Administrators see small raises

Area educators' pay levels are reflection of economy, expert says

By Karlin Kowalski
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — The trend of little or no salary increases for school administrators continues this year with many Magic Valley districts giving their top staff smaller raises than in years past. In Twin Falls, administrators received 1 percent base increases as well as increases for education and experience, as did teachers, said Superintendent Willey Dobbs. Small increases reflect the slow economy, Dobbs said pay increases for administrators is important in keeping good people because, compared with the private sector and educators in other states, Idaho lags behind. In Jerome, Superintendent Jim Cobble said the district's administrators had about 1 percent raises during the last four years, not counting raises for increased education.

Of 20 districts surveyed, Castleford, Valley and Wendell had no raises. Mike Friend, executive director for the Idaho Association of School Administrators, said the trends of small raises or freezes of salaries are statewide.

Friend said a change in 2003 allowed districts to use funds designated for administrator salaries for other areas of their budgets.

Twin Falls took advantage of the flexibility by cutting 1.5 administrative positions and using the money in other areas, Dobbs said.

Pay for all levels of educators is a reflection of the state of the economy, Friend said. Although things appear to be getting better, he still expects a lean education budget next year.

Administrator salaries over those made by beginning teachers, who are now mandated to receive at least $27,500 a year. The Legislature voted to make that increase and fully fund it this year.

Last year a few districts paid teachers above the minimum salary of $25,000, but this year, most are sticking with $27,500 as starting salaries. The $25,000 minimum pay dates back to 2001.

Spc. Juan Villcana, center, enjoys a laugh with his wife, Jennifer, regarding his 3-year-old son Juan Carlos's video game driving ability. Juan, of Rupert, leaves today for the Alexandria Airport in Louisiana where he will stage with other members of the 116th Brigade Combat Team before departing this week for Kuwait and then Iraq.

COUNTING THE DAYS

Local soldiers get ready to head overseas

By Sandy Miller
Times-News writer

RUPERT — The time at home, he said, went too fast.

And when he gets to Iraq, it will surely go too slow.

"It's so close already," said U.S. Army Spc. Juan Villcana Thursday. "On Sunday night, I'll be back in Louisiana. It's right around the corner. Time is just flying by and there's no way to slow it down. That's my biggest enemy right now — time. I know we're going to take care of each other in-country, but I hope time flies by so we can get home again."

Villcana, 23, and his fellow soldiers in Bravo Company of the 2-116th Brigade Combat Team are on their way to Camp Beaufort in Pineville, La., to get ready to leave this week for Kuwait. After a couple months of desert training, it will be off to by following local soldiers and their families as the soldiers go to Fort Bliss, Texas, and Fort Polk, La., and then overseas. This week, reporter Sandy Miller and photographer Ashley Smith will be at Camp Beaufort in Pineville, La., where local soldiers are getting ready to head to Kuwait and then on to Iraq. The first group of soldiers will head overseas Thanksgiving evening. Look for their stories and photos in The Times-News beginning Thursday.

La. Villcana's family told his 3-year-old son Juan Carlos that they were taking him to see the airplanes. They wanted to surprise him.

"When I first got to the airport, he didn't recognize me," Villcana said. "I didn't have a mustache anymore. It was different."

Villcana's wife Jennifer, 21, was just happy to have her husband home again.

"Time has gone by quickly, but I've enjoyed every minute with him," she said.

Coming home, Villcana said, has been an adjustment. The military had worked them hard, especially during their month at Fort Polk where they went on constant missions, catching an hour of sleep here and there.

"It's been pretty hard," Villcana said. "It was pretty humid. The training was intense, but good. We learned stuff we'll need when we get out there."

But once home, Villcana found himself looking for things to do to fill the hours that before had been filled with all-night convoy missions and fighting off

Craig's CAFO exemption spurs

The Times-News and the Associated Press

WASHINGTON, D.C. — As the final hours of the 108th Congress drew to a close, members of the Idaho delegation looked for ways to pass legislation on an agreement to settle Nez Perce water rights claims on the Snake River.

They found a way by attaching the Snake River Basin agreement to a must-pass omnibus spending bill approved by the House Saturday afternoon. The Senate was expected to pass the legislation later Saturday evening before Congress sends the bill to the President for signing.

"Though not-in-doubt—passage of the omnibus appropriations bill was taking longer than anticipated in the Senate.

Children pay cost of Iraq's disarray

Malnutrition rises since invasion

By Karl Vick
The Washington Post

BAGHDAD, Iraq — Acute malnutrition among young children in Iraq has nearly doubled since the United States led an invasion of the country 20 months ago, according to surveys by the United Nations, aid agencies and the interim Iraqi government.

After the rate of acute malnutrition among children younger than 5 steadily declined to 4 percent two years ago, it shot up to 7.7 percent this year, according to a study conducted by Iraq's Health Ministry in cooperation with Norway's Institute for Applied International Studies and the U.N. Development Program. The new figure translates to roughly 400,000 Iraqi children suffering from "wasting," a condition that takes in chronic diarrhea and dangerous deficiencies of protein.

"These figures clearly indicate the downward trend," said Alexander Malayutin, a child health specialist with the UNICEF mission to Iraq.

Bush warns Iran, N. Korea about building nukes at summit

SANTIAGO, Chile (AP) — Facing nuclear challenges on two fronts, President Bush warned Saturday that Iran's suspected weapons program is "a very serious matter" and he stood united with leaders of Asia and Russia in demanding North Korea's return to stalled disarmament talks.

Iran and North Korea, two nations in what Bush has branded an "axis of evil," dominated the president's attention along with trade and economic issues at the opening of a 21-nation summit of Asian-Pacific leaders. Bush tried to ease global concerns about the sinking value of the dollar, a drop based in part on investors' fears about the huge U.S. trade and budget deficits.

Fresh from his re-election, Bush met in rapid succession in his hotel with the leaders of Japan, South Korea, China and Russia, his partners in the talks with North Korea, which is led by the mercurial dictator, Kim Jong Il.

Reporting on his discussions, Bush said that "the will is strong, that the effort is united and the message is clear to Mr. Kim Jong Il: Get rid of your nuclear weapons programs." Addressing business leaders, he urged nations "to purge government corruption, support free trade and strengthen anti-terrorism efforts."

Although it boycotted talks in September, the Bush administration said at the summit that North Korea has told China in recent weeks that it is prepared to participate in the six-nation negotiations aimed at ending its nuclear weapons program. The United States hopes the talks resume by year's end or early next year.

Chinese President Hu Jintao said he and Bush both hoped the North Korean crisis "can be solved peacefully through dialogue." Japanese Prime Minister Junichiro Koizumi also expressed a desire for a diplomatic solution. Hu and Bush exchanged invitations for visits to each other's country, but neither leader agreed to go.

None of the leaders demanded more flexibility in the North Korean talks or wavered on any of the key issues, a senior official said on condition of anonymity. The message coming out of Santiago is that "all five who are here are ready to go," the official said.

On Iran, the United States is skeptical about Tehran's intentions in talks with Britain, France and Germany about eliminating or dismantling its nuclear weapons systems. Facing a Monday deadline to halt all work related to uranium enrichment, Iran reportedly is producing significant quantities of a gas that can be used to make nuclear arms.

Bush comes to aid of Secret Service agent

SANTIAGO, Chile (AP) — President Bush stepped into the middle of a confrontation and pulled his lead Secret Service agent away from Chilean security officials who barred his bodyguards from entering an elegant dinner for 21 world leaders Saturday night.

Several Chilean and American agents got into a pushing and shoving match outside the cultural center where the dinner was held. Bush noticed the fracas after posing for pictures on a red carpet with the summit host, Chilean President Ricardo Lagos and his wife and first lady Laura Bush.

Abandoning the other three, Bush walked over to the agents, reached through the dispute and pulled his agent from the scum. The president, looking irritated, walked away with the agent. The incident was shown on APEC television.

"Chilean security tried to stop the president's Secret Service from accompanying him," said White House deputy press secretary Claire Buchan. "He told them they were with him and the issue was resolved."

Visitors pass by Claude Monet's Water Lilies in the Museum of Modern Art, or MOMA, in its newly-renovated space back in Manhattan. Hundreds of people encircled an entire city block Saturday to get into the MOMA, as they celebrated the renovation with free admission for the day.

Thousands visit museum

MOMA reopens after renovation

NEW YORK (AP) — Thousands of people waited in a line that wrapped around a city block Saturday to file into the reopened doors of the renovated and expanded Museum of Modern Art.

The museum opened for a free viewing after a 2.5-year renovation. While much of the collection was on display at a former staple factory in Queens during that time, the $425 million reconstruction nearly doubled the museum's gallery space.

"I missed it," said Ellen Hoffstatter, 55, who waited more than an hour to get in before heading straight for her favorite painting, Vincent van Gogh's "The Starry Night."

Many arrived hours before the 10 a.m. opening, to be among the first to see the museum's collection of world class modern and contemporary art. At 10 a.m. sharp, the doors swung open to cheer.

Tad Davis and Susan Vosburgh, a couple from Atlantic Highlands, N.J., celebrating their 10th wedding anniversary, received a lifetime membership for being the first new visitors.

Others waiting near the end of the long line of thousands said they expected the wait to be worth it.

"I would rather be at the front, but I wanted to come today because I am poor and can't afford $20 to get in," said Suzanne Velovic, 61, referring to the new adult admissions price, which The New York Times has labeled "an appalling and cynical figure."

Inside, museum director Glenn D. Lowry defended the new prices — $20 for adults, $16 for seniors and $12 for students. Many school groups will be invited without charge and admission will be free to all on Fridays from 4 p.m. to 8 p.m., Lowry said.

"We have endeavored to balance our financial needs with obligations to run a balanced budget," he said.

The increases are blamed in part on increased insurance fees and other fixed costs, Lowry said.

The museum's new design by Japanese architect Yoshio Kihachiro retains architectural elements of the old building while transformed the galleries.

"I hope we have accomplished creating an entirely new museum, rooted in the old museum, where the collection shines as never before," Lowry said.

Dozens of visitors expressed satisfaction with the effort and the layout that groups most artworks are arranged in chronological order.

"They have improved the clarity," said Warren Walker, 60, while admiring Henri Matisse's painting, "The Moroccan".

Gustav Gauvin, 54, a fashion designer visiting from Quebec, said he was last at the old MoMA 10 years ago.

"I've seen this art before," he said. "But this is new. It's wonderful."

Police hunt for killers who dumped bodies in Illinois

PEORIA, Ill. (AP) — Police on all-terrain vehicles, horseback and even airplanes have combed fields and forest in search of one or more serial killers believed responsible for the deaths of six women whose bodies were dumped along little-traveled Illinois roads.

The women, all of them black with a history of prostitution or drug abuse, had cocaine in their systems when they were strangled or shot of drug overdoses over the last 3.5 years. None showed signs of a struggle, investigators said.

Until a suspect is identified, authorities are trying to reassure nearly 312,000 residents of two largely rural counties southwest of Chicago, while also cautioning them to be on guard.

"I don't think anybody's entirely safe," Peoria Mayor Dave Hansburg said. "If someone can do what they've done to these six women, they could do it to someone else."

Deputies in Peoria and Tazewell counties joined city and state police in September to form a 13-person task force devoted solely to the unsolved cases that have mounted since March 2001, when the first body was found near tiny Pottstown.

Four other women have been reported missing.

"If you take a surface look at everything, it's easy to say 'Absolutely, it's a serial killer,'" Peoria County Sheriff Mike McCoy said. "But when we get into it a little bit more, I tend to think there might be more than one person."

Detectives have scoured an area about three-quarters the size of Rhode Island — 1,278 square miles. They also have checked out more than 300 leads that have streamed in since late September fueled in part by the urging of black church leaders and by a $20,000 reward.

At two community forums on the slayings, some residents expressed fears that the killer or killers might begin targeting mothers or children instead of prostitutes and drug users.

Experts say that's unlikely if a serial killer is involved.

"The odds are they have a particular profile and they're going to stick with that," said Deborah Laufersweiler-Dwyer, a former police officer and now an associate professor at the University of Arkansas, where she teaches a class on serial killers.

TWIN FALLS 41, COEUR D'ALENE 35

This is big. This is 53 years of disappointment erased by a 41-35 win.

But this is more than a final score. This is the realization of 45 young men's dreams — a reward paid in full with broken fingers, sprained ankles, and summer days lost to practice. This is a team, a school, and a community united in a sea of Columbia, Navy and White.

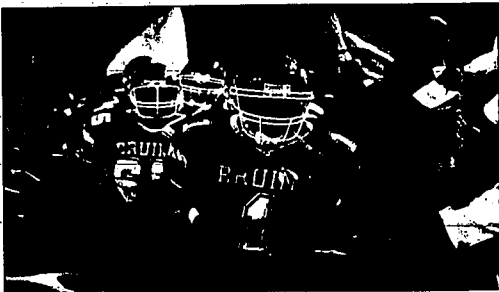

This is the Twin Falls Bruins dancing to "Ice Cream and Cake," and eating it too. This is the realization that many of the Bruins' 24 seniors have played their last game. This is the undeniable fact that they leave the game on top.

This is the Idaho Class 5A State Football Championship. And it belongs to the Twin Falls Bruins.

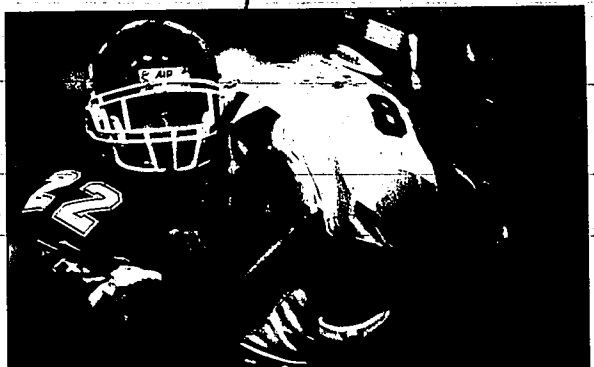

— Eric Larsen

Soaring energy costs could bring rise of inflation rate of 2.5 percent through October. This has contributed to inflation's rising at a 3.9 percent annual rate this year, compared with 1.9 percent in 2003.

WASHINGTON (AP) — After years of relative calm on the inflation front, Americans are being battered by $2-a-gallon gasoline, rising food prices and higher medical bills.

Economists acknowledge this is a worst-case scenario. Still, they say some shock is likely. "If my inflation projection for next year goes haywire, it will most likely be because of external factors such as geopolitical tensions or terrorism that we have no control over," said Sung Won Sohn, chief economist at Wells Fargo in Minneapolis.

Some economists see inflationary pressures next year that will result directly from Bush administration policies on the dollar. The administration insists it favors a surging dollar yet has done nothing to check the greenback's slide over the past three years. This decline could help combat the widening U.S. trade deficit by making American products cheaper abroad and imports pricier in this country.

A Delta II rocket carrying NASA's Swift gamma ray spacecraft lifts off from Launch Complex 17 at Cape Canaveral Air Force Station on Saturday. The satellite is designed to study gamma ray emissions from supernovas.

New NASA observatory will hunt for black holes

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — The fastest-swiveling space science observatory ever built rocketed into orbit Saturday to scan the universe for violent celestial explosions that astronomers believe represent the birth screams of black holes.

NASA launched the observatory — named Swift for its speedy swiveling and pointing — following weeks of delays caused by hurricanes and a three-day postponement due to rocket trouble. The unmanned rocket climbed smoothly through a cloud-blocked midday sky, and delighted flight controllers visited the spacecraft a successful mission.

Swift, a $250-million collaboration by NASA, Italy and Britain, should begin its hunt for gamma ray bursts by January and erase some of the mystery surrounding these explosions and black holes.

Gamma ray bursts are the most powerful events in the universe, exceeding only by the cosmic curtain-raising Big Bang itself. Lasting just a few seconds on average, the bursts appear out of nowhere and are thought to signal the formation of black holes.

Astronomers theorize the collapse or collision of massive stars is what produces black holes, so dense that even light can't escape — and that the resulting gravitational energy sends gamma rays shooting out across time and space.

"We think that, perhaps, bursts are the highest energy of black holes and we're seeing these throughout the universe," said NASA's Neil Gehrels, principal scientist.

A single gamma ray burst releases more energy than the sun will emit in its entire lifetime at all wavelengths, Gehrels said. Put another mind-blowing way, "If you added together everything in the rest of the universe during that second, it would not be as bright as the gamma ray burst," said Pennsylvania State University astrophysicist John Nousek, director of mission operations.

So far, astronomers have managed to identify only a couple dozen gamma ray bursts, as close as a few million light years and as far as 12 billion light years. Swift should zero in on two gamma ray bursts a week as far away as 15 billion light years, representing the very first generation of stars, for a grand total of more than 200 during the planned two-year mission.

New guardians take over black Civil War memorial

The Washington Post.

WASHINGTON — The trees around the African American Civil War Memorial have been trimmed, and the grass is freshly cut and cleared of weeds. Several leaks have been fixed. But a few of the 205,145 names of black Union troops, and those of their white officers, engraved on the stainless steel plaques are still water-damaged.

The National Park Service took over basic upkeep and maintenance of the neglected memorial late last month after signing an agreement transferring control of the site from Washington D.C. to the federal government. The remaining repairs, Park Service spokesman Bill Line said, will be done on an ongoing basis.

Line said a park ranger knowledgeable about the role of African Americans soldiers and sailors during the war will soon be stationed at the memorial, in a federal park at 10th and U streets N.W. and Vermont Avenue, Wednesday through Saturdays at midday, the peak time for pedestrian traffic.

The memorial became embroiled in a dispute over who should care for it soon after its dedication in 1998. Financed by a private foundation and built by the D.C. Department of Public Works, the memorial was supposed to be a gift to the nation. But the National Park Service, which is charged with maintaining such memorials, wanted the city to address basic repair and maintenance issues before including the site in its portfolio.

City officials refused to get the memorial in tiptop condition until the Park Service set a transfer date; the Park Service said it would not set a date until repairs were done.

After extensive lobbying by Del. Eleanor Holmes Norton, D-D.C., and Frank Smith, a former D.C. Council member who founded the African American Memorial Freedom Foundation, the city government gave the Park Service $200,000 to do the repairs, and the transfer was arranged.

The African-American Civil War Memorial, dedicated in 1998, was barely maintained while under D.C. care. The National Park Service has taken over upkeep of the site.

"We finally just reached the point where there was not a credible excuse anymore for not accepting the memorial," said Smith, who had sought help from Secretary of State Colin Powell, Secretary of Housing and Urban Development Alphonso Jackson and other prominent government officials.

The memorial, which includes a graceful bronze sculpture by Ed Hamilton of three black soldiers and a sailor leaving their tearful families, is now listed on the Park Service's Web site (www.nps.gov) and included in other promotional material. Line said rangers participated in Veterans Day ceremonies organized at the site by the foundation and eventually hope to become "a daily presence there."

The memorial is the first in the country to honor all African American soldiers and sailors, and their white officers, who fought in the Union Army. Smith said he hopes the memorial, just outside the U Street/African American Civil War Memorial/Cardozo Metro station, will one day achieve the prominence of Ford's Theatre and other local Civil War-related sites maintained by the Park Service.

A ceremony was held at the memorial Oct. 27 to officially transfer the title from the city to the Park Service. Smith said he hopes to hold a larger event to celebrate the transfer on May 22, which is Founders Day, the anniversary of the day in 1863 when the U.S. War Department established a separate bureau to authorize and organize black troops.

Smith said he would like to include descendants of some of the soldiers and sailors whose names are inscribed at the memorial, as well as President Bush and former president George H.W. Bush, who signed legislation that helped create the memorial.

Presidents traditionally have attended ceremonies marking the transfer of major military sites to the Park Service. Smith said he pledged to push hard to have the current president attend.

Violence surges across Baghdad

BAGHDAD, Iraq (AP) — Insurgents ambushed a U.S. patrol, killing a soldier, gunned down four government employees and clashed with American troops in neighborhoods across Baghdad on Saturday. Nine Iraqis died in fighting west of the capital — another sign the insurgency remains potent despite the fall of its stronghold, Fallujah.

In Fallujah, where U.S. Marines and soldiers are still battling pockets of resistance, insurgents waved a white flag of surrender before opening fire on U.S. troops and causing casualties, Marine spokesman Lt. Lyle Gilbert said Saturday without elaborating.

U.S. troops in the northern city of Mosul found the bodies of nine Iraqi soldiers Saturday, all shot in the back of the head. Seven of them were also decapitated, Lt. Col. Paul Hastings said. American and Iraqi forces detained 30 suspected guerrillas overnight in Mosul, the U.S. military said.

Four other decapitated bodies were found earlier in the week in Mosul and have not yet been identified, the military said Saturday.

In a positive development, a Polish woman abducted last month in Baghdad returned Saturday in Poland after being suddenly released. Teresa Borcz Khalifa, 54, refused to say how she was freed but said her captors treated her "properly" — a treatment that they told her was "motivated by their religious beliefs."

But the widespread clashes in Baghdad and other areas of central and northern Iraq underscored the perilous situation in this country after 18 months of American military occupation — and just over two months before vital national elections.

IRAQ WEEK IN REVIEW Violence sweeps through Baghdad

Insurgents ambushed a U.S. patrol, killing a soldier, gunned down four government employees and clashed with American troops in neighborhoods across Baghdad. U.S. troops are still fighting resistance in Fallujah.

Sunday — Insurgents stormed two police stations in Mosul killing at least six Iraqis. Marines found the mutilated body of a Western woman in Fallujah.

Monday — U.S. soldiers battled insurgents northeast of Baghdad in clashes that killed more than 50 people. The worst reported fighting was in Baquba and Buzrah at police stations.

Tuesday — Margaret Hassan, a British aid worker kidnapped after decades of helping Iraqis, is believed to have been murdered, based on a video.

Wednesday — A suicide attacker drove his bomb-laden car into a U.S. convoy during fierce fighting in Belli, killing 10 people and wounding 12.

Thursday — U.S. troops in Fallujah found a command center used by followers of Jordanian terrorist Abu Musab al-Zarqawi.

Friday — Iraqi forces backed by American soldiers raided a Baghdad Sunni mosque as worshippers were leaving after prayers, killing at least three.

Saturday — U.S. troops in Mosul found nine dead Iraqi soldiers, all shot in the back of the head. Seven of them were also decapitated.

Guardsmen were killed by roadside bombs, policeman Akram al-Azzawi said.

A suicide driver blew up his vehicle shortly after noon at an intersection on Sandouq Street, a bustling commercial street. One Iraqi civilian was killed and another wounded in the blast, which sent black smoke rising above the city center and set several cars ablaze.

Gunmen chased down a vehicle carrying employees of the Ministry of Public Works on their way to work Saturday, opening fire and killed four of them, a military spokesman said. Amal Abdul-Farheed — an adviser to the ministry in charge of urban planning — and three employees from her office died, said spokesman Jasim Mohammed Salim.

To the west of the capital, U.S. troops clashed with insurgents Saturday near the local government building in Ramadi, and hospital officials said nine Iraqis were killed and five were wounded.

Earlier in the day, U.S. troops socked off roads and launched a house-to-house search of the city's Tamim neighborhood as U.S. helicopters flew overhead, playing loudspeakers urging residents to "hang up the phone" — according to police Lt. Jamal Abdul-Kareem.

Elsewhere, saboteurs blew up an oil well Saturday near the northern city of Kirkuk — the sixth such attack in the last 10 days, oil officials said. Insurgents regularly attack Iraq's oil infrastructure, which provides much of the revenue for reconstruction.

Clashes occurred between U.S. troops and insurgents in Qam along the Syrian border and in Samarra, where mortar shells struck a U.S. base but caused no casualties.

One American soldier was killed and nine were wounded in an ambush in the central part of the capital. Five other U.S. soldiers were injured in a car bombing on the road to Baghdad's airport — considered by U.S. authorities among the most dangerous routes in the country.

The heaviest fighting in the capital took place in the Azamiyah district, a largely Sunni Arab quarter, where insurgents fired rocket-propelled grenades and small arms at a police station, killing one policeman, Iraqi officials said.

A number of U.S. armored vehicles were seen in flames, including a U.S. Army Humvee with what appeared to be a body in the driver's seat. Smoke rose from burning shops along a commercial street as U.S. helicopters circled overhead and ambulances raced to the scene.

The U.S. command said the American soldier died when his patrol came under a coordinated attack including small arms fire, rocket-propelled grenades and roadside bombs. The statement did not specify where the attack occurred or whether it was part of the Azamiyah fighting.

Clashes also erupted in the Amiriyah neighborhood of western Baghdad, long a center of insurgent activity in the capital, after three Iraqi National

Key creditors forgive up to 80 percent of Iraqi debt

PARIS (AP) — The Paris Club of creditors on Saturday was debating a plan to write off as much as 80 percent of the debts Iraq owes them, a key step in the United States' push to ease the financial burden on the nation as it tries to rebuild.

U.S. Treasury Secretary John Snow and German Finance Minister Hans Eichel sealed the agreement, Eichel said earlier Saturday, adding that he expected the Paris Club would approve the deal.

Iraq owes around $42 billion to the members of the Paris Club, a grouping of 19 countries including the United States, Japan,

Key creditors forgive up to 80 percent of Iraqi debt

Russia and European nations.

An agreement by the Paris Club to forgive its Iraqi debt would be a significant step toward freeing the country from paying interest on the money owed just as it struggles to put its economy back on its feet.

Still, Iraq owes another $80 billion to various Arab governments.

"We agreed that there should be a write-off of debts in several stages amounting to 80 percent in total," Eichel told reporters on the sidelines of a meeting of finance officials from the Group of 20 Industrial and developing countries.

Iraqi civilian deaths worry Red Cross

GENEVA (AP) — The International Red Cross is "deeply concerned" with the killing of civilians and non-combatants in Iraq and the apparent failures by all sides to respect humanitarian law.

The International Committee of the Red Cross operations director, Pierre Krahenbuehl, stressed that international law prohibits killing anyone who is not actively taking part in fighting — or has ceased to do so.

"As hostilities continue in Fallujah and elsewhere, every day seems to bring news of yet another act of utter contempt for the most basic tenet of humanity: the obligation to protect human life and dignity," Krahenbuehl said in a statement released late Friday.

"We are deeply concerned by the devastating impact that the fighting in Iraq is having on the people of that country," he said.

The world was shocked this week by the killing of Margaret Hassan, CARE International's head of Iraq operations and the fatal shooting of a wounded and apparently unarmed man in a Fallujah mosque by a U.S. Marine, Krahenbuehl said.

No one should use torture or any form of inhuman, humiliating or degrading treatment, he said.

Farmers prosper as U.S. goes hog-wild over pork

By Peter Svobin
The Washington Post

THORNTON—Iowa — The young pigs scurried on stubby legs into the field, tumbling into one another and racing onward like an army of squat, exuberant soldiers. Paul Willis, finishing his chore of shunting four others onto a trailer for a trip to the slaughterhouse, looked on in satisfaction.

"We're working with nature," said Willis, a self-described hog farming crusader, "allowing the animals to explore and rut and run around, to let a sow build a nest. That's all a part of what a pig is."

Pigs raised by Paul Willis spend time outdoors. 'We're working with nature, allowing the animals to explore and rut and run around, to let a sow build a nest. That's all part of what a pig is,' he says.

The work of Willis and a growing legion of small-scale farmers is helping to change the way pork is produced, and the way it is perceived. After years in the hinterlands of American culture, when declining demand and profits drove away hundreds of thousands of farmers, pork is becoming cool again.

And some of the farmers who survived are making a whole lot of money.

Jon Casper, based up the road in Svaldedale, produces pork on a grander scale, using efficient techniques Willis disdains. He drives to a long, low building where hundreds of pink pigs are housed, fed and watered in indoor pens until they are ready for the knife. Casper's pigs are bred lean and marketed as "the other white meat," in tune with the demands of the anti-cholesterol market.

"We've been through an awful long dry spell. It's finally been a lot better here. It's finally Casper's," said the president of the National Pork Producers Council. He joked that some producers are making money for the first time in 100 years, and they don't know how to do it.

There are many factors in pork's sudden profitability. The industry is following in the hoof prints of the beef business, which benefited enormously from the protein-rich Atkins and South Beach diets and the message that eating good meat isn't always a bad thing. It is also benefiting from being marketed as a cheaper alternative to hungrily devoured, and increasingly pricey, steaks and roasts.

Also, exports are up more than 20 percent this year alone, and feed prices are down because of the nation's second consecutive huge harvest. But analysts say there is something intangible in pork's rise, something that can't be explained in a chart.

Keith Collins, chief economist at the U.S. Department of Agriculture, said U.S. producers are likely to sell $15.1 billion worth of hogs this year, compared with $10.6 billion in 2003. He ran down a list of facts and figures about pork prices and yields, then paused. "I'm being almost a non-economist here," he said, "but it's very hard to be looking at how you can kill 2 million hogs a week and still be looking at prices above $50 per hundredweight."

Collins feels certain that demand built on improved taste gains. "I remember 10 years ago when you'd buy a pork chop and there was nothing you could do except cook it for two hours," Collins said. "Over a period of time, the quality of pork has changed."

The November issue of Food & Wine reports that "American cooks are becoming pork obsessed" and declares in an eight-page spread that "all signs point to a major renaissance." Or take it from Eric Ziebold, one of the country's hottest chefs — and an Iowa-raised pork lover. He recently opened CityZen in Washington after eight years at the famed French Laundry in California's Napa Valley.

Chefs love pork's versatility, Ziebold said, an observation confirmed by a survey of menus

Scientists study chimeras for immunity advantages

The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — Perhaps the most ambitious efforts to make use of chimeras come from Irving Weissman, director of Stanford University's Institute of Cancer Stem Cell Biology and Medicine. Weissman helped make the first mouse with a nearly complete human immune system — an animal that has proved invaluable for tests of new drugs against the AIDS virus, which does not infect conventional mice.

More recently, his team injected human neural stem cells into mouse fetuses, creating mice whose brains are about 1 percent human. By dissecting the mice at various stages, the researchers were able to see how the added brain cells moved about as they multiplied and made connections with mouse cells.

Already, he said, they have learned things they "never would have learned had there been a biotechnical ban."

Now he wants to add human brain stem cells that have the defects that cause Parkinson's disease, Lou Gehrig's disease and other brain ailments — and study how those cells make connections.

Scientists suspect that these diseases, though they manifest themselves in adulthood, begin when something goes wrong early in development. If those errors can be found, researchers would have a much better chance of designing useful drugs, Weissman said. And those drugs could be tested in the chimeras in ways not possible in patients.

Now Weissman says he is thinking about making chimeric mice whose brains are 100 percent human. He proposes keeping tabs on the mice as they develop. If the brains look as if they are taking on a distinctly human architecture — a development that could hint at a glimmer of humanness they could be killed, he said. If they look as if they are organizing themselves in a mouse brain architecture, they could be used for research.

Candles, incense at church may be unhealthy for worshippers

Los Angeles Times

Going to church may be good for the soul, but some Dutch researchers say it may not be so healthy for the lungs. The candles and incense regularly burned during religious services emit high levels of particulate matter, tiny airborne flecks that are considered one of the most harmful forms of air pollution, according to a new study by scientists at Maastricht University in the Netherlands. The researchers measured air quality at a small chapel and a large basilica in Maastricht, and found the air in both places contained particulate matter at levels up to 20 times higher than what is considered safe to breathe under European air pollution standards. The levels were similar to those found in the air beside roads driven by 45,000 cars a day, according to the findings published in the December issue of the European Respiratory Journal. The researchers cautioned that the pollutants should not affect the wellbeing of most churchgoers, but that priests and especially devout congregants who spend long periods inside poorly ventilated chapels could be endangering their health. "It cannot be excluded that regular exposure to candle- or incense-derived particulate matter results in increased risk of lung cancer or other pulmonary diseases," wrote Theo de Kok, the leader of the Maastricht University team. The paper, titled "Radicals in the Church," also noted that the air monitoring detected high levels of free radicals, or molecules that can aggravate asthma or bronchitis.

The researchers studied churches because of growing interest in the health risks posed by indoor air pollution. Many scientists have begun more detailed inquiries into the health dangers found in the air people breathe indoors, where they spend most of their time. But scientific knowledge on indoor air pollution still lags behind research on outdoor air pollution from sources such as factory smokestacks and motor vehicles. The U.S. Environmental Protection Agency released research in 2001 concluding that burning candles and incense can be a source of particulate matter. The report also concluded that burning candles with lead-core wicks can raise indoor lead levels above what the EPA recommends as safe.

Pork

around the country that feature dishes — from maple-glazed chops to cured cheek and the current rage, pork belly, which is bacon that has not been brined or cured. As Ziebold put it, "It's meaty pork, that's very, very tender but very, very crisp. What's not to like?" Ziebold, cheering most recently about shoats, small pigs usually younger than one year, credits diners who are "getting over the health hype" — words that would make a cardiologist shudder — and small-scale farmers who are "reintroducing a more artisanal product."

The artisanal product would be pigs such as those raised by Willis and the 430 farmers he has recruited for the Niman Ranch Pork Co. from 12 states — 10 in the Midwest, plus Virginia and North Carolina. His business, which he sometimes calls "free-range pigs," started 10 years ago and is growing by about 20 percent a year. Niman farmers are bringing back hardy breeds of hog, which they let run and root outdoors. This avoids confinement and antibiotics alike. Boosters argue that fatter and moderately muscled pigs make tastier dishes. What Willis calls an "industrial pig" is bred to be what the business calls 56 percent lean, while Niman farmers 48 to 51 percent lean.

Then there's the happiness factor. It may be a taste component that cannot be proved, but Willis swears by it. "A pig likes nothing better than a 20-degree day in winter, when it's sunny and they can play in the snow," said Willis, once a poor farmer who considers his work a crusade against the "industrial paradigm." He has an endorsement from the Animal Welfare Institute and tries to recruit like-minded farmers, including those who surrendered to the market but want another change. "We're not pork producers. We're hog farmers," Willis said. "We're marketing two things. We're marketing an opportunity for farmers, and we're marketing pork to consumers. Maybe we can do a small part in renewing the countryside."

L.A. officials call for probe into airport police

LOS ANGELES (AP) — City officials are calling for an investigation of Los Angeles International Airport police after hidden cameras captured several officers abandoning their posts and ignoring emergency radio calls. "I am very concerned about airport police officers neglecting their duties," Mayor James K. Hahn wrote to Kim Day, executive director of the airport agency. "Security at the airport must not be compromised." The camera footage broadcast Thursday by KCBS-TV appeared to show officers spending hours of their shifts away from the airport or staying at the airport but not working. It also showed police chatting at a restaurant while ignoring radio calls about abandoned suitcases, and using a patrol car to pick up a child at school. KCBS reporters followed officers for two months with hidden cameras. The airport police force employs 300 officers. Airport Police Chief Bernard J. Wilson said a department probe already is under way and two employees have been placed on administrative leave with pay. "I will not tolerate misconduct," Wilson added. "And I won't allow the reputation of the airport police to be tarnished by a false view."

Palestinians try for first Arab democracy

RAMALLAH, West Bank (AP) — Freed from Yasser Arafat's one-man rule, Palestinians say they are eager and able to build the first real democracy in the Arab world, despite the dangers lurking on the road to Jan. 9 elections.

The thrill of new possibilities is felt across the West Bank and Gaza Strip: the field of candidates for Palestinian Authority president gets more crowded by the day and includes a militant sheik turned moderate, a dissident once jailed by Arafat, and a prisoner of Israel campaigning from his cell.

"Now it's real competition, the possibility of winning is there," said pro-democracy activist Mustafa Barghouti, a physician considering a presidential bid.

However, the shift to democracy could be messy. Armed gangs have been controlling the streets in four years of Israeli-Palestinian conflict, raising the threat of political violence during a heated campaign.

Democratic traditions are not deeply rooted. During his 10 years as leader of the Palestinian Authority, Arafat accepted some of the trappings of democracy, including general elections in 1996 and a parliament, but always reserved the final say.

Islamic militants, who are not fielding a candidate, haven't said whether they'll suspend attacks on Israel; without a truce, it would be virtually impossible to hold the vote. And Israel has not yet agreed to keep its troops at a distance from the voting.

Khalil Shekaki, a Palestinian pollster, said that in the turbulent transition phase, the stakes are huge.

"We can either find ourselves plunged into a bloodbath, or we can create the most beautiful democracy in the Middle East," he said.

Although the Bush administration is pushing for democracy in the region, and the 21 Arab countries are promising reforms, none has a freely elected government. Many rulers inherit the post and most stay in power for life, either through absolute authority or rigged elections. A few countries, like Morocco, Kuwait, Bahrain and Jordan, have active parliaments, though their monarchs can veto any legislative action.

In looking for signs of change at home, the Palestinians are closely watching the power struggle in the ruling Fatah party between the old guard Arafat brought with him when he returned to the Palestinian lands, and the younger generation that had grown up under 37 years of Israeli occupation.

Snow, gale-force winds wreak havoc across much of Austria

VIENNA, Austria (AP) — Gale-force winds dumping heavy snow caused havoc across Austria on Saturday, blowing cars across roads and into deadly collisions, knocking out power to thousands of homes and tearing a balcony off a building that critically injured a man below.

Several hundred cars spun out of control and ended up in snowbanks along the north-south A2 highway, where visibility was poor as gusts exceeding 60 miles an hour blew snow into the air.

Authorities closed the A2 near the city of Graz for more than three hours after 12 inches of wind-whipped snow fell on the area.

The storm had at least one silver lining: Fresh snow in the alpine province of Tyrol helped police track down and arrest a 43-year-old suspected art thief from Germany.

Gendarmes followed the man's footprints after he fled on foot from a mountain hotel from which he allegedly stole two oil paintings, police said.

Court sentences Afghan to death for killing journalists

KABUL, Afghanistan (AP) — Afghan judges sentenced a man to death Saturday over the slaying of three foreign journalists and an Afghan colleague, who were pulled from their cars, robbed and shot as they rushed to cover the collapse of the Taliban.

The judges also convicted Reza Khan of raping an Italian reporter before she died in one of the deadliest attacks on foreign civilians since the fall of the former hardline regime.

"You are sentenced to death," Presiding Judge Abdul Basit Bakhtyari told Khan at Afghanistan's Primary National Security Court.

Arrived men stopped the journalists as they drove from the eastern Afghan city of Jalalabad to the capital on Nov. 19, 2001, six days after the Taliban abandoned Kabul following heavy U.S. bombing.

The four were Australian TV cameraman Harry Burton and Afghan photographer Azizullah Haidari of Reuters news agency, Maria Grazia Cutuli of Italian newspaper Corriere della Sera, and Julio Fuentes of the Spanish El Mundo daily. Afghan media had speculated that enraged Taliban and al-Qaida forces falling back from Kabul had killed the reporters.

It was unclear whether Khan, who listened impassively as the verdict was announced, would appeal the death sentence or a separate 15-year jail term for committing "adultery by force" with Cutuli. In court, he denied committing the killings or the rape.

In a confession broadcast on Afghan state television in August, Khan admitted shooting one of the foreigners — it was unclear which — and raping Cutuli. He said the motive was banditry rather than politics.

Afghan Reza Khan reacts as the court delivers its verdict at a National Security Court in Kabul on Saturday.

But, appearing in court Wednesday wearing a traditional woolen cap and a yellow blanket around his shoulders, he said another member of the gang called Rohullah shot the journalists and denied the rape charge.

He acknowledged that he was present during the killings. He said the gang had to follow the orders of a militia commander called Mohammed Agha.

Khan also admitted shooting dead one of his three wives with a pistol because she had run away after an argument.

"I apologize to all the foreigners and other Afghans in this room," he said. "I'm not a murderer. I haven't killed any journalists."

Bruins complete journey back to athletic prowess

The sleeping giant that is the Twin Falls High School athletic program woke up and rolled out of bed Friday night.

The Bruins capped off a remarkable and thrilling football season Friday night by winning the Class 5A state crown - their first football title since 1951. Twin Falls beat Coeur d'Alene 41-35 with a go-ahead touchdown in the final minute.

Friday's championship game may be just the start. This boys' basketball and baseball teams finished third at state last school year, while the girls' basketball squad also broke strides in the state tournament. All three teams should be considered contenders this year.

This wave of success signifies a dramatic turnaround for three years ago. It was then that Twin Falls' boosters and students' parents lobbied for reforms in the school's athletic department.

The Bruins were losing. But not even trying out for team sports. A lack of enthusiasm was pervasive on the field, in the stands and in the hallways.

To their credit, Twin Falls Principal Ben Allen and the administration responded, reassigning some non-performing coaches and got the ball rolling. The band of new coaches infused some fresh perspective and inspiration. The Bruins started winning and earnably playoff berths. Most importantly, the morale of students and parents began to surge as well.

Obviously the entire coaching staff and school administration deserve applause for showing the way. But the lion's share of praise goes out to the Bruin players who fought and worked through a difficult off-season to become state champions.

Our view: Twin Falls High School's dramatic run for the state football crown marks a complete turnaround in athletics. What do you think? We welcome viewpoints from our readers on this and other issues.

This year's group of seniors has seen three head football coaches in the past three seasons. The team endured even more anxiety with the suspension of former coach Gary Krumm last summer. By the time new head coach Tobie Smith was hired on Aug. 10, most other schools had already started summer drills.

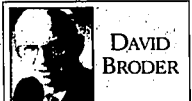

Rather than lose focus, Smith kept his eyes on the prize and marched impressively through the regular season. Playoff wins over Highland, Capital and finally Coeur d'Alene, proved the Bruin tradition is back on top.

Some may call it frivolous to heap editorial praise on high school sports, but Twin Falls' reversal of fortune merits genuine appreciation. When community support and student achievement are fused together, the entire town basks in a sense of accomplishment.

Here's hoping this championship run is just the start of a renewed tradition at Twin Falls High.

Defeating centrists could backfire

Bigger names are leaving Congress this month - notably former Democratic leaders Tom Daschle and Dick Gephardt - but no one will be more missed on both sides of the aisle than Charlie Stenholm, the congressman from Texas who has been in the House for 26 years.

DAVID BRODER

Stenholm was a victim of the controversial redistricting plan pushed through the Republican Legislature in 2003 at the instigation of House Majority Leader Tom DeLay. The scheme - now being given a second look by the federal courts - succeeded in shifting the Texas delegation from 17 Democrats and 15 Republicans to a new ratio of 21 Republicans and 11 Democrats.

Stenholm saw much of his old rural territory sliced away and his home county squeezed into a Lubbock-based district, where he had to compete against incumbent Republican Randy Neugebauer. Stenholm put up a valiant struggle, but in a district that went overwhelmingly for President Bush, he lost 58 percent to 40 percent.

Stenholm is exactly the kind of conservative Democrat Bush embraced when he was governor of Texas and Democrats still controlled the Legislature. He helped Republicans win the first round of Bush tax cuts, back when the budget was in surplus. The senior Democrat on the House Agriculture Committee, he helped Republicans win the last major farm bill that Bush signed - and his name surfaces every time there is a vacancy at the top of the Agriculture Department.

But with Republicans riding high in Congress, Bush, rather than courting conservative Democrats like Stenholm, wants to cut their legs off. He went out of his way to plug Neugebauer when he campaigned nearby, and Vice President Cheney came in twice to help sink Stenholm.

Purging conservative Democrats is part of Karl Rove's long-term strategy for making the GOP the majority party. But it entails significant costs. When Bush tries to fulfill his pledge to reform Social Security, he will, as Republican Rep. Fred Upton of Michigan remarked, "wish that Charlie Stenholm were still here."

Purging conservative Democrats is part of Karl Rove's long-term strategy for making the GOP the majority party. But it entails significant costs. When Bush tries to fulfill his pledge to reform Social Security, he will, as Republican Rep. Fred Upton of Michigan remarked, "wish that Charlie Stenholm were still here."

As Upton and other policy-oriented Republicans well know, Stenholm is one of the few Democrats who agrees with them on Social Security - and has sufficient backbone to stand up to the political pressures that always engulf that issue.

When Bush was running the first time in 2000, he asked Stenholm if he could borrow from the Social Security reform bill that the Texas had drafted with Republican Rep. Jim Kolbe of Arizona, Stenholm said, "Be my guest," believing that the issue is so important it should rise above partisanship. But this is not an administration that remembers past favors.

Within the Democratic caucus, Stenholm won respect for the way he resisted pressure to switch parties, even as Texas became more Republican and his re-election margins shrank.

He helped organize the "Blue Dogs," a group of Democrats, mostly from the South and the Border States, who tried to hold both parties' feet to the fire on curbing runaway budget deficits.

Concern about those deficits led Stenholm and the Blue Dogs to oppose Bush's later rounds of tax cuts - and it cost him in this campaign," he said.

In a videotaped interview, Stenholm told me he takes solace in the fact that the Blue Dogs came through this tough election relatively unscathed. Eight of their 34 members retired or lost, but four freshmen have joined the group and runoffs to come in Louisiana could add two more. "These Blue Puppies are very impressive," Stenholm said, referring to the freshmen from California, Colorado, Georgia and Oklahoma. "They will carry on the fight."

What's more, he said, reality will strengthen his position opposing new tax cuts in the face of rising deficits. "The market will test Bush and these supply-side Republicans that deficits do matter. Look what's happening with the decline of the dollar and with the Japanese backing off from buying as much of our debt. No one can ignore that."

He also believes that both parties will eventually have to come to grips with the unsustainability of Social Security in its present form. With a laugh, Stenholm recounted his amazement at hearing "my conservative Republican opponent make the same promise as the Massachusetts liberal (John Kerry): 'I will not cut your benefits, or raise your taxes or increase the retirement age.'"

"When both extremes are talking nonsense," said this deflated but unrepentant middle-roader, "there must be some way of getting them together that makes sense."

Post-election psychosis is rather amusing

For four years now since the 2000 general election, all I've heard on the political front was the constant drone of whining from the Democrat Party. "The election was stolen. The president was selected, not elected, and the poor people of Florida were outfranchised."

All of this cacophony of moaning went on even after five different news organizations stated that President Bush actually did win the election. Therefore, on Nov. 3, I was relieved to see that there was a clear majority for the Bush-Cheney team. So, imagine my surprise when, on the next day, the Republicans were not, at that time, accused of voter tampering but of stupidity, religious fanaticism, homophobia and a myriad of other rationalizations for the Democrats losing the election. The defamation of the "red" states had begun.

I could argue that we are not particularly more religious than the "blue" states or homophobic nor stupid, but I have long ago realized that you don't argue with the ignorant. At first, I felt outrage at this post-election hysteria, but now only amusement.

The fact that the Dems are running on mass hysteria or psychobabble or Canada is really a good laugh. The psychiatrists have even coined a very ostentatious name for this liberal malady - post-election stress disorder or something such thing. "red" state knuckle-dragging Neanderthal like myself would probably give it some unsophisticated name like "poor sportsmanship."

In Idaho really shouldn't be surprised because we have watched masses of liberals moving into Blaine County over the years and one doesn't need to wonder why. They either taxed themselves or scared away because they didn't know when it was politically correct to be "politically correct." So now they are in Idaho, feeling very elite, extremely conceited and all the time telling us how we are screwing up our environment (among other things) while they are running around in their fossil fuel-guzzling Hummers which they park in their very long heated driveways.

And we "red" voters are the stupid ones? So you "evolved" homo sapiens out there, don't mind if the "red" Neanderthals get a belly laugh out of your persistent whining.

Wheelbarrow doesn't belong to thief

I attended the Hillegas auction on Oct. 2 and purchased a steel-wheeled wooden-handled wheelbarrow along with several other items. I returned Sunday to pick up the larger items and discovered that my wheelbarrow was not there.

If you took it knowing you didn't pay for it, then you are a thief, and I hope every time you look at it in your yard it reminds you that you stole it from someone else.

Why pre-pay for more at Twin Falls pumps?

I do quite a bit of traveling outside the Twin Falls area and find that Twin Falls' gasoline prices are usually higher than surrounding areas, so I buy gas where it is cheaper.

Now I have another reason for not filling my tank in Twin Falls, and that is the pre-pay ordinance which it looks like we are going to be stuck with.

More power to the gasoline retailers if they can recover some of their drive-off losses, but it is necessary to inconvenience the honest majority that pay for their gas?

The victory at Fallujah and beyond

Thirty to 1. According to the U.S. military, that's roughly the ratio of enemy insurgents killed to fallen American soldiers in the battle of Fallujah.

One week. That's how long it took U.S. forces to capture a city of 300,000, an urban maze where terrorists had been digging in for months.

ZEV CHAFETZ

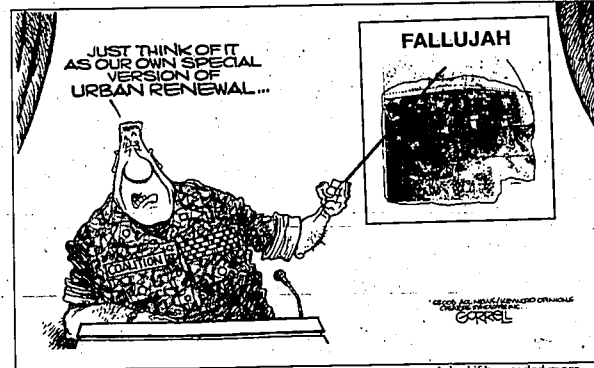

By any military standard, Operation Dawn was a great success, and it has liberated more than a city.

Ever since Vietnam, American politicians and generals have dreaded the difficulties and consequences of urban fighting. That fear kept U.S. forces from capturing Baghdad in the Gulf War. It also kept Marines from taking Fallujah last April.

The battle of Fallujah demonstrated that the paralyzing fear of city warfare was vastly exaggerated. The U.S. military now has demonstrated that it cannot be defeated, or even seriously slowed, by back alleys and booby traps.

This is important information, and not just for the United States. The Arab world has watched the fall of Fallujah with dismay. Al-Jazeera's moral indignation over civilian casualties cannot disguise the simple fact that Iraq is not going to be Vietnam. Not even close.

Partly, this is a function of sheer firepower. The night-fighting technology, smart bombs and absolute control of the sky give American warfare a shooting-fish-in-a-barrel quality.

The Arab world has watched the fall of Fallujah with dismay. Al-Jazeera's moral indignation over civilian casualties cannot disguise the simple fact that Iraq is not going to be Vietnam. Not even close.

The only thing that can stop American military power in Iraq is America. But a re-elected President Bush has no reason to abandon his mission, which is to defang anti-American dictatorships in the Middle East. Iraq is the main theater in that mission; and U.S. forces will be there until it is accomplished.

Pentagon reporters got a hint of that when Secretary of Defense Donald Rumsfeld met with them on the first day of Operation Dawn. The journalists naturally wanted to know about Fallujah, but Rumsfeld had a different message: He's building a new Middle Eastern army.

The secretary talked about redeploying forces from Cold War borders to more appropriate staging areas (meaning the ring of bases the U.S. has established around the Middle East).

He spoke of building a "more agile, efficient and expeditionary force" - a military, that is, suited to desert warfare, anti-terror special ops and urban fighting.

Asked if he needed more troops, the secretary replied that the United States is well along in the effort "to create a deeper pool of troops in high-demand military specialties such as military police and civil affairs." Translation: occupation troops.

The years since 9/11 have been a time of learning and adaptation for the American military. Its generals no longer believe, for example, that Ramadan is a month of peace or that mosques are strictly halls of prayer. Strategic planners now understand the limitations of Arab armies (including, hopefully, the pro-American Iraqi forces in training). And, after Fallujah, they have a better sense of what the terrorists can do in urban settings, and what can be done to them in return.

In one week. Zev Chafetz is a columnist for the New York Daily News.

Dairy exemption threatens health

We respond to Mel Quale's letter of Nov. 12, in which he takes issue with Jim Conder's position on Sen. Craig's proposed legislation to exempt dairies from the Comprehensive Environmental Response Compensation Liability Act (CERCLA) and the Emergency Planning and Community Right to Know Act (EPCRA). Mr. Quale isn't totally informed on the issues. We did not understand the problems inherent with industrial dairies until we were personally adversely impacted by two mega dairies totaling nearly 15,000 cows two miles from our home.

We are faced with a dilemma, i.e., we consider Mr. Quale and Mr. Conder as friends. It hurts to see Mr. Quale's denigration of Mr. Conder's nonpartisan position on Sen. Craig's proposed legislation. Mr. Conder is a gentleman of the first order and his humanitarian efforts on behalf of people in Third World countries are most impressive. He has given generously of his time and funds to mission work and nearly lost his life in Ethiopia while doing that work. Mr. Conder's motivation on the issue at hand stems from his genuine concern for people and justice, not politics, and to imply otherwise is an injustice.

If Sen. Craig is successful in exempting industrial dairies from CERCLA and EPCRA, he will be placing the health of millions of people at risk. We looked for solutions to the many problems associated with huge confined animal operations and asked elected officials, legislators and the governor for help—to no avail. When all other remedies have been stone-walled by state agencies under this administration, where else can one turn but to the courts? It is a scientific fact that ammonia aerosolizes various pathogens and the one dairy that reported its emissions stated it had discharged 260,000 pounds of ammonia into the air in 2003. Why would Sen. Craig think we have no right to that information?

Sen. Craig asserts, "The legislation I am proposing would do nothing to weaken environmental regulations to which livestock operations are and continue to be subject." We would be interested in knowing how nearly nonexistent regulations and penalties can be weakened. Idaho's Department of Agriculture refers to "accepted agricultural practices."

Slavery was an accepted practice by some prior to the civil war but just because it was "accepted," was it right? We have a right to protest bad legislation and to breathe the clean air—we are losing both.

Absentee votes cloud outcome in District 25

I have some questions about this election.

In District 25, Tim Ridinger was defeated by 4,500 Sun Valley (absentee), out-of-state voters. This appears to be illegal. If you don't live here, why should you vote here. I heard even Gov. Schwarzenegger voted absentee in Ketchum. The totals show that everyone who knew Pence did not vote majority for her. She lost in Wendell, Gooding, Shoshone and Carnas. So we are left with no representation—an anti-farm, anti-dairy, anti-business candidate Clint Stennett shadow.

I challenge the validity of this farce.

Immigrants stay because they help the U.S.

To Evelyn Meyer and Ann Davis:

I wanted to let you both in on a little information that will shed some light on your beliefs. First, I challenge you to go to the Department of Health and Welfare, get an application for assistance and look it over. Ask a caseworker what is involved for determining eligibility. Maybe laws have changed, but it has been my understanding that in order to receive assistance, you must prove citizenship of this country. However, in the case of refugees (people our country bring to the United States and support), they automatically qualify for this help, food and cash assistance.

It seems (at no surprise, due to the ignorant mindset and obvious lack of facts) that Ann's letter specifically singled out Hispanics once again. These kinds of letters are so predictable and old. Yes, there are instances where high-risk pregnancies will receive assistance. Yes, American children qualify for assistance if born into citizenship, as all American children should if they meet the qualifications.

So what is the problem? Low-paying jobs, slumlords, lack of availability of insurance, lack of education and ignorance. Tell me if you know anyone who would fit into any of these categories whether they are an employer, immigrant, landlord or just someone with an opinion. On the other hand, ask the schools, which face major budget cuts already, how much money they would lose if the number of immigrants (mainly migrant worker children) were to decline.

Despite what you hear, think or believe, there are reasons beyond most people's knowledge as to why so many immigrants and illegal aliens remain in America: (1) They generate revenue for our government, economy and schools. (2) They keep Social Security alive and well. (3) They do the jobs we Americans refuse to do. (4) They accept these jobs at extremely low wages. (5) They pay cash for everything and do not contribute to the national credit card debt. And the list goes on.

In the meantime, some people keep complaining, I guarantee if we lose these people, we lose, as a whole country. Let's look at the big picture! And especially at this time of year, be grateful. I am sure the majority of these people are grateful not having to wonder where their next bag of beans is coming from. Stop complaining you just may bite off the hand/s that feed you. Literally!

UI programs languish at football's expense

I would like to respond to the recent piece by the Magic Valley Vandal Boosters. Our position paper on athletic funding at the University of Idaho can be read at www.class.uidaho.edu/nger/ufi/bigsky.htm so I will suffice with a summary here.

In 2003 the UI Press, with several nationally acclaimed titles and sales rising, was forced to close; primarily, it was running about a $300,000 deficit. The UI administration claimed that it should be self-supporting, a concept that we think should be applied to intercollegiate athletics.

For the fiscal year 2004, while all UI units were making pay-cuts, UI athletics received $1.9 million from the Legislature and an outright gift of $500,000 from the UI president's office. An additional $322,600 was added for fiscal year 2005, an amount equivalent to what the liberal arts and social sciences had to give up.

The Vandal Scholarship Board recently boasted about a $615,000 profit for UI football, but this becomes a $1.9 million deficit if appropriated funds and the president's gift are subtracted. It is $2.5 million if this football surplus is paying the way for other sports.

When athletic departments across the nation report that their programs are profitable, they usually include legislative funds in their figures. If that money is removed from the budgets, the national average for I-A schools, according to an National Collegiate Athletic Association study is a $237,000 deficit.

Between 1998 and 2000 the University of Michigan lost $7 million in its athletics program, and in 1998, the University of Wisconsin lost $286,700 even though it went to the Rose Bowl. Proposing that the UI could ac-qually make money in I-A is a ludicrous proposition.

We fully support the concept of scholar athletics and we commend these students for their achievements. We also support programs for training athletic trainers and managers. Just as other academic units are being cut, it is only fair that these programs also be reduced to realistic levels.

Russian official says nukes are defensive

UNITED NATIONS (AP) — Russia's new nuclear missile system is purely defensive and part of the country's program to upgrade its military, Deputy Foreign Minister Yuri Fedotov said.

Russian President Vladimir Putin on Wednesday said the country is developing a new "state-of-the-art" nuclear missile system unlike any weapon held by other countries. He said it will be deployed in the near future, but gave no details.

"It's a military issue, of course," Fedotov told The Associated Press on Friday when asked about the new missiles. "Any armed forces needs a kind of upgrading, so it's a natural process."

The Russian minister was asked why the country was trying to improve its nuclear capabilities at a time when the international community is working to get countries like North Korea and Iran to abandon their nuclear programs.

"Of course it is necessary to improve missile system in order to avoid any accidents. This is standard procedure," Fedotov said.

Fedotov said that "as everything we have, it's totally defensive."

White House spokesman Scott McClellan said President Bush and Putin had discussed the issue previously. He suggested that close ties between the two leaders makes alarm unnecessary. But he didn't eliminate Washington's concern.

"We have a very different relationship than we did in the Cold War," he said. "The fact that we do have a good relationship enables us to speak very directly to our Russian friends."

Christopher Langton, head of defense analysis at London's International Institute for Strategic Studies, said Putin's first time that Russian officials had spoken publicly about a new deterrent, though he had no idea what the system might be.

Putin has made clear that improving the armed forces, which declined after the breakup of the Soviet Union, is a priority. In the past year, Russia defense officials have made several announcements about new weapons.

Celebration in Togo turns into deadly stampede

LOME, Togo (AP) — A celebration at the gates of Togo's presidential palace turned into a stampede Saturday, killing at least 13 people as excited crowds tried to surge onto palace grounds in the capital of the tiny West African nation.

Officials warned that the death toll could climb, as hospitals treated scores of other victims.

The celebration was called to mark the easing of 11 years of European Union sanctions against President Gnassingbe Eyadema, Africa's longest-ruling leader.

Large crowds of Eyadema's party members and others marched through the capital Saturday to the palace. When the palace gates were thrown open to admit them, the crushing throngs of celebrants tried to push through at once.

Men and women's shoes and flip-flops, torn off in the crush, lay abandoned at the gates Saturday after the stampede.

A government statement put the death toll at 13.

Milk — Fact or Fiction

Everyone loves a good story. Story telling is part of our diverse history because it is an effective communication tool. Stories are used to entertain and amuse listeners. Parents use stories to pass along history and to teach cultural values to their children. Stories can also be used to convey information and news. However, when the stories contain misleading information more harm than good may result. Take some of the misinformation about dairy foods for example.

Over the past several years, numerous health professional organizations and government agencies advocate the nutritional and health benefits of milk and other dairy foods. In addition, the USDA's Food Guide Pyramid recommends two to three servings each day of milk group foods for everyone two years of age and over. However, despite all the empirical evidence regarding the nutritional benefits of milk and dairy foods, stories linking milk and dairy intake to an array of possible health problems continue to circulate. Here are a few of the fictitious stories we thought should be shelved.

FICTION: Early exposure to cow's milk increases the risk of Type 1 diabetes.

FACT: There is no persuasive scientific evidence that the consumption of cow's milk in childhood causes Type 1, or insulin-dependent diabetes. What has been proven is that Type 1 diabetes results from an autoimmune destruction of the insulin-producing beta cells of the pancreas. Critical reviews of the scientific evidence fail to support the hypothesis that milk proteins inflame a response that destroys pancreatic beta cells in genetically susceptible children, thus causing Type 1 diabetes. The Juvenile Diabetes Foundation International has issued a position paper concluding, "There is no compelling scientific evidence at this time that supports the claim that drinking cow's milk increases the risk of developing Type 1 diabetes in children or adults." The American Academy of Pediatrics recommends breast-feeding or iron-fortified cow's milk-based formulas during the first year of life with transition to whole milk after 12 months of age. Health professionals do not advise that infant feeding recommendations be changed or that cow's milk be avoided during childhood to reduce the risk of Type 1 diabetes.

FICTION: Calcium-rich foods such as milk should be avoided to reduce the risk of kidney stones.

FACT: Actually, the opposite appears to be true. Adequate intake of calcium from calcium-rich milk and dairy foods may actually reduce the risk of kidney stones in most people. Recent epidemiological studies demonstrated that a calcium intake of 1,000 mg per day from dairy foods was associated with reduced risk of kidney stones. Furthermore, a recent five-year randomized trial among 120 men with high levels of calcium in the urine and a history of recurrent calcium oxalate stones found that a diet containing adequate amounts of calcium, about 1,200mg per day, along with reduced amounts of animal protein and salt, was more effective in preventing recurrent stones than a traditional low calcium diet.

Increasing calcium intake reduces urinary excretion of oxalate, which is found in rhubarb, teas, nuts, beans, spinach, and chocolate. Urinary oxalate excretion is more important in the formation of calcium oxalate stones than is urinary calcium. Increasing calcium intake decreases the intestinal absorption and urinary excretion of oxalate. Calcium from dietary sources such as milk, yogurt and cheese has shown to be more effective in reducing the risk of kidney stones when compared to supplements. One possible explanation is that dietary calcium consumed during the meal is more likely to bind to the "harmful" compound oxalate, which is also present in food. Low calcium intake may not only

Stuff you should know about Turkey Day

Every year about this time, I write a column about Idaho Thanksgiving etiquette. In autumn's past, I've covered topics such as who has to sit at the kids' table, who gets to say grace, whether mince-pie pie, cranberry, pumpkin, and when or if ever to invite your estranged sister-in-law to dinner, especially if she elects to bring along her new love interest.

DON'T ASK ME Steve Crump

But after last year's discussion about the relative virtues of strained vs. lumpy gravy, I received a number of questions, a few of which I'll address today:

Q. We're inviting 17 people to Thanksgiving dinner, and we only have eight wooden dining-room table chairs. How do we decide who has to sit on metal folding chairs from the Renter Center?

A. A tough call, especially because for many Thanksgiving dinner guests, hemorrhoids are a real issue.

As a rule, however, in-laws are assigned folding chairs, along with any blood relative who's required to attend Aunt Edith in the past 65 years.

(Which is why, not coincidentally, that she often dines alone.)

Keep in mind, however, that assigning guests whom you wish to leave early to folding chairs is often useful. Helpful hint: Store metal folding chairs outdoors in the cold for three or four days beforehand if you wish your guests to leave even earlier.

Q. Every Thanksgiving, we have a big family fight because Uncle Edgar insists on bringing wine to dinner.

Half of our family is composed of test-tubers, and the other have are alumni of 12-step programs.

How do we persuade Edgar to cork it?

A. By long tradition at the Crump family Thanksgiving table, any spirits that are not distilled from weeds collected from the yard are just right out. Instead of bringing a traditional wine, ask Edgar if Boone's Farm makes a cheery dandelion vintage.

Q. We had a big fight at Thanksgiving dinner last year because my husband doesn't like chestnut stuffing, and my mother is convinced that anyone who doesn't eat stuffing is a vegan. How to we avoid the same thing happening this year?

A. Serve the stuffing and the tofu turkey separately.

Q. Half my family is Mormon and the other is not. How do we keep the peace at Thanksgiving dinner?

A. Dine separately.

Q. I'm supposed to bring something to Thanksgiving dinner, but I can't cook. And every time I show up with a can of Pringles, my mother-in-law gives me a dirty look. Any suggestions?

A. Turkey Hot Pockets are on sale at 7-Eleven.

Q. Last year, the electricity went out during Thanksgiving dinner, and it was so dark that I couldn't find the candles. What can I add this year to prevent the same thing from happening again?

A. A flammable couch.

Q. Every Thanksgiving, we show up at my sister's house about noon as she's frantically trying to thaw the turkey.

A. Next year, we finally ate dinner at 4 o'clock Friday morning.

Q. The Detroit Lions haven't won a football game since 1952. Why are we forced to watch them on TV every Thanksgiving?

EPA extends Castleford's deadline

By Sandra Wisecaver
Times-News correspondent

CASTLEFORD — The Environmental Protection Agency has granted the city of Castleford a six-month extension to lower the amount of arsenic in its drinking water.

The city must now reduce its arsenic level from 22 parts per billion to less than 10 ppb by June 23, 2006. And if city officials decide to proceed with a major drinking water system rehabilitation project, the compliance date could possibly be pushed back another six months to Jan. 23, 2007, said

NewsTracker

- Last we knew: The city of Castleford has been trying to come up with an affordable water system rehabilitation plan that includes arsenic treatment.
- The latest: With a recent six-month compliance extension, city officials want to stop and re-look at ways to meet a mandate that requires that the system be capable of providing at least 4,500 gallons per minute for fire protection at Castleford School.
- What's next: City and school officials will meet to discuss whether they can find a more economical solution to fire protection at the school.

Richard Green, an official with the Environmental Protection Agency's Seattle office. In the meantime, city officials say they want to work with the school district to help solve other related problems with the aging water system. Not only does arsenic need to be lowered, but the city must further modernize its water system and address a recently identified fire flow deficiency.

"If we can get the school involved, then you are working with a larger tax base than just the city," City Clerk Patsy Kinyon said.

Since the school is not equipped with sprinklers, International Fire Code mandates that the city system be capable of pumping 4,500 gallons per minute sustainable for four hours. The purpose is fire protection for the school.

If Castleford had difficulty securing grant funding or passing a bond election, Green said,

"EPA would likely take into account all efforts being made by the community to achieve compliance."

City officials are counting on a $450,000 allocation introduced in legislation by U.S. Rep. Mike Simpson to come through. Rogio TV Development grant specialists Carleen Herring and Jeff McCurdy are researching funding possibilities including USDA and block grant dollars.

"The wrinkle in this whole thing is the city will probably not be eligible for Community Block Grant dollars unless we

T.F. Historical Museum seeks funding

By Michelle Dunlop
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — Tea lights inside a suspended jar lit a snowy path from the Twin Falls County Historical Museum to what is known as "the tin building" on a chilly Saturday evening.

The candies provide just enough illumination to see a faded sign suspended from the silver structure. A paint-chipped cowboy, hand on his holster and cigarette hanging from his mouth, greets visitors with a 'Howdy Pardner.'

Under the tin building's tattered roof sits one of the museum's prize possessions — a shiny red fire engine with a 12-cylinder Pierce Arrow engine and a 750 gallon pumper.

"When the city asks you if you want a 1940 Seagrave fire engine, you don't say 'I don't think so,'" said Chris Bolton, museum president.

Instead, Bolton and members of the Historical Society, hope to raise funds to fix up the tin building and other areas of the museum in need of repair or remodeling.

A federally funded assessment of the museum identified improvement.

On Saturday evening, the Historical Society hosted members of the public for an invitation only treasure hunt at the museum to scavenge up funding for the museum's top projects.

"There's a lot of museum left that needs work," Chris Bolton said.

For the evening, participants had the opportunity to check out the museum's secret stash — items that are not currently on display in the tin building and basement. Organizers hoped event-goers would spot a project and adopt it by pledging money in support of it.

A few of the recommendations listed in the assessment include:

- Finishing the basement: A $9,238 project would finish the coal and furnace rooms where one-third of the artifacts stored in the basement are housed.
- Document storage: A project estimated at $1,995 would provide the museum with a metal storage container for documents. Cardboard boxes currently hold old, rolled-up maps while items such as a 1930s era court calendar rests haphazardly on a metal bookshelf.

Computer system: The museum does not own its own computer, but uses one on loan from the College of Southern Idaho. Without a computer system, museum staff catalogue items on pen and paper. The assessment listed a new computer system at $1,147.

"We feel that we've done what we need to do to be a museum," Chris Bolton said. "Now, we want to do what it takes to be an entity in the community. We don't want to be that thing on Highway 30."

Completing some of the museum's projects would be a step "in the right" direction," he said. The museum operates from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m., Wednesday through Saturday, and is located at Curry Crossing on U.S. Highway 30.

Times-News reporter Michelle Dunlop can be reached at 735-3229 or by e-mail at mdunlop@magicvalley.com.

Jerome interchange may get quick fix

Construction would address growth concerns for 10 years

By Dixie Thomas Reale
Times-News correspondent

JEROME — A quick fix for the south Jerome interchange could begin within the next year or two.

The project would be a short-term solution that would address traffic growth for about 10 years. The Idaho Transportation Department would be able to pay for reconstructing the intersection of Lincoln Street and Interstate 84 through its normal operating budget.

The overpass bridge was built in 1966 and eventually needs to be replaced. It has no pedestrian or bike paths and is not wide enough for the expected growth in traffic.

Bob Humphrey, a senior transportation planner with the Idaho Transportation Department's Shoshone office, unveiled the department's quick fix plans this week.

Under the current plan, he said, the quick fix would include the installation of traffic lights at each on ramp and off ramp. Bob Barton Road would be moved slightly closer to the off ramp so the traffic light can be configured to service both.

The frontage road on the north side of the interstate would be moved slightly closer to the off ramp so the traffic light could be configured to service both. Both off ramps would be widened.

In 20 years there will be twice the traffic in the area, Humphrey said. He said expects the average traffic along Lincoln Street South to be in the neighborhood of 25,000 cars a day.

"That compares to Blue Lakes Boulevard," Humphrey said.

Jon Pascal, an engineer with the Kirkland, Wash.-based Transpo Group, said traffic engineers looked at current and expected future land-use activities in the area bounded by 100 South Road, 300 South Road, 100 East Road and 100 West Road.

The engineers then made predictions based on reasonable assumptions, he said.

"We assumed growth both south and north of the interstate and eastward," Pascal said. "We then extrapolated the assumptions to peak hours."

Humphrey said there's no funding at this point for a third interchange that could be located at 100 West and 100 South roads. Congress would have to provide funds for it.

"ITD does not know how much money we will get in the future but we do expect to get money," he said. "We have a backlog of bridges and highways that need fixing."

Humphrey said between $400 million and $450 million worth of repairs need to be made statewide.

"We have to maintain what we have first before we build anything new," he said.

A study on the needs and feasibility of a third interchange would cost $100,000.

"If the funds reject the idea the study is a wasted money," Humphrey said.

The transportation department is still entertaining long-term solutions.

Jim grew up on the Salmon Tract and served in the U.S. Marines during World War II. He attended the University of Idaho, where he met Beverly.

They were married on Jan. 31, 1947. He then farmed in the Buhl area and wintered cattle at Deer Creek near Halley in 1948. In 1949, he moved his family to Camas County, where he and Beverly farmed, ranched and raised their children for the next 24 years. He was elected First District county commissioner in 1960 and served two terms until 1966. He became co-owner of the Gooding Livestock Commission Co. from 1965 to 1971. During this time, he was appointed ag consultant at the Glenns Ferry Bank, later the Idaho State Bank, in Glenns Ferry.

Jim and Beverly emigrated to Glenns Ferry in 1973, where she taught school and he served the bank in various upper management positions, including appointment as president in 1977. He "retired" in 1994. He also owned and operated a farm and cattle ranch across the river from Glenns Ferry during this time and after his retirement. He was inducted into the Idaho Cattleman's Hall of Fame in 1977, served as a director for a time, and was on the Advisory Board for many years.

Mildred Mable Borchardt - Rupert

Mildred Mable Borchardt was called home by her Savior Friday, Nov. 19, 2004, at Saint Alphonsus Regional Medical Center in Boise.

Mildred was born Feb. 16, 1916, in Knappa, Wash., the daughter of Percy and Winnie Oatney. During her early years, the Oatney family moved several times having lived in Washington, Idaho and Tennessee. She was the second oldest of four children, growing up with a brother, Cecil, and two sisters, Doris and Alma. Mildred married Harry Borchardt June 19, 1933, in Rupert. She was a homemaker, operated a day-care and provided foster care for dozens of children throughout the years.

Mildred loved her cooking, fishing and hunting with her husband, sons and grandsons. She and Harry raised a beautiful fruit and vegetable garden and she would can everything that they produced. She had a very big heart and often times shared with her family and friends. Mildred was a very good cook — she spent many hours a day in the kitchen, providing hot meals for her family as well as all of the children she cared for. Mildred also loved to embroidery and crochet. Grandma also loved to take pictures — she had boxes and boxes of photos of events and people that were important to her. Grandma loved every one and was loved by many. It was evident that Grandma loved the Lord by the way she lived her life. We will all miss her terribly but rejoice knowing that she is with the Lord and once again reunited with Grandma Harry.

Mildred is survived by her three sons, Don (Linda) Borchardt of Meridian, Bob (Pat) Borchardt of Donnelly and Jim (Beth) Borchardt of Arizona; eight grandchildren; and 17 great-grandchildren. She was preceded in death by her parents, one brother, two sisters, one grandchild, and one great-grandchild.

The funeral will be held at 2 p.m. Tuesday, Nov. 23, 2004, at the Assembly of God Church. The church is located in Rupert at the intersection of Fourth and H streets. Pastors Sheldon Sigel and Jerry Schneider will be officiating. Burial will be at the Rupert Cemetery immediately following the service. Friends may call from 6 to 8 p.m. Monday at Hansen Mortuary-Rupert-Chapel and one hour prior to the service Tuesday at the church.

Robert Lee Martin - Twin Falls

Robert Lee Martin, 79, of Twin Falls, died Friday, Nov. 19, 2004, at his home.

He was born July 9, 1925, in Springdale, Calif., the son of DeWitt and Rosalie Martin. He was raised in California and graduated from high school there. He enlisted with the U.S. Marines on Oct. 9, 1943, and served until his honorable discharge in April of 1946. Mr. Martin saw action in Okinawa, the Ryukyu Islands, with the occupation force in China after the war, and received the good conduct medal. After the war, he returned to California and later worked in Nevada for a short time prior to moving to Idaho. He married Sarah Shurtz in Jerome on June 27, 1953, and their marriage was later solemnized in the Idaho Falls Temple. He worked for Allied Van Lines for a number of years and later worked as a postal carrier for 25 years. He was a member of the LDS Church, the Moose Lodge, and enjoyed fishing, camping, bowling and playing cards of any type.

He is survived by his wife of 51 years, four children, Susan (Mike) Brown of Salt Lake City, Utah, Robert (Glenn) Martin Jr. of Twin Falls, Terrence Lynn Martin of Twin Falls and Jeffrey (Darla) Martin of Twin Falls; 10 grandchildren; three great-grandchildren; and one brother, Richard Martin of Victorville, Calif. He was preceded in death by his parents, one son, one daughter and two sisters.

The funeral will be conducted at 1:30 p.m. Tuesday, Nov. 23, 2004, at the Twin Falls 6th Ward LDS Chapel with Bishop Robert Brown conducting. Interment will follow in the Jerome Cemetery.

Friends may call from 4 to 8 p.m. Monday at White Mortuary, "Chapel by the Park," and from 12:15 to 1:15 p.m. Tuesday at the church.

Police drop case against BYU journalist

PROVO, Utah (AP) — Police have dropped their case against a Brigham Young University student journalist arrested on campus after he tried to videotape a police officer issuing a jaywalking citation to another student.

BYU Police Chief Larry Stott said the decision on Friday is the equivalent of an officer tearing up a speeding ticket and the citation for trespassing and interfering with a police officer given to Cliff Kelly, 32, who's forwarded to the courts.

"I told him I regret the incident took place and that it's not the kind of interaction I want with students," Stott said of a conversation with Kelly.

As a First Amendment issue, Kelly's case drew the attention of the Society of Professional Journalists, which offered $1,000 toward his legal representation. Kelly maintained that he identified himself as a student journalist working on a story and complied when the officer asked him to back up. But when Kelly refused to cross the street, the campus officer called for backup. Kelly ended up handcuffed and taken to a university holding cell.

However, the case could still end up in court. Kelly said he wanted the charges dropped and an apology from all three officers — before he considers dropping plans for a lawsuit.

"It's the principle. You can't arrest somebody, publicly humiliate them, take a reporter's tape and then, when you learn you're wrong, just drop the charges and not apologize. They have to learn you can't do that, especially to students," Kelly said.

Stott said he wouldn't oblige that request, because "everybody concerned could have done things better."

Police made two copies of the tape, which was Kelly's property, before returning it.

Jeff Hunt, a Salt Lake attorney and legal counsel for SPJ's Utah Headquarters Chapter, said that might have run afoul of legal protections for freedom of the press. He said federal laws prohibit seizing newsgathering materials without first getting a subpoena and allowing news organizations to object.

Mom pleads guilty to child sexual exploitation

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — A Logan woman accused of engaging in sex acts with her young children while her husband photographed them has pleaded guilty to child exploitation charges.

In exchange for the plea on Friday, federal prosecutors agreed to drop four additional charges of sexual exploitation of a minor against Terri Michele Anderson, 26.

Each count carries a mandatory minimum of 10 years in prison and a maximum of 20 years.

Her husband, Keith Anderson, 46, pleaded guilty Monday to six counts of sexual exploitation of a child.

Between January and September of 2003, Terri Anderson is alleged to have performed oral sex on her sons from a previous marriage, both under the age of 8, at her husband's request.

The boys also were depicted performing oral sex and simulating sexual intercourse with their mother, the complaint states.

Keith Anderson recorded the acts with a Web cam and a digital video camera and posted them on the Internet, according to court records.

He was convicted in 1997 of sexual abuse of a child, and listed as a registered sex offender on a Web site maintained by the state.

Terri Anderson guessed she had contact with the two children 10 to 15 times, and said she knew her husband was recording the acts on at least some of those occasions, according to court documents.

She said she stopped having sexual contact with the children after the couple moved into separate homes in September 2003.

Investigators believe the alleged exploitation took place in Trueman.

The children, whose surname is not Anderson, were removed from the home before the charges were filed.

Keith and Terri Anderson are scheduled to be sentenced in March.

They were charged in federal court because the images were allegedly transmitted across state lines on the Internet.

Woman beaten, raped in case of mistaken identity

BOISE (AP) — Police say a woman who was allegedly kidnapped, beaten and raped by her captors was a victim of mistaken identity.

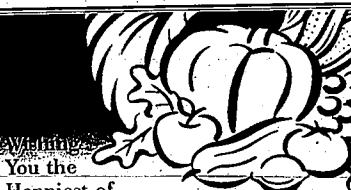

Three people were arrested. Nampa and Boise residents Frank L. Nicolai, 43, and Savina Martinez, 24, were taken into custody Thursday night.

All three have been charged with second-degree kidnapping. Nicolai also was accused of raping the woman, and Nicolai was charged with two counts of sexual penetration with a foreign object.

Investigators say they targeted the woman because they thought she had been involved in a failed drug deal. But they had the wrong person, police said.

Police spokeswoman Lynn Hightower said three suspects led the woman, in her 30s, into an apartment sometime late Wednesday or early Thursday. The woman was restrained, beaten and held hostage for several hours.

'Call to Duty Fund' completes mission

TWIN FALLS — The "Call to Duty Fund," announced on Saturday that it has accomplished its mission and will no longer solicit fund-raisers.

Since the end of July, the organization has received $260,000 in donation across the state. Over 700 Idaho Civilian Service Members were awarded travel vouchers from the Call to Duty Fund. Roughly $35,000 has been set aside to provide service members with phone cards while in combat.

Additionally, the group gave $15,000 to the Idaho Foodbank for turkeys for military troops during the holidays. Another $10,000 was donated to the Idaho Foodbank to provide food assistance to military families while service members are away on duty.

The remainder of the funds will be held in a "Call to Duty Fund" and administered as grants by the Idaho Military Division Emergency Relief Funds.

Magic Valley In brief

Easley Hot Springs permit is up for comment

KEITCHUM — The operation of Easley Hot Springs north of Ketchum is up for review by U.S. Forest Service officials for the Sawtooth National Recreation Area.

The proposed authorization would allow the owners of Easley Hot Springs Resort to continue to operate the facility, said Dave Fluetsch, administrator for the SNRA. "Before the permit issued, we want to offer the public an opportunity to provide us with any concerns or suggestions they may have regarding this operation."

Easley Hot Springs, or Plunge, has been owned and operated by the Idaho Baptist Convention for over 85 years.

The Idaho Baptist Convention's current 20-year permit expires at the end of this year and the organization has applied to the Forest Service for a new 20-year permit.

The application proposes no changes to the currently authorized activities.

These activities include, but are not limited to, operating a public swimming pool, soaking tubs, convenience store and food service.

For more information contact Fluetsch at 727-5000. Please send comments by Dec. 24 by mail to Fluetsch at the Sawtooth National Recreation Area, HC 64 Box 8291, Ketchum, ID 83340 or by e-mail to intermin-sawtooth-usa@fs.fed.us.

Vehicle roll-over turns fatal near Utah border

MALDEN — A Utah man was killed in a one-vehicle roll-over near the Idaho/Utah border Saturday morning.

The Idaho State Police responded to an accident on Interstate 84 at approximately 9:30 a.m. Carson Shupe, 21, was traveling westbound on the interstate when he lost control of his vehicle. The Ford pickup rolled and landed in the median.

Shupe, who was not wearing a seatbelt, was thrown from the vehicle and pronounced dead at the scene. According to the police report, road conditions were icy and snow covered.

Project aims to increase the pheasant population

PLEASANT VALLEY (AP) — Many pheasant hunters in southeastern Idaho remember the heydays of the 1960s and 1970s. Their habitat for the game bird was plentiful.

But with progress came decline. As farmers' irrigation systems grew more precise and farming machinery more efficient, the tall, weedy patches where the birds lived began to disappear. So did the birds.

Now Gary Gehring, owner of Gehring Agri-business, and the conservation organization Pheasants Forever have started planting trees in hopes that they can revitalize pheasant hunting by reviving the birds' habitat. The Idaho Fish and Game Department and Natural Resources Conservation Service are assisting, and Gehring hopes similar efforts will be made across the region.

"I think conservation, agriculture and ranching have a lot in common," Gehring said. "We decided that we wanted to do something large enough that it would have an effect. We wanted to leave a footprint."

So far, Gehring and the groups have planted almost 3,000 Scotch pine and Colorado blue spruce trees and shrubs in long windrows along a hill on his property, accompanied by patches of unharvested corn and grain. In the roughest terrain at the hill's base, weeds have been left to grow more than six feet high.

In all, more than 80 acres have been dedicated to the birds, and it's open for public hunting.

The result on project lands like the Gehring's, said Pheasants Forever regional wildlife biologist Walt Bodie, is a bumper crop of pheasants.

Pheasants Forever provides manpower—government agencies supply the funds and landowners such as the Gehring's provide the long-term commitment to maintaining the habitat. In this case that commitment means supplying the windrows with irrigation water.

"This is like having a new 1-year-old baby," Gehring said.

His son Jareh, getting 27 envisions for the project someday reaching beyond property lines.

"I'd like to see more of our neighbors do some habitat projects," he said.

Randy Budge, habitat coordinator for Southeastern Idaho Pheasants Forever, said partnerships between communities, governments and groups are essential to the conservation effort.

Clearwater River features Idaho steelhead

OROFINO (AP) — North Idaho's Clearwater River has a deserved reputation for big steelhead and people travel from all over Idaho, the Northwest, and the even from the East Coast for the chance to catch some of the largest steelhead in the nation.

"Idaho's Clearwater is home to the largest summer steelhead found south of the Canadian border," author John Shevley wrote in "Fly Fishing for Steelhead."

The state record, a whopping 33-pound, 2-ounce, 44-inch steelhead was caught in the Clearwater in 1973.

"That fish hasn't been topped, as far as anyone knows. Since the mid 1980s, anglers have had to release wild steelhead to protect them from overfishing, so a bigger fish could have been caught and released."

But the Clearwater still regularly produces wall-hanger steelhead. "Fourteen pounds is the average, and 20-pounds is common every day," Brent Gould of Nampa said.

Gould and his fishing partner, Gregg Bingham of Meridian, are die-hard steelheaders who spend about 30 days a year on Idaho's rivers.

"They don't blink making a five-hour drive up the U.S. 95 'goat trail' to the Clearwater, spending the night in Bingham's camper and fishing all day in freezing temperatures or driving rain. Their efforts have paid off."

"I regularly land 15-pound steelhead, and they once landed and released a wild 42-inch steelhead, which is 2 inches shorter than the state-record fish."

"I'd say that fish was 25 pounds," Bingham said. "It's hard to say, but it was big." Like many anglers on the Clearwater, Gould and Bingham try different tactics to entice steelhead.

"They might bounce bait, but roll plugs, use bobbers and jigs or cast flies.

On one trip they might be zoning up and down the river between Lewiston and Orofino in Bingham's jetboat, and on another trip they might take a placid float between Kookkia and Orofino in Gould's 16-foot aluminum drift boat.

"It's a nice river; there's lots to fish," Gould said. Bald eagles rest in the autumn-gold trees on the riverbanks, ducks fly up and down the river, and white-tailed deer prance across the tawny hillsides above the river. Roads parallel the riverbanks along most of the river, and boat ramps are at convenient intervals.

"That's another attraction to the Clearwater River—its convenience and versatility. There's about 75 miles of river available to steelhead anglers."

"There's good water all the way to Kookkia," said Mike Cummins, owner of the Red Shed Fly Shop in Pecks.

"At its mouth near Lewiston, boaters congregate near Pot-hatch's paper mill and troll plugs from power boats, or back troll with drift boats.

Upstream at Orofino, bank anglers toss bobbers and jigs. The fish are in the river bottom near the Clearwater National Fish Hatchery, or in the North Fork of the Clearwater below Dworshak Dam.

Upstream from the North Fork, the number of anglers thins and the river becomes smaller and busier, with more bends and riffles.

All along the Clearwater, fly anglers cast purple perils, green butt skunks and popsoles to the elusive steelhead.

Cummins said fly anglers from all over the Northwest come to the Clearwater for fly steelhead, and he has customers who've come from as far as Connecticut and Maine to fish steelhead.

"It's a great river to fish a floating line, and that's a pleasant way to fish," he said. But the Clearwater also is a challenging place to catch steelhead.

"The 'B' run steelhead aren't as numerous as the steelhead runs in the Salmon River to the south, and the Clearwater is a bigger, broader river, which makes it harder to fish."

"It's a lot flatter than around Riggins, and it's harder to read," Gould said. "A hole might be a mile long on the Clearwater, whereas at Riggins, it might be 100 yards long."

The fish can be more difficult "to land" because of their size and power.

Gould's general rule for the Clearwater steelhead: Go big,

Use bigger plugs, line at least 15-pound test, and large hooks. When you hook one, be prepared for a battle.

And if you land a prime Clearwater River steelhead, have the number of your favorite taxidermist handy, because the steelhead of a thousand casts could also be the biggest steelhead of your life.

Steelhead season on the Clearwater River from the Memorial Day of U.S. 12 at Lewiston upstream to Clear Creek runs Oct. 15 through April 30.

It also is known as the "harvest season" because hatchery fish can be kept during that period.

Catch-and-release steelhead fishing is allowed from July 1 to Oct. 15.

Only hatchery steelhead can be kept. They can be identified by a clipped adipose fin between the tail and the dorsal fin.

Any fish with an unclipped adipose fin must be immediately released unharmed. Anglers on the Clearwater River must use barbless hooks when fishing for steelhead, so get out your pliers and bend down those barsbs.

Castleford

address the fire flow at the school," said Don Achesson, an engineer heading the water system upgrades.

City officials say they're planning to schedule a meeting with Castleford School Board members to brainstorm solutions.

Topics of discussion will include possible funding sources for sprinklers in the school as well as alternative water sources.

The city's 130,000-gallon capacity tank does not have enough storage to sustain the 4,500 gallons per minute fire flow.

To provide that much flow Castleford would have to build a million-gallon storage tank or a 200,000-gallon tank plus a reservoir "to supply water for fire protection at the school. The estimated cost is about $2 million.

If an alternative solution could be found to meet the fire flow, in this case that could fix the arsenic and other compliance issues for half that amount.

The $1 million project would address arsenic removal, DEQ and replace the city's leaking, leaning water tower with a new 250,000-gallon water tank.

City officials want to come up with a more economically feasible plan by the end of the year.

A bond election is tentatively set for February 2005.

Autopsy shows camp stove caused man's burns

BOISE (AP) — Police say a Chicago-area man who died from severe burns on the side of Interstate 84 was trying to light a leaking camp stove.

Dean King, 53, died late Tuesday. Just moments after an investigation began, firefighters found him standing, severely burned and incoherent, near his van on the shoulder of the interstate. He had first- and third-degree burns over 95 percent of his body.

An autopsy performed this week showed that white gasoline, used for older-model camp stoves, caused his burns. Ada County Coroner Ervin Sonnenberg said.

A witness told police King was trying to change a flat tire on his van when he was struck by a fire. Officer Rick Ohmsman said King may have tried to use the stove to jack up the van to change the tire, then may have tried to warm himself, say by lighting the stove.

King used a lighter to ignite the stove and must not have realized it was leaking gasoline, Ohmsman said.

PROVO, Utah (AP) — A 61-year-old alternative-medicine practitioner who allegedly discouraged a patient with breast cancer from getting chemotherapy has been charged with three third-degree felonies in her death.

David Eugene Pontius was charged Tuesday by District Court with multiple, unprofessional conduct. According to court documents, Pontius treated Diane Shepherd for six months before the woman died from complications associated with her cancer on Oct. 20. Shepherd allegedly refused chemotherapy and surgery from her family physician and instead relied on Pontius' holistic treatment.

Pontius is licensed to practice holistic medicine in other states, according to his lawyer, Denver Snuffer, but Utah doesn't recognize those licenses, and his efforts to become licensed here have been denied.

In April, doctors diagnosed Shepherd with cancer and advised her to have surgery to remove two malignant lymph nodes in her right breast and one under her right arm.

According to court documents, Shepherd refused the surgery and instead met monthly with Pontius to receive

Deputy convicted of disorderly conduct in off-duty incident

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — A Salt Lake County deputy has been convicted of disorderly conduct for pushing and shouting at a 17-year-old boy while he was off-duty.

Witnesses said Deputy Frank Lucero got angry because he believed the boy had been driving erratically through a South Jordan neighborhood. He was convicted Friday in South Jordan Justice Court.

But other witnesses said the teen — who they viewed as the aggressor — responded by shooting Lucero with pepper spray. After being sprayed, Lucero is said to have screamed: "I will put a bullet in you!"

The teen was also convicted of disorderly conduct, but Lucero's wife, who faced the charge, was found not guilty.

The Salt Lake County Sheriff's Office "officially" supports Lucero's position — that he was acting in accordance with his duties as an off-duty officer — and Lucero's attorney, Greg Skordas, said he does not expect the conviction to endanger Lucero's job.

treatment, which included chiropractic adjustments and diet with apricot kernels.

Pontius allegedly determined that Shepherd's cancer originated from gangrene and mercury poisoning in her teeth. Court documents say a dentist has refused that diagnosis.

Snuffer also received periodic checkups from an oncologist, who told her she would die by October if she wasn't promptly treated, according to court documents. The oncologist says Pontius discouraged Shepherd from receiving chemotherapy because it "kills both the good and bad cells and makes people sick."

Snuffer blamed the case on Utah laws, which he said unfairly penalize practitioners like his client.

"Utah limits dramatically and enforces with criminal penalties what Utah is willing to accept as appropriate medical care," Snuffer said. "That's where the problem in this case arises ... Medicine has a monopoly, and it's enforced by the licensing department from the state of Utah."

The state Division of Occupational and Professional Licensing began the case after Shepherd's husband filed complaints.

Eagles suffocate Mountaineers

By Kevin Colbert Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — Eastern Oklahoma State tried slowing the game down against the College of Southern Idaho. The strategy worked. They still lost by 27.

CSI struggled early against the defensive-minded Mountaineers before surging for a 63-39 win over Eastern Oklahoma State College Saturday on the final night of the Arctic Circle Tournament at CSI Gymnasium in Twin Falls.

One night after CSI (7-0 overall) scored 114 points, EOSC (7-2) held the Golden Eagles to 43 percent shooting, thanks in large part to a zone defense that slowed the tempo and frustrated CSI most of the evening.

"It's a frustrating game in that you want to get going, you want to get your spurs," CSI head coach Gib Arnold said. "We like to run, and I thought Eastern had a nice job of slowing us down."

Eastern Oklahoma State's slow pace kept the Mountaineers in it until 10:12 remained in the game when Eric Young cut the Eagles' lead to 39-34. But CSI then went on a 15-0 run, taking a 54-34 lead on a Shaun Davis 3-pointer with 7:04 remaining to put the game away.

Tournament MVP Jamaal Brown paced the Eagles with 21 points. Davis and Abdoulaye Ndiaye each contributed 10 points while Ndiaye added eight rebounds.

Young led EOSC with nine points.

CSI never trailed in the first half and took a 31-20 lead at halftime. Brown led the Eagles at 17:47 when he sank two free throws. The Eagles claimed their largest lead in the first half when Nick Hansen buried a 3-pointer from along the left baseline with 15 seconds left before the buzzer.

Western Wyoming CC 96, Peninsula College (Wash.) 92, OT. Western Wyoming held a 50-47 lead at halftime, but Peninsula College went on a 12-0 run to open the half in taking a 59-50 advantage. PC then led 77-63 after Cox's 3 from the left wing, but Western Wyoming retaliated with a 14-0 run of its own to tie the game at 77 with :33.1 remaining.

Zafirov hit a 3-pointer for WYCC with 24.6 seconds remaining to tie the game at 88. After PC failed to score on the ensuing possession, Western Wyoming's Knight rushed down

Raft River rolls in second half

By Mark Jones South Idaho Press writer

MOSCOW — The Raft River Trojans football team captured the Idaho State IA 8-man Division 1 title Friday night with a 44-22 win over the Genesee Bulldogs at the Kibbie Dome in Moscow.

Big plays sparked the Trojans for 26 unanswered points en route to their second state title in three years.

"It was well-earned," said Raft River's Paden Baker. "But it all starts with the line up front. We couldn't do anything without them."

Baker was right in the middle of the big plays for the Trojans all night long.

However, it was the Bulldogs coming up with the big plays early on.

Pushing escalates into one of NBA's worst brawls

By Chris Sheridan Associated Press writer

NEW YORK — Indiana's Ron Artest, Jermaine O'Neal and Stephen Jackson, and Detroit's Ben Wallace were suspended indefinitely by the NBA on Saturday for taking part in one of the ugliest brawls in U.S. sports history, a fight with fans that commissioner David Stern called "shocking, repulsive and inexcusable."

League officials and police were examining videotapes of Friday night's melee and interviewing witnesses. The NBA issued a statement saying it was reviewing rules and security procedures "so that fans can continue to attend our games unthreatened by events such as the ones that occurred last night."

O'Neal and Jackson — who all threw punches at spectators in the stands or on the court at the end of the nationally televised Pacers-Pistons game — were to begin serving their suspensions Saturday night, when Indiana hosted Orlando.

Wallace's suspension will start at home Sunday night against Charlotte, the next game for the reigning NBA champion Pistons. The exact length of the four players' bans could be announced as early as Sunday. "I didn't start it. I just played the game," Wallace said Saturday before learning of his suspension.

When all else fails, call for some soup

ORLANDO, Fla. — The answer is in the soup. I'm a great believer in soup. Chicken soup, vegetable soup, and almost any soup — although I've never been into French onion. And just days before Thanksgiving, this seems like the perfect time to salute Campbell's Chunky Soups and its connection with the NFL.

NFL PICKS Jerry Greene

During the last eight years, Campbell's has donated more than 32 million cans of soup to many hunger relief charities in a promotion directed to the NFL. Each year NFL fans go to the "Chunky.com" Web site and vote for their favorite NFL team with each vote resulting in another can of soup added to the charitable donation.

So Sunday's predictions will be based on the support of each team — because I have the rankings, from Green Bay's 155,125 votes to a pathetic 3,875 cans in support of the East Rutherford Jets. Shame on you, jets fans.

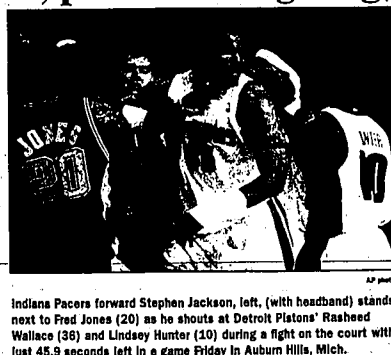

And as for letting soup determine my predictions, in the words of my grandma — "It couldn't hurt."

LAST WEEK: A perfectly mediocre 7-7 straight up (86-58 for season) and an abysmal 5-9 against the spread (77-63-4 for season). So much cold borscht. Hard to imagine how the soup picks can be worse.

MIAMI (1-8) at Seattle (5-4) — Seahawks favored by 9.5. Jets were last in "Soup Derby," but Dolphins were 31st with just 28 more votes. Out of the kitchen and on the field. Seattle RB Shaun Alexander has rushed for 531 yards in last 3 games. So much for Jim Bates' debut as the Fish head coach. Seatawks by 13.

San Francisco (1-8) at Tampa Bay (3-6) — Yucs favored by 8. Ben meaning to.

No. 2 Auburn rolls over Crimson Tide

TUSCALOOSA, Ala. (AP) Jason Campbell passed for 224 yards and Travis Brown and Carnell Williams ran for second-half touchdowns for the Auburn Tigers' 21-13 win over the Alabama-Crimson Tide.

Now the question is whether an impressive first 30 minutes will be enough to cancel out a 6-0 halftime deficit and lackluster start when this game is figured into the Bowl Championship Series standings.

The Big Ten (11-0, 8-0 Southern Conference) are third in the BCS behind second-place Oklahoma — which beat Baylor 35-0 — and Southern California. Even the nation's top scoring defense ran into a little trouble late, Alabama (6-5, 3-5) drove 84 yards on 11 plays in the final minutes, scoring on Spencer Pennington's 48-yard pass to D.J. Hall with 1:26 left.

No. 2 Oklahoma 35, Baylor 0

WACO, Texas — Adrian Peterson ran for 240 yards, including three second-half touchdowns, and Oklahoma got the lopsided win it needed for the BCS standings.

After a slow start, the Sooners (11-0, 6-0 Big 12) scored on four straight possessions. Jason White threw a 10-yard touchdown pass to Travis Wilson just before halftime to make it 14-0, and Peterson had short TD runs on the first three drives of the second half.

Peterson, who had 32 carries, tied the NCAA record for most 100-yard games by a freshman with his 10th. It came a week after he was held to 58 yards by Nebraska to snap his freshman record of nine straight 100-yard games.

Even after last week's 30-3 win over Nebraska, Oklahoma was caught by Auburn in the latest AP poll. The Sooners remained second behind top-rated Southern California in the BCS standings, but their margin over Auburn was cut in half.

No. 4 California 41, Stanford 6

BERKELEY, Calif. — J. Arrington ran for 169 yards to set California's season-rushing record and the Golden Bears recorded their biggest victory in the Big Game since 1930.

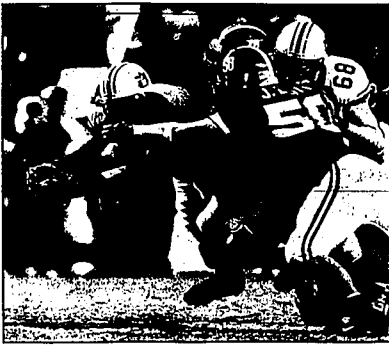

Freshman Marshawn Lynch added 122 yards on just nine carries, including a spectacular 55-yard touchdown run. Lynch also threw a TD pass as the Bears racked up 474 total yards in coach Elford's third straight victory over Stanford in the 91st edition of the rivalry. Aaron Rodgers passed for 120 yards and scored for the Bears (9-1, 6-1 Pac-10), who kept their Bowl Championship Series hopes thriving with their sixth straight victory.

L.C. Ostrander passed for 148 yards for the Cardinal (4-7, 2-6), who finished their third straight losing season under coach Buddy Havsik with just 160 yards of total offense.

No. 17 Iowa 30, No. 9 Wisconsin 7

IOWA CITY, Iowa — Iowa sent Michigan to the Rose Bowl. Drew Tate threw three touchdown passes and Iowa's defense forced four turnovers to beat No. 9 Wisconsin 30-7 and claim a share of the Big Ten title on Saturday.

Ohio State's 37-21 victory over Michigan earlier in the day raised the stakes for the 80th meeting between the Badgers and Hawkeyes, putting the conference championship on the line for both teams.

The No. 17 Hawkeyes (9-2, 7-1) won their second league title in three years, splitting it this time with Michigan. But the Wolverines claim the invitation to the Rose Bowl thanks to their 30-17 victory over Iowa earlier this season.

For the Badgers (9-2, 6-2), a promising season has crumbled the last two weeks with two losses by a combined 79-21.

After a rocky start, Tate settled down and finished 15-of-24 for 185 yards. He fired two TD passes to Clinton Solomon, including a 51-yarder late in the first half, and another to Scott Chandler late in the third quarter.

Kyle Schlicher kicked three field goals, all in the second half, to lead Iowa to its 18th straight home victory, the nation's fourth longest streak.

But it was Iowa's defense that caused most of the problems for the Badgers, who were coming off a humbling 49-14 defeat at Michigan State.

The Hawkeyes, the Big Ten's leader in turnovers, picked off John Stocco twice and recovered two fumbles, converting three of the takeaways into 13 second-half points.

As Big Ten co-champs, the Hawkeyes appear to be in line for a bid to the Capital One Bowl, in Orlando, Fla., while the Badgers' postseason plans are unclear.

Playing without leading rusher Anthony Davis, Wisconsin was held to just 11 yards rushing and 186 overall.

No. 18 Miami 52, Wake Forest 7

MIAMI — Brock Berlin threw for a career-best 351 yards and four touchdowns in just over a half and Miami stayed in contention for the Atlantic Coast Conference title.

Berlin threw scoring passes to four different receivers, completed 13 of 19 passes and continued his push for ACC player of the year honors. In his last completed pass, Berlin completed 55.9 percent of his passes for 1,094 yards with 19 touchdowns and only two interceptions — none in his last 15 attempts.

Travis Gore rushed for 83 yards and a touchdown for Miami (8-2, 5-2), and Hashawn Jones recovered a blocked punt in the end zone for another Hurricanes score. Miami outgained Wake Forest 579-193.

No. 15 Tennessee 38, Vanderbilt 33

NASHVILLE, Tenn. — Cedric Houston ran for three touchdowns and No. 15 Tennessee clinched the Southeastern Conference's Eastern Division title with its 22nd straight victory over Vanderbilt.

Tennessee (9-2, 6-1) will play No. 2 Auburn in the SEC championship game in Atlanta on Dec. 4 regardless of what happens in the Vols' game next week against Kentucky. It will be Tennessee's fourth trip to the title game since 1997.

Y. Cutler was 22-of-33 for 314 yards and three touchdowns for Vanderbilt (2-9, 1-7), which finished with the same record as last year despite returning 21 starters and entering the season with bigger hopes.

No. 18 Virginia 10, Georgia Tech 13

ATLANTA — Alvin Pearman scored two touchdowns and Virginia came up with four key turnovers.

Virginia kept alive its hopes of at least sharing the Atlantic Coast Conference title, though the Cavaliers (6-2, 5-2) are still a longshot to claim the league's sport title.

Pearman scored Virginia's first touchdown on a 6-yard run late in the first quarter, and he finished off the Yellow Jackets (6-4, 4-4) with a 1-yard plunge in the opening minute of the fourth. Pearman set up his second TD by going 45 yards with a short pass, getting knocked out of bounds just shy of the end zone.

No. 19 Boston College 34, Temple 17

PHILADELPHIA — L.V. Whitworth ran for 151 yards and two touchdowns, and Boston College took another step closer to its first BCS berth in Temple's final game before being booted from the Big East.

The 10th-ranked Eagles (8-2, 4-1) pulled into a first-place tie in the conference with No. 21 West Virginia (8-2, 4-1). The Eagles are hoping for the Atlantic Coast Conference next year.

The Owls (2-9, 1-5) are getting kicked out of the Big East for failing to meet minimum requirements for membership, most notably in attendance, facilities and fielding a competitive team. Temple finished with his 13th straight losing season and had only 14 Big East wins in 14 conference seasons. The Owls begin life next year as an independent.

No. 13 Boise State blasts Louisiana Tech

BOISE (AP) — Jon Helman doler rushed for a school-record five touchdowns, and No. 13 Boise State clinched at least a share of its third straight Western Athletic Conference title with a 55-14 win over Louisiana Tech Saturday.

Boise State (10-0, 7-0) extended the nation's longest win streak to 21 games and tied BYU's record for the most consecutive conference titles. The Broncos last WAC loss was Nov. 3, 2001, a 48-2 setback at Louisiana Tech.

The Broncos can claim the WAC title outright, beating Nevada next week when they meet the first WAC team to start 10-0 since Wyoming in 1996.

Louisiana Tech (5-6 overall, 4-3) lost for the fifth time in this season to a team ranked in the top 25. The Bulldogs previously fell to Miami, Auburn, Tennessee and Texas-El Paso, and are now 2-26 all-time against ranked opponents.

Louisiana Tech needed wins in its final two games to become bowl eligible.

Jared Zabransky threw for 317 yards and a touchdown for Boise State, who racked up 629 total yards and scored 38 second-half points.

Last year, Ryan Dinwiddie threw for 569 yards and Boise State had 732 yards of offense in a 43-37 win over the Bulldogs.

Louisiana Tech running back Ryan Moats — No. 2 in the country, averaging 164.2 yards — was held to 60 yards on 19 carries and was "mostly ineffective" in the second half as the Bulldogs were forced to throw the ball.

Montana 38, Montana St. 22

MISSOULA, Mont. — Craig Och's passed for 280 yards and two touchdowns and Les Hillman ran for 120 yards and two more scores Saturday as Montana clinched a share of the Big Sky Conference title with a 38-22 victory over Montana State.

No. 7 Montana (9-2, 6-1 Big Sky) earned the league's automatic berth in the NCAA Division I-AA playoffs and will be playing the postseason for a I-AA record 12th consecutive year.

Och's two touchdown passes went to Jefferson Heidelberger — a 15-yarder in the first quarter and a 14-yarder late in the third that gave Montana a 31-16 lead.

Travis Lutny passed for 396 yards and a touchdown to Rick Gatewood, who had 13 catches for a school record 235 yards.

Ohio State knocks off No. 7 Michigan 37-21

COLUMBUS, Ohio (AP) — Troy Smith barely got on the field for Ohio State earlier this season. After the Buckeyes' biggest game of the year, he had trouble getting off it.

With former high school teammate Smith and Ted Ginn Jr. leading the way, the Buckeyes pushed their troubles into the background for at least a day with a stunning 37-21 upset of No. 7 Michigan on Saturday.

"I'm pretty much at a loss for words," said Smith, the quarterback who didn't play in three of the first five Ohio State games after being beaten out for the starting job in preseason. "It's unbelievable. Coming off the field, I nearly got my neck broken by fans."

Smith was swarmed by thousands of fans who flooded onto the field, dancing and singing and hugging — some apparently a little too tightly.

He ran for 145 yards and Ginn set school and Big Ten records with his fourth punt return touchdown. The two left after the game to catch Cleveland High School's playoff game.

Both starred for the fanbros before choosing Ohio State.

Ohio State's fourth season under coach Jim Tressell has been a tough one. The Buckeyes started the Big Ten season with three straight losses and plummeted out of the rankings. Just when things started looking better on the field, problems arose off.

Two weeks ago former Ohio State star Maurice Clarett accused Tressell, his staff and Buckeye boosters of giving him and other players improper benefits. An NCAA investigation is about to begin.

But it's never a bad day in Columbus when Ohio State beats Michigan.

"This was important because it's Ohio State-Michigan," said Tressell, now 3-1 against the Buckeyes' arch-rivals. "(Former Ohio State Coach) Earle Bruce always says that if the Ohio State coach wins against Michigan he can walk down the main streets of Columbus. If he loses, he'd better watch the back alleys. It's that important."

Tennessee (3-6) at Jacksonville (6-3) — Jaguars favored by 3.5. Nobody expected this at the start of the season. Titans are beaten to a pulp and can't use some nice new toys, but jags are not in a charitable mood. Jags by 10.

Arizona (4-5) at Carolina (2-7) — Panthers favored by 1.5. Carolina DT Brenton Buckner was asked to explain what it's like to be on a losing team. "Pressure will make a monkey eat a hot pepper. It all makes sense now. Peppery Panthers by 8.

Other than that, the only other possible explanation of an upset here is that Cowboys Coach Bill Parcells will kick somebody if he's embarrassed again.

Idaho State Seniors announce winners

The Idaho State Senior Championship Tournament announced its winners.

The A- and A Divisions can now be combined to determine the individuals who will qualify for the National Senior Tournament next May.

Alice Roberts of Emmett, held on to first place with 1,393 in the A- and Lettie Anderson, Idaho Falls, was first in the A division with 1,395. Fourteen pins for Roberts makes her the qualifier.

A- Men leader is Earl Manz, Grangeville, with 1,447 and in the A division it is Wes Dent of Blackfoot with 1,428. Here a 19 pin lead lets Manz be the qualifier.

In the B divisions, Carolyn Lattin rolled 1,450 to qualify as champion for the ladies and Emerald Hutchins, Welpepe, held on to his lead during the second week end to take the men's side.

LET'S GO BOWLING
Thelma Tucker

The C Division lady winner is Mireya Messner, Nampa, with 1,264— Gordon Stepp—Idaho Falls, also held onto the lead during the second weekend with his 1,462.

The D Division ladies winner is Sheron Johnson, Mtn. Home, at 1,376 and Joe Stephanshen, Salmon, held on with 1,518. Stephanshen was also the champion in 2003.

In addition to the prize money they will receive, each champion are entered for free into the National Tournament and receives a champions shirt that says they are champions from Idaho.

There was 60 entries into the Satellite No Tap Tournament that took place during the same time. First place goes to the balleys, Kathy and Alvin, from Salmon with 1,707. Second was Robert Brown, Boise, and Ralph Hann, Twin Falls with 1,704. Quite a story about these two gentlemen. They did not know each other prior to the tournament. They were matched up and turned out to be excellent partners. Just might add that they are both over that 80 mark.

All the money winners for both tournaments are listed in the bowling scores.

Retailers prepare for holidays

Businesses cater to holiday traditions

About these stories

Three of these articles — the ones by local writers — first appeared in the December edition of Southern Idaho Business, a business-to-business publication of The Times-News. We are reprinting them here to ensure all Times-News readers have a chance to benefit. Southern Idaho Business is distributed monthly to business owners and managers throughout the Magic Valley. But we've also rounded up a new selection of stories from around the country about what shoppers are likely to experience during retailers' busy holiday season.

Stores' busiest season quickly approaches

By Megan Hinds
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — Increased advertising, steep discounts and open houses will be the key to retailers during this year's holiday season, area retailers say.

The holidays are the busiest time of the year for Magic Valley retailers, with some taking in nearly half of the year's sales in November and December.

To lure shoppers, Magic Valley Mall will have a new look for the season, said Shellen Gilliland, the mall's marketing manager. The shopping center is spending $30,000 on new holiday decorations, including a log cabin Santa Claus display in the mall's center court, Gilliland said.

"It's been 10 years since we re-decorated," she said.

Each store in the mall is gearing up for the busy holiday season, including Alpine Jewelers, said co-owner Scott Noble. "The Christmas season normally makes up 35 to 40 percent of the whole year's sales," said Noble, who also owns a store in Idaho Falls. "It's our biggest time of the year."

Noble said the jewelry store can offer its lowest prices of the year during the holidays, due to increased sales volume. Diamonds are the biggest sellers around the holidays — due in part to men purchasing engagement rings, Noble said.

"You wouldn't believe how many people get engaged around Christmas," he said.

In another part of the mall, national retailer Sears will offer discounts and extended store hours, said the store's general manager, Willy Barrette. On the day after Thanksgiving — traditionally one of the nation's biggest shopping days — Sears will open its doors at 6 a.m., with special sales lasting until 11 a.m.

"If you can't win the customer over that weekend, the customer will come back later in the season," Barrette said.

All of Sears' advertising is controlled by the chain's corporate office in Hoffman Estates, Ill., and several financial quarters of lackluster sales seem to have been the catalyst for more aggressive advertising this holiday season.

Customers now can find coupons for $5 and $10 off certain purchases in newspaper advertisements and mallers, Barrette said.

"The marketing has changed," he said. "The ads are more trendy."

Smaller, locally owned gift and craft shops are preparing for the annual deluge of customers looking for unique presents.

In early November, employees of Simplex Times Village, 840 Addison Ave., were "working frantically" to prepare the store for an annual holiday open house event, said manager Anita Lam.

Magic Valley businesses encourage community to donate to charity

By Lorraine Cavenner
Times-News correspondent

BURLEY — The holiday season seems to bring out the best in people, and several area businesses again are working to contribute to the community this year.

From collecting toys for disadvantaged children to gathering canned goods for area food banks, opportunities abound this year.

Wal-Mart in Burley's annual Shop With a Cop event lets disadvantaged Magic Valley kids shop for Christmas gifts, said Darin Stoddard, store manager.

The store and Cassia County sheriff's deputies raise money throughout the year for the event, which is held in early December. Last year, $2,000 was raised and split among 25 children, who toured the store with the deputies, looking for gifts. Each child also received a pair of shoes or boots.

"About 80 or 90 percent of the children shop for their families first," Stoddard said.

Wal-Mart employees feel rewarded through watching the children shop, he said.

"The excitement on the kids' faces is priceless," Stoddard said.

Sgt. Peggy Marizza of the Cassia County Sheriff's Department said the officers also end up with smiles — and sometimes tears — on their faces.

"After I shop with the children I don't even want a Christmas present," she said. "It really starts off the holiday season."

HOLIDAY RETAILING PROGRESS REPORT

One year, a little boy showed up at the event wearing a pair of rattered, dust-topped shoes. Officers took up a collection, bought him a pair of new tennis shoes, and the boy was awed at his present, Marizza said.

"You'd think it was a million bucks," she said. "He made us all cry like a bunch of babies."

The $2,000 in sales brought in that day in no way affected the store's bottom line — it's not about the money, Stoddard said.

"That's not what we're trying to do," he said. "It's about the kids."

Garden center helps kids

Kimberly Nurseries' annual Christmas in the Nighttime Sky event collects thousands of toys for disadvantaged children, and brings customers to the garden center, too.

A number of local sponsors contribute time and money to the fund-raiser held on the day after Thanksgiving, which combines a holiday display, a dinner and fireworks.

Over the 13 years the event has been held about 38,140 people have been fed and 32,000 toys have been donated. Tickets to the event are given in exchange for a new unwrapped toy. The donated toys are turned over to area charities.

The event collects everything from Barbie dolls to bicycles, said office manager Sherry Wright.

"One gentleman brings a fishing pole complete with a tackle box," she said.

When people come to the event, they walk through the section of Kimberly Nurseries specially decorated for Christmas, she said. "He made us all cry like a bunch of babies."

While the fund-raiser is not designed as a sales tool for the store, many people are able to see the Christmas display who would not normally shop there, Wright said.

Last year, about 2,800 people attended Christmas in the Nighttime Sky, and about 3,200 came in 2003, Wright said.

"It's a great event," she said. "It's a lot of work, but it's so worth it."

Downtown businesses plan big contribution

This year, businesses in Twin Falls' historic downtown district are sponsoring a holiday-themed charity fund-raiser.

Starting Dec. 3 as part of downtown's Festival of Lights event, community members can purchase a wooden nickel raffle ticket for the price of one canned good, said Tony Prater, president of historic downtown's business improvement district.

The ticket enters participants in a Dec. 18 drawing for a $1000 gift certificate or other prizes, and the canned goods will go to an area food bank. The donations can be made at most downtown businesses and professional offices, Prater said.

Prater said the event could have a two-fold effect on downtown businesses.

"It shows the businesses are there for profit but are giving back to the community that is supporting them," he said.

"This time of year, businesses are very good about helping people who don't necessarily shop at their stores."

Mall celebrates several ways

Magic Valley Mall holds a number of charity fundraising events each year that benefit disadvantaged Magic Valley residents, said Shellen Gilliland, the mall's marketing director.

The mall's largest event planned so far this season is Salvation Army "angel trees." In which several Christmas trees hung with ornaments bearing the names and gift wishes of needy children and senior citizens are placed around the mall. Shoppers choose an ornament, shop for appropriate gifts and drop off the packages to be wrapped and delivered.

Gilliland said.

"(The Salvation Army) walks off with hundreds and hundreds of packages each year," she said. "We literally take garbage sacks and stuff them just full of presents."

"We also allow the familiar Salvation Army bell ringers to set up collection kettles at mall entrances. Gilliland said she'd also like to organize a fund-raiser for area National Guard members who will soon be deployed to Iraq.

"We do some much around the holidays," she said. "It's so much fun."

Few are aware of the hidden fees that take the 'gift' out of 'gift certificates'

Knights Rider News Service

NINW-YORK — When it comes to gift giving, one of the easiest options is a gift certificate.

Gift certificates cover the spectrum — you can buy them in various denominations and can find them for many stores, restaurants and services. But if you don't choose carefully, you could end up giving a gift that gets slowly eaten away by fees — before the recipient gets a chance to spend it.

Few people are aware of the hidden fees in gift cards, according to a study by Synergistics Research, a market-research company. Common gift-card pitfalls include:

- Expiration dates. Some are as short as a year.

- Dormancy fees. These kick in if the card isn't used within a set period of time — usually between six months and a year. The fee can be as high as $2 per month.
- Balance/maintenance fees. A low percentage of your remaining balance will be deducted every month after the card isn't used within a set period of time.

- Limits on cash back. If you redeem your gift certificate for merchandise valued at less than the gift certificate's value, you may get cash back for the remainder. Other gift cards don't offer cash back, even if the remainder is a few pennies.

Whether it's the perils or the receiver, check the details of your gift card. Fees and limitations are typically written in fine print on the card, or somewhere on the packaging. If you're the purchaser, ask a store or company representative for the details.

CONTRIBUTIONS

When employees of Argo Co. Inc., a screen printing and embroidery store, learned about an opportunity to send caps to troops in Iraq, they embroidered 576 caps with various Idaho designs. The employees donated their time working a 10-hour shift on a Saturday, and the company donated the materials, resulting in a total contribution valued at about $5,800. Pictured left to right in back are Brian Trappen, Brent Trappen, Jenna Heberg, Lita Macias and Darla Brownfield; and in front: Bonnie McGraw, Julie Caparro, Connie Wachat and Ben Neal.

Twin Falls Fred Meyer Foundation member Eddy Packham presents a donation to Chris Curry, South Central Community Action Partnership's northern counties program manager, with foundation members Kathy Schiffer, Jeff, and Becky O'Brien, right.

South Central Community Action Partnership received a grant of $500 from The Fred Meyer Foundation for purchasing items for Thanksgiving food boxes that will be distributed to about 100 families throughout Magic Valley before the holiday.

SCCAP is a local nonprofit organization that assists families and individuals in crisis.

The foundation's community grant program is driven by 29 local advisory committees made up of local Fred Meyer employees who research nonprofit organizations in their communities and then award grants.

"These grants are the result of true community efforts involving both our employees through our annual Employee Giving Campaign and our customers through the contributions they make in our stores using Make-Change-Count boxes and scan cards at the check stands. The dollars collected through these employee and store efforts are combined and then allocated by the advisory committees as community grants in the four western states where we have our stores," said Mary Loftin, executive director of the foundation.

The Fred Meyer Foundation assists nonprofit organizations dedicated to helping children and reducing hunger in communities served by 128 Fred Meyer stores in Alaska, Idaho, Oregon and Washington. For information, call 1-800-858-9202, ext. 5605.

Wheat market sends mixed signals

IDAHO FALLS — Any wheat producer who looks over the signals being sent by the wheat market this fall can find a factor that will positively impact the market for every factor that will negatively impact the market. Whether it's the positive factors or the negative factors that will end up dominating the market is the great unknown.

Highlights of this week's Magic Valley Ag Weekly. The Times-News' weekly report on agriculture.

Patterson said, "That should be good news for the market because it's not as burdensome as stocks is not burdensome."

Amalgamated see good yields, sugar content

TWIN FALLS, Idaho — Good yields and strong sugar content marked this year's sugar beet crop in Amalgamated Sugar Co.'s Twin Falls and Paul districts, as the harvest wrapped up this week in the two districts, officials said.

Yields in the Twin falls district came in at about 27.8 tons per acre, with an overall sugar content of about 17.2 percent, said John L. agricultural manager for the Twin Falls District. The sugar content was the district's fifth highest since 1993.

"Usually this doesn't happen, they don't get a good sugar crop, Kerbs said.

Last year, the best lead to better yields of 29.2 tons per acre in the district. But the sugar content was lower at 16.6 percent, he said.

Idaho area producer Jeff Eiden, who grows 500-600 acres, said he had average to above average yields on his farm this year.

"It was a good crop," he said. "It had good sugar all the way through."

He said the harvest weather was decent this year, too. It wasn't as hot late into the harvest as last fall.

Republicans look to repeal label law

WASHINGTON — Telling consumers where their meat, fruit and vegetables came from seemed such a good idea to U.S. ranchers and farmers in competition with imports that Congress two years ago ordered the food industry to do it. But meatpackers and food processors fought the law from the start, and newly emboldened Republicans now plan to repeal it before Thanksgiving.

As part of the 2002 farm bill, country-of-origin labeling was supposed to have gone into effect this fall. Congress last year postponed it until 2006. Now, House Republicans are trying to wipe it off the books as part of a spending bill they plan to finish this month.

House Majority Whip Roy Blunt (R-Mo.) said he expected the Senate to agree to repealing the measure, whose main champion two years ago was Senate Majority Leader Tom Daschle, D-S.D.

"I can't find any real opposition to doing exactly what we want to do here," Blunt said.

Copper oxide effective against nematodes

BATON ROUGE, La. — Using copper oxide wire particles to control internal parasites in small ruminants, such as sheep and goats, is safe and effective with two grams or less a used.

That's according to a study by the Agricultural Research Service, Louisiana State University and other participants in the Southern Ruminant Parasite Control. The researchers are studying alternatives to conventional treatments for nematode infections because of growing parasite resistance to chemical dewormers.

Retail credit cards promise discounts

But watch out for high interest rates

NEW YORK (AP) — As you approach the checkout counter with your arms full of sweaters or toys or other purchases for the holidays, it's not uncommon for the sales clerk to offer you a deal — 10 percent off your bill if you open a store credit account.

It may be tempting, but consumer experts say there are a lot of reasons you should say "no." "The carrot they dangle in front of shoppers is an initial discount for signing up for a store card," said Greg McBride, senior financial analyst at Bankrate.com in North Palm Beach, Fla. "But they can offer a 10 percent discount because they're charging interest rates that are 20 percent or more on the cards."

By comparison, the average rate on a standard Visa- or MasterCard-branded bank card is about 14 percent.

Here's how the math works on a retail card, according to McBride. Let's assume you take the offer on $1,000 worth of goods on a card carrying a 20 percent interest rate. You get $100 off and end up with just under $1,000 on your new card. If you make a minimum payment each month for 12 months, you'll have accumulated interest of $191 at the end of a year. So was the $100 discount worth it?

Another possible negative is that accepting a lot of retail credit offers in a short period of time can lower your credit scores, McBride said. These scores are derived from reports kept by the major credit agencies, including Experian, Equifax and TransUnion, that track the amount of debt consumers have. The lower a score, the higher the interest rate consumers will be charged on loans.

"If you're thinking of taking out a car loan or a mortgage in early 2005, you might think twice about taking out new credit cards now, regardless of that initial discount, because it could cost you a lot more when you borrow next year," McBride said.

That isn't to say that some consumers shouldn't consider the retailers' offers — and millionaires do.

Robert McKinley, chief executive of CardWeb.com Inc., an online publisher of payment card information based in Frederick, Md., said there are more than 600 million store cards in circulation, compared with about 640 million bank cards.

Outstanding balances on the retail cards, which generally have lower credit limits than bank cards, total about $80 billion, compared with $560 billion on bank cards, he said.

"The reason there are so many store cards is that a lot of people take them to get the upfront discount, then stuffer them away in a sock drawer and forget them," McKinley said.

The retailers offers are most advantageous to consumers who pay their credit cards in full every month, because they get the benefit of the discount and don't have to worry about the high interest charges on unpaid balances, McKinley said.

They also can be good for young people who haven't established much of a credit record and for consumers with blemished credit records, McKinley added.

"These are sales driven, so just about everybody can qualify for a card. If only for a couple hundred dollars of purchases," he said.

Consumers with established credit ratings will find better interest rates on bank-issued credit cards or those retail cards that carry Visa or MasterCard logos.

When it comes to retail cards, consumers should be selective, said Curtis Arnold of Little Rock, Ark., founder of the CardRatings.com consumer information site. He suggests consumers choose only the cards at stores they often visit or that offer the best deals, including upfront discounts or zero percent interest for several months.

"If you're making a large purchase, say at Home Depot, and they offer you a one-time rebate, that could be a valuable thing," Arnold said. "But if you're at Gap and they offer you $100 worth of clothes and they offer you 10 percent, that $10 shouldn't entice you to apply for yet another credit card."

On the other hand, if you're a frequent Gap shopper and want to be included in seasonal promotions and future rebate offers, "then accept that one — but don't let yourself be pressured into signing up for a dozen others," he said.

Arnold points out that retail store card promotions vary greatly, and the discount and interest rates on offer today could change tomorrow.

"The retailer's count on impulse, but don't feel you have to sign up on the spot," Arnold said. "Take the application home, study the terms and think it through."

Extended warranties may not be warranted

The Baltimore Sun

The question comes up whether you are buying a soft cooler or car.

After convincing you that you're purchasing the best product on the planet, the sales person then inconspicuously asks if you want to buy an extended warranty. In case something goes wrong, Visions of damages and repair bills race through your mind. Before you know it, you can end up plunking down more dollars for peace of mind.

But are extended warranties warranted?

An extended warranty covers repair or replacement of the item after the manufacturer's basic warranty expires, usually after a few months of purchase or a few years, depending on the product.

For many products, consumer advocates generally say don't waste your money. Extended warranties are big profit makers for those hawkling them. Products today are better made and less likely to break down and require consumers to make a claim. When they do, the repairs may be less expensive than the extended warranty — especially if financed over several years.

"Sales people are taught and paid to waste your money. There is a big profit margin on them," Robert Krughoff, president of Consumers' Checkbook, a consumer group in Washington, D.C. "They are a form of insurance and it only makes sense to buy insurance against catastrophes."

With technology products, often by the time they break down consumers are ready for a new model anyway. For emerging, high-priced tech products, however, such as plasma TVs, an extended warranty could prove useful, said Amanda Walker, an associate editor with Consumer Reports.

We find that the service contract or extended warranty might give people peace of mind. The products are so new, we don't have any reliability data on them yet and they are very expensive, and in some cases their repair can also be very expensive," Walker said.

The consumer magazine also found that extended warranties could be worthwhile for laptop monitors and treadmills that tend to have problems and can be costly to repair, Walker said.

Marc Seidler, owner of the Computer Doctors, a computer repair business in Westminster, Md., said he does not recommend extended warranties for personal computers. Extended warranties typically cover hardware, which is very reliable these days, Seidler said.

The average cost of a computer is $600, and an extended warranty can cost as much as $300. After three to five years, the typical computer is outdated and impractical to fix, Seidler said.

If you're still inclined to buy an extended warranty, check if your credit card offers extra protection on products purchased with the card. Some gold and platinum cards will extend the manufacturer's warranty on purchases for a year or more.

How to do your holiday shopping on auction Web sites

By Madlen Reed The Associated Press

Question: I'd like to do my holiday shopping on eBay and other auction Web sites. How can I be sure I'll be buying authentic gifts for a good price and that will arrive on time?

Answer: Common sense is key in online auctions — and even more so during the holidays. Competition is fiercer and fast shipping is critical, so buyers must take extra care to find items that will be genuine, reasonably priced and delivered at Santa-level speed.

More people are turning to the Internet for holiday shopping. According to an AC Nielsen International Research survey of people online commissions by eBay Inc., 84 percent of the respondents will buy gifts over the Internet this year, up from 75 percent last year.

Many will be turning to online auctions over the next few weeks, especially as more new items, from clothing to electronics to home decor, are now being auctioned.

"In the beginning, eBay was a marketplace for collectibles, used items, miscellaneous items," said Jim Griffith, who runs eBay's user education programs. "As we've grown over the last nine or 10 years, the quantity of brand new marketable merchandise has grown as well."

But while pointing and clicking is certainly faster than navigating your neighborhood mall, don't rush.

"I put my whole world behind online auctions — if you know how to shop correctly," said Adam Hersh, who has his own auction site.

First, take time to research your gift ideas by browsing online. How much do these items normally cost? If an offer seems too good to be true, it probably is. The last thing you want is to order your wife an Hermes bag, then watch her unwrap a knockoff.

"If the price is unbelievable — something that's normally $5,000 offering for $1,500 — bells should go off in your head," Griffith said.

On the flip side, don't let your self be needed into overbidding. Because more buyers participate in online auctions during the holiday season, prices may trend toward the steep end, Hersh said.

Before bidding, read the item's description and examine the photo — it sounds obvious, but you can't assume anything when buying online.

"If there's any question in your mind it may not actually be authentic or accurately described, contact the seller before you bid," Griffith said. "For those in the market for a brand new gift, as opposed to a used vintage item or a collectible, do should spell that out, or at least abbreviate it with NIB, meaning 'new in box,' or NWT, meaning 'new with tags,' Hersh said.

So the item looks legit — but what about the seller? Before bidding, it is imperative that you check the seller's rating and read the feedback. This allows you to gauge the item's authenticity, as well as learn about the seller's shipping practices.

If there's a really reputable seller, you can be assured it's going to be a safe transaction," Hersh said.

Griffith recommends using sellers with at least a 95 percent positive rating and reading both negative and positive feedback from the past three to six months.

Additionally, keep your eye out for special holiday offers. Want your purchase gift-wrapped? How about express-delivered directly to the recipient rather than to your billing address? Many sellers offer extras this time of year, so ask about shipping options.

Contact the seller also if there's any uncertainty about payment. Sellers who accept credit cards or use services such as PayPal are preferable because buyers are then protected from fraud, should the item be damaged in transit, not arrive at all, or turn out different than advertised.

Credit cards and PayPal also speed up the whole process. According to Griffith, paying with a check or money order often adds about two weeks to shipping time as the seller waits for the check to clear.

standard turkey dinner, you need a large group of people to make tamales, so it's a family get-together.

"The ingredients to fill those tamales as well as festive holiday music can be found at Jerome's Wal-Mart, said manager Jeff Hansen.

"We try to mirror the community in our store," Hansen said. "We hire that way and inventory that way."

Wal-Mart has a large inventory of specialty items that bring in Hispanic shoppers, who make up about 20 percent of this customer base. An entire aisle at the store is dedicated to foods popular with the Hispanic community, he said.

"It's what they have requested," he said. "If people make a suggestion to us, we go out, buy it and stock it."

"That requires a lot of footage in my store, but there is a market for it."

The nine-day celebration of Las Kurbegovas is the tradition of Mary-and-Joseph search for a room at the inn on the first Christmas Eve — is celebrated in the homes of many Hispanics at Christmas, said Koyl Negrete, an employee at Mi Pueblo Mexican Bakery in Buhl.

On the ninth evening, Christmas Eve, an image of the Christ child is carried in by two people as part of the ceremony and laid in a crib.

The participants kneel in prayer and then celebrate with fireworks and baskets of holiday sweets called colaciones, Negrete said. The bakery stocks colaciones — Mexican animal crackers and pinatas for the celebration.

Magic Valley's growing ethnic communities — also including a number of immigrants from Eastern Europe, including Bosnians, Russians, Romanians and Germans.

Euro Food Store, 205 Hansen St. E., caters to European-Americans who want specialty dried meats, cheeses and sweets, said co-owner Dragana Kurbegovic. "If they want American cuisine, they will buy (it) in American food stores," said Kurbegovic.

"But if they want dry meats or specialty sausages, they come here."

Special spices for cakes and cookies are popular items, especially around the holidays, Kurbegovic said.

"For example, we use vanilla sugar for our cakes, but most Americans have never heard of it," Kurbegovic said. "Our sweets — chocolates — are different."

The store stocks chocolates from several European countries — for Christmas — and customers of all cultures enjoy the variety, Kurbegovic said.

"Since we have been open, we have so many Americans here. It happens especially around Christmas, when people are searching for something different for a present. They come to buy our sweets."

Have 'Cookie Ask Questions' this season

When I was a very small child my nickname was "Cookie" after Cookie Burnstead. We were born about the same time.

My older sister, who was in high school, was already a very good cook. When she would go into the kitchen and start creaming butter and sugar together, I knew what was coming and would tag along. "What you making?" I would ask.

"Cookie ask questions," was the inevitable reply.

"No, what are you really making?" I'd persist.

"I'm really making Cookie ask questions." This back and forth game would continue till the "Cookie Ask Questions" came out of the oven. They were the best sugar cookies I've ever tasted - soft and not too sweet.

My sis is gone now and over the years I tried to recreate a few of the same cookies without luck. I've come close several times but either the flavor was not quite right or the cookies were crunchy. I'd begin to doubt my memory.

Then recently I found an old turn-of-the-century recipe for white cake that used corn starch in place of part of the flour. The flavor of that cake was very similar to my sister's cookies. I did some experimenting and combined the white cake recipe with my closest sugar cookie recipe, so far, and Voilà!

Here are my Cookie Ask Questions. They make a great Holiday or Christmas Cookie. Give them a try and see what you think!

COOKIE ASK QUESTIONS

Makes 5 to 6 dozen cookies
Cream the "following" together till smooth and lemon colored.

- 2 cups sugar
  - 2 cups soft butter or margarine
  - 5 eggs
  - 2 tablespoons vanilla
- Then add:
- 4 cups flour
  - 2 cups cornstarch
  - 2 tablespoons baking powder
  - 2 to 3 tablespoons milk (more if needed to make a smooth but stiff dough).

Sprinkle of salt.

Mix with electric mixer till dough is smooth but stiff. Form into roll, wrap with waxed paper or aluminum foil. Refrigerate until firm. Slice into 1/4- to 1/2-inch rounds and bake in 350 degree oven for 12 to 15 minutes.

Remove from oven before the cookies start to brown. Cool on wire rack. These are good plain but you can decorate them with frosting if you like.

Here are some quick and easy recipes for you to try this holiday season:

DUMP CAKE

- 1 package cake mix
- 1 (20-ounce) can crushed pineapple
- 1 (20-ounce) can cherry pie filling
- 1 cup chopped pecans
- 1/2 cup (1 stick) butter or margarine cut into thin slices

Preheat oven to 350 degrees. Grease a 9-by-13-inch pan. Dump undrained pineapple into the pan. Sprinkle evenly with the pie filling. Spread into an even layer. Dump cake mix over the pie filling and spread evenly. Sprinkle nuts over cake mix. Put pat of butter all over the top of everything. Bake at 350 degrees for 50 minutes. Serve warm or cool as desired.

CHOCOLATE CRUNCH CRUMB CRUST

- Makes 4 crusts
- 1 package fudge brownie mix
- 4 cups graham cracker crumbs (about 20 crackers)
- 3/4 cup butter or margarine (1 1/2 sticks) melted

Preheat oven to 350 degrees. Combine the dry brownie mix, chocolate flavor packet, graham cracker crumbs and butter in a large bowl and mix. Once mixed, the crumb mixture can be stored in the refrigerator until needed or can be baked in crusts and stored in the freezer till needed.

For each crust measure 1 1/2 cups of the crumb mixture into a 9-by-9-inch pie pan and pat out to form a crust. Bake at 350 degrees for 8 to 10 minutes.

To make a peppermint ice cream pie, fill the pie crust with softened peppermint ice cream. Then freeze. Serve with whipped cream and drizzle chocolate syrup over the top.

Or use coffee ice cream, top with whipped cream and drizzle caramel syrup over the top.

TURKEY: Traditional or tweaked

The Baltimore Sun

There are two kinds of people in the United States, those who want a traditional bird at Thanksgiving and those who want to tweak the turkey.

Today, we present a traditional bird - rubbed with butter, served with buttermilk cornbread stuffing, employing a recipe that has been used in our family for years and traces its lineage back to a cookbook by the late, great Craig Claiborne.

For those with a taste for the avant garde, we offer the "Spruced Up Turkey" a recipe that comes fresh from the pages of "Patrick O'Connell's Refined American Cuisine," the new cookbook by the chef at the inn at Little Washington, the tony Virginia mountain inn regarded as one of the best restaurants in America. Not only is this bird brined, the mixture that it bathes in contains juniper berries, saffron, tea and - we are not making this a branch from a spruce tree. It is very cutting edge, as in "timber!" This is not your grandmother's turkey, unless she happened to be a lumberjack.

Next for twosomes and portion-controlled households, there is the turkey breast, which offers a bit of tradition and innovation. This downsized entry is a favorite of David H. Bernstein and his wife, Pat, who regularly prepare it for small Sunday afternoon suppers, cooking it on the grill or lowering it into bubbling peanut oil in a deep-fat fryer.

Each treatment of turkey brings something to the table.

A strong point of the traditional oven-roasted turkey is its link with the past. This is important in clans that possess a long line of good cooks. When the bird is sizzling in the oven, it fills the house with familiar aromas, evoking memories of the dearly departed and whetting the appetites of the family present.

Fans of the taste of traditional turkey come in all ages, with children often being the biggest sticklers for keeping up family customs. Anyone who has had his kids turn up their noses at his barbecued bird, saying they preferred the "Grandma-cooked" bird of bygone years, knows the power of the past.

While critics of the traditional roasted bird say it tends toward the bland, its supporters believe that when properly handled - covering the breast with foil during the last hour of cooking to prevent the meat from drying out - the subtle flavors of the roasted turkey are just tickle-ick.

It gets along well with others, in particular with the plethora of sides dishes that share the stage on Thanksgiving.

The essentials for this or any Turkey Day

The Washington Post

There are certain basic Thanksgiving recipes that, once mastered, need no adjusting from year to year. Here are the ones we turn to each November:

RICH TURKEY STOCK

Makes about 12 cups

In advance: Turkey parts for stock, such as wings, drumsticks and thighs now available in many markets. May be made days or even weeks ahead. May be Thanksgiving and frozen.

- 7 pounds turkey parts, such as wings, thighs and drumsticks
- 1 large onion, thickly sliced
- 1 large carrot, thickly sliced
- 1 large stalk celery, thickly sliced (optional)
- 2 cloves garlic, peeled and smashed
- 1 teaspoon salt
- Plenty of freshly ground black pepper

4 quarts (16 cups) water
Preheat the oven to 400 degrees.
Place the turkey parts in a single layer in a large roasting pan and roast, for about 1 1/2 hours, until well browned.

Transfer the roasted turkey parts to a large pot. Reserve the roasting pan. Add the onion, carrot, celery (if using), garlic, salt and several pinches of pepper along with 12 cups water and bring to a boil.

Meanwhile, place the roasting pan over 2 burners on the stovepot. Add the remaining 4 cups water to the roasting pan, turn the heat to medium-high and bring to a boil. Cook, using a wooden spoon to stir and scrape the browned bits from the bottom of the pan, for 2 to 3 minutes. Remove from the heat and set aside to cool slightly.

Carefully pour the liquid from the roasting pan into the pot and bring to a boil. Reduce the heat to medium-low, cover partially and simmer for about 2 1/2 hours. Strain the stock, discarding the solids or removing the turkey meat from the bones and reserving the meat for another use. Set the stock aside to cool slightly. Refrigerate for up to 3 days. Skim the fat from the surface before using. (May skim the fat, then freeze for up to 3 months.)

Before you roast turkey: In general, a 12- to 14-pound range is preferable, though it can sometimes be difficult to find birds that small.

A small unstuffed turkey in that weight range cooks in a reasonable amount of time (from 2 to 3 hours, depending on the temperature at which you choose to roast it). It also stays moist and tender.

Conversely, a larger turkey takes more time to cook, and the breast meat can become dry before the dark meat is done.

If you have a frozen bird: Turkey should be kept properly chilled while thawing. Do not defrost a frozen turkey on the counter. Instead, place a frozen turkey on a tray in the refrigerator in its original wrapping. Allow 24 hours for each 5 pounds of turkey.

Look inside: Turkeys have two cavities, one at the neck and one at the breast. The "turkey parts" - neck, giblets, heart and liver - are usually contained in small bags within those cavities. Be sure to remove them before roasting.

You can add the neck, giblets and heart to the stock, but not the liver (the darkest colored item); it will make the stock bitter.

Book preserves Wood River Valley legend's recipes

By Dixie Thomas Reale
Times-News correspondent

HALLEY - Roberta McKercher did not have a cookbook. Instead she always carried a steno pad, and at potluck dinners and other events where food was served she'd ask for recipes of the best-tasting dishes there, jotting down the ingredients in her notebook.

McKercher, who died in 1996 at the age of 85, covered local news for the Wood River Journal during the middle and later half of the 20th Century and was active in the community. Billie Butler, McKercher's younger sister, came up with the idea of a cookbook when she found a number of well-thumbed notebooks in which McKercher had written recipes.

The result is "From Roberta's Kitchen," a cookbook gleaned from McKercher's notebooks, from friends and relatives who shared recipes with her, and from stories of people who knew her well. The cookbook is in its second printing, according to book editor and Halley Cultural Center Director Mike Healy. First published on July 4, 2004, more than 750 have been sold.

Proceeds from the sale of the book go toward the repair and upkeep of the Halley Cultural Center.

McKercher whittled her family home - the house where poet Ezra Pound was born - to house the cultural center. McKercher Boulevard and Roberta McKercher Gateway Park are Halley landmarks.

A Thanksgiving rule - If the house looks clean, it is

Knight Ridder News Service

The key to cleaning the house for Thanksgiving is not to get carried away. You are entertaining in your house, not doing open-heart surgery - there's no need to scrub every room top to bottom.

Guests will be dumped out in the dining room, family room and kitchen. They're likely to use the bathroom, too, so these areas need to look clean. Guests are unlikely to wander upstairs, however, so just close the doors to the kids' messy rooms, the home office and move on.

Some hints on cleaning in the Guest Zone:

- First appearances are important. Sweep the acorns and dead leaves off the sidewalk and porch. Throw the squirrel-nibbled jack-o'-lanterns in the compost pile. Use glass cleaner to wash fingerprints off the front door.

- Work ahead. Tablecloths and napkins can be laundered and ironed days before the big meal. Fold the tablecloths over-padded hangers and put them in an out-of-the-way place so they don't get wrinkled.
- If you haven't used the silver, china and crystal for a while, wash them in advance. Tableware will get dusty in a year's time, even if it is stored in a closed cabinet.
- Corral the clutter. Yes, there is a place for everything, but that doesn't mean you need to file every loose paper on the kitchen counter right now. Instead, walk through the Guest Zone with a laundry basket and fill it with everything that's out of place - school permission forms, a pair of shoes, catalogs, a Happy Meal toy. Stash the basket under a bed or behind one of those closed doors, and deal with it later.

- Clean "over the tops." Dust furniture surfaces your guests will see, including table-tops and lamps. Dust the TV screen, too. If guests will be watching football, visually inspect sofas and dining room chairs for pet hair and cracker crumbs; vacuum if they are present. Vacuum the floors well, but don't bother with sweeping under the furniture.
- Set out coasters for drinks if condensation could damage the finish on your furniture.
- As for cobwebs, ignore them and light plenty of candles so guests won't notice them either.

A countdown to cookery

Knight Ridder News Service

You have at 96 hours, give or take, before guests arrive - more than enough time to make this holiday look and feel fabulous:

Today

- Make sure you have the right serving platters and utensils for meat, side dishes and dessert.
- Choose centerpiece and decorations.

Monday

- Iron tablecloth and napkins.
- Gather games and entertainment.
- Arrange accommodations for overnight guests. For example, wash bed linens.

Tuesday

- Stock bathrooms with soap and towels.
- Select music to accompany meal.

Wednesday

- Speed clean.
- Arrange centerpiece and candles.

Thanksgiving Day

- Put together beverage station.
- Arrange serving pieces on buffet.
- Set table.
- Turn on music.
- Light candles.
- Serve meal.

T-Day countdown tips

Setting the table

This weekend, clear the dining room table and set out everything you will need, from the linens to the silverware to the serving dishes and utensils. Make sure you have enough of everything and that it's ready to go. This will allow you to iron, polish and clean before the last minute. You will have time to borrow or buy anything you still need.

If you don't have enough pieces to set a matching table, alternate patterns at every other place. This is a much better look than setting the table with eight matched settings together, then two odd settings at the end.

Use all stemmed glassware to avoid rings on the furniture. If you don't have enough, check a restaurant supply store or dollar store for extras.

Label each serving dish with the food it will contain to ensure that you have enough and the right kind of dishes. Make sure each dish has a serving utensil.

What's what

Key points to keep in mind while shopping:

- Canned pumpkin vs. canned pumpkin pie mix - Not the same thing. The pie mix contains spices and sugar. To make a pie, you add evaporated milk and eggs and be sure you put it in a deep-dish pie pan.
- Evaporated milk vs. sweetened condensed milk - Not the same thing. Evaporated milk is milk that has been cooked down to remove about half the water, making it thicker than fresh milk. Sweetened condensed milk also has had water removed, but it contains added sugar. They are not interchangeable in recipes, so read your recipe and your label carefully.

Thanksgiving Day

- 2 1/2 hours before the guests arrive:
  - Peel potatoes and submerge in a bowl of water until time to prepare.
  - Trim green beans.
  - Wash, peel, cut and cook carrots.
  - Prepare stuffing and hominy casseroles.
- 1 1/2 hours before dinner:
  - Bake stuffing and hominy casseroles.
  - Reduce sorghum honey syrup on stove.
  - Fry shallots for green beans.
- 1 hour before dinner:
  - Drain potatoes and proceed with directions to make mashed potatoes.
  - Warm carrots and combine with syrup.
  - Finish gravy.

Thanksgiving Day

- Turkey, begin to thaw frozen turkey in the refrigerator.
- Gather tools, such as roasting pans, meat thermometer and kitchen twine.
- Check equipment against recipes-to-be-sure-you-have enough baking pans of the correct size and shape.

Monday

- Beat the rush and go grocery shopping. (Don't forget to pick up fresh turkey.)

Tuesday

- Buy wine.
- For best results, take time to read the recipes thoroughly.

Wednesday

- Make gravy base and refrigerate.
- Bake the pie. Cool, cover and refrigerate.

MATZOH STUFFING WITH VEAL, CARAMELIZED ONIONS AND MUSHROOMS

Makes 6 servings

4 medium Spanish onions, coarsely chopped.
1 pound ground veal
5 cloves garlic, peeled
6 ounces dried mushrooms, sliced
1 sprig rosemary
2 tablespoons fresh parsley, chopped
5-7 pieces of salted matzoh, coarsely crumbled

1 cup low-sodium chicken or veal stock
1 cup dry white wine
2 tablespoons olive oil
2 tablespoons butter
Salt and pepper to taste
In a small pot, add one cup of hot water to mushrooms. Let sit 20 minutes, or until needed. In a large pan, heat butter on medium-low fire. Add onions. Cook for about 20 minutes, until nicely soft and browned. Remove to mixing bowl. Add olive oil to center of pan. Raise heat to medium. Give each clove of garlic a whack with the flat side of a knife. Brown quickly in oil on both sides; set aside.

Add veal to pan, and cook just until it has lost its raw red color. Add stock, wine, rosemary, garlic cloves and 1/2 cup mushroom liquid. Cover and simmer on the lowest possible heat for about 15 minutes. Add matzoh and onions to mixing bowl. Discard garlic and rosemary, and add contents of pan. Remove mushrooms from water with slotted spoon and add, along with most of the parsley. Mix through with a wooden spoon, adding matzoh if resulting mixture is too wet. Garnish with remaining parsley and serve.

CORNBREAD STUFFING

12 tablespoons butter (divided use)
2 cups finely chopped onion
1 cup finely chopped green pepper
1 1/2 cups finely chopped heart of celery
4 cups crumbled cornbread
3 cups crumbled toast freshly ground pepper

1/2 cup chicken broth
3 raw eggs
salt
Melt 4 tablespoons butter.

Add onion, green pepper and celery. Cook, stirring until vegetables are crisp tender. Set aside. Place cornbread and toast in mixing bowl, and add vegetable mixture. Add generous amount of pepper and remaining ingredients. Stir to blend well.

RICH CHESTNUT STUFFING

10 to 12 servings

15 fresh Brussels sprouts
1 jar (8 ounces) cooked chestnuts
2 tablespoons olive oil, divided
1 pound bulk mild Italian sausage
1 medium onion, peeled and finely chopped
2 medium cloves garlic, peeled and minced
8 cups French- or Italian bread cubes, day old
1/2 cup chopped Italian parsley
1 tablespoon fresh thyme leaves
1 tablespoon minced sage leaves
1/2 teaspoon kosher salt
1/4 teaspoon ground black pepper
1 1/2 cups chicken or turkey broth

Nonstick cooking spray or oil
4 tablespoons melted butter or 1/4 cup turkey drippings
Trim the stem ends from Brussels sprouts and remove any tough or yellowed outer leaves. Cut a cross in the bottom of each. Bring a medium pan of water to the boil. Add the sprouts and bring back to a boil. Time 5 to 7 minutes or until just tender. Drain and rinse with cold water to stop the cooking. Pat dry and chop coarsely; set aside. Coarsely chop chestnuts and set aside. Heat a tablespoon olive oil in a skillet on medium heat. Add sausage, breaking it up with a spatula and saute until cooked through and a longer pink. Remove from pan; pour off fat. Add remaining tablespoon olive oil to pan. Add onion and saute 5 minutes. Then add garlic and saute 2 minutes. Set aside.

In a large bowl, combine bread cubes with Brussels sprouts, chestnuts, sausage, vegetables, parsley, thyme, sage, salt and pepper; mix well. Drizzle chicken broth over the stuffing and mix with a large spoon. Spray a 2 1/2-quart baking dish with cooking spray or oil lightly. Spoon stuffing into dish and drizzle melted butter or turkey drippings over the top. Cover with aluminum foil and bake in preheated 325-degree oven 30 minutes. Uncover and continue baking 15 minutes.

Why a 12-to-14-pound turkey is worth 'frying' to find

By Judith Weirnaur
The Washington Post

In the annals of Thanksgiving lore, there's a fact of life that's rarely acknowledged. Some people don't like turkey. And I'm convinced I know why. The turkeys Americans like to shove at the holiday table are simply too big.

Those huge birds the color of shiny mahogany may look beautiful, smell wonderful and seem like an achievement worthy of a culinary school diploma. But, ranging from 20 to 24 pounds, they're practically impossible to cook. And they often come to the table with dry, leathery breast meat or undercooked legs and thighs.

If you're the cook, and this scenario seems familiar, it's not your fault. All turkeys are a little tricky because the white meat cooks more quickly than the dark meat. Ideally, they should be cooked to two different temperatures (170 degrees for the white meat and 180 degrees for the dark). As birds get bigger, balancing the two types of meat gets more difficult.

But there is a solution: Roast a 12- to 14-pound turkey. Roast two of them. You'll never turn back.

Think about what roasting a huge turkey sets you up for: No matter what recipe is used, to avoid overcooking you have to pay close attention, and big birds need to be tended over a long period of time. That's hard when you're making many more dishes than you would for an ordinary dinner.

That lengthy cooking time makes an evening meal virtually inevitable, too, which is fine if you want to watch football games but challenging for families with young children or for people who like to go to bed before midnight.

What about people who don't cook much but feel the need to produce on the holiday? They may not have the right pans and pans. And not everybody has a refrigerator big enough to store and defrost a turkey or an oven that is high enough and wide enough to ensure a large bird will be properly roasted. If I didn't have an old refrigerator in the basement, I don't know where I'd defrost my turkey. And remember, a recommended defrosting time is calculated at about 24 hours for each five pounds of turkey. So a 20-pound turkey will have to sit in the refrigerator for at least four days.

Then there are the leftovers, which in theory are fine but in reality often sit in the refrigerator losing their pep as family members huck away from the thought of another turkey-based meal.

"The leftovers usually, go to waste," says Susan Lindenberg, chef at the Majestic Cafe in Alexandria, Va., who generally roasts an 18- to 20-pound turkey at home even if it's just for her and her husband. "We really love to eat the turkey later, but a lot of people don't like to."

Over time, a primary reason American turkeys got bigger was the public's desire for leaner meat than beef or pork and the increasingly large turkey byproduct industry — everything from ground turkey to turkey sausage to turkey pot pie to turkey breasts to roast turkey for deli sandwiches. In 1960, according to the U.S. Department of Agriculture, the average annual turkey weight at slaughter was almost 12 pounds, and at holiday time (November and December) slightly more than 19 pounds. By 1990, the average annual weight at slaughter rose to more than 21 pounds, and the USDA tracking for this year to date shows an average slaughter weight of about 28 pounds.

"The National Turkey Federation maintains that for home-roasting purposes, the average weight of a turkey Americans purchase is about 16 pounds. But anyone who's ever looked into supermarket poultry bins at this time of year knows that it's a lot easier to find a 20-pound turkey than a 12-pounder.

"Those big birds seem to mesh well with American home cooks' inclinations. 'Everything is bigger in America, starting with the Big Gulp at 7-Eleven and going down from there,' says Lindenberg. "Maybe it's the way we urban people get the thrill of the hunt."

Besides, when deciding how much turkey to buy, a common estimate used by sources such as the USDA and the National Turkey Federation urges us to purchase turkeys based on calculation of a pound per person.

In my view, that's not the estimate of course — takes the weight of the bones into consideration and assumes shrinkage during cooking as well as a desire for leftovers. But even given that, it's too much food. Do you really need to serve even half a pound of protein in a dinner that includes — and I'm estimating modestly here — mashed potatoes, sweet potatoes, a couple of other vegetables, stuffing, gravy, a sweet relish and at least one dessert?

Now consider the advantages of cooking a smaller turkey.

Since a 12-pound turkey will cook more quickly than a 20-pounder, you're much more likely to cook it properly. A smaller turkey will cook a lot faster because the heat moving from the outside in is shorter distance to go. There's much less muscle and tissue to heat," says Harold McGee, whose revised 20th-anniversary edition of "On Food and Cooking: The Science and Lore of the Kitchen" (Scribner) has just been released.

If the turkey is in the oven for a shorter period of time, the breast meat is less likely to dry out. "The bigger the bird, the longer it takes to cook through, and the longer the outer parts are exposed. In drying temperatures," he says. (Even so, McGee cautions that cooks shouldn't really rely on predetermined cooking schedules.

If you haven't already bought a small frozen turkey or reserved a fresh one, it may be hard to find one. And you may not be ready for such a change. A big bird seems to be ingrained in the American culinary imagination. "My mother would never cook a turkey under 20 pounds," says Ris Lacoste, executive chef at 1789 in Georgetown. "I've never cooked a small one either. I don't know why. I don't have anything against them."

Besides, it takes a confident cook to serve a holiday meal without the big bird. "It really does have more to do with logistics than the finished product," says McGee. "You can make a good (turkey) out of a little turkey or a big turkey. You're going to a lot of trouble, and you want people to have as much as they want."

THANKSGIVING FOOD

'M-A-S-H'

Learn the fine art of whipping up the king of side dishes

The Stamford Advocate

Mashed potatoes are like magnets, captivating our taste buds like iron bars swooping up so many metal shavings, made with more intensity. This dish is on almost everyone's list of favorite comfort foods, and it's indispensable at holiday gatherings like Thanksgiving. It is so much a part of American culture that endless recipes have been printed and famous TV chefs spend time showing viewers how to make it.

Actually, folks who love mashed potatoes are lucky. The recipe is amazingly easy.

We will tell you how to make perfect mashed potatoes. Because the dish is so versatile, we'll also mention a few ways you can turn it into the basic formula, and we'll describe a recipe that begins with mashed potatoes but becomes a stunning brunch dish suitable for special company.

Obviously, good mashed potatoes: tubers that give their all to the cause. That means a moderately starchy variety that fluffs, but doesn't become waterlogged when cooked. Potatoes labeled Eastern, all-purpose, Long Island, Maine or Yukon Gold are the best choices.

Waxy varieties such as Red Bliss don't contain much starch. You can mash them and they taste just fine, but they'll be chewy and lumpy, not fluffy. Some cooks swear by Russets (baking potatoes). But when you boil baking potatoes, they absorb too much water and when mashed, they come out soggy. (You can however, make mashed potatoes with Russets if you bake the potato, remove and mash the flesh and serve it separately or inside the baked potato skin.)

Be sure to cook the potatoes in lightly salted water. That helps cut down on salt needed later.

When the potatoes are tender, drain them but return them to the pot and put them over low heat for a few moments to rid them of excess moisture. Then it's time to mash. This is the part where too many mistakes are made. Mashed potatoes need not be super-smooth. In fact, a little texture gives them a more comforting feel. But even if you like mashed potatoes with a puddinglike consistency, use an old-fashioned, hand-held potato masher or a tool called a ricer. Either of these will help you maintain control over the texture. Potatoes have a high amount of gluten and can easily go from smooth to gummy if you overmix them. Forget the food processor or high-speed beater for this recipe.

There isn't much you need to do to make mashed potatoes taste terrific. A lump of butter or spoonful of olive oil provides enrichment. Stir in some cream, milk, skim milk or buttermilk, depending on whether you're counting calories. For a nondairy version, use stock. All these liquids help make the dish lighter and fluffier. Taste the mixture for seasoning; add salt and pepper as needed.

That's all there is to it. And you can make it a day or so ahead of when you need it for dinner. You can freeze mashed potatoes, too. Reheat the casserole in a preheated 350-degree oven for 25-30 minutes.

Mashed potatoes need nothing else, but sometimes we are greedy for more. So, people who love truly rich and creamy versions might want to beat in a bit of cream cheese and dairy sour cream, which also add a slightly tangy taste. If you're a lighter eater, consider using olive oil and cottage cheese. To vary the flavor, think about including raw or roasted garlic or herbs - fresh chopped oregano, parsley, basil and the like. Or try one of the old Irish favorites, combining mashed potatoes with cooked cabbage, kale, scallions or leeks. Cheese aficionados sometimes mix in freshly grated Cheddar or Parmesan or crumbled blue cheese or chive. We have included recipes for several of these variations.

If you have mashed potatoes left over, you can recycle them as potato cakes. Coat them in flour, then in beaten egg, then bread crumbs; shape them into patties and fry them to a crisp in hot fat. This is a good side dish for roasted or grilled meat or poultry.

BASIC MASHED POTATOES

- Makes 4-6 servings
- 2 pounds boiling potatoes
- Lightly salted water
- 4 tablespoons butter or olive oil
- 1/2 cup warm cream, milk, skim milk, buttermilk, chicken stock or vegetable stock
- Salt and pepper

Peel and cut the potatoes into chunks. Place the potatoes in a saucepan and cover them with lightly salted water. Bring the water to a boil, lower the heat and cook the potatoes at a simmer for about 20 minutes or until they are fork tender. Drain the potatoes.

Return the potatoes to the pan and cook them briefly over low heat to rid them of excess moisture. Mash the potatoes with a masher or put them through a ricer and return them to the pan. Add the butter in chunks or pour in the olive oil, and stir to blend. Stir in the liquid. Taste the potatoes, and add salt and pepper to taste.

GARLIC MASHED POTATOES

- 1 recipe mashed potatoes
- 2 large cloves garlic, peeled

Add the peeled garlic cloves to the potato cooking water and mash them with the potatoes when the potatoes are fork tender. Proceed with the remainder of the recipe.

MEDITERRANEAN-STYLE MASHED POTATOES

- 1 recipe garlic mashed potatoes made with olive oil
  - 2 tablespoons freshly minced basil
- Add the basil with the olive oil. Proceed with the remainder of the recipe.

IRISH-STYLE MASHED POTATOES

- 1 recipe mashed potatoes made with butter and milk or cream
- 6 finely chopped scallions or the white part of 2 small leeks, chopped
- 1/4 cup extra milk (3/4 cup in all)

Prepare the mashed potatoes as indicated in the master recipe, but cook the scallions or leeks with the milk for about 5 minutes, until they have softened.

RICH MASHED POTATOES

- 1 recipe mashed potatoes made with butter and milk, but reduce milk to 1/4 cup
- 4 tablespoons cream cheese
- 1/2 cup dairy sour cream

Prepare the mashed potatoes as indicated in the master recipe, but add the cream cheese in chunks and work into the potatoes with the butter. Add the sour cream and beat the mixture with a wooden spoon until the mixture is fluffy and well blended.

LOW-FAT MASHED POTATOES

- 1 recipe mashed potatoes made with skim milk and no butter or olive oil
- 1 cup low-fat cottage cheese
- 2-3 tablespoons chopped fresh herbs such as chives, basil, oregano or parsley

6-8 tablespoons nonfat plain yogurt, optional

Increase the mashed potatoes as indicated in the master recipe, but do not use butter. Instead, stir in the cottage cheese and herbs after you have mashed the potatoes. Stir in yogurt, if desired, for a tangier taste and creamier texture.

THANKSGIVING FOOD

Spare the turkey! Celebrate Thanksgiving, vegetarian style

CONCORD, N.H. (AP) — There is a simple rule for having a successful vegetarian Thanksgiving: Forget the turkey. Sound obvious? Not always. Sure, not many turkeys grace the holiday tables of vegetarian cooks, but that doesn't stop people from worrying about what to serve in place of the bird, especially those expecting carnivores among their guests.

How else to explain all those tofu-based birds that appear in natural food stores this time of year? But Thanksgiving isn't about turkey, and for vegetarians it shouldn't be about trying to replace it.

Thanks can be given over any dish.

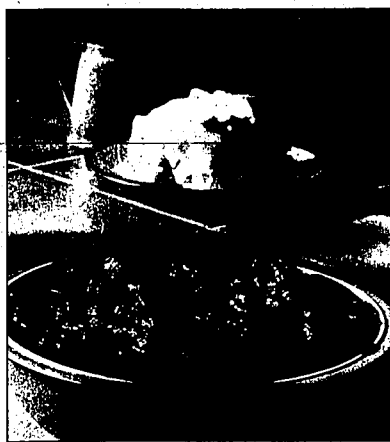

Stick with wholesome, hearty dishes that use traditional ingredients in new ways to pack the meal with plenty of interesting textures, aromas and tastes.

Start off your guests with a bowl of sweet potato and fennel soup, a hearty, warmly seasoned dish sure to beat back the blustery fall weather.

Then give an all-American staple an Asian twist: mashed potatoes with a dash of wasabi, the green condiment that gives sushi its kick.

And what would Thanksgiving be without pumpkin? However, it's not just for pies and puddings. Try it in kibbeh, a spicy, fried patty from Lebanon that is cranked on the outside, warm and moist on the inside.

Along with these dishes, serve cranberry sauce (great for dipping the kibbeh in), stuffing (most stuffing is cranked on the outside, warm and moist on the inside), and your guests will never miss the turkey.

Sassy Cranberry Sauce, front, is a classic dish on the Thanksgiving table, as are mashed potatoes and gravy, rear.

PUMPKIN KIBBEH
Makes about 12 patties

2 cups cooked pumpkin puree (see note)
1 cup bulgur wheat kernels, soaked for 10 minutes in boiling water, then drained (couscous could be substituted)
Salt, to taste
1/2 teaspoon fresh ground black pepper
1/2 teaspoon ground coriander seeds
1/2 teaspoon allspice
1/2 teaspoon cumin
1/4 teaspoon hot pepper flakes
1 medium onion, finely chopped
4 cloves garlic, crushed
1 cup all-purpose flour
1/2 cup water
Vegetable oil, for frying
Combine all ingredients except oil in a food processor and pulse until they form a chunky dough that sticks together when

Even vegans can bake up treats

CONCORD, N.H. (AP) — This time of year the baking instinct is almost primal.

It starts innocently enough with Thanksgiving's pumpkin pies and rolls, but by December "bucemas" — an all-consuming need for sweet and doughy treats hot from the oven.

The trouble for vegetarians who don't eat dairy is that most of the best treats call for heaps of eggs, cream and butter.

However, baked treats don't need dairy or odd substitutions of pureed tofu and prunes to be good. Vegan baking can be good in its own right, and one need not be a pastry chef to enjoy splendid results.

The trick with treats, as with all vegetarian cooking, is to stick with recipes that require few substitutions. The fewer the changes, the better and more authentic the result.

Understanding the role of the ingredient being substituted (here's where the science of baking comes in) also helps.

For example, there are several wonderful substitutes for eggs in baking, including powdered replacements made from potato and tapioca starch. The powder works well in recipes calling for one or two eggs, which bind together the other ingredients. Most cakes and cookies do fine with the powder.

However, in recipes where eggs provide more than just structural value, such as egg white-dependent angel food cake, vegan substitutes are hopeless. Nor do they make good glazes; for that, try a sugar syrup.

On the other hand, pie shells are an easy fix. Flaky pie crusts typically rely on chilled butter being cut into the dough.

For a crisp crust, try corn or canola oil instead. The dough will be more delicate to work with, but bakes up fine.

To replicate flaky butter-based crusts, try soy margarine, which in baked goods looks, acts and tastes like butter. Also try vegan shortening, which are made from tropical oils and are not hydrogenated.

VIN SANTO RINGS
Makes 48 cookies

2 1/2 cups unbleached all-purpose flour
1/2 cup sugar
1/2 cup extra-virgin olive oil
1/2 cup vin santo

Preheat oven to 350 degrees. In a large bowl, combine the flour and sugar. Add the oil and wine and stir until thoroughly blended and smooth.

Pinch off a piece of the dough about 1 inch in diameter. On a lightly floured surface, roll out the dough into a 4-inch rope, about 1/2-inch thick. Pinch the ends together to form a ring.

Place the ring on an ungreased baking sheet. Repeat with remaining dough, placing rings about 1 inch apart.

Bake the rings for 20 minutes, or until very lightly browned. Transfer to cooling racks. Stored in an airtight container, these cookies keep for quite a while.

Preheat oven to 350 degrees. Lightly oil a 12-by-17 1/2-inch jelly roll pan. In a medium bowl, whisk together the oil, maple syrup, soy milk and vanilla. In another bowl, sift together the flours, cocoa, sugar, sucanat, baking powder and salt.

Fold the dry ingredients into the wet mixture with a rubber spatula. Be careful not to overmix. Fold in the nuts (if using) and chocolate chips. Pour the batter into the pan and smooth the top with a moistened spatula.

Bake for 30 to 35 minutes, or until brownies are not quite set. Do not overbake; the brownies will set as they cool. Transfer the pan to a cooling rack, then cut into bars.

um-high flame. To test the oil, touch the surface with a wooden chopstick. The oil should bubble or sizzle around it when ready.

One or two at a time, fry the patties until brown on both sides, about 3 to 5 minutes. Drain on paper towels and keep warm until ready to serve.

Note: Canned pumpkin can be used, but it requires planing to drain some of the water. Fill a metal coffee filter or a fine-mesh wire strainer with the pumpkin and stand it in a bowl in the refrigerator overnight.

WASABI MASHED POTATOES

Serves 4

3 pounds boiling potatoes (roughly 5 large Yukon Gold), peeled and quartered
1 tablespoon wasabi powder
1 tablespoon water
2/3 milk
3 tablespoons unsalted butter
1/2 teaspoon salt
Bring a stockpot of water to a boil and add the potatoes. Cook, partially covered, until tender, about 20 minutes. Meanwhile, combine the wasabi and water in a small bowl and let sit for 15 minutes to develop flavor. Drain the potatoes in a colander. Gently heat the milk for 1 to 2 minutes.

In the stockpot over a low flame, add the potatoes and use an electric hand mixer to whip the potatoes until smooth. Add more milk if potatoes are too thick.

Stir in the butter and salt. Stir in the wasabi just before serving.

Note: Vegans can easily substitute soy or rice milk and soy or canola margarine for the dairy products. Corn oil is another good alternative to butter.

SWEET POTATO AND FENNEL SOUP

Makes 4 to 6 servings

2 tablespoons olive oil

Turkey

A big roasted bird also carries quite a culinary load, providing moisture for the stuffing and enough leftovers to keep the exhausted cook out of the kitchen for another day or two. It makes a great gravy — an important factor for folks who feel that one of the primal currents of the feast is the river of gravy.

Turkey tweekers like O'Connell are not satisfied with the same old flavors. So he soaks a turkey overnight in a woosy brine before cooking it. This exotic bath, both infuses flavors and plumps the bird, O'Connell said.

During a telephone interview from his restaurant in the foothills of the Shennandoah Mountains, O'Connell said he first came upon the idea of using spruce branches to flavor foods some years ago when he worked as a combination cook, baker and lawn boy for a Swedish family living in rural Virginia.

He noticed that when the lady of the house prepared gravlax, brine-cured salmon, she added spruce needles to the mixture and the results, he said, were delicious. O'Connell was encouraged to try the pine-needle idea after visiting Michelle Bras, a French chef who prepares three-star meals using ingredients including pine cones that come from a lodge in the mountains of the Grands Jura, France.

O'Connell said the spruce imparts flavors that "are similar to those of juniper berries but not as pungent... somewhat like rosemary but more subtle." O'Connell also liked the symmetry of the idea of gathering Thanksgiving Day ingredients from the wild, just like the Pilgrims.

Getting spruce branches was easier than tracking down some of the other brine ingredients, such as saffron tea. The brine called for 22 ingredients, which cost about $25 to compile, she said.

The bird spent the night in the fridge, lounging in the fragrant brew, and emerged the next morning with its skin looking temptingly tawny. By the time the bird came out of the oven, it was stunning. The skin was a glowing brown, with reddish hues. The meat was amazingly moist.

The pan juices of this turkey, like many brined birds, were too salty to use to make gravy, a factor a cook might consider before having a turkey take the plunge.

According to Pat Bernstein, a 4-pound turkey breast is usually more than enough food for two people. But this, after all, is Thanksgiving, a day devoted to large appetites. This Thanksgiving, the Bernsteins will be dining on a big bird at the home of relatives. But when they are home, they often cook a turkey breast for a simple weekend meal.

They split the workload, with Pat seasoning the raw bird and David cooking it. The key to her duties, she said, is working ahead, patting down the bird the night before it is cooked. "You have to get the seasoning on the bird far enough in advance to flavor the breast," Pat said.

Rather than following a script, she usually just looks at her spice rack and sees what she has. Instead of measuring, she "eyeballs" the amount of spices she uses.

The key aspect of his part of the operation, David said, is preparing the fire. A veteran of the backyard barbecue grill, he has mastered the art of indirect cooking.

He expanded his backyard repertoire to include cooking the turkey in bubbling peanut oil in a recently acquired deep-fat fryer. So far, he reports, it is a work in progress.

When the wind is calm, the turkey breast is cooked in mere minutes. But if an ill wind blows, the temperature of the fire drops, the cooking slows down and stomachs start to grumble.

When that happens, he has to do what any cook, whether roasting, brining or barbecuing, has to do. Namely, gently remind his hungry diners that the bird will be worth the wait.

Essentials

ROAST TURKEY
8 servings plus plenty for leftovers

In advance: Place the raw turkey in the refrigerator breast-side down so the juices flow to the white meat; this contributes to moist breast meat. Remove the turkey from the refrigerator about 30 minutes before roasting.

8 tablespoons unsalted butter at room temperature
Salt and freshly ground black pepper (do not add salt to a brined bird)

12- to 14-pound turkey, neck and giblets removed Preheat the oven to 425 degrees. Adjust the oven rack to the lower-third position.

In a small bowl, mash together the butter and salt and pepper to taste. Set aside.

Rinse the turkey inside and out with cold running water, drain it and pat it dry with paper towels. Tuck the wing tips under the body.

Place the turkey in a roasting pan (fit with a rack. If desired, generously season the inside and underside of the turkey with salt and pepper.

Using clean hands, loosen the skin over the breast by running your hands just under the skin, using your fingers as far as possible, carefully loosen the skin over the legs.

Partly spoon the butter mixture under the skin, using your fingertips to carefully spread the butter over the breast and legs. Rub the remaining 2 tablespoons butter mixture evenly over the outside of the turkey skin.

Transfer the turkey to the preheated oven and roast for 30 minutes. The turkey should begin to turn golden brown.

Reduce the oven temperature to 350 degrees and loosely cover the turkey with a large piece of tented aluminum foil. Continue to roast the turkey. If desired, baste the turkey with the pan drippings every 30 minutes or so.

Start checking for doneness after about 2 hours. Remove the turkey from the oven when a meat thermometer registers 165 degrees when inserted in the breast. (The internal temperature will continue to rise a few degrees after you remove it from the oven. According to the U.S. Department of Agriculture, the turkey is done when the breast meat reaches 170 degrees.) The total cooking time should be 2 to 2 1/2 hours for a 12- to 14-pound bird.

Transfer the turkey to a carving board and set aside to rest for at least 20 minutes prior to carving. Reserve the drippings in the roasting pan for the Turkey Gravy (recipe follows).

TURKEY GRAVY
Makes about 2 cups or 8 servings

In advance: Turkey stock can be made weeks ahead of time and frozen. But gravy cannot be made in advance. It demands the hot turkey fat and the defatted drippings from the turkey roasting pan, which are available only after the turkey comes out of the oven. (Use a fat separator cup to isolate the fat from the drippings.)

4 tablespoons turkey fat (from the drippings in the turkey roasting pan)

4 tablespoons flour
4 2-cups Rich Turkey Stock (see first recipe), chicken stock or broth, heated until almost boiling

Defatted juices (from the drippings in the turkey roasting pan)

Salt and freshly ground black pepper

In a medium saute pan or pot over medium heat, heat the turkey fat until warm. Using a whisk or a fork, stir the flour into the fat and cook, whisking constantly, until a paste forms. Continue to cook, whisking constantly, for 2 more minutes.

Still whisking constantly, gradually add the hot stock or broth in 1/4-cup increments, whisking until the stock is completely incorporated after each addition. Continue to cook, whisking occasionally, until the gravy simmers and thickens, about 5 minutes. Slowly add the defatted juices and salt and pepper to taste and whisk to combine.

If desired, strain the gravy. If the gravy is thicker than you would like, thin it with a little more stock. Serve immediately.

HERBED BREAD DRESSING

Makes about 12 cups

In advance: Mix the dressing and refrigerate for up to 1 day; bring to room temperature before baking.

10 cups 1-inch cubes crusty country-style bread (about 1 pound)

8 tablespoons unsalted butter, plus additional for the dish
3 medium onions, chopped
3 stalks celery, thinly sliced crosswise

1 teaspoon dried thyme

1/2 teaspoon dried sage
1/2 teaspoon dried rosemary
About 1 1/2 cups chicken stock or broth

Salt and freshly ground black pepper
Adjust the oven rack to the middle position. Preheat the oven to 325 degrees. Spread the bread cubes in a single layer on a baking sheet in the middle of the oven and toast, shaking the sheet occasionally, just until bread is dry, 25 to 30 minutes. Set aside to cool.

Meanwhile, in a large skillet over medium-low heat, melt the butter. Add the onions, celery, thyme, sage and rosemary, and cook, stirring occasionally, until the vegetables are soft-ened; about 10 minutes.

In a large bowl, combine the moist bread cubes, vegetable stock or broth and salt and pepper to taste. Toss to combine. Set aside, uncovered, to cool completely.

If you wish to have a crunchy top, uncover the dressing for the last half of the cooking.

You may also want to check that the dressing remains moist.

MCKERCHER'S HOLIDAY PUDDING

Contributed by Jean Burr, a friend of McKercher's

Mix and let stand:
3 cups dried currants
3 cups seedless raisins
1/4 cup chopped candied citron peel
1/2 cup candied cherries, chopped
3/4 cup blanched almonds, slivered

1/3 cup brandy
Measure and sift together, three times:

3 1/2 cups all purpose flour
1/2 cup sugar
3 teaspoons cinnamon
2 teaspoons ginger
2 teaspoons nutmeg
1 teaspoon baking powder

Separate 8 eggs. Put the flour mixture in a large bowl and add 4 cups finely ground beef suet & egg yolks.
Add the fruit mixture to the flour and suet. Beat the egg whites till they are stiff but not dry and add them gently to the pudding.

Carve 36- by 24-inch piece of white cloth. Wet the center with hot water and sprinkle with flour. Make a round ball of the pudding and place in the center of the cloth. Overlap two diagonal corners and tuck one under the other, then bring the other two corners up and tie them securely.

Drop the pudding into a large pot of boiling water and boil three to four hours. This may be made a month ahead of time and hung up to dry or placed in the freezer. In the old days the hang up method was used. On Thanksgiving Day, put the wrapped pudding into boiling water for at least two hours, as it needs to be served hot.

Place the unwrapped pudding on a serving tray, surrounded with holly or other decoration of your choice. Place several sugar cubes soaked in lemon extract atop the pudding and light. Bring to the table flaming. Serve with warm butter sauce or hard sauce.

Heat over hot water until thick. Serve hot.

A heartland Thanksgiving

Savor the flavor of food from the prairie

Knight Rider News Service

If it's true you reap what you sow, Thanksgiving is a time to tip into the harvest.

Think crisp, hand-cut apples, instead of cranberries. Savor tiny, sweet Missouri Northern pecans instead of jumbo hybrids grown in Texas and Georgia. Enhance the natural sweetness of carrots just pulled from the ground with sorghum instead of maple syrup. Explore the food of the prairie and you'll discover the farmers and food artisans who define the Pilgrims' spirit of progress. Martin Rice Co. grows American basmati, jasmine, baldo and Arborio rice varieties in the Ozarks while Holy-Fly Vineyard produces award-winning dry, semi-sweet Vignoles crafted in Baschorn, Kan. From Campo Lindo eggs to Good Natured Family Farms cheddar cheese, the abundance of locally produced foods is what gives this region its distinctive Midwestern flavor.

Below are recipes incorporate ingredients that are either indigenous to the Midwest or truly indigenous transplants.

ROAST TURKEY WITH APPLE CIDER PAN GRAVY

Makes 10 servings

Gravy base:

- 1 tablespoon butter
- 1 pound turkey necks and/or wings, cut into 1-inch pieces
- 1 pound onions, coarsely chopped
- 3 cups coarsely chopped celery
- 2 bay leaves
- 4 whole cloves
- 1/2 teaspoon salt
- 1/2 teaspoon ground black pepper
- 1/4 teaspoon ground cinnamon
- 1/8 teaspoon ground nutmeg
- 6 cups apple cider
- 3 cups low-sodium chicken broth

1 apple, finely chopped including core and peel

2 tablespoons honey

2 tablespoons apple cider vinegar

Turkey:

1 (16- to 18-pound) turkey

1 large onion, halved, cut into 1-inch wedges

1 apple cut into 1-inch wedges

6 bay leaves, crumpled

7 tablespoons butter, room temperature, divided

2 cups low-sodium chicken broth

2 tablespoons cornstarch, optional

Pears, roasted chestnuts and dandelion greens, to garnish

For the gravy: Melt butter in a large heavy pot over medium-high heat. Add turkey parts; sauté 10 minutes. Add onions, celery and bay leaves; sauté until onions are soft, about 8 minutes. Add cloves, salt, pepper, cinnamon and nutmeg; stir to blend. Add cider, broth and apple; bring to boil. Reduce heat to low; simmer uncovered 45 minutes, stirring occasionally. Strain stock into medium saucepan. Discard solids. Stir honey and vinegar into gravy base. (Can be prepared 1 day ahead. Cool slightly; refrigerate uncovered until cold, then cover and keep chilled.)

Three ways to evoke the heartland at your table

1. Add sky blue. Evoke the big prairie sky by adding jolts of bright blue to your Thanksgiving table. Look for blue glass votive holders and fabric-covered frames to hold vintage family photos. Use lengths of silky blue ribbons in place of napkin rings. If blue would clash with your dinnerware, use a different single color to add drama.
2. Add sunflowers. Nothing speaks the Midwest like sunflowers. Use real ones from a florist or supermarket, or look for dishes molded in the shape of a sunflower or painted with a sunflower motif. Vintage doilies with a sunflower pattern or napkins embroidered with sunflowers add a stylish-native touch.
3. Add family history. Scatter family photographs down the middle of the table under a piece of glass from a craft store or home improvement warehouse. Fold family attics to unearth up old, toy dogs and use them to personalize each place setting. — Source: Kansas City Star

COVER AND KEEP CHILLED

For the turkey: Set rack at lowest position in oven and preheat to 350 degrees. Truss turkey; side necks and wings under. Tie legs together loosely with kitchen twine to hold shape. Rub remaining 3 tablespoons butter over outside of turkey. Sprinkle with salt and pepper. Place turkey in the oven and immediately reduce oven temperature to 350 degrees. Roast turkey 1 hour; pour 1 cup chicken broth over turkey. Roast 1 1/2 hours longer, basting once with pan drippings. After covering turkey loosely with foil if browning too quickly. Transfer turkey to platter; cover loosely with foil. Let turkey rest 20 to 30 minutes (internal temperature of turkey will increase 5 to 10 degrees). Pour pan juices into large measuring cup. Spoon fat off top of pan juices and discard. Return pan juices to roasting pan; add gravy base. Place roasting pan over 2 burners and bring gravy to boil. Reduce heat to medium-low and simmer until gravy is reduced to 3 1/4 cups, stirring occasionally and scraping up any brown bits, about 30 minutes. Season to taste with salt and pepper. At this point you have an au jus style broth. If you prefer a thicker gravy, dissolve 2 tablespoons cornstarch into 1/4 cup water. Add mixture to broth in a steady stream, stirring constantly for a few minutes until sauce has the desired consistency. Strain gravy into bowl and serve with turkey.

SOY SAUCE TURKEY

3 pounds carrots, peeled and cut on the diagonal into 1-inch pieces

5 cups low-sodium chicken broth

1/2 cup sorghum

5 tablespoons unsalted butter

1/2 tablespoon cider vinegar

Salt and freshly ground pepper

In a large saucepan over medium-high heat, combine carrots, broth, sorghum, honey and butter. Bring to a brisk simmer and cook, uncovered, until the carrots are tender, about 30 minutes. Using a slotted spoon, transfer the carrots to a dish. Raise the heat to high and cook the liquid in the pan until it has reduced to about 1.5 cups and is syrupy, 30 to 40 minutes or longer. Return the carrots to the pan. Add vinegar, salt and pepper. Serve hot.

GREEN BEANS WITH SHALLOTS

Makes 8 servings

2 pounds green beans, trimmed

5 tablespoons olive oil or butter

4 to 5 shallots, thinly sliced

Salt and pepper, to taste

Bring a large pot of water to a boil. Salt the water, add the beans and cook until crisp tender, 4 to 5 minutes. Drain and transfer immediately to a bowl of ice water, and let cool for 1 minute. Drain again and pat dry. In a large frying pan over medium heat, warm the oil or butter and fry the shallots until browned; season with salt and pepper. Spoon shallots over green beans and serve.

BAKED HOMINY WITH FARMHOUSE CHEDDAR

Makes 8 servings

4 cups drained canned golden hominy

1 clove garlic, peeled and cut into small pieces

8 ounces farmhouse Cheddar cheese, cubed

4 eggs, beaten

1 teaspoon salt

1/4 teaspoon ground red pepper

Preheat the oven to 350 degrees. In a greased 9-by-13-inch baking dish, spread the hominy, top with garlic pieces and cheese cubes. In a separate mixing bowl, whisk together the milk, eggs, salt and red pepper. Pour the egg mixture over the hominy and bake for 50 to 60 minutes, or until the stuffing is golden brown.

GOLDEN BUTTERMILK MASHED POTATOES

Makes 8 to 10 servings

5 pounds baking potatoes, peeled and quartered

2 large sweet potatoes, peeled and quartered

2 garlic cloves, sliced

1/2 cup buttermilk

1 teaspoon salt

1/2 teaspoon freshly ground pepper

1 tablespoon minced chives or scallions

Place the baking potatoes, sweet potatoes and garlic in a large saucepan and add enough water to cover by 1 inch. Bring to a boil, reduce the heat, cover and tender. Reserve 1/4 cup cooking water and drain the potatoes and garlic well in the colander. Transfer to a large bowl and

APPLE, CHERRY, DRIED APRICOT AND RICE DRESSING

Makes 8 (1 cup) servings

1 1/2 cups basmati rice

2 cups dry whole-wheat bread cubes

1 large onion, coarsely chopped

1/2 cup chopped celery

2 large gala apples (about 4 cups), cored and roughly chopped

1/2 cup dried tart cherries

1/2 cup coarsely chopped dried apricots

1 cup pecans

1/4 cup canola oil

2 cups chicken or turkey broth, plus more to moisten

Cook rice according to the package directions. Grease a 9-by-13-inch baking dish. Preheat minutes. Drain and transfer immediately to a bowl of ice water, and let cool for 1 minute. Drain again and pat dry. In a large frying pan over medium heat, warm the oil or butter and fry the shallots until browned; season with salt and pepper. Spoon shallots over green beans and serve.

PUMPKIN PECAN STREUSEL PIE

Makes 2 (8-inch) single crust pies

2 cups all-purpose flour

1/4 cup finely diced pecans

1 teaspoon salt

2/3 cup plus 2 tablespoons vegetable shortening

4 to 5 tablespoons ice water, as needed

Filling:

2 (15-ounce) cans pumpkin puree

2 (14-ounce) cans sweetened condensed milk

Streusel topping:

1/2 cup packed brown sugar

1/4 cup all-purpose flour

1/4 cup chopped pecans

1/4 cup unsalted butter, at room temperature

1/2 teaspoon ground cinnamon

For the crust: Combine the flour, pecans and salt in a medium-size mixing bowl. Using a pastry blender or two knives, cut in the shortening until the mixture resembles coarse crumbs. Sprinkle the ice water, 1 tablespoon at a time, over the crumb mixture, stirring it into the mix with a fork. Add enough ice water so that the dough almost clears the bowl. Divide the dough in half, cover with plastic wrap, and refrigerate for 30 minutes. Preheat the oven to 375 degrees. Roll out each portion of dough on a lightly floured work surface into an 11-inch circle. Fit each dough circle into the bottom of an 8-inch pie pan, trim and crimp the edges of the crust. Set aside. For the filling: In a large mixing bowl, blend the ingredients until

FARMHOUSE ROLLS

Makes 32 rolls

1 1/2 cups boiling water

2/3 cup vegetable shortening

2 large eggs, beaten

1/2 cup sugar

1 teaspoon salt

5 cups all-purpose flour, divided

2 1/4 teaspoons automatic or bread machine yeast

4 tablespoons (1/2 stick) unsalted butter, melted

In the bowl of an electric mixer, pour boiling water over shortening and let stand until lukewarm (90 degrees). Using the paddle attachment of a wooden spoon, beat eggs, sugar, salt, 1 cup flour and yeast into shortening mixture. Add the remaining flour, 1/2 cup at a time, until the dough is too stiff for the beaters. Switch to a dough hook or turn out the dough onto a floured surface and knead in the rest of the flour. Place dough in a large oiled bowl and turn to coat. Cover with plastic wrap and let rise in a warm place until dough is doubled in bulk or in the refrigerator for at least 4 hours or overnight. Punch down the dough and turn out onto a floured surface. Roll out dough into a 1/2-inch-thick rectangle. With a biscuit cutter or round cookie cutter, cut out circles of dough. Brush each circle of dough with melted butter and fold into a semicircle. Pinch closed. Place rolls touching in ungreased cake pans. Cover the pans with tea towels and let rise again until doubled in bulk. Preheat oven to 350 degrees. Bake rolls 17 to 20 minutes, or until slightly browned. Serve warm.

THANKSGIVING FOOD

Sweet, sensible holiday
Diabetics shouldn't be deprived on Thanksgiving

By Joan Bean
 Times-News correspondent

JEROME -- Thanksgiving is a feast that a diabetic can enjoy, along with everyone else at the table. The key is to make sensible choices.

Jeanie Mayer, a registered nurse, dietitian and diabetes educator for St. Benedict's Family Medical Center, says that means knowing how to do carbohydrate counting and understanding how many carbs you can eat in a meal and still have acceptable blood-sugar readings.

If you're a Type 2 diabetic, you have considerable flexibility about what you eat for Thanksgiving dinner.

"If you are a Type 1 diabetic and know how to carb-count, you can take an insulin dose every time you eat and give the correct amount of insulin to cover carbs you're going to eat," Mayer said.

But they're different diseases. Type 2s are typically overweight and insulin-resistant, while Type 1s have no insulin production and are usually lean when they're diagnosed.

Avoid eating the turkey skin at Thanksgiving and you'll eliminate a big source of fat, Mayer suggests. Better still: eat just the white meat.

If you use a mix to make gravy, Mayer says, first skin off all the fat from the drippings. It also helps if you don't add a lot of fat to your mashed potatoes.

And if you must have marshmallows on your sweet potatoes, go easy on them. And keep in mind that one-third of a cup of sweet potatoes has as many carbs as one-half cup of mashed potatoes.

Rolls, on the other hand, have little or no fat -- until you add butter or margarine.

"If a person knows how to do carbohydrate counting, they can allocate the carbohydrates for the potato, rolls and stuffing," Mayer said.

For the turkey stuffing, try experimenting with low-carb bread, she suggests. If you typically brown the bread crumbs and onions, try using less margarine -- or use Pam non-stick vegetable spray to cut the fat down a little.

Type 2 diabetics usually have too much fat in their diets and not enough fiber. So cutting down on fat helps prevent weight gain -- and protects against heart disease.

Mayer recommends a traditional Thanksgiving side dish called "Yellow Jell-O." It can be sugar-free, and it's delicious.

"We have a brother-in-law who's a die-hard 'I don't eat sugar-free anything,' and on more than one occasion I was in charge of bringing the family 'Yellow Jell-O' recipe, and I would always bring it with sugar-free Jell-O, fat-free Cool Whip, fat-free cream cheese," she said. "And he would always compliment me on how good it was."

Sugar-free foods still have naturally occurring sugar that's in the milk, for example, or in the flour in sugar-free cake, Mayer says.

Some folks who have diabetes use a guide while filling their plates, she says. This is especially helpful at buffets.

"If you take a plate and draw a line down the middle of it. Fill half of it with green vegetables -- the salad, green beans, maybe the carrots," she said.

"On the other half of the plate, use one-fourth of it for your sweet potatoes and stuffing, one-fourth for the white meat, and you can squeeze 500 calories on that half a plate."

Here's the recipe for Yellow Jell-O. It came from Irene Lemmon of Hagerman, Mayer says:

YELLOW JELL-O

(Using a mixer works best)
 Makes 18 1/2-cup servings

- 1 large package of sugar-free lemon Jell-O
- Add 2 cups hot water
- Add one 12-ounce can crushed pineapple, drained (reserve the liquid)
- Add enough water to juice to make 1 cup cold liquid, and add to mixture
- Add 8 ounces fat-free cream cheese
- Add 1/2 cup finely chopped celery
- Add 1/2 cup finely chopped walnuts
- Add 8 ounces fat-free whipped topping
- (10 grams carbohydrates, 67 calories per serving)

Using Equal instead of sugar and modifying a few other ingredients can trim the number of calories in a pumpkin pie by 31 percent.

PUMPKIN PIE

Makes 8 servings

- Pastry for single crust 9-inch pie
- 1 can (16 ounces) pumpkin
- 1 can (12 ounces) evaporated skim milk

- 3 eggs
- 5 1/2 tsp. Equal (or 18 Equal packets)
- 1/4 tsp. salt
- 1 tsp. ground cinnamon
- 1/2 tsp. ground ginger
- 1/4 tsp. ground nutmeg
- 1/2 tsp. ground cloves
- Roll pastry on floured surface to circle 1 inch larger than inverted pie pan. Ease pastry into pan; trim and flute edge.
- Beat pumpkin, evaporated milk and eggs in medium bowl, beat in remaining ingredients. Pour mixture into pastry shell. Bake in preheated oven 15 minutes; reduce heat to 350 degrees F and bake until knife inserted near center comes out clean, about 40 minutes. Cool on rack. Whipped topping optional
- (175 calories, 22 grams carbohydrates, 7 grams fat, 86 mg cholesterol and 208 mg sodium) per serving -- Food exchanges: 1 1/2 bread, 1 fat

HERE FOR LIFE.

A cancer diagnosis is a life-changing event. That's why caring for a person who has cancer takes more than advanced technology and medical expertise. It takes understanding, support for the entire family and an appreciation for the hopes and dreams of each individual who turns to us for care. It takes extraordinary people to meet the challenges of extraordinary circumstances -- generation after generation.

Stuff I've decided to be thankful for

Denise Turner is off this week. Here's her column from Nov. 23, 1997.

My husband has started calling people by the wrong names.

"I know he's not 'losing it' because he remembers everything else. (Well, he doesn't remember to pick up bread and milk at the grocery store, but he didn't remember that when he was 20.)

LIFE AND TIMES
Denise Turner

My spouse's proper name lapses always occur when he's not wearing his glasses, which he seems to need more and more as the years go by. So I guess the problem could be blamed, at least in part, on the natural results of the aging process.

The other day, my husband and I were out exploring with our 12-year-old son, riding our bicycles around the neighborhood. We stopped for a rest on a park bench, and spent a few minutes watching the people go by. Soon, we spotted another bicycle enthusiast who looked to be about our age.

"Hi Tom," my ever-friendly spouse called out cheerily, as the man rode on by the park.

But "Tom" was curious enough to turn around and come back.

"I'm Carl," the bewildered man said, as my son and I tried in vain to stifle our giggles.

Dad wasn't wearing his glasses.

"I'm sorry," my husband said, with an embarrassed grin. "You look just like a man I used to work with whose name is Tom."

Carl was very nice about the mix-up, especially considering the fact that we had interrupted his bicycle ride in order to act stupid.

"He's probably thinking, 'At least I'm not as bad as that yet,'" I mumbled, as Carl continued on down the road.

The next time we went bike riding around the park, we saw the same man again.

"Hey Dad, there's your new friend—Carl—my son—announced, and broke into a fit of laughter.

I guess we have to expect our children to broadcast our goof-ups to the world. After all, it's a child's birthright to humiliate his parents - and the experience was pretty funny.

But who wants to be reminded of the limitations of aging? I'd rather think about the advantages, the positives, the experiences I can't wait to live ... uh, there have to be some ... just give me a minute.

The worst thing about my husband getting older is that it means I'm getting older, too. Snack dab in the middle of middle age. In fact, I can tell, because I don't look at life the same way I did when I was young.

I'm happy, really happy, but sometimes, the stuff I enjoy amazes me.

Thanksgiving is almost here, and people everywhere are counting their blessings. Like everyone else, I'm thankful for family and faith and home and health and work - all those wonderful things that the actors on the TV soap operas talk about when they gather around their Thanksgiving dinner tables.

But I'm thankful for more specific blessings, too. Many of these are blessings that I hardly knew existed when I was younger.

Here is a list of some of the things I thought I would never be thankful for ... but I am:

- Bifocals (but my husband still needs them worse than me, honest)
- Soft cushioned seats with backs, the kind that fit on bleachers
- AARP/senior discounts (do you I'm old? Tell 'em you're old you're to get them?)
- Low-interest mortgages
- Good health insurance
- School teachers who care about my kids

Fido needs more exercise — and tough love

Los Angeles Times

Cesar Millan ran across the rain-soaked border into California under cover of darkness 17 years ago, having given his trust and his last $100 to a coyote who crouched in the brush with him for 13 hours until the coast was clear. He was 18 years old, spoke no English and knew no one in America. Now he has his own TV series.

When Millan made a silent vow to become a dog trainer in the world, he didn't exactly have in mind starting in a half-hour reality-cum-advice show that reaches into more than 50 million American homes. At the time, he was just a high-spirited 13-year-old living with his extended family on a ranch near Culiacan, Mexico, with a natural ability to command packs of dogs. He knew he was different, if only because he enjoyed being with animals more than people. His friends had no goals as clearly defined as Millan's: to go to Hollywood and become a trainer for Tin Tin.

That was before Millan fell in love with an American girl who had faith in marriage counseling, before Oprah Winfrey, Phil McGraw, Deepak Chopra and Anthony Robbins became his role models, before he figured out how psychotherapy could be applied to canine management problems, and before he saw how gaga Americans can get over the $2 million to $8 million dogs that share their homes.

Now, "Dog Whisperer With Cesar Millan," which debuted in mid-September, airs on the National Geographic Channel three times a day, five days a week. Each episode features two cases: pooch parents at wit's end confessing to Millan that their child-substitutes are nervous, obsessive, possessive, hyper, lusty or violent.

"She thinks she's people," a woman says of her terrier, providing what she thinks is a cute excuse for monstrous behavior.

"No, she doesn't," Cesar replies.

The dog whisperer understands the problem — all the problems that develop when people anthropomorphize their pets. Speaking slightly accented English, but not hesitating, he explains that dogs don't think like humans. They're ruled by instinct, not intellect.

Millan is sympathetic to the beleaguered people who seek his counsel, but he also understands the plight of pets that need to get a dog's life, who are never taken on a decent walk yet bear heavy burdens as surrogates for absent families and nonexistent friends and lovers.

"Dog Whisperer" is that when it comes to our animals, we're all women and men who love too much.

Cesar Millan at his Dog Psychology Center, housed at a South Los Angeles warehouse.

"A dog that receives only affection, affection and affection doesn't get exercise, rules, boundaries and limitations is unbalanced," Millan says. "And an unbalanced dog is not a happy dog."

Sitting in the dressed-up suburban living room of two well-meaning empty-nesters, facing a portrait of the couple hugging the Dalmatian that rules their home, he listens to their words while sniffling for clues to character.

"I'm evaluating whether the owner's energy is nervous, fearful, anxious or frustrated, because this is the energy the dog lives with," he explains. "Dogs don't know if you have a position in the human world. You can be Halle Berry or the president of the United States. It doesn't matter to them. They just know the energy you share and the activities you do with them."

At first, Millan is more interested in observing the couple than their problem-child because he doesn't train dogs. He rehabilitates animals and trains their owners, teaching the two-legged creatures how to be top dog. Much of what he knows about dogs he learned from observing how they behave in packs.

"We're the only species that follows a spiritual leader," he says. "Dogs don't follow lovable leaders. They follow dominant and calm, assertive leaders. If you put Ghandi and Fidel Castro in front of a pack of dogs, they'll follow Castro because of his energy. There is no knowledge behind instinct. Dogs don't rationalize."

Whether he's in front of a camera or not, Millan has the bearing of a leader. His gaze is direct, his posture commanding. He's a superb mimic and can snarl, scratch, pant and yip with the best (or worst) of them as he assumes the demeanor of an excited or fearful dog. He is also easy to imitate. Once people understand that dogs bully wimps and obey leaders they respect, they adopt Millan's relaxed manner and tension-free walk.

The transformations are usually dramatic; when he takes over, bad habits disappear, neuroses vanish.

"A lot of times it seems like a miracle," he says. "It isn't a miracle. It's just that the dog lives in the moment and along comes someone with the energy and strategy required to make things happen."

His brand of tough love is simple. He avoids condescension or blame while gently, unequivocally informing people that they've been selfish and insensitive to their dog's needs. If Millan were less patient, less skilled, he might just blurt out, "Your dog barks like a maniac every time the doorbell rings. Did you ever think of saying, 'Not Cut It out!'"

His methods are neither new nor revolutionary. Generations of American dogs have been trained following the advice of the monks of New Skete, a small

Millan on mutts

• "Enlist your whole family with the experience of bringing a new dog home. Discuss what the responsibilities will be and how to share them before the dog arrives."

• "Make sure you find a dog that fits your lifestyle. More active breeds, such as hunting dog and herding dogs, need more physical challenges (like exercise) to stay physically and mentally content."

• "Consider the responsibilities of maintenance for your new dog. What are you willing to handle? How much time are you willing to invest?"

• "If you are adopting an older dog, know that some dogs may have had experiences that will affect their reactions toward people, kids, and other animals."

• "When getting a new pet, make sure you set aside time every day to establish rules, set boundaries and limitations, provide exercise, and then give affection to the dog."

• "Give your dog something to do before you share food, water, toys, or affection. This way the treat has been earned."

• "It is essential to try to create a schedule that includes a daily 45-minute power-walk in the morning."

• "When leaving the house, always walk out the door ahead of your dog to demonstrate who is boss."

• "When walking your dog, make sure that it's not in front of you, pulling you down the street, instead, keep your companion dog to your side, behind you. This will demonstrate to your dog that you are the leader."

• "Be willing to set a budget for unexpected circumstances, like medical bills, training classes, etc. There is no one who can help with your veterinary bills."

religious order in upstate New York that rules German shepherds. In their thick volume, "How to Be Your Dog's Best Friend: The Classic Training Manual for Dog Owners," the monks recommend that a human alpha leader be a disciplinarian. Millan has streamlined his similar message so effectively for TV that the concepts are easy to grasp.

"In every show, there is a lightbulb moment," says co-executive producer Jim Millo of MPH Entertainment. "People will say, 'Oh, my God! I'm treating my dog like my kid.'"

But while Millan's macho manner has always scored with Rotterweils, dominance didn't go over as well at home. After the first of their two sons was born, his wife, Illusion, suggested they see a marriage counselor.

"He needed to learn that he couldn't just be the leader in our relationship," she says. "In this country, we share leadership in a marriage."

Talking the talk

The Times-News

Cesar Millan's glossary of dog-training:

• Calm, assertive energy

This is what you need to project to show your dog that you are the calm and assertive pack leader. "Note that 'assertive' does not mean angry or aggressive." "Calm, assertive" always compassionate, but quietly in control.

• Calm, submissive energy
In nature, this is the appropriate energy for a "follower" in a dog pack — thus the ideal energy for a dog to project at home. Signs of calm, submissive energy include a relaxed posture, ears back, and a nearly instinctual response to the pack leader's commands.

• Exercise, discipline and affection — in that order

These are the three ingredients needed to make a happy, balanced dog. Most dog owners either only give affection, or don't provide these three necessities in the correct order.

• Exercise means walking a dog a minimum of once a day and in the correct way.

• Discipline means giving the dog rules, boundaries, and limitations in a non-abusive manner.

• Affection means a reward given to our dogs, but only after they've achieved calm submission in our "pack."

• Master the walk
The walk is an extremely important ritual for a dog. It needs to take place a minimum of once a day, for at least 30 to 45 minutes, so that both the dog's mind and body are given a workout. It's also crucial to act as the dog's leader during a walk. That means the dog walks either next to or behind its owner — not pulling ahead. If a dog is "walking," its owner, the dog perceives itself as pack leader and the owner is not in control.

• Rules, boundaries and limitations

A dog needs to know that its pack leader is clearly setting the rules, boundaries, and limitations for its life both inside and outside the house. Anger, aggression, or abuse will not establish you as a pack leader; an angry and aggressive leader is not in control. Calm, assertive energy and consistent leadership will make it easier to maintain the rules.

• Issues

If a dog doesn't trust its owner, he will be a strong, stable pack leader. It becomes unclear on its correct role within the pack. A dog that is confused about who is in charge is actually concerned about the ability of the pack to survive. Therefore, it tries to fill in the missing leadership elements, often erratically. This can cause aggression, anxiety, fear, obsessions, or phobias — what Millan calls "issues."

• Balance

A balanced dog is in the state that Mother Nature wants it to be in. This means a calm, submissive pack-follower that is fulfilled physically with exercise; psychologically with rules, boundaries, and limitations; and emotionally with affection from its owner.

• Dog training
Conditioning a dog to human commands like "sit," "stay," and "heel" is not part of Millan's rehabilitation program.

• Dog rehabilitation

This is what Millan does. He comes to the aid of a dog with issues and helps return it to a balanced state of calm submission. Sometimes it may appear Cesar Millan believes that owners often give their dogs too much affection and not enough exercise and rules.

The Washington Post

Animals are hard-wired to flirt in order to attract, then judge, a mate. Experiments on rats have shown, for example, that when traditional courtship rituals between the males and females are inhibited, reproduction falls off. Of course human beings have made up other reasons to flirt - we turn on the charm to get a promotion, to raise our spirits or those of someone else - but flirting to seduce is organic, whether we're aware of it or not.

Monica Moore, an evolutionary psychologist at Webster University in St. Louis, has identified as many as 50 different signals a woman may give to entice a man to come closer for her inspection. She wishes more women understood flirting's protective power, bestowed by nature because females are the ones who bear children and have more to lose by making a bad choice of mate. Young women of the middle and upper classes did set the course of relationships prior to the 1920s, according to Beth Bailey, professor of American studies at the University of New Mexico. A young man would arrive at the home of a young woman and offer his card.

that Millan can "fix" a dog in-standby but, as he cautions, "a dog is not an appliance that can be sent out for repairs." Permanent dog rehabilitation can only occur with a calm, assertive, stable, and consistent owner.

• Nose, eyes and ears - in that order

Millan reminds dog owners that dogs see the world differently. We communicate using our ears first, then our eyes, and then our noses. A dog begins with its nose, then its eyes, and lastly its ears. Allowing a dog to experience our scent before we engage it in eye contact or speak to it is one important way to establish trust from the beginning.

• Humanizing a dog

Often, an owner will make the well-intentioned mistake of thinking that a dog is just like a child. Millan advises to try to see the world through a dog's eyes; you'll realize that cute outfits, fancy dog food, and a millionaire's mansion will not necessarily make for a happy dog. Regular exercise, a strong, stable pack leader, and earned affection will result in a calm, balanced dog.

• Post-training
Many owners assume that their dogs are at fault. But Millan helps people realize that their own behaviors have a powerful affect on their dogs. He offers to "re-train" owners to be calm, assertive pack leaders.

Gay man opens to all but family

DEAR ABBY: I am an openly gay man, out of the closet at work, at college and with friends. I'm out to everyone except my family, who have made it clear that being gay is unacceptable.

I spent years trying to change my sexual orientation, which I now know to be about as achievable as changing the color of my eyes.

I don't know how to come out to my family, or if I even should. The only family member who knows said, "They'll only hear what they want to hear, and they don't want to hear this."

A friend recently asked me what would happen if I was in a relationship. Would I hide forever or come out by saying, "Folks, meet my boyfriend!" He said I should come out for me, not for them.

Right now I'm confused. One of my family members is disabled and I don't know if the news would do him. What's the wisest thing to do?

I have had four major relationships in my life. The last two have ended with their deaths. The first - my late husband - died in a work-related car accident. The second died of an autoimmune disease.

Dale has proposed marriage and I said yes; however, my doubts are linked to the adage, "It comes in threes," and I'm afraid I'll lose him too. If this seems silly, I'm sorry. I loved both of the men who died, and after the last one I swore never to love like this again. However, God says, "Never say never." Can you help me?

GUN-SHY IN PHOENIX

DEAR GUN-SHY: Consider this: The only thing slier than bowing to your superstitions would be to sacrifice a mutual love out of fear. You can't change what happened in the past, but if you think positive and concentrate on the present, the future will take care of itself. In a sense, we all "place our bets" and take our chances because in life there are no guarantees. The secret is to think positive.

'Lease' toys and promote sharing to children

Q: My two daughters, ages 5 and 9, are generally quite good about playing together and sharing their toys; however, it is almost inevitable that when one of them, with the other's consent (with permission), has a game set up (with dolls or what have you), the other one suddenly and inexplicably wants her things back. At this point chaos and anger ensue, each deciding that the other is just trying to make them mad, as in "You just want it back because you saw me playing with it!" I'm pleased that they share so well most of the time, but these issues cause major daily discord. I don't know how to solve it except by not allowing them to share, but that doesn't seem right. Today I asked the older one for her solution, and she told me to ask you. So I am asking: As your daughter was right to suggest that you ask me because I do indeed have a relatively simple solution that will require two kitchen timers and a small amount of paper investment of less than $15.

have tried taking away privileges, but she seems impervious to any and all punishment for this. The teacher has taken to insisting that she wear them. That works, but I hate for the teacher to be responsible. Any suggestions?

A: Obviously, you and the teacher are in daily communication about this, which is the first hurdle. The problem is that if the teacher doesn't insist that she wear her glasses, then the punishment you levy at home is more than nullified by the reward of not wearing them at school. So go ahead and ask the teacher to take on the responsibility, but take away a privilege at home on those days when the teacher is called to action. In short order your daughter will realize that there is nothing to be gained by trying to get away with not wearing her glasses. She will also learn that when the novelty wears off, none of the other kids will pay any attention to her new look.

Q: We recently discovered that our 8-year-old daughter is not wearing her new glasses at school. Even though they are really quite attractive, she says they make her look "nerdy." We just that.

When one of the kids lets the other play with a toy, the owner must let you know. You tear a slip of paper off the pad, write the name of the toy, set that child's timer to ring in one hour, and put the timer on top of the slip of paper. The rule becomes: When the timer rings, the owner can either renew the "lease" or ask that the toy be returned, but not before. If the owner forgets to inform you of the reward of not wearing them at school. So go ahead and ask the teacher to take on the responsibility, but take away a privilege at home on those days when the teacher is called to action. In short order your daughter will realize that there is nothing to be gained by trying to get away with not wearing her glasses. She will also learn that when the novelty wears off, none of the other kids will pay any attention to her new look.

Club celebrates 50 years of Christmas in the Park

By Jaml Whited
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — Christmas in City Park has been enjoyed by area residents for the last 20 years. People can read the large Christmas cards and view the bright array of lights illuminating the park's trees nightly through the first part of January.

Soroptimist International of Twin Falls, chartered in 1947, helps yearly by putting up the Christmas lights in the park and organizing the entertainment.

Soroptimists took over the Christmas in City Park program in 1984 and will mark its 20th anniversary this year. The late Mary McClusky, a former Twin Falls City Councilwoman and longtime Soroptimist, started the Advent celebration in 1983 and earned the title "Our Lady of the Christmas Tree" by the club.

"We are going to present a special memorial card to Dr. McClusky in his mother's honor the 28th of November, which will begin our Advent Sunday's and programs," said Kim Cohen, past president, current treasurer and six-year member of Soroptimist.

Want to purchase a card sponsorship?

Christmas card sponsorships are $50 and may be purchased throughout the year. The cost to add a name to the memorial card is $10. The sponsorship and memorial name will be displayed for five years.

For more information, call Kim Cohen at 736-3900.

Advent Sunday Schedule
Advent is celebrated the four Sundays before Christmas and all performances begin at 5 p.m. at the Twin Falls City Park band shell.

Hot chocolate, coffee, hot apple cider and cookies will be for sale to help defray costs of the ### Christmas light bulbs.

The event is free. Following are groups that will provide entertainment and area pastors providing a holiday message:
Nov. 28: The Lighthouse Christian Children's Choir and Pastor Greg Fadness from Lighthouse Christian Fellowship.
Dec. 5: The O'Leary Jazz Band and Pastor Joe Lancaster from First Baptist Church.
Dec. 12: The Morningside Honor Choir and Pastor Rex Baker from Amazing Grace Fellowship.
Dec. 19: The Magic Valley Carolers, under direction of Roger Vincent, and Pastor Dale Metzger from Rock Creek Community Church. "It was the Night Before Christmas" will be read by Mark Cohen. Santa Clause will distribute candy.

"This year they will also take on a new project. The Soroptimist Club will restore, maintain and sell new Christmas cards throughout the year to be displayed in the park. Restoring the cards involves painting, sealing the edges and putting the sponsoring business' logo on the cards."

"We have 22 cards that haven't been taken care of since 1980 ... We just need to get the word out to the businesses to purchase a sponsorship," Cohen said.

"This year, only five of the cards were sponsored by local businesses, but Soroptimists hope to create more cards. Cohen said.

According to Soroptimist di-

The Soroptimists have also created a memorial card so local residents can recognize a friend or relative who has died.

in City Park as a family-oriented event.

"Hopefully, this will bring a little Christmas spirit in," she said.

BUHL — The American Red Cross blood drawing fell short of its quota at the most recent blood drawing in Buhl, collecting 86 pints of blood at the Moose Hall. A total of 94 donors turned out for the event with eight deferrals for minor medical reasons.

"We missed our quota of 108 pints, but we appreciate those who were able to take the time Friday to donate blood," Chairman Jack Quillen said.

It was a turning point for Millan, both personally and professionally. He read "Men Are From Mars, Women Are From Venus" and had his own light-bulb moment. "When I was introduced to the concept that women need to be fulfilled differently from men, I thought about the difference between the way people and dogs think," he says. It was then that he realized dog psychology was his calling.
"Some people think their dogs are like an appliance," he says. "They think I'll fix it, then send it back and their owners just have to say one word and the dog will do what it's supposed to do. It doesn't work like that. Relationships don't work like that, and many people didn't like that."
Janika Symon, a dog rescuer and Universal Studios story analyst who met Millan six years ago - when his reputation had already spread among Los Angeles animal shelters and rescue groups - says the dog whisperer used to be more abrupt with clients than he is on his show.
"Cesar's approach to dogs and their relationships with people is very challenging," she says. "It requires effort and intention. You have to do it and do it and do it. You can't fall into your old patterns and be an effective pack leader."

In many cases, seeing a happy, serene dog motivates people to follow Millan's prescription. "That can include going for vigorous, regular walks, strapping a backpack on an underemployed, working dog, putting a high-energy hunter on a treadmill.
If "Dog Whisperer" is as big a hit as its supporters expect, Millan can go on to write books, endorse products, lead seminars. He still dreams of meeting Oprah, and he longs to work with her dogs.
He thinks they're really spoiled.

This fall, visually impaired Twin Falls attorney Harry B. Turner received a top award from the Idaho State Bar. The state bar's press release included — along with a list of Turner's professional accomplishments — his gratitude to Delta Gamma sorority members who half a century ago read his course material to him in law school at the University of Idaho.

Their help allowed him to graduate and become a lawyer, the release said.

That same thankfulness appears in a story about Turner in the newly published local history book "Gifts of Heritage." The attorney, who lost his vision in a childhood accident, "is quick to give credit to those who have stood by him over the years," interviewer Nancy Lawrence wrote.

"No one accomplishes good things alone. Without great friends, a great dad, a great secretary and a wonderful wife, I could never have done what I have," Turner told Lawrence.

If the rest of us have taken our friends for granted sometimes, it's a particularly appropriate time of year to renew our thankfulness.

So today, we present a selection of our readers' old photos of friends — tackling big tasks together, or simply goofing off.

CSI markets history book online

The Times-News

TWIN FALLS — The College of Southern Idaho is marketing one of Twin Falls' new local history books online, to reach readers and history enthusiasts everywhere.

CSI has put information about history professor Jim Gentry's book — which was published during the city's centennial celebration — on a separate page of the college's Web site.

"In the Middle and on the Edge: The Twin Falls Region of Idaho" was a 10-year writing project for Gentry. The Twin Falls Centennial Commission endorsed the book and has assisted in selling volumes throughout the year. CSI Webmaster Dan Daggett recently completed a separate site for the book that helps Internet browsers meet the author, learn about and order the book.

The 373-page book starts with the earliest pre-history and exploration of the Twin Falls region and then splits the history of the community into three eras: development from 1884 to 1914; World War I and the New Deal from 1915 to 1941; and World War II and the modern city from 1942 to 1990. The period from 1990 to the present is covered in an epilogue.
