA task force and congressional hearings on recruiting.

Nine women since 1997 have accused Colorado football players or recruits of sexual assault, though local prosecutors and the attorney general decided against filing charges. Three of the women have sued Colorado in federal court, saying the school fostered a hostile environment that contributed to their assaults.

The lawsuits are still pending and so is a grand jury investigation believed to be looking into whether university funds were used to hire call girls.

"Victims" advocates said after the announcement that they were worried bigger problems were being brushed aside.

"We don't approve of Barnett in any way shape or form, but this is not just one person's problem," said Cynthia Boone of the Colorado Coalition Against Sexual Assault. "We've seen this problem before under different coaches. That's what we want to see fixed."

Hoffman placed Barnett on paid leave Feb. 18 for comments he made about two of the women. He called former kicker Katie Hnida a "terrible" player hours after she said she had been raped by a teammate in 2000.

Barnett also said he would "back" a player accused of assaulting a 19-year-old athletics department worker in 2001, a statement Hoffman said left her "utterly distressed."

Some in the crowd began to applaud at the news that Barnett would be reinstated, but Hoffman held up a hand to stop them.

"Did coach Barnett say things that I and others have found offensive? The answer is yes. And for that he has paid a price," Hoffman said.

She also said athletes, both men and women, and others had endorsed Barnett as a solid mentor and disciplinarian worth keeping.

Barnett said he was grateful for the support he has received during the scandal and that he appreciated Hoffman's decision. He said he was dedicated to leading "a socially responsible program that will be a source of pride" to the school, athletically and academically.

Sorenstam shoots to tie at LPGA stop

CORNING, N.Y. (AP) — Annika Sorenstam returned from two weeks off to shoot a 7-under 65 on Thursday and the Liselotte Neumann for the first-round lead at the Corning Classic.

The two Swedes were one shot ahead of Natalie Gulbis, Lee Ann Walker-Cooper, Audra Burks and Nancy Harvey. Carina Matthew, Michelle Estril, Hilary Lunke, and Shriani Steinhauer, who won the Sybase Classic a week ago, were another shot back at 67. Defending champion Juli Inkster finished at 1-over 73.

Golf roundup

Although Sorenstam hadn't played Corning since finishing in a tie for seventh in 1995, her second year on tour, she was greeted warmly at every turn by spectators eager to see the game's most heralded female player.

Sorenstam shot 31 over the final nine holes.

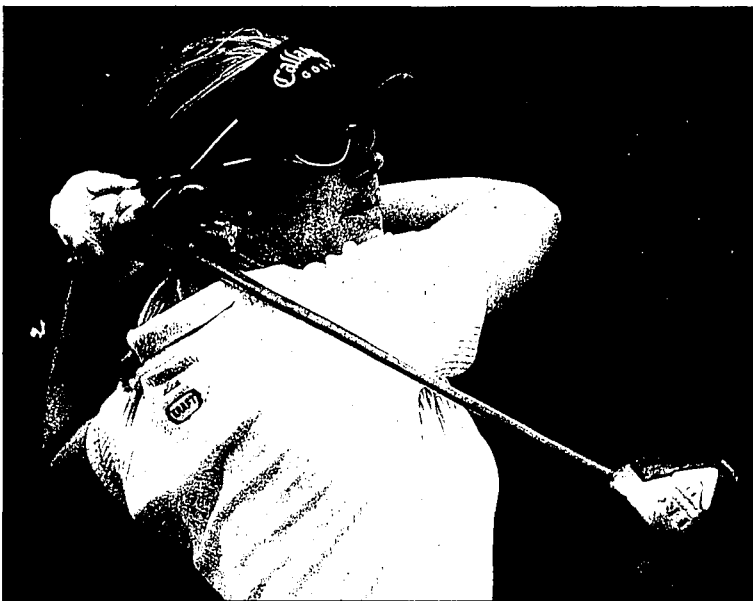

A near-perfect day with light winds and temperatures in the high 70s made conditions ideal for low scores, and the players took advantage.

Taylor shoots 5-under 66 at TPC at Southwind

MEMPHIS, Tenn. — Switching his putting grip helped Vaughn Taylor fix his stroke on the greens.

Taylor needed only 24 putts Thursday for a 5-under 66 that gave him a one-stroke lead over defending champion David Toms and Paul Stankovskiy after the first round of the St. Jude Classic.

The former Nationwide Tour golfer grabbed the lead of a tournament that has none of the PGA Tour's top 10 money leaders with seven birdies and two bogeys. That put him in the lead after 18 holes for the first time in 14 PGA events.

Taylor said he rearranged his left hand on his putter after talking with an old teacher recently.

"I just putted really well," he said. "Basically, I hit it decent, kept it play and just basically hit some 20-, 30-footers, chipped in on 18 and just kind of hung in there."

That was enough on a very different TPC at Southwind course, where wind gusts up to 27 mph and dry fairways and greens made scoring very tough.

The last time 66 was the low score after the first round was in 1994.

Only eight golfers broke 70 with Stewart Clark, Zhang Lian-Wai and Hirofumi Miyase tied at 68, followed by Brent Geiberger and Patrick Sheehan (69). Last year, 65 were in the 60s on the 7,103-yard layout where Jay Delsing (1993) and Bob Estes (2001) share the course record of 61.

Irwin, Watson tied for Senior PGA lead

LOUISVILLE, Ky. — A simple adjustment led to a surprising first round for Tom Watson at the Senior PGA Championship. Watson shot a 4-under 67 on Thursday at Valhalla and was tied for the lead with Hale Irwin, who birdied three of his last four holes.

The start of the tournament was delayed two hours after overnight rain drenched the course. Play was suspended because of lightning and 72 players were due back at 7:30 a.m. Friday to finish their opening rounds.

Gil Morgan was 3-under 68 through 15 holes and eight others were at 2 under.

Watson played Thursday morning and wasn't expecting much after struggling on the practice range the previous day. "I worried about it all night," Watson said.

Just before his tee time, Watson remembered a swing change he made after the 2002 PGA Championship and it worked immediately.

"Just a takeaway thought, where I rotate a little bit more," he said. "On the first nine, I hit some pretty good quality shots doing it."

Watson started his round on the par-5 10th and sank a 12-foot birdie putt.

He hit a fairway wood on the fringe on the par-5 10th and two-putted to make the turn in 2 under.

Watson missed the fairway on No. 2, which led to his only bogey.

He reached the par-5 seventh in two and two-putted to take the lead. Then capped his round with a 16-foot birdie putt on No. 9.

"My round was really somewhat unexpected," said Watson. "My confidence is a lot higher now than it was yesterday."

Valhalla is a good place for Watson to rediscover his game. He played well both times it hosted the PGA Championship, finishing tied for 17th in 1996 and tied for ninth in 2000.

Painful legacy: Indy car drivers hobble through life

By Paul Newberry
Associated Press writer

INDIANAPOLIS — Alex Zanardi used to steer clear of parking spots reserved for the handicapped. He wouldn't even walk through those spaces, never wanting to believe he might actually need one.

A racing superstition that became a tragic premonition. "I have to say, I was always afraid of that," Zanardi conceded Wednesday in a telephone interview from his home in Monte Carlo, where he begins the day by attaching a pair of prosthetics to what remains of his legs.

Zanardi is an extreme example — he lost both legs in a 2001 crash in Germany — but he's hardly the only racer hobbling through life with aches and pains that will never go away.

Just look around Indianapolis Motor Speedway.

There's Rick Mears, barely able to lift his feet off the ground as he shuffles painfully through Gasoline Alley. There's Davy Wheldon, teetering on crutches after undergoing surgery for the 21st time in the past three years. There's Pancho Carter, who staggers around like "a peg-leg pirate" — his words — because of a right ankle that doesn't work anymore. There's Kenny Brack, still limping some seven months after a crash that nearly killed him. There's Sam Schmidt, paralyzed from the neck down as he moves through the paddock in a wheelchair.

"Obviously, you don't want something like this to happen," Brack said Wednesday, hopping on a bike to avoid a tedious, painful walk from the garage to his camper.

"It did, unfortunately. But you've got to move on."

These guys paid a high price for the sport they love, sacrificing their bodies in the pursuit of speed. They can't make it through the day without hurting — a harrowing reminder that things will never be the same.

"No pain, no gain," Hamilton said, managing to chuckle at his plight. "I'm not going to lie. I have my days. But I'm determined not to show it. I figure the less I complain, the better off I'm going to be. You just deal with it."

Hamilton was seriously injured in a 2001 crash at Texas Motor Speedway, where the front end of his car sheered off at 200 mph. His lower legs were left exposed, enduring horrific injuries as they dragged along the pavement.

"Muscles were removed from the first doctors to see Hamilton figured amputation was the only option. After being flown back to Indianapolis, surgeons took drastic steps to put things back together."

"His feet were removed from his lower back to rebuild his feet. Bones were removed from his hip to repair his knees. Skin grafts were needed to cover the damage."

"I got took a lot of my good parts," Hamilton said. "To fix the bad ones."

Three weeks ago, he underwent another operation — a minor one, but No. 21 for those keeping count — that left him on crutches.

That didn't keep him from giving rides to fans and corporate bigwigs in a special two-seat Indy car, and it hasn't quenched his desire to get back behind the wheel of the real thing.

He still wants to race.

"That was my life," Hamilton said. "I breathed it. I lived it. I ate it. I'd be lost without it. I don't think I would have recovered like I did, or been as positive as I've made it, without knowing there was a chance to get back in the race car."

Mears, who won the Indy 500 a record four times, is still hindered by debilitating injuries from a crash two decades ago. While thankful that doctors saved his feet, his life was changed forever.

"I can't walk barefooted," he said. "That's probably the one thing I miss the most — walking on a nice, freshly mowed lawn."

Mears did his best to stay away from painkillers, not wanting to get addicted, but wound up relying too heavily on alcohol. In 2002, he twice checked himself into rehab. About the same time, his second marriage broke up.

"I'm sure that (the pain) wasn't all of it, but it sure didn't help any," Mears said.

"You've just got to learn to deal with it and go on down the road."

Carter was hurt while testing at Phoenix in 1977. The wreck damaged nerves in his back, leaving him with limited use of his right leg. New medicines have eased the pain, but nothing will eliminate it.

"A little too much race car rheumatism," Carter joked.

"The costs from a serious crash can be enormous. The Indy Racing League provides medical insurance to the drivers — up to $1 million in some cases — and many of them augment their coverage with policies provided by their teams or paid for out of their own pocket."

From Dream Team to drugs, we may forget Olympics

The Dream Team doesn't look so dreamy anymore. A top row decision he was too scared to go to Athens, and the U.S. baseball team wasn't good enough to go.

Sprinter Kelli White has already been banned from the Olympics, and the drug police are in full pursuit of Marion Jones and other American track stars.

Suddenly terrorism isn't the only thing U.S. Olympic officials have to worry about at the Athens Games. The way things are going, this might be America's summer of discontent.

Remember that goal of the U.S. Olympic Committee set of winning 100 medals?

Forget it.

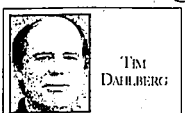

Once implausible, it's now merely laughable.

Between nerves, ineptitude and the steroid scare, the U.S. Olympic effort is in danger of imploding just a few months before the games begin.

Scratch the gold medal won by the U.S. baseball team in Sydney four years ago. The team didn't even make it out of a qualifying round in Mexico this time.

Neither did the American soccer team, though the synchronized swimmers are supposed to be pretty good this year — assuming no one swallows too much water.

Jones won five medals in Sydney for the United States — three of them gold — but the BALCO steroid scandal may snare her and 100-meter world-record holder Tim Montgomery long before they bantled a plane for Greece.

Even the Dream Team isn't guaranteed gold — or any other medal for that matter. Anyone who watched the United States lose three times at home during the world championships two years ago can attest to that.

The way NBA players are dropping off the team, just filling the roster might be an Olympian task all by itself.

Tracy McGrady is the latest Dream Team casualty, a move that cost the team one of its best all-around offensive talents and a player coaches hoped to use as the primary defender against opponents' best players.

McGrady joins a growing list of stars who opted out or said no to either sending an invite. They include Ray Allen, Jason Kidd, Kevin Garnett, Karl Malone, Kobe Bryant, Vince Carter, Elton Brand and Kenyon Martin.

Lermaine O'Neal might join them on the sidelines, although he's waiting until the playoffs are over to make a decision. If his thinking from a few months ago is any indication, don't look for him in a place where he doesn't feel safe.

"It definitely sits on your mind," O'Neal said. "If you wanted to send a message to the world, what better place is there to do it?"

That question was apparently also on the mind of rower Xeno Muller, a two-time Swiss Olympic medalist who was favored to make the U.S. team in singles sculls.

Last week Muller was getting ready to paddle his boat at the U.S. rowing trials on Lake Mercer in New Jersey. Instead, he paddled to shore five minutes before the race and said he wasn't going.

"When you have three children and a wife and you leave them, then leave them again to go overseas, and you see somebody's head getting cut off... you start having clouds in your head for why you want to proceed like this, with all the responsibility about traveling, leaving the family at home," Muller said.

You wouldn't expect U.S. boxers to be nervous, but even they are.

"I want to go live a dream, not live a nightmare," welterweight Jason Martínez said.

Indeed, those heading the American delegation of more than 500 athletes have plenty to worry about.

This won't be anything like it was four years ago, when Sydney welcomed Americans with open arms and athletes responded by bringing home 37 medals.

Former Notre Dame hoops player loses hand in Iraq

Notre Dame coach Muffet McGraw said she got a call from a friend of Green's on Wednesday saying Green had been injured.

"It was just a shock to hear she had been injured because she had said that her job was going to keep her on the sidelines," McGraw said.

The athletic department at Chicago State, where Green was an assistant women's coach in 2002, said Thursday she lost her hand this week during a rocket-propelled grenade attack while she was on duty at a Baghdad police station.

Notre Dame said Green also sustained significant injuries to her left leg.

CONCORD, N.C. (AP) — Bobby Labonte enjoys coming to Lowe's Motor Speedway for all the obvious reasons — it's close to home, the facilities are second to none and no one has more recent success at the track.

Since getting his first Nextel Cup victory there in 1995, Labonte has continued to run up front.

His average finish of 4.7 over the past 10 races at the track is by far the best, well ahead of Mark Martin's 9.4.

He added a second win in October 2000, and he has three poles since joining Joe Gibbs Racing.

Labonte's record at Atlanta Motor Speedway, which has a similar design to Lowe's, also is swayed by victories and an average finish of 6.6.

"Over the course of the years, it just seems those tracks are more to my liking," Labonte said Wednesday.

"There's no rhyme or reason to it, other than I like both of them and it seems to favor our technique as far as setups go and also my driving style."

"That history at Lowe's hardly helped last weekend, when Labonte finished 15th in the Nextel All-Star Challenge. He struggled throughout the night and was the final car on the lead lap.

Not only was the handling of his car off, but a vibration forced his crew to adjust the drive shaft after the first of three segments.

Normally, a change like that only happens during practice or testing.

"I just figured, we weren't going to fix whatever our problems were, we might as well see if we could stop the vibration," Labonte said.

"It wasn't that big of a deal."

Maybe he got his bad luck out of the way in time for Sunday's Coca-Cola 600.

"We screwed up, but I just missed it a little bit," Labonte said. "If there was a time to have anything, I'd rather it be last weekend."

While Labonte was plotting along in the all-star race, Gibbs teammate Tony Stewart was running away with a victory in the opening 40 laps. He eventually finished third and added to his own history of success at the track.

Stewart has six top-five finishes in the past 10 races at Lowe's, including a win last fall. In that span, he has led 414 laps, a total that trails only Labonte and Jeff Burton.

Finding the reason for the team's good runs is about the only thing that slows down

Stewart and Labonte.

"There's just something about Atlanta and Charlotte that we both like," Stewart said. "It's nothing about the track in particular. It's just something the crew chiefs have found with the package, and we seem to get around those two tracks pretty well."

Doing the 'double' is more mental than physical

When I try to win both the Indianapolis 500 and NASCAR Coca-Cola 600 this Sunday, I'll be depending on my own ability, plus two cars, two pit crews, one doctor — and a time machine.

ROBBY GORDON

I've been asked many times this month what the most difficult part of racing a combined 1,100 miles at Indy and Charlotte will be for me. Since this is the third consecutive year I've done the "double," I have the benefit of experience. A lot of challenges are ahead, but I don't think there's one problem that's more daunting than another.

Really, it's a matter of preparation, figuring out in advance what the issues are and dealing with each of them well before Indy's green flag waves at 10 a.m. EDT.

I'm fortunate to have some very good people working with me to coordinate all the details. That's what allows me to concentrate on my job, driving the Meijer/Dollar-General at Indy, and then the Cingular Wireless Chevy at Charlotte.

Two practical considerations, however, are transportation and physical endurance.

Traveling the 600 miles from Indianapolis to Charlotte for the 5:30 p.m. start will be my biggest race against the clock. That's where what I call the "time machine" comes into play — Textron has loaned me a Glaxo X jet for the trip. I'll take a helicopter from the Indy infield to the local airport and another one from the Concord, N.C., airport to Lowe's Motor Speedway.

With a little help from air traffic controllers, we're hoping to go from track-to-track in about two hours.

I've discovered that doing the "double" is more mental than physical, at least for me.

There's no doubt, though, the effects of 3.5 G-loads in the turns at Indy and a humid night in Charlotte will strain my 35-year-old body.

Dr. Jay Golding, Richard Childress Racing's team physician, will make the trip with me and administer IV fluids en route to Charlotte while I relax. For years my pre-race ritual has been to eat a turkey sandwich, but on Sunday morning, I plan instead to drink plenty of liquids.

There's so much wind rushing past you in an open-cockpit Indy car that you don't have the same sense of heat buildup and dehydration as in a fully enclosed stock car.

Two years ago, I got severe stomach cramps during the Coca-Cola 600 because I'd lost more body fluids than I realized. I won't let that happen again.

As for the two races, I'm optimistic. That's my nature. Qualifying 18th at Indianapolis was a disappointment, but a crash and rain put our team in a hole. Within 15 minutes, I was thinking about how to make the car good for the race.

After qualifications, I made it a point to practice in traffic, so I could feel how the turbulence created by other machines would affect my handling.

The winner almost always has a great handling car, and that's especially important if it's a sunny, hot day because that makes the track slick.

"Trust me. An unstable car is not a fast car — and not fun to drive!"

I expect Charlotte will be the tougher race, for several reasons. It's longer, obviously, and a stock car is almost 2,000 pounds heavier than an Indy car.

I won't arrive in time for the drivers' meeting and the penalty for that will force me to start 43rd — last.

The level of competition in NASCAR isn't as high there probably will be 25 cars capable of winning verses 12 to 15 at Indianapolis.

I'm sure Indy fans assume I want to win the 500 more than Charlotte, while NASCAR fans think the opposite because my full-time job is in that series. I don't look at it that way.

Yes, winning Indy would fulfill my boyhood dream, but I also know how fortunate I am to be racing for Richard Childress in one of America's most popular sports and how huge the Cup championship has become in this country.

So, if I'm lucky enough to turn into victory lane at Indianapolis, I'll proudly drink from the traditional bottle of milk — then immediately race off to Charlotte and try my absolute best to do it again.

Longview Fibre profit increases

LONGVIEW, Wash. — Longview Fibre Co., the Washington-based operator of a Twin Falls container plant, reported second-quarter net income of $5.9 million, a significant increase over the $1.4 million profit in the same quarter a year ago.

It also represents a turnaround from the first quarter's net loss of $9.3 million.

The Longview-based timber products company said the increased profit was due to surging second-quarter sales of $213.4 million, compared with $181.6 million for the same period last year.

"In our second quarter, operations and demand steadily improved in each of our three operating divisions, in pleasing contrast to our first quarter," said R. H. Wollenberg, chairman, president and CEO, in a statement.

"As a result of very favorable spring weather across the Northwest, we were able to sell nearly 86 million board feet of timber more than offsetting the first quarter shortfall caused by severe winter weather, and returning us to our intended full year harvest plan."

Timber segment sales increased notably to $14 million from $39.5 million a year ago, and operating profit nearly doubled, to $31.9 million, compared with the same period last year.

Log sales increased 54.8 percent on a 35.1 percent volume increase, coupled with a 13.7 percent increase in average log prices.

Costco 3Q profit surges 29 percent

ISSAQUAH, Wash. — Costco Wholesale Corp., the largest wholesale club operator in the country, said profit for its latest quarter jumped 29 percent amid surging sales and membership fees.

Costco — which operates a Twin Falls store — Thursday posted net income of $198.7 million, or 42 cents a share, for its fiscal third quarter ended May 9, compared with $153.8 million, or 33 cents a share, in the same quarter a year earlier.

Revenue rose 14 percent to $10.9 billion from $9.54 billion.

Net sales also increased 14 percent to $10.67 billion from $9.34 billion, and membership fees climbed 13 percent to $224.5 million from $198.1 million.

Sales at stores open at least a year, also known as same-store sales, rose 11 percent.

Costco operates 433 stores in the United States, Canada, the United Kingdom, Korea, Taiwan, Japan and Mexico.

The company plans to open seven to nine new stores by Aug. 29, the end of its fiscal year.

Costco had revenue of $42.55 billion for the year ended Aug. 31, 2003.

The warehouse stores offer up to 4,500 discounted products, often in bulk.

Agency will decide machines' fate

By Megan Hinds
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — The Twin Falls Urban Renewal Agency will hold a special meeting today as part of the "unraveling of the Hydro Fitting deal," an agency official said Thursday.

Decisions made at today's meeting will determine the fate of four machines purchased by the agency as part of the city's incentive package for the Covina, Calif.-based company, which decided this month not to relocate in Twin Falls, said Dave McAlindin, Twin Falls' economic development director.

The city's incentive package for Hydro Fitting included a $200,000 gift from Twin Falls' Urban Renewal Agency, for a write down the cost of property for a new plant; an application by the city for a Community Development Block Grant for infrastructure work, but with no guarantee of securing the state grant; and the establishment of a training class by the College of Southern Idaho.

The $200,000 gift from Urban Renewal was tentatively set aside to help Hydro Fitting buy about 4.25 acres in the Magic Valley Business Park for its new manufacturing plant. But the agency in February voted to use the money instead to buy several computer-numeric-controlled lathes for the CSI course, under the condition that Hydro Fitting would buy the machines from the city on the company's arrival in Twin Falls.

Hydro Fitting co-owner Seth Schwartz has made an offer to Urban Renewal to buy the machines from the city for use in Hydro Fitting's California plant, McAlindin said.

The agency's board will vote today to accept or deny Schwartz's bid.

"We hope to have the equipment back in (Hydro Fitting's) hands soon," McAlindin said.

Meanwhile, the machines are still in use by CSI's machining technology program, which is slated to end June 18.

DeVere Burton, CSI's instructional dean, said students enrolled in the class will complete the program as scheduled, despite the failure of the Hydro Fitting venture.

"We've got a number of people that will be looking for jobs," Burton said. "We're going to try to get these people placed."

While students won't have jobs at Hydro Fitting to look forward to, there are a number of small machine shops in Magic Valley — as well as precision metal parts maker Seastrom Manufacturing — that may look to hire graduates of the machining technology program, he said.

Burton estimated the number of small machine shops in Magic Valley at "around 10 to 15."

"And I know there are a lot more out there that I don't know about," he added.

There are tentative plans in the works to secure more CNC machines — with the help of industry partners — for additional training courses, Burton said. But the future of the machining technology program ultimately will depend on the number of program graduates who find jobs in the area.

"If we find placements for the people we have, that will be the gauge to see if we'll proceed with this program," Burton said.

"If they find placements, then we can try to continue."

"If we don't find placements, then we'll have to re-evaluate the situation."

Teen labor

Farmworkers pick strawberries in a field west of Santa Maria, Calif., Monday. Growers say they try to avoid hiring underage teens but cannot prevent them from slipping through with fake identification.

More teen laborers work on California farms

The Associated Press

SANTA MARIA, Calif. — In some ways, Apollinar Ramirez Garcia, who died in a car crash near Sluocue this month, was a typical 17-year-old boy: He had a way with girls, and he loved to dance.

But most of Apollinar's life as a teenager was not so carefree. At the time of his death on May 4, driving home after a 10-hour day picking lettuce, he had been working full time in the fields of the Santa Maria Valley for three years. He did not attend school.

Apollinar's death brings into sharp relief one of the open secrets of the valley's lucrative strawberry and vegetable operations — child labor. In some ways, farmworkers say it is nothing new. Underage workers have always labored full time in the fields here. But what's different now, they say, is that more teens than ever seem to be emigrating from Mexico and heading straight for the fields — so many that some of the older workers fear for their own jobs.

A young farmworker shows her hands, stained from strawberries after a long day picking the fruit Monday in Santa Maria, Calif.

"The bosses want young and strong persons, recently arrived here," said Pedro Lopez, who heads the United Mixtec Farmworkers Organization in Santa Maria. "Young people will work faster. And if you're older and you live here, they know you know your rights."

Superior Court Judge Barbara

Beck of Santa Maria, who presides over the county's juvenile court, notes an apparent influx of teen immigrants.

"I'm seeing very young kids, 15 and 16 years old, coming into the country," Judge Beck said. "It's getting more prevalent than it was. I don't know what kind of papers they have. They're working in the fields, at car washes and fast food places that don't have the ability to check for IDs."

Many immigrant parents, such as Apollinar Ramirez, Apollinar's father, say they depend on their children's wages.

"I would never blame the growers," Ramirez said. "... We poor people have to find a way to get ahead. You never know what the future holds. So you lie to the bosses and you tell them you're 18. It's a necessity of life."

On paper, at least, the rules governing child labor in California are strict. They were enacted to protect children from physical harm and put an end to the "cycle of poverty" by requiring that children attend school. Yet in practice, state officials say, there is an underground economy in California agriculture that makes it easy to exploit undocumented workers, including children.

Last year, the California Department of Industrial Relations uncovered only 26 violations of child labor law in agriculture, Please see TEENS, Page E2

Economy grows at 4.4 percent rate

The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The economy grew at a 4.4 percent annual rate in the first quarter of this year, slightly faster than previously thought, and fresh evidence that the recovery possessed good momentum as it headed into the current quarter.

The increase in gross domestic product from January through March reported by the Commerce Department on Thursday marked an improvement from both the 4.2 percent pace first estimated for the quarter a month ago and the 4.1 percent growth rate registered in the final quarter of 2003.

The GDP measures the value of all goods and services produced within the United States. While the latest reading was just shy of the 4.5 percent pace that some analysts were forecasting, it nevertheless represented a solid performance.

Separately, the Labor Department reported that new applications for unemployment benefits dropped last week by a seasonally adjusted 3,000 to 344,000, another hopeful sign for a labor market recovery.

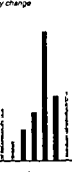

On Wall Street, the good economic news helped give stocks a lift. The Dow Jones industrials were up 72 points and the Nasdaq was up around 2 points in late-morning trading.

Delta says it's committed to Salt Lake during celebration

The Associated Press

SALT LAKE CITY — Financially troubled Delta Air Lines reaffirmed its commitment to Salt Lake City during a ceremony honoring the carrier's 75th year in business.

The carrier threw a 75th anniversary party Wednesday at Salt Lake City International Airport, commemorating the company's first flight June 17, 1929, from Dallas to Jackson, Miss.

The Atlanta-based airline welcomed corporate and community dignitaries at its celebration, which featured a restored Douglas DC-3, originally flown by Delta in the 1940s, and a specially painted "Spirit of Delta" Boeing 767 purchased for Delta by its employees in 1982.

"There are a lot of challenges facing the industry, but Delta has been an absolutely spectacular part of the solutions and a tremendous partner to Salt Lake City," said Mayor Rocky Anderson.

Delta Air Lines launched its Salt Lake service on April 28, 1980, with four daily flights to Atlanta, Denver, Dallas/Fort Worth and Reno, Nev. It solidified its presence with the acquisition of Western Airlines in 1987, when it also made Salt Lake City one of its hub airports.

Stocks move higher on strong GNP data

It's hard to find miners who are working, said Dan Fryer, a department spokesman. "When we see child labor, we go after it. But it may not be reported. Parents want the kids to work, and they need the money."

The work crews move frequently, by the time we get out on these things they have moved on. Compounding the problem, Fryer said, is the shrinking number of investigators who can conduct surprise sweeps in the fields.

Child labor laws apply to all minors under 18 here, including undocumented immigrants. Children under 16 are required to attend school full time.

Minors under 18 must have a permit from a school district to work, and employers are required to keep these permits on file.

worked their way through the markets, with investors finally focusing on positive fundamentals including strong consumption and business spending.

"The perception of bad stuff has been priced in," Lynch said. "Interest rates, oil prices, yes, they could see to limit growth. But I think investors are really thinking that this is all priced in."

The fine violation carries a fine of $500 — for the employer, not the minor — and the fine for each successive violation is $1,000.

In a sweep of eight Santa Maria Valley fields earlier this month, state investigators discovered one child labor violation — the young worker did not have a permit — and they fined the grower, Ruby Farming Inc., $500. On the same day, by contrast, two other Santa Maria farms were fined $36,000 for failing to provide workers' compensation insurance for their employees.

"There are so many rules involved in hiring people under 18 years of age that we do not hire them," said Daron Gies of DAB Specialty Farms, a grower with a reputation that employs more than 1,000 workers in the valley. State records show that the farm was targeted in this month's sweep, but received no fines.

It's a day of clarity." According to preliminary calculations, the Dow Jones industrial average was up 95.31, or 0.9 percent, at 10,205.20. The Dow last closed above that level on May 6, and has risen 246.77, or 2.5 percent, since Monday's close.

Reader stock indicators were moderately higher. The Standard & Poor's 500 index was up 6.32, or 0.6 percent.

Mixtec farmworker in Santa Maria, said she has never been to school. But she is a fast strawberry picker. She can fill up to 100 trays per day, although last week, she said, with fewer berries on the plant, she was averaging 100 trays.

For some immigrant teens in the valley, school is simply not an option. They started working in Mexico, and they were 12, without finishing sixth grade. In Santa Maria, they are supporting themselves and sending money to parents and siblings across the border.

"I had to stop studying because we had no money," said one 17-year-old Mixtec girl who arrived here a month ago to pick strawberries full time. She dropped out of school for three years. "During the peak of the strawberry season this month, she is working 10 hours per day and picking about 50 trays. At $1.50 per tray, that's a daily wage of $75.

Former Rite Aid CEO gets 8-year-prison term

HARRISBURG, Pa. (AP) — Former Rite Aid Corp. chief executive Martin L. Grass was sentenced to eight years in prison Tuesday for his part in a billion-dollar accounting scandal at the drugstore chain his father founded.

Grass, 50, who headed up the nation's third-largest pharmacy chain in the late 1990s before being forced out in 1999, also was fined $500,000 and given three years probation.

Six former Rite-Aid executives in all were convicted or pleaded guilty in the scandal, in which the company inflated its earnings.

Delta that served as an economic catalyst for the entire region. "The 4,000 jobs you have, along with how critical it is for jobs throughout our state, makes Delta a major player in the future of Utah," Gov. Owen Walker said.

The celebration was a welcome boost for employees concerned by speculation last month that Delta is facing bankruptcy.

Delta lost $383 million last quarter, or more than $2 billion in losses during the previous two years.

"It's a bankruptcy speculation — just makes us work that much harder to bring Delta back," said spokeswoman Peggy Estes. Delta Chief Executive Gerald Grinstein has called for Delta's pilots union to make deep concessions to stave off bankruptcy.

Still, Estes said the airline remains committed to Salt Lake City. Delta currently accounts for 73 percent of the airport's departures, with 93 daily Delta flights and about 200 Delta Connection flights, Estes said.

"Salt Lake is the company's third-largest hub," she said. "It is our gateway to the West."

Economy

Continued from E1. GDP report and closely watched by Fed Chairman Alan Greenspan showed that core prices - excluding food and energy - rose at a 1.7 percent rate in the first quarter.

The economy has been among the issues that President Bush and presumptive Democratic nominee John Kerry have jostled over in the presidential campaign.

The country has lost a net 1.5 million jobs since Bush took office in January 2001. Businesses boosted spending on equipment and software in the first quarter at a 9.8 percent rate.

But Bush says they are, and that the best way to create jobs is to make the economy stronger. The nation's payrolls, which had been posting lackluster growth, expanded by a sizable 200 million in April on top of a hefty increase in March.

With the economy growing solidly and inflation beginning to stir, a growing number of economists believe the Federal Reserve may order its first increase in more than four years next month.

Some, however, believe a rate rise won't come until August or later. The main short-term rate used by the Fed to influence economic activity has been at a 46-year low of 1 percent.

An inflation gauge tied to the consumer price index rose 0.2 percent in April, the fourth straight month.
