Officials discuss nuke waste

Holiday weekend arrives

Suggestions for a memorable Memorial Day

The Associated Press
BOISE — The Idaho congressmen who voted this week for an Energy Department spending bill that recommends storing highly radioactive nuclear waste at the Idaho National Laboratory say they're convinced a 1995 court order prevents that from ever happening. But the White House's former nuclear waste czar, Boise attorney David Leroy, isn't so sure. There is a legislative history and policy agreements between the state and the Department of Energy which would discourage the use of Idaho for that purpose, but they don't constitute an insurmountable barrier if Congress chooses to rewrite that history," said Leroy, a Republican and former Idaho lieutenant governor who served as the federal government's nuclear waste negotiator from 1990-1993. Leroy attempts to find a willing host for a temporary federal nuclear waste dump among a handful of interested counties and Indian tribes failed. In 2002, President Bush approved an Energy Department recommendation to locate the dump at Yucca Mountain in Nevada over the objection of state leaders. Congress has been increasingly frustrated by the legal, scientific and policy challenges that have delayed the opening of Yucca Mountain until at least 2010, if ever. Tuesday, the U.S.

House overwhelmingly passed an energy spending bill that gave the Energy Department money to begin taking ownership of spent nuclear fuel from 129 commercial reactor sites around the country and temporarily storing a portion of it at a federally operated facility by 2006. The bill now moves to the Senate for consideration. The House subcommittee that holds the purse strings to the agency said in a report in-

Opinion is mixed on bishop's role in sex abuse

Los Angeles Times

BOISE — Southern Californians who were sexually abused by priests left in ministry by Bishop Michael P. Driscoll want him to resign or be fired. But in Idaho, where Driscoll now serves as bishop of Boise, Roman Catholic opinion appears far more divided after the release last week of internal church documents that detailed his past handling of clergy sexual abuse allegations in Orange County, Calif.

Many Idaho Catholics have remained supportive of Driscoll, who has apologized for what he described as his "horribly misplaced" priorities in California. Others say they have trouble reconciling the engaging "Blahop Mike," who speaks passionately of his concern for children and the poor, with the portrait that has emerged from the files. According to the documents, Driscoll moved priests accused of molesting minors from parish to parish in Orange County. He helped others relocate to other dioceses and counties to avoid prosecution, ignored or delayed acting on parents' complaints, and accepted a convicted molester from Wisconsin into a local parish.

The files were released last week as part of a $100 million settlement involving 50 alleged victims of sexual abuse and the Diocese of Orange. Driscoll served as chancellor and later as auxiliary bishop in Orange County from 1978 to 1999, when he became head of the statewide diocese in Idaho. Cathy Daley, a parishioner of St. Mary's Parish in Boise, said the revelations from Orange County "make my heart ache." "How could he be involved in something like this? It's scary, it's very unnerving," she said of Driscoll. She said it didn't matter that the filings there occurred 20 years ago. "He is still in the church. They should never have made him a bishop. In my opinion, the thing is, don't let (bishops) have background checks."

Some in Idaho also are upset by a more recent incident in Boise itself.

A permanent deacon — an ordained leader who is not a priest — had been investigated, tried, convicted and sentenced on child pornography charges before parishioners at St. Mary's Parish, where he served, were told of the case in February. The deacon — Robert "Rap" Howell — was convicted of viewing child pornography, not at the parish, but at a foster child counseling service in Boise where he worked full time for 12 years. First a social worker and then as a counselor.

Driscoll had known of the investigation nine months before the church told parishioners, the diocese said. The time lag outraged some at St. Mary's. "People were concerned that we weren't told the truth. I think it stems from the bishop, bottom line," said Mary Baker, 46, whose 13-year-old son attended the red-brick St. Mary's Elementary School on busy, tree-lined West State Street not far from Idaho's Capitol building. "You read about it somewhere else, and then it's right here at home — in our own parish, our own children."

But beyond St. Mary's Parish, the recent Orange County disclosures seem to have barely caused a ripple in Boise. "In general, I don't condone that. It doesn't make me feel good that he's done that in the past. I think I do," who has a

Valley House marks 10th anniversary

By Julie Peneo
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — Today Debie DiFiore, a strikingly attractive, tall, dark-haired single mom, is a 4.0 student at the College of Southern Idaho who is planning to become a radiologist.

But just six months ago, the bottom had dropped out of her world. In the deep of winter, the stay-at-home mother of four found herself homeless and without money through unfortunate circumstances.

Fortunately, she knew a board member of a local homeless shelter called Valley House. DiFiore called her friend, and overnight she and her children ages 3 through 14 — found themselves staying over in a safe, warm environment. DiFiore's happy ending is one of thousands that the volunteers and employees of Valley House Homeless Shelter have facilitated.

On Thursday, the shelter celebrated its 10th anniversary, and people from all over Magic Valley poured into the remodeled Valley on Addison Avenue West to celebrate. Valley House began when a group called the Homeless

As balloons swirl in the wind, Bob Carlson enjoys his food at the Valley House Homeless Shelter 10th Anniversary Celebration on Thursday in Twin Falls. Carlson and his wife, Barbara, came to donate some clothes to the shelter.

Shelter Task Force donated $10,000 to buy an old motel, and volunteers cleaned it and remodeled it, said former task force president Anne Guthrie. "At the time no one in the community had really believed there were homeless people in this valley," she said.

"But someone on the task force began wondering what happened to the people in the soup kitchens after they ate. We realized not only did they need food, but they needed a place to stay that night."

Guthrie said. And so with the help of former state representative and local businessman Randy Hansen, they found a place for the homeless. "You have to understand, these people have been traumatized," said current executive director Sharon Breshnahan.

But Guthrie is quick to point out that the average panhandler you see on the street corner holding a sign that says

TWIN FALLS — Memorial Day weekend is here and so are droves of people ready to kick off the summer traveling season. Here's what to expect and what to do this holiday.

Travel
According to Dave Carlson, spokesman for AAA Idaho, state self-serve regular gas prices are expected to be $2.30, a new Memorial Day record. Despite raised gas prices and heavy traffic, Carlson said this Memorial Day weekend is expected to be the busiest ever with more than 37 million Americans taking to the road. Idaho can expect about 150,260 travelers, Carlson said. That means roads will be busy, especially U.S. 93 and Idaho 75. For those planning trips to Sun Valley, expect more vehicles than the daily average of 44,210 from Halley to Ketchum.

According to the Idaho Transportation Department, the heaviest traffic time is from 3 to 7 p.m. on Monday evening. To avoid congestion, the department recommends avoiding travel during peak hours and using alternate routes when they are available. While the traffic should be heavy, most construction zones will be shut down for the weekend to avoid congestion. One construction zone staying open, however, will be the improvement project located eight miles north of Shoshone from Mannoth Caves to the Richfield Canal. The zone will include a no-passing zone and a 55 mph speed limit. The normal limit is 65 mph.

The Idaho State Police also will be out in force this weekend. Please see HOLIDAY, Page A2

Cupid may soon aim for background investigations

Los Angeles Times

Dating has always been a delicate dance of information swapping: What to reveal when? Now some lawmakers want to regulate it by requiring online dating sites to conduct background checks on their clients. The push runs counter to the prevailing sentiment about privacy. In the wake of high-profile breaches at information brokers ChoicePoint Inc. and Reed Elsevier's LexisNexis, state and federal legislators called for tighter control of personal information, with less, rather than more, disclosure.

Most online dating sites, including iAG/InterActiveCorp's Match.com and Yahoo Inc.'s Yahoo Personals, oppose background-check bills in key states around the country. But competitor True supports them — and, in fact, is bankrolling the campaign.

The founder and chief executive, Herb Vest, believes that every online dating service should conduct background checks, as True does. "The primary motivation is to protect people from criminal predation online," Vest said. "I can't imagine anyone with a hatful of brains being against that." Vest said he spent $200,000 last year on lobbyists around the country. But competitor True supports them — and, in fact, is bankrolling the campaign.

The Michigan House of Representatives late last year passed legislation based on a model bill written by True. It would require Please see DATING, Page A2

Waste

Continued from A1. The committee's language cited with the bill that the department should consider the Hanford reservation in Washington state, the Savannah River complex in South Carolina and the INEL compound in the desert west of Idaho Falls as possible temporary storage pens for the radioactive waste.

Two former Idaho governors, Democrat Cecil Andrews and Republican Phil Batt, weighed a 10-year battle against the federal government that culminated in an unprecedented 1995 agreement between the state and Energy Department, requiring the agency to remove all the Cold War-era nuclear waste stored at the Idaho site.

The court-approved deal also prohibited the federal government from shipping spent fuel from commercial nuclear power plants to the Idaho site. The state's two Republican House members Tuesday voted against an amendment to strip the interim storage provisions from the bill and supported the overall $2.7 billion spending package after being reassured the manager's report would not overturn the decade-old decree of no new nuclear waste in Idaho.

Homeless

Continued from A1. "Will work for food" is not the phrase who stays at Valley House.

As a rule, those people are professional beggars, she said. Alcohol and drug abusers and professional panhandlers are not allowed to stay at Valley House.

The shelter helps people who are temporarily down but willing to work toward putting their lives back together. Single people or families with no place to stay, it doesn't matter. Valley House folks are there to help them regain their self-respect.

"We are unique in that we help everyone that is willing to work and do their part," Breshars said.

A bath, a haircut, clean clothes and a plan to get a job is

"The committee's language in no way alters existing law or the provisions of Idaho's 1995 settlement," said Idaho Rep. Mike Simpson, who sits on the Energy and Water Development Appropriations Subcommittee that wrote the bill.

During Tuesday's debate on the House floor, Idaho Rep. C.L. "Butch" Otter asked the chairman of the subcommittee, Rep. David Hobson, R-Ohio, "Would it be language contained within this report in any way change existing law or alter the provisions of the state of Idaho's settlement with the Department of Energy?"

Answered Hobson: "No, it would not." Larry, however, said the manager's report in spending bill shows the increasing political momentum to find an alternative to Yucca Mountain that may ultimately steamroll the Idaho pact.

"For the first time you've got somebody truly admitting Yucca is not going to open in 2016 or later, so every year it slips is another billion-dollar price tag and saying that interim storage at a government-run site is essentially mandatory," he said Thursday. "The history of one set of elected or appointed officials in any branch of U.S. government absolutely binding their successors in office to their agreements is not one I would depend on in this case."

Holiday

Continued from A1. Even with recent rain and snow, most area campgrounds will be open for Memorial Day and ready for campers. Still, the U.S. Forest Service warns that some roads may still be too wet for travel and urge campers to avoid them. The Forest Service also recommends bringing water from home. Ed Wladafski, a forest public affairs officer, said in a memo that many water systems are not going to be operational until sometime in June.

Recreation

If the traffic is too daunting for a weekend trip, there's plenty to do right here in Magic Valley. According to Sherrill Berger, president and chief executive officer of the Twin Falls Area Chamber of Commerce, outdoor activities should be plentiful this weekend.

"Honestly with the rain we've been having for the last month locally, anywhere outside is probably going to be a hot spot," he said.

It means local campgrounds, hiking trails and golf courses should all see plenty of action.

Priest

Continued from A1. 12-year-old son at St. Mary's school. But, she said, "everybody changes over time. What I would want to see is what steps he's taking now to show us, the people, that he's protecting us, that he's on our side."

Driscoll admitted in depositions taken in 1990 and 2002 that he never warned Orange County parishioners that a molesting priest was in their midst. At times didn't interview the alleged victims, didn't seek out additional victims and never reported the accusations to police. Discussed papers in a 1985 lawsuit included a letter from Driscoll in which he asked a colleague in England to accept a priest accused of molesting an 8-year-old boy, so he could avoid U.S. prosecution on molestation charges.

Dating

Continued from A1. proved by the state Senate but was reintroduced in both houses this year. Similar measures are being considered in Florida, Texas and Ohio. A California version was pulled before a committee could vote on it this year. This is one of those feel-good kind of bills that Democrats and Republicans can get behind," said analyst Charlene H. of Forester Research Inc.

advocates are alarmed. "The notion that we should be requiring yet another industry to do background checks is chilling," said Barry Steinlart, director of the American Civil Liberties Union Technology and Liberty Center. "It hinders us further into a surveillance society in which every action is going to be investigated by the state and its accountability." Raising the stakes for both sides is that a law in any state could create a national standard because of the difficulties in applying different local standards to Internet commerce.

Internet daters themselves are divided, John Knowlton, 52, who teaches at a community college in Auburn, Wash., said he was uncomfortable with government taking a role in the matter. And he didn't find it unfair the online dating was more stringent.

"Every day, thousands of personal ads appear in print," Knowlton said. "Why wouldn't we subject the same thing?" Diana Luber, 35, a lawyer in the Los Angeles area, is generally in favor of background checks on daters. "I would want to have people screened for something so basic as whether or not they're a criminal!"

The Hagerman Fossil Days event kicks off at 6 p.m. today and continues until 6 p.m. Sunday.

Tonight's events include a wine tasting and theater performance. On Saturday will be a parade, three-on-three basketball tournament and live musical performances. Sunday will include more live music and youth stick horse races.

The 18th annual event celebrates the town's famous fossil beds.

BASE Jumping

Take a look at the Perrine Ridge this weekend and odds are somebody will be jumping off it — wearing a parachute, of course. At least 50 jumpers, and maybe more than 100, will descend on Twin Falls to spend Memorial Day weekend jumping off the Perrine Ridge.

The event, which has an organized competition, has become an annual gathering for jumpers worldwide to get together before the summer jumping season starts out.

"Winter's just over with," said Don Mays, who operates Snake River Canyon Tours and Barbecue and is the event's organizer of the event. "Everybody's kind of wanting to get together and say hi. They want to get in the groove of jumping before they go to the big show."

Mays said he already has 25 confirmed jumpers (many come unannounced), including campers from Europe, South Africa and throughout the United States.

Mays picks up the jumpers in his boat when they land, be it on the shore or in the river, and also puts on a barbecue for them to live up the festivities. On Saturday, the meal will be ham, eggs and potatoes. On Sunday he will serve brisket, cole slaw, baked beans and will hold a raffle.

The best clues to watch the BASE jumpers will be from the Canyon Rim Trail or the pedestrian walk on the bridge.

Mays said that the group will bring about $35,000 to the Twin Falls economy.

Meningitis cases

New shot can protect kids from meningitis

CHICAGO (AP) — High school freshman Leslie Meigs has a simple message for kids about the scary disease that struck out of the blue and within hours almost killed her: Get the new meningitis shot.

Children who are 11 to 12, students entering high school and college freshmen headed for dorm life should be vaccinated, federal health officials and the American Academy of Pediatrics announced Thursday. Although meningitis, a meningitis shot affects only about 3,000 people nationwide each year, it kills one-fifth of adolescents who get it.

"This is a very bad disease," said the academy's Dr. Carol J. Baker, an infectious disease specialist at Baylor College of Medicine in Texas. "It's very rapidly progressive in adolescence. You can have an adolescent in a shopping mall at 2 in the afternoon, in the emergency room at 6 in the evening, and in death by midnight."

For Meigs, who lives in Houston, it happened at 8, when she awoke with a slight fever and later started vomiting. By nighttime she was hospitalized with a purplish rash caused by tissue damage from the bacteria infiltrating her bloodstream. She became comatose, had kidney failure, and her parents were told she would probably die.

Meningococcal meningitis doesn't always include classic meningitis symptoms — headache and stiff neck. It can start like the flu and progress to organ failure and tissue damage requiring amputation.

The new vaccine was approved in January, and in February a government advisory panel urged federal health officials to recommend the shot be given to certain age groups — primarily those at highest risk.

Senate delays Bolton's confirmation

Los Angeles Times

WASHINGTON — The Senate dealt another setback to the embattled nomination of John R. Bolton as ambassador to the United Nations on Thursday, voting to delay his confirmation for at least another week after Democrats accused the administration of withholding information.

The vote came as a blow to President Bush, who has praised Bolton as the sort of tough-talking diplomat who could help reform the United Nations. However, Bolton's nomination has been slowed by charges that he has stretched intelligence findings and bullied intelligence analysts who disagreed with him.

Thursday's delay resulted from a failed Republican effort to cut off debate, a move that requires the support of three-fifths of the Senate. The 56-42 vote fell short of the 60 votes the Republican majority needed to end debate and hold a confirmation vote.

Despite the holdup, Republicans vowed to bring the nomination up again after the Memorial Day recess, and predicted they would muster the votes then to confirm Bolton.

The first casualty of Thursday's vote, however, may have been the spirit of compromise achieved on Monday when a small group of moderate and maverick Democratic and Republican senators signed an agreement on judicial nominees.

In that compromise — which pulled the Senate back from what could have become a paralyzing partisan confrontation — seven Democrats promised to filibuster judicial nominees only in "extraordinary circumstances." In return for Republicans promising not to vote to change the filibuster rules that allow the minority party to hold-up nominations.

Well, John Bolton is in extraordinary-circumstance purgatory right now," said an angry Sen. Pat Roberts, R-Kan., who asked whether the Democrats' actions Thursday undermined the spirit of the agreement.

Senate Majority Leader Bill Frist, R-Tenn., issued a statement exhorting the Democrats. "Some 72 hours after halting an agreement that sought to end partisan filibusters," the statement read, "the Democrats have launched yet another partisan filibuster... Given the chance to advance the cause of comity in the Senate, the Democrats have chosen partisan confrontation over cooperation."

Leaks plague Smithsonian buildings, GAO says

The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — "Leak" in Washington usually has one meaning — the one that raises official ire, triggers internal investigations and sends unnamed sources scampering like roaches when the lights go on.

But when Government Accountability Office analysts reported leaks and other upkeep issues in its infrastructure study of the Smithsonian Institution on Wednesday, they meant it the old-fashioned way — drip by drip, countered with buckets, towels and mops.

To wit, or wet: A leak at the National Air and Space Museum caused rust on the wing of the first plane to hit Mach 2. Plaster walls are weeping in the Renwick Gallery. Some buildings and exhibits on the Mall and at the National Zoo have closed because of disrepair, and more leaks threaten the Smithsonian's historic collections and irreplaceable objects, the report says.

Cost to fix and maintain the deteriorating facilities over the next nine years? At least $2.3 billion, the Smithsonian estimates — almost 13 times its current facilities budget.

"The problems are relatively serious given the kinds of repair backlogs the Smithsonian has," says Mark Goldstein, the GAO's director of physical infrastructure issues, who oversaw the study. "They are taking pretty strong steps to deal with the major problems within the confines of their budget. But they can't do as much as they'd like to do."

The Smithsonian's repairs-and-maintenance budget for fiscal year 2005 is $184.4 million of its $304 million operating budget for 18 public museums and galleries, 10 science centers, the zoo and other facilities. There are 650 buildings altogether that display, study and safeguard 143.7 million precious objects and specimens and 166.3 million archived documents and photographs.

"There are not adequate resources to address a fairly profound shortfall in terms of an aging physical plant," says Sheila Burke, the Smithsonian's deputy secretary and chief operating officer, calling the GAO report "quite accurate" and "a fair analysis."

Judge acquits soldier of Iraqi's death

FORT HOOD, Texas (AP) — An Army staff sergeant was acquitted of murder Thursday in the death of an unarmed Iraqi he said he shot to save a fellow soldier.

A jury of four soldiers and two officers deliberated for less than three hours before finding Staff Sgt. Shane West not guilty of premeditated murder. He had faced a maximum of life in prison without parole.

Before the jury announced the verdict, the judge, Col. Theodore Dixon, found West not guilty of obstruction of justice. Dixon said Thursday he ruled on that count, but did not give an explanation.

West's family shrieked, cried and hugged after the verdict was read.

Security forces to ring parts of capital

A security cordon of 40,000 Iraqi soldiers and police will ring parts of Baghdad starting next week to try to halt insurgent violence. Total Iraqi forces: 165,200

40,000 Iraqi troops fan out across Baghdad

BAGHDAD, Iraq (AP) — Iraq announced plans Thursday to ring 40,000 police and soldiers in the capital and ring the city with hundreds of checkpoints "like a bracelet" in the largest show of Iraqi force since the fall of Saddam Hussein. In a reminder of the difficulty Iraqi security forces face in stopping insurgent attacks, violence claimed at least 15 lives Thursday in Baghdad including a car bomb that exploded near a police patrol, killing five people and wounding 17. An American helicopter was shot down Thursday night while supporting coalition forces near the city, 35 miles northwest of Baghdad, while another was hit but returned safely, the U.S. military said. There was no word on the number of people aboard the downed aircraft or their conditions. The statement said an OH-58 Kiowa carrying two people was damaged but landed safely. In Baghdad, Prime Minister Ibrahim al-Janfari told a small group of Western reporters that next week's planned crackdown, dubbed Operation Lightning, was designed "to restore the initiative to the government." Insurgents have killed more than 620 people since his government was announced on April 28. "We will establish, with God's help, an impenetrable blockade surrounding Baghdad like a bracelet surrounds a wrist," Defense Minister Saoudun al-Dulaini said. Iraqi authorities did not say how long the crackdown would last, and it was uncertain if the Iraq security services are capable of mounting a sustained operation. Except for a few elite units, most police officers are believed to have joined up for the higher pay job provides — at $300 per month their salaries are triple the average wage. Iraq currently has 49,400 security personnel attached to the Ministry of Interior, according to the U.S. military.

Speculation mounts over fate of top al-Qaida in Iraq leader

BAGHDAD, Iraq (AP) — Speculation about Abu Musab al-Zarqawi's fate and conflicting claims Thursday over who is running al-Qaida in Iraq suggest confusion or perhaps even a power struggle within Iraq's most lethal terrorist group. Who would replace the former-born militant as leader of the group responsible for multiple bombings, beheadings and assassinations in Iraq is becoming as hot a topic as who the feared terrorist is, actually alive or dead. But Iraq's rampant insurgency, in which thousands have been killed in the past two years, would not be derailed even in the event of al-Zarqawi's absence, some experts warn. "The real danger in Iraq is you have more than 50 attacks a day with some made by al-Zarqawi and 80 percent made by others," said Diaa Rashwan, an expert on radical Islam at Egypt's Al-Ahram Center for Political and Strategic Studies. "It's not really a problem of who will be the successor," Rashwan said. "He's not a real leader of a real organization, he's a symbol for a kind of network for small Islamic groups which share tactics and ideology." Speculation over the group's future leadership has soared since Tuesday's Internet "announcement" in the name of the media coordinator for al-Qaida's Iraq branch, Abu Mayssara al-Iraqi, that al-Zarqawi had been wounded and that Muslims should pray for him.

Chirac asks France to support EU

PARIS — In an attempt to avert a resounding French rejection of a proposed European Constitution, President Jacques Chirac told voters Thursday they have a "historic responsibility" to approve the proposal. President Bush and Palestinian President Mahmoud Abbas hold a joint news conference Thursday in the Rose Garden at the White House.

Bush gives Abbas aid and praise

WASHINGTON — President Bush offered an unstinting vote of confidence and $50 million in direct aid to Palestinian leader Mahmoud Abbas Thursday in an attempt to bolster his newly elected government and reinvigorate the Middle East peace process. Signaling a new era of relations, the president welcomed Abbas to the White House for the first time since his January election as president of the Palestinian Authority. Bush never extended such an invitation to Abbas' predecessor, Yasser Arafat, who died in November after years of estrangement from the U.S. administration.

Union backs off boycott of Israeli schools

LONDON — Britain's largest union of university teachers Thursday backed off its month-old boycott of two Israeli universities, one of which had been accused of suppressing Palestinian research and the other of taking part in the occupation of Arab land. The boycott, enacted by the 48,000-member Association of University Teachers, had sparked charges of anti-Semitism and widespread criticism that professors in Britain had no business interfering in Israeli-Palestinian politics. The decision came after protests from some union members that the boycott had been engineered by a small coterie of members without broad consultation or due process.

Senate pressures president over China's currency

WASHINGTON — U.S. senators from both parties demanded Thursday that the Bush administration get tougher with China for keeping its currency fixed against the U.S. dollar, and some exhorted the administration to crack down on Japan as well over the currency issue. The lawmakers' comments, which were addressed to Treasury Secretary John Snow at a hearing of the Senate Banking Committee, underscored the mounting pressure on Capitol Hill for action to change China's currency policy. Beijing has kept its currency, the yuan, pegged at 8.28 per dollar since 1995, a rate that many economists and U.S. manufacturers say is too low, giving Chinese firms an unfair edge in global markets.

Sen. Richard Shelby, R-Ala., the committee's chairman, told Snow that members of Congress "think you punted" in a report issued last week on foreign nations' currency practices. The report stopped China's short of branding China a manipulator of its currency, although it used much more critical language than in the past about the yuan's fixed rate and said Beijing would likely qualify as a manipulator in the future if it failed to make its currency more flexible.

Talks only buy time in Iran nuke dispute

VIENNA, Austria (AP) — The World Trade Organization eased open its door to Iran on Thursday — an immediate reward for Tehran's decision to stick with talks Europe hopes will reduce Tehran's potential for nuclear mischief.

Iran was jubilant over the decision by the 148-member WTO in Geneva, which governs international commerce, to open membership negotiations with Tehran.

"Today this house with this decision has done service to itself by correcting a wrong," said Mohammad Reza Abolmohsen, Iran's chief representative to international organizations in Geneva. But Iran still insists on the right to technology that can make nuclear arms. Its decision Wednesday to meet with European Union negotiators for a new round of talks in Geneva this week did little more than postpone a diplomatic struggle over Iran's vow to resume programs capable of producing nuclear weapons.

The idea is that the process will continue," said a European official familiar with what was discussed in Geneva, acknowledging that no progress was made on the key dispute in the six-day talks — Iran's insistence on the right to enrich uranium and European opposition to such plans.

Egypt passes referendum

CAIRO, Egypt (AP) — A nationwide referendum to open the way for the country's first multi-candidate presidential elections passed overwhelmingly, officials announced Thursday, saying more voters participated than in any previous similar balloting.

The results mean President Hosni Mubarak, the country's 24-year leader, will face opposition when he runs for a fifth term in September. But critics say the law, which allows candidates to run only with approval from Mubarak's party, is a sham. Official results showed 83 percent of voters approved the constitutional changes in balloting Wednesday that was marred by scattered violence.

Turnout was 54 percent of registered voters. Figures of the Interior Ministry said was higher than in any previous presidential referendum.

The high turnout came despite calls by six opposition groups, including the popular Muslim Brotherhood, to boycott the vote.

A Hmong refugee with a baby strapped to her back watches closing ceremonies of their camp Thursday at Wat Tham Krabok, about 60 miles north of Bangkok, Thailand.

Camp closes after refugees relocated

THAM KRABOK, Thailand (AP) — The largest refugee camp for ethnic Hmong, who fled communist Laos to Thailand, was officially closed Thursday, ending another chapter of the Vietnam War era.

The closure of the camp in Thailand follows the relocation of 10,000 Hmong, a mountain-dwelling ethnic group, to the United States. Another 5,300 are expected to resettle there by September.

During the Vietnam War, the CIA enlisted the Hmong to help U.S.-backed government forces fight communist insurgents in Laos.

When the communists won, many Hmong fled for fear of retribution. A small number continue to fight the government in the jungles of northern Laos.

Some leaving the camp at Tham Krabok, about 60 miles north of Bangkok, said they were sorry to go.

"I will miss it here. It will take me a long time to forget," said Kaying Song, 37, who lived in the camp for 10 years and leaves for Minnesota next month with his wife, father and seven children.

Neilsen hotel proposal plan fits the second time around

The hustle and bustle through Twin Falls' canyon rim gateway may grow a little busier in future years.

Twin Falls' canyon rim business region could receive another face-lift in the near future. Real estate developer Neilsen & Co. released new plans last week to build a posh hotel and convention center on the canyon rim along with an additional 160,000-square feet of open-air retail for the Canyon Park shopping area.

The biggest development of all would be a multi-story upscale hotel with at least 200 rooms, and a stunning view of the Snake River canyon and Perrine Bridge.

Craig Neilsen, who bought acres of the canyon rim over the past two decades, pushed for a hotel-convention center in 1999.

But local opposition was high and eventually Neilsen pulled away from the project in 2000, citing a lack of market support for a high-cost hotel.

That market has changed in five years—and so has the canyon rim's appearance. Neilsen's 40-acre property is a welcome mat for interstate drivers, complete with restaurants, sporting goods and clothing chains. That's saying nothing about the spectacular view and walking trail 450 feet above the Snake River.

Opponents may grow queasy about the idea of a 15-story hotel peering over the canyon and blighting the view for those looking up.

But the horse is out of the barn as far as the Blue Lakes-Canyon Park-Snake River canyon intersection is concerned. Neilsen's project is the capstone on years of development that includes Magic Valley Mall and expanding retail along Pole Line Road and Blue Lakes Boulevard.

So if the Canyon Park project is to be completed, it should be designed for what this area needs. And a convention center and upscale hotel is probably the final piece to the puzzle.

While Sun Valley resort is 75 miles away and a popular spot for large gatherings, Twin Falls could capture much more of that traffic and a fizzy hotel would do the job. The city has a good regional airport, a wide array of recreational opportunities, and a strong economic and educational base. All of those components will attract tourists willing to stay in an upscale hotel.

Some may argue the city will descend further down a road of crass commercialism with this hotel project. But they should remember that Twin Falls is dedicated to preserving aesthetic areas of the canyon stretch, as well. The Centennial Walking Trail addition at Shoshone Falls protects a scenic region for the entire public. The Auger Falls park project, meanwhile, is shaping into a unique conservation blueprint that could be unmatched among Idaho cities.

The specifics of Neilsen's hotel plan will be subject to a public review. Some main concerns will involve traffic flow on Highway 93 and turning lanes into the project. (And suddenly, the idea of a third bridge doesn't sound so crazy.)

But the development idea has ripened over recent years. With careful consideration, the project for the canyon rim and give the area a much-needed lodging and convention destination.

Our view: The addition of a multi-story hotel on the Twin Falls canyon rim would fit well with current development. We welcome viewpoints from our readers on this and other issues.

Senate sidesteps principle for power

Every time a line is drawn on principle, a deep-seated human instinct emerges—the instinct to compromise. This was the bipartisan "Gang of 14" in the U.S. Senate announcing its own solution to the impasse over filibusters on judicial nominations.

RONALD A. CASS

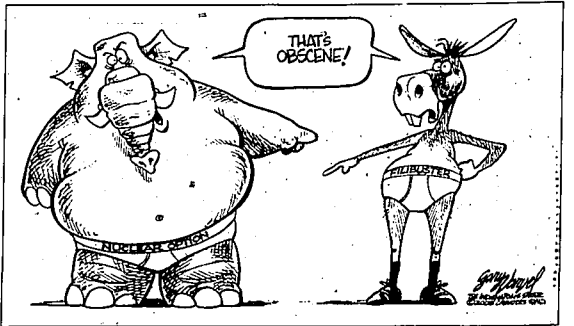

A vote was looming on whether these filibusters are consistent with Senate rules. Republicans and Democrats were arguing how many senators it would take to decide the issue—517 607 671. In the end, it took only 14.

In the fighting leading up to the Great Compromise, Republican leaders were insisting on a return to the traditional competence-plus-propriety standard for confirmation of judicial nominees, and historic respect for presidential authority.

In the 1990s, even Democratic Sens. Edward M. Kennedy, Patrick Leahy and Joseph Lieberman said an up-or-down vote on the president's picks was constitutionally required. That's the principle Majority Leader Bill Frist, a Republican, has been insisting on.

Democratic leaders were standing on principle too: the minority's right to resist majority rule. The Democrats had taken minority rights to a new level by filibustering judicial nominations. They targeted a group of 10 nominees who offended interest groups that support Democrats.

Democrats' invocation of the filibuster was wrong. Filibusters date back to at least the 1840s. But with the possible exception of the 1968 nomination of Abe Fortas to be chief justice (a complicated story ending with him resigning from the bench), there were no filibusters of judicial nominees in the entire history of the nation. None. Until 2001, when the Democrats declared that they would filibuster any of President Bush's nominees they didn't like.

There is good reason for the historic distinction. Filibustering legislation changes the balance of power within Congress. But filibustering judicial nominations changes the constitutional allocation of power between president and Senate. And, ultimately, it threatens the independence of the courts.

Earlier this week, both sides thought they were on track for a resolution of this dispute. Would the Senate rule that filibustering judges was out of bounds? Yes or no? We were about to see which principle—the world's greatest deliberative body" would adopt. We didn't get there.

Instead, amid the self-congratulations of the Great Compromisers, what we got was a more serious threat to constitutional principle. The bipartisan group of 14 Republicans and Democrats—a "super-minority"—stuck to no principle at all except that of avoiding having to choose one. They came before the cameras proud to have struck a compromise. Vote on some nominees, no others and the 14 will pick which ones. The Democrats in the group agree that three people they branded dangerous extremists can, after all, be federal judges. Republicans in the group agree that two nominees with strong backgrounds can be left in confirmation limbo. Everyone says there won't be filibusters in the future unless someone thinks there's an "extraordinary circumstance." "What could be more reasonable! Everyone holds hands and sings "Kumbaya."

Minority Leader Harry Reid was trying to shift power from the president and majority party to the minority. But the compromisers managed to shift power to an even smaller minority. A self-selected minority. And they struck a compromise that is mushy at its core.

Filibusters now are only for "extraordinary circumstances"—which is exactly what Democrats said motivated the 10 filibusters that started all of this. There is something wonderfully comforting about compromise. Compromisers feel superior to the inflexible folks who should tell them that. But principles can't be compromised. And shouldn't be. Instead of handing out laurel wreaths to the compromisers, their constituents should tell them that it's time to stand for something. Vote to end the filibusters on judges. Or vote to keep them. Don't engage in cynical horse-trading that makes some nominees casualties of the impulse to duck hard choices.

Compromise preserved the wonderful tradition of Senate deal-making. But there are higher values than a comfy political club.

Today's super-minority tells us who's too extreme to deserve a vote and who's not. But it doesn't give us any guide to the principles behind that choice. We'll have to wait for the next campfire to see who's still holding hands. And who's getting roasted.

Ronald Cass, president of a legal consulting firm in Great Falls, Va., was dean of Boston University Law School from 1990-2004.

Close the bases — and cut the spending

The frantic reaction to the Pentagon's plans to close 33 major military factories demonstrates how heavily government dominates modern life. Most of the reaction had nothing to do with national security. After all, it is Defense Secretary Donald Rumsfeld floating the proposal. Who is going to believe that he and his boss, President Bush, are weak on the military? On the contrary, they too readily see it as a panna.

SHELDON RICHMAN

No, the reaction focused on the economic cost to the bases' surrounding communities. As CNN put it, "The reaction to the announcement by the communities affected — from New Jersey to California, Wisconsin to Texas — was just disappointment, then determination to fight for their livelihoods." CNN added that "the Pentagon plan calls for a net loss of 29,005 military and civilian jobs at domestic installations."

Their livelihoods? People in a free-enterprise society are not supposed to look to the government for their livelihoods. But the bloated military, which is part of the business warfare-warfare state, makes that possible.

In a free market, consumers usually direct a market according to their decisions to buy or not to buy. Even stages of production far from the consumers must be able to satisfy their. Mining iron ore to make steel has value only if consumers want things made of steel. If a better and cheaper material were discovered, the value of iron ore would plummet.

How do consumers get the money to buy things and direct the productive process? By being producers themselves, which means they must satisfy other consumers. Thus one can consume only if one first produces something that others want to consume. In this way, the economy is in the hands of consumers. Entrepreneurs, owners of capital, and workers all must strive to please them in order to prosper.

Big government corrupts this beneficent process. Government finances its activities through taxation — fiscal force — that is, it compels productive people to surrender part of their incomes. Politicians and bureaucrats then spend the money in sundry ways. Notice the break from the market's mode of operation. In the market, one can acquire someone else's money only through consent, usually by offering him something he wants: a gallon of milk, a computer, an automobile.

But when the government commandeers the money, to that extent it also commandeers the market process. Now the money is spent not by people who have satisfied consumers, but by government employees and contractors who have satisfied their bureaucratic bosses. (The Public Choice school of political economy has exploded the fiction that government personnel are motivated to serve "the people.")

For many years thousands of military-base employees have spent millions of taxpayer dollars buying goods and services in the nearby communities. Many people have come to depend on that patronage. Had that money not been taken from the taxpayers, they would have spent and saved it in ways that satisfied them, and others would have prospered as a result. Thus government is revealed as little more than a transfer machine, moving money from those who serve productive consumers to those who serve unproductive bureaucrats and politicians.

The upshot is that closing the bases and — this is important — letting the taxpayers keep their money would free the economy to make our lives better.

The rub is that although the Bush administration wants to close the bases, it hasn't said it will cut spending. Too bad. Until the government drastically cuts spending, we productive people will be living in involuntary servitude.

Voters protected programs in schools

In the patrons of Kimberly Schools.

We are grateful so many members of our community took time to exercise their constitutional privilege to vote in the Kimberly Schools supplemental levy on May 17.

We especially thank our patrons who supported the levy. Your yes vote signifies your support of our kids and your trust in our board and staff. The proceeds of this levy will help assure fulfillment of the district's mission: "Educating students for the needs and challenges of today and tomorrow."

Thank you for the opportunity to continue all of the high-quality programs offered

Get out and walk with your pooch

I get quite amused when I see people around town walking their dogs by means of car. Every day, I see someone slowly driving their vehicle around the neighborhood, following their dog while it exercises.

If only they knew if they would walk with their dog instead of driving while the dog wags, it would probably add 35 to 40 dog years to their lives.

Cosby should preach beyond the choir

In a nation that so values freedom of speech, one would think that frank talk would also be valued. But consider the consequences in three settings.

First, New York City mayoral candidate Fernando Ferrer violated what should be Rule No. 1 of politics: Be clear and consistent. He commented on the 1999 killing of African immigrant Amadou Diallo by four trigger-happy Bronx cops. To a cop audience, he said the shooting was no crime. To a civilian audience, he called it "a bad shooting." Many were confused.

Second, Mexican President Vicente Fox, who favors Mexicans working in the United States even if they are here illegally, said: "There's no doubt that the Mexican men and women — full of dignity, will power and a capacity for work — are doing the work that not even blacks want to do in the United States." His insensitive remarks were taken as an insult by blacks who are more easily insulted than I.

Third, Bill Cosby is touring the country preaching straight talk among blacks about social responsibility and parenting.

E. R. SHIPP

That he has drawn fire is evident from the title of scholar Michael Eric Dyson's book, "Is Bill Cosby Right or Has the Black Middle Class Lost Its Mind?" Ferrer is right. Fox is right. Cosby is right. But, gosh almighty, how their messages have been twisted into the controversies only we in the media can create. This is manufactured drama aimed at a dumbed-down public that accepts sound bites as the full meal.

Ferrer has been fogged because of his remarks pitched to different audiences, but which were essentially true. Diallo's senseless death was a tragedy but legally not a crime. It's time Ferrer remove the hair shirt and answer: What will you do that Mayor Michael Bloomberg isn't doing?

Fox was right, to a point. The truth is, Mexicans and other illegal immigrants often take jobs no Americans, not just blacks, want.

As for Cosby, I say: Keep on speaking out. But walk into the lion's den. Don't just preach to the choir.

As I observed last week while moderating Cosby's "call out" in Roosevelt, N.Y., most of those who showed up are already doing what he suggests. They're not bad parents. Heck, they're not all that poor, dollar-wise. That they share Cosby's values was evident in the amen and applause as he condemned giving in to victimization rather than drawing on the strength of generations that endured far more than today's girls who become single mothers, boys who sire and abandon children, and parents who overindulge rather than ride hard on their kids.

"You have the answer," he told an audience that seemed to rever him like a lay minister and megastar. "You've got to talk to each other. You've got to take those responsibilities."

We Americans are not so spineless as to fear frank talk. But those who put themselves out there with such talk must know of what they speak, be consistent and resist backpedaling if the message isn't popular.

Samuelson ignores the obvious on Social Security

In your May 23 article by Robert Samuelson, he has listed many ideas on how to save Social Security. Mr. Samuelson has written other articles on this subject for the paper, and never does he mention all of the facts.

He even writes, "Why is it that a couple in their 30s with two children, car payments and a mortgage should subsidize the retirement of a couple in their mid-60s with no mortgage whose children are long gone and who could still work?"

My question to Mr. Samuelson is, "Why should our Social Security dollars be given to people who have never worked in this country and are not citizens of the United States? Why have I worked my entire life and my contributions been given to people who have never worked here or who are not even citizens of my country?" Millions of dollars are spent every year on Social Security to non-citizens residing in the United States. We give this select group benefits and, Mr. Samuelson, why don't you ever write about that?

While 74 percent of Idahoans buckle up, the remaining 26 percent appear to believe serious injury or death will not happen to them or their loved ones. Buckling up remains the single best defense against serious injury or death for you and your passengers in the event you're involved in a crash. Failure to use turn signals, make safe lane changes and exceeding the speed limit lead to numerous injury crashes and fatal outcomes. To better your odds and to have a safer holiday weekend, slow down, be courteous and enjoy the time you spend with your family.

The Idaho State Police will also be focusing its "You drink, you lose" campaign. Unfortunately, many drivers have experienced this program firsthand. Impaired drivers will be arrested, charged and prosecuted.

When drivers drink alcohol and/or use drugs, the combination can be deadly to the driver and to the innocent people injured or killed by the impaired driver.

The Idaho State Police would like your help to create a safe and crash-free weekend. Please call "ISP" (477) or 911 to report road hazards, drunk drivers or other emergencies.

T.F. School Board hires new staff

TWIN FALLS — Students in Twin Falls will see a new high school football coach and two new principals next year. The Twin Falls School Board on Wednesday appointed Brock Berryhill to be the high school head football coach at the start of the new school year. Berryhill will succeed Tobe Smith, who coached the Twin Falls School District's graduation specialist, will become principal at O'Leary Junior High School next year. He will succeed Bill Brulotte, who will become principal of Perrine Elementary.

Henderson has worked on dropout prevention in Twin Falls for about two years. Prior to that, he served for 20 years in various leadership positions in Nevada schools. The district is searching for applicants to fill Owens' position. The board also appointed Richard Henderson to be principal at Morningside Elementary and replace retiring principal Dennis Schuler. Henderson is director of special education, elementary principal, school psychologist and behavior specialist at the Bruneau/Grandview School District.

Hansen group seeks centennial stories

HANSEN — The Hansen Centennial Committee is looking for descendants of Hansen pioneers to share stories about their lives. The hardships early settlers overcame is of great interest to residents 100 years later. The centennial committee plans to compile a history of life over the past century in the Hansen area. The committee also is asking for individuals who would like to provide an endorsement for the centennial celebration on July 4. Musical or dance groups are encouraged to contact Linda Morrill at City Hall. A recipe book is going to be printed containing favorite dishes from great-grandma's kitchen. Anyone with a recipe that's been a family favorite is asked to leave a copy in a recipe box that will be placed around town or at City Hall.

Jerome bond proposal advances

Committee recommends school board send a $28 million package to voters

By Cathy Roemer
Times-News correspondent

JEROME — The Jerome Schools Facility Improvement Committee has upped the ante in its bond issue talks, recommending the Jerome School Board send a nearly $28 million proposal to voters in November. The school board will hear the recommendation at its June meeting and may still adjust the final dollar amount or the scope of the proposal. On Wednesday, about 40 people attended a committee meeting at the Jerome High School auditorium to hear details about the proposal. Amy Rothweiler, who heads up the campaign focus group, asked committee members to vote on the $28 million package that would provide funds to build new middle and elementary schools and upgrade the existing Jerome High School. Despite some discussion, the committee vote was nearly unanimous to push ahead with the proposed $28 million bond issue. A straw poll taken at the meeting may have given committee members confidence that citizens will vote for the bond issue. The poll indicated that most committee members believe the majority of district residents would vote "yes" to build at least two new schools but weren't so sure about additional athletic facilities at the high school or turning the current middle school into new district offices. "We have to get something passed because it's going to be a very long haul before we can do this again," said Chris Barber, the committee's chairman. Barber also said he has gotten some "backlash from the community saying we are spending too much money." Property owners would be the primary funding source and may certainly feel an effect if a $28 million bond issue passes. Preliminary plans were first estimated at $25.9 million, which would cost taxpayers between $231 and $276 per $100,000 of taxable property. Property taxes that now go toward the school district are assessed at $59 per $100,000. Re-calculated estimates, provided by LKV Architects of Boise, show the preliminary bond cost at $27,800,000. Barrett McClure, an insurance agent and farmer, said the amount may be "too much for people to accept right now." In talking to people in the community, he said very few favor the whole package but many have said they would vote

Teenager gets invited to state cowboy gathering

By Candace Baltz-Smylie
Times-News correspondent

TWIN FALLS — Twin Falls' David Butler will have a chance to make his dreams come true this weekend. The 17-year-old bluegrass musician, who spends much of his free time playing music on his front lawn on Fillmore Street, has been invited to perform at the Idaho State Cowboy Gathering in Nampa today, tomorrow and Sunday. He will join dozens of professional bluegrass and country musicians at the event. Butler was the only entertainer invited to all events. The other performers had to apply. Butler's luck started when he was featured April 12 on the front page of The Times-News. That story was picked up by The Associated Press and appeared in other papers around the region, including The Idaho

Idaho State Cowboy Gathering

- What: The 18th Annual Idaho State Cowboy Gathering will feature country and bluegrass musicians from around the U.S., including Twin Falls' David Butler.
- When: Today through Sunday
- Where: Nampa Civic Center, 311 Third St. S., Nampa
- Cost: $5 for day shows, $10 for evening shows. For tickets and an official schedule, contact the Nampa Civic Center at (208) 468-5500.

Statesman. That's where the event's organizer first found out about the bluegrass boy from Twin Falls. "I think we have a diamond in the rough," said organizer Rudy Gonzales. Gonzales calls himself "Idaho's official cowboy entertainer," having performed for past presidents and others around the world. "I want to do as much as I can for David. This is where his heart is, he wants to sing. Bluegrass didn't start in a studio with microphones and lots of equipment — It starts in the heart, and this is in his heart." Butler has overcome more than his share of challenges for both his music and his life. Butler has severe hearing problems that make it difficult for him to play music or sing in an enclosed space. He says playing outside is the only option he has for rehearsing. Not all of his neighbors are fond of his afternoon performances in front of his home, but Butler says he's worked out an arrangement.

Gooding might charge for programs

GOODING — In a few years, Gooding pupils might have to pay to participate in before- and after-school programs and extended kindergarten. Gooding School Board members heard the proposal Wednesday as they looked at alternative funding for the federal 21st Century Community Learning Center program. The grant-fund program is in its second year and brings in about $300,000 per year for the first three years, before decreasing in the fourth and fifth years, said Allison Westfall, a spokeswoman for the state Department of Education. The program could be in jeopardy when the money runs out, said Maryann Floyd, the program's outgoing director. Westfall said she led the district's negotiations coach. One proposal is to charge fees, such as $1 per day for the morning program, $2 per day for the afternoon program and $5 per day for extended kindergarten. Floyd said fees might hurt attendance in the long run, but they will support the program. Other plans include a scholarship fund for people who can't afford the programs. Member Kathleen Golocoech said the program could be taken over by the community after grants run out. "I think it really would be a prime location for a new Boys and Girls Club that could provide similar service," she said. "I think Nancy Folkert, the high school's science and physics teacher, to be a half-time coordinator for the program next year. In other business, the board reaffirmed its voluntary random drug testing program with minor grammar revisions. The district has had the policy since 2001.

Commissioners assess flood damage

By Renee Wells
For The Times-News

BURLEY — Cassia County Sheriff Jim Hignens presented a post-flood report to county commissioners this week, appraising them of the damage done by last week's rainfall. Hignens said the Declo home of Mike Nunnelee sustained the most damage, with the entire basement flooding and an estimated $20,000 to $25,000 in damages. Cassia County Assessor Marty Holland pointed out that those people who sustained significant damage to their homes could qualify for a one-time adjustment on the market value. Declarations must be turned into Holland's office no later than Wednesday. "It is due then, but I would recommend they come in and apply for the relief just as soon as possible," Holland said. "We will take the situations on a case-by-case basis and help if we can." Holland said homeowners can pick up relief applications either at his office in the driver's license bureau at 203 E. 15th St., or at the county commissioners' office in the basement of the county courthouse at 1459 Overland Ave. Hignens said about a dozen families were significantly affected by flooding. Most of the damage occurred in Albion and Declo. One Oakley home had to be sand-bagged to protect it from floodwaters from the Birch Creek feeder. Hignens said the creeks, although still running high, are mostly back in their channels now.

"I don't know what the decision will be about the culvert which crosses Marsh Creek at Declo High School," Hignens said. "Officials had to bring some pumps in to relieve the water pressure. Because the culvert couldn't handle the high runoff." Hignens said work crews from the Mike Cassia Criminal Justice Center will do some mitigation work on Marsh Creek near 950 E. and 150 S., where water flooded Nunnelee's home. "The main thing we want people to understand is that we live in a flood area," Hignens said. "The volunteers who came out to help during the flooding were unbelievable. You wouldn't find that in many other places, but we had many people helping and tremendous support throughout the county."

Bessie Wright

TWIN FALLS — On May 24, 2005, the Magic Valley lost a hard working, multi-faceted, talented Idaho author and pioneer. She just quit breathing at 2:30 p.m. with her son and daughter-in-law at her bedside.

After celebrating her 100th birthday (a lifetime goal) on May 23 with her family she waved and said "GOODBYE EVERYBODY" and died 11 and one-half hours later.

Bessie M. Wright, aka: Bessie Margaret Shrontz Roberts-Wright, was born on May 23, 1905, in Centralia, Kan., the daughter of Onbey and Sarah (Shrontz) Roberts.

She received her education at the following kindergartens in Centralia, Kan., and elementary in Oakley, Idaho. She then went to work for Western Union as a telephone operator in Rupert, Idaho. Studied millinery arts, Salt Lake City, Utah; landscape architecture, Hagerman Historical Society, Magic Valley Gem Club, Snake River Archaeological Society, Idaho State Archaeological Society and Friends of the Stricker Ranch.

Her other interests included flintknapping, scrapbooking, traveling, reading and writing history books.

Twelve years ago, when Mom was only 88, a man who looked to be in his mid-60's came up to me on the street and said, "I met your Mom last week. The Archaeology Society was exploring the clay caves.

She will be sorely missed by all those who had the privilege of knowing her.

Hale Jeffrey Wright

JEROME — Hale Jeffrey Wright, 42, our beloved husband, Daddy, Brother, Son, Friend, joined his heavenly Father on May 24, 2005, due to injuries received in a car accident.

Jeff was born Feb. 20, 1963, in Cortez, Colo., to William Jay Wright and Marjorie Anne Garwood Wright. He was a graduate of Fairman Valley High School in Almo, Nev., where he was involved in high school sports and was a member of the Rodeo Team. He served as the president of the State of Nevada Future Farmers of America, an opportunity he embraced.

After high school, he stayed at Brigham Young University, Jeff served a mission in Portland, Ore., for The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. Following his mission, he returned to BYU and then transferred to Utah State University in Logan, where he was a member of the Rodeo Team. In 1990 Jeff was married and sealed to his eternal companion, Julie Ann Reeves, in the Logan LDS Temple.

They moved to the Twin Meadows Cattle Ranch just north of Wells, Nev., where they resided until 1993. As a member of the Pro Rodeo Cowboys Association, Jeff qualified for the 1992 Wildcard Search Final in the Steer Wrestling Competition. In 1993 Jeff and Julie and new son, Chase, moved to Twin Falls, Idaho. During that year Jeff found employment with Superior Livestock Auction and in a period of just 12 years was awarded the "TOP REP" of the company six times. Jeff loved the world of cattle and the integrity that came with the job. He cherished his relationships with his fellow SLA representatives, upper management heads, secretaries, ranchers, sellers, buyers and truckers.

Jeff lived his life as if each day was a new adventure; a new goal to achieve, a new friend to make, a new prank to pull, a new way to make his wife smile. Things Jeff loved: Laughter, teasing, hard work, Julie, his kids, the road, traveling to exotic places, a nice hotel, a good steak, good friends, a sound horse, Rodeo, NCHRA, being the best and his Lord and Savior, Jesus Christ. Jeff was beloved by all who knew him. He was an adoring father and loving husband to Julie.

Study suggests aspen stands decline

The Wenatchee World

LEAVENWORTH, Wash. — In a tangle of snowberry brush, vine maple, and bitter cherry, and under a canopy of ancient towering aspens, Heather Kranz searched for clues to a disappearing species.

The 17-year-old amateur forester sleuth pushed through the thick underbrush, occasionally dropping to her knees to rustle through damp, mossy leaves layered inches thick on the ground.

But she couldn't find what she was looking for on a cool, overcast morning earlier this month. In this centuries-old stand of aspens clogged with dense brush and surrounded by mature conifers, Kranz could find no evidence of any new aspen trees sprouting in at least the last two decades.

"I'd say this stand is dying," she said resolutely. "There's no new growth. These trees are ancient."

"The days are numbered," said Mick Mueller, an ecologist for the Okanogan and Wenatchee national forests, as he examined the ground for signs of disease and decay.

Stands of white-barked aspens across the West are facing a similar fate. Decades of fire suppression have left the sensitive trees unable to compete in forests overcrowded with pine and fir trees and other species.

Historically, frequent, low-intensity fires burned away trees and brush and encouraged new growth in aspen populations, which sprout from a massive, fire-resistant root system, Mueller said. The tree is known for its distinctive bark and fluttering leaves and valued as prime elk, deer and bird habitat.

Without fire or other disturbance, the massive, interconnected root systems that link entire stands of aspens pull their energy into the larger trees, which emit a hormone that suppresses new sprouts. Those trees, which have little tolerance for competition, are slowly being overrun by conifers and shrubs. The root systems, which can live and produce trees for thousands of years, are shrinking.

The majority of aspen stands on the Okanogan and Wenatchee forests are now believed to be less than two acres in size.

Until recently, land managers

have paid little attention to the tree species. But a study by forest pathologist Jim Hadfield of the Pacific Northwest Forestry Sciences Lab in Wenatchee brought the aspen situation to light last year, when he found that nearly half the aspen stands in the two forests are in a state of decline, and the majority are so small that they are in danger of disappearing.

A few champions of the trees, like Hadfield and Mueller, are determined not to let that happen.

That's how Kranz and other advanced biology students at Cascade High School ended up surveying aspen stands in the Wenatchee River spring district for class credit this spring.

Armed with GPS unit, measuring stick, tape measure and a clipboard, Kranz and classmates Julianna Simon, 17, and Lauren Martin, 18, spent about four hours studying two aspen stands. They counted trees, recorded the width and overall condition of a sample of them, marked down any evidence of disease or animal damage, and made an educated guess on the number of trees per acre.

One of the stands covering about two acres had a handful of large conifers blocking the sun. The students found just one new aspen sprouting.

From there, the students walked up a ravine in search of their second survey area. What they found was a strangled stand of aging aspens choked by thick brush and fallen trees. Massive aspens scarred by bear claws towered overhead, stealing most of the nutrients from any potential new sprouts.

The youngest tree Simon and Martin could find was about 20 years old.

"If I don't do anything here, they will eventually all be gone," said Mueller, who visited the site with the students.

The two aspen stands are among 30 that students are surveying this spring for the U.S. Forest Service. The agency has little historical data to use for comparison. But the stands are thought to have been significantly bigger in years past, some measuring several hundred acres in size, according to Hadfield's study.

Of the 105 stands surveyed in the two forests, nearly 60 percent measured two acres or less, and many had fewer than five live trees. Less than half the stands had active sprouting, and a quarter of the trees surveyed were dead. Many of the mature trees were infected with a decay fungus.

According to the study, aspen stands are thought to be declining across the Interior West, largely due to fire suppression, encroachment by conifer trees, and overgrowing by wild and domestic animals.

The most active new growth in the two local forests was found in the Chelan and Entiat ranger districts, in areas burned by wildlife in recent years. Prescribed burns and thinning are considered to be the best option for treating aspen stands, Mueller said. But land managers face an uphill battle.

"There is no commercial value for the trees; there's no market for the wood," Mueller said. "The work doesn't pay for itself. So we have to look elsewhere for funding opportunities to do it."

He said elk preservation groups offer some money, but there's little money within the Forest Service for aspen studies or restoration work. Some of the work now being done is "boot-legged" onto other forest restoration projects by forest workers who care about the trees' survival, Hadfield said.

"There are little pockets of aspen chaparrals out there who have taken the tree under their wing," he said. "Without that help, it will continue to be a slow, ongoing decline for this species."

Air Force releases new corps values statement

DENVER (AP) — The Air Force has sent a new statement of corps values warning commanders against using their positions to advance their religious beliefs after criticism of religious intolerance at the Air Force Academy.

From an Air Force perspective, one of the reasons we did that is because we are taking what is happening at the Air Force Academy seriously," Air Force spokeswoman Jennifer Stephens said.

A task force under the leadership of Lt. Gen. Roger Brady spent several days at the academy two weeks ago looking into allegations that Jews and others who are not born again Christians were harassed by evangelical Christians.

The statement, a copy of which was obtained by The Associated Press, was sent to all major commands on Tuesday.

"Climate surveys at our Air Force Academy have pointed out instances where respect may be lacking or where declaring one's religious beliefs may be perceived as imposing on others. Commanders must be alert to the issue of religious respect throughout our Air Force," the introduction said. It was signed by Gen. John P.umper, Air Force chief of staff.

"I think that speaks for the fact that they are beginning to recognize that they have a problem and that it isn't just at the academy and there needs to be some clarity," said Capt. McLinda Morton, an Air Force Academy chaplain who says she was fired for criticizing the power of evangelicals at the academy.

Brady's report will be released later. In the meantime, the Air Force asked the Department of Defense's inspector general to look into whether Morton was demoted as executive officer in the chaplaincy and ordered transferred to Okinawa for her viewpoints.

Missing children's blood was not found in home

COEUR D'ALENE (AP) — Preliminary DNA analysis of a home where three bodies were found showed no traces of the blood of two missing children, raising hopes that Dylan and Shasta Greene are still alive, the Kootenai County sheriff's office said Thursday.

Only the blood of the three murder victims — a missing child's mother, older brother and the mother's boyfriend — was found at the scene, according to initial analysis by the FBI.

There is no indication that any of the blood is from the children, Sheriff's Capt. Ben Wolfinger said. "It boisters our feeling the children are alive and we'll recover them and bring them home."

"We are not looking for bodies," he added.

Dylan, 9, and Shasta, 8, have been missing since the three bodies were discovered in the rural home on May 16. Investigators believe the children were in the house as the victims were bound and bludgeoned, and may have been abducted by the killers.

Officers on Thursday also began searching a nearby garbage dump looking for evidence, Wolfinger said. That search will cover about a half-acre of land and is expected to take five to 10 days, he said.

Lawyer attacks accuser's credibility

SPOKANE, Wash. (AP) — A lawyer for embattled Mayor James West on Thursday attacked the credibility of a man who contends he was molested repeatedly by West as a youth.

Robert Gallher is lying when he says "West visited him in prison in 2003 and told him to stop making the allegations, and that should cast doubt on Gallher's other claims, lawyer Carl Oreskovich said.

"There is a lack of credibility with respect to Mr. Gallher," Oreskovich said.

West also plans a news conference some time next week to answer allegations of sexual abuse and misuse of his office made by several men, Oreskovich said. The allegations, first reported by The Spokesman-Review newspaper, have brought numerous demands for West to resign.

"We ask the public to give the mayor the opportunity to investigate and come forward with his side of the story and not rush to judgment against him," Oreskovich said.

The newspaper has reported that a second man has also accused West of sexually abusing him as a child during the same era as Gallher's claims.

West has repeatedly denied the abuse allegations, calling them "flat lies." The statute of limitations has expired on the molestation claims.

West, a 55-year-old Republican former state legislator and opponent of gay rights bills, revealed earlier this month that he was a closeted homosexual after the newspaper published damaging allegations.

West is the subject of separate investigations by the Justice Department and the city into reports that he misused his office in recent years by offering jobs to young men he met in a gay chat room. The newspaper conducted a sting operation on a Gaycom chat room to confirm that West was making the offers.

West denied the accusations but acknowledged that he visited gay chat rooms and had relations with adult males.

The newspaper on Thursday published transcripts of a deposition Gallher, 36, of Seattle, gave in his lawsuit against Spokane County in which he contends West abused him in the late 1970s and early 1980s when the mayor was a Spokane County sheriff's deputy.

The transcript was released by Terry Lackie, a private attorney defending Spokane County, after the newspaper filed a request under the state's Open Records Act.

Gallher alleged in the document that he was sexually abused by West at least four times between the ages of 8 and 12, and that West and sheriff's Deputy David Hahn gave him alcohol and marijuana. Gallher is suing the county for making the sheriff's office was negligent in hiring, supervising and retaining Hahn. West is not named in the lawsuit, Gallher said, because the plaintiffs are afraid of the mayor.

Idaho asks FAA to keep Boise control tower open

BOISE (AP) — The Federal Aviation Administration's plan to close Boise's air traffic control tower for five hours overnight could mean a loss of control at risk, delay mail and freight and cause other economic losses, Idaho's congressional delegation warns.

U.S. Sens. Larry Craig and Mike Crapo and U.S. Reps. Mike Simpson and C.L. "Butch" Otter sent a letter to FAA Administrator Marion Blakey this week asking her not to close the tower between midnight and 5 a.m.

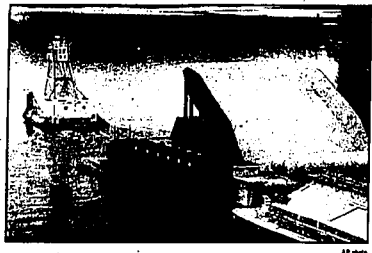

"Our proposal would force the pilots to land at an airport while controlled offsite from another location with imperfect knowledge of ground conditions in Boise," the four Republican delegates wrote.

"The risk associated with this is unacceptable."

Boise is one of 41 airports listed earlier this year for possible early morning closure, but FAA spokesman Greg Martin said a final decision has not been made. All airports on the list are considered low-activity airports, with four or fewer landings per hour during the early morning.

The list reflects an initial cut, but by no means should be interpreted that a tower will infact close in the middle of the night," Martin said. There's an intention that air traffic control is exclusively done by a man in a tower when in fact it's one small component."

There are 183 airports in the United States that do not have an air traffic control tower, and at some of those sites pilots are directed by offsite controllers using a mid-range radar system known as Terminal Radar Approach Control, or TRACON.

This March 31, 2003, photo released by the U.S. Corps of Engineers, shows a removable spillway being barged to the Lower Granite Dam on the Snake River. The Bush administration's newest plan for operating the Columbia Basin hydroelectric dam system without paying salmon closer to extinction violates the Endangered Species Act, a federal judge ruled Thursday.

Judge: Bush hydro plan violates endangered act

GRANTS PASS, Ore. (AP) — A federal judge Thursday rejected the Bush administration's $6 billion plan to improve the Columbia Basin hydroelectric dam system, saying it violated the Endangered Species Act by failing to protect threatened and endangered salmon.

Noting that federal law puts salmon "on an equal footing with power production," U.S. District Judge James Redden in Portland ruled in favor of a challenge by environmentalists. Indian tribes and fishermen to a NOAA Fisheries plan for balancing dams against salmon.

The plan — called a biological opinion — contended that $6 billion in improvements to the dams on the Columbia and Snake rivers and other measures would eliminate threats to the future survival of threatened and endangered salmon.

Redden rejected the underlying principle of the NOAA plan — that the dams are part of the ecosystem. Accepting that assumption would make the government responsible only for the small percentage of mortality to salmon from changes in dam operations, not for the greater damages from the dams themselves.

Salmon are often killed or injured as they pass through the dams while swimming out to sea and returning to spawn.

NOAA Fisheries spokesman Brian Gorman said the agency was still going over the ruling, though he assumed it meant they would have to redo the biological opinion.

"Respective of what happens with the biological opinion or the judge's decision about what to do with a permanent injunction, we will continue to work with the region and focus on recovery of salmon," Gorman said.

Environmentalists hailed Redden's decision as a major victory in their long-running battle with the Bush administration.

Flood debris at hatchery forces release of salmon

LEWISTON (AP) — Nez Perce Tribe fisheries managers prematurely released hundreds of thousands of juvenile Chinook salmon into the Clearwater River in north central Idaho after debris from flash floods clogged a hatchery filtration system and put the young fish in peril.

"We got them out into the river and gave them a better chance," said David Johnson, director of the tribe's fisheries program.

A series of spring flash floods deposited debris in the fresh water intake of the tribal hatchery at Cherylane east of Lewiston and prevented fresh water from circulating in holding ponds.

Workers recently released 400,000 juvenile spring-run Chinook and 900,000 juvenile fall-run Chinook into the river to avoid suffocating them.

The fall-run fish were scheduled to be released into the Clearwater from the hatchery in early June, so Johnson anticipated they have a good chance of survival. But the spring-run Chinook were not scheduled for release until July into the Selway River upstream from the Clearwater.

"The really early releases, I would say, are going to have the hardest time," he said.

Meanwhile, hundreds of thousands of hatchery raised fall-run juvenile Chinook were released Tuesday and Wednesday into the Grand Ronde River in Oregon and Washington under an agreement between the Nez Perce and Umatilla Indian tribes and the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service.

Fisheries managers hopes the juvenile fish will swim to the ocean and one day return to spawn in the Grand Ronde, reestablishing a salmon run that was depleted by the construction of dams downstream on the Snake River.

Utah attorney general tries to wrest UEP Trust from polygamist church

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — The Utah Attorney General's office on Thursday asked a court to freeze the assets of a southern Utah polygamist church's trust fund and replace its top leaders — including restrictive prophet Warren Jeffs — with an independent third party.

The state is seeking the immediate suspension of Jeffs' authority, along with that of five other trustees over the trust fund for the Fundamentalist Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. The trust, called the United Effort Plan, controls church property and assets.

The trust fund has been estimated to be as much as $100 million but no one knows for sure, Utah Attorney General Mark Shurtleff said Thursday.

Church members formed the trust during the 1940s, willingly turning over their property to the church, so they all could share in the community's assets.

A hearing on the state's request was scheduled Friday morning.

Shurtleff said the move is necessary because there is evidence that trustees have recently moved to divest some trust assets and are not acting in the best interests of all church members.

"In stepping in today, we are protecting members of the FLDS church," Shurtleff told The Associated Press. "We think it's very clear, and we think the court will see, that (Jeffs) has breached his fiduciary duties."

Man working for his ex-wife should get payment up front

DEAR ABBY: My wife and I are in the security business. My ex-wife is considering hiring us to provide security at her upcoming wedding because of some potential threats.

The problem is that my ex-wife and I have had some heated differences over the last five years. While our communication has improved greatly, there are still differences regarding our child that remain unresolved. I don't want to let our personal conflicts get in the way of her happiness.

The only other concern I have about my ex is being paid for our services, as I have been burned by her in the past. Would it be wrong to require payment and a signed contract prior to her wedding?

— FEELING INSECURE ABOUT SECURITY
IN OREGON

DEAR FEELING INSECURE: Not at all. But why you would want to do business with a customer you neither like nor trust is beyond me. If there's the slightest doubt that you will be fully compensated for your services, get written proof that you were hired rather than invited as a guest — and a hefty "security" deposit up front.

DEAR ABBY: Is it OK for an advised not to participate in the saying of "grace" before a meal while dining with those who do? I ask because I am a non-believer and, frankly, I'm uncomfortable participating in prayer.

On the other hand, I respect other people's beliefs, and I don't want to offend anyone. Your thoughts on this would be greatly appreciated.

— NON-BELIEVER
IN NEW JERSEY

DEAR NON-BELIEVER: If you do not wish to say grace, bow your head respectfully while your companions do, and say "Amen" when they are finished. There is no rule of etiquette that demands you say the prayer.

DEAR ABBY: Growing up in a Chinese family, high expectations have always been placed on me, especially since I am the oldest son. I have always been categorized as "gifted," so the academic expectations have been doubled where I'm concerned. I expect to attend an American college, and my par-

Three months ago, I started dating a girl. I really do love her, but at the same time, I don't want to compromise my grades and disappoint my parents. I'm starting to see the effects this girl is having on my grades, and my parents have also noticed the drop. I haven't told them about her and have been seeing her secretly.

Should I tell my parents and ask for their advice — which may mean an abrupt end to my relationship with the girl? Or should I try harder with my grades and continue the relationship at the same time? Is she worth the effort? This has been on my mind for two weeks. Please advise me.

— TORN IN TAIWAN

DEAR TORN: You appear to be intelligent and responsible. Although this girl is special to you, there is a lot at stake. Sneaking behind your parents' backs is neither a way to inspire confidence nor to show your maturity.

Please level with them. You should all on the same team, and they will be more flexible than you think.

However, if they're not, then your education must come first. Your preparation for college won't last forever, and if you have something special with this girl, you can always pursue it later.

HOROSCOPE
Jeraldine Saunders

IF MAY 27 IS YOUR BIRTHDAY: The great planetary teacher, Saturn, is running neck and neck with your part of the zodiac for a few weeks so plan on being an apt pupil. School is out for summer and you will find that those lessons will serve you well especially in September when you may be called upon to stand on your own two feet. From November through January you could be offered many chances to upgrade your future by way of the generous actions of others who have noticed and appreciated your efforts.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): People are in a hurry and apt to push your buttons. Watch out for flare-ups of unnecessary defensiveness. Your own attempts to outfox the hounds might cause you to run in tight circles.

Taurus (April 20-May 20): It is a good day to maintain a low profile and keep a firm grip on your wallet. Subtle cross-currents could be at work behind the scenes, so don't jump headlong into any new project.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Under these stars it is easy to spend too much time thinking up ways to avoid taking the blame. Verbal fencing can cause wounds, so keep a leash on your temper and a gag on your tongue.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): It is probably best to ignore temporary hostilities and not add fuel to any fires that flare up. With a bit of luck you can coast through the day, especially if you use common sense as the rule.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): What goes around comes around. If you attempt to hold others to unattainably high standards you will be required to maintain the same level of perfection. Sidestep contracts and agreements.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): A brief period of conflict and tension could spoil your composure. You might meet up with a crafty or deceitful individual today so steer clear of anything that doesn't ring quite true.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Verbal warfare could erupt without notice or some other unpleasantness could put people in a foul mood for a few hours today. Avoid arguments and keep your nose to the grindstone.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21):

Ignore taunts and sidestep confrontations. The cosmic conditions are not favorable for making major moves with either money or love. Be like a turtle and duck for cover if trouble erupts.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Don't push your furious luck today. Others could be rushed and lack finesse about getting their way. Brighter days are just around the corner if you will wait out today's tensions.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Proceed to be totally oblivious of attempts to control you and tense situations will settle down quickly. What seems shrewd under today's stars could seem mean-spirited and petty tomorrow.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): You may be a rebel without a cause and lose support if you clash with others under these stars. This isn't the time to make radical pronouncements or offend those who sign your paycheck.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Don't accept tempting challenges or dares, or let the local bully get your goat. You may need to tiptoe around sensitive issues to avoid a fight. Use delecting tactics to avoid being pinned down.

Schools put $6M into journalism education

NEW YORK (AP) — Five universities announced a three-year, $6 million effort Thursday to elevate the status of journalism education and better integrate it into the college setting.

The initiative is being supported by grants from the Carnegie Corp. of New York, which is pledging $2.4 million for the first two years, and the Knight Foundation, which is pledging $1.7 million for the first two years. The universities will pay for the effort in its third year, assuming that benchmarks for success have been met.

The five institutions taking part are the Graduate School of Journalism at Columbia University, the Graduate School of Journalism at the University of California, Berkeley; the Medill School of Journalism at Northwestern University; the Annenberg School for Communications at the University of Southern California; and the Joan Shorenstein Center on the Press, Politics and Public Policy at Harvard University.

"This is an explosively creative time to be in journalism if you are not in search of the past," said Harding Carter, president of the Knight Foundation. "These five institutions are proving this by doing something they've never done before: agreeing to work collaboratively on a major project for the greater benefit of all journalism educators."

The initiative has three components: integrating schools of journalism more deeply into the life of the university by drawing on scholars from other departments; national reporting projects that students in all five programs will work on; and a media policy task force at the Shorenstein Center that will conduct research and provide a platform for educators to speak on policy and journalism education issues.

"Journalism is too important to this nation and our democracy to have the schools that educate its future leaders be anything but central to the universities in which they reside," said Vartan Gregorian, president of Carnegie Corp.

Plane crashes in Congo

KINSHASA, Congo (AP) — A Boeing-737 passenger plane missing and feared dead after a plane crashed in eastern Congo, an aviation official said Thursday. The plane, which disappeared shortly after takeoff Wednesday, was found Thursday by a government-led search team flying near Bunyakali, a village located in dense forests and mountains, said Raymond Sangara, coordinator of Congo's civil aviation authority.

The missing Antonov-12 had crashed into the side of a cliff, with pieces of the plane and clothing scattered in the valley below, said Sangara, who was aboard the search plane.

Sangara had earlier said that authorities feared all had died, but a search for any survivors and the recovery of the dead would begin Friday.

Bunyakali is about 60 miles southwest of Goma in rugged, mountainous terrain that will pose a challenge to search and rescue teams, he said.

Sangara earlier said the downed aircraft was found late Wednesday by U.N. helicopters at a different location, but U.N. officials later denied that. Sangara said the confusion stemmed from a misunderstanding among U.N. and Congolese officials.

All 21 passengers aboard were Congolese traders, including women and children, said Sangara. The pilot was Russian and the four crew members were Ukrainian, he said.

The plane had lost contact with the radio tower three minutes after leaving the eastern town of Goma. It was bound for Kinshasa, some 240 miles to the southwest.

Many rickety aircraft, often castoffs from old Soviet-bloc nations, are used in Congo, a vast central African nation the size of Western Europe.

Few passable roads traverse Congo after decades of war and corrupt rule, forcing the country's deeply impoverished people to rely on often-unsafe boats and planes.

Earlier this month, an Antonov-26 clipped a treetop during its landing approach and crashed in central Congo, killing 13 of its 14 people.

In December 2003, an Antonov-26 plowed into a crowded market at the end of a runway in a northern town, killing 33 in the plane and on the ground.

Two Chechens arrested in Van Gogh slaying

AMSTERDAM, Netherlands (AP) — Authorities have arrested two Chechen citizens in France and the Netherlands in connection with the November slaying of Dutch filmmaker Theo Van Gogh, prosecutors said Thursday.

One of the suspects was arrested May 18 in Tours, France, and was identified under Dutch privacy rules only as Hisslan 1-25, prosecution spokesman Rob Meulenbroek said. The second suspect, identified as Namsi, 22, was arrested April 19 in Amsterdam.

Both are believed to have ties to a group of Islamic fundamentalists which prosecutors dubbed the Hofstad network, Meulenbroek said.

A 27-year-old Dutchman, Mohammed Bouyeri, is awaiting trial on a charge of murdering Van Gogh and belonging to the Hofstad network.

Bouyeri was shot and stabbed in an Amsterdam street Nov. 2.

The filmmaker was an outspoken critic of the treatment of women under Islam and that was the subject of his last film "Submission."

Suspected IRA dissident charged with murder in 1998 car bombing

BELFAST, Northern Ireland (AP) — Prosecutors charged a suspected Irish Republican Army dissident with 29 counts of murder Thursday as relatives of those killed in Northern Ireland's single deadliest terror attack choked back tears.

Sean Gerard Hoey, a 35-year-old electrician, stood impassively as a court clerk read the names of all 29 people killed by a car bomb in the town of Omagh on Aug. 15, 1998.

He was the first person to be charged with murder in the case.

Relatives of the victims gathered in the public gallery and outside, some wet-eyed, others with their arms around one another.

"I was dreading to hear Alden's name," said Michael Gallagher whose 21-year-old son, an apprentice mechanic in his father's garage, died in the blast.

"I'm glad this day is here because we need justice to be done — but it's hard to face," said Godfrey Wilson, whose 15-year-old daughter Lorraine also was killed. He said every time he attended a bomb-related court case or press conference, "I'm opening up wounds in my own heart and soul."

Fossil Days will usher in area's outdoor festival season

The Times-News

HAGERMAN — In the Magic Valley, summer arrives here first. At 2,959 feet elevation, balmy conditions are never that far removed from this riverside town of 700 souls. So for the past 17 Memorial Day weekends, it's fallen to Hagerman to usher in south-central Idaho's summer festival season.

Hagerman Fossil Days start tonight with a wine-tasting and live music in City Park, but the highlight of the weekend is the traditional parade, which starts at the south end of town — the intersection of State Street and Hagerman Avenue — at 11 a.m. on Saturday. It runs north on State to Valley Road, east on Valley Road to Third Avenue, south on Third to North Street, east on North Street to Fourth Avenue, south on Fourth to South Street, west on South Street to State, and south on State to Hagerman Avenue. The event attracts most of the 3,000 to 4,000 visitors who come here for Fossil Days.

There will be live music in the park all afternoon and evening Saturday, beginning with a concert by the Old-Time Fiddlers at 1:30 p.m. and the Twin Falls Central Orchestra at 2.

The annual kids' fish scramble — for children 12 and under — is scheduled for 3 p.m. Saturday at the park. A big shallow pool is stocked with trout from local hatcheries and children, separated into age groups, wade in and try to catch fish with their hands.

Meanwhile, at Billingsley Creek State Park north of town there's a hole-in-one golf contest slated for 1 p.m. and a tractor pull at 2.

On Sunday morning, an interdenominational Christian church service begins at 9, followed by live entertainment until 2 p.m. and kids' stick-horse

Juan and the beanstalk: Local author reimagines fairy tales

By Steve Crump
 Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — It's a marvelously simple premise: What if you transplanted Mother Goose and the Brothers Grimm into another culture?

Pat Marcantonio's friend Bonnie Dodge wondered about that last week: "How about Hispanic fairy tales?"

For Marcantonio, 51, the Times-News community editor, the idea was inspired — and inspiring.

"The idea really struck me and I ran with it," she said. "When I write fiction, I usually always write about Latinos, actors and culture. So, this was a perfect fit and lots of fun to write."

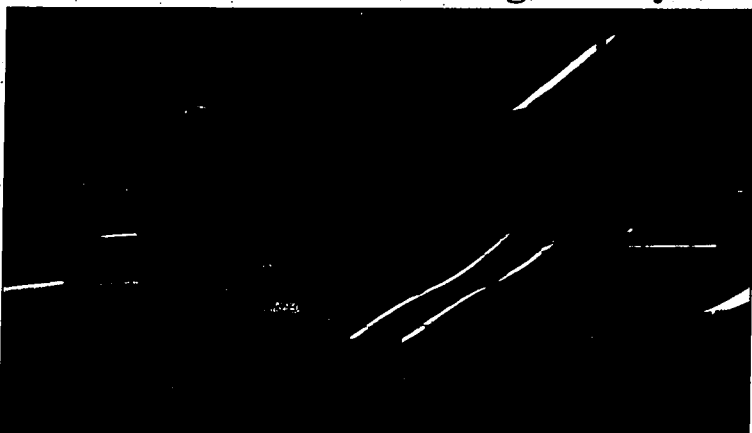

The result is "Red Ridin' in the Hood and Other Cuentos," a collection of familiar children's stories in a whole different context. It's just been published by Farrar, Straus and Glouxx.

There's the title story in which Roja, who lives in a big-city barrio, is told by her mother to take a basket of goodies to her ailing grandmother. Warned to avoid Forrest Street, Roja disobeys and runs into Lobo, a wolf in a thumping Chevy low-rider.

Then there's "Sleeping Beauty," as told by the witch who cast the spell. Miffed at not being invited to Rosa's birthday, she invokes her famous curse on girl, who's rescued by machete-wielding Pepe hacking his way through a forest of cactus.

"I took the traditional and old stories and rethought them," Marcantonio said. "I asked myself, what are these stories really about? For example to me, Hansel and Gretel is about the resiliency of children in hard times. I also drew on my childhood growing up as a Mexican-American in Colorado and I did lots of research."

The settings changed from the enchanted castles and forests of northern Europe to the cities and fields of Mexico and the American Southwest. "Beauty and the Beast" became "Belleza y La Bestia," in which the heroine is a hero of the Mexican revolution, Orpheus and Eurydice are reimagined as Azteca, and Orpheus becomes the feather-maker Nochehuatl.

Local writer Pat Marcantonio has reason to be happy. Her first published book, a children's book titled "Red Ridin' in the Hood and other Cuentos" was released this month.

"Interestingly, I found that the old fairy tales and myths, no matter where they came from, had a universal message that is easily translated into any culture or language," she said. "That's why they've been around so long."

But how does a writer in small-town Idaho go about selling a collection of Latino fairy tales?

"I was fortunate to have found an agent who believed in the book and who did the selling to publishing houses," Marcantonio said. "Before the agent, I sent the manuscript to publishers that accepted non-solicited manuscripts. I got lots of rejections."

It took her two years to find a book deal. "This was my first short story collection," she said. "I was so blessed that such a respected publisher, Farrar, Straus and Glouxx, accepted it."

WEEKEND

Adam Sandler takes the snaps in 'The Longest Yard'

New to the valley

'Downfall'

Benno Gans stars as Adolf Hitler in this fascinating but increasingly tedious reenactment of the final days, and paranoid ramblings, of the Nazi leader. As Der Fuhrer's inner circle assembles in a Berlin bunker, the Red Army approaches, and accusations, cut-throat sacrifice, and furive looks for a exit ensue. A 2005 foreign-language Oscar nominee. R (violence, nudity, profanity, adult themes)

'The Longest Yard'

Adam Sandler takes the snaps in this remake of the 1974 prison movie in which the inmates take on the guards in a football game. Original star Barret Reid plays the coach, and Chris Rock co-stars. Directed by Peter Segal. PG-13 for crude and sexual humor, violence, language and drug references.

'Madagascar'

A lion, a zebra, a giraffe and a hippo raised in captivity in a New York zoo find themselves shipwrecked on an exotic island in this computer-animated adventure. Ben Stiller, Chris Rock, Jada Pinkett Smith and David Schwimmer lend their voices. Directed by Eric Darnell ('Anz') and Tom McGrath. PG for mild language, crude humor and some thematic elements.

'Millions'

British director Danny Boyle's fantastical tale of two brothers and the large sack of cash literally dropped onto them from the sky. Anthony and Damian Cantamano, whose initial response to their unexpected fortune is a Robin Hood-esque spree of charity, have only one week to spend their 265,000 British pounds before their nation switches over to the Euro. With Alex Etel and Lewis McGibbon. PG.

'Sisterhood of the Traveling Pants'

Based on Ann Brashers' best-selling novel about four teenage friends facing a summer in which they will all be separated for the first time. On a shopping trip, the girls find a pair of thrift-shop jeans that fits each of them perfectly and they decide to use these "magic" jeans as a way of staying in touch over the months ahead, each girl wearing the jeans for a week to see what luck they bring her before sending them on to the next. PG.

Continuing

'Crash'

A raw, edgy study of intersecting lives in Los Angeles, and about the fear and paranoia on the underside of the American "melting pot." Boasting coarse racial epithets and frank depictions of ethnic prejudices, this large ensemble drama will have people talking, and arguing, for a long time. R (violence, profanity, adult themes)

'Gunner Palace'

A you-are-there documentary shot in Iraq in 2003 and early 2004, when the 2/3 Field Artillery — dubbed the "Gunners" — were based in the bombed-out mansion that belonged to Saddam Hussein's son. Neither "pro" nor "anti" war, it's a clear-eyed portrait of young American soldiers carrying out their mission on the Baghdad streets, committed to being there — and hoping to get out alive. PG-13 (profanity, violence, adult themes)

'HitCh'

Just what the date doctor ordered. This irresistible comedy stars Will Smith as the dating strategist in need of his own playbook when around the heart-stealing Eva Mendes. Ellenorin Levin James is Smith's star pupil, and supermodel Amber Valletta is the babe he loves. Directed by Andy Tennant. PG-13 (mild profanity, sexual references)

'The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy'

Faithful to Doug Adams' bestselling 1979 sci-fi parody tome, this long-anticipated adaptation doesn't feel terribly original, nor terribly funny, either. The humor ranges from trippy silliness to icy cleverness to comic conjecture about dolphins as a winning joke regarding towels. PG (adult themes, gross space aliens)

'House of Wax'

In this potent and gruesome slasher film, a group of kids, including Elisha Cuthbert, Chad Michael Murray and Paris Hilton, are menaced by a maniac who likes to laminate his victims in wax. R (gore, profanity, sexual situations)

'The Interpreter'

A handsome-looking muddle of misdirection and murky intrigue from veteran filmmaker Sydney Pollack, about a U.N. translator (Nicole Kidman) who learns of an assassination plot and a Secret Service agent (Sean Penn) who doesn't know whether to believe her or not. Catherine Keener, miscast, co-stars. PG-13 (violence, profanity, adult themes)

'Kicking and Screaming'

A movie about pee-wee-league sports and all those overbearing parents on the sidelines. "Kicking & Screaming" is yet another low-budget, high-concept vehicle for Will Ferrell to say and do dumb stuff, throw hissy-fits, get punched in the face, and find redemption (as both a dad and a son). PG (thematic elements, language and some crude humor)

'Kingdom of Heaven'

Cross and crescent clash when Christians and Muslims struggle for the soul of Jerusalem in Ridley Scott's ambitious, anachronistic saga starring Orlando Bloom as an agnostic Crusader circa 1186. With Jeremy Irons, Liam Neeson and Eva Green. R (extreme battle violence)

'Monster-in-Law'

Jennifer Lopez and Jane Fonda star as Bridezilla meets Godzilla in a comedy so ironic that even Dracula wouldn't bite. With Michael Vartan. PG-13 (profanity, adult situations)

'The Pacifier'

This endearing comedy allows Vin Diesel to remain an action hero while giving him the chance to expand his range as a Navy SEAL, assigned to protect the five children of a freshly assassinated scientist. Diesel, director Adam Shankman and writers Thomas Lennon and Robert Ben Garant understand that when a strong man discovers his gentle side he can be truly touching — but a lot of humor and adventure also happen along the way. With Lauren Graham, Faith Ford, Brittany Snow and Max Thieriot. (1-35) PG for action violence, language and rude humor.

'Robots'

"Ice Age" director Chris Wedel, with co-director Carlos Saldaña, delivers a completely mechanical universe populated entirely by 'bots, including an idealistic inventor (voiced by Ewan McGregor) out to change the world. Halle Berry, Greg Kinnear and Mel Brooks also lend their voices. PG for some brief language and suggestive humor.

'Sahara'

Spectacularly silly action/adventure starring Matthew McConaughey, Steve Zahn and Penelope Cruz that plays like "Raiders of the Lost Lshtr." Based on the Clive Cusler novel. PG-13 (violence, profanity)

'Star Wars III: Revenge of the Sith'

The last of the three prequels explains how Anakin Skywalker becomes Darth Vader, but falls to explain how George Lucas gets away with the darkest dialogue in the universe. Hayden Christensen can't carry the weight of the Anakin role. Ewan McGregor tries to put some pep in Obi-Wan. Natalie Portman looks lovely and the galaxy of fiery planets, neo-Decco cityscapes and awesome flying ships is rendered with state-of-the-art precision. It's long, and then it's done. May divorce be with you. PG-13 (violence, darkness)

'XXX: State of the Union'

Ice Cube stars as a deep-cover agent in this dumbfoundingly awful action sequel. A turkey this big usually comes with giblets. PG-13 (profanity, violence)

'Area 51:' A stroll into a black hole with intense images

By Ron Harris
The Associated Press

If the Area 51 does exist somewhere in the bowels of the Nevada desert, let's hope the U.S. government can keep a tighter lid on things than they did in Midway Games latest title, "Area 51," a cavernous military complex bristling with mutants and alien life forms. But any game that makes you hit pause to wipe nervous rivulets of sweat from your wrist is a winner. This is good first-person shooter fun. I'm not high on the FPS genre — even the best of them tend to rapidly devolve into a slinky, dizzying mix of too-dark rooms and missions that require more memorization than smooth gaming savvy. But I'm also a sucker for a plot with an alien agenda, and that's where this title excels. "Area 51" taps into the fear that if we are ever visited by little green men, they may not be as benevolent as we'd hoped. Instead of bringing a cure for cancer, what if they just want to gnaw on my head? The game revolves around an alien race of so-called Grays that has been studying humans for thousands of years, only to have the poor fortune crash-land at Roswell, N.M., in 1947. The military snatches up a wounded Gray nicknamed Edgar and sequesters him away at Area 51 for study. Mx in the secret Illuminati organization and some military viral weapons research gone bad and you've got a shooter game that holds its own. "X-Files" TV series veteran David Duchovny provides the voice of lead character Ethan Cole, who is sent into Area 51 to clean up the viral outbreak. It's nice to hear Duchovny's familiar voice and see him back the team through the missions. "If we don't stay focused we'll become part of the body count," Cole warns his buddies. A sense of dread permeates each level as mutants jump out from the corners and down from holes in the ceiling, slashing away at me and wielding rifles of their own. I played the Playstation 2 version of the game, and the graphics were a bit too dark at times. I had to adjust the contrast and brightness on my TV to compensate for this sad reality that affects most FPS games. Game designers know dark places are scary, but I'd can't see where I'm going I have a hard time staying interested. A series of missions took me deeper into Area 51. At one point I had to pick up a dead security guard's severed arm to enter a room that required his hand print for access. This was a neat twist, but it literally took me more than two hours of guesswork to figure out that I had to run over to the other side of the room and put my own hand on a second sensor panel to unlock the door.

I don't need someone to hold my hand at every turn, but those two hours of my life I'll never get back because the game gave no intuitive clues toward the goal of that sequence. As the levels progressed, some of my team had their heads ripped off or met other disturbing endings. That left me to plod forward, often alone, through corridors and air shafts looking for the truth. While they were fleshing out the story line, Midway might have explained how aliens smart enough to travel the universe waging interstellar wars had trouble negotiating a simple section of airspace above New Mexico. Maybe they run into one of the government's weather balloons. This M-rated title costs $50 and is available for Playstation 2, Xbox and PC.

"And everyone in my family loves to tell stories. My father and mother told us Mexican witch and ghost stories. "However, when I was growing up there were not a lot of Hispanic characters in those stories. I didn't love them any less."

1996 as an editor. She and her husband, Jerry, an accountant, have two grown daughters, Marguerite and Gabrielle. "I am most grateful to my family," she said. "I couldn't have completed this without their love and support. I also want to compliment the people at Farrar, Straus and Giroux. They were fantastic to work with, helpful, understanding and sensitive, and they really know their stuff. I couldn't have a better experience."

After Farrar, Straus and Giroux bought the story, it brought Brazilian illustrator Renao Alarcao into the project. He did nearly 50 illustrations for the book. "When the publishers sent me some of his early illustrations for the book, I cried," Marcantonio said. "They were so great and perfectly captured the heart of the stories, some of which were funny and some that were sad. It is a strange and beautiful feeling to see your words brought to life." Marcantonio is in her second stint with the Times-News, where she worked as a reporter from 1982 through 1988. After six years as a reporter and assignment editor at KMYT-TV and two years as executive editor of the weekly Northside News, Gooding County Leader and Lincoln County Journal, she returned to the Times-News in

FRENCH OPEN

U.S. men bid adieu

Andy Roddick stams the ball to Argentina's Jose Acasuso during their second-round match of the French Open tennis tournament, at the Roland Garros stadium, Thursday in Paris.

The Associated Press

PARIS — First, the trainer massaged Andy Roddick's left calf, then the right one in the fifth set at the end of a sweating day at the French Open that brought cramps to players and henstroke to fans.

Roddick's problem, though, was in his head, not his legs. He didn't know whether to come in or stay back, so he too often found himself in no man's land, passing shots whizzing by him on both sides.

He painted himself into a corner, running around backhands and leaving the right side of the court wide open. After a string 'start that put him ahead two sets to none, he got into long rallies with Jose Acasuso, only to fall one ball short when the Argentine went for broke with big backhands that caught the corners and lines.

On the final point, after blowing a 3-1 lead in the fifth set and getting broken a second time, Roddick fell victim to a final touch of tennis sprain that did him in. He launched two lazy backhand moon balls and watched Acasuso whack the second for a winner into an open court to close out a 3-6, 4-6, 6-4, 6-3, 8-6 victory in three hours, 21 minutes.

"I was doing a near perfect job of finding times to come in," Roddick said. "But to his credit, he hit a couple off of his shoelaces late in the final set. I definitely still wanted to force the issue a little bit. But it's tougher out here."

It was the end of another year

Argentina's Jose Acasuso returns the ball to Andy Roddick during their second-round match of the French Open tennis tournament at the Roland Garros stadium, Thursday in Paris. Acasuso won 3-6, 4-6, 6-4, 6-3, 8-6.

of gloom in Paris for Roddick and the nine-man American contingent.

The last American man standing, and the highest-seeded player of either sex to fall in the first week, the No. 2 Roddick lost in the second round for the second year in a row. He lost in the first round twice before that. His best showing here was his first in 2001, when he reached the third round.

"I hate it," Roddick said of his record at the French. "I mean, it's terrible. That pretty much sums it up. I want to do well here so badly."

"I was about as prepared as I've ever been coming in here. Obviously I know, coming in, it's going to be the most challenging surface for my game. It takes away a lot of my strengths and plays into a lot of other guys' strengths."

Roddick's main strength is his serve, but even in that department he was out-aced by Acasuso, 20 to 13.

Acasuso, ranked No. 62, said Roddick congratulated him and wished him good luck in his next match.

"He really knew how to lose," Acasuso said.

Marsh, Irwin, Floyd high on Senior PGA leaderboard

The Associated Press

Golf

LIGONIER, Pa. — If Graham Marsh, Hale Irwin and Raymond Floyd keep this up, maybe they'll have to rename it the Senior Citizens PGA Championship.

Marsh and Floyd, both in their 60s, are the defending champion who has only one week left in his 50s, upstaged the younger and supposedly stronger members of golf's 50-and-up club Thursday during the first round of the Senior PGA Championship.

Among those in a large group two shots back were the 62-year-old Floyd, who hasn't won a tournament in five years; Curtis Strange, playing in his first Senior major after having little success on the Champions Tour, so far, and Texas club pro Perry Arrhur.

Successfully navigating the classic, old-style Laurel Valley Golf Club course, Marsh, Irwin and Floyd again showed that there's new life in an age group once thought to be long past its prime, even among the seniors.

Irwin's 69 was his 18th Senior PGA round in the 60s, breaking the record he previously shared with Sam Snead. Doing so put him in prime contention for an eighth major championship on the Champions Tour, as many as Jack Nicklaus — even though Irwin turns 60 on June 3.

"I was not aware of that (Nicklaus milestone)," Irwin said.

Leonard's 8-under 62 stands for two-strokes lead
MEMPHIS, Tenn. — Justin Leonard took advantage of his early tee time, snatching an 8-under 62 in unusually calm conditions at TPC at Southwind to make a two-stroke lead after the opening round of the St. Jude Classic.

In the fourth group of the morning, Leonard shot his best round since a 61 in the final round at Colonial in 2003, where he finished second.

He birdied his first three holes, six of the opening nine, Please see PG.1, Page D2

Defending PGA Champion Hale Irwin finishes his round Thursday at the 66th Senior PGA Championship with a birdie on the eighteenth hole. Irwin finished the day with a three-under-par 69.

District V rodeo finals start today

The Times-News

GOODING — There's time enough for one more weekend of roping and riding in the Magic Valley, as the Gooding County Fairgrounds host the District V high school rodeo finals Friday and Saturday.

Everyone will have their eyes on qualifying for the June 20-25 state finals in Pocatello, and hopefully the National High School Finals Rodeo in Gillette, Wyo., July 18-24.

Among the long list of state hopefuls are a number of returning state and national qualifiers. Gooding senior Cady Mae Coates has been one of the area's top competitors in goat tying, barrel racing, and pole bending over the last two years, while Jerome's Jena Bubak has been especially strong in the roping events. With Gooding's Katie Garcia, Shoshone's Kallie Axelson and Halley Harris, along with Fairfield's Kortnee Huines in the mix, the race for state berths and the all-around cowgirl title will continue to be heated.

On the cowboys side, Jerome's Cody Luper and Gooding's Cooper Prew have battled closely to become the area's top bareback rider, while Wendell's Marcos Noriega has consistently placed well in the bull riding competition. Saddle bronc has been wide open, with the bucking broncs getting the best of the cowboys on a number of nights.

Standout ropers Rob Webb of Wendell and Ted Walker of King Hill will continue to battle it out in the calf roping event. The two also form one of the area's best team roping combos. Hagerman's Misty and Kyle Vader are top-flight steer ropers, and will challenge in other events.

Action is slated to start at 7 p.m. Friday, Saturday's action will start at 6 p.m. Contestants ranked 11th and below competing. The top 10 placers in each event will begin competitors' awards at 6 p.m. Gooding's Top six placers in each event will qualify for state. Monday's edition of The Times-News will include full results and a photo of the weekend's action.

Coaches vote will be public

The Associated Press

California coach Jeff Tedford got what he wanted: From now on, balloting in the final regional-season coaches poll will be open to the general public.

Grant Teaff, executive director of the American Football Coaches Association, said Tedford's request would be for the game. The change comes after a public outcry last season, when the Golden Bears lost a shot at a BCS bowl game in the Series game, in part because they got dropped in the final coaches poll.

Ted and Pac-10 commissioner Tom Hansen have said voting should be made public. Tedford was on vacation Thursday and unavailable for comment.

"Though most coaches didn't want to release the votes, because of the scrutiny it would bring, Teaff said they decided to vote for the change to quell any 'uncollegiate controversy.'"

"Our coaches were under no obligation to do this," said Teaff, a former coach at Baylor. "The good news is that somebody out there thinks that transparency is good for the system, and our coaches said, 'OK we hear you and we're going to join in and do our part.'"

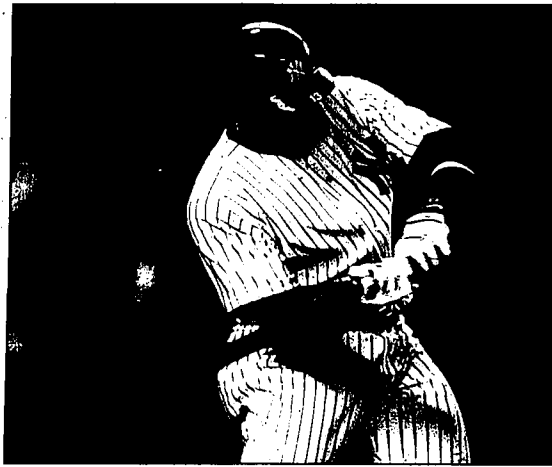

Teaff added there are no circumstances in which the group would allow their own voting to be made public. The coaches poll helps determine the teams that will play in the BCS championship game. "The in-season polls are just a barometer," Teaff said. "The final poll that determines the two teams that play in the national championship seems to be the one everyone wants to know about."

Kevin Welberg, the Big 12 Conference commissioner and BCS coordinator, has said voting by coaches has taken on greater importance since The Associated Press asked to have its poll removed from the formula used to determine BCS matchups.

NEW YORK (AP) — Three weeks ago, when the New York Yankees took the eighth game under 500 and climbed to the bottom of the American League East than they were to the top, Boston manager Terry Francona took note of what he said.

"To be honest with you," the manager of the defending world champions said, "I wanted them to lose as much as we could because you know they are going to get hot, but I guess I wanted the hole to be bigger.

But New York didn't concern itself with the rest of the league. The Yankees went on a 10-game winning streak and staged a rapid recovery. Meanwhile, the Red Sox began to stagger.

Rice hints that 2005 will be his last

By Frank Schwab
DENVER, Colo. — Denver Broncos receiver Jerry Rice said the season will probably be his last before he retires from the NFL.

The future Hall-of-Famer had to be prodded that answer because he knew that such a proclamation might cause a stir.

He's not asking for Rod Smith's jersey No.88, which would have caused a small controversy. Denver Rice is not making any predictions for this season, just that he wants to hit the big pay day.

The chances of Rice being a forgotten man are slim. His first practice with the Broncos will be Wednesday at their team camp.

"I'm going to be as low key as possible," Rice said. "Rice will turn 42-years old in October. The Broncos will find out in training camp if he can still play and what role he'll have on the team."

"I really don't want to be a big story," Rice said, while a crowd of reporters crowded around him at the Broncos' headquarters listened to his teleconference.

Kansas' Hall of Fame bid on the way to Charlotte

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Arimid much fanfare, the Kansas City bid for the National Association of Broadcasters (NAB) Hall of Fame was loaded in a yellow roadrunner truck Thursday at Kansas Speedway, bound for NASCAR's offices in Charlotte, N.C.

The bids are due Tuesday, and once NASCAR officials review the proposals, the field will be reduced to a group of finalists. That list will not be made until after NASCAR has had time to inspect the finalists' sites.

and the facility would be atop that bluff, and you would be able to see it from some distance at the intersection of two great highways with about 34 million vehicles a year passing that intersection," said Marcuse, who added that the Hall of Fame's economic impact on the area will be between $50 million and $65 million.

The facility is original, the interior design is completely all original, Marcuse said. The building, which was designed by HOK Sport + Venue + Event of Kansas City.

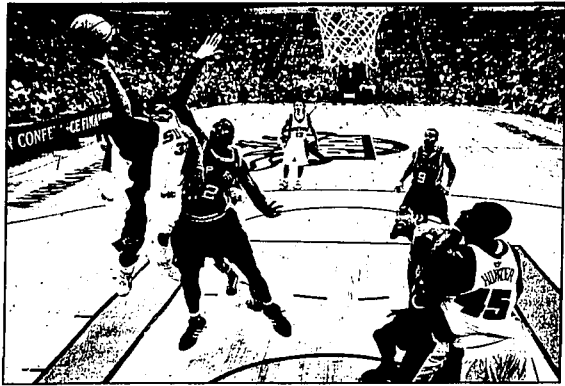

NASCAR hopes to choose the Hall of Fame location by the end of the year and open the facility by 2008.

The Kansas City site would be at the corner of I-70 and Interstate 49, next to the Chateau Avonlea, said Bob Marcuse, president and CEO of the Kansas City Area Development Council.

Always a threat to win the pole, the 27-year-old did it again, shattering the track record at Lowe's Motor Speedway on Thursday last week with a lap of 1:52.9883 nips to take the top spot for the Coca-Cola 600.

PHOENIX (AP) — Wearing a mask to protect his fractured left eye socket, Phoenix Suns guard Steve Johnson went through a full practice on Thursday and said he expects to play in Game 3 of the Western Conference Finals against San Antonio.

He still has a lot to do. I don't think there's anything that could keep me off the court," Johnson said. "I don't want to go back to the hospital. I don't want to go back to the hospital. I don't want to go back to the hospital."

Johnson's return would be a welcome lift for a Suns team that goes to San Antonio down 0-2 in the best-of-seven series.

send Jim Jackson to the bench, giving the depth-sty squad a much-needed scorer in reserve. The 6-foot-7 Johnson, meanwhile, is the Suns' best perimeter defender and most accurate 3-point shooter. He also gives the team another scorer who can develop his own shot off the dribble when the offense breaks down.

"We got back to the team that had the best record in the league," coach Mike D'Antoni said. "We're pretty happy about that. We know the hole we're in and how tough it's going to be, but we're also a very confident team. We think we can go back there and give it our best shot."

There would be a dominant effort if Johnson's return, D'Antoni said, including the opportunity to give Steve Nash longer breaks. Nash played 46 minutes in Game 2 on Tuesday night.

"It's going to change a lot," San Antonio's Robert Horry said. "I guess that's more depth. He can also run point, which gives Steve a little more time to rest. That's going to be key."

The left side of Johnson's left eye is still blood red, but he said his vision is fine. He also is getting comfortable wearing the mask.

"I think it will be a challenge but I don't think it's going to bother me none," Johnson said. "The sweat just dripping down my face other than that, I think I'll be great."

Johnson said his most immediate impact should be on defense, where he will usually guard the Spurs' point man Tony Parker.

"I just want to make it tough on him," Johnson said. "He hurt us by getting in the lane and shooting those floaters. By putting a bigger person on him, maybe he won't get so many easy shots."

D'Antoni said the doctors have told him that, as long as he's wearing the mask, Johnson's risk of injuring the eye socket is no greater than it was before he was hurt.

To test the mask's strength, Suns trainer Aaron Nelson slapped Johnson in the head a few times. "I didn't really appreciate that either," Johnson said. "He hit me a few times. Don't bring that up because it kind of goes to me."

CART champion Juan Pablo Montoya to the Brickyard and the Colombian dominated on the way to victory. A year later, it was the powerful team of Roger Penske that challenged the regulars, finishing 1-2 with Helio Castroneves and two-time CART champion Gil de Ferran.

The next year, Penske moved his team to the IRL and won again with Castroneves, but it was a controversial victory over CART star Paul Tracy, driving for Barr's Green team.

Now, most of the teams that dominated are all IRL regulars. That leaves Newman/Haas, co-owned by Chicago businessman Carl Haas and actor/philanthropist Paul Newman, as the major open-wheel team not in the newer league.

Asked if he feels he's representing Champ Car, Junqueira, who has been a regular in the fourth row Sunday, grinned and shook his head.

"I think I'm here representing Newman/Haas and (sponsor) Centrix," he said. "Newman/Haas wants very badly to win here because they have not won, but I feel pretty relaxed and I have no pressure."

Bourdais, who qualified in the fifth row and will start directly behind his teammate, is the reigning champion of the Champ Car series, but he is a rookie at Indy.

The 26-year-old racer from France said he does feel he is representing Champ Car to some extent.

"Obviously, everybody in Champ Car is saying, 'Represent us the best you can,' and we can't say we're regulars of the Champ Car, but we could raise the same banner, just going racing and forget about this controversy and just be out there."

"I'm just so sick of it, hearing Champ Car and IRL and all of that. It doesn't make any sense. We're looking for the same kind of racing. It's just so sad for the moment."

Bourdais, who started the Champ Car season with a win in Long Beach, Calif., said the cars have much the same feel, although the IRL cars have normally aspirated engines and the Champ Car have turbo-charged engines.

"It feels very much the same. I just wish we had 45 cars out there and we could just be racing series," he said. "In the race, though, it makes no difference. You race the other cars and they win. I just want to see the checked flag."

Tony Kanaan, the defending IRL champion, Sunday's pole-sitter and another Champ Car regular, said it really doesn't matter what series a driver represents at Indy.

"It's not like there is still a split, but the only thing that really counts here is that the fastest 33 drivers start the race and the one that does the best job wins," Kanaan said. "If Bruno or Sebastien wins on Sunday, they deserve it and I will congratulate them."

Larry Brown might leave Detroit, and there's a medical reason why

AUBURN HILLS, Mich. (AP) — An unexpected setback seems to envelop the Detroit Pistons, the expectation that Larry Brown won't be around next season.

The broad outline of an exit strategy is already in place for the coach, the future day-to-day developments sketched out in pencil.

Indications point to another of Brown's many departures, with doctors' orders already the designated culprit.

Only this time, it's serious. What's different now is that Brown is sicker than the public knows, and the public wouldn't be so quick to believe he is feverishly plotting another vagabondish train-hop if it knew the whole story.

55 years later, U.S. victory still resonates

CHICAGO (AP) — The English played on with the trademark cool and intensity that had made them one of the U.S.'s best soccer players.

They didn't have much experience playing together as a team. Though five of the starters were from St. Louis, the Americans didn't have regular, extended training camps like the national squad does today. There weren't a series of warm-up games.

Before they left for Brazil, the Americans played a Turkish team and an English "B" team and just finished a tour of Canada.

They lost both games. "I think our team was probably playing better people gave us credit for," Bahr said. "I think a lot of us felt if we could go down there and keep the game close, we could hold our heads up."

The United States played well in its first game in Brazil, leading Spain until the last 10 minutes before falling 3-1. Next up was mighty England, which had beaten Chile in its opener.

"We knew we weren't in the same class as the English team," Bahr said. "But anybody would their self when they go out onto the field, they always think there's some possibility that something can happen, that they could steal a victory."

Keough wasn't as certain. "England, in my own thoughts, was way up high and we were down a little lower," he said. "Anybody if they beat me, they had to really work hard to beat me. But I didn't entertain any thoughts that we were going to beat them."

The game was played in Belo Horizonte, a mining town about 350 miles north of Rio de Janeiro, and England was in control much of the day.

But in the 37th minute, Bahr collected a throw-in from Ed McCarty and took a shot from about 25 yards. The ball was heading for the far post and England goalkeeper Bert Williams was already moving to his right when Joe Gaetjens deflected it with a diving header, sending the ball into the opposite side of the goal.

"I thought, 'These guys are sleeping until now.' And they weren't sleeping. They were counting us. We were chasing them. Most of the time, I thought, 'My thought was ... 'They're really going to come down on us hard.'" can accept that," Brown said Wednesday after the issue of his future flared up again.

The latest dustup came after it was reported that Cleveland coach Bill Gilbert had asked for the Pistons' permission to speak to Brown about possibly becoming the Cavaliers' team president. Brown said he has never met Gilbert and has no knowledge of ever speaking to him (Brown noted that Gilbert was once a Pistons' season-ticket holder, and he may have met him before Gilbert purchased the Cavs).

Other teams have also made it known to Brown that they'd be interested in bringing him aboard in a front office position, but whether any of those teams have received permission to speak to Brown's representatives is not clear.

Brown insists he has been up front about everything with Dumas, and he understands Dumas' need to have a Plan B ready in case Brown's medical condition forces him to give up coaching.

"My goal is to do the best job I can here, and then hopefully be a coach, because that's what I do. If I can't, then I'll deal with that," Brown said.

"This is my last coaching job," he said. "The only place I'm going to coach next season, or ever, is Detroit, I think, in terms of next."

The easiest way out for the Pistons and Brown would be a mutual parting of the ways. It could be until August before Brown knows whether his recovery — if he recovers — will allow him to return to the sidelines.

Brown said it would be unfair to make the Pistons wait on him, and he also knows there are quite a few unemployed coaching candidates out there.

Phil Jackson and Flip Saunders head the list — who needs to know exactly which jobs are going to be open before they decide where they'll go.

The New York Knicks and Los Angeles Lakers are believed to be the leading candidates to hire Jackson, who won nine NBA titles — one shy of Red Auerbach's record — while coaching the Chicago Bulls and Lakers. The Sacramento Kings and Portland Trail Blazers also reportedly have interest.

Brown has said he expects to make a decision on his future by early to mid-June, and that timetable could be affected if the Pistons are eliminated by the Heat.

The Heat's victory in Game 2 has ensured that the series will last at least until June 2.

England vs. USA

They had a roster of stars, too, including Bill Wright, Tom Finney and Stanley Mortensen.

The Americans, on the other hand, weren't even considered for the World Cup. They were players, sure. Walter Bahr played professionally for 25 years, and John Clarke Souza and World Cup all-star team selected by Brazil's top sports newspaper. Several players were on the 1948 Olympic team.

TWIN FALLS — Like the saying goes: "Don't get mad, get even."
And who hasn't wished that sometime they could — especially this time of year — as you're cruising down the road only to approach a long line of slow-moving vehicles pulling campers and boats on a stretch of road where it is impossible to pass for miles.
At the Magic Valley Speedway this Saturday night, any thoughts of removing the slower traffic in front of you will be played out on the track where getting even is not only legal, but encouraged.
With large cars pulling campers, boats and utility trailers filled with as much junk as possible, the drivers are let loose on the speedway to hit, bump or run through anything that may get in their way.

one of the drivers who still finds the opportunity to display these unique driving skills hard to resist.
Larson has entered in the event every year since the first night of destruction hit the track eight seasons ago. Larson explains that like any camping outing, the key is in the packing. "You have to set it up in the trailer so that it strategically comes out on the track," Larson said. "However, you have to be selective of how you hit people so you don't take yourself out of the race."

The winner is the one whose car is still running with the trailer still attached, along with a vote from the fans.
In the past, Larson has collected a variety of old furniture, appliances, bikes and whatever else he can stuff into a trailer.

Not willing to give up all his professional "trailer" racing strategies this year however, Larson said that he'll have something new in store this time.
Promoter Steve York explains that picking up all the trailer trash from the track is a chore.
"It usually takes about 100 man-hours to clean up the track with the help of Cat Rental and our crew," he said. "But the trailer races seem to continue to be a fan favorite."
The Pony Stock class will feature a battle for the division leader as Kevin Larson and Jason Whitford are tied in points going into Saturday's race. Hoping not to be confused with the trailer races, the Premier Series, Grand National and Thunder Stocks are also scheduled to compete. Green flag falls at 7:05 p.m.

Trying to get back on top, Jarrett tries sixth crew chief

By Jenna Fryer
Associated Press writer

CONCORD, N.C. — The relationship between Dale Jarrett and Todd Parrott clicked from the moment Parrott climbed on top of the pit box. Working their first race together, the duo blitzed to victory in the 1995 Daytona 500.
They went on to win 26 races, including another Daytona 500 title at the 1999 NASCAR championship.
"It was magic and it started on day one," said Parrott, who spent almost seven seasons as Jarrett's crew chief. "It's really rare when a driver and a crew chief click like that."
So rare that Jarrett has been on a constant search to find it again: He's changed crew chiefs seven times since Parrott left at the end of 2002. His most recent switch came last week, when Mike Ford quit 11 races into his second season as crew chief of the No. 88 Ford.
Billy Wilburn now is running the show, but crew owner Robert Yates has given him an interim tag. That's only fitting for a team that has had a revolving door for crew chiefs since Parrott's departure.
Ford's tenure was the longest after Parrott. The shortest was Jimmy Hinkle, who lasted just six races into the 2002 season. Parrott came back to finish that year, then stepped aside so his brother, Brad, could be crew chief in 2003.
Brad Parrott helped Jarrett to win their second race together, but that didn't help his job security — he was gone six races later.
Since then, the combination of Garth Filley and Dale Jarrett should come as no surprise: Jarrett has an 81-race winless streak dating back to his 2003 Rockingham victory.
Asked if he was struggling to find the same chemistry he had with Todd Parrott, Jarrett didn't hesitate in answering.
"You could say that, yeah, we haven't had a lot of success," Jarrett said. "Todd and I had a lot of success and maybe we haven't hit on the person that has been compatible with everything that we have at Robert Yates Racing." Things seemed to be going well on the outside with Ford, who spent two seasons as crew chief for Bill Elliott before Elliott retired. Although Jarrett got off to a shaky start last season, he rebounded and contended for a spot in the Chase for the Championship all the way up until the cutoff race.

He missed the cut and finished 15th in the standings with 14 top-10 finishes.
Then he opened this year by winning the pole for the Daytona 500. He climbed as high as seventh in the point standings in April, but faded the past two races and headers into Sunday's Coca-Cola 600 ranked 14th.
And Jarrett just has to look across the Yates Racing shop at teammate Elliott Sadler, who won two races last season and made the Chase for the Championship. Sadler is currently fourth in the standings and coming off a second-place finish in last weekend's All-Star race.
And guess who runs Sadler's totally opposite directions," Jarrett said. "Elliott and his team, Todd Parrott and those guys were headed to the North Pole and we were headed to the South Pole. That's how far we were getting away and that's not a good scenario."

Some might say the quick fix would be to move Todd Parrott back to Jarrett's team for a third time. But Parrott said that wouldn't be the ideal solution.
"I feel badly for Dale. I really do," Parrott said. "I owe so much of my career to him. But why would we tear down what we have built? I really do. I really do."
There are whispers in the garage that the problem is Jarrett, that he's difficult to work with or, at all, has lost his edge.
So now Wilburn will be the latest crew chief to give it a go. He's got experience with veteran drivers — he spent several seasons with Rusty Wallace — and goes into this job knowing exactly what is expected of him.

Stocks boosted by solid economic growth report Trade

NEW YORK (AP) — Stocks rose on Thursday as encouraging signs of economic growth eased investors' fears of a business slowdown.

The economy grew by 3.5 percent in the first quarter of the year — up from a 3.1 percent estimate for the month and just slightly less than the 3.6 percent economists had expected. Investors welcomed the report as a sign that the economy was still expanding and inflation risks had lessened.

The news also helped minimize the impact of this week's rise in oil prices, given that energy costs had not dampened first-quarter GDP to a great degree. A barrel of light crude settled at $51.01, up 5 cents, on the New York Mercantile Exchange.

"Oil's going to be slipping and sliding around, but the fact remains it fell nearly $10 from its highs," said Bryan Piskorski, market analyst at Wachovia Securities. "It's impacting a little caution into the market, but otherwise the GDP number didn't make any waves, kind of in line with what we expected, and we're getting a bounce off it."

The Dow Jones Industrial average rose 79.80, or 0.76 percent, to 10,537.50, its best close since March 15.

Broader stock indicators also moved higher. The Standard & Poor's 500 index was up 7.61, or 0.64 percent, to 1,197.62, its highest close since March 15. The Nasdaq composite index gained 21.12, or 1.03 percent, to 2,071.24, its highest level since March 8.

Bonds edged higher after the previous session's sell-off. The yield on the 10-year Treasury note fell to 4.08 percent from 4.09 percent late Wednesday.

The dollar rose to a new 2005 high against the euro as pessimism over the new European constitution weighed on the 12-currency currency, and the dollar rose against most other currencies as well. Gold prices fell.

Analysts said the GDP report could keep the market from suffering another slump, as it did in April. The Dow nearly fell through 10,000. The number may have achieved a balance between economic growth and inflation that makes it likely the Federal Reserve will continue with its plan to raise interest rates gradually.

"The economy turning in good news, inflation is moderate — that's a very favorable economic backdrop for the financial markets," said Richard Rippe, chief economist for the Prudential Equity Group. "The Fed isn't quite finished raising rates, but there's nothing in these numbers that say they should get more aggressive in that process."

In corporate news, embattled Dow component General Motors said it would raise its price to $31.95 after a media report said the company was considering a spinoff or sale of its residential mortgage unit.

Economy continues to grow well despite slip in March

WASHINGTON (AP) — The pothole the economy hit in March apparently wasn't very deep. Economic activity advanced at a solid 3.5 percent in the first quarter of the year, somewhat better than initially thought.

The latest reading on gross domestic product, released by the Commerce Department, shows that the economy grew by 3.5 percent in the first quarter, slightly better than the 3.1 percent annual growth rate first estimated for the January-March quarter. That pace, which had been the slowest in two years, had drawn concerns about the nation's economic strength.

The upward revision shows that those concerns were somewhat exaggerated, said Bryan Renscher, chief economist at American Capital Management. "The soft patch appears to have been slow and fleeting," he said. "The higher estimate mostly reflected a slight improvement in the nation's trade deficit, which was less of a drag than previously thought. More risk spending on housing also helped.

goods and services produced within the United States. While the 3.5 percent rate was better than the initial estimate, it was still down from the 3.8 percent of the final quarter of 2004. High energy prices cramped spending by consumers and businesses in the first quarter.

"However other economic data, including brick retail sales, solid orders for big-ticket manufactured goods, starting new home sales and a pickup in hiring, suggest that the economy snapped out of its funk in April. In a separate report Thursday, the Labor Department said new claims for unemployment in survive rose by 1,000 to 323,000 last week. The level of claims still points to an improving job market, analysts said.

In April, employers added 274,000 new jobs, up from 146,000 in March. Economists expect payrolls are expanding by a respectable 175,000 in May. The report also showed that the unemployment rate rose to 5.1 percent, up from 4.9 percent in March. The unemployment rate rose to 5.1 percent, up from 4.9 percent in March.

Continued from D6 salaries will go to subsidize families abroad through money transfers known as remittances. They warn that the agreement with the U.S. could hurt Latin America and lead to a profusion of yet more low-wage jobs, which would in turn fuel inflation.

There is no debating the pivotal role that U.S. Latinos play in the economies of NAFTA countries. The small fortunes weekly remittances sent to families in those countries total roughly $10 billion annually, outstripping U.S. direct foreign investment and foreign aid, according to the Inter-American Development Bank, and making Latinos the greatest financial stakeholders in those countries.

Just last week, U.S. Commerce Secretary Carlos M. Guterres addressed the NAFTA Heights to lobby for the agreement. The week before, Dominican President Leonel Fernandez addressed a largely the same Latino business leaders. But NAFTA opponents, including the city's largest Latino group, the Inter-American Local 1199, greeted Fernandez with protests.

Guterres's visit, however, fell under the radar, and he ate lunch peacefully to the beat of a drum, but he was not alone. Guterres's visit was part of a larger effort to address the concerns of Latino workers in the apparel industry, and that workforce is heavily Hispanic.

Tolson said that the apparel industry makes up 23.7 percent of the U.S. textile and apparel workforce. "It limits me from saving," he said.

free-trade mantra after trade supporters in Washington convinced them of its potential for economic liberation. The Rev. Juan Carlos Rivera, a pastor based president of the National Coalition of Latino Clergy and Christian Leaders, preaches that the country's economic success is based on Spanish-language evangelical radio stations and dispatches e-mails to pastors across the country. This week he carried the NAFTA message to 3,000 evangelical pastors at a religious summit in the Dominican Republic.

"It will create jobs, and most of our Latino members are factory workers in low-to middle-income jobs," Rivera said before traveling to the island. He said that if industries in Central America need raw materials, U.S. groups will provide them.

But Alan Tonelson, a fellow at the U.S. Business and Industry Council Educational Foundation, says that reports that NAFTA companies, such as the Caribbean Basin Initiative, the precursor to NAFTA, failed to a large loss of jobs.

"The most prominent victims will be the U.S. workforce in the apparel industry, and that workforce is heavily Hispanic," Tonelson said. "The apparel industry makes up 23.7 percent of the U.S. textile and apparel workforce."

Samayoa, a custodian on Long Island, predicts that under NAFTA people are going to want to leave or "you're going to have to start sending money and send more." He says the reluctance to leave is due to the fact that the government is not sending money to the family. "I can't go by a house because I have to send monthly payments," said Samayoa, who sends $300 a month to his family. "It limits me from saving."

Mazda's latest rates a high five

By Dan Neil
Los Angeles Times

Mazda has resurrected, and perfected, the Saab 900 five-door.

As late as 1999, the Swedish carmaker offered a mid-size four-door hatchback (aka "five-door") that set Saab lovers' shakras aflutter. I went to a Saab owners convention in the mid-1990s — where there were more gray ponytails than in a herd of Appaloosas — and was regaled with tales of cargo-swallowing achievements: how this guy got a roll-top desk home in his Saab, and how that guy remodeled his kitchen without ever resorting to the crassness of a pickup truck.

I have yet to get the smell of patchouli out of my clothes. Some essential self-reliance went out of the brand when Saab discontinued its hatchbacks (the 900 and 9000 series had them), though it wasn't simply that the overlord back in Detroit (GM) were insensitive.

In the United States, the five-door models didn't appeal much beyond the brand's core constituency — think Howard Dean's constituency, only with money.

That was then. Half a decade later, hatchback and wagon variants are popping up like rain forest mushrooms as carmakers rush to provide flexible alternatives to suddenly so-last-summer SUVs. The Mazda6 comes as a sedan, a five-door hatchback and a wagon.

Oh, and, I can think of only one other nameplate that hangs more bodywork over the same chassis — the Ford Focus, which can be had as a three-door, a four-door, a five-door and a wagon.

Maybe it's time for the Saab hatch to make a triumphant return? The case for the Mazda6 five-door — as opposed to the sedan or the wagon — is easily made. For one thing, it's the coolest looking of the three. The fast-glass canopy and the more graceful curvature of the rear roof pillar pull the body lines rearward with more dispatch, lending the hatchback a leaner, sleeker profile; an altogether omerly-looking spoiler is standard. It seems to me all recent Mazda cars look like they are going downhill, even while sitting on level ground.

The Mazda6 five-door is a case study in the evocative power of cheap plastic. Standard equipment on the car includes body-colored side-sill plates and sport bumpers front and rear, for a slightly slammed, ground-effects look, as well as body-colored grille-door handles and mirrors.

Unlike a lot of aftermarket bolt-ons that can make cars look like they got dressed in the dark, these handsome factory pieces complement the car very, um, dope-ly. Our test model, a sport edi-

24-valve V6 (220 hp) in the s Sport. The five-door comes with the five-speed manual as standard. A six-speed automatic is available with the V6.

The five-door is fairly well decked, equipment-wise: 17-inch alloy wheels with performance rubber; halogen fog lights; eight-way power adjustable driver seat; leather steering wheel, shifter and emergency brake; automatic dual climate control; and dual front and rear side air bags and air curtains.

Option packages include the mean roar/audio package that stuffs in a 200-watt Bose system with six-disc in-dash changer, and the leather package, which includes heated front seats.

Unlike most overachievers, this car is instantly likable — tasteful and well drawn, comfortable and capable. Even so, you would not compare it to its competition, such as the Honda Accord or the Nissan Altima, and conclude it's made of sterner stuff.

Actually, the Mazda has the vaguest inharmonicity to it, a quality amplified when the car encounters less-than-perfect pavement. The wishbones and multi-links sports suspension is harder than day-old baguettes, and it feels even a bit zingy on L.A.'s concrete quilt work.

With the 3.0-liter V6 and five-speed manual transmission in "Blazing Copper Metallic" (the exact color of copper gasket sealant, by the way) smoldered in the driveway.

Meanwhile, the five-door saps cargo with a big lid. The rear cargo hold, with seats up, measures 22 cubic feet, about 7 version. With the 60/40 split rear seats folded flat, the cargo hold expands to a Saab-like 58 cubic feet, only a couple feet shy of the capacity of the wagon.

A little housekeeping: Two engines are available in the Mazda6 range — a 2.3-liter, 16-valve inline four (155 hp) in the i Sport model and a 3.0-liter,

It's not until you bend into an off-ramp that the setup pays off as the car shoulders into the amber and noses around.

With an easy agility and composure at the limit of the tires' adhesion, the front-wheel-drive Mazda6 is a fun car to drive hard, but you do need to dig your spurs in. Like other Mazda motors, the V6 puts out most of its power and torque in flight-of-the-bumblebee range.

With variable-valve timing and all kinds of cybernetic engine controls, this high-revving nature is purely a matter of choice for Mazda's powertrain engineers, an aesthetic choice they see as part of brand character. At least they have a fixed idea of what that is.

If you really torment this 3,336-pound car, you can get it to 60 mph in 7 seconds, with a gritty, luggerly serrated note from the chrome exhaust tips as accompaniment. Just coincidentally, the old Saab 900 five-door was a tad soft at low revs too.

I can't say I endorse the faux titanium finish on the consoles, though.

This scratche material picks up scratches pretty quickly, and the test car had a noticeably worn area around one of the climate controls.

Slowly but surely, I grew enamored of the Mazda6 five-door, with its balance of performance and practicality worthy of the Ikea loading zone.

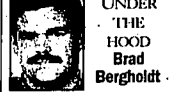

Mazda's in-house tuning operation, Mazdaspeed, will soon stick a boost rocket in the 6 sedan's bonzo, creating a 274-hp, all-wheel-drive sedan to rival cars such as Audi's S4 and Subaru's WRX STI.

Why not hotrod the five-door? I need to get back from Ikea before the meatballs get cold.

Emissions problems can be expensive

Q: My car just failed its smog test for excessive NOx, and after paying $214 for repairs, it finally passed. I trust my mechanic to always do the right thing for me but wanted to know a little more about what NOx is and why the repairs were needed. He was really busy the day I picked up the car and I didn't want to be a pest.

—Paul Ferro, Danville, Calif.

UNDER THE HOOD
Brad Bergholdt

A Great question, Paul. NOx is a common nickname for oxides of nitrogen, which is one of three offensive exhaust gases checked during many emission inspection programs. NOx consists of chemical compounds of nitrogen emitted by the engine during combustion and increases sharply when combustion chamber temperatures exceed 2,500 degrees.

NOx is highly toxic, and when combined in the presence of sunlight with hydrocarbons, another type of emission gas, creates ozone, a key element of smog. Ozone injures vegetation, causes headaches and breathing problems, and lowers one's immunity to diseases. NOx production is greatest during moderate engine loads, and testing requires the use of a dynamometer, a vehicle treadmill.

Modern vehicles strive to reduce NOx before and after combustion. Before-combustion treatment consists of accurate air-fuel ratio management and ignition timing, which are controlled by the ECM, or power-train control module. Many vehicles also utilize an EGR (exhaust gas recirculation) valve, which admits a small quantity of exhaust gas back through the engine a second time, diluting the air-fuel mixture. Some vehicles eliminate the need for an EGR valve by timing intake and exhaust valve operation.

Post-combustion treatment consists of a reduction bed within the catalytic converter containing platinum and rhodium. Under optimum operating conditions, a chemical reaction changes NOx back into harmless nitrogen and oxygen.

Why might your car fail its emission inspection for elevated NOx levels? There are many reasons: low-octane fuel, elevated engine or intake air temperature, a lean air-fuel ratio in one or more cylinders, excessively advanced ignition timing, an inoperative or clogged EGR valve or related passages, a fault in the control system for the EGR valve, a degraded catalytic converter, and an exhaust leak prior to the converter, among others.

As you can imagine, this is a pro-level fix and requires use of the dynamometer and emissions analyzer to gauge repair effectiveness.

THE ACES ON BRIDGE

Bobby Wolff

"Though I am always in haste, I am never in a hurry."
— John Wesley

On today's deal, from a major championship final, four spades failed in both rooms. One declarer had a decent shot to succeed. I believe. What do you think?
This was the crucial table, where West led the heart 10 and South took East's queen with his ace and led a diamond. West's king was covered with dummy's ace, and a spade was played to the queen. West discarded a heart on the second diamond, and dummy won the trick. A third diamond was played to East, who promptly returned a fourth, ruffed by declarer and overruffed by West with the spade 10. With another trump and a club to come for the defense, declarer was down.

Note that if declarer had played off the spade ace before leading a second diamond, East wins an early round of diamonds and draws South's last trump, leaving him with an extra diamond loser.
However, the contract could and perhaps should have succeeded: when the diamond king appeared at trick two, it should have been allowed to hold. If West has a doubleton diamond, there is a trick that must be lost in diamonds anyway. But if it is a singleton, what can West do? Say a heart is returned. South ruffs in dummy and finesses the trump jack. He now cashes the spade ace, takes the top diamonds, and safely ruffs a fourth diamond with the spade three.

All told, declarer loses only one trump, one club, and one diamond.

ANSWER: Make a negative double, planning to bid hearts on the next round. If you bid two hearts directly, you are overstating your high cards and partner may get carried away. This route of making a negative double, then bidding a new suit, suggests 7-9 high-card points and a six-card suit.
