Eminent domain stands

Court says government can seize property for commercial reasons

By Charles Lane
The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — The Supreme Court ruled Thursday that local governments can force property owners to sell out and make way for private economic development when officials decide it would benefit the public even if the property is not blighted and the new projects success is not guaranteed. The landmark 5-4 ruling provided the strong affirmation state and local governments had sought for their increasing use of eminent domain for urban revitalization, especially in the Northeast, where many city centers have decayed and the suburban land supply is dwindling. Opponents ranging from property-rights activists to advocates for elderly and low-income urban residents argued that forcibly shifting land from one private owner to another, even with fair compensation, violates the Fifth Amendment to the Constitution, which prohibits the taking of property by government except for "public use." But Justice John Paul Stevens, writing for the majority Thursday, cited past cases in which the court has interpreted "public use" to include not only such traditional projects as bridges or highways, but also slum clearance and land redistribution. He concluded that a "public purpose" such as creating new jobs in a depressed city can also satisfy the Fifth Amendment. The court should not "second-guess" local governments, Stevens added, noting that "promoting economic development is a traditional and long accepted function of government." The Supreme Court's decision probably won't have much impact locally, said Twin Falls city engineer Gary Young. "It has nothing to do with any public works projects," he said. Young said the reason is because the city has a policy motto to recruit retail businesses. And, while Twin Falls does not recruit industry, there is an abundance of land on the city's perimeter, so Young said condemning land would be unnecessary. "We're promoting (industry), but only in areas with large pieces of ground," Young said. Justice Stevens's opinion provoked a strongly worded dissent from Justice Sandra Day O'Connor, who wrote that the ruling favors the most powerful and influential in society and leaves "Please see PROPERTY, Page A2

BLM releases Cotterel impact statement

By Michelle Dunlop
Times-News writer

BURLEY — The Bureau of Land Management will release its highly anticipated environmental statement of the Cotterel Wind Power Project to the public today. "This could be the first large-scale wind energy development on public lands in Idaho," said Wendy Reynolds, manager of the Burley Field Office. "The analysis has been very challenging and we are hoping the public will assist us through this comment period in making the resultant decision as informed as possible."

The BLM Burley Field Office drafted an environmental impact statement for a proposed wind project that will span a 16-mile ridge line on Cotterel Mountain between Alton and Malta. The wind farm will sit primarily on BLM land with small pockets located on state and privately owned land. The public has 90 days to comment on the four alternatives. Please see COTTEREL, Page A2

About 800 cubic feet per second of water flowed over Shoshone Falls on Thursday afternoon, the highest in six years.

After six years, Shoshone Falls spills again

By Julie Pence
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — It's been six years since water crashed over the basalt boulders at Shoshone Falls during the summer months. But on Thursday, some 600 cubic feet per second of water, which amounts to 270 gallons per second, was smashing over the rocks. Nearby, visitors basked in the mist from the falls. Nonetheless, the spray couldn't compare with that of the 30,000 cubic feet per second that pounded over the falls in the Snake River's high record year of 1997, or that of the 40,000 cubic feet per second that early settlers saw. Though southern Idaho is in its sixth year of drought, the unexpected cool weather and heavy rains of April and May prompted the U.S. Bureau of Reclamation to release 1,500 cubic feet per second from the American Falls Reservoir on Wednesday to send water down the Snake River. The release helps the bureau fulfill its agreement to send extra water downstream to help flush salmon toward the ocean.

Idaho Power Co. diverts up to 800 cubic feet per second through its plant at the bottom of the Snake River Canyon. That explains the 600 cubic feet per second, covering about half the face of Shoshone Falls — for now. How long will it last? Burley hydrologist Mike Bens said no one knows. It depends on who is buying and renting water upstream. However, a recent agreement between Idaho Power and the city of Twin Falls guarantees there will be at least 300 cubic feet per second flow over the falls between April 1 and Labor Day for the next 30 years. Larry and June Burellson, retirees from Winchester, Ind., who had never visited Twin Falls before, considered themselves blessed to have visited Shoshone Falls on the first day of the big splash. After having traveled through Utah to Lewiston and back, June Burellson said, "Compared to all the mountains, rivers and canyons we've seen, I think this is the most impressive thing I have seen." "If you go... You can leave your car at the top, or you can pay to park at the bottom of the canyon. $3 per car, $20 per bus, $25 per season pass for a car, $30 for 20 coupons, good until you use them up." The Burellsons had just heard Thursday that Shoshone Falls is sometimes referred to as the Niagara Falls of the West. They said the actual Niagara Falls in New York state, which they have seen, presents a much wider span of cliffs over which water crashes. However, Shoshone Falls is "impressive for the West." Art and Pat Carroll of Camarillo, Calif., are visiting Shoshone Falls for the first time in 15 years on Thursday. Art Carroll said he remembered hiding — a practice long since banned — across the face of Shoshone Falls with his children. "This is perfect," he said, mentioning the falls and canyon with desert and mountains in the background. "This is totally awesome," he said. "We're going to Glacier National Park, but this will be hard to beat."

Roadless forests will see development

The Associated Press

BOISE — Gov. Dirk Kempthorne said Thursday he'll wait until early next year to ask the Bush administration to consider opening for development millions of acres of federal forest land in Idaho that have never been roaded, logged or mined. Kempthorne vowed to take advantage of the new authority over national forest land, planning recently given to governors. In May, the U.S. Forest Service overturned a rule that former President Clinton used to protect the nation's 58.5 million acres of pristine woodlands from commercial uses. Governors, environmentalists, timber industry officials, sportsmen and reporters gathered for the announcement in Idaho's Capitol office. But he said he'll wait to hear from people living near the state's 10 national forests before deciding exactly where new roads should be allowed in the 9.3 million roadless acres — an area almost twice the size of Massachusetts and second only to Alaska's 14 million roadless acres. Former Klansman gets 60 years in slayings

PHILADELPHIA, Miss. — Former Ku Klux Klanman Edgar Ray Killen was wheeled before a judge Thursday, an 80-year-old relic of Mississippi's hate-filled past, and sentenced to 60 years in prison for the 1964 slayings of three civil rights workers. Killen sat in his wheelchair in a bright yellow jail uniform and stared straight ahead, stone-faced, offering no remorse and no explanations, as Judge Marcus Gordon gave him the maximum and "closed" one of the most shocking chapters in the movement to end segregation across the South. "Each life has value. Each life is equally as valuable as the other life and I have taken that into consideration," the judge said. "The three lives should absolutely be respected and treated equally." In imposing the prison term, Please see SENTENCE, Page A2

A&B Irrigation District can no longer reuse runoff

By Michelle Dunlop
Times-News writer

BOISE — A&B Irrigation District can no longer recapture its runoff irrigation water and use it to water additional property, the Idaho Supreme Court says. The Irrigation district has collected runoff water in ponds and reused the water to irrigate 2,963 acres over the objections of the state as well as groundwater districts like Aberdeen-American Falls. The state and Aberdeen-American Falls contend those 2,963 acres are not covered under A&B's original water right, which allows the district to irrigate about 62,604 acres of land in Jerome and Minidoka counties. "They put this water on lands that were not under their permit," said Jeffrey Swadlow, attorney for Aberdeen-American Falls. The attorney for the A&B dis-

"Anyone who says we have lost the war or are losing the war is wrong"

— Defense Secretary Donald Rumsfeld

Defense Secretary Donald Rumsfeld, right, testifies on the progress of Iraqi security forces on Capitol Hill on Thursday before the House Armed Services Committee.

Rumsfeld denies Iraq's quagmire

By Stephen J. Hedges
Chicago Tribune

WASHINGTON — Defense Secretary Donald Rumsfeld denied Thursday that the American-led occupation in Iraq has become a quagmire. But a top Army general seated next to him at a Senate hearing said that the Iraqi insurgency is not weakening and that U.S. soldiers have begun to question the American public's support for the war.

"Anyone who says we have lost the war or are losing the war is wrong," Rumsfeld said, adding that setting a timetable for the withdrawal of U.S. troops "would then be a lifeline to terrorists who in recent months have suffered significant losses in casualties, been denied havens and suffered weakened popular support."

During an often-testy hearing, numerous members of the Senate Armed Services Committee expressed support for U.S. forces in Iraq and the U.S. effort there. Many agreed with Rumsfeld that setting a deadline for the withdrawal of the 140,000 troops now in Iraq would be a mistake.

But Rumsfeld came in for sharp criticism from several Democrats who accused him and the administration of mismanaging the war in Iraq and of deceiving the American public about its purpose and costs.

One of those critics, Sen. Edward Kennedy, D-Mass., bluntly told Rumsfeld that he had bungled the war effort and should quit.

"Secretary Rumsfeld, you know we are in serious trouble in Iraq," Kennedy said. "And this war has been consistently and grossly mismanaged. And we are now in a seemingly intractable quagmire. Our troops are dying, and there really is no end in sight.

"There have been a series of gross errors and mistakes," Kennedy continued. "Those were on your watch. Isn't it time for you to resign?"

"Senator, Rumsfeld replied, "I've offered my resignation to the president twice, and he has decided that he would prefer that he not accept it, and that's his call."

Another Democrat, Sen. Robert Byrd of West Virginia, told Rumsfeld to stop lecturing the committee and "get off your high horse when you come up here."

The usually collected Rumsfeld, a veteran of Washington's charge and counter-charge game, raised his voice several times in response to statements by Kennedy and others that operations in Iraq were in doubt.

"Let me say that there isn't a person at this table who agrees with you that we're in a quagmire and that there is no end in sight," he told Kennedy, adding that, "from the beginning of this, we have recognized that this is a tough business. It is difficult, that it is dangerous, and it is not predictable."

Rumsfeld's defense of the Bush administration's Iraq policy came in response to a small but growing sentiment within Congress that U.S. efforts to end the daily car bombings and other violence in Iraq are not progressing, and that the steady drumbeat of U.S. combat support for the war.

U.N. urges U.S. to allow inspections at Gitmo

GENEVA (AP) U.N. human rights investigators, citing "persistent and credible" reports of torture at the U.S. base in Guantanamo Bay, urged the United States on Thursday to allow them to check conditions there.

The failure of the United States to respond to requests since early 2002 is leading the experts to conclude Washington has something to hide at the Cuban base, said Manfred Nowak, a specialist on torture and a professor of human rights law in Vienna, Austria.

"At a certain point, you have to take well-founded allegations as proven in the absence of a clear explanation by the government," Nowak said.

However, he added: "We are not making a judgment if torture or treatment under degrading conditions has taken place."

Washington's response is delayed because the U.S. review process is "thorough and independent" and involves the Bush administration, Congress and the judicial system, said Brooks Robinson, spokeswoman for the U.S. mission to U.N. offices in Geneva. "The main point is that their request is being addressed and discussed and reviewed in the United States," Robinson told The Associated Press. "That process is under way."

But one investigator, Algerian magistrate Lella Zerroug, said: "The time is up. We have to act now. If not, we won't have any credibility left."

For more than three years, U.N. investigators have made numerous requests to visit foreign nerve suspects at the U.S. Naval base in Cuba and at U.S. facilities in Iraq, Afghanistan and elsewhere, the four independent specialists told reporters.

"We deeply regret that the government of the United States has still not invited us to visit those persons arrested, detained or tried on grounds of alleged terrorism or other violations," the experts said.

U.S., Iraqi troops kill at least five al-Qaida-linked militants BAGHDAD, Iraq (AP) — American and Iraqi troops battled al-Qaida-linked insurgents held up in an upscale Baghdad neighborhood Thursday, killing at least five militants apparently waiting to carry out suicide bomb attacks.

Word emerged that a senior al-Qaida leader was killed in a U.S. airstrike near Syria's border. And in a devastating escalation in insurgent attacks in the capital, a string of car bombings that began late Wednesday continued Thursday morning with four more blasts that killed at least 15 people and wounded 24.

The force of the blasts — timed for when the capital's streets are most crowded — blew off store shutters, and the surrounding sidewalks were littered with debris, including charred vegetables and fruit.

All told, Thursday's violence across Iraq left at least 19 civilians killed and 37 wounded.

Liberal bias runs deep at PBS

A battle is raging between Kenneth Tomlinson, chairman of the Corporation for Public Broadcasting, who believes that PBS and NPR slant too far left and need to be brought into balance, and Bill Moyers and his ideological soul mates, who think public broadcasting is fine as it is.

CAL THOMAS

Rather than debate the bias issue, lefties have taken to trying to smear Tomlinson.

The New York Times carried a front page story June 21 that said evidence assembled by Tomlinson that produced his charge of bias was gathered by a researcher who once worked for the American Conservative Union. The story was meant to divert attention from the content of PBS and NPR programs onto the political pedigree of the one who gathered the evidence. Nice trick if you can get away with it.

Moyers, former host of the PBS series "NOW," wrote an essay published as a two-page ad in The Washington Post by an organization called "Free Press," which defines itself as a "nonpartisan citizens' organization working for a democratic and accountable media in America."

OK, how about some accountability? How do you know something is biased? You can count the ways.

According to a newspaper for PBS insiders called "Current" (not a conservative publication), writer Louis Barabash watched the "NOW" program and found that of the 19 segments Moyers did on the Iraq war, only four included a guest or interview subject who supported it.

In one nine-minute segment about the burden the war has brought to military families, the contrary point was just a 41-second sound bite from Rep. Duncan Hunter, California Republican, saying that hard-pressed families receive help from neighbors and family members, as well as government. In only one of those 19 segments, writes Barabash, did anyone offer a substantial defense of the war. It was the same with other topics on the show.

According to Barabash, of the 75 segments he monitored over a six-month period that addressed controversial issues like the Iraq war, the condition of the economy and the corrupting influence of corporate money on politics, just 19 included anyone who took a view contrary to the thrust of the show.

A 17-minute segment, accusing the Pentagon of understating U.S. troops' injuries in Iraq, offered a Defense Department spokesman 90 seconds to reply.

That's unbalanced by any objective standard. In the Washington Post ad, Moyers wrote, "Deep down the public harbors an intuitive understanding that for all the flaws of public television, our fundamental assumptions come down on their side, and on the side of democracy."

Does this statement by Moyers on his Nov. 8, 2002, "NOW" program sound like it comes down on the side of the public? The entire federal government — the Congress, the Executive, the Judiciary — is united behind a right-wing agenda for which George W. Bush believes he now has a mandate. That mandate includes the power of the state to force pregnant women to give up control over their own lives. It includes using the taxing power to transfer wealth from working people to the rich.

It includes giving corporations a free hand to devastate the environment and control the regulatory agencies meant to hold them accountable. And it includes secrecy on a scale you cannot imagine. ... And if you like God in government, get ready for the Rapture."

Moyers is entitled to his views. What he is not entitled to is taxpayer money to promote them. If Moyers thinks he represents the public, let PBS and NPR be 100 percent privately funded by people who want to hear and see his ideas and those of his like-minded colleagues.

Tomlinson is addressing the bias that inhabits the minds of those who believe liberalism is truth.

If PBS is to continue receiving public money, it should be required to do a better job of presenting diverse viewpoints on a more than token basis. Moyers and company would not subscribe to tokenism when it comes to race and gender, but they appear to think ideological and political tokenism is fine when it comes to ideas that are counter to their own.

LETTER

Retain local control over Magic Valley Regional Congratulations are due Twin Falls for its wonderful Magic Valley Regional Medical Center, unquestionably one of the best hospital environments anywhere.

I am a Virginian, a cardiac patient and a recipient of hospital services in multiple states in the last six years. Magic Valley was the last. I have witnessed nothing comparable in patient care, staff professionalism and morale.

Thankfully, the proximate cause of my admission was not a cardiac event and I was discharged after one night.

But had it been otherwise, I would rather have been there than any other hospital in the country.

Our home hospital used to be that way, before a large private hospital corporation began implementing "beneficial changes."

Now we no longer have a full-service hospital.

Efficiency seems measured only in shareholder benefit and executive compensation, while patients travel farther for services.

Overall, staff morale has plummeted. Physicians and nurses are overworked.

Staffs are short, the climate is poor, and it is increasingly difficult to attract good people. Patients are products on an assembly line.

Aides often cannot understand patient requests due to language barriers, and noisy night staff pity parties bar patient rest.

Fees increased in multiples over inflation along with administrator compensation. Financials are hidden from local government.

Private corporations are shielded by law from exposing them.

County elected officials are rendered powerless.

They cannot determine if revenue supports lobbying to keep out competition.

Contrast that with Magic Valley where the staff morale is high, patients are warmly received and comforted, and the atmosphere is professional and reflects confidence and control under even stressful situations.

I was in the emergency room when simultaneously six ambulances and a helicopter arrived with badly injured folks from multiple vehicle accidents.

The emergency room functioned like a well-oiled machine. Additional staff was quickly assembled. The place hummed with efficiency and cool heads.

I found it fascinating and a great blessing.

Twin Falls retain control over your regional hospital if you can.

I am told your hospital is financially healthy — more a target for takeover.

Should you have to give it up, better the contract specifies preserve fully transparent financials.

County officials should occupy seats on the major board of directors, and annual audits be published.

Make the patient advocate a paid county position as opposed to a hospital paid position.

Give the county government a management role or fight merging. JAMES ROONEY Alexandria, Va.

Rupert attorney's trial gets delayed

RUPERT — A jury trial has been postponed for attorney accused of bartering legal services for sex.

The trial originally was scheduled to start in Monday. Instead, a motion to dismiss charges against Raymond G. Pena will be considered that day in 5th District Court.

Documents supporting and opposing the motion to dismiss remained sealed Thursday afternoon.

Pena, 37, is charged with two felony counts of procurement of prostitution. He is accused of offering reductions in legal fees to two female clients in exchange for sexual services.

Under Idaho law, procurement is punishable by two to 20 years in prison and by a fine from $1,000 up to $5,000.

Prosecuting attorney Jason Walker has filed an amended indictment that would change one count to "attempted procurement," which court documents describe as a lesser charge.

The case is being heard by Judge William H. Woodland, from the 6th Judicial District in Pocatello.

Pena was arrested and charged in February following an Idaho State Police investigation and a grand jury indictment.

He remains free on his own recognizance but under a no-contact stipulation that bars him from contact with the alleged victims.

Pena continues to practice law as a partner in the Pena Law Offices in Rupert.

He is represented by Ketchum attorney Andrew Parnes.

Industrial accident victim identified

JEROME — A Jerome Cheese Co. employee injured Wednesday in an industrial accident has been identified as Rusty Satterwhite, 31, of Twin Falls.

Satterwhite was taken by Life Flight to Magic Valley Regional Medical Center for stabilization, then to St. Alphonsus Regional Medical Center in Boise.

The guys who helped him before emergency crews arrived were just superb.

"I haven't seen them (Life Flight) before," said John Davis, manager of Jerome Cheese Co.

He is currently listed in serious but stable condition in the intensive care unit, according to St. Alphonsus.

Satterwhite had been trapped by a robot that palates cheese products, Davis said.

Craig wants to kill fish center

The Washington Post SEATTLE — Angered by a federal court order that spills water over federal dams to save endangered salmon in the Pacific Northwest, Sen. Larry Craig, R-Idaho, has inserted language into a Senate energy bill that would kill an agency that keeps score on the survival of fish as they swim through the heavily dammed Columbia and Snake rivers.

The federal government has spent far more money trying to prevent the extinction of Northwest salmon than it has on any other endangered species. Craig's move would eliminate the Fish Passage Center, which for more than two decades has been collecting and analyzing data that document how effective that multibillion-dollar federal effort has been.

A spokesman for the Idaho senator calls the rider — attached to an energy appropriations bill that moved last week to the Senate floor — "a shot across the bow to challenge what Craig believes is an agency that advocates a 'controversial and one-sided' approach to salmon recovery."

"Power rates are going up, we think interayers ought to have some answers for how their money is being spent," said Sid Craig, a spokesman for Craig. The Northwest depends more on hydroelectric dams for power than any other part of the country.

The manager of the Fish Passage Center, Michele DeHart, said her staff collects "data that is accurate and, yes, it does show that the federal hydro system kills fish."

The federal court order that requires summer spill over dams in the Snake River means that some of the electricity that could be generated by those dams is being forgone — at an estimated cost of about $67 million over the three summer months.

Much of the data on fish survival that supported the order, which was made last month by a federal judge in Portland and has been appealed by the Bush administration, was gathered and analyzed by the Fish Passage Center.

"This is one of those deals where when you don't like the message, you kill the messenger," DeHart said.

At the start of the dispute over salmon is a disagreement about how to increase their survival as they negotiate federal dams that have transformed the Snake and Columbia from the world's premier salmon highway to a series of slow-moving

CENTENNIAL ART

Artist Gary Stone and his wife, Bev, stand next to a painting Gary created for Kimberly's centennial. The Stones will host an art display and lecture Saturday. Gary Stone's painting eventually will be etched into the entrance rock at Centennial Park in Kimberly.

Kimberly plans weekend events marking 100 years

By Kevin Otzenberger Times-News correspondent

KIMBERLY — In 1905, the Magic Valley region was a scarcely populated area that was just beginning to spring forth with the advancement of railroad traffic through southern Idaho.

It was during this year that several smaller cities around Twin Falls were founded. Dating around the same period is a small collection of nostalgic structures: some private homes and a few government and business buildings. After 100 years of growth and renovation, many of such relics have disappeared, but a few have survived to see the 21st century.

On Saturday, five of these homes will be on display as part of a centennial home tour sponsored by the Kimberly Public Library.

The event is one of several planned as part of Kimberly's centennial celebration, which kicked off on Arbor Day and will come to an end with an ice cream social Sept. 17.

Along with the home tour and a series of community social events, Saturday also marks the public debut of a new art gallery produced by local painter Gary Stone. The day's events will be kicked off by Stone's presentation of his 14-piece collection titled "Willows and Rawhide" — a tribute to the Shoshone Indians who once dominated the southern Idaho region. The presentation will be at 10 a.m. in the Kimberly City Council chambers at 120 Madison St. W.

"I have a recurring character," Stone explained. "Back in the 1800s, some white children were captured by Shoshones and raised as part of the tribe. So my paintings often depict a few young Shoshone natives and a white kid running around, terrorizing the countryside. They're fun to look at."

During the show, Stone will, show five historic buildings in Kimberly will be having an all-day open house. The buildings are the Turner/Savage home owned by the Nuttigs, the Calhoun home on Calhoun Corner, the Hodge home on South Main, the Old Reeves home owned by the Studebakers and the old bank building now owned by Walt Hess.

Kimberly's Good Neighbor Days, the second week of July will also be celebrated with a centennial theme.

"It's nice to have a hometown centennial where people can visit and be friendly, because we will lose that once the community gets bigger," Gary Stone said.

The city of Kimberly conducted $1,000 toward the work of a centennial committee. The largest single contribution came from First Federal Bank in Oregon Trail. Gary has been a professional artist for the past 35 years, and the couple currently runs a local television show every Sunday night called "Chalk Talk."

The artwork already has been sold to an art collector, who has allowed Stone to hold onto the 10 long enough to present it at Kimberly's centennial.

Twin Falls schools look at cuts

School board adopts a slimmer budget for the coming year

By Karin Kowalski Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — Belt tightening is under way at the Twin Falls School District.

The board approved a 2004-05 amended budget of $53.2 million and discussed a proposed budget of $46 million for the 2005-06 fiscal year.

"We know this next year's going to be tight," Superintendent Wiley Dobbs said.

Fiscal Affairs Director Robert Seaman said the proposed budget is much smaller than the 2004-05 budget because that one includes some one-time federal money and place holder amounts for energy efficiency improvements that will be spread over several years in state support.

"The state doesn't seem to be our friend in many situations," Board Member Chad Hafer said.

Dobbs said there's a variety of ways the district could improve its budget, but none are decided yet.

For instance, the district could cut about $125,000 by eliminating tutoring budgets at all its schools, Seaman said.

Dobbs said the district could refrain from hiring someone to replace its deposit prevention specialist and operations director and restructure the district office's staff. The district could also work on improving attendance, which brings in state dollars.

Dobbs said the amended budget had less revenue because attendance was not as good as it was in the past. One reason is that the high school's block schedule makes class periods count for twice as much for absences. Students are required to take final exams if they miss three days worth of classes, but the schedule makes them reach that threshold in two days.

Seaman said that for the amended budget, the district

Hansen School District eyes possible bond issue

School board looks at cuts

By Karin Kowalski Times-News writer

HANSEN — The Hansen School District is looking at a possible $900,000 bond issue in September to add to the town's elementary school, Superintendent Dennis Coulter said Wednesday.

The school board decided Monday to research a bond and possible building expansion.

A bond issue could allow the district to add as many as eight classrooms and repair the existing building's roof. Right now, the school has three portable buildings that hold classes for special needs, third and fourth grades and programs for Title I and pupils with limited English proficiency, Coulter said.

With a bond issue, the district could add two of its oldest modular buildings.

A 12-year bond issue could amount to a tax increase of about 10 cents for $1,000 in assessed value of property. Coulter said district residents pay about $5.46 per $1,000.

The district has done 500 surveys to community members asking for opinions on bond issues. Coulter said there were 38 favorable responses and two unfavorable responses.

Coulter said eight extra classrooms could help the district.

John Peter in 1949. The family moved to Smithtown and then Head of the Harbor, Long Island, where Charlie worked as a caretaker of three different estates.

On one of these estates Charlie built up a herd of sheep and re-established the peach orchard. Five line up for council seat in Castleford

By Blair Koch
Times-News correspondent

CASTLEFORD — For a town with only a few hundred people, Mayor Rita Ruffing was pleased with the turnout of those interested in filling the vacant City Council seat.

"I am glad to see there is such interest in it," she said at Wednesday's council meeting. "Five citizens showed up to be interviewed for the position, including Kim Aguirre, Curtis Harkins, Cliff Lockhart, Ken Millbourn and Omar Ramco.

The need to fill the council seat comes after the June 8 resignation of Clint Jackson. The appointed member will fill the vacancy until this fall's election. If elected then, the individual will serve a two-year term. If re-elected, he or she will serve for four years.

The candidates were given the opportunity to explain why they wanted to serve on the board.

"I ran the last time and was beat," Lockhart explained. "I want to clean up the city and get something going for it."

"Harkins, already a steady council meeting attendee, said, "I have the willingness to help the improvement of the city and I like to be involved."

"This is a good town I am living in, and I just want to show people what a good town it really is," said Ramco.

Aguire stated her desire to serve on the board was to be more involved and informed on city matters.

Said Millbourn: "I'll be here until the kids graduate high school and would like to help out where I can."

"The candidates as a whole expressed a common theme in what they wanted to help accomplish if appointed to the council: help get the city cleaned up and looking nice.

In other business, council members discussed the hours of Twin Falls County sheriff's Deputy Rich Pendleton, who patrols the Castleford area. Council members said they would like the deputies hours to be varied to include some weekend and night shifts.

"That way people won't know exactly when the deputy isn't on patrol."

"We don't want him on a 8-to-5, Monday-through-Friday schedule," Ruffing told Lt. Don Newman, who attended the meeting representing the sheriff's department.

Newman said he will be taking the proposal to Sheriff Wayne Toubey for possible approval.

Blair Koch covers the Castleford City Council. She can be reached by e-mail at blair_20@hotmail.com.

Partnership seeks applicants for board position

The Times-News

TWIN FALLS — The South Central Community Action Partnership will hold its annual meeting July 21 to elect a low-income representative to the board of directors for Twin Falls County, the northern counties of Magic Valley and the Mini-Cassia area.

The board of directors consists of three sectors of the community, which represent the public sector (county commissioners), private sector (civic groups, churches, businesses, etc.) and the low-income sector, representing the needs of the low-income population of the community.

The low-income representative does not have to be a low-income individual but must be aware of the problems affecting low-income families and be willing to speak up for their needs.

Applications for the opportunity to participate in the low-income board representative election may be obtained at the Washington St. S. in Twin Falls, 314 East Fifth St. in Burley, 300 N. Lincoln in Jerome (courthouse basement) or by calling 733-3351 for more information.

Applications must be turned in by June 30. Low-income participants are encouraged to vote for their representative of choice to serve their interests on the board of directors from 1 to 4 p.m. July 6 at the above locations. The mission of the South Central Community Action Partnership is to stimulate a better focusing of all available local, state, private and federal resources upon the goals of enabling low-income families and individuals of all ages to obtain the skills, knowledge and motivations and to secure the opportunities needed for them to become fully self-sufficient."

Advocates seek choices for people with disabilities

By Karin Kowalski
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — A group of advocates and community members gathered on the steps of the College of Southern Idaho's gymnasium Wednesday to promote greater independence for people with disabilities.

They talked about self-determination, based in the philosophical sense and in the sense of allowing people to have more control over what services they receive.

La Halle, a member of the Idaho Self-Advocacy Leadership Network, said the group is creating a self-determination waiver that will allow adults with developmental disabilities to turn down services they don't want. "This will make people happier and save money."

"Sometimes in life we have to fight for our services in a positive way," Halle said. "The waiver system is still being developed to allow people to budget their own social services money, hire case workers and work with support brokers to make sure they get what they need."

"It has a potential for much better results for the client," said Charles Babcock, a Medicaid manager for the Idaho Department of Health and Welfare.

Marilyn Sword, the executive director of the Idaho Council on Developmental Disabilities, said the waiver system is set to be done in December, then it will be available for about 200 disabled adults and eventually be available statewide.

Babcock said there's about 500 adults with developmental disabilities in the eight counties of south-central Idaho.

Wednesday's event was part of a "Be Determined" bus tour sponsored by the Idaho Council on Developmental Disabilities that will end today with a rally on the state Capitol steps.

lakes separated by huge slabs of concrete.

Indian tribes, many state fish biologists, fishing organizations and environmental groups say the best way to increase survival is to let the fish in the rivers while increasing their flow during migration months and spilling water over dams. These groups have long supported the Fish Passage Center, which has published many reports calling for more spill and increased flow programs that can cost millions of dollars by reducing electricity generation and disrupting irrigation and river transport.

We all have to rely on some mutually agreeable data in order to figure out what is happening to the fish and, to date, that has come from the Fish Passage Center and the Chas. Fluckner, a spokesman for the Columbia River Inter-Tribal Fish Commission.

On the other side is federal agencies that build the dams and sell the power, along with irrigation, bending and utility interests that depend on the consistency of the Columbia and Snake for their livelihood. Their side has received considerable support from the Bush administration, which concluded last year that federal dams should be viewed as part of an "environmental baseline" when it comes to saving salmon. U.S. District Judge James Redden rejected that analysis in the money saying that it was made more in cynicism than in sincerity."

The Bush administration did not order the rider to stop funding the Fish Passage Center and had no comment on the proposal, according to Brian Campbell, spokesman in Seattle for the National Marine Fisheries Service.

The Fish Passage Center gets its money from the Bonneville Power Administration, which sells electricity produced by federal dams in the Northwest. EPA spending on the Fish Passage Center began after passage in 1980 of the Northwest Power Act, a law that requires that federal dams be operated in a way that places salmon "on a par" with power, navigation and irrigation.

The rider that bans funding for the Fish Passage Center will be sent to get through a House-Senate conference committee and signed by President Bush before the Bonneville Power Administration can hold back the money.

school's growth. In 2003, the school's population was 206, last year it increased to 223. The school had music and physical education classes meeting in the gymnasium and no room for a part-time occupational therapist.

"It could solve a multitude of problems for us," Coulter said. "I could see the school and 34 kindergartners and 36 sixth graders. Coulter said the district could have split those classes, but it had nowhere to put them. He said the teachers coped well.

"With those numbers it takes a great deal of staff and a highly motivated teacher," Coulter said.

The board has yet to decide if it would ask for a bond election.

will be close to using its earlier estimate of about $300,000 of carryover. For the proposed 2005-06 budget, the district could use about $1.6 million of carryover, or make up the shortfall in other areas.

Seaman said the 2004-05 amended budget is still affected by money the district receives and pays until August, even though the fiscal year ends earlier.

Those items include Medicaid, state money, salaries and utilities, Seaman said.

Dobbs said many other districts are feeling the same sort of pinches and they are compounded by a fear of sanctions for not meeting the requirements of No Child Left Behind. "The board is set to consider the proposed 2005-06 budget at 8 a.m. July 6 in the district offices board room.

Road

ington Street North and Pole line intersection will consist of 19 lanes when completed.

"That construction should be completed by late fall of 2006, Burmside speculated.

But while it's going on, Burmside knows the 19,000 vehicles — 1,900 of which are "semi-trucks" — will present a major management challenge.

"I plead with the public to be patient with us, to understand it is difficult to build this kind of road in this magnitude and right in the middle of town where everyone is trying to carry on with their lives," he said.

So it was back to the drawing board for at least a year. The redesign required approval from federal agencies on down. Transportation officials also had problems meeting federal and state preservation guidelines, Young said.

"There was tremendous controversy and tremendous time spent trying to save these historical properties," Young said. "The owners didn't care, but the feds did."

This past winter the transportation department faced conflicts with property owners along Pole Line who claimed their properties were worth more than the state would pay. The state acquired the properties, and a group of owners is suing the state. But the situation eased about a four-month delay, Burmside said.

In the meantime, the cost of steel and cement escalated to the point where the original estimate was so much lower than what it now costs that transportation staffers had to go back to the Idaho Transportation Department board. They needed board approval to increase the estimate from $15 million to the current $18.9 million, Burmside said.

and France, said the United States didn't consider others when making foreign policy decisions. Only Indonesians, Indians and Chinese said the United States considered them when making foreign policy decisions. Pakistanis were divided almost evenly on the issue.

But that's only one part of the anti-American formula. Residents of nine countries, including Britain, Canada, Germany, Turkey, France and Lebanon, viewed Bush's re-election as a stain on the U.S. image. Not everything in the report is gloom and doom, according to Clinton-era Secretary of State Madeleine Albright, the co-lead on the poll. "It has certain hints about how our situation can improve."

She said more efforts to aid needy countries could continue to improve the United States' image. Seven countries noted tsunami relief as improving the United States' image, but didn't list it completely out of its decline since the war on terrorism began. Indonesians' favorable opinion of the United States may be connected to tsunami aid. In 2003, only 25 percent of Indonesians said U.S. foreign policy considered others, compared with 59 percent in 2005. "Americans aren't unaware what the world thinks of them. Skyline percent of the Americans polled said they dislike the United States," she said.

Engineers probe WTC collapse

Agency urges review of fire standards, elevators

NEW YORK (AP) — A federal engineering agency that investigated the World Trade Center collapse recommended Thursday that cities raise the fire standards for skyscrapers and develop new materials that can better protect tall buildings in an inferno.

Engineers with the National Institute of Standards and Technology said, for example, that stairwells should be situated apart from each other so that if one is damaged another might still work. They also urged installation of "fire-protected and structurally hardened elevators" designed to function in a blaze.

"Such elevators should be installed for exclusive use by emergency responders during emergencies," NIST said in its draft recommendations on the twin tower collapse.

NIST does not have the authority to alter building codes, but hopes to persuade local authorities to make the changes.

"We believe that the recommendations are realistic and achievable," said Shyam Sunder, the lead NIST investigator. He said the costs would vary but he did not take issue with reports suggesting that for most new buildings, construction cost would be only 2 percent to 5 percent.

The NIST's three-year investigation gathered reams of data on such things as fire tests on steel and office workers' evacuation behavior to determine exactly how the 110-story towers fell after two hijacked jetliners slammed into them on Sept. 11, 2001. A total of 2,749 people were killed.

The analysis does not blame the collapse on the steel or design of the towers. NIST engineers concluded the towers probably would have remained standing if the impact of the airplanes had not stripped away fireproofing material on steel columns.

Without that fireproofing, fires continued to burn inside offices, weakening the building's skeleton until it collapsed under its own weight.

The NIST report calls for the development of more durable fire-resistant materials and technologies.

The investigation considered a number of what-if scenarios, some hopeful, some terrifying. NIST determined that if the twin towers had been struck later in the day at full occupancy, some 14,000 people could have died. On the other hand, if the buildings' elevators had been better protected, more people would have escaped.

The agency's report also examined emergency response efforts after the attack. It concluded that some of the victims might have been saved with better evacuation systems and better communication among rescuers.

Former GOP co-chair becomes new president for public broadcasting

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Corporation for Public Broadcasting, whose chairman is under fire for complaining about what he considered liberal bias at PBS, chose a former Republican Party co-chairman Thursday as its president and chief executive.

Patricia S. Harrison, the assistant secretary of state for educational and cultural affairs, was selected after three days of closed meetings by the corporation's board of directors. She was co-chair of the Republican National Committee from 1997 to 2001.

The announcement came as the House, voting 284-140, restored $100 million that had been proposed as a cut in the corporation's budget for next year.

In tapping Harrison, the CPB board said she was devoted to public broadcasting and its mission.

Liberal public interest groups criticized the decision, saying Harrison has no experience in public broadcasting.

"It sets the wrong tone for dealing with some of the challenges that are facing the CPB right now," said Chellie Pin-green, president and chief executive of Common Cause. "She has all the wrong experience and comes across as too partisan of a player for this particular job."

Democratic lawmakers also sounded alarm.

"This is a fatal blow to the historic goal of neutrality of the Corporation for Public Broadcasting," said Sen. Frank Lautenberg, D-N.J. The senator planned to call for hearings in the Senate Commerce Committee, which has oversight of the broadcast industry.

Conservatives countered that partisans have held leadership positions in public broadcasting before. Tim Graham, director of media analysis at the Media Research Center, pointed to Frank Mankiewicz, former president of National Public Radio — who also served as press secretary to Sen. Robert F. Kennedy and as presidential campaign director for Sen. George McGovern.

The problem we have here is that when Democrats work in public broadcasting, nobody seems to notice," Graham said. "In a statement, PBS said it has concerns about the appointment of a former political party chair to head the CPB. It added: 'It is our hope and expectation that Ms. Harrison will execute her responsibilities with nonpartisan integrity.'"

VA needs $1B more for health care

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Department of Veterans Affairs told Congress that its health care costs grew faster than expected and left a $1 billion hole in its budget this year, lawmakers said Thursday.

House Veterans Affairs Committee Chairman Steve Buyer, R-Ind., said the department can meet this year's health care costs by drawing on spare funds and money from other operations, including building construction.

Yet, next year's health care budget falls well short, he said. "I was on the phone this morning with Secretary Nicholson letting him know that I am not pleased that this has happened," said Craig, chairman of the Senate Veterans Affairs Committee.

"This shortfall results from either deliberate misdirection or gross incompetence by this administration and the Department of Veterans Affairs," said Sen. Patty Murray, D-Wash. In a written statement, Nicholson responded: "The health care needs of American veterans are among VA's highest priorities. Working with our partners in Congress, I'm confident that VA's budget will continue to provide world-class health care to the nation's veterans."

The shortage came to light during a routine budget review. Lawmakers said they are still gathering details, but it appears health care for veterans returning from Iraq and Afghanistan is a top budget forecasting contributor to the problem.

Several Democrats urged the Bush administration to push lawmakers to speed an emergency spending bill to fill this year's $1 billion deficit and prevent the VA from raiding other operations to pay for health care.

Craig said he didn't yet see the need for emergency action but called on VA officials to do a hearing next week to pin down more precise spending figures. "We're going to pound them like a nail until we get them, then we'll make some judgments," he said.

British Prime Minister Tony Blair gestures as he addresses the media at the European Parliament on Thursday in Brussels.

Blair tells EU: Must change or face failure

BERLIN — British Prime Minister Tony Blair fired another salvo Thursday in the ongoing verbal struggle over a united Europe's future, telling the European Parliament in Brussels, Belgium, that Europe must change or it will fail.

In a blast at the French, Blair, who'll assume the presidency of the European Union for six months in July, said the EU must invest more in technology and less in agriculture. France depends heavily on agricultural subsidies from the EU.

"This is not a time to accuse those who want Europe to change of betraying Europe," he said. "It is a time to recognize that only by change will Europe recover its strength, its relevance, its idealism and therefore its support amongst the people."

For the past week, Blair and his fellow European leaders have sniped at one another over Europe's direction, after a summit meeting that all 25 EU member nations attend failed to agree on a long-term budget.

GB ministers agree on Israel's Gaza withdrawal

LONDON — Two weeks before a Group of Eight summit in Scotland, the nation's foreign ministers agreed Thursday on a host of issues, including Israel's withdrawal from Gaza, Iran's nuclear program and human rights abuses in Zimbabwe.

Secretary of State Condoleezza Rice insisted Israel's disengagement from Gaza must be a return to terrorism.

The G8 nations also urged North Korea to resume dialogue on its nuclear program, called on Iran not to resume its uranium enrichment activities and condemned human rights abuses in Zimbabwe and the Darfur region of Sudan.

Less than two months before Israel's withdrawal from all 21 Jewish settlements on the Gaza Strip and four in the West Bank, the Middle East peace process dominated much of the day-long summit in London.

Death toll from China floods increases to 131

BEIJING — Heavy rains and mudslides killed dozens of people across China's densely populated southeast, pushing the region's death toll to at least 131 and forcing the evacuation of more than 900,000 people, the government said Thursday.

Aruban police arrest father of detained youth

Son changes story in regards to disappearance of American tourist

ORANJESTAD, Aruba (AP) — Aruban police arrested the father of a young Dutch teen already in custody in connection with the disappearance of a young Alabama woman, and said Thursday that he was considered a suspect in the 3-week-old case.

The teen's mother, meanwhile, told The Associated Press that her son had changed his story, admitting to her that he was alone with 18-year-old Natalie Holloway on a beach the night she vanished — and that he left her there, not at a Holiday Inn as he earlier stated. But Johan van der Sloot, 17, insisted that he did not hurt her, Anita van der Sloot said.

Paul van der Sloot, 52, a justice official on this Dutch Caribbean island, was arrested Thursday shortly after he and his wife left the San Nicolas prison where Johan is being held, Anita van der Sloot told the AP.

Holloway's mother, Beth Holloway Twitty, said she was pleased with the development. "We are very pleased that the investigation is progressing," she said. "We feel like this will lead to more information to give us the answers we need for finding Natalie."

But Anita van der Sloot insisted her husband had done nothing wrong and said Aruban authorities arrested him because they were under pressure.

"My husband is a man of integrity who has been working in the justice system 15 years and was taken without evidence," she said, describing him as "the most honest, beautiful man."

"How can this happen? This

Paul van der Sloot arrested by Aruban police is not about Natalie anymore. It's about enormous pressure from the United States and the media," she said.

Authorities did not immediately respond to van der Sloot's allegation.

The elder van der Sloot "is a suspect," said Marianne Croes, spokeswoman for the Aruban Attorney General's office.

Authorities have described all five men currently in custody as "suspects." But it was not clear if each was suspected in the woman's disappearance or if some were suspected only of a lesser crime in connection with the case, such as withholding evidence.

Contacted by the AP hours before his arrest, Paul van der Sloot declined to comment on the case.

"While Anita van der Sloot had been allowed to visit her son occasionally at the San Nicolas prison, authorities denied similar access to Paul van der Sloot, saying they believed contact between the two could damage the investigation.

ELECTION TODAY

Supporters of former Iranian President and presidential candidate Akbar Hashemi Rafsanjani prepare posters of him on the last day of the election campaign Wednesday, in Tehran, Iran.

A hard-line win may change course of Iran's nuke talks

TEHRAN, Iran (AP) — Iran's stance in delicate nuclear talks with the West is shaping up as a key issue dividing the two candidates who face each other in today's presidential runoff — and U.S. and European officials are watching closely.

It also is a top campaign issue for Iranians themselves, who view the nuclear program as a source of both national pride and worrying tension with the United States and Europe.

Ultraconservative candidate Mahmoud Ahmadinejad, the 49-year-old mayor of Tehran, has indicated he will push for a tougher position at the talks if he becomes president. But key nuclear officials have said they'd like to see the country's top job go to Ayatollah Hashemi Rafsanjani, 70, a former president with an experienced hand.

The United States accuses Iran of using a peaceful nuclear program as a cover to develop an atomic bomb. Iran maintains its program is peaceful and aimed only at generating electricity.

Ahmadinejad, in comments that drew sharp criticism from the Foreign Ministry, accused Iran's nuclear negotiators Monday of being weak and bowing to European pressure at the negotiation table. He also told a reference to the United States could not forever improve ties with any country that "seeks hostility against Iran, a reference to the United States. Some Ahmadinejad supporters, including the hard-line Students' Islamic Association, want the government to seek nuclear weapons to "deter the United States from threatening or attacking us."

MORNING BREAK

Woman's intuition tells her to think twice about marriage

DEAR ABBY: I am a 37-year-old woman who's engaged to be married. It will be a first marriage for both of us. I love my fiancé, "Gill" very much, but I have a gut feeling something is not right. Since our engagement I am noticing things I either didn't see or ignored before.

DEAR ABBY
Jeanne Phillips

Some examples Gill recently moved back to his home state, so we talk on the phone every other day. When we talk, he has to make whatever we talk about sexual. Not that I have anything against sex — it just annoys me that Gill can't think beyond his zippers when I'm trying to talk about a movie I just saw.

He also never really has discussed his family or his past. He has met the majority of our family, but I have yet to meet anyone from his.

Gill makes a point of saying, once we are married, he firmly believes the man should be the head of the household, the decision maker. I told him that I do not believe in that "caveman, cavewoman" mentality and for him to get over himself.

Although he has never verbally or physically abused me, I'm getting strange vibes and I'm ready to call off the engagement. Am I being paranoid or a ...
DEAR NERVOUS BRIDE: TO-BE DEAR NERVOUS: You're not being paranoid. Listen to your intuition. For all of the reasons you have stated, you should not marry this man without extensive premarital counseling.

DEAR ABBY: I am 10. I was born in 1994. My problem is really, really why I had lived in the '90s. I know this sounds stupid, but the style was awesome — not stanky. The music was great — not rap. The '80s seem awesome! I mean, they had good songs like "At Least We Have This Music" by the B-52s. I'm sitting here listening to '80s music and I would not admit this to anyone else except my mom or dad.

Businessman coined the term 'flying saucers' on this day in 1947

This day in history: On June 24, 1947, Boise businessman Kenneth Arnold reported seeing nine "shining saucer-like objects" over Washington Mount Rainier, starting a long rash of UFO sightings and inadvertently coining the term "flying saucers."

Calling them "saucers" accounts for 60 percent of the total national market for consumer goods. Why are those wrinkled Chinese dogs called "shar-peis"? It's a Chinese word meaning "sharkskin." For the first time since the Cold War, total global military spending equaled $1 trillion in 2004, according to the Stockholm International Peace Research Institute. Of that, the United States accounted for nearly half (47 percent). Maybe you remember the superhero from radio and TV, the Green Hornet. Did you know that he was the Lone Ranger's grand nephew? Aries: Incompatible relationships may give added stress this weekend

IF JUNE 24 IS YOUR BIRTHDAY, you've made great friends recently and are sitting on top of the world. But all this could change unless you watch your ps and q's in August and September when you may need to burn the midnight oil to please the boss and extra responsibilities will be heaped on your plate. In October, the celestial lights are green again and others will view you through rose-colored glasses. Make important plans and promises in November and December when you are wiser than usual and opportunities will appear that can bring permanent benefit and success.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Fire and water just don't mix. Relationships with basic incompatibilities may experience a stressful time this weekend. Those that are meant to be will pass the tests with flying colors.

Taurus (April 20-May 20): You've got that attractive glow others find totally irresistible. Singles might be better off ignoring an opportunity to hook up with a new conquest. Trouble and complications could occur.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Trouble in paradise could erupt if you let someone else take the steering wheel. Remain objective and make your own decisions. Other people may not have all the facts that are needed.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): With your upbeat mood you could be much too willing to dive in headfirst without testing the waters. Your faith in the future is admirable, but there could be unforeseen consequences.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Terrific conversational skills can turn acquaintances into friends. New romances begun under these celestial conditions could quickly turn sour so take your time about giving away your heart.

HOROSCOPE
Jeraldine Saunders

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Don't get caught in the trap of buying lottery tickets or playing poker when your best bet is to work for what you get. Gambling with your money or your heart might not be wise.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Your charm and allure are sure to draw a special someone closer for a night of amour. But singles should wait to make sure there aren't any unpleasant strings attached to a fascinating prospect.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Affairs of the heart that are already in motion should flourish under these celestial conditions. New connections of all kinds should be kept at bay until you can develop a clearer picture.

REINVENTING MERLE

Haggard brings his old new sound to Jackpot Sunday

By Andrew Danahy
Houston Chronicle

If you go ...

- What: Merle Haggard will perform in Jackpot.
- Where: Cactus Peas Resort Casino Outdoor Arena.
- When: Sunday, 2 p.m.; gates open at 1.
- How much: Tickets, which are $30, $40 and $55, can be reserved by phoning (800) 821-1103.

With a childhood spent living in a boxcar and young adulthood spent in the slammer, nobody would question Merle Haggard's country credentials, even if he decided to go pop.

Pop? Being Haggard, he's done just that. The new CD "Unforgettable" finds the country-music icon opening up the pop-standards songbook and putting his warm, resonant, countrified stamp on songs by the likes of Ira Gershwin and Hoagy Carmichael.

Haggard lore has it that young Merle decided to straighten up and fly right (or relatively right) and pursue a career as a country musician during a Johnny Cash concert at San Quentin.

But throughout his four-decade career as one of hard country's finest practitioners, Haggard has shown flashes of classic pop style in his music, be it the bouncing "That's the Way Love Goes" in 1983, the wistful "Twinkle Twinkle Lucky Star" in 1987 or the lovely "Think About a Lullaby" in 2000.

"Unforgettable" is the first time he's dedicated an entire album to classic standards.

"I guess in some ways, I'm about 50 years behind," Haggard says, "but it's better late than never."

But the album isn't Haggard's first musical tribute to a style. One of our great songwriters, Hag sporadically puts his pen down to remind us that he's also a great singer.

His tributes to Jimmie Rodgers (1969's "Same Train, Different Time") and Bob Wills (1970's "A Tribute to the Best Damn Fiddle Player in the World") are among the best country music recordings of the era. Three years ago, he paid tribute to a pair of Hank (Williams and Thompson) and his hero-Lytle Frizzell on "Roots, Vol. 1," a tip to old-style honky-tonk.

When his friend, producer Freddie Fowers, suggested a collection of standards, Haggard-the-interpreter was raring to go.

"These were the big songs of the day," he says. "They were as big in small-town California, where I grew up, and in Texas as they were in New York and Los Angeles. It's a neat album and just a little bit different for me."

At 68, Haggard still likes to challenge himself. He found singing the 12 songs — including "As Time Goes By," "Stardust" and "Pennies from Heaven" — one of his toughest tasks. "I guess if I was an opera singer, I'd be singing 'em down," he chuckles. "But instead I'm just an old country singer doing a Sinatra or Bing Crosby-type song."

There's a lot of chord arrangements in these songs. You can't just walk up and sing 'em. I've heard them all my life, but it's not like knocking out three chords and calling it a day."

Haggard cites Nat King Cole as a primary inspiration behind the record.

"He wrote great songs, he sang absolutely superb and he never got old. He died around '65 (at age 45)," Haggard says. "Nat Cole was real hot, even when I was in jail. We had guitar groups that got together. We'd play his songs out in the yard."

Leave it to Haggard to touchen up pop classics with a prison

The poker game is not over, Haggard says. 'People figured I'd die about the time Waylon died. But I'm still planning to be here in 30 years.'

singalong. But he's, always slipped past music preconceptions. Embracing old and new has kept Haggard vital.

Haggard's return to Capitol

Records (where he'll have his own imprint, Hag Records) underscores the extent of the renaissance he's enjoyed over the past five years.

In the mid-'90s, Haggard was on the ropes. He'd weathered prison, multiple divorces, tax

Great White, a metal band with a past, coming to Burley

By Karl Knutson
Winona Daily News

BURLEY — Jack Russell considers himself lucky.

Very lucky. The lead singer of Great White survived a fire Feb. 20, 2003, at the Station Nightclub in Warwick, R.I.

A hundred other people didn't, including guitarist Ty Longley. Many more are still recovering from burns and other injuries sustained after the band's pyrotechnics set off the fire.

Not a day goes by that he doesn't think about it. Or a day that somebody doesn't ask about it.

"It's difficult," Russell said. "I'll never get over it." The band still tours and will perform Saturday night at the Burley Inn, part of the Idaho Regatta weekend.

The hard rock/heavy metal band got together in California in the early '80s. It released "Once Bitten" in 1987 which included hits such as "Save Your Love" and "Rock Me." In 1989, "Twice Shy" went double platinum and the single "Once Bitten, Twice Shy" received a Grammy nomination for Best Hard Rock Performance.

"Unfortunately this band will go down in history more for the fire than the music," Russell said. "It's sad, but that's the hand we were dealt."

Several times, Russell stops himself during the interview. "It's not just about me," he said. "It's not about me." But he knows he's become the face of the tragedy, like it or not.

The decision to get back on the road wasn't easy. He remembers sitting on a therapist's couch not wanting to live, let alone tour.

Thousands of e-mails poured in from fans telling him how much the band and its songs meant.

"I was blown away," Russell said. "Our fans have been so supportive and generous." Russell also wanted to get back on the road so the band could help raise money for the Station Family Fund that helps survivors from the fire.

He's been disappointed by the lack of support in the music industry, saying plenty of big-name musicians preferred to place blame rather than donate money for survivors.

Nicole Kidman stars as Samantha in 'Bewitched'

New to the valley

'Bewitched'

Nicole Kidman and Will Ferrell in an update of the '60s TV series about a domesticated witch with a twitchy nose. Directed by Nora Ephron. With Shirley MacLaine, Michael Caine, Kristin Chenoweth, Jason Schwartzman and Steve Carell. PG-13 for some language, including sex and drug references, and partial nudity.

'George Romero's Land of the Dead'

The tale of a modern-day society in which the walking dead inhabit a wasteland outside the walls of the fortified city that houses the living. Simon Baker, John Leguizamo, Dennis Hopper, Asis Argento, Robert Joy. Written and directed by Romero. R for pervasive strong violence and gore, language, brief sexuality and some drug use.

'The Last Mogul'

Documentary on media magnate Lew Wasserman who rose from being a skinny hustler in the speakeasies of 1920s Cleveland to being the head of entertainment conglomerate MCA. With Robert Evans, Jack Valenti and Dominick Dunne. Written and directed by Barry Avrich. Unrated.

'Herbie: Fully Loaded'

With Danica Patrick—mania reigning, this is an ideal moment for the studio to strap Lindsay Lohan into a crash helmet for a female remake of its old race-track romance, 'The Sandlot.' But 'Herbie: Fully Loaded' waxes out its considerable charm rapidly and spends its final half-hour spinning its wheels. G

'In My Country'

Samuel L. Jackson plays a Washington Post reporter and Juliette Binoche is a South African poet confronting the findings of the country's Truth and Reconciliation Commission hearings, which invited the perpetrators of murder and torture on both sides during the Apartheid era to come forward and confront their victims. sophisticated than that on a Candyland game board? PG (action sequences intense for kids under 6)

'Batman Begins'

Christian Bale plays the caped crusader with a melancholy ordinarily reserved for Hamlet in Christopher Nolan's well-written origin story. But in a film made with such obvious care, is it too much to ask that the action sequences—not be monotone to the point of narcotizing? PG-13 (violence)

'Cinderella Man'

Russell Crowe as Depression-era boxer Jim Braddock. His singing sturdily and quiet urgency recall Spencer Tracy at his humbleness, and most tragic. Superlative film from Ron Howard with exceptional performances from Paul Giamatti and Renee Zellweger. PG-13 (intense boxing violence, profanity)

'Crash'

A raw, edgy study of intersecting lives in Los Angeles, and about the fear and paranoia on the underside of the American melting-pot—Boasting coarse racial epithets and frank depictions of ethnic prejudices, this large ensemble drama will have people talking, and arguing, for a long time. R (violence; profanity; adult themes)

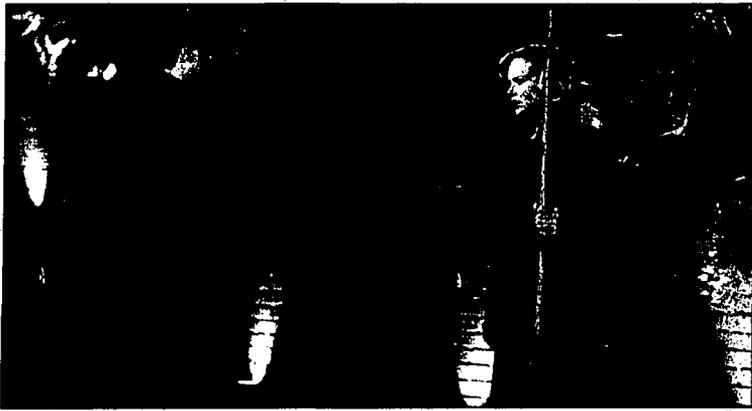

'The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy'

Faithful to Douglas Adams' best-selling 1979 sci-fi parody tome, this long-anticipated adaptation doesn't feel terribly original, nor terribly funny, either. The humor ranges from trippy silliness to lily cleverness to comic conjecture about dolphins and a running joke regarding towels. PG (adult themes, gross space aliens)

'House of Wax'

In this potent and gruesome slasher film, a group of kids, including Elisha Cuthbert, Chad Michael Murray and Paris Hilton, are menaced by a maniac.

WEEKEND

Movies

 who likes to laminate his victims in wax. R (gore, profanity, sexual situations)

'Kicking and Screaming'

A movie about pee-wee-league sports and all those overbearing parents on the sidelines. 'Kicking and Screaming' is yet another low-budget, high-concept vehicle for Will Ferrell to say and do dumb stuff, throw hissy-fits, get punched in the face, and find redemption (as both a dad and a son). PG (thematic elements, language and some crude humor)

'Kung Fu Hustle'

Gladly gritty, martial-arts comedy set in 1930s Shanghai, directed by and starring Stephen Chow (ShaoLin Soccer). R (profanity, extreme stylized violence)

'Lamer Cake'

The never-named narrator/protagonist of this stylish British gangster film has decided to walk away from the drug ring that has been very lucrative for him and go legit. What sets the film apart from like-minded genre films is a stunningly suave lead performance by Daniel Craig, a top-drawer supporting cast and a dynamic directing debut by producer Matthew Vaughn. Working from a script full of sharp dialogue and pointedly evocative sequences by novelist J.J. Connolly, Vaughn uses violence in an effective, nongratuitous way to sculpt the world of consequences in which his characters operate. It's not a perfect film, marred by some misguided flashbacks, an over-complicated narrative and perhaps one too many reversals for its own good. However, it is a sleek, effective entertainment that is a refreshing respite from the slick emptiness of recent American crime dramas. With Kenneth Cranham, Michael Gambon, Colin Meaney and George Firth. R (145) R for strong brutal violence, sexuality, nudity, pervasive language and drug use.

'The Longest Yard'

Adam Sandler in a so-so remake of the 1974 Burt Reynolds bone-crusher classic about convicts versus guards, on the gridiron. The difference between the '74 original and this is the difference between embattled masculinity and playful boyishness. PG-13 (sexual references, drug references, violence)

'Madagascar'

With neither the ambition nor the sophistication of a 'Shrek' or 'The Incredibles,' the computer-animated 'Madagascar' is nevertheless an enjoyable buddy picture in which the four exotic mammals escape the zoo, and return to the wild. Despite the use of the latest digital animation tools, it evokes an old-school Looney Tunes cartooning style. PG (potty humor)

'Mr. & Mrs. Smith'

Marriages, even the happy ones, can sometimes feel like combat zones. But what if a marriage really was a combat zone, with the husband and wife literally trying to kill each other? This is the domestic universe of 'Mr. & Mrs. Smith,' and if you think that premise sounds far-fetched, especially for an action-based romantic comedy, you don't know the half of it. Egotism and major league implausibility are the bread and butter of a film whose motto might be 'look all you want but don't think too hard.' Fortunately when your stars are Brad Pitt and Angelina Jolie, playing married assassins unaware of each other's vocation until they receive orders to kill each other, looking — and listening — will keep you well satisfied. Directed by Doug Liman ('The Bourne Identity'), with Vince Vaughn and Kerry Washington. (R, 110) June 10* (2-00) PG-13 for sequences of violence, intense action, and sexual content.

'Monsters-in-Law'

Jennifer Lopez and Jane Fonda star as Bridgetella meets Godzilla in a comedy so surreal that even Orcaula wouldn't bite. With Michael Vartan. PG-13 (profanity, adult situations)

'The Perfect Man'

Another sad Hilary Duff retreat starring the teen as a daughter trying to peek up her desperate housewife mom Heather Locklear by romancing her Cyrano-style, via email. The script is capable to the point of insulting. PG (dark roots, too much makeup)

'The Sisterhood of the Traveling Pants'

Based on the first in the popular series of young-adult novels by Ann Brashares, 'Sisterhood is Sound by Me' for gits, as sullen, plucky, melodramatic, exuberant, athletic, graceful, crafty, artistic, arrogant, modest, helpless and resourceful as its teenage heroines. What's not to like about a movie that warmly invites she doesn't matter, but that would end friendship do PG (thematic elements, some sexuality and language)

'Star Wars Episode III: Revenge of the Sith'

The best of the three prequels explains how Anakin Skywalker becomes Darth Vader, but fails to explain how George Lucas gets away with the dumbest dialogue in the universe. Hayden Christensen can't carry the weight of the Anakin role. Ewan McGregor tries to put some pep in Obi-Wan. Natalie Portman looks lovely and the galaxy of fiery planets, neo-Deco cityscapes and awesome flying ships is rendered with state-of-the-art precision. It's long, and then it's done. May divorce be with you. PG-13 (violence, darkness) problems and heart surgery. Through it all, there was the music — but even that turned sour.

His released two live recordings in 1994 and 1996 — that were essentially lost because of squabbles with his label, Curb Records.

Shelton by minimizing cover art and little publicity, both albums sold poorly and fell quickly out of print. Curb regains the rights to the songs, Haggard is unable to release them.

"I memorialized he shut down for a few years before rallying with Los Angeles punk label 'KIDZ,' which released 'If I Could Only Fly' in 2000. It's one of the finest albums, country or otherwise, of this half-decade.

Since then, he's continued to record what he pleases — at the pace of an artist half his age. A bit of venom still trickles out at the mention of the two lost discs, but it's tempered with survivor's instincts.

"The poker game is not over," he says.

"People figured I'd die about the time Waylon died. But I'm still planning to be here in 10 years."

In fact, Haggard has lured famed producer Jimmy Bowen — who's worked with artists from Bing Crosby to George Strait — out of retirement to record a new set of songs for 2005.

Haggard's long view is part of what makes him such a vital voice.

He's moved by instinct, not winds of change. He's not the first to dust off the standards — Willie Nelson did it almost 30 years ago, Rod Stewart and Boz Scaggs more recently — but he felt the time was right.

Similarly, he was moved to pay tribute to Rodgers and Wills when the former was long dead and the latter forgotten and on death's door. "These are great entertainers," he says. "There's not a timeline for that. Their songs don't cease to be great because they're not popular at a given time."

Haggard's not cold to the glow of nostalgia. His life has taken him to the White House and the Big House, on freight cars and tour buses, and he still sounds humbled by the ride.

"I get very emotional when I think back," he says. "I seldom get a few minutes alone, but when I do, I can entertain myself with memories."

"I've associated with John Wayne, Roy Rogers, some of the greatest entertainers of all time. Muhammad Ali came to my show. I've played for presidents. Some of the most influential people in the world brag about being a Merle Haggard fan.

"Sure, there's a lot of people who hate me, too. A lot of people didn't like Elvis. That's the way love goes. But it's on with life, on with music."

Band

 "People almost said, 'That's Great White's problem.' It's not about us," Russell said. "This is an ongoing thing. People need long-term health care."

For a long time, Russell had survivor's guilt. He still expects to see Longley to his right playing guitar. "I still believe he's still here," he said. "But when things change, I know mine has. Nobody came out of that place unscathed."

Great White hasn't released a CD of new material since 1999. Russell is just beginning to think about writing again. Dealing with the fire's aftermath has made Russell more appreciative for life's little things.

"I can either hide and feel sorry for myself but I'm actually one of the lucky ones," Russell said.

"Whether I'm taking a breath or looking at a sunset, everything I do these days is sweeter."

The legal fallout

While each Russell nor the other surviving members of Great White were charged with any crime in connection with the February 2003 fire in a Rhode Island nightclub that killed 100 people.

But the band's former manager, Daniel Bloche — who set off the fireworks that sparked the blaze — and the owners of the nightclub each face 200 counts of involuntary manslaughter, two for every Rhode Islander who died.

They also injured when the band's pyrotechnic display ignited highly flammable foam that filled the club as sound equipment.

All these men have pleaded innocent, and the trial is expected sometime in 2006. The lawyers have said the lawsuit allowed the fire to spread quickly through the nightclub and released toxic substances that may have contributed to the death toll.

Rhode Island state law says such flammable material can't be used as soundproofing in clubs and bars.

Civil suits filed by 240 survivors and family members of the victims were consolidated. The civil complaints allege negligence by several companies, including those who promoted the concert, the foam manufacturers, foam estate fire inspectors, the nightclub owners and Great White.

Among the music former Great White manager Charlie Fazio was accused of defamation charges brought by Russell. Russell, who sued for $10 million plus punitive damages, claimed that Fazio, the co-manager of the band from April to September of 2003, falsely told the press and others that Russell and the band's other co-manager "stole money" from a charity set up to aid victims of the fire.

Judge Robert L. Heis of the Los Angeles Superior Court ruled that any comment made by Fazio regarding the charity or missing money was one of public concern and that she was thus protected by the First Amendment.

The only way Russell could have overturned the courts order was to prove that Fazio made these comments in "clear and convincing malice" and that they were in fact not true. Russell could prove not that.

SAN ANTONIO — With the NBA title on the line, Tim Duncan and the San Antonio Spurs proved themselves worthy champions.

Duncan came up huge in the second half and was chosen as MVP after having the worst playoff series of his career, and Manu Ginobili had another breakthrough performance Thursday night to lead the Spurs past the Detroit Pistons 81-74 in a Game 7 that was as thrilling as it was rare.

In a matchup of the past two NBA chumps, the Spurs came through in the clutch to win their third title in seven years and deny Detroit the franchise.

The Spurs are certainly not a dynasty, but their staying power as a championship caliber team helps explain a legacy that history will revere with an added measure of respect.

Duncan had 25 points and 11 rebounds while shuffling off a stretch of eight straight misses that ended in the third quarter with the teams tied. Ginobili scored 23 points with a series of slashing, penetrating drives and big passes.

Behind Duncan, the stoic established star, and Ginobili, the flashy young Argentine, the first Game 7 in more than a decade ended with the Spurs celebrating on their home court as silver and black confetti streamed down from the rafters.

"We just played a great team. I don't know how they did it but I am thrilled," Spurs coach Gregg Popovich said after embracing his good friend, Detroit coach Larry Brown, as the game ended. Popovich became the third coach with three titles while Brown headed into an uncertain future still stuck on one.

"I'm just so proud this year as I went last year," said Brown, whose team recovered from two early blowout losses and dictated the series for four straight games before San Antonio, and especially Duncan — reassured itself at the end.

The NBA had waited a long time for a game with so much at stake and so little room for error. And the difference came in the fourth quarter, when the Spurs were able to make the plays the Pistons couldn't.

Midway through the period, Ginobili assisted on a 3-pointer by Robert Horry and Duncan found Bruce Bowen alone outside the arc for another 3 that put San Antonio ahead 67-61. Detroit pulled within four before the Duncan-Ginobili combo clicked perfectly on two straight possessions.

First, Ginobili drove the lane and drew Duncan's defender, zipping a pass to Duncan all alone on the baseline for a 19-footer. Next, Duncan had three defenders collapsing on him when he saw Ginobili all alone at the 3-point line. The shot was perfect, and San Antonio led 72-65, with 2:57 left.

Detroit's next three possessions brought an airball, a foul shot and an offensive foul, but all San Antonio could produce after that shot was a single free throw by Duncan. The score was 72-66 entering the final minute when Ginobili made the play that clinched it, weaving through several defenders for a layup that was almost too easy, making it 75-64.

The Pistons, who were outscored 24-17 in the final quarter, couldn't recover.

Detroit had won 10 straight possession games with a chance to eliminate its opponent and was trying to become the first team in NBA history to win two Game 7s on the road in a postseason. As resilient as they were, that turned out to be too tall a task.

"I am unbelievably happy. I couldn't be happier," Ginobili said. "It's just an unbelievable feeling. I need another body to feel it."

Duncan's legacy was as much in question as his team's. He had struggled through out the series against a superior defensive team, the Pistons presenting the toughest test the Spurs had faced in the finals after defeating the 1998 Knicks and the 2003 Nets, teams that might have been a little too pleased just to have a shot at the title.

"I don't listen to anything that was said. I wanted to come out here and give my best effort," Duncan said after winning his third finals MVP. "We fought for this thing."

Duncan came up short on a dunk and a 21-footer early in the third quarter, giving him six consecutive misses, and Detroit slowly began to build upon its lead. A dunk by Tayshaun Prince, a score and two foul shots by Chauncey Billups, a poor possession by San Antonio and a spin move by Antonio McDyess made it 48-38.

Duncan's string of misses reached eight before he converted a three-point play, and Ginobili drove for a score off a turnover to complete a 7-0 run that got the Spurs right back in it. A 14-foot bank shot by Duncan — a part of his usual repertoire that had been absent in this series — produced a 53-53 tie before he knocked down another shot. In the end, the glass, this time from a few steps farther away, to help produce a 57-57 tie entering the fourth.

Duncan had 12 points and six rebounds in the third quarter.

"Tim came out huge today. He was very focused this morning and he played like an MVP," teammate Tony Parker said.

After a flat start, Popovich told the Spurs during a timeout to start creating for each other — to stop standing around on offense and letting the Pistons be the aggressors with their defense. There was a change in Duncan immediately after that, after as he had a blocked shot, an assist and a tip-in to start a 10-0 run that gave San Antonio a 12 lead.

Each team's defensive intensity was a bit sharper than their offensive execution, in large part because Billups and Ginobili each picked up two early fouls, and the first quarter ended with the Spurs still at 10-0.

Point guards continued to be difficult to come by in the second quarter, the Pistons hurting San Antonio's offense with many long outside shots and too few possessions in which the ball moved around, and not enough inside penetration generated by their better work on the offensive boards.

The Spurs were having their own problems, almost never getting an easy shot while trying as hard as they could — too hard, perhaps — to force their offenses through. Ben Wallace had dunks on three consecutive possessions late in the game, giving him a team-high 12 points on a 7-7 shooting as Detroit led 39-38 at halftime.

Nadal, Henman fall at Wimbledon

The Associated Press

WIMBLEDON, England — Gael Monfils, Rafael Nadal stumbled Thursday at Wimbledon.

The French Open champion lost only one of his 13 break-point chances and lost in the second round to unseeded Gilles Muller 6-4, 4-6, 6-3, 6-4. The 19-year-old was unimpaired on grass courts to win Wimbledon this year, and missed opportunities doomed him against Muller.

Nadal said, "I am playing good on grass. But (against) any player, when he serves good all match, it's difficult. And Muller served at a very good level all the time. It's not easy."

Also ousted was Englishman Tim Henman, who failed to make it into the second week of the tournament for the first time since 1995. Henman lost to Dmitry Tursunov 3-6, 2-6, 3-6, 6-3, 6-6.

No. 2 Andy Roddick led Daniele Bracciali 7-5, 6-3, 6-7 (3) when their match was suspended until Friday because of darkness.

On the women's side, the Williams sisters advanced to the third round. No. 4-seeded Serena dropped the first set for the second straight match, but rallied to beat qualifier Mara Santangelo 2-6, 6-3, 6-2. No. 14 Venus defeated Nicole Pietrangeli 6-3.

The sisters, both two-time champions, could meet in the fourth round.

French Open runner-up Mary Pierce saved a match point with an ace and beat qualifier Julia Vakulenko 4-6, 7-6 (7), 9-7.

Defending Wimbledon champion Maria Sharapova won the first nine games, lost just four points in the second set and beat 15-year-old Seel Karantatcheva 6-0, 6-1.

The No. 6-seeded Henman had the partisan crowd on Court Court in a frenzy when he overcame two match points and broke for 5-all in the final set. But he was broken to fall behind 7-6, and this time Tursunov served out the match, ending his 20th ace on the final point.

"I've certainly won my fair share of matches like that in that environment, and I got myself back into it," Henman said. "I'm not able to finish that off with a win is disappointing."

Karantatcheva held her own at the start against Sharapova. The first game lasted 14 points, and the Bulgarian had five game points in the opening set — but failed to convert any in the second set. Karantatcheva lost the first two points and the last 12.

"Grass for now is definitely not my thing," she said. "I'm not sure I was ready for such a good opponent in such a little time on grass."

Filer hopes to host

2007 rodeo

By Mark Liptak Times-News correspondent

POCATELLO—The Idaho High School State Rodeo Championships have been held annually in Pocatello for the past ten years. The 2006 edition of the event is slated for Pocatello, Idaho, in 2007. Apparently there are no guarantees.

For the first time in many years it appears a number of locations in Idaho are going to try to get the week-long event beginning in 2007. The event pumps in a considerable amount of money to a local economy and is worth attempting to get.

Sam Nettings, rodeo volunteer and past president of the Pocatello Chamber of Commerce knows full well how important the rodeo is to the Southeast Idaho area.

"I'd say for the most part, about a million dollars worth of business goes to the area," he said. "That's counting shopping, eating at restaurants, and so on."

Pocatello got the rodeo ten years ago, after Filer — which had hosted the event for a number of years — lost it because of a scheduling conflict. Apparently that area is very keen on getting it back.

"Filer has already put in a bid" according to Ben Rogers of the Idaho National Rodeo Director.

Nettings also said that the Nepesa Center has already met with some of the board members in an effort to lay the groundwork for one case.

Cowboys punish Rigby in home sweep

By Nathaniel Garbrandt Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — The Twin Falls Cowboys continued their conference sweep on Thursday evening, handing Area C rival Rigby a five-inning 12-2 defeat in Game 1 of an American Legion class AA doubleheader at Sky Walker Field.

With the victory, the Cowboys notched their seventh consecutive conference win to pull to 7-2 in Area C and 15-0 overall. "I don't expect to lose another game the rest of the year," said Twin Falls pitcher Chance Elam, who upped his summer record to 4-0 with the win. "Because we definitely have the pitching to do it and the hitting."

That said, the early games weren't exactly cause for excitement with the Cowboys' defense.

When Rigby's Cody Smith popped a solo homer over the left field wall to tie the game at 2-2 in the second, it looked as if Twin Falls might have a game on its hands against a team that had yet to record a win. The Cowboys had come out of the gate lethargic, committing a pair of errors in the opening frame to allow a run, while recording only a single hit through three innings against mediocre pitching.

But against an obviously outclassed team that committed six errors by game's end, it was only a matter of time before the Cowboys would knock the frost off their bats.

And that they did, blowing the game open with a seven-run 4-0 fourth inning, ending the contest with a two-run single in the fifth from cleanup hitter Paul Gerhart.

"Chance Elam kept us in it," said Twin Falls coach Tim Stadelmeier. "We started off a little bit sluggish. We had two errors right off the bat, which is not typical of us — normally we're pretty solid on defense. They made some errors throughout and we capitalized on them. I thought we swung the bats all right. Overall we did

Mariners' woes continue against A's

The Associated Press

SEATTLE — Kirk Saarloos pitched a four-hitter for his second career shutout, leading Oakland over the Seattle Mariners 5-0 Thursday. Hopefully, they're able to relax and have a fun day, Saarloos said. "I don't think there's a pitcher out there who is going to turn down a chance to have a complete game."

Saarloos (4-4), a 26-year-old right-hander acquired from Houston in April 2004, tied his career high with seven strikeouts and walked none. His only previous complete game was a six-hit shutout for Houston over Pittsburgh July 25, 2002.

Scott Humberberg had his first for the eighth time in his career, and Oakland finished with 16 hits.

Humberberg is not happy after losing his first basemen's job to rookie Dan Johnson, recalled from Triple-A Sacramento May 27 after Erubiel Durazo went on the disabled list with left elbow tendinitis.

"It's not like playing," Hatterberg said. "You really do get a routine and stick to it. You do yourself crazy doing it. It'd still rather be playing."

Humberberg took from a 12-inning, 5-4 loss Wednesday night as the A's won three of four against Seattle and won for the fifth time in six games overall. The place A's are 6-3 against the Mariners this season, including 4-2 at Seattle.

Ryan Franklin (3-9) allowed five runs and 11 hits in 6-2-3 innings. Seattle's Ichiro Suzuki went hitless for the second straight game, going 0-for-4. He was 0-for-6 in the Mariners' 13-inning, 5-4 victory Wednesday night.

Twins 6, Tigers 2
MINNEAPOLIS — Carlos Silva pitched his second complete game, working around nine hits and spurring the Minnesota Twins out of their slump with a 6-2 win over the Detroit Tigers on Thursday.

The Twins took advantage of Jason Johnson's bases-loaded wild pitch in the first and ended a four-game losing streak. Matthew LeCroy homered and drove in three runs as Minnesota won for only the fourth time in 10 games.

Chris Shelton had three hits, including a home run, for the Tigers, who had won four straight and seven of eight.

Devil Rays 9, Yankees 4
NEWYORK — Jorge Cantu hit a pair of two-run homers, and Tampa Bay won its first series at Yankee Stadium since Sept. 24, 27, 1989, improving to 7-3 overall against New York this year.

Damon Hollins added a three-run double as Tampa Bay took three of four from the Yankees. The Devil Rays are 8-29 on the road but half those wins have been at Yankee Stadium. They are 4-2, but they still have a winning record in any overcame a 6-4 deficit and a pair of Derek Lee homers to gain a split of the four-game series.

Ricky Bottalico (1-1) pitched 11 2-3 innings for his first win since June 17 last year with the New York Mets, and Derrick Turnbow finished for his 12th save.

Lee had three hits to raise his major league-leading average to .395 and took over the home run lead with 22. Chicago has lost six of its last eight games and eight of 11.

Dodgers 4, Padres 3
SAN DIEGO — Jeff Kent hit a sacrifice fly with one out in the 10th, his second late-inning RBI, and Los Angeles rallied for the win in the four-game, best-of-five series.

Cesar Izturiz doubled off Trevor Hoffman (0-4) opening the 10th, was sacrificed to third by Mike Edwards and scored on Kent's fly to center.

Marlins 8, Braves 0
ATLANTA — Donnell Willis pitched a five-hitter to become the NL's first 12-game winner, leading Florida over Atlanta.

Miguel Cabrera hit two homers and drove in a career-high six runs for the Marlins, who were outscored 13-0 in the first two games of the series, but used Willis' dominant outplay to salvage the finale.

Willis (12-2) walked one and struck out seven in his third shutout of the season and fifth of his career. He stretched his streak of consecutive scoreless innings to 19 in his eighth career complete game and fourth this season.

Goodbody sixth after outdoor nationals Day 1

The Times-News

CARSON, Calif. — Wendell Jaymie Goodbody is currently in sixth place in the heptathlon with 2,786 points after Day 1 of the USA Junior Outdoor Track and Field Championships at the Home Depot Center in Carson, Calif.

"She felt pretty good, but had just a mediocre-type day," father Steve Goodbody said in a phone interview. "She never really got going, but she'll get it all tomorrow."

Goodbody recorded times of 16:34 seconds in the 100-meter hurdles, and 26:46 in the 200-meter dash. She cleared 5-foot-3 inches in the high jump, and threw 37-4 in the shot put. Goodbody's Stanford University teammate Lauren Stewart is currently in first in the girls heptathlon with 3,122 points.

The heptathlon finishes up tomorrow. Afterward, Goodbody will fly to Florida to receive the SAMMY Mill must-award. Florida's Brad Silbester will begin competition in the boy's decathlon on Saturday.

Pension issues brought up by Mikán's death

By Bob Baum
Associated Press writer

PHOENIX — Perhaps in death George Mikán can accomplish what he worked so hard to achieve in the last years of his life—a boost in the meager pension provided to the pioneer players of the NBA.

When he died on June 1, 18 days shy of his 81st birthday, Mikán was praised throughout the league for his quiet dignity and service to the game.

"George Mikán truly revolutionized the game and was the NBA's first true superstar," NBA commissioner David Stern said at the time. "He had the ability to be a fierce competitor on the court and a gentle giant off the court. We may never see one man impact the game of basketball as he did, and represent it with such warmth and grace."

But words do not translate into dollars.

Strapped for cash after Mikán's long illness, with most of his memorabilia sold, the family accepted Shaquille O'Neal's offer to pay for the funeral.

For his 8.5 seasons in the NBA, when his star power helped keep the fledgling league alive, Mikán received a pension of $1,700 per month. His wife of 58 years will get half that—$875. Mikán was one of the pre-'68ers, those who played in the NBA prior to 1968, the year the players first formed an organized bargaining unit. The old-timers receive $200—two days' meal allowance for current players—for each season they played.

There are about 70 pre-'68ers who receive benefits, according to ex-player Larry Staverman, who serves as coordinator of their loosely knit association. Another 80 or so played three or four years, and receive no pension.

Mikán campaigned quietly but persistently for more, writing letters, making phone calls and giving interviews. He was scheduled to talk with The Associated Press on June 2, the day after he died.

But just felt that the pioneers had done enough for the game to be considered in the same group as everybody else," Mikán's son Terry said. "He was determined to at least make everybody aware of what he cared about."

Staverman said the old-timers only want the same that is given to those who played after 1968.

"The post-'68ers aren't exactly showing with riches, either. They can choose a lump sum payment or receive $357 per month for each season played, with a minimum of three years served. Their widows receive half that much. But the post-'68ers pension kicks in at age 50 for anyone who played at least three seasons. Those who played before 1968 didn't get theirs until they turned 62, and must have played at least five years.

Mad Davis, executive director of the Retired NBA Players Association, believes all the retirees should receive the same amount, and all deserve a big boost.

"Our pension is underfunded significantly," he said. "My view is that we would like, in this collective bargaining to be brought up to federal guidelines, a 60 percent increase to benefits. I think it behooves the NBA to take care of the pioneers and the legends of the league that made the league what it is today."

Mikán's death might have nudged the two sides into action.

"We know the issue is there," NBA deputy commissioner Russ Granik said last week. "We haven't given much focus to pension for anybody up to this point. We do have the more fundamental issues to take care of before we get to that."

Granik said that altering pensions isn't an easy chore, and that the special circumstances of the pre-'68ers make it even harder. They were granted pensions in 1988 in a special addendum to the contract.

Still, Granik said, "There is no question it will get discussed during this bargaining session."

The NBA Players Association did not return two calls asking for its position on the issue.

Staverman, who played for Cincinnati from 1958 to 1964, said he has written to every NBA owner, to the players union and to prominent former pro asking for their support. He emphasizes that any help would be a short-term commitment, since the average age of the pre-'68ers is 79.

"We're all going to be gone in five to 10 years," he said.

A statue of Mikán taking his trademark hook shot stands inside the Target Center in Minneapolis. Staverman believes the big man deserves an even better monument. The new contract, he said, should contain a section that gives the old retirees the same benefits of those who played later, and it should be called "the Mikán addendum."

"What a great way," Staverman said, "to memorialize the first great superstar in the NBA."

Attorney Talmage Boston poses for a photo with his book at his office in Dallas. Boston has parlayed his passion into an impressive second career as a baseball historian and writer.

Dallas lawyer has become baseball scribe

By Jamie Aron
Associated Press writer

DALLAS — In a law firm high above downtown Dallas, this top attorney's office looks like a storage room for the Baseball Hall of Fame.

Bats used by Ty Cobb, Joe Jackson and Lou Gehrig lean against a sofa. On the desk, legal documents bump against several replicas of Fenway Park and a display featuring the National League, All-Star and World Series baseballs carrying the signature of former commissioner Bart Giamatti.

Then there's the staff on the walls: A shrine to Jackie Robinson—a shadow box commemorating the opening of Nolan Ryan's museum; a picture of Ted Williams and Joe DiMaggio with former President Bush; a ball signed by Bush with a handwritten note mentioning Gehrig was his hero.

So a high-profile lawyer collects baseball memorabilia. Big deal, huh?

Well, this fan, Talmage Boston, doesn't just love the game—he's parlayed his passion into an impressive second career as a baseball historian and writer.

Boston wrote a book about the 1939 season that Williams enjoyed so much he kept his copy in a prized spot in his home. That book also led to Boston writing essays about Ryan's life that hang on the walls of the pitcher's museum and, in turn, helped him earn a spot in the media section of the Texas Baseball Hall of Fame.

These days, Boston is promoting his book about '39, which recently was released to a national audience. This version, "1939: Baseball's Tipping Point," has the support of some heavy hitters—a preface from the president of the Baseball Hall of Fame, and a foreword by another lawyer-turned-author, John Grisham.

Boston was born Oct. 1, 1953. The two main stories in New York newspapers that day were about Earl Warren being named Chief Justice of the Supreme Court and the Yankees beating the Dodgers in Game 1 of the World Series.

"So I came into a world where people were talking about law and baseball," he says, laughing. Boston grew up in Houston and was getting into baseball about the time the Colt .45s brought the majors to town. But the Red Sox became his team for a simple reason: The kid thought it was neat seeing his last name across their jerseys.

In high school, Boston and another Red Sox-loving pal made a pact to be in Cooperstown when their favorite player, Cal Hulsewzski, went into the Hall of Fame. Sure enough, in 1989 when Yaz and Johnny Bench were inducted, they were part of the biggest crowd the Hall had ever seen.

A decade earlier, Boston dated the daughter of former Yankees infielder Bobby Brown. The relationship didn't pan out, but Boston remained friends with her dad—and in '89, Brown was president of the American League and helped Boston get special access to the weekend activities.

On the flight back to Dallas, Boston began writing Brown a thank-you note.

"The letter turns into kind of an essay on why I love baseball and why I love baseball history," he said. "That sparks me to start reading more and start writing about baseball. Next thing you know, I start writing for publication."

Boston already had a scholarly scribe for a role model: Giamatti, whose love of the game took him from president of Yale to president of the NL to commissioner. Boston was so taken by Giamatti's baseball writings that he referred to Giamatti as "my spokesperson." During Boston's trip to Cooperstown, he even asked Brown's wife to have Giamatti sign a ball for him.

Two days after Boston received the autograph in the mall, Giamatti died. Boston ended up writing a tribute that was printed in a local paper as a letter to the editor. It was his first baseball byline.

Next came a story about Ricky signing Robinson and integrating baseball in 1947. Then, he struck his big idea.

Mixing for bookworthy subjects, Boston noticed that many authors had targeted specific years. Among them were the DiMaggio-Williams drama of 1941, Robinson's breakthrough in '47 and the Mickey Mantle-Roger Maris homer race of '61.

"But in all my readings, all these things kept popping up about 1939," Boston said. "It was the year the Hall of Fame opened and Little League was founded. It was Williams' first season and Gehrig's tragic last season. And, despite the Iron Horse breaking down, the Yankees had what many experts call the greatest season by any team, with DiMaggio winning his first MVP award."

There also were some key off-field milestones, like every team being on radio for the first time and the game making its debut on a newfangled device called the television. The Negro Leagues were thriving, too.

Oh, and 1939 also was celebrated as baseball's centennial, which was commemorated on a postage stamp, a first for the sports world.

Boston boiled it down to a dozen topics, devoting a chapter to each. His reasoning: "Someone like my father or my wife is never going to read a 300-page book about Lou Gehrig or Joe DiMaggio or Ted Williams, but they might read a 20-page chapter."

The book came out in November 1994. The timing couldn't have been worse.

Baseball was on strike, the World Series had been canceled and anyone who cared about the game was already in the club with Ken Burns' documentary, "Baseball," and an accompanying book. Boston's book was released only in a few Texas cities. The publisher soon went out of business.

Despite not hitting many bookshelves, Boston's work landed on the right ones.

It got him the Ryan gig and a regular appearance on the Rangers manager Johnny Daves' weekly television show talking baseball history. He also became a frequent contributor to the Fort Worth Star-Telegram and The Dallas Morning News, and now writes a regular column for a suburban newspaper.

Through it all, Boston has continued his legal work. Pursuing two careers has required patience from his wife and two teenagers, which is why he dedicated the new version of the book to them. He's handled the juggling act by looking up to "people who stand out in more than one area," such as Giamatti making his mark in education as a baseball and Brown in cardiology and baseball.

Brown said he sees a lot of Giamatti's best qualities in Boston, too.

"Both are very bright, very into baseball," Brown said. "They're able to transcribe their passion for the game into books and articles... He's just done a great job."

CHERRY HILLS VILLAGE, Colo.

ANNIKA Sorenstam showed a human side to her machine-like march toward the Grand Slam, taking a deep breath of the mile-air Thursday morning to help steady herself at the U.S. Women's Open.

She doesn't get nervous very often. Rarer still is when she misses the fairway.

Sorenstam started with a bogey from the rough and ended the first round with a three-putt bogey from just off the green.

Along the way, she conquered her nerves and broke even with tough Cherry Hills finishing with a 71 that left her two shots behind Angela Stanford.

Even with a peaceful view of the snow-capped Rockies on the horizon, Sorenstam felt the pressure of trying to become the first player to capture the first three legs of—the professional Grand Slam.

"U.S. Open, a lot of people, tough golf course, a lot on my mind," she said with a smile when asked to explain her nerves on the 10th tee. "I put a lot of pressure on myself. I really want to do well here. When you stand on the tee, you know you have to hit fairways. That's double pressure right there."

"I'm just happy I found the rhythm in the middle."

The scorecard showed an even-par round for Sorenstam, but she worked hard to keep it from being worse. She salvaged her round with five fifty par saves on her second nine, twice making 6-footers without ever looking at the hole until she heard the ball rattle around the bottom of the cup.

Cherry Hills didn't leave anyone with much chance to relax. With half of the 156-player field completing the first round, Stanford was the only one to break 70.

Dr. Rod Kack deals with his biggest patient on Saturday nights

By Linda Brittan
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS—After tending to the needs of various patients throughout the week at his busy car, nose, and throat practice in Twin Falls, Dr. Rod Kack shifts his focus to just one very large and demanding patient on Saturday nights.

A 2,500-pound modified car with the race in the Premier series at the Magic Valley Speedway.

Kack has returned to racing in the Grand National division last season and is still conscious of the differences between the classes.

"The Grand Nationals are easier to drive, but I think the modifieds are more exciting," Kack said. "However, the modifieds do require a lot more of the driver's attention."

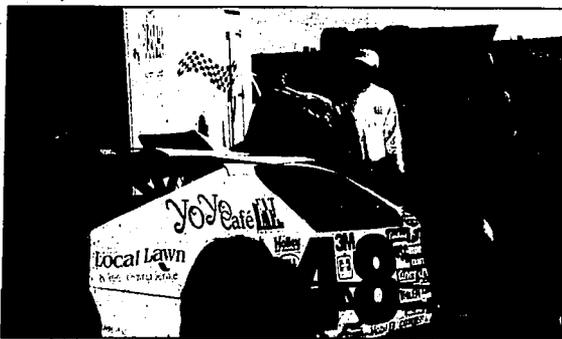

In order to have the best setup possible for race time, Kack relies on his impressive patients the car may need to team members Louis Lopez and Cliff Lemmons, who are able to cover the mechanical details.

"I'm lucky to have them," Kack said. "I try and tell them what the car is doing and they try to make it behave properly."

But does it always work? "No," Kack said. "Sometimes just the change in the weather and track conditions has a profound effect on how the car performs that night."

Lopez explains that he maintains a conservative setup on the car. "I try and make the car very drivable," Lopez said. "Sometimes the (Kack) gets very hung-out there, but I can't complain. He's doing well."

Currently sitting in sixth position in the point standings,

Dr. Rod Kack (center), Louis Lopez (left) and Cliff Lemmons make some adjustments to Kack's modified car earlier this season.

Kack is competing with fellow team members Rob Vest and Mike Buddenhagen in each Premier Series race. As for the subject of rivalry, Kack thinks that type of situation can put a positive spin into the work.

"Everyone wants to win," Kack said. "But against good competition, you always want everyone to race well. But then again, you also want to beat them."

Kack hopes to see an improvement on his current spot in the standings when the racing season wraps up in September.

"Of course I'd like to win the division, but to end up in the top five at the end of the season — I would consider it a successful year," Kack said.

Proving that races at MVS come from all different walks of life, you can see Dr. Kack making the rounds in the number 48 Marud Medical Health Spa modified this Saturday night along with the Grand National, Pony, Hornet and Queen Bee divisions. A special encore presentation of the roll-over contest will be held after the main event races.

The management of the Magic Valley Speedway has issued a special announcement that all tickets for the U.S. Grand Prix held at Indianapolis Motor Speedway last Sunday will be honored at MVS this Saturday night's admission to see some competitive and close-up racing that is set to begin at 7:05 p.m.

Jack Roush finally has a NASCAR powerhouse

Biffle, Martin, Busch among powerful team's drivers

By Mike Harris
Associated Press writer

NEW YORK—For his first 15 years in NASCAR's top stock car series, Jack Roush spent tons of money, hired the best people he could find and tried in vain to win a Cup championship.

Mark Martin, the driver who came with Roush to what was then called Winston Cup in 1988, never quite made it to the top, finishing second four times, the last in 2002.

Roush, a mathematician, innovator and owner of a company that supplies parts to the automotive and transportation industry, sometimes waxes verbally with NASCAR's rulemakers and became bitter about several decisions that went against him over the years.

"I honestly never thought NASCAR was going to allow me to win a championship, no matter what I did," Roush said after Mark Kenseth finally gave him a Cup title in 2003.

Now, with Kurt Busch having given Roush his second straight title last season, his powerful team of 10 a tremendous start in 2005, with eight wins in the first 15 races, some of his competitors are wondering here's any way to stop the five-car Roush juggernaut.

Last Sunday at Michigan International Speedway, Greg Biffle, who has emerged as the sport's newest star, won for the fifth time this season and the sixth time in 16 races, including the 2004 season finale. Carl Edwards, in his first full season in Cup, won his second race of the year the previous week in Pocono, and the reasonable youngster quickly is finding a following in the sport.

Martin, Kenseth and Edwards finished third through fifth at Michigan, and Busch, who had run in the top 10 throughout the race, faded to 12th at the end.

Heading into Sunday's Dodge/Save Mart 350 at Infineon Raceway in Sonoma, Calif., Biffle is second in the season points.

He is trailing Hendrick Motorsports driver Jimmie Johnson by just 49 points, with Edwards fourth, Martin fifth, Busch, who also won a race earlier this season, ninth and Kenseth, who has struggled most of the season, 21st.

Martin, flashing some of his old-time talent and enthusiasm during his final full season in the Cup series, has an explanation for why the Roush team is running so well these days.

"It's because we've got great engines right now and we've got great handling packages," Martin said.

And there's more. "It's only my opinion," Martin added, "but I believe that Roush Racing has the hottest lineup of drivers in NASCAR, depth wise. We dopt have an off team right now period. We've got great engines and great drivers and great crew chiefs."

It would be hard for anybody to dispute that right now. Rusty Wallace, a contemporary of Martin and also in his

"He historically has done that," Roush said. "Carl is the latest indication of that."

"He's had very little experience with these cars and has moved right in and taken right over — much like Greg did and like Kurt Busch did before."

"I guess Mark Martin was the daddy of it, but we've got a culture of being pragmatic and looking at what's in front of us and thinking about the things that we need to do — and that's just the way we live, and the guys do very well."

Biffle summed up the prevailing feeling among the Roush drivers.

"You know, I just feel so lucky to be able to be where I'm at driving these race cars and being able to win these races," he said.

"I just feel pretty special about it."

He credits the recent success to "really, really smart people" who are able to adapt to rule changes and new equipment faster than peers on other teams.

Deadline for potato growers approaches

TWIN FALLS — Potato Growers of Idaho is urging all fresh growers to sign up for the Trade Adjustment Assistance Program at their local Farm Service Agency offices before Monday's deadline.

Fresh potato growers and crop-share landlords who can show a reduction of income from the 2003 crop-year are eligible to apply.

Fresh growers can receive 3.5 cents per hundredweight on all potatoes sold into the fresh market, including the processed portion of their sales, PGI said.

Eligible farm operators and landlords, as well as partners and spouses, also will be eligible to receive up to two years of free education from the U.S. Department of Labor, PGI said. Eligibility for education benefits requires an "at risk" interest in the 2003 crop.

There is no deadline for growers to apply for Department of Labor training once their TAA petitions are approved.

Other TAA benefits include a technical assistance workshop (which is required to receive the other benefits), assistance with marketing and business-related plans and advanced technical assistance. Growers will fill out surveys about their interests at the required workshop to determine what voluntary advanced training they may be interested in receiving for free.

The first round of technical training starts Tuesday in Twin Falls and Burley.

For information, call PGI at 785-1110 or Paul Patterson, a University of Idaho economist, at 529-8376.

CSI will hold a free occupational workshop

TWIN FALLS — The Center for New Directions at the College of Southern Idaho is offering a free occupational research workshop.

The workshop aims to help participants sort through their options for training and careers, and weigh the factors of expected pay, required investment in training and job availability.

Participants will research areas of interest for an occupational choice.

The informal free workshop is set for 4 to 6 p.m. Thursday. The session is open for individualized help.

Time spent in the session depends on the amount of information each participant needs.

To sign up, call 732-6690 or 1-800-680-0274, ext. 6680. The registration deadline is Wednesday.

T.F. workshop teaches grant-proposal writing

TWIN FALLS — A workshop, conducted by a grant writer and evaluator, will teach how to prepare successful applications to obtain some of the millions of dollars available in federal and private grants, organizers said.

The event will be held from 9 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. July 12 at the Shilo Inn Suites, 1586 Blue Lakes Blvd. in Twin Falls.

Conducted by Don Myers — a 25-year veteran of writing, evaluating and managing state and federal grants for two Western states — the workshop will cover finding sources of grants, mistakes to avoid, types of grants available, major components of a grant proposal and finding Internet funding sources, among other subjects.

Myers now serves as a consultant to organizations, government agencies and others who seek funding from grant programs.

Open to representatives of municipal, county, state, school and nonprofit organizations, the workshop costs $195 per person for professionals and $145 for those connected with nonprofit organizations. Group rates are available.

To register, call 1-888-829-0837 or visit www.regstrawriting.com.

Family celebrates orchard's history

By Blair Koch
Times News correspondent

BUHL — Tucked into the scenic Snake River Canyon is an established orchard as old as the towns surrounding it. This weekend about 75 of Richard Kelley's family members will converge at Kelley's Orchard to celebrate the family's 100-year milestone in the Magio Valley, just a couple of years shy of the orchard's own centennial.

The orchard, which used to be known as Gourley Orchards, was established by John Steele Gourley, grandfather of current owner Richard Kelley.

Gourley moved into the area in 1905 when his father, John, accepted the position of minister and established the First Presbyterian Church in Twin Falls. His sister, Margaret, came with them from Pennsylvania following the 1904 death of their mother.

In 1908, Gourley established Gourley Orchards, choosing a location where the warmth of the canyon rocks and the river stabilize temperature fluctuations, an optimal spot for fruit trees.

Kelley purchased the original 15 orchard acres in 1967 from his mother, Mary Ann, and uncle John following the death of his grandfather.

Now the property boasts over 80 acres after Kelley purchased more land in 1972. The orchard harvests cherries, peaches, pears, nectarines, plums, apricots and apples and includes a two-acre vegetable garden.

Mark Binnebosc of Jerome has worked at the orchard for 22 years and loves his job.

"Even if it is 105 degrees down here we are having fun," he said. "I love that some days I can come to work and get lost in the trees and not see another person all day."

Binnebosc is one of three full-time employees at the orchard year-round. During peak harvest season there are roughly 40.

However, having a larger orchard didn't bring financial stability for Kelley. For example, this year, due to freezing the orchard has only about 1 percent of its regular cherry harvest, and there will be no you-pick option available for the crop.

"I had to make a living, to feed and educate my family. In this business you can't lose a crop and one year you could be broke, or rich," Kelley said.

To get that year-round stability, in 1980 he opened Kelley Garden Center in Twin Falls. The garden center is a full-service nursery with springer installation, landscape design and shrub and tree retail service.

"It is growing yearly," Kelley said. "There is heritage and history here. People know and recognize the name."

Richard Kelley, owner of Kelley's Orchard, is seen through a Bing cherry tree dating from 1908. His grandfather, who established the orchard, came to Magio Valley a century ago.

“There is heritage and history here. People know and recognize the name.”

— Craig Kelley, stepson of orchard's owner

One of the trees offered at the garden center is the Sensation Maple, developed by Kelley's great uncles, Warren and Dutch Camille.

"It really does well in the area," Kelley said. "As in the beginning, the Kelley operation is family-run. Stepson Craig Kelley has worked at the garden center since 1983 and has managed it the past six years."

"I like it, you get to be involved with family everyday," he said. "There is heritage and history here. People know and recognize the name."

Rainier cherries ripen at Kelley's Orchard near Buhl.

Daughter Gretchen Kelley Bletz of Reno, Nev., sells Kelley's Orchard fruit from several established fruit stands. Also helping out with free labor any time Dad calls is Robin Kelley of Boise.

Like the single remaining Bing cherry tree from the 1908 orchard (still producing sweet cherries), the entire operation is looking into the future.

"It used to be that families would come down for bushels of fruit, enough to harvest and eat for the year. Now people come down and buy enough for one or two days," Richard Kelley said. "I think that in the future it will take more small sales."

The company is looking at establishing more fruit stands around the region.

Chamber hears Canyon Park plans

TWIN FALLS — The Twin Falls Area Chamber of Commerce this week heard from developers of the proposed Canyon Park project at the chamber's monthly board meeting.

Representatives from Nelsen & Co. made a presentation on the development, said Shawn Bariga, the chamber's president and chief executive. Canyon Park's newest phase has been proposed as a 160,000-square-foot retail "lifestyle center" and a 15-story upscale chain hotel with meeting facilities on the Snake River Canyon's south rim, west of Blue Lakes Boulevard North.

"It was presented as an opportunity for the board to be aware of the potential business impact on the city as far as hotel and retail development," Bariga said.

The chamber did not discuss any possible plans for collaboration on the meeting facilities, Bariga said. In 2001 the chamber and the company discussed combining a convention center and an interpretive facility, but Canyon Park's hotel plan didn't proceed that year.

Nelsen & Co. announced its latest plans for Canyon Park last month but by Thursday afternoon had yet to file any kind of proposal with the city regarding zoning of the rim property.

Best Buy board OKs 3-for-2 stock split

TWIN FALLS — The board of Minneapolis-based Best Buy Co. Inc. said Thursday that it approved a three-for-two stock split.

The company also increased its quarterly cash dividend rate by 9 percent, from 11 cents to 12 cents per share, on a post-split basis. The increase is effective with the dividend which, if authorized, would be payable Oct. 25 to shareholders of record as of Oct. 4. The quarterly cash dividend rate on a post-split basis will be 8 cents per share.

Shareholders of record as of July 13 will receive one additional share for every two shares owned. The additional shares will be distributed Aug. 3. This is the 10th split in the company's common stock since 1984.

Best Buy, which has a Twin Falls store, had $25.5 million shares of common stock outstanding as of May 28.

FedEx posts a rise of 9 percent in Q4 profit

MEMPHIS, Tenn. — FedEx Corp. said Thursday that fiscal fourth-quarter earnings increased 9 percent from last year, but costs associated with the start-up of a new westbound, around-the-world flight plan in the package deliverer's results below Wall Street expectations.

Net income rose to $448 million, or $1.46 per share, from $412 million, or $1.36 per share, in the same quarter a year ago. Sales climbed 10 percent to $7.72 billion from $7.04 billion last year.

On average, analysts surveyed by Thomson Financial were looking for higher earnings of $1.48 per share on sales of $7.82 billion in the latest quarter.

Oprah's praise swamps bra company

The Associated Press

BILLINGS, Mont. — Phone calls to the Havre, Mont.-based ENELL Inc. drew a steady "busy" signal last month. That was good news for the bra company that drew rave reviews from Oprah Winfrey.

When the call finally rang through, Ennell's president and founder of ENELL had barely a moment to speak.

"Can I call you next week?" she asked. "We're just trying to do damage control."

The "damage control" was actually a frantic flurry of activity during the Oprah Winfrey endorsement during her "Lose Weight With Oprah" episode broadcast in mid-May. The segment gave a staggering boost to a business

Payment of the future

Cash, charge or fingerprints?

The Washington Post

Three or four days a week, Darren Hiers gets lunch at a Sterling, Va., convenience store near the car dealership where he works. He grabs a chicken sandwich and a soda and heads to the checkout counter, where a little gadget scans his index finger and instantly deducts the money from his checking account.

Hiers doesn't have to pull out his wallet to buy lunch — and if it were up to him, he'd never have to write a check or swipe a credit card again.

The finger scan used at the shop in Sterling, known as a biometric payment system and made by a Herndon, Va., firm, is just starting to be installed at convenience stores and supermarket chains throughout the country, another step in a revolution that is turning the human body into the ultimate identification card.

Already faces and fingerprints are used to track visitors coming into the country. Computer passwords are being replaced by thumbprints at some companies and iris scans are giving consumers in England and Germany access to their bank accounts at ATMs.

The owner of BioPay LLC, which makes the technology used at the store, predicts the finger scan soon will be ubiquitous.

Stay cool without going broke this summer

NEW YORK With energy prices still rising, it's not more to stay cool this summer. The average homeowner can expect to spend $1,500 this year for energy bills, according to a report on heating and cooling, according to government estimates. That's up from $1,400 just a year ago.

ON THE MONEY

Elion Alt Powell

There are many steps families can take to both conserve energy and hold cooling costs in check, experts say.

It's not surprising that people still are going to heat and sweat through the summer, said Rozanne Weissman of the Pacific Alliance for Energy in Washington, D.C. "Some small adjustments can save you money with little impact on comfort."

There are many things families can do at little or no cost:

- Close the blinds on windows that get a lot of sun, especially those facing south or west.
- Turn off lights, televisions and computers when not in use.
- Plant leafy trees and vines around the home.
- Run the washer and dryer during off-peak electricity use hours at night or on weekends, unless always on a timer.

Among the most energy-hungry appliances in most homes are the air conditioners. "It's a good idea to get a professional tuneup for your air conditioner every year, Weissman said. "But just cleaning or replacing the filter every month can keep an air conditioner running at peak performance," she Greg Smith, right, and Margaret Crammes, both of Manhattan, leave a P.C. Richard store with a new air conditioner June 23 in New York. With energy prices rising, it's going to cost more to stay cool this summer.

Wissman also recommends matching the size of the air conditioner to the space that's being cooled, since "units that are too large can inflate your energy costs and contribute to poor indoor air quality."

And, if your air conditioner is more than 12 years old, it's probably a good idea to consider trading it for a new, more energy efficient unit, she said.

Families can boost the impact of their air conditioners by installing and running ceiling fans, Weissman added.

"With fans, you can raise the thermostat a few degrees, but you'll feel just as cool because of the circulating air," she said.

Wendy Reed, a spokeswoman for the Energy Star program, a joint project of the Department of Energy and the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency, is a big advocate of programmable thermostats as a way to reduce energy on a home.

"If you have a manual thermostat, you can - set the temperature gauge up a notch or two when you're leaving the house and you know you'll be away for a while," Reed said. "If you have a programmable thermostat, you can set it and forget it."

The idea, of course, is to set the programmable thermostat so it coordinates home cooling with your daily routine. Set the thermostat to reduce cooling after you leave for work, then have it step up again an hour before you return home.

"You can save 10 percent a year on energy bills with a programmable thermostat," he said. "And some programmable thermostats will even tell you when it's time to change the (air conditioner) filter."

Most people associate caulking windows as well as sealing and insulating ducts with winter heating.

But Reed points out that these steps also keep cool air from escaping during the summer.

"If you do it in summer, there's more energy savings when you're cooling, and you get the double whammy of energy saving and staying warmer in winter," she said.

And, when you're buying new appliances, it's good to look for products that have the Energy Star for efficiency, she said.

Energy Stars have been awarded for lighting appliances, home office equipment, cooling and heating equipment, and home electronics. Many of the products are 15 percent to 30 percent more efficient than older models.

The Energy Star program's "Guide to Energy-Efficient Cooling and Heating" can be obtained on the Internet at www.eia.doe.gov/hvacguide or by calling 888-STAR-YES (888-782-9377).

The Alliance to Save Energy has tips on its site at www.ase.org/consumers as well as links to a variety of energy-saving programs.

BioPay

banks offering speed and convenience for consumers. But civil libertarians have raised privacy concerns, citing some recent problems.

In February, ChoicePoint Inc., a background-screening company that collects personal information - including biometric data - accidentally sold more than 100,000 individual profiles to identity thieves.

For many people, a fingerprint means one thing: a police record. That association could be enough to make many people wary.

The car rental business already has had some experience with this. Toward the end of 2001, Dollar Rent a Car began fingerprinting its customers to combat theft.

The experiment lasted just four months until consumer advocates' complaints forced the firm to reverse its policy.

Biometric payment systems work by connecting images of an individual's fingerprint to his bank account.

At the Sterling convenience store, a BP gas station owned by Rich Glad, users enroll by handing the cashier a personal check (verified with a driver's license) that is scanned into the computer.

Then they place each index finger on a tennis-ball-sized reader that captures the unique characteristics of their fingerprints.

The enrollment process takes about two minutes and is done on a computer screen. Customers can make purchases by punching a 10-digit code (like a phone number) into the counter-top terminal and placing a finger on the reader.

The funds are subtracted directly from the customer's

How the BioPay system works

1. To enroll, a customer gives each index finger on a tennis-ball-sized reader that captures fingerprints.
2. The customer then places a personal check (verified with a driver's license) that is scanned into the computer.
3. The customer selects a code to authorize debits from a checking account and to verify age.
4. Once enrolled, customers make purchases by placing a finger on the reader and entering a code.

checking account, as a debit transaction would be. "It keeps me from having to carry cash or a checkbook," said Hiers, who sometimes stops by the Sterling convenience store to get a gas tank filled, fill up his gas tank and pick up ratons for his hour-long commute home.

Charles Town, W.Va. "It makes my life a little easier, especially if I just want to get in and get out."

That's exactly what BioPay President Tim Robinson likes to hear. His company makes the biometric technology used at the Sterling store and says it has a database of 1.8 million customers.

Most of those consumers are using BioPay's technology as an identification verification for merchants cashing paychecks - an application intended to cut down on fraud.

Customers have to enroll to cash paychecks, so if someone tries to cash a fake paycheck, the system will flag it. In May, 119 of this summer's 150 retailers will have installed the payment system.

Stocks tumble as oil prices briefly top $60 per barrel

NEW YORK (AP) — Stocks plunged Thursday, sending the Dow Jones Industrial Average 166 points as oil prices briefly topped $60 per barrel for the first time. Oil's advance accelerated a selloff prompted by poor earnings from FedEx Corp., which blamed high fuel prices for its disappointing profits.

Swamped

Continued from D6 That had been thriving even prior to the broadcast. "It has been growing more and more," Braten said. "But nothing like when Oprah hit. Now it's Oh my God!"

In the weeks since Oprah plugged ENELL, Braten has had to hire additional employees to answer the phone. Down in Puerto Rico, where most of the bras are manufactured, they're scrambling to train more seamstresses. "Now the retailers who wouldn't return our calls are begging us for our product," she said.

Almost as soon as the show aired, the phones started ringing. Virtually overnight, Braten figures, they were six to seven months behind orders. "So what's all the fuss about? And why did Oprah include ENELL Sports Bra on her 'must have' list according to those in the know, it's the best sports bra, hands down, particularly for full-figured women."

"Nothing touches ENELL for serious activity," said Linda Cervone Levy, co-owner of TLC Lingerie in Billings. "It's one of those bras that you try and say about it, it's true."

Besides selling ENELL Sports Bras, Cervone Levy wears them when she exercises. And she swears by it. "For aerobic exercise, ENELL is simply the best bra," she said. "It's like a physician prescribes it for patients recovering from breast surgery."

Nature, a high-performance fabric that wicks moisture away while providing strength and support, features a firm closure and wide straps. It's so effective that some insurance companies will cover the cost of the bra on a physician prescription.

Besides Oprah's endorsement, numerous magazines including Sports Illustrated for Women, SELF Magazine and Runner's World — have praised Braten's success.

For Braten, ENELL Sports Bras is more than a business, it's a necessity. The longtime resident of the small town of Hivne, who worked as a barber for 30 years and also happens to be an avid volleyball player, couldn't find a sports bra that offered the support she needed.

She turned to her mother, a skilled seamstress, to come up with a solution. The first prototype was a conglomerate of odd pieces of elastic and fabric pulled from her mother's sewing kit.

"It worked. I used it," Braten said. "This was born the ENELL Sports Bra. Over time, Braten made connections that guided her through the process of building her business. Her friends father helped her get a patent. A Bozeman firm offered advice for naming the company — she picked the name ENELL after her first name to coin "ENELL." A Portland designer "dressed up" the bra with a few finishing touches.

"The fashion" was fourth on my list," Braten said. "I don't care about fashion. I just care that it works. First was support. Second was quality. Third was comfort. Marketing proved one of her biggest challenges. "Initially, her best decision was getting in touch with Oprah. But the link was certainly no guarantee. "I knew she obviously needed one (an ENELL Bra)," Braten said, laughing. "I saw her on the treadmill on her program."

2006 DODGE RAM 1500

The new 2006 Dodge Ram 1500 features a new fuel-saving technology which improves fuel economy by about 3 mile per gallon.

Dodge revamps Ram pickup

By Mark Phelan
Knight Ridder News Service

DETROIT — Chrysler Group escalated the battle June 16 for full-size pickups as it introduced a radically re-engineered version of its best-selling vehicle, the Dodge Ram pickup.

Ram pickup sales have slipped 9 percent this year to 163,094 through May.

The 2006 Ram 1500 light-duty pickup features an entirely new basic structure, a revamped suspension, a new and significantly upgraded interior and an array of new optional features including a power sliding rear window, satellite navigation and a DVD entertainment system.

It is to go on sale in August or September.

Hemi V8-powered Rams will feature a new fuel-saving technology that improves the pickup's EPA mileage estimates by 1 mile per gallon.

The Ram is the first pickup to use the system, which shuts down four of the engine's eight cylinders when they are not needed.

The system, already in use on several other Chrysler vehicles that offer Hemi-power systems, will reduce U.S. fuel consumption by 60 million gallons in 2006, Chrysler estimates.

The brawny Ram pickup went on sale four years ago.

Automakers traditionally make minimal cosmetic changes to their vehicles as they near the middle of their lifecycles, but the 2006 model nearly qualifies as an all-new truck thanks to its completely reworked frame.

The frame is the basic structure to which a pickup's cab, bed, engine and transmission are mounted.

The Ram's frame was due for modifications to meet future crash standards, and Chrysler engineers found they could redesign the entire structure at little extra cost, said Mike Donoughue, vice president of body-on-frame vehicles.

The new frame should give the Ram a quieter and more

The pickup market has never seen a three- or four-year period of product changes like this before.”

— Jeff Brodski, an analyst with consultant J.D. Power comfortable ride that will help it compete with the new full-size pickups General Motors Corp. and Toyota Motor Corp. will introduce over the next couple of years, as well as the Ford F-150, the best-selling pickup that raised the standard for pickup comfort when it debuted in 2003.

“The pickup market has never seen a three- or four-year period of product changes like this before,” said Jeff Brodski, an analyst with consultant J.D. Power.

The improvements to the Ram are “an order of magnitude” beyond what Chrysler did in previous midlife model upgrades, Donoughue said.

“We have momentum right now,” after a string of successful new models that began with the Chrysler 300 sedan more than a year ago, he said.

“We want to keep the pedal to the metal.”

The 2006 Ram also gets a gleaming chrome grille and front bumper, new headlights and a new four-wheel-drive system.

“It’s borderline revolutionary,” said Frank Markus, technical director of Motor Trend magazine. “The extent to which they modified the frame and interior is virtually unheard of in the pickup business.”

Dodge will also add a new model to the Ram family this fall, the cavernous four-door Mega Cab, which features the largest cab of any pickup.

At 145.2 cubic feet, the Mega Cab's passenger compartment is far larger than a Chrysler 300 sedan, and the pickup has more backseat legroom than a $325,000 Maybach ultra-heavy limousine, Donoughue said.

Dodge will announce prices for the Mega Cab this summer.

Donoughue would not say how many Mega Cabs the company expects to sell, but he said it would be far more than the 10,000 to 15,000 annual sales of niche models such as the 500-horsepower Ram SRT10 high-performance pickup.

The fuel-saving cylinder deactivation system already is standard on the Hemi-powered Chrysler 300, Dodge Charger and Magnum, the Jeep Grand Cherokee and the big seven-seat Jeep Commander SUV that is to go on sale this fall.

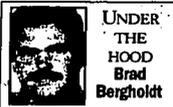

General Motors has a similar cylinder deactivation system on some of its cars and SUVs.

Tow package might come in handy

Q: I'm preparing to order a new GMC Yukon and am sorting through all the options. I don't plan to tow with it, but my friend says I should still get the tow package as it keeps up the truck. What's your take on this?

—Tim Roberts, Dublin, Calif.

A: I'd also recommend ordering the tow package for several reasons. You might have no use for the supplemental electrical wiring and tow connector, but the hitch platform might come in handy if you choose to use a bike rack, cargo carrier or other plug-in accessory.

UNDER THE HOOD
Brad Bergholt

The supplemental external transmission cooler will better preserve your transmission fluid, potentially increasing transmission life. In addition, the heavy-duty radiator will inspire confidence when traveling while heavily loaded over hilly terrain. Plus, it will enjoy greater resale value and widest appeal for the next potential owner.

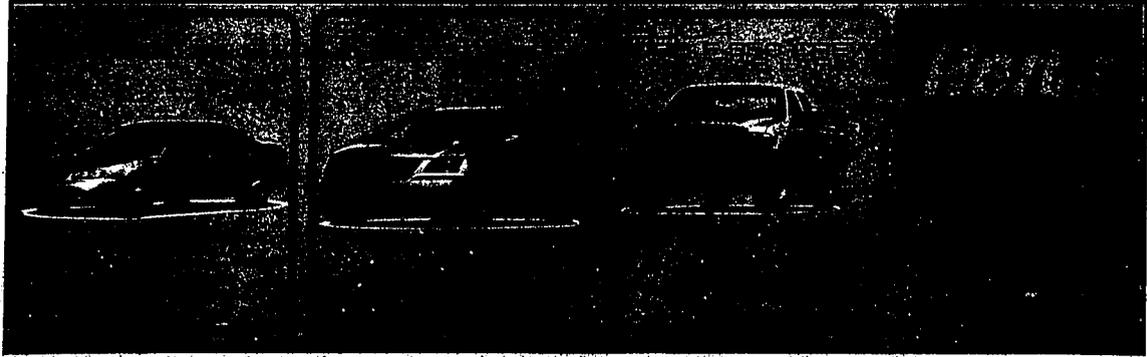

Q: I just had my car's "fuse link" replaced for the second time in six months. My mechanic can't tell me why this is happening. It's very inconvenient and costly to have this fixed. Please tell me why this is happening and how to stop it.

—Grace Putnam, Huntsville, Ala.

A. Automobiles contain a variety of electrical circuits for starting, charging, lighting and accessories. Each circuit, or group of circuits, requires protection from excessive current flow. This can occur because of a short circuit, added accessory loads or a defective component.

Fuses are the most common circuit-protection device in use. They're a deliberate weak link and are designed to fail if excessive current occurs, protecting wiring, switches and components from damage. A modern car might have several dozen fuses, located in one or more fuse panels, isolating each circuit from another. If a problem developed in the radio circuit, that fuse would blow, leaving other accessories unaffected.

To provide complete protection, a large master fuse (or several of them) is used to protect the circuits leading from the battery to the fuse panel and ignition switch. Step one in solving your fuse-link fiasco is to determine which circuit this link is protecting. Assuming your car has no added electrical accessories overburdening the circuit, we'll look for an injury in the wiring allowing contact with a metal object. A wiring diagram and some hands-on detective work are used to identify the circuit's physical route and condition. My hunch is a difficult-to-see part of the circuit is chafing against a metal object under the hood or instrument panel, causing an intermittent short circuit.
