Department details ag violations

Oakley operations face total of $906,900 in penalties from three state agencies

By Michelle Dunlop
Times-News writer

OAKLEY — The inspection of a Cassia County feedlot and farm by a third state agency revealed an uncertified pit laden with household waste, animal manure wastewater and a dog carcass, according to agency reports.

On Wednesday, the Department of Environmental Quality released the notice of violation the agency sent on July 29 to Cory King of Lambert Produce. The agency found seven violations and assessed a penalty of $24,200.

Lambert Produce operates at the same location as Double C Farms feedlot, but the two are not the same venture, said John Marshall, an attorney of Givens Pursley LLP in Boise — the firm representing both.

In its July 2005 annual report, the Idaho secretary of states office lists Chris Drakos of Blackfoot as the president of Lambert Produce. Steve Drakos of Salt Lake City serves as the company's vice president, while Robert Maxfield, also of Salt Lake City, is listed as secretary-treasurer. Marshall could not confirm King's position in either operation.

On Thursday, Marshall could not comment on DEQ's notice, saying he had not had time to fully review that agency's claims.

"We're trying to work with all the agencies, trying to get the facts out on the table," Marshall said.

STARING DOWN THE FLAMES

Twin Falls firefighters battle a fire Thursday afternoon that threatened a dairy and several homes and destroyed two sheds and about $10,000 in construction materials south of Twin Falls near 3533 North, 3000 East. The fire was brought under control within 30 minutes. Battalion Chief Gary Earl said the cause was still being investigated.

Hispanic population continues to grow

By Karin Kowalski
Times-News writer

JEROME — More than one in five people in Jerome and Cassia counties is Hispanic, according to U.S. Census figures released Thursday.

The counties join Minidoka County and four others in Idaho with populations at least one-fifth Hispanic.

Jerome County is 22.5 percent Hispanic and Cassia County is 20.5 percent Hispanic, according to a news release from Idaho Commerce and Labor.

The state's Hispanic population is estimated to be 123,900 as of July 1, according to the census. That's a 4.7 percent increase from the year before and a 22 percent increase from 2000. Between 2003 and 2004, the state's population as a whole increased 1.9 percent, the fourth-fastest growth rate in the country.

In Jerome, bakeries, restaurants, video and clothing stores are cropping up to cater to Hispanic customers.

"It's an invited growth," said Elizabeth Thomas, executive director of the Jerome Chamber of Commerce.

"Diversification is something we've always been proud of."

The chamber is working on ways to bring the community together, and hopes to start an annual Mexican independence day celebration.

Rosa Paiz, owner of El Sombrero Restaurant in Jerome, said there were no Mexican restaurants in Jerome 25 years ago. She said today there might be more people than the census counts because some don't have legal status. She said the Hispanic population helps the city.

"It brings in a lot of revenue," Paiz said. "It brings more opportunity for jobs."

Juan Gonzalez, who works at Aracely's Boutique in Jerome, said the city is surrounded by places where Hispanic people work. When he visited the county fair, he said the majority of the people there were Hispanic.

At Jerome High School, David Quinley, who teaches journalism, has seen Hispanic students start to branch out into more activities in the four years he's taught there. By starting a bilingual newspaper last year, he's been able to more than double Hispanic participation in his classes.

"The bilingual newspaper gives them a reason to write," Quinley said.

Bush is coming to Idaho

The Associated Press

BOISE — The White House confirmed President Bush will make his first visit to Idaho this month since taking office, but declined Thursday to say when and where.

"He will be in Idaho, but we have not released his schedule," a White House spokeswoman who declined to give her name told The Associated Press.

The White House also announced Thursday that Vice President Dick Cheney will be stopping in Boise on Monday afternoon to help Sen. Larry Craig celebrate his 60th birthday and raise money for the Idaho Republican's 2008 re-election campaign.

IN LOVE — WITH A CONVICT?

Women sometimes fall for hard-core criminals

The Associated Press

NEW YORK — One woman married serial killer Ted Bundy after his conviction. A prison psychologist, jilting her husband, fell in love with an inmate and helped him escape. And this week, a former prison nurse stands accused of killing a guard on behalf of a convicted robber she had married while he was behind bars.

Experts say these startling but not uncommon cases often involve manipulation on the criminal's part and self-deception by women who are craving a new mission in their lives.

"In some cases, it's a question of adding spice to life," said Northeastern University criminologist James Alan Fox. "There are cases of successful women with jobs and families who felt their life was somewhat tame, and this was a way they broke away from the mundane routine."

Kristy Holtfreter, a Florida State University criminologist, said she wasn't surprised that a former nurse is accused in the courthouse shooting Tuesday in Tennessee that left a guard dead and enabled her husband to escape. The couple, Jennifer and George Hyatte, were caught late Wednesday in Ohio.

"We often see women in these cases from the 'helping' professions — nursing, education — who might be more like-

Sempra sues over Web site

The Associated Press

RENO, Nev. — The company proposing to build a $1 billion coal-fired plant near Jerome has filed a federal lawsuit accusing a renewable energy coalition of providing false information on the Internet about its proposed Gerlach, Nev., project.

Sempra Energy plans to build a 1,450-megawatt plant in northern Washoe County. It also intends to locate a 600-megawatt facility in Jerome County.

The Web sites, sponsored by Nevada Clean Energy Coalition and Ideum Inc., question whether coal-fired power plants are safe and mimic Sempra Energy brochures and Web design.

The lawsuit, filed in U.S. District Court in Southern California, seeks unspecified damages. It claims the Web sites represent a "malicious campaign" to stop the power plant while promoting competing, renewable power in the same region and that they contain "false and disparaging statements."

Sempra spokesman Art Larson told The Times-News on Thursday that he is unaware of similar Web sites directed at the company's project in Idaho. Sempra operates under the subsidiary Idaho Valley LLC for its Jerome project.

"The bottom line is the illegal and improper use of the Sempra name," Larson said. "Quite simply, we are seeking to regain our name."

The Gerlach power plant has come to symbolize a struggle between fossil-fueled power or renewable power in the West. The plant site is near a major West Coast transmission line that has excess capacity for either the coal-fired power plant or large-scale production of wind and geothermal power that could be generated in the area — but not enough capacity for both. The project is undergoing a federal environmental review.

On the Web, opponents contend the plant will produce more than 50 pollutants including arsenic, lead and mercury in burning 6 million to 7 million tons of coal a year and consuming more than 5 billion gallons of water a year.

"The opponents are entitled to their opinion but not to using our tradenames," Larson said.

The Web sites use the company's name in their addresses, switching the .com ending to .org. The lawsuit claims that by doing that, plant opponents are accessing Sempra customers and profiting through their potential donations. Under federal law, such conduct is considered "cybersquatting," and offenders can be sued for damages if the victims prove the conduct was done in bad faith.

"Using our name to attack the company sends a mixed message to the public," Larson told the Reno Gazette-Journal. "The Web designer should be upfront about who they are and not having to resort to using our trademark identity to promote their point of view."

Jon Wellinghoff, a coalition spokesman and renewable energy advocate in Las Vegas, said the coalition did not authorize the copycat Web sites. He said Sempra is trying to intimidate its foes with the 232-page filing.

WorldCom official gets 5 years in prison

Chicago Tribune

NEW YORK — Scott Sullivan, credited with helping the government to convict former WorldCom chief executive Bernard J. Ebbers, was sentenced Thursday to five years in prison for his role in the largest case of corporate fraud in U.S. history.

Sullivan, who had been the telecom company's financial director, received far less than the 25 years given to Ebbers, his one-time boss, last month. The lighter sentence was seen as a powerful signal to would-be white-collar criminals to cooperate with government prosecutors rather than take their cases to trial.

At a morning hearing in a packed Manhattan courtroom, Sullivan, 43, repeatedly apologized for his actions, pleading with U.S. District Court Judge Barbara Jones to recognize the importance of his cooperation in convicting Ebbers.

Hispanic

In south-central Idaho, Twin Falls County has the largest number of Hispanic people at 7,533, accounting for 11.1 percent of the population.

Blaine County's Hispanic population had the state's largest four-year percentage jump: 53 percent.

Greg Rogers, Idaho Commerce and Labor's regional economist for Magic Valley, said the growth could be explained by the Wood River Valley's low unemployment and need for workers in hotels, landscaping and other service industries.

Rogers said the growth in the dairy industry, which employs a lot of Hispanic people, helps increase that segment of the population in the Magic Valley.

"It's going to continue to be a phenomenon here," he said.

ward to visiting Idaho again," said Jennifer Mayfield, deputy press secretary to Cheney. Cheney will appear at a $60-per-person party for Craig at the Boise Executive Air Terminal beginning at 5 p.m.

While Cheney, a former U.S. House member from Wyoming, has visited Idaho several times, the president's absence from the heavily Republican state has long been a sore spot for Idaho's all-GOP congressional delegation: During a picnic for Bannock County Republicans in Pocatello two years ago, Craig announced that Bush would be visiting Idaho in 2004 after Craig extracted a promise from the president to come to Idaho.

The promise was the result of a practical joke Craig and White House Chief of Staff Andrew Card played on Bush, convincing him that British Prime Minister Tony Blair — who had mentioned Idaho in a 2003 speech to Congress — would be visiting Idaho. Craig told Bush he had invited Blair to visit Idaho.

The president "said to me, why on Earth would I invite Blair," Craig told the crowd. "And I said, 'If you can't get a president to come, how about a prime minister?'"

Craig's Washington, D.C., spokesman Dan Whiting said Thursday the senator is delighted that Bush will be visiting Idaho.

Bush is tentatively scheduled to speak to a national Veterans of Foreign Wars convention in Salt Lake City that starts Aug. 20 and is expected to be in Idaho as well that week.

The Idaho Statesman newspaper in Boise reported Thursday that the Idaho Center in Nampa has been reserved for a potential appearance by the president at a rally with military personnel and their families and that hangar space has been reserved for Marine One, the presidential helicopter, at the McCall Airport in Valley County.

"I don't know who's coming," said Rick Harvey, director of the airport that serves as a hub for mountain resorts and airborne federal firefighting. "All I know is Marine One is coming up here on the 22nd and leaving the 24th."

Les Crooks, interim general manager for the Idaho Center in Nampa, declined to say who made the reservation for an event at the city-owned arena the week of Aug. 22.

"They've got a date on hold here," he said. "I've heard the same rumors you have."

In the 2000 election, Bush easily carried Idaho with 67 percent of the vote and his support increased to 68 percent of the state in the 2004 presidential election.

ly to sympathize with the males in these situations — to see those dangerous individuals in a different light," Holdfeter said.

The case of Bundy — who confessed to more than 30 killings — is particularly striking.

As details emerged during his trial of how he preyed on young women, he received a flood of love letters and female fans flocked to the courtroom. During a second trial, he married one of the admirers, Carole Ann Boone, who bore their child but divorced him before his execution in 1989.

Some other notable cases:

• Prison psychologist Elizabeth Feil had an affair with an inmate at Maryland Correctional Institution, then helped him and a convicted murderer stage a short-lived escape in 1999. Feil, whose husband was stunned to learn of the affair, served six months in jail; her defense lawyer contended that lifelong low self-esteem allowed her to be manipulated by inmates in her care.

• An acclaimed Canadian poet, Susan Musgrave, married a convicted bank robber while he was in prison, had two children with him after his release, and helped edit a best-selling novel he wrote about his past. But after 12 years of freedom, the husband, Stephen Reid, went back behind bars in 1999, sentenced to 18 years for his role in a bungled bank robbery that triggered a chase and a shootout.

• A prison guard three weeks away from her 24th wedding anniversary helped an inmate escape from a Tennessee prison last year, and was captured along with him six days later at a motel in Texas. Relatives said Vicki Sanford, then 51, even got a new tattoo prior to the escape that matched one worn by the inmate, who was serving time for attempted murder.

Rona Fields, a Washington, D.C., psychologist who has worked with prison inmates and staff, said interpersonal relationships in a prison setting can evolve in ways that might seem strange in the outside world.

"Someone who's a nurse — she probably saw treatment of inmates she thought was harsh, and she was in a position where they could tell her their troubles," Fields said.

Fines

employee — triggered a three-agency investigation of the two operations. Double C faces $643,000 in fines from the Ag Department. The Idaho Department of Water Resources has proposed $239,700 in combined fines — $218,100 for Lambert Produce and $21,600 for Double C.

An open pit on the property elicited the majority of fines from DEQ. Lambert Produce did not obtain a site certification or operating plan for a landfill. During the agency's June 28 inspection, DEQ representatives found household and solid waste in the pit. They also observed "materials with the potential to contain hazardous waste," such as used pesticide containers and a used oil filter, according to the agency's notice. Water samples from the pit showed lube oil and high levels of coliforms similar to wastewater from an animal feeding operation.

In operating a landfill, the owners of Lambert have an obligation to provide disease control. Yet DEQ officials found items at the pit that could serve as a food source for rodents, flies and mosquitoes - species known for carrying disease. The items of concern include "an exposed dog carcass, stagnant water and exposed household waste."

DEQ assessed its heftiest penalty of $10,000, out of the total $24,200, for the injection of animal wastewater into irrigation wells, according to the notice. Eight irrigation wells showed the presence of coliform bacteria, indicating the likely presence of "other potentially harmful bacteria." Tests also found E. coli bacteria in six of the wells, suggesting probable contamination "with human or animal wastes."

On Wednesday, King and his attorneys met with Water Resources attorney in Twin Falls. The department alleges the operations illegally diverted water for irrigation and illegally injected water, including wastewater, into the aquifer. Water Resources attorney instructed King to devise a plan that addresses the department's concerns, said Michael Keckler, a spokesman for the agency. That's something Marshall believes is achievable.

"We think we are either fully in compliance with the alleged violations or will be in the next couple of days," Marshall said.

Keckler called the meeting "very constructive." If the companies can come up with a constructive plan, then fines may be negotiable, he said.

The Ag Department notified Double C of 33 violations the agency found during its inspections. The violations range from allowing beef cattle access to Willow Creek, to spraying animals into the creek, to flushing wastewater and manure into it. Marshall says the firm has been in contact with the Ag Department.

Overall, Marshall believes some of the allegations made against his clients have been based on incorrect facts.

"We do contest and deny the serious allegations that process wastewater was injected into the aquifer," Marshall said.

Instead, he said, the complexity of the operations' irrigation pipeline may have caused some confusion as to how the system works.

Atta was left out of final report

Panel reviews files for intelligence links

Mohamed Atta

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Sept. 11 commission knew military intelligence officials had identified lead hijacker Mohamed Atta as a member of al-Qaida who might be part of U.S.-based terror cell more than a year before the terror attacks but decided not to include that in its final report, a spokesman acknowledged Thursday.

Al Felzenberg, who had been the commission's spokesman, said Tuesday the panel was unaware of intelligence specifically naming Atta. But he said subsequent information provided Wednesday confirmed that the commission had been aware of the intelligence.

It did not make it into the final report because the information was not consistent with what the commission knew about Atta's whereabouts before the attacks, Felzenberg said. The commission has gone out of existence, although individual members of the panel continue to follow closely the Bush administration's progress in implementing their recommendations.

The intelligence about Atta recently was disclosed by Rep. Curt Weldon, vice chairman of the House Armed Services and Homeland Security committees. The Pennsylvania Republican is angry that the intelligence never was forwarded by the military establishment to the FBI.

According to Weldon, a classified military intelligence unit called "Able Danger" identified Atta and three other hijackers in 1999 as potential members of a terrorist cell in Brooklyn, N.Y. Weldon said Pentagon lawyers rejected the unit's recommendation that the information be turned over to the FBI in 2000.

According to Pentagon documents, the information was not shared because of concerns about pursuing information on "U.S. persons," a legal term that includes U.S. citizens as well as foreigners legally admitted to the country.

Felzenberg said an unidentified person working with Weldon came forward Wednesday and described a meeting 10 days before the panel's report was issued last July. During it, a military official urged commission staffers to include a reference to the intelligence on Atta in the final report.

Felzenberg said checks were made and the details of the July 12, 2004, meeting were confirmed. Previous to that, Felzenberg said it was believed commission staffers knew about Able Danger from a meeting with military officials in Afghanistan during which no mention was made of Atta or the other three hijackers.

Staff members now are searching documents in the National Archives to look for notes from the meeting in Afghanistan and any other possible references to Atta and Able Danger, Felzenberg said.

He sought to minimize the significance of the new information.

"Even if it were valid, it would've joined the lists of dozens of other instances where information was not shared," Felzenberg said. "There was a major problem with intelligence sharing."

FEC targets DeLay funds

Lobbyist faces fraud charges.

WASHINGTON (AP) — A federal audit of a fundraising committee founded by House Majority Leader Tom DeLay found that it failed to report more than $300,000 in debts and incorrectly paid for committee activities with money from another DeLay-connected group.

The Federal Election Commission's report didn't indicate whether it would pursue enforcement action against Americans for a Republican Majority Political Action Committee.

ARMPAC's executive director, Jim Ellis, has been indicted in Texas in connection with a separate DeLay-connected committee, Texans for a Republican Majority. In that case, Ellis is charged with money laundering for state legislative campaigns. DeLay has not been accused of any wrongdoing in the case.

Bush: Troops need to remain in Iraq

CRAWFORD, Texas (AP) — President Bush said Thursday he sympathizes with war protesters like the mother camped outside his Texas ranch demanding answers for her soldier-son's death, but he said he believes it would be a mistake to bring U.S. troops home now.

Bush said he had "heard the voices of those saying, 'Pull out now.'" And he said, "I've thought about their cry and their sincere desire to reduce the loss of life by pulling our troops out. I just strongly disagree."

"Pulling the troops out would send a terrible signal to the enemy," the president told reporters between meetings with his military and foreign affairs advisers.

Outside his sprawling ranch, California mother Cindy Sheehan sat on the road with a growing group of war protesters who have pitched tents in shallow ditches. Sheehan's son, Casey, was killed five days after he arrived in Iraq last year at age 24.

Sheehan began her standoff on Saturday, declaring she would stay for the entire month that Bush plans to stay in Texas if he won't meet with her. Since then, dozens of other activists have traveled from across the country to join her, including at least three other parents who have lost children in the war.

"The president says he feels compassion for me, but the best way to show that compassion is by meeting with me and the other mothers and families who are here," Sheehan said. "All we're asking is that he sacrifice an hour out of his five-week vacation to talk to us, before the next mother loses her son in Iraq."

The protesters put a human face on Americans' increasing opposition to Bush's handling of the war. An AP-Ipsos poll early this month showed just 38 percent of respondents approved of his handling of Iraq. More than 1,840 members of the U.S. military have died since the beginning of the war in March 2003.

"I sympathize with Mrs. Sheehan," Bush said. "She feels strongly about her position. She has every right in the world to say what she believes. This is America. She has a right to her position. And I've thought long and hard about her position. I've heard her position from others, which is, 'Get out of Iraq now.'"

"And it would be a mistake for the security of this country and the ability to lay the foundations for peace in the long run if we were to do so," the president said.

President Bush

The White House put out an accounting of all the meetings that Bush has had with families of the war dead — 900 relatives of 272 people who have died in Iraq and Afghanistan. Sheehan met the president in June 2004 but said she deserves another visit since there have been so many revelations about faulty pre-war intelligence since then.

Bush said reports that the Pentagon may increase or decrease troop levels in Iraq next year are simply "speculation and rumors." He noted, though, that the United States had sent more soldiers to Iraq and Afghanistan before elections and was considering doing so again before another round of Iraqi elections in December.

Gen. George Casey, the top commander in Iraq, has said repeatedly that "fairly substantial" reductions are expected after the election if the political process stays on track. If the insurgency does not expand and if the training of Iraqi security forces proceeds as planned.

Bush said he would make any decision to remove troops based on recommendations by Casey, who gave a briefing by videolink during the president's ranch meeting with advisers.

"My position has been clear, and therefore, the position of this government is clear," Bush said. "Obviously, the conditions on the ground depend upon our capacity to bring troops home."

Bush said Casey reported that Iraqi security units were becoming more capable, although he acknowledged they were not ready to work alone without support from U.S. forces. He described the Iraqis' progress as improving from "raw recruit" to "plenty capable."

"I know it's hard for some Americans to see that progress," Bush said. "But we are making progress."

Group withdraws anti-Roberts ad

WASHINGTON (AP) — After a week of protests by conservatives, an abortion rights group said Thursday night it is withdrawing a television advertisement linking Supreme Court nominee John Roberts to violent anti-abortion activists.

"We regret that many people have misconstrued our recent advertisement about Mr. Roberts' record," said Nancy Keenan, president of NARAL Pro-Choice America.

"Unfortunately, the debate over that advertisement has become a distraction from the serious discussion we hoped to have with the American public," she said in a letter Thursday.

PHONE INTOLERANCE

Cells' bells not a happy sound for many

WASHINGTON (AP) — The complaints are familiar and frequent: People on cell phones talk too loud, they use them at inappropriate times, and they just don't seem to care if they are bothering anyone.

The horror stories are famous too. Cell phones at funerals. Cell phones at weddings. Cell phones in class. And of course, cell phones in restaurants.

President Bush has a well-known low cell phone tolerance. He gives a withering evil eye to those whose cell phones ring during his public appearances.

According to the Cellular Telecommunications & Internet Association, nearly two-thirds of Americans use a cell phone, which means getting out of reception range is about the only way to avoid those irritating habits.

The guru of good behavior, Judith Martin, aka Miss Manners, has a simple explanation for Americans' fascination with these flashing, buzzing, chiming gadgets.

"It's like children getting new toys," she said. "But the excitement is over. People should be over it."

Another etiquette expert, Marjabelle Young Stewart, said cell phones appeal to our inner rock star. "I think that it's making a lot of people feel cool if they drive around with this microphone," she said.

Traditionally quiet places like movie theaters, opera houses, orchestra halls and live theater venues are now compelled to remind patrons to turn off their cell phones or other devices before a performance.

Washington's Metrorail system has put up signs discouraging inconsiderate talkers. "Yes, we're all very interested in what you're having for dinner tonight," reads one sign, accompanied by a picture of a wide-mouthed Metro rider yelling into a cell phone. The second line says, "Please keep your phone conversations to yourself."

This is all too much for Miss Manners. "I look forward to going to any public event and not getting an etiquette lecture," Martin said.

Some churches in Mexico have gone beyond lectures and taken the James Bond-as-disciplinarian route to combat sacrilegious cell phone use. The churches have installed short-range cell phone signal jammers to thwart members of their flock who lack cell phone self-control during mass.

The jammers have caught on in Japan, India, and France but their use is illegal in the United States.

While some are clamoring for cell phone restraint, cell phone companies are lobbying the Federal Aviation Administration to permit cell phones on commercial airline flights. But in a poll by the Association of Flight Attendants and the National Consumers League 63 percent of respondents wanted to keep current restrictions in place.

Martin compared the evolution of the cell phone to that of the answering machine. She said when people first got them, "They were misusing them, doing their comedy routines and otherwise boring their friends." After a few years, the novelty wore off and an answering machine protocol set in, she said.

Airport finds explosive device in bag

OKLAHOMA CITY (AP) — A small explosive device was found in a passenger's carryon bag as the man passed through a checkpoint, and federal agents arrested him, the FBI said Thursday.

Officials have found no apparent connection between Charles Alfred Dreyling Jr. and any terrorist group or activity, said Agent Gary Johnson, an FBI spokesman.

Dreyling, 64, was going through the security checkpoint at Will Rogers World Airport on Wednesday when a Transportation Security Administration employee noticed something suspicious in his bag on the X-ray machine, Johnson said.

Assistant U.S. Attorney Bob Troester described the device as a carbon-dioxide cartridge with a black-powder detonator.

But Dreyling's landlord, former Oklahoma City Mayor Kirk Humphreys, said he had created a "glorified firecracker" and forgot it was in his luggage.

"I know Charlie Dreyling quite well," Humphreys said. "I appreciate what the authorities are doing making our airlines safe. I have every confidence that they'll find out Charlie Dreyling is a fine young man and no terrorist."

Dreyling had planned to take a Delta flight that travels to Philadelphia through Atlanta, airport spokeswoman Karen Carney said.

He was at the Oklahoma County jail on a federal hold and was to appear before a federal magistrate.

Glitch forces delay in Mars orbiter launch

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — NASA postponed the launch of a spacecraft to Mars on Thursday after a glitch popped up in the computer software used for monitoring the fueling of the rocket used for liftoff.

The problem with sensors and software that measure the amount of fuel being loaded into the rocket appeared with just minutes left until liftoff. The launch was rescheduled for Friday morning, three days after the shuttle Discovery returned to Earth.

Before the glitch, the only problem NASA faced was with an early morning thunderstorm that had delayed fueling. But NASA officials couldn't explain why sensors were reading "dry" when other data showed that the rocket was being filled with propellant.

"We weren't quite sure what the cause was and we felt we didn't have enough time left ... to pursue it any further," said Chuck Dovale, NASA launch director.

The Mars Reconnaissance Orbiter, equipped with the largest telescopic camera ever sent to another planet, was expected to spend at least four years circling Mars, collecting information that will help NASA plan where to land two robotic explorers later this decade.

The two-ton orbiter will collect information on Mars' weather, climate and geology.

Agency shows 'serious concern' over Iranian nuclear program

VIENNA, Austria (AP) — The U.N. nuclear watchdog expressed "serious concern" Thursday over Iran's resumption of activities that could lead to an atomic bomb, and diplomats said Tehran has a Sept. 3 deadline to stop or face another possible referral to the Security Council.

Iran, showing the defiance it has increasingly displayed since its new president was inaugurated last weekend, responded with indignation. Tehran's chief delegate here vowed that Iran would become a nuclear fuel producer and supplier within a decade.

"This resolution is political," said Iranian Foreign Ministry spokesman Hamid Reza Asefi, according to the state-run news agency. "It comes from American pressure, ... it lacks any legal or logical basis and is unacceptable."

The topic of the International Atomic Energy Agency resolution, adopted by consensus by its 35-nation board, was Iran's move Wednesday to reopen its uranium conversion plant in the mountains outside the southern city of Isfahan.

With the plant now working at full force, Iran's hard-liners are pushing President Mahmoud Ahmadinejad to ignore European warnings and resume uranium enrichment.

Mohammad Javad Larijani, a member of Iran's powerful Expediency Council, said the transfer of power to Ahmadinejad has given the country an opportunity to change the rules of the game.

He called France, Germany and Britain — the countries negotiating with Iran — "three international savages" and said any debate over enrichment is "shameful."

Starting up the enrichment facility, a plant built mainly underground outside the city of Natanz to protect it from airstrikes, would heighten tensions with Europe and the United States. Enrichment is the final step in uranium development, producing either fuel for a nuclear reactor for electricity or material for a nuclear bomb.

Iran denies it seeks to develop nuclear weapons and says its program is only for peaceful purposes. But Tehran insists it has the right under the Nuclear Nonproliferation Treaty to develop the full fuel cycle, including enrichment.

"Any government in Iran that gives up nuclear technology will collapse since the issue has turned into a matter of national pride. There is no doubt that Natanz will resume work sooner rather than later," said Ahmad Tavakoli, a lawmaker allied with Ahmadinejad.

President Bush, meeting at his Texas ranch with his foreign policy team, welcomed the nuclear agency's warning to Tehran. He also indicated Ahmadinejad will receive a U.S. visa to attend an annual United Nations gathering next month in New York.

S. Korea would allow peaceful nuke program

SEOUL, South Korea (AP) — A senior South Korean official said Thursday that North Korea has the right to a peaceful nuclear program, a view conflicting with Washington in its disagreement with the hard-line Pyongyang regime that has snagged disarmament talks.

"Our position is that North Korea has a general right to peaceful use of nuclear energy, for agricultural, medical and power-generating purposes," South Korean Unification Minister Chung Dong-young said in an interview Thursday with the online news service Media Daum.

"Building a light-water nuclear reactor is a general right of North Korea," Chung said. "In this, our position differs from that of Washington."

There was no immediate reaction from the Bush administration. But on Wednesday, Assistant Secretary of State Christopher Hill reiterated U.S. opposition to allowing North Korea to retain a nuclear capability for civilian use.

Shiite leaders in Iraq call for Shiite federal region

BAGHDAD, Iraq (AP) — A leading Shiite lawmaker called Thursday for a Shiite federal region, alarming Sunni Arabs who fear they will lose out on oil revenues and complicating efforts to meet a deadline for drafting a constitution within four days.

During a speech to cheering crowds in Najaf, Abdul-Aziz al-Hakim endorsed calls for a federated Iraq, saying federalism was needed "to keep a political balance in the country" after decades of dictatorship under Saddam Hussein.

"We believe that it is necessary to form one territory that includes the south and central Iraq," al-Hakim said, referring to areas where Shiites form the majority.

"The constitution must allow the formation of regional governments along with the united central government based on the principles of equality and justice," al-Hakim added. "We must not let this chance to accomplish this goal go away."

The move could pave the way for a Shiite south and a Kurdish north. The Kurds have demanded federalism to maintain control over three northern provinces and also want authority over Kirkuk, from which thousands of Kurds were expelled by Saddam.

Most of Iraq's vast oil wealth is concentrated in the Kirkuk area of the north or in the Basra area of the south. Sunnis fear they could lose out on Iraq's oil riches under a loosely federated system.

Al-Hakim's maneuvering could also complicate U.S. efforts to produce a constitution that will win the backing of Sunni Arabs in the Oct. 15 referendum and draw them away from the insurgency.

Britain detains cleric, others

LONDON (AP) — Britain detained a Palestinian cleric considered Osama bin Laden's spiritual ambassador in Europe and nine other foreigners Thursday, saying they were a threat to national security and would be deported.

A lawyer for the cleric, Sheik Omar Mahmood Abu Omar, also known as Abu Qatada, confirmed he was taken into custody. The Home Office didn't identify the detainees, but a British official, who spoke on condition of anonymity, said Abu Qatada was among those detained.

The move came a day after Britain signed an extradition agreement with Jordan, where Abu Qatada has been sentenced in absentia to life imprisonment for alleged involvement in a series of bombings and terror plots.

He has been described by British officials as bin Laden's "spiritual ambassador in Europe" and allegedly was an inspiration for Sept. 11 hijacker Mohamed Atta.

The detentions were another indication of the dramatic impact that last month's terror bombings have had in a country where radical Muslims had found something of a haven. Prime Minister Tony Blair announced plans last week to get tough with religious extremists.

Abu Qatada spent three years in a high security British prison without being charged under anti-terror powers introduced after the Sept. 11 attacks, but he was released in March after Britain's highest court ruled the legislation breached human rights.

He was swiftly re-arrested under new anti-terror measures that allow suspects to be electronically tagged, kept under curfew, denied the use of telephones or the Internet and barred from meeting outsiders, even if no charges are filed.

Task of eminent domain reform belongs to states

Forget all the gibberish about Washington being aflame in partisan animosity. Thanks to the Supreme Court's decision on eminent domain, lawmakers have never been more united.

Ever since the court ruled 5-4 that local government can take residential homes and private property to make room for economic development, politicians nationwide have shown no shortage of outrage.

Our view: The Supreme Court ruling on eminent domain says states are the agents for change, not Congress.

What do you think? We welcome viewpoints from our readers on this and other issues.

The court ruled in Kelo vs. City of New London that cities can take properties for private development if the economic impact creates a magnified public benefit.

Conservatives hate the decision because it's another tool for big government.

Liberals hate it because it's another way to fuel growth for corporations and developers. (Although it was the court's left wing that made the ridiculous Kelo ruling.)

Making this movement even more special is the bipartisan effort in Congress to tear down eminent domain. Sen. John Cornyn, R-Texas, and Rep. Maxine Waters, D-Calif., are among the host of politicians sponsoring bills to protect property owners from eminent domain's use for private development.

Good for them. The collective disgust for the Kelo decision, from elected leaders and the public alike, proves that even the Supreme Court gets egg on its face.

While this harmonious vibe is indeed inspiring for politicians, Washington's rush to fix the Supreme Court's ruling still goes too far.

Passing national laws, or a new constitutional amendment, to curb eminent domain leaps outside the realm of where the problem exists — with local governments. Besides, passing a new federal law may throw the matter back to the Supreme Court.

So while Americans can appreciate congressional distaste for judicial absurdity, the remedy lies in the hands of the state lawmakers.

Justice John Paul Stevens, in his majority decision for Kelo, said quite clearly that nothing in the decision precludes the states from restricting eminent domain. Numerous states have taken up that invitation to limit public takings for the benefit of private development.

Idaho will probably join the club this winter. Sen. John McGee, R-Caldwell, will propose a bill forbidding city and county governments from using eminent domain to take property for retail, office or residential development.

The unanimous opposition against eminent domain uses for private enterprise is indeed a reaffirmation of our Bill of Rights and the Founders' beliefs in property rights.

And yet this heartwarming trend raises one question. If governments are so opposed to eminent domain, how did the practice grow so popular in the first place?

Tread softly with Iraq's constitution

As next Monday's deadline nears for drafting the constitution for the new government of Iraq, more than the future of that war-torn country is at stake: In a real sense, this is the first crucial test for the ambitious project of bringing democracy to the Middle East and Persian Gulf that President Bush has made a centerpiece of his second-term foreign policy.

DAVID BRODER

Certainly the new monarch in Saudi Arabia and the leaders of Egypt and the nations of the Arab world across North Africa and into the Gulf are all watching closely how this experiment works. And so are the people and organizations within those countries who hope the United States is serious about pressing the cause of political reform in that part of the world.

One lesson from Iraq is already clear. It takes more than a free election to create a functioning democracy. Iraq had a remarkably successful popular vote to create an interim government in January, and yet it has been a struggle to develop the framework for a structure in which a permanent government — yet to be chosen — can function.

We should not be surprised. Our own history was marked by protracted and faltering efforts before the Constitution was adopted in Philadelphia. The system of federalism — of shared sovereignty between national and state governments — that was the key to our Constitutional Convention is one of the major stumbling blocks in Iraq. The United States, through its embassy, military presence and aid programs, has more influence on the struggle for democracy in Iraq than in any other country in the region.

But even there, our cards must be played with subtlety and discretion. And, as a timely report from the Council on Foreign Relations — "In Support of Arab Democracy: Why and How" — reminds us, the United States must be "mindful that democracy cannot be imposed from the outside."

The task force that produced the report was headed by former Secretary of State Madeleine Albright and former Minnesota Rep. Vin Weber, with the council's Steven Cook as the project director. Their work was informed by a three-day conference in Cairo with a dozen resident experts from the Arab world. It is a serious contribution to thinking about this important topic.

For example, it deals straightforwardly with the likelihood that Islamist groups will play an important role in any more open Middle East political systems. But it says the United States should view skeptically the claims from Arab governments that the "Islamist threat (is) a prime reason why they cannot risk pursuing political change."

Parties that commit to nonviolence, tolerance of opposing views, the rights of women and minorities and the rule of law — even those with histories of past terror — should be allowed to compete, provided they lay down their arms, it says.

The report is also realistic about current American policy. While it strongly endorses the principles behind Bush's vision, it is blunt in saying that "the invasion (of Iraq) has not helped America's standing or credibility in the region, nor do many Arabs look at Iraq and say, 'I wish my country could be like that.'" That makes the aftermath — democracy or continued violence — even more important.

It says the United States should continue to work to reduce tensions between Israel and the Palestinians, but not accept the view that progress toward democracy in the Middle East must first see a settlement of the Palestinian question or that peace talks await the full democratization of the Palestinian Authority.

It is full of practical suggestions for the administration and, particularly, for longtime Bush adviser Karen Hughes as she takes up her State Department job as the head of America's public diplomacy.

The United States needs to do more to bring Arab students and journalists to this country — including a review of the barriers to their visa entry imposed since 9/11. It needs to promote private media in the Arab world but back off from pressuring the governments in that region to censor the anti-American content on al-Jazeera and other networks, lest it make our support of free expression look hypocritical.

It urges the administration to revive the moribund Voice of America Arabic service and to make its own substitute service, al-Hurra, less of a propaganda machine and more of an instrument for showing C-SPAN-style inside looks at our functioning democracy.

Bottom line, it says the effort Bush has launched is as tricky as it is vital, so be patient, persistent and smart.

Post office box issue frustrates Glenns Ferry

Glenns Ferry, Idaho — home of the blue-face people.

We the people of Glenns Ferry, Idaho, and many other small towns are not getting all our mail. These small towns do not have mail delivery and must rely on the use of a post office box. Many companies prefer using a physical address over post office boxes in their business dealings. These companies will refuse to use the post office box and remove the post office box from the dual line address.

You would think if anyone would be concerned with this problem, it would be our United States Postal Service. Not true. They just recommend that we use the dual line address format. This does not work. Our post office box continues to disappear.

The Postal Service has improved its mail sorting by routing all our mail through the new sorting equipment in Boise. This just makes the problem worse. Now our mail is rejected in Boise as this new sorting equipment is checking for valid addresses. You would think if they have that kind of database they would just simply stamp our post office box on the mail and ship it.

"The thoughts and opinions of Idahoans are important to me as your representative in the United States Congress." Yes, I did contact my representative about this problem. The name is being withheld to protect the guilty. Mike says the post office box is a legal address. Not true. There is not a law, rule or a directive that says it is. The post office box is just a valid address. This means that people of all these many small towns do not have a legal address.

We, the people of these many small towns, have tried to explain this problem to companies until we are blue in the face.

Economy sputters Into deeper Bush debt

Bush was congratulating himself on the improving economy today. Now for some ugly truth.

On Aug. 6, the national debt hit $7,888,603,196,558. Each American's share of this debt is $26,579.39. The national debt has continued to increase an average of $1.64 billion per day since Sept. 30, 2004!

The dollar has declined 38 percent since Bush's "Great American Giveaway to the Rich" of $450 billion in tax cuts.

The real reason for the GOP's repressive laws will be evident when our economy finally tanks for good. Even the Stepford citizens might be hard to control then, thus the true reasoning behind the Patriot Act, Homeland Security, etc.

Our country has been plundered and the climax is coming. Add it up. Massive tax cuts for the rich; continued welfare for corporations; $9 billion a month for Iraq; slashing social programs including education, health; huge Medicare prescription bill that specifically denied states the ability to seek lower prices; $1 billion of U.S. treasury bills purchased by China per day; no raise in the $5.15 per hour minimum wage; and how about the following?

According to the National Association of Realtors, 23 percent of houses bought in 2004 were investments; another 13 percent second-homes. Since 2001, more than two-fifths of non-government jobs created have been in areas related to housing. Mortgage-backed security investments are at $4.6 trillion. Say: "Adjustable rate mortgages." See: Greenspan continue to raise the prime rate. Read: Bankruptcy Act. Pretty soon, most of us won't even be able to shop at Wal-Mart.

By inflation-adjusted dollars, median income fell 1.2 percent between 2001 and 2003. Using the same measure from the end of 2003 through March 2005, 80 percent of the work force saw an income decline of 0.9 percent. At the same time, corporations are seeing record profits while they scale back benefits for the general employee. Got health insurance?

And to tickle your funny bone, it was just announced that Halliburton's KBR division had a 284 percent increase in second-quarter operating profits. This despite their history of "questioned and unsupported" expenses.

If you think the Magic Valley produces a lot of cow manure, it is nothing compared to what this administration uses to bury the truth.

Trade pacts endanger American sovereignty

The passage of the Central American Free Trade Agreement will accelerate the destruction of agriculture, jobs and economy in a downward spiral to make the United States a Third World nation. CAFTA is NAFTA, the North American Free Trade Agreement, on steroids.

Fifteen Democrats and 202 Republicans violated their oath of office to uphold the U.S. Constitution by voting for CAFTA, which will create a regional government that destroys sovereignty according to plans of the socialist, world-government promoting Council on Foreign Relations. The CFR issued a 59-page document, "Building a North American Community," available at www.usembassycanada.gov/content/can_usa/northamericancommunity_TF_final.pdf that will integrate the United States, Mexico and Canada into a North America economic and security community by 2010 with a common outer security perimeter. This means integrating the United States with the corruption, socialism and poverty of Mexico with wide-open borders.

NAFTA and CAFTA are part of this unconstitutional regional government plan. After 10 years of NAFTA, the overall trade deficit with Canada and Mexico increased from $9.1 billion to more than $90 billion per year! The agriculture trade deficit increased from $3.9 billion to $14.6 billion per year. We now import more than 50 percent of our food and less than 2 percent is inspected for contamination. The pending Free Trade Area of the Americas will include 34 nations in Western Hemispheric regional government.

The privately run, New York-based Council on Foreign Relations was founded in 1921 by Edward Mandell House, assistant to President Woodrow Wilson, when the United States rejected joining The League of Nations. In his 1912 book, "Philip Dru, Administrator," House explained that he was working for "socialism as dreamed of by Karl Marx."

The CFR membership includes several hundred federal officials (including Vice President Richard Cheney and Secretary of State Condoleezza Rice), media executives, journalists, corporate leaders and even America's top military officers. CFR member Admiral Chester Ward stated that the CFR is seeking "submergence of U.S. sovereignty and independence into an all-powerful, one-world government."

NAFTA, CAFTA and the FTAA are parts of that plan.

Please read the book, "The Shadows of Power" by James Perloff, available from www.thenewamerican.com to learn the truth about the CFR. Its treasonous plans must be exposed! We must get out of the CFR-founded United Nations by passing H.R. 1146 and reject the FTAA to stop participation in the CFR-world government conspiracy to destroy freedom!

U.S.'s war on drugs spent chasing the wrong ones

JOHN TIERNEY

America has a serious drug problem, but it's not the meth epidemic" getting so much publicity. It's the problem identified by William Bennett, the former national drug czar and gambler.

"Using drugs," he wrote, "is wrong not simply because drugs create medical problems; it is wrong because drugs destroy one's moral sense. People addicted to drugs neglect their duties."

This problem afflicts a small minority of the people who have tried methamphetamines, but most of the law-enforcement officials and politicians who lead the war against drugs. They're so consumed with drugs that they've lost sense of their duties.

Like addicts desperate for a high, they've declared meth the new crack, which was once called the new heroin (that title now belongs to Oxycontin). With the help of the press, they're once again frightening the public with tales of a drug so seductive it instantly turns masses of upstanding citizens into addicts who ruin their health, their lives and their families.

Amphetamines certainly can do harm and are a fad in some places. But there's little evidence of a new national epidemic from patterns of drug arrests or drug use. The percentage of high-school seniors using amphetamines has remained fairly constant in the past decade, and actually declined slightly the past two years.

Nor is meth diabolically addictive. If an addict is someone who has used a drug in the previous month (a commonly used, if overly broad, definition), then only 5 percent of Americans who have sampled meth would be called addicts, according to the federal government's National Survey on Drug Use and Health.

That figure is slightly higher than the addiction rate for people who have sampled heroin (3 percent), but it's lower than crack (8 percent), painkillers (10 percent), marijuana (15 percent) or cigarettes (37 percent). Among people who have sampled alcohol, 60 percent had a drink the previous month, and 27 percent went on a binge (defined as five drinks on one occasion) during the month.

Drug warriors point to the dangers of home-cooked meth labs, which start fires and create toxic waste. But those labs and the burned victims are a result of the drug war itself.

Amphetamine pills were easily available, sold over the counter, until the 1950s, then routinely prescribed by doctors to patients who wanted to lose weight or stay awake. It was only after the authorities cracked down in the 1970s that many people turned to home labs and gangs of criminals marketing new ways (snorting, smoking) to get a high from the chemical.

It's the same pattern observed during Prohibition, when illicit stills exploded and deaths from alcohol poisoning increased. Far from instilling virtue in Americans, Prohibition caused them to switch from beer to hard liquor. Overall consumption of alcohol may well have increased.

Today we tolerate alcohol, even though it causes far more harm than illegal drugs, because we realize a ban would be futile, create more problems than it cured and deprive too many people of something they value.

Amphetamines have benefits, too, which is why Air Force pilots are given them. "Most people can take amphetamines responsibly," said Jacob Sullum, the author of "Saying Yes," a book debunking drug scares. "Like most drugs, their benefits outweigh the costs for most people. I'd rather be driving next to a truck driver on speed than a truck driver who's falling sleep."

Shutting down every meth lab in America wouldn't eliminate meth because most of it is imported, but the police and prosecutors have escalated their efforts anyway and inflicted more collateral damage.

In Georgia they're prosecuting dozens of Indian convenience-store clerks and managers for selling cold medicine and other legal products. As Kate Zernike reported in The New York Times, some of them spoke little English and seemed to have no idea the medicine was being used to make meth.

The prosecutors seem afflicted by the confused moral thinking that Bennett blames on narcotics. "Drugs," he wrote, "undermine the necessary virtues of a free society — autonomy, self-reliance and individual responsibility."

If you value individual responsibility, why would you send a hard-working clerk to jail for not divining that someone else might manufacture a drug? If you value autonomy and self-reliance, why would spend so much time and money to stop people from taking a substance that's less addictive and harmful than alcohol?

Silence will not stop unpopular Sempra plant

Nearly everyone I talk to is opposed to Sempra's proposed coal power plant in Jerome County. And why not? This proposal would place the health of people living in the Magic Valley at risk for decades, consume huge quantities of scarce water (60 percent of the water demand for the entire city of Twin Falls) and likely contaminate the Snake River aquifer — heavily depended upon by the Magic Valley's people, agricultural, dairy and fish industries.

But being opposed to this proposal — of itself — will have no effect upon whether it gets built or not. If it is the desire of the people in the six counties of the Magic Valley to not have dirty coal in their community, it is essential that they get organized, stand up and demand that this proposal be defeated. It is folly to believe that existing federal, state or county regulations will adequately protect the people of the Magic Valley from the deleterious effects of this proposal on our lives. They will not. Approval of this project is totally in the hands of three Jerome County commissioners — who are being wooed by Sempra's siren song of tax base and jobs. Sempra is relying on the general complacency of the people here — a "let sleeping dogs lie" approach.

It's time to wake up! Educate yourselves about what this proposal means for you and your children, then get organized. Join the Coalition for Healthy Idaho Communities (www.healthyidaho.org), or call the Jerome County Family and Friends, or form your own opposition group.

In the words of Frederick Douglass, former slave and advisor to Abraham Lincoln: "Power concedes nothing without a demand; it never has and it never will."

Welfare issues are Newcomb's specialty

Rep. Newcomb's investigation into the possibility that Wal-Mart may have given its employees information on how to gain access to public assistance is ironic, given Rep. Newcomb's own reliance on public assistance in his personal business.

I fail to see what is wrong with providing an employee with this information. After all, aren't these services supposed to be available to all who qualify? Or are they supposed to be a secret? Which is it Mr. Newcomb?

Second, if Rep. Newcomb is upset that Wal-Mart is not paying employees a living wage, perhaps he should be sure his own House is in order before he goes on a witch hunt. Thanks in part to Rep. Newcomb's lack of support for education, as a starting teacher in 1997 my salary qualified me for almost every form of public assistance available — food stamps, free school lunch for my older child, and WIC (Women, Infants and Children) for my toddler, to name a few. For reasons that Rep. Newcomb might not understand, rather than accept public assistance, we are now a dual-income family.

During that time, Rep. Newcomb has received in excess of one quarter of a million dollars in public assistance for his personal business. Much more, I would say, than the average Wal-Mart employee would receive in a lifetime.

So, what is the problem? Why is it OK to take advantage of public assistance if you are a state representative but not OK if you are just an average Wal-Mart employee trying to make ends meet? A handout by any other name is still a handout.

Wal-Mart bashing is all the rage these days, and I am not its biggest fan either, but kudos to it for helping its employees take advantage of the services available to them. Maybe they will be able to stay home a night or two a week from their other job and read with their kids.

Meteor shower to shine this morning

TWIN FALLS – If you are reading this before dawn today, go outside and look at the sky.

Chances are good you'll be rewarded with a spectacular view of the annual celestial fireworks show known as the Perseid meteor shower.

Look east and you'll also catch a glimpse of Mars.

According to NASA, each July and August Earth glides through the tail of Comet Swift-Tuttle.

"Tiny bits of cosmic dust hit Earth's atmosphere traveling 132,000 mph," according to NASA. "At that speed, even a tiny smidgen of dust makes a vivid streak of light – a meteor – when it disintegrates."

Vehicle on I-84 rolls over at Twin Falls exit

JEROME — Idaho State Police responded Thursday afternoon to a single-car rollover on Interstate 84.

The vehicle rolled into the median on the westbound side of the interstate near Twin Falls Exit 173, trapping the driver inside.

The extent of the injuries and identity of the driver were not known Thursday evening.

Two streets to be improved, one added

KIMBERLY – The City Council approved bids to improve two streets and add a one-way street.

Gordon Paving won the bid to resurface Chestnut Street and portions of Locust and to create a one-way street in an area designated as Tyler Street on the north side of the railroad tracts adjacent to the centennial park. This area has never been maintained as a street.

The council recommended rezoning property owned by Ron Ballard between West Polk Street and Kimberly Road. This will be changed from agricultural to residential and gateway commercial. This same change will be made on property owned by the Methodist church on North Main Street.

In other business, the group approved the proposed budget for the coming fiscal year.

Hansen adopts 311 information line

HANSEN – The city of Hansen has a new nonemergency number for people needing information.

The 311 hotline connects to City Hall. After business hours, the phone will be answered by a police officer.

Officials hope the new number eliminates unnecessary calls to 911.

In other business, the city has advertised for bids to drill a new well to improve the water supply. Bids will be opened at 3 p.m. Monday and the accepted bid will be awarded during the Sept. 12 meeting.

A portion of the Moore property on Main Street has been sold and the new owners will appear before the Planning and Zoning Commission on Aug. 24 for a hearing to ask for permission to operate a distribution warehouse for seeds on the property.

After the budget hearing, the council approved a $520,330 budget for the coming year. The budget reflects a $20,000 increase from carryover funds to cover the initial expenses of the water improvement project.

Red Cross of Greater Idaho downsizes

By Lorraine Cavener
Times-News correspondent

TWIN FALLS – An agency that has been plagued by financial problems is experiencing yet more difficulties.

The American Red Cross has reduced its Twin Falls staff to one volunteer and one temporary worker.

"Lack of contributions have forced the American Red Cross of Greater Idaho to downsize its operation," ARC officials said in a letter to more than 100 authorized providers in eight Magic Valley counties.

Authorized providers give classes such as first aid, swimming, lifeguarding, emergency medical technician, industrial safety, first responder instruction and more.

The change included discontinuing community and full-service classes. Authorized providers will no longer be able to rent or buy equipment or books from the Twin Falls office, but must own their equipment, the letter said.

First aid kits, videos, mannequins and other equipment needed for classes must be ordered through the Boise office.

Four years ago, when the Mini-Cassia office in Rupert was closed and authorized providers were told equipment and materials would be handled through the Twin Falls office, ARC officials maintained it was because the Mini-Cassia office was in debt.

Some Rupert volunteers say the bitterness over that loss is the reason people aren't donating.

"Local people are not supporting them anymore," said George Falkner, who was the disaster services coordinator for Minidoka County for 43 years. "I've had people that worked hard for them and now said they won't give them a dime."

When the local offices closed, Falkner and many others were disappointed, he said.

"I worked really hard on it," Falkner said.

Polly Gorley, ARC director of communications, said the lack of donations does not stem from past bitterness.

All nonprofit organizations are suffering now, she said.

"There are more entities vying for those dollars," Gorley said.

"The United Way is desperately low," she said. "They can't give out what they don't have."

Downsizing at the Twin Falls office is temporary until the financial situation improves, Gorley said.

"We hope the community would assist us in helping us get back on track," she said. "The local office depends on local donations. We're hoping the general public will step up. We really need help."

She emphasized the new Red Cross campaign for 2005: Heroes on the Homefront: Preparing to Respond.

A leadership council was formed recently and the ARC is looking for business leaders to help with speaking engagements and to help raise major gifts, she said.

Services for single-family home fires, flash flooding and sheltering will still be provided locally, she said.

"We will not miss a beat," Gorley said.

County wants more return in hospital deal

By Sandy Miller
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — Consultants for the county and two hospitals hoping to merge have been gathering at the negotiating table to hash out some of the finer points of a proposal.

In the end, it will be voters who approve a merger between the now county-owned Magic Valley Regional and the Boise-based nonprofit St. Luke's Regional Medical Center. The two hospitals want to join forces to create a regional health care system that would also include St. Luke's facilities in Meridian and the Wood River Valley and St. Luke's Mountain States Tumor Institute.

> "We want to make sure there's a public return. It's not going to build a new jail, it's going to ensure quality health care to the citizens of Twin Falls County."
> – County Commissioner Tom Mikesell

Two weeks ago, consultants with Stroudwater Capital, working for the county, met with the hospitals' consultant Larry Singer in Chicago to discuss some of the changes commissioners would like to see in the proposal. County Commissioner Tom Mikesell would not say exactly what those changes are, though he did say they are related to local control and indigent care. He said the information was protected under Idaho public records laws because the proposal involves employees and land acquisition.

He said the decision on the future of the now county-owned Magic Valley Regional Medical Center is a crucial one.

"It's a $140 million business that brings in a $12 million profit a year," Mikesell said. "We want to make sure there's a public return. It's not going to build a new jail, it's going to ensure quality health care to the citizens of Twin Falls County."

County Commissioner Gary Grindstaff provided a few more details.

"It has to do with indigency and how much we pay, and the legalities of being able to sue the county on indigency issues," Grindstaff said.

Grindstaff said the county is waiting for a response from the two hospitals on the county's requests.

The county's six-month contract with Stroudwater Capital expired at the end of July, but Stroudwater has offered its services free of charge until the end of this month. Grindstaff said the county hasn't yet decided whether or not to renew the contract in which the county was paying the consulting firm $45,000 a month for its services. Grindstaff said commissioners probably will wait for the hospitals' response before making a decision on the contract.

"We haven't discussed renewing the contract," Grindstaff said. "If we think we have to, we will."

Hospital officials hope commissioners will put the proposal before voters in November. However, commissioners could decide to entertain offers from other hospital networks. The county has received letters of interest from a number of health care networks, including St. Alphonsus Regional Medical Center in Boise, owned by the nonprofit Catholic network Trinity Healthcare, and Sisters of Charity of Leavenworth Health System, a nonprofit Catholic network based in Kansas. For-profit networks that have come calling include LifePoint Hospitals Inc. and Community Health Systems, both based in Brentwood, Tenn., Iasis Healthcare of Franklin, Tenn., Essent Healthcare of Nashville, Tenn., and Health Management Associates Inc. based in Naples, Fla.

John E. Swayze
Times-News correspondent

FILER – Resident Shirley Gause presented the City Council this week with the names of about 45 of her neighbors who want something done about the increase in gravel truck traffic along Stevens Street.

Gause said that even though Stevens Street goes through a residential area and school zone, many of the trucks drive 40 to 50 mph.

"With school starting in a couple of weeks, there's going to be a larger flow of elementary children walking or riding their bikes down this street, and I ask that you move on this to provide a safe and lawful environment," she said.

Council members were sympathetic, and acknowledged that area construction projects have created more traffic, but they also pointed out that the street has been part of a truck route for at least 30 years and any possible changes have to be considered.

"The first we've heard of this is just now with your petition," Mayor Jay Fort said.

"We need to review what's going on, discuss it with trucks going through and do some monitoring."

Also on Tuesday, the council tentatively accepted a $2.1 million city budget for fiscal 2006. The budget reflects a $52,330 increase over this year and breaks down as follows:

- General fund, $649,249
- Water, $532,175
- Street lighting, $89,271.
- Street fund, $234,609.
- Library, $50,109.
- Revenue sharing, $57,586.
- Sewer, $294,815.
- Liability, $75,668.
- Health insurance, $160,487.

Final approval will be given during a public budget hearing and regular meeting scheduled for 7:30 p.m. Sept. 6 in the council chambers on Main Street.

Castleford to start water system improvements within three weeks

By Blair Koch
Times-News correspondent

CASTLEFORD – Improvements to the water system are expected to start within the next three weeks.

First on the list of improvements is the installation of a flow meter, according to Ryan Baumann, owner of Ryan Baumann Landscapes, who has been hired to make the improvements required by the Department of Environmental Quality.

The electromagnetic flow meter will cost an estimated $5,400 and will record how much water is flowing from the well.

"We will do that first so we know how much water the well is producing," Baumann said. "I think that we need that information so we can order the right system for the rest of the improvements."

People might notice a slight drop in water pressure while the work is being done. Residents will be notified by mail when the system is being worked on and about any precautions that need to be followed.

In other business, the City Council approved letters to be sent to the owners of two properties to be condemned inside the city limits. Property owners will be given six months to bring the property up to city code or have it removed.

Sockeye runs drop in British Columbia

PRINCE RUPERT, British Columbia (AP) — Canadian small-boat fishermen who rely on sockeye salmon from the Skeena River are reeling from a drastic decline in the fishery.

The Skeena sockeye run, initially forecast to be 1.2 million fish, has been about half that number, Fisheries and Oceans Canada said.

Sockeye returns on the Nass River are also down but less drastically, and the binational Pacific Salmon Commission also expressed concern for runs in the Fraser River, the province's most productive sockeye stream.

Government scientists say they don't know the reason for many of the low returns. The number of juvenile sockeye leaving Babine Lake on the Skeena was normal, but few have made it back as adults.

Gillnetter Fred Hawkshaw said he had caught 35 sockeye this year.

"It's real serious and the public needs to hear about it," Hawkshaw said. "There's no fish farm issue, no apparent disease issue and if we believe Fisheries, there was millions of fry out there.

"That's the big mystery. Where did all these fish go?"

Ocean survival seems to be the smoking gun right now, said Steven Groves, the Canadian government's acting area chief of fisheries resource management.

Meanwhile, the bilateral commission, which helps regulate sockeye that are targeted by fishermen in northwest Washington state as well as in British Columbia, said Tuesday the Fraser River fish numbers remain so far below initial forecasts that a commercial fishery may not be allowed.

SoCal Edison signs contract for massive solar energy plant

LOS ANGELES (AP) — A huge solar energy facility capable of producing more electricity than all other U.S. sun-power projects combined is being planned for the California desert.

Southern California Edison signed a 20-year power purchase agreement Monday with Phoenix-based Stirling Energy Systems to build a 4,500-acre project that would produce 500 megawatts, enough electricity for a small city — about 278,000 homes.

"We're very proud to be leaders in the country in bringing renewable energy sources into operation," said SoCal Edison Chairman John Bryson.

"California is heavily dependent on natural gas. Natural gas costs have climbed extraordinarily. Any sensible electricity policy for a large group of customers needs to have diversity to it, and renewable energy need to be part of it."

The deal is contingent on the California Public Utilities Commission's approval and would begin with a pilot project using 40 of Stirling's 37-foot-diameter dishes. The commission is scheduled to meet Aug. 25.

Solar energy makes particular sense in California, where peak usage coincides with the hottest hours and the sunniest days of the year.

The deal came a day after President Bush signed a bill that will give billions in tax breaks to encourage new energy options, including renewable energy production.

News of the agreement rippled through the Solar World Congress in Orlando, Fla., on Tuesday.

"It helps the public understand that solar energy is not something that's going to happen in their grandchildren's days," said Brad Collins, head of the American Solar Energy Society, which sponsored the conference. "It's happening right now."

The 20,000-dish project would be built in the desert near Victorville, about 70 miles northeast of Los Angeles, with construction expected to be finished by 2010.

It would be capable of expanding beyond the planned 500 megawatts.

Edison's 4.5 million customers won't have to wait until the project is finished. The project is expected to begin generating grid-ready electricity when the first dish is working, said Stirling CEO Bruce Osborn.

News and Updates About Health Care In Our Community

MAGIC VALLEY REGIONAL MEDICAL CENTER

Magic Valley Regional Medical Center (MVRMC) and St. Luke's have proposed a merger that will bring together these quality health care organizations to create a new, Idaho-based, not-for-profit regional health care system.

During the merger evaluation process, MVRMC and St. Luke's will highlight various topics from the merger proposal and respond to community questions.

Weekly Update

A philosophical foundation of the new health system proposed by MVRMC and St. Luke's is that every hospital affiliated with the System will be encouraged to develop to its fullest potential. By merging assets, we will have the available resources to make the needed investment in our local hospital to accomplish this goal. What this means is that MVRMC will not lose essential services through this process – quite the contrary. Through the merger, MVRMC will develop into a state-of-the-art regional medical center with the fullest complement of services supportable by the communities in our area.

As the valley grows, it is imperative that our hospital has both the financial and human resources to respond to the increasing health care needs of the communities we serve. MVRMC's enhanced financial status as the result of a merger with St. Luke's will enable the hospital to offer programs and services previously unavailable in this area and recruit expert staff and physicians to support them.

Warm Springs Ranch project loses hotel operator, partner

By Susan Bailey
For The Times-News

KETCHUM — The Warm Springs Ranch project has lost its hotel operator and partner, Noble House Hotels, putting an immediate halt to an application to redevelop the 77 acres with annexation, a planned-unit development and associated zoning changes.

Developer Sun Valley Ventures LLC released information on its plans in the wake of the change. Because developers have not yet determined a precise direction, Ketchum Mayor Ed Simon canceled a public hearing on recreation aspects of the Warm Springs Ranch project.

Henry Dean, project manager for Warm Springs Ranch, said Noble House Hotels was "the economic driver for the project." He said developer Sun Valley Ventures must figure out its next move.

Noble House Hotels, a Seattle-based resort hotel and spa operator, decided to withdraw its financial support and participation in Warm Springs Ranch following the last public hearing on the project July 28. Stephen Roth, majority owner of Sun Valley Ventures, said he bought out the 20 percent ownership of Noble House.

Roth is now 60 percent owner in Sun Valley Ventures.

The chairman of Noble House has a home in Sun Valley and its chief executive has lived in Sun Valley for three years. Roth called the loss of Noble House "a shame," noting its strong connection to the area made it a perfect operator for a hotel. Noble House proposed a 60-room luxury operation consisting of 48 cabins and 12 hotel rooms with a spa.

Northcentral Idaho wildfire prompts evacuation of homes

By Christopher Smith
Associated Press writer

BOISE — A wildfire in northcentral Idaho doubled in size Thursday, prompting the evacuation of about 100 homes in the Mount Idaho area southeast of Grangeville.

The Blackerby Fire was estimated at more than 1,000 acres after burning embers were blown across the South Fork of the Clearwater River late Wednesday and early Thursday. The fire was burning on state land and in the Nez Perce National Forest.

"We've estimated there are 70 residences ahead of the fire," Brian Shiplett, fire manager for the Idaho Department of Lands in Coeur d'Alene, said Thursday. The fire was about three miles from the small town of Grangeville in steep, timber-covered terrain.

Law enforcement officers have notified residents in other areas near the fire to be prepared to leave their homes on short notice.

"Right now they are containing it pretty well, but if the wind shifts and if it jumps any of the roads, it has the potential to affect a lot more homes," Idaho County Sheriff Larry Dasenbrock said. "We've been making emergency notifications, finding out what kind of resources people have, giving them information on emergency shelters that are available and advising them to move hazardous fuels away from their homes."

An estimated 200 firefighters had built fire line around just 5 percent of the blaze Thursday, but a county road was serving as a fire break on one flank. No injuries have been reported.

The blaze began Tuesday and the cause is under investigation.

Shiplett said the Northern Rockies Coordination Center in Missoula, Mont. made the Blackerby Fire a top priority Thursday.

"They've ordered more resources onto it after they pumped the Grangeville Air Center completely out of fire retardant," he said. The center supplies air tankers in the northcentral Idaho region.

Region's top EPA administrator selected

SEATTLE (AP) — L. Michael Bogert has been chosen as the new Environmental Protection Agency regional administrator for the Pacific Northwest and Alaska.

EPA Administrator Stephen Johnson made the announcement Thursday, citing Bogert's background in public service. Bogert will manage EPA programs in Washington, Oregon, Idaho and Alaska.

Bogert served as a legal adviser to Idaho Gov. Dirk Kempthorne from 1999 to 2004, focusing on environmental and water issues, and most recently worked in a private law practice with Perkins Coie LLP in Boise, Idaho.

"I am looking forward to this exciting and challenging opportunity to advance the agency's mission of protecting human health and the environment for the benefit of all the citizens of the Pacific Northwest and Alaska," Bogert said in a statement.

Bogert replaces Ron Kreizenbeck, who has been serving as acting Region 10 administrator since July 2004. Kreizenbeck will resume his position as deputy regional administrator.

Protesters gather against proposed diversion of Great Basin water

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — Dozens of residents, government and education officials from western Utah and some of their Nevada neighbors gathered in front of the federal building to protest a proposal to transport Great Basin water to Las Vegas.

The protest Wednesday followed a 220-mile relay run from Baker, Nev., to deliver bundles of letters to congressional and state leaders.

The Southern Nevada Water Authority wants to drill wells on the Nevada side of the line and transport the water to Las Vegas via a 500-mile network of pipelines.

"This is one of the last prime areas of the West," said Ed Alder, principal of West Desert High School. "We need to protect it."

Residents of the Snake Valley on both sides of the border contend the pumping would devastate their livelihoods and the land they live on.

Callao rancher Cecil Garland said groundwater tables in the valley are already low following six years of drought, and the groundwater pumping would make what is already a bad situation much worse.

"We have no surplus water in the Snake Valley," Garland said. "The taking of the water means the destruction of the habitat. And the destruction of the habitat is a not-so-subtle form of genocide."

Southern Nevada officials contend studies have shown that as much as 100,000 acre-feet of water is available annually in the aquifers under the valley. Their proposal calls for a yearly withdrawal of 25,000 acre-feet.

BLM nets $10 million in sale of leases

DENVER (AP) — Several parcels of land up for oil and gas leases that were previously pulled from the auction block were among more than 71,000 acres sold Thursday in the Colorado Bureau of Land Management's second-highest grossing auction ever.

The sale of leases for federal mineral rights netted the BLM about $10 million, slightly below the record $10.3 million sale in May 2001.

A 400-acre parcel on national forest land near Kebler Pass and Paonia State Park in western Colorado after Forest Service wasn't included in the auction after officials said they would reevaluate it. About 500 area residents, local elected officials and Democratic Congressman John Salazar urged the BLM to yank that lease from the sale.

The BLM delayed action on a few more parcels because of concerns about species that environmentalists want to see declared endangered.

But the auction of several parcels with split ownership — one party owns the surface, one owns the minerals underneath — proceeded. The BLM withdrew leases on a total of 17,500 acres in May after landowners complained they hadn't been notified that the minerals, owned by the federal government, were up for lease.

The BLM posted the information in field offices 45 days before the sale as required by law, but couldn't post it on its Web site because of systemwide security problems. Agency officials have said they aren't able to notify individual landowners, some of whom live out of state.

BLM officials said they have stepped up efforts to get information out through the media and community outreach.

"The BLM strives to be responsive to public concerns while still fulfilling our role of making the public mineral estate available for responsible development," said Ron Wenker, state BLM director.

Peter Shelton, whose land near Ridgway was among 79 parcels leased, said the BLM didn't contact him or his neighbors between May and Thursday.

"I think they assumed we all knew, but that's not the way you do business," Shelton said.

He drove to Denver for Thursday's auction "to watch the land under my house sold." He and his wife and two neighbors decided against bidding on the leases because of financial considerations, but were happy the roughly 1,500-acre parcel drew only the minimum bid.

"Maybe they're not convinced this is a hot spot," Shelton said.

Landowners and environmentalists have filed protests of the sales. If rejected, the protests can be appealed to an Interior Department board.

INSURGENTS RETURN

AP photo

Insurgents cheer at Tal Afar, Iraq, in this Sept. 5, 2004, file photo. Nearly a year ago, U.S. forces swarmed the city of Tal Afar, killing enough insurgents for the local police chief to declare the town insurgent-free. Now they have returned.

CAMP SYKES, Iraq (AP) — Nearly a year ago, U.S. forces swarmed through Tal Afar, killing enough insurgents for the local police chief to declare the city insurgent-free. Now the militants are back, and the United States has moved in more soldiers to drive them out.

The story of Tal Afar, an ethnically diverse city located near Camp Sykes and about 40 miles from the Syrian border, underscores the gamble Washington will be making by turning over large areas of the country to Iraqi control so U.S. soldiers can begin going home next year.

When the insurgents were driven from Tal Afar, the United States scaled back. But the small number of U.S. soldiers remaining — along with the new Iraqi soldiers — were unable to prevent the insurgents from returning.

"The enemy had sensed a reduction of U.S. forces," said Col. H.R. McMaster, commander of the 3rd Armored Cavalry Regiment, which was rushed here from Baghdad, 260 miles to the southeast, earlier this year.

Now McMaster's regiment — which oversees Tal Afar as well as more than 185 miles of Syrian border — is trying to uproot insurgents who have averaged over 150 attacks per month, an exceptionally high rate for a city of some 200,000 people.

After U.S. forces crushed the insurgents in Tal Afar last fall, only about 500 American soldiers were left to guard the city, which was mostly in the hands of the Iraqis. But the insurgent ranks swelled, allowing them to control entire neighborhoods.

At the time, the Syrian border was manned by Iraqi guards whom American soldiers privately considered either corrupt or incompetent.

In June, the 3rd Armored Cavalry launched an offensive in Tal Afar. Now American officers say they are seeing slow progress, including the recent capture of key insurgent financiers, McMaster said. In addition, more than 250 suspected insurgents were recently arrested.

"We've taken away the enemy's main strengths: their ability to hide in the population," McMaster said.

Tal Afar is strategically important to both the insurgency and the U.S. military. As the closest major city to the northern border with Syria, it serves a way station for foreign insurgents sneaking into Iraq, officials say.

Hundreds of U.S. troops recently were sent to the border to try to curb the infiltration.

Tal Afar, located about five miles from the U.S. military's Camp Sykes, is one of the most inaccessible areas in the country. In the last month, the U.S. military has only allowed one embedded reporter — for the German magazine "Armored Gun Trucks of the U.S. Army in Iraq" — inside the city.

Tal Afar's troubles stem in part from tensions among its diverse ethnic groups — Turkomen, Kurds, and Arabs. Turkomen, a national minority with Turkish roots, form the majority in the city. But the Turkomen community is split between Sunni and Shiite factions.

Those tensions were heightened by a power struggle after the collapse of Saddam Hussein's regime in 2003; the population was left feuding among itself, with some groups committed to driving out the Americans.

The rancor spread to the police department, which is known for its heavy-handed tactics. The Shiite Muslim police chief has since been dismissed. Still, the U.S. military remains concerned enough about force's reputation that it created a reconciliation committee for Tal Afar's people to file abuse complaints.

The city's sectarian troubles also attracted the attention of national Shiite leaders who oppose the U.S. military. Clerics loyal to the radical preacher Muqtada al-Sadr regularly mention the "suffering" of Tal Afar's people in sermons around the country.

Al-Sadr's movement regularly collects donations of food and medical supplies in mosques in Baghdad, Kufa and other cities to deliver them to Shiites in Tal Afar.

U.S. officials have found widespread favoritism within the municipal administration. For example, Shiite tribes in Tal Afar were routinely short-changed on monthly rations of beans, cooking oil and other basic supplies.

But McMaster said that has been changed.

All this requires the U.S. military to walk a fine line to avoid any sign of favoritism. The Americans have repeatedly denied allegations that they favor the city's Kurds — the most pro-American of Iraq's ethnic groups.

An Iraqi army division with about 8,000 soldiers was stationed in the area recently. But U.S. officials acknowledge that Kurds form a disproportionate percentage of the troops, who have yet to face the insurgents on their own.

Defense officials, states square off over Guard plan

WASHINGTON (AP) — Defense officials assured a skeptical base-closing commission Thursday that the Pentagon's plan to restructure dozens of Air National Guard units wouldn't pose an unacceptable risk to the country's security.

Opposing the plan, states argue that it will hinder Air Guard units from fulfilling their homeland security missions, including protecting the skies and supporting governors during statewide emergencies.

The shake-up of dozens of Air Guard units has emerged as the most contentious part of Defense Secretary Donald H. Rumsfeld's proposal to close, shrink or expand hundreds of military bases and other installations nationwide.

As a result, the nine-member commission reviewing the Pentagon's sweeping proposal gave the Pentagon and states one last chance to argue their cases before the panel sends a final report — with changes if necessary — to President Bush next month.

Rumsfeld's Air Guard plan calls for shifting people, equipment and aircraft around at least 54 sites where Air Guard units are stationed. Roughly two dozen sites would expand, while about 30 are slated for closure or downsizing. In many cases, units would continue to exist but no planes would be assigned to them. Units without planes would receive new non-flying missions.

"It poses no unacceptable risk" to homeland security, Adm. Timothy Keating, commander of the U.S. Northern Command and the North American Aerospace Defense Command, told the commission.

But several commissioners appeared unconvinced.

"That's not exactly a wholehearted endorsement, to me anyway," retorted Harold Gehman, a retired Navy admiral.

VA rechecks post-traumatic stress claims

WASHINGTON (AP) — The government is going to take a new look at the claims of about a third of the military veterans who now get disability payments for post-traumatic stress disorder.

The Veterans Affairs Department will begin a yearlong review next month of 72,000 cases after an internal study found inconsistencies in the way the claims were decided, including many cases approved though they lacked required medical evidence.

Millions of dollars a year could be involved.

Post-traumatic stress disorder, a mental illness characterized by subjective symptoms like flashbacks and nightmares, can be difficult to diagnose and quantify.

The review will cover veterans whose claims were approved between 1999 and 2004 and who receive full disability benefits — $2,299 a month — for PTSD alone or in combination with other conditions, said VA spokesman Phil Budahn.

The review won't consider the other side of the question, whether some veterans were wrongly denied benefits, and that has some critics upset.

"We need to pay as much attention to improper denials as we do to improper grants," said Illinois Rep. Lane Evans, ranking Democrat on the House Veterans' Affairs Committee.

Budahn said the VA could look at that later, "but first we're just going to keep our focus on the problem that's been identified."

Randy Reese, national service director for Disabled American Veterans, complained that the review would divert resources from the VA's backlog of several hundred thousand disability claims yet to be processed.

Last year, the VA spent $4.3 billion on PTSD disability payments, not including medical care.

The number of vets receiving compensation benefits for the illness rose nearly 80 percent between 1999 and 2004 — from 120,265 to 215,871. During the same period, benefits for all types of disabilities grew by just 12 percent, to about 2.5 million.

Mom's surprise irks husband

DEAR ABBY
Jeanne Phillips

DEAR ABBY: A few years ago, I lost a treasured stuffed animal from my childhood. I told my husband about it, and how sad it made me.

Being the caring, thoughtful person he is, he went on eBay to see if he could find one like it. He thought he had located it, but wanted to be absolutely sure, so he sent my mom the link. She informed him it wasn't the same bear, and convinced him not to buy it, but still he told me about it.

The next time we went to visit my mother, she said she had a "surprise" for me. As we were packing to go home, she presented the surprise: The same teddy bear my husband had shown her.

He was very upset, but did not confront her.

My husband has also mentioned that he feels my mother doesn't like him. Would it be OK to ask her why she bought the bear after talking him out of it? If so, how would you suggest mentioning it without sounding accusatory?

— UPSET IN COLUMBUS, OHIO

DEAR UPSET: Stop worrying about sounding accusatory, and just ask her why she did it. Maybe she wanted to be a "hero." Maybe she felt the need to upstage your husband. Whatever the reason, she should explain herself. She owes your husband an apology.

DEAR ABBY: I am 10 and go to an elementary school where there is zero tolerance for bullying, teasing, fighting, etc. I have extremely low vision and have to wear glasses, but nobody made fun of me. (I'm the only one in class who wears glasses.)

A friend of my mom's son is starting first grade this coming year. His vision is better than mine, and he has to wear very thick glasses. They are so thick the other kids might consider him a "nerd."

How can I comfort him? He is already sad. Do you think the kids will make fun of him?

— KID WITH GLASSES IN MISSOURI

DEAR KID WITH GLASSES: Support your friend by making a point of "being there" for him if he needs to talk, and if he's feeling bad about himself, reassure him by reminding him of his good points. However, because your school has zero tolerance for students abusing each other, the boy may not encounter the problems you fear he will.

One way to ensure tolerance and understanding would be for the teacher to prepare her students by explaining to them the disability their classmate is dealing with. When I was in grammar school, a deaf girl joined my class. Once her condition was understood by the other students, she was readily accepted.

DEAR ABBY: My neighbor, who has been divorced for about a year and a half, has a day job. Her ex-husband is unemployed and lives just down the street. While my neighbor is at work and her two teenage sons are away, her ex goes into her house, sometimes for an hour or more. (He has access to their children's house keys.) At certain times of the month, I see him digging through her trash can at the end of the driveway.

I am sure she has no idea of what is going on at her house while she is at work. Knowing his bad behavior in the past, should I let my neighbor know what her ex-husband is doing?

— DILEMMA IN NORTHEAST TEXAS

DEAR DILEMMA: I am reminded of the profound saying, "All that is necessary for evil to happen is for good men to remain silent." What are you waiting for? Speak up!

Tiny pet owl provided Nightingale company

The strangest of unions can form in wartime. During the Crimean War, for example, nurse-pioneer Florence Nightingale's constant companion was a tiny pet owl she kept in her pocket.

This day in history: On Aug. 12, 1877, Thomas Edison was amazed to hear his own voice reciting "Mary Had a Little Lamb" from his new invention, the phonograph.

Hel, Norse goddess of the underworld, was the source of the world "hell." Hel's realm was a tediously neutral place devoid of both joy and pain, reserved for people who didn't die in battle. Warriors, on the other hand, went to Valhalla, a place of exciting battles where all wounds heal overnight.

It was a French monk named Dom Perignon who invented champagne. It was an accident the first time it happened, so he spent months systematically trying to make it happen again.

Thinking of golfing in Australia? Golfers there warn that crows and currawongs swoop down and steal balls. When one bird's nest was blasted with a water cannon, nearly 50 balls came raining down.

The first merry-go-rounds were built in the mid-16th century as a training device for knights. They'd ride the wooden horses and spear rings or effigies of enemy soldiers.

What we call "parchment paper" isn't actually parchment. The real stuff is the pressed skin of goat, sheep or calf. It works poorly in most inkjet printers.

Farm turkeys have been bred for big breasts so they can barely walk. So it's hard for some city folk to imagine that their wild brethren can run at speeds of up to 20 miles per hour, and fly at about 55 mph.

During the good ol' days of making war, pigeons were often used for sending secret messages over long distances. During World War II, the British Army raised and trained falcons. They patrolled the coast in two-hour shifts to take down any pigeons that German spies might use to send messages back to the fatherland.

Stephen King was a 17-year-old high school student when he had his first story published. "I Was A Teenage Grave Robber" appeared in 1965 in Comics Review.

Will Mo the manatee make it this time?

CRYSTAL RIVER, Fla. — Maybe, just maybe, the third time's a charm for Mo the manatee.

Twice before, state wildlife officials have tried to release the mighty creature back into the wild. And twice before, they've failed. On Tuesday, they went for No. 3.

Mo was originally captured as an orphan in 1994 and was hand raised, which can make it more difficult to prepare an animal for release because they have learned little about living in the wild.

Odds & ends

Mo's first attempt at being wild was in 1998. He was released again in February 2002. But just before spending a year in the wild, he was found in Sulphur Springs in Hillsborough County, emaciated and injured from a boat strike.

Mo is well known throughout the state for having lived at nearly every Florida manatee-rehabilitation center at one time or another.

The Miami Seaquarium has been Mo's home for most of the past year. There, animal keepers worked to teach him what he needs to survive in the wild. One of his problems has been that he was not used to life in saltwater and didn't recognize foods that were available in saltwater.

"The reason he is significant is that this is the third time he is being released and we've never done this with any other animal," said Nicole Adimey of the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service Jacksonville office.

Football fan barred from wearing famous helmet

GREEN BAY, Wis. — The Packalope will have to leave his antlers at home.

Green Bay Packers fan Larry Primeau will be barred from wearing his trademark '60s-era Packers helmet mounted with a 10-point deer rack at home games under security rules announced Wednesday.

Primeau, who in 1999 was enshrined in the Visa Hall of Fans at the Pro Football Hall of Fame, said he can't believe new security regulations will bar his Packalope helmet.

The rule was not aimed specifically at Primeau, as other fans have attached antlers to everything from hardhats to Cheeseheads. Green Bay Police Cmdr. Ken Brodhagen said umbrellas have been included, too.

Primeau said the rule will not crimp his style too much: "I can't wear the thing for three hours straight because my neck isn't strong enough."

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Industrious individuals will have more than enough energy to start major projects and see them through to completion. Try not to step on any toes in your rush to make a big splash.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Competition could be fierce, but the prize might be worthy of extra effort. Tempers might get out of hand but you have the cool as a cucumber approach that will keep things moving.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): If the shoe is on the other foot, you may need to jump a bit higher to please others. Follow the leader to avoid a clash of wills. Minor frictions will serve to get things moving that have been on hold.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Feats of derring-do are just your style, but don't jump from the frying pan into the fire. Big accomplishments are possible because you have the stamina to hang on to the bitter end.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Keep your manners at the forefront. Your optimism is backed up by firepower and you may be champing at the bit to get things accomplished. Remember to avoid offending others.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Brainstorm potential problems and "head 'em off at the pass." Drive and ambition are accentuated. Much can be accomplished today, but it is a good idea to get plenty of rest tonight.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Your networking skills can win powerful allies who will stick by you. Just don't light any flames near people with short fuses or push your luck. Fight the urge to take unreasonable risks.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Ambition and drive are in the air and these can help you climb a few extra rungs on the ladder of success. Just don't stub your toe by competing with others over who can spend the most money.

Lobbyist charged with fraud

MIAMI (AP) — Lobbyist Jack Abramoff, a key figure in investigations involving House Majority Leader Tom DeLay, was indicted Thursday by a federal grand jury on fraud charges arising from a 2000 deal to buy casino boats.

The indictment, returned by a grand jury in Fort Lauderdale, charges that Abramoff and an associate, 36-year-old New York businessman Adam Kidan, used a fake wire transfer to defraud two lenders out of some $60 million to finance the deal for SunCruz Casinos.

Abramoff and Kidan are charged with five counts of wire fraud and one count of conspiracy to commit wire fraud and mail fraud. Each count carries a penalty of up to 5 years in prison and a $250,000 fine.

Abramoff's Miami attorney, Neal Sonnett, said he had not been informed of any charges but said that Abramoff, 40, did not commit fraud. Abramoff had previously been notified that he was a target of the investigation.

Kidan's attorney in Florida, Martin Jaffe, said his client would surrender to authorities in Fort Lauderdale on Friday.

"I did nothing wrong and these allegations are totally unfounded," Kidan said in a statement.

The partners bought SunCruz, which runs a fleet of gambling boats, from entrepreneur Konstantinos "Gus" Boulis for $147 million in 2000, but the deal soon fell apart. Amid bitter legal fighting over the sale, Boulis was shot to death five months later in 2001 what police called a hit. The Fort Lauderdale killing has never been solved.

High-tech passports in the works

The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — The United States will begin issuing high-tech passports later this year that State Department officials say will reduce fraud and enhance border security. No word on whether they will do anything to increase satisfaction with passport photos.

The new passports will feature radio frequency chips designed to make the documents work more like employee ID cards that can be passed over an electronic reader. Each chip will contain a digital record of all information printed on the passport, including the holder's name and document number. The chip will also contain the passport holder's photograph, enhanced by facial-recognition technology. If the paper passport is altered, customs agents will be able to compare the information on the chip with the person presenting it.

Critics say terrorists or thieves could use handheld chip readers to identify U.S. citizens, even on a crowded street, anywhere they travel. The State Department is considering adding "anti-skimming" technology to the passports to reduce that risk.

California court gives a boost to worker protection

Los Angeles Times

SAN FRANCISCO — The California Supreme Court ruled Thursday that a beauty-products company may be held liable for ordering a supervisor to fire a female employee because she wasn't "good looking enough" and to replace her with someone "hot."

The 4-2 ruling significantly expands protections for workers who refuse to follow orders they reasonably believe violate antidiscrimination laws. The court held that workers are protected from retaliation even if they fail to report the alleged discrimination to the company and even if the order was not unlawful.

Elysa J. Yanowitz, a regional sales manager for L'Oreal USA, said her boss ordered her to fire a female sales associate with a strong performance record because the dark-skinned employee was not attractive enough. After Yanowitz repeatedly refused, she said the company retaliated against her. Yanowitz eventually left L'Oreal on a disability leave because of stress.

Yanowitz contended that her boss's order was illegal sex discrimination because male sales associates were not required to be attractive.

> The 4-2 ruling significantly expands protections for workers who refuse to follow orders they reasonably believe violate antidiscrimination laws.

The court refused to decide whether discrimination on the basis of looks was illegal under state law. But the court agreed with findings by other courts that an appearance standard that is applied to one gender and not the other is sex discrimination unless the differential treatment can be justified as a legitimate occupational qualification.

"We believe it is clear that such unjustified disparate treatment ... would constitute unlawful sex discrimination" under California law, Chief Justice Ronald M. George wrote for the court.

Justices Ming W. Chin and Marvin R. Baxter dissented, arguing that Yanowitz could not seek compensation for retaliation because she failed to report the alleged discrimination to the appropriate company officials.

"This case thus presents the question of whether a person can be a whistleblower without blowing the whistle," Chin wrote. "At least in this case, where the personnel order was not clearly unlawful, I would say no."

Former California Supreme Court Justice Joseph Grodin, who argued the appeal for Yanowitz, said the ruling sends a message to employers that "workers are allies in the battle against discrimination" and will be protected for refusing to obey potentially illegal orders.

Yanowitz, 59, who worked for the cosmetics and fragrance company for more than 17 years, was gratified by Thursday's ruling. "I hope this case gives other managers the courage to do what is right for those who report to them," the Northern California woman said.

Lawyers for L'Oreal could not be reached for comment.

Study: No obesity risk from early puberty in girls

CHICAGO (AP) — Overweight girls reach puberty earlier, but early puberty alone doesn't necessarily lead to being overweight in adulthood, according to a new study.

Instead, it's childhood pudginess that's linked with both early menstruation and adult weight problems.

Girls who were overweight before their first menstrual periods were almost eight times more likely to be overweight as women, the study found. But there was no link between precocious puberty alone and being overweight later in life.

"Given the epidemic of obesity in the population, it's important to know where best to intervene," said lead researcher Aviva Must, associate professor of Public Health and Family Medicine at Tufts University School of Medicine in Boston.

That intervention should start in childhood, she said.

For parents, she said, the study provides reassurance that early puberty is normal for some overweight girls, and there is no greater risk of being overweight as an adult for a slender girl who gets her first period early.

Findings by other researchers that early puberty in girls causes adult weight problems sparked her research, Must said. That supposed link threatened to rob attention from the real culprit: childhood obesity.

The study will stop doctors from trying to prevent obesity by suppressing early puberty with medications, said Dr. David Katz, director of the Prevention Research Center at Yale University School of Medicine.

"I think this is an important finding," Katz said. "In many ways, it corroborates common sense: Kids who struggle with their weight become adults who struggle with their weight."

The study will be published in the September issue of Pediatrics.

Three Island Crossing resurrects a little history Saturday

By Matt Christensen
Times-News writer

GLENNS FERRY — Load up the wagons, hitch up the oxen and don't forget the life preservers: This year's annual Three Island Crossing reenactment promises to be a high-anxiety event for participants and onlookers alike.

The crossing commemorates a segment of the Oregon Trail where pioneers were forced to decide between fording the Snake River or heading south through the desert. Taking the desert route sometimes ended in dehydration and starvation. Fording the river meant risking it all on a 100-yard sprint through swift waters as deep as 10 feet in hopes that the horses or oxen could stay above water. Tough choice.

But more than 150 years later, it's an easy — some say crazy — decision for three wagon teams and about 20 horseback riders who will brave the unpredictable currents of the Snake River on Saturday. Wearing traditional 19th century clothing, the reenactors will stay as authentic to the original crossers as possible — save one detail. They'll all be wearing life jackets.

There have been some mishaps in the event's past. Last year, in a practice run days before the event, two horses became trapped in the river's current and drowned. But this year, says crossing supervisor and wagonmaster Roy Allen, 75, all the participants completed practice runs safely and are ready for the real thing. Each potential reenactor was required to successfully cross the river twice under Allen's supervision to earn a spot in the official event.

And not just anyone with a horse can participate in the crossing, Allen says. "Those that want to cross have to prove to me they can handle their horse and the horse can swim." Allen has participated in nearly all of the event's previous 18 crossings without major incidents, though during a practice run this week he had to be pulled from the river by rope when he was tossed into the waters. But that's not stopping him from trying again on Saturday.

Some extra safety precautions are being taken this year, however. Riders on horseback, called outriders, will secure the wagons with ropes to prevent them from being caught in the river's unpredictable currents. Idaho Power will reduce water flow from about 6,500 cfs to about 5,500 cfs at the crossing point, members of the Coast Guard Auxiliary of Ada County will monitor the crossing atop recreational watercraft and an ambulance and paramedics will be standing by. Also, an Elmore County sheriff's deputy will guard the south bank to prevent any unauthorized reenactors from braving the waters.

All high drama for the 1,500 spectators a Three Island State Park official estimated will witness this year's crossing.

Remembering southern Idaho's rich history is the primary reason for the reenactment, organizers say. "It keeps alive Oregon Trail history," said Jean Allen, a crossing organizer and Roy Allen's wife. "We see what pioneers had to go through."

According to an Idaho State Parks and Recreation Web site, nearly 200,000 emigrants came through Southern Idaho in the mid-1800s. Many attempted to ford the Snake. Native Americans, who used the area at Three Island to fish for salmon, aided the pioneers across the river in exchange for beans and bread.

A parade tonight will kick off the festivities, followed by live music. Vendors will be on hand selling arts and crafts as well as food. Admission to the park is free tonight. A pioneer breakfast begins at 7 a.m. Saturday, with the reenactment beginning at 11 a.m. More live music takes place following the crossing, ending at 4 p.m. All-day admission Saturday is $5. Visitors can also stop by the Oregon Trail History and Education Center at the park to learn about the Oregon Trail and Snake River fordings in more detail.

Three Island State Park Manager John Frank recommends visitors wear caps, drink plenty of water and bring lawn chairs. And unless you've been cleared by the wagonmaster to saddle up, leave the life preservers at home.

Music fans are ready to Rock the Canyon

Two-day event sponsored by five area churches

By Steve Crump
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — If Christian rock isn't your thing, you may be surprised to learn that — quickly and quietly — a Christian contemporary festival has become the biggest annual outdoor musical event in south-central Idaho.

Rock the Canyon, a two-day rockfest in Centennial Park sponsored by five Twin Falls-area churches, is expected to attract 6,000 spectators over the next two days, according to Terry Pilch, the event coordinator. They'll listen to 14 Christian acts in a format similar to Twin Falls' annual Jazz in the Canyon.

"We drew 2,500 people the first year and 4,300 last year," Pilch said. "This year we have more volunteers and more involvement by churches, so we'll hoping for an even bigger crowd.

The marquee acts will be the Christian alt-rock quartet Skillet from Memphis, Tenn., which will perform tonight at 8:30, and Telecast, a Spokane, Wash.-based band organized Seattle grunge-scene veteran Josh White. Telecast will perform at 3:30 p.m. on Saturday.

Other acts include Four Saved Brothas, today at 1:30 p.m.; Abide, today at 2 p.m.; Zero Theory, today at 3:30 p.m.; Ever Stays Red, today at 5 p.m.; Thousand Food Krutch, today at 6 p.m.; Jose Zayas, today at 7 p.m. and Saturday at 7:30 p.m.; Kori Ashton, Saturday at 1:30 p.m.; Calling Simon, Saturday at 2 p.m.; 316 Band, Saturday at 2:45 p.m.; Grand Prize, Saturday at 4:15 p.m.; Sarah Kelly, Saturday at 5:30 p.m., and Tree 63, Saturday at 9 p.m.

Single-day tickets to Rock the Canyon are $25 for adults — $20 if you buy them in advance. Two-day tickets are $40 — $35 in advance. Kids 7 to 17 get in for a single day for $13 — $18 in advance. Two-day youth tickets are $24 — $30 in advance.

Children 6 and under get in free.

Advance tickets are available at all Twin Stops and at Creations Bookstore in Burley.

There's no parking at Centennial Park. Volunteers will run continuous shuttle buses from free parking lots behind Johnny Carino's restaurant and behind Dell.

Schneider takes the screen as 'Deuce Bigalow'

New to the valley

"Deuce Bigalow: European Gigolo"

Rob Schneider's unlikely male prostitute must return to the world's oldest profession to help clear his former pimp, who is accused of murder. With Eddie Griffin and Jeroen Krabbe. Directed by Mike Bigelow. R for pervasive strong crude and sexual humor, language, nudity and drug content.

In this photo provided by Columbia Pictures, Deuce Bigalow (Rob Schneider) returns as a gigolo in Europe in 'Deuce Bigalow: European Gigolo.'

"Four Brothers"

Mark Wahlberg, Tyrese Gibson, Andre Benjamin, Garrett Hedlund star as four adopted siblings who seek revenge after their mother is killed. Directed by John Singleton.

"Ladies in Lavender"

A lighter-than-air conflation of "Local Hero" and a thatched-roof period piece from "Masterpiece Theater," set between-the-wars in a sleepy English village, and starring Judi Dench and Maggie Smith. PG-13 (adult themes)

"Mad Hot Ballroom"

A crowd-pleasing documentary about a New York City public-school dance program, in which a diverse gang of fifth-graders compete in the foxtrot, the tango and the merengue. An unabashed celebration of many of the things that make New York a great city, and of the pluck and smarts of some of its 11-year-old residents. PG (adult themes)

"Murderball"

Henry Alex Rubin and Dana Adam Shapiro's documentary about quadriplegic men who participate in the dangerous sport of "quad rugby," it's more than just a game; it's a chance to prove themselves in a much bigger way. With armored wheelchairs and enough macho energy to overcome any challenge, the players engage in a violently physical game. R.

"The Skeleton Key"

Kate Hudson stars as a young woman who unlocks one too many doors in the decrepit mansion where she works as a live-in nurse. With Gena Rowlands, Peter Sarsgaard, Joy Bryant and John Hurt. Written by Ehren Kruger. Directed by Iain Softley. PG-13 for violence, disturbing images, some partial nudity and thematic material.

Continuing

"March of the Penguins"

Luc Jacquet's gripping documentary, packed with more romance and nail-biting adventure than a summer of tent-pole movies, chronicles the arduous, incredible journey of Antarctica's emperor penguins to their remote breeding grounds, drawing you in emotionally to such an extent that you'll be shocked back to reality when the end credits remind you a crew of humans had to be present to capture drama. Narrated by Morgan Freeman. (1:20) G.

"The Adventures of Shark Boy and Lava Girl in 3-D"

This Robert Rodriguez ("Spy Kids," "Sin City") movie is inspired by a story from his son, Racer, age 8. While its by-kids/for-kids authenticity is the movie's principal appeal, shouldn't the imagery be more sophisticated than that on a Candyland game board? PG (action sequences intense for kids under 6)

"Bad News Bears"

Billy Bob Thornton is subversively funny in this otherwise uninspired update of the 1976 film about the beer-guzzling misfit who couches uncoordinated Little Leaguers who swear like stevedores. PG-13 (profanity, sexually explicit language)

"Batman Begins"

Christian Bale plays the caped crusader with a melancholy ordinarily reserved for Hamlet in Christopher Nolan's well-written origin story. But in a film made with such obvious care, is it too much to ask that the action sequences not be monotonous to the point of narcotizing? PG-13 (violence)

"Charlie and the Chocolate Factory"

"Charlie and the Chocolate Factory" is easily one of director Tim Burton's most all-around successful outings. Visually, it's sublime, seamlessly mixing live action, real props and sets, and computer imagery to create an alternative world that's not quite of the here and now, but not quite of the there and then, either. PG (quirky situations, action and mild language)

"The Dukes of Hazard"

This weird, moonshine-and-marijuana-fueled yee-haw fest based on the '80s TV show pushes the PG-13 envelope with crunch and redneck ribaldry, and an orgy of stunt driving. Jessica Simpson plays pneumatic bumpkin Daisy Duke, with Johnny Knoxville and Seann William Scott as Luke and Bo. PG-13 (sex jokes, drugs, violence, profanity)

"Fantastic Four"

On the grade-o-meter graph between great ("Spider-Man," "X-Men") and awful, this noisy adaptation of the Marvel Comic about a clan of freakily-powered superheroes falls right there alongside such thumping duds as "Catwoman." PG-13 (violence, adult themes)

"The Island"

Lincoln Six-Echo and Jordan Two-Delta (Ewan McGregor and Scarlett Johansson) are cloistered clones desperate to breathe the sweet air of freedom. But once they make good on their escape "The Island" collapses like a punctured balloon. Of course, given that this film is directed by world class noisemaker Michael Bay, make that a very loud punctured balloon. Chases, crashes and explosions are thick on the land in the second half of this movie, but though they are expertly done, their size, frequency and increasing disconnection to what was once a coherent story leave you feeling pummeled rather than exhilarated. "The Island" was never going to be great, but it deserved to be better than it ended up. (2:16) With Djimon Hounsou, Sean Bean, Steve Buscemi and Michael Clarke Duncan. PG-13 for intense sequences of violence and action, some sexuality and language.

"Madagascar"

With neither the ambition nor the sophistication of a "Shrek" or "The Incredibles," the computer-animated "Madagascar" is nevertheless an enjoyable buddy picture in which the four exotic mammals escape the confines of the Central Park Zoo and return to the wild. Despite the use of the latest digital animation tools, it evokes an old-school, Looney Tunes cartooning style. PG (potty humor)

"Mr. & Mrs. Smith"

Marriages, even the happy ones, can sometimes feel like combat zones. But what if a marriage really was a combat zone, with the husband and wife literally trying to kill each other? This is the domestic universe of "Mr. & Mrs. Smith," and if you think that premise sounds farfetched, especially for an action-based romantic comedy, you don't know the half of it. Plot contrivance and major league implausibility are the bread and butter of a film whose motto might be "look all you want but don't think too hard." Fortunately, when your stars are Brad Pitt and Angelina Jolie, playing married assassins unaware of each other's vocation until they receive orders to kill each other, looking — and listening — will keep you well satisfied. Directed by Doug Liman ("The Bourne Identity"). With Vince Vaughn and Kerry Washington. (CTh., June 10) (2:00) PG-13 for sequences of violence, intense action, sexual content and brief strong language.

"Must Love Dogs"

The appealing Diane Lane and simpatico John Cusack star as neurotic singletons in this charmless comedy about the dating game. PG-13 (sexual content)

"My Summer of Love"

From Pawel Pawlikowski, director of "Last Resort," comes a tale of obsession and deception, and the struggle for love and faith in a world where both seem impossible. The film vibrantly charts the emotional and physical hothouse effects that bloom one summer for two young women (Natalie Press and Emily Blunt). Press, behind a spiky exterior, hides an untapped intelligence and a yearning for something beyond the emptiness of her daily life. Blunt is well-educated, spoiled and cynical. As they are complete opposites, each is wary of the other's differences when they first meet, but this coolness soon melts into mutual fascination, amusement and attraction. Adding further volatility is Mona's older brother (Paddy Considine), who has renounced his criminal past for religious fervor — which he tries to impose upon his sister. R.

"Sky High"

Overly contrived and cheesy-looking special effects comedy that would have been more persuasive as an animated film instead of a clunky live-action comic book adventure. At the opening of the picture Michael Angarano is a nice, normal 14-year-old with successful real-estate agent parents (Kirk Russell, Kelly Preston) who are also The Commander and Jetstream, superhero crime fighters, who send off their son to a secret high school in the sky for training superheroes of the future. "Sky High" is best left to 10- to 14-year-olds because it's not likely to take off for older audiences and is too violent for the very young. With Danielle Panabaker, Mary Elizabeth Winstead and Steven Strait. (1:40) PG for action violence and some mild language.

Caroline (Kate Hudson) uncovers a terrifying secret in 'The Skeleton Key.'

"Star Wars Episode III: Revenge of the Sith"

The last of the three prequels explains how Anakin Skywalker becomes Darth Vader, but fails to explain how George Lucas gets away with the clunkiest dialogue in the universe. Hayden Christensen can't carry the weight of the Anakin role; Ewan McGregor tries to put some pep in Obi-Wan, Natalie 'Portman' looks lovely and the galaxy of fiery planets, neo-Deco cityscapes and awesome flying ships is rendered with state-of-the-art precision. It's long, and then it's done. May divorce be with you. PG-13 (violence, darkness)

"Stealth"

In this empty action film, the Navy phases in a computerized warplane, which doesn't sit well with elite pilots Josh Lucas, Jessica Biel and Jamie Foxx. Wait for the DVD. PG-13 (violence, profanity, sexual innuendo)

"War of the Worlds"

Steven Spielberg's feverishly involving update of the 1898 H.G. Wells classic starring an uncommonly fine Tom Cruise and Dakota Fanning as an father and estranged daughter fleeing invading aliens. PG-13 (intense violence and gore)

"Wedding Crashers"

Vince Vaughn and Owen Wilson are the party animals no one invited in this mostly hilarious film about guys who sneak into weddings because that's where the free booze, free food and free love flows. R (brief nudity, sexually explicit language, profanity)

87TH PGA CHAMPIONSHIP

Lefty at the top

Phil Mickelson putts on the fourth green during the first round of play in the 87th PGA Championship at the Baltusrol Golf Club in Springfield, N.J., Thursday.

Mickelson joins large pack at PGA

The Associated Press

SPRINGFIELD, N.J. — Maybe it's not too late for Phil Mickelson to salvage some magic in the majors.

An afterthought ever since the majors began in April, Mickelson came back to life Thursday on steamy Baltusrol with a 3-under 67 to join a crowd atop the leaderboard that included just about everyone but Tiger Woods.

Woods, trying to capture his third Grand Slam event of the year, staggered to a 75 for his worst start in a major and will have to rally simply to make it to the weekend.

"If you're looking for me to shed a tear, it's not going to happen," Mickelson said. "We all know Sunday his name will be up there."

Perhaps so, but Mickelson is intent on keeping his own name on top.

Lefty got through the opening seven holes — among the most punishing stretch in golf — at 1 over par. Then, he turned matters over to his putter. He knocked in a pair of 35-foot birdie putts around the turn, made another long birdie on the 14th and became part of a six-way tie for the lead with a two-putt birdie on the 18th.

It was the largest logjam in the first round of a major since a six-way tie at the 1989 British Open.

Former British Open champion Ben Curtis — now there's a disappearing act — got good breaks in the rough and pieced together a bogey-free round. It was his first time atop the leaderboard at a major since his shocking victory at Royal St. George's two years ago.

Stuart Appleby, Trevor Immelman, Rory Sabbatini and Stephen Ames also shot 67, with Ames having a chance for the outright lead until his 20-foot eagle putt slid by the cup.

Retief Goosen birdied his last two holes for a 68, while Vijay Singh did the same to salvage a 70.

On a steamy day in the 90s that required maintenance crews to douse the greens with water, 27 players managed to break par on the 7,392-yard Lower Course at Baltusrol.

Woods was not among them. Not even close.

He three-putted his first hole for bogey, then dropped shots on three of the easiest holes on the course. His 75 was not his worst score in a major in the opening round, but his position — a tie for 113th — was his worst since a tie for 104th in last year's PGA Championship.

He dropped his putter in disgust and flung an iron after his approach spun off the green, yet Woods said his patience kept it from being worse.

"I'm still in it," he said. "There won't be too many guys under par by the end of the week. Hopefully, I can get myself there over the next three days."

That's assuming he gets three more days.

Mickelson hasn't been this excited since he showed up at Augusta National having won his third PGA Tour title of the young season. But he finished 10th in the Masters, where the only noise he made was an argument with Singh over spike marks, and hasn't been the same.

PGA Championship
TV: TNT, 11 a.m.

He took himself out of contention at the U.S. Open with a 77 in the second round and tied for 33rd. He broke par only once at St. Andrews and tied for 61st. Some began to wonder if that breakthrough major won last year at the Masters might have been an aberration.

"I have a little bit different feeling heading into this tournament than I've had in some of the others," Mickelson said. "I feel a lot more confident in my game than I did heading into the other majors. And as I said earlier in the week, I really want to put everything I have into finishing off the year right."

Woods in peril after everything goes wrong

TIM DAHLBERG

SPRINGFIELD, N.J. — The walk to the parking lot was mercifully short.

Steve Williams already had the engine running in the Buick LaCrosse when Tiger Woods, his sweat-soaked shirt clinging to his upper body, jumped into the front seat next to his caddie.

There would be no lengthy range session, no time on the practice green after this round. A fat, opening 75 in the PGA Championship left Woods mentally drained, and he and Williams couldn't drive out of the gates of Baltusrol Golf Club fast enough.

In a year to remember, this was a day to forget.

"I'm not going to work on anything," Woods said. "I'm just going to go home and relax."

An afternoon lounging on the couch at his rented house sure seemed like a good idea. You can only hope, though, that Woods had the sense to leave the TV off.

If he didn't, he might have

U.S. surging at worlds as sprinters go for sweep in 200

The Associated Press

HELSINKI, Finland — Michelle Perry won the 100-meter hurdles at the world track and field championships Thursday for yet another victory by the surging U.S. team.

Her gold-medal run Friday came even before Justin Gatlin and the sprinters were seeking a 1-2-3-4 sweep in the 200 meters on Saturday.

Perry took the lead when Olympic champion and fellow American Joanna Hayes stumbled at the next-to-last hurdle and won ahead of Jamaicans Delloreen Ennis-London and Brigitte Foster-Hylton.

"I knew today, whatever it took, I would win," said Perry, who will return to combining hurdles with heptathlon next year. "It was my time regardless. I was strongest at the end."

Rens Blom of the Netherlands denied the Americans another gold when he won the pole vault with a jump of 19 feet, 25 inch — 2 inches higher than Brad Walker. Russia's Pavel Gerasimov took the bronze.

Blom barely cleared his second attempt — the bar shot up, danced around and stayed put.

"I was entitled to have some luck," he said.

Defending champion Giuseppe Gibilisco of Italy, Australian 2001 world champion Dmitri Markov and 2000 Olympic champion Nick Hysong went out early in the competition.

Highlighting the U.S. sprint domination, Allyson Felix led a U.S trib into the women's final of the 200.

France's Christine Arron led the qualifiers into the 200 final with the fastest time of 22.45 seconds. But 19-year-old Felix won her semifinal and Rachelle Boone-Smith and LaTasha Colander also went through, along with Olympic champion Veronica Campbell.

"I just didn't want to push it too hard, just wanted to get a good lane for the final," Felix said.

The U.S. team has seven golds and a total of 11 medals. Ethiopia has two golds and a total of five, with Sweden in third place with two golds and a bronze.

Also, Franka Dietzsch of Germany won the gold medal in the women's discus, ahead of Natalya Sadova of Russia and Vera Pospisilova-Cechlova of the Czech Republic.

Moroccan-born Rashid Ramzi of Bahrain won his 800 heat ahead of his South African rival Mbulaeni Mulaudzi less than 24 hours after taking gold in the 1,500. Olympic champion Yuriy Borzakovskiy of Russia also easily advanced.

Gatlin, the 100 world champion, is seeking the 200 gold as part of a triple which could be completed with the 400 relays on Saturday.

When Polish CSI volleyball recruit foAnna Kaczor makes it to Twin Falls, she's probably in line for a little of both. While the right mix of sour cream and bacon bits can help anyone through even the most heinous potato bar, southern Idaho implants have to find their own way to deal with the culture shock.

I know of what I speak. You know — Oregon boy, democrat, Protestant? Yep.

But coming to Idaho from a blue state pales in comparison to coming from the former Eastern bloc. While having fellow countrywoman Marta Siemiatkowska on the Golden Eagle's volleyball roster and a welcoming CSI community will help, going from touring the world circuit with the Polish national team to dorm life in Twin Falls will be a decided adjustment.

As will it be for most of CSI's volleyball recruits, who come to Twin Falls from Honolulu, Hawaii, Pomona, Calif., and such exotic and far-away places as Pocatello.

So I'm doing my part. To make the transitions for eight incoming freshman as easy as possible, I'm putting an effort to know as much about them as I can. Before the Golden Eagles hit the hardwood and the CSI fans can ogle them, I've done the most best thing and Googled them.

Yes, I realize that sounds much dirtier than it should.

But the Internet and www.google.com have opened me up to some new and exciting information. As former Times-News CSI beat writer Kevin Colbert wrote in a Wednesday e-mail, I've been "indoctrinated into the world of obscure and unintelligible Web sites while covering the CSI beat. Congrats!"

While the World Wide Web has yielded interesting nuggets about each of the incoming CSI players, searching for Kaczor has yielded the most consistently bizarre results. The most jarring result is my total transformation into The Ugly American.

Yes, I realize that volleyball nearly rivals soccer as a completely international sport. And yes, I realize any pertinent information on the Polish national volleyball team is probably written in, well, Polish. But can't we get it in English, please?

Apparently, the answer is, "Sort of."

The Internet tells us that the 21-year old Kaczor is 6-foot-4, can touch somewhere near the 10-foot mark on a running leap, and helped the Poles to an eighth-place finish at the 2004 World Grand Prix in Kawasaki, Japan. She also played for the Polish ZEC SV Gwardia Wroclaw club team before helping the Polish junior national team to a European championship and a bronze in the Junior World Championships.

So far, so good.

But then there's the loosely-translated Italian volleyball magazine, "Volleyball Spezia Web." An article that mentions Kaczor and her Team Poland teammates is entitled, "Which. Olympic European Feminine: The Polonia works for Baku."

Wait. Who is this Baku? Was he a Jedi in Episode II? And why is the Polonia working for him?

It gets better. Here's an excerpt:

"The champions of Europe of the Polonia from past Sunday are to the job in sight of the torneo of Olympic qualification in program to January to Baku. In the first days they have been of

Favre sparkles against San Diego

GREEN BAY, Wis. (AP) — Brett Favre's offseason work paid immediate dividends Thursday night in the Green Bay Packers' 10-7 preseason victory over the San Diego Chargers.

Favre, who trained with a strength and conditioning coach in the offseason for the first time, completed 9 of 10 passes for 91 yards, a touchdown and no interceptions in 1.5 quarters of work.

He guided Green Bay on an 80-yard scoring drive in the second quarter in which he completed 7 of 8 passes for 64 yards, capping the series with a 23-yard strike to Donald Driver and then jumping into the arms of his center, Mike Flanagan, who missed most of last season following a knee operation.

"We accomplished one goal: we went down the field and scored," Favre said at halftime of the game that was played in a steady drizzle. "For the first preseason game, we played well and we should do well in certain areas. But we don't want to get too excited as we still have a lot of work to do."

Favre's revamped offensive line that lost stalwarts Marco Rivera and Mike Wahle to free agency, protected him well but didn't open many holes for Ahman Green, who carried eight times for 16 yards and had two of his team's six fumbles in the rain. Three were recovered by San Diego.

The Chargers didn't fumble at all.

Philip Rivers' 34-yard touchdown pass to Willie Quinnie early in the third quarter tied it at 7. Rivers completed 12 of 19 passes for 97 yards and no interceptions after replacing starter Drew Brees (2-for-5, 27 yards) to start the second quarter.

Nate Kaeding, who missed a 40-yard field goal attempt in overtime of the Chargers' playoff loss to the New York Jets last season, blew three chances to put the Chargers ahead in the fourth quarter. He was wide left from 45 yards and then wide right from 44 and 46 in the closing minutes.

J.T. O'Sullivan then drove the Packers to the Chargers 35, and Ryan Longwell kicked a 53-yard field goal that barely cleared the crossbar with 33 seconds left.

Rookie Aaron Rodgers replaced Favre and had a horrible debut with the second-teamers, completing 2 of 6 passes for 7 yards and getting sacked twice.

Mets' Cameron injured in collision

SAN DIEGO (AP) — New York Mets' right fielder Mike Cameron was taken off the field on a stretcher following a frightening head-to-head collision with center fielder Carlos Beltran in the seventh inning of a 2-1 loss to the San Diego Padres on Thursday.

The game was delayed for about 13 minutes after the diving crash. Cameron lay on the field and was tended to by trainers from both teams before being taken to Mercy Hospital.

Cameron broke his nose, had multiple — fractures of both cheekbones and a slight concussion, Mets spokesman Jay Horwitz said. Cameron underwent two CT scans and was to be hospitalized overnight. He was placed on the disabled list.

Beltran got up after a few minutes after the collision and walked off the field on his own power. He left the game with a sore left shoulder and a cut on the face. Neither player caught the ball and pinch-hitter David Ross ended up with a triple. Joe Randa drove in the go-ahead run.

Trevor Hoffman pitched the ninth for his 30th save in 32 chances and the 423rd of his career, leaving him one shy of tying John Franco for second on the all-time list.

San Diego's Woody Williams (6-8) got his first win in four decisions. He went seven innings, allowing one run and six hits, striking out a season-high eight and walking one.

Tom Glavine (8-10) lost for the seventh time in nine road decisions this season.

Cubs 11, Cardinals 4

CHICAGO — Greg Maddux pitched his first complete game in more than a year. Derrek Lee hit two home runs and the Cubs snapped their eight-game losing streak.

Maddux (9-9) allowed 12 hits in going the distance for the first time since July 22, 2004. He won his 314th game, tying Gaylord Perry for 16th place on the all-time list.

Pirates 11, Rockies 3

DENVER — Jose Castillo had a two-run triple among his three hits, and Jason Bay had three hits and scored three times to lead the Pittsburgh.

Castillo, who had a career-high four hits Tuesday, drove in three runs and has eight RBIs in his last six games. Bay went 3-for-4 with an RBI and two stolen bases.

Ryan Doumit added three hits for the Pirates who have won 13 of the last 18 meetings with Colorado.

D'backs 3, Marlins 1

MIAMI — Troy Glaus and Chad Tracy homered in Arizona's three-run eighth, and Brandon Webb (10-8) limited Florida to four hits and a walk in eight innings.

Tracy tied it in the eighth with a leadoff shot off left-hander Valerio de los Santos (1-2), who left after allowing Luis Gonzalez's single.

Giants 5, Braves 3

ATLANTA — Randy Winn hit a two-out, two-run homer in the seventh inning and San Francisco avoided a sweep in Atlanta.

One night after scoring three runs off John Smoltz in the ninth — only to lose 5-4 in the 12th — the Giants made this comeback stick.

Atlanta's Marcus Giles, who drove in the winning run Wednesday, stretched his career-best hitting streak to 15 games, falling a homer short of the cycle.

Astros 6, Nationals 3

HOUSTON — Andy Pettitte won for the sixth time in eight starts, and Brad Ausmus had a three-run double in the sixth for the Astros.

Lance Berkman also doubled, and drove in two runs for the Astros.

Jose Guillen, making his first start in five games after sitting out with a sore left shoulder, hit his 20th homer in the ninth for Washington.

American League

A's 5, Angels 4

OAKLAND, Calif. — Jason Kendall alertly dashed home from third base with the winning run when Los Angeles' miffed closer Francisco Rodriguez flubbed a return throw from his catcher, and the A's took sole possession of first in the AL West with a 5-4 come-from-behind victory on Thursday.

Eric Chavez hit a tying three-run homer in the seventh for the A's, who rallied from a four-run deficit. They took two of three to stand alone in first place for the first time this season — but not even the freewheeling A's could have predicted this finish.

Chavez was at the plate again in the ninth with two runners on and two out. After Rodriguez's first pitch was called a ball, the right-hander stared in and nonchalantly stuck out his glove for catcher Jose Molina's throw — but it glanced away.

Kendall sprinted home and beat the throw. The victory capped a surge of 20 wins in 23 games since the A's trailed Los Angeles by 8.5 games on July 18.

Scot Shields (7-8) allowed two singles in the ninth before Rodriguez took over.

All-Star Justin Duchscherer (6-2) pitched two hitless innings to win for the second straight day.

Yankees 9, Rangers 8

NEW YORK — Derek Jeter hit a tiebreaking home run in the seventh inning after the Yankees' bullpen blew a strong spot start by Scott Proctor.

Proctor was making his first big league start in place of Randy Johnson, who was skipped because of a bad back. Proctor held Texas to three hits — two on solo homers to David Dellucci — before leaving with a 6-2 lead after five-plus innings.

Trailing 8-4 in the seventh, Texas scored four runs off Felix Rodriguez, and Tanyon Sturtze (4-1), who gave up a tying three-run home run to Michael Young.

After Jeter homered off James Baldwin (0-2) in the bottom half, the Rangers loaded the bases in the eighth against Tom Gordon with two outs on a hit and two walks.

Mariano Rivera relieved and got Dellucci to hit a popup on a 3-2 pitch to end the threat.

Indians 4, Royals 2

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Jeff Liefer hit a grand slam in the seventh inning to help Cleveland hand Kansas City its franchise-record 13th consecutive loss.

The Royals broke their team record of 12 straight losses set in 1997.

The Indians, who have won 14 of their past 18, went 6-0 on a road trip for the first time since May 1-6, 2001.

Blue Jays 2, Tigers 1

TORONTO — Scott Downs and two relievers combined on a two-hitter and the Blue Jays handed Detroit its sixth loss in seven games.

Frank Catalanotto hit a two-run homer for the Blue Jays, who outhit the Tigers 4-2. Toronto took three of four from Detroit after losing the opener.

Orioles 4, Devil Rays 2

BALTIMORE — The Orioles welcomed back Rafael Palmeiro, then beat Tampa Bay while he watched from the dugout.

That's not the point. The point is that calling a competition Goblet of the World is so much cooler than calling it the World Cup.

And that I tried.

If Finau is "Pudgie," there's no hope for the rest of us. So signing off, this is Eric "Fatstuff" Larsen.

Woods

seen guys who start shaking every time they see him in the locker room, easily handling the same course that caused him so much grief.

Heck, even some club pros were above him on the scoreboard. Most of the time, they're giving lessons and selling shirts in the pro shop. But for one day they could boast they outplayed the best player in the world.

This wasn't just a bad opening round. At 5-over-par, it was the worst first round in relation to par for Woods in a major championship since he turned pro.

Win the tournament? Try making the cut first.

"(I'm) still in the tournament, no doubt about that," Woods insisted. "A long way to go and, as you all know, the golf course is only going to get harder."

Hopefully, the course won't get any harder for Woods than it was in the opening round of a tournament he came swaggering into. He was eight shots off the lead and tied for 113th place.

Things that looked so easy only a few weeks ago in Scotland were anything but as Woods banged his way around Baltusrol's Lower Course with a temperament every bit as steamy as the hot summer day.

Woods tossed a putter in frustration after one of his 35 putts and threw a few clubs in anger. He cursed when a putt hung on the edge of a hole, and watched in dismay as iron shots spun off greens and tee shots ricocheted off trees.

At one point, he was reduced to begging two rules officials for some relief.

"On every hole you could say there was something I did wrong," Woods said.

This wasn't the way it was supposed to be. Woods came here off a five-shot win in the British Open, filled with confidence in a swing he retooled for the second time in his pro career and ready to claim his third major of the year.

Oddsmakers made him an unprecedented 2-1 pick to win, his fellow competitors acknowledged he was at the top of his game, and the thousands who came just to watch him play figured they were here for a coronation.

And why not?

If not for a balky putter that cost him the U.S. Open, this could have been an epic chase of golf's grand slam. Woods won the Masters in a playoff, barely lost the Open in the final holes and ran away with the claret jug in Scotland.

In a way, winning all three would have made Thursday's disastrous start even more painful. Imagine looking in the golf history books years from now and seeing that Woods won the first three majors and then had an MC next to his name for the fourth.

Not many of the guys he regularly beats really believe that is going to happen.

"If you're looking for me to shed a tear, it's not going to happen," Phil Mickelson said. "We all know on Sunday, his name will be up there."

So many things went wrong for Woods that even he had trouble listing them.

"I kept saying that over 72 holes, every player who plays 72 holes is going to make four bogeys," Woods said. "Unfortunately, I made four bogeys early and I couldn't afford to make any more. I didn't, I made a double."

Woods undoubtedly had some more things to say to himself, none printable, after that double bogey on his 16th hole. If history is any guide, he'll talk to himself a lot during the long walt before his afternoon tee time on Friday.

You don't win 10 majors by not being able to overcome some adversity. But Woods hasn't exactly made a career of charging from behind.

Still, on this day Woods managed a smile even as he left. The round was already receding in his mind, and Woods seemed eager to replace it with thoughts of what might be on Friday.

"It took a lot of mental energy out of me to try and stay that patient, that calm," he said. "I could have easily lost it and packed it in and gone home, but I stayed focused."

Patience and calm won't be enough to win this tournament. There's too many players under par, and too many strokes to make up.

Woods now needs to focus on small victories, not big ones.

Making the cut would be a good start.

Surrounded by dozens of fans and members of the media, Philadelphia Eagles' Terrell Owens shoots a basketball outside his Moorestown, N.J., home, Thursday. Eagles coach Andy Reid called the ejection of Owens from training camp on Wednesday in-house business, adding the tempestuous wide receiver would not be permitted back to camp until the two of them fully discuss the problem. Owens said he was just happy to have a week off.

Who needs training camp?

Football fun is at T.O.'s place

MOORESTOWN, N.J. (AP) — Kody Amburgey's ear infection kept him from making a trip to Philadelphia Eagles training camp this week, but the 11-year-old got an audience Thursday with one of the team's stars in his own hometown.

Wide receiver Terrell Owens, kicked out of training camp a day earlier, held court with Amburgey and a few dozen fans gathered outside his home in this Philadelphia suburb. The receiver also jawed with reporters, shot hoops and spent time inside his huge stucco home with visiting relatives.

Wearing an Eagles jersey with Owens' number 81 on it, Amburgey waited with his mother for about an hour outside the player's house before getting the nerve to knock on the door.

Owens told the boy he'd be out in a few minutes to sign some autographs, and soon did.

Soon after, one reporter asked Amburgey if getting the autograph of one of his favorite football players made his summer.

"Being on the news is the highlight of my summer," the boy replied, as four television cameras rolled.

Autograph-seeking fans bearing footballs and trading cards — some playing hooky from work — streamed through the neighborhood during the day.

One salesman who wanted an autograph did not want his name made public because he was supposed to be working. A pregnant woman carried a baby-sized Eagles jersey. One young man had a T-shirt that read "T.O. Must Go," which the player noticed and laughed at.

People arrived in work vans, a Mercedes SUV, and two government vehicles marked "for official use only" just to get a glimpse of the star and the spectacle.

Mark Ediss drove an hour and a half from Vineland to hang out, if not with Owens then with other fans. "I don't know what made me get in the truck and go down here," he said. "Even if he doesn't come out, this is just a neat experience."

In stifling heat, fans tossed footballs and chanted the venerable Philly phrase, "E-A-G-L-E-S" and the newer one, "T-O!"

On Thursday, Owens told the gathered reporters that he would call a caterer to feed them and said he liked having the media around. "I'm going to go inside and get my camera and take pictures of you guys," he joked.

He said he'd play one-on-one basketball with any comer willing to bet a paycheck on the game. He found no opponents.

Owens also was happy to discuss his lunch of eight egg whites and multigrain toast at Bob Evans.

Mostly, though, Owens retreated into his house where several relatives, his agent and publicist were also bunkered down.

Owens did seem to take care of some business. But not football business.

He noticed some bees around the basketball hoop in his driveway. Within an hour, an exterminator's truck pulled up.

Reid wants to meet with Owens before allowing him back to camp

BETHLEHEM, Pa. (AP) — A day after they booted Terrell Owens out of training camp, the Philadelphia Eagles took an even harder stance on their star's contract dispute:

T.O. can play for the Eagles or he won't play at all.

Team president Joe Banner said Thursday that when the banished wide receiver returns to camp next week, it will be without the new contract he desperately wants and with an understanding that he can no longer become a disruption.

"Our hope, obviously, is that he comes back next week and is what he can be in every sense, whether that's how he contributes to the team on the field or off the field," Banner said. "We've been clear that the choices are to play under this contract or not. I'm not sure he still believes that, but we've said from Day 1 those were the choices on the table and he had to make a choice between one of the two things.

"That's not going to change."

Owens' timeout from Philadelphia's training camp won't end until he meets with coach Andy Reid, however.

Owens was told to go home Wednesday after a heated dispute with Reid — and not to come back for a week.

"I'll address him on Wednesday and that's between T.O. and myself," Reid said.

The Eagles couldn't have been shocked over the latest twist in a controversial career. Owens told the team he wouldn't be happy when he reported if he didn't have a new contract, and said he could be disruptive in camp.

Sure enough, he was.

"What we see happening is exactly what he said was going to happen," Banner said. "It kind of puts you in a hard position to then have any kind of deniability. You can try to blame other people if he wants, but it's a little bit of a stretch in credibility in light of what he said before he got here."

Reid called the incident in-house business and skirted numerous questions on a variety of subjects about the playmaking, showboating Owens.

"I'll work it out with T.O. and only T.O. I'm not going to turn this into a bash session," Reid said.

But Owens offered some insight into Wednesday conversation, telling ESPN on Thursday that Reid told him to shut up.

"And I told him my name isn't Reid. My name is Owens. I'm not one of his kids. Don't tell me to shut up," Owens said.

Reid said there were no plans to meet with agent Drew Rosenhaus, who's been persistent in trying to get the Eagles to redo Owens' contract as he enters the second season of a seven-year, $48.97 million deal.

With Owens gone, Greg Lewis and rookie Reggie Brown were the starting receivers at practice, where one fan displayed a "T.O has to G.O." sign.

Bloom targets NFL after Olympics

NEW YORK (AP) — Jeremy Bloom is used to bumps in the road. In fact, he lives for them.

For the past six years, the U.S. moguls standout has made a living traversing treacherous hillsides, and won World Cup championships in the process.

The problem is, those mounds of snow aren't nearly as tough as they used to be. After training nonstop the past two years for the Turin Games, the former Colorado football star is aching for a different challenge.

"I don't feel I have anything to prove in skiing," Bloom said. "If I walked away today, I'd do it with a smile on my face.

That, of course, is the NFL — and unlike everything else Bloom has accomplished in his 23 years, it's no sure thing.

Bloom was in New York on Wednesday, making the talk-show rounds to mark the six-month countdown to the Winter Olympics. But he couldn't resist talking about his plans afterward. He's been training at UCLA all summer, working with former Colorado assistant Doc Kreis on speed and conditioning drills in the hopes of getting picked in April's NFL draft and returning kicks on Sundays next season.

An atypical regimen for an Olympic gold-medal favorite, to say the least.

"Could it be more beneficial for me to be skiing? Maybe, but that's not what I want to do right now," Bloom said. "I love being in the gym, I love doing plyometrics, I love running routes, I love catching the football."

It's not that Bloom is taking the Olympics for granted after competing in the 1992 games (he placed ninth).

It's that he harbors an unquenchable thirst for competition. And after a record six straight World Cup victories last year, Bloom wants to prove — to himself and to his doubters — that he can have the same kind of success on the football field.

He wasn't given that chance in college.

After two highlight-filled seasons at Colorado, the NCAA stripped the dazzling kick returner of his eligibility in 2004 when he refused to give up his skiing endorsements. Those paychecks were the only way Bloom could train for the 2006 games, so he begrudgingly set aside his cleats.

Not anymore. What ever happens in Turin, he'll walk away from the sport he's come to dominate with no regrets.

"In athletics, so many people have these performance-setting goals — like 'I want to win a gold medal,'" Bloom said. "For me, I go back to the basics. Everyday, whether I'm in the weight room or doing football, my one goal is 'What did I do to improve today?'

Bloom has to hope that NFL teams are willing to think outside the box, as he does. Especially about his 5-foot-9 height.

"They told me that about college," Bloom said. "You're going to get hurt, you're too small, you're not going to play. I love people like that, it inspires me to do it even more."

NFL draft guru Gil Brandt expects Bloom to be drafted between the fourth and seventh rounds. But who knows, some team could fall in love with his workouts and grab him on the first day.

"The things that make a good punt returner or kick returner is if you have really quick acceleration and can change directions real well," Brandt said. "(Lions receiver) Roy Williams is one of the fastest, and he's just like Roy. He's full speed in one step."

Brandt said that Bloom was clocked at 9.4 seconds in the 100-yard dash in 2003. During his short stint at Colorado, Bloom had five touchdowns of 75 yards or longer — including a 94-yard reception his freshman year.

"He's got a special talent, whether he's skiing black diamonds, or running back kicks," Brandt said.

Bloom, who grew up in Loveland, Colo., has dreamt of playing for the Denver Broncos since he was 5 years old.

"Watching John Elway in Colorado, that goal was actually born before skiing," Bloom said. "But the NFL is such a business. Obviously, I would LOVE to play for the Broncos, but I would also love to play for anyone who drafts me."

Whoever ends up with Bloom will be hard-pressed to find a more determined player. After years of bouncing down mountains, NFL training camp is exactly the sort of uphill battle Bloom is craving.

"It's going to take a lot of fuel," Bloom said. "Getting ready to take the punishment, getting back in football shape. The commitment is huge."

That's the idea.

Gardner battles Colbert for Panthers starting spot

CHARLOTTE, N.C. (AP) — Carolina Panthers wide receiver Keary Colbert returned to practice after sitting out a week with a strained hamstring, catching a long touchdown pass from Jake Delhomme. Colbert could still be held out of the preseason opener Saturday night against Washington because of his injury.

While Colbert was out, free agent Rod Gardner stepped in to work with the first-team offense and made a strong push for a starting spot.

But if he was worried about slipping on the depth chart, Colbert didn't let on.

"I feel pressure every year and every day regardless of who is here," Colbert said. "I want to be a certain type of player and to do that you have to work a certain way. That's not based on other people. It's based on pushing yourself to get better and ultimately help the team get better."

Colbert was deactivated before the first game last season because the Panthers had too many receivers. But when Steve Smith broke his leg in the opener, Colbert started the next 15 games and set Carolina rookie records with 47 receptions, 754 yards receiving and five touchdowns.

Titans

Former Heisman Trophy winner Jason White ended his professional career because of weak knees.

White, who had been competing for the third quarterback position, joined the Titans in May as an undrafted rookie after an audition with the Chiefs did not lead to a contract offer.

"It's always been a dream of mine, but certain things won't allow me to pursue that dream," White said. "It's kind of out of my hands at this point.

"Sometimes I think that you have to swallow your pride a little bit and know when you're done."

White won the Heisman in 2003 and led Oklahoma to back-to-back BCS title games. He is Oklahoma's career passing leader with 7,922 yards and in touchdown passes with 81.

Browns

Running back Reuben Droughns, sidelined the past week with a sore hamstring, is unlikely to play in Cleveland's exhibition season opener Saturday against the Giants.

Droughns is in a three-way battle with Lee Suggs and William Green for the starting job, and Droughns knows his chances of emerging as the winner lessen with every day he misses.

"I'm disappointed," he said. "I'm losing ground. I'm missing a lot of time and a chance to be the starting guy."

The team acquired Droughns in an offseason deal with Denver. Droughns, who began last season as the Broncos' fullback, rushed for 1,240 yards and six touchdowns.

The Browns haven't had a 1,000-yard runner since 1985.

Rams

First-round draft pick Alex Barron was a no-show at Thursday's practice, one day after signing a five-year contract. Coach Mike Martz was not pleased.

"I have no idea where he is or what he's doing or if he's coming in September or October or November, who knows?" Martz said. "I don't know what to expect. If the kid really wanted to be here, he'd be here. I'm upset with the whole thing."

Barron ended a two-week training camp holdout Wednesday and signed a contract. He was taken 19th overall in April by St. Louis.

Colts

With slot receiver Brandon Stokley missing most of the preseason because of a dislocated left shoulder, Walters and Moorehead — the replacements — now have bigger roles. They're catching more passes from the league's two-time MVP after practice, are working more frequently with the starters and will have more chances to demonstrate their skills in a preseason game against Buffalo.

"You've got to step up and fill that void," Moorehead said. "All it is a little more work, a little more reps."

Stokley dislocated his left shoulder last Thursday in Tokyo and is expected to miss three to four weeks. Coach Tony Dungy hopes Stokley can return for the Colts' regular-season opener Sept. 11 at Baltimore. Until then, the Colts will rely on the Walters-Moorehead tandem to be their No. 3 option.

Bills

Rookie wide receiver Roscoe Parrish, the team's second-round draft pick, is expected to miss Buffalo's preseason opener at Indianapolis because of an injured right wrist.

Parrish was not at practice Thursday, a day after he jammed his wrist as he fell to the ground while diving for a pass.

Coach Mike Mularkey said he doesn't know the extent of the injury. He said Parrish traveled to Buffalo — about a 90-minute drive west of training camp in suburban Rochester — to review test results with the team's medical director, Dr. John Marzo.

Box car race highlights kids weekend

By Linda Brittsan
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — Box car races, the continuing 'Championship Chase' and the announcement of an expanded race in an upcoming Northwest Tour Series event help to prove that there are still plenty of laps left in the 2005 season at the Magic Valley Speedway.

This Saturday night some of those laps will be counted off for a new generation of drivers as all kids ages 5-12 are invited to participate in the Box Cars races. In order to get in on the racing action, kids will need to bring a homemade race car that is simply constructed from a cardboard box to the speedway.

The car must rest on the child's shoulders with their head fitting through the 'roof' and their arms through the 'windows'. The paint scheme may be original or they may wish to copy the car design of a favorite NASCAR driver.

A special track for the young racers will be built on the infield grass for the kids to run a simulated race — complete with cheering crowd, NASCAR flag man and of course the required pit stop. The speedway hopes that involving children now in the increasingly popular sport of auto racing will lead to a future crop of drivers at the Magic Valley Speedway.

Those current drivers are now embroiled in a championship competition that continues to deliver a new winner to Victory Lane each race since the new point format began on July 30.

The Premier Series, with only four races left in their championship run, will see new point leader Steve Jones try to hold on to his slim lead over Rob Vest, currently seated second in the point standings.

Vest had held control of the lead in the division for most of the season and is looking to get back on top.

"We're going to try and do everything we can to get that lead back," Vest said. "Hopefully the weather will be a little cooler this weekend; my car definitely runs better when it's not so hot."

Admittedly superstitious, Vest is also hoping that the racing gods will be riding along with him from now on.

"We've had plenty of bad luck," Vest said. "If we could get some of that good luck going, I know things would be better. I really hope it's time for someone else to have the bad luck."

Be sure to be there for all the action this Saturday night as the Premier, Pony and Thunder Stock division drivers continue to fight it out for the NASCAR Dodge Weekly Series Championship Title.

The Late Model Lite cars will also be on hand as they make their final appearance of the season at the Magic Valley Speedway. The first green flag falls at 7:05 p.m. and the Box Car races will be held at intermission.

NASCAR, along with local track promoter Steve York, announced that the Northwest Tour Series race held on Aug. 20 at the Magic Valley Speedway will be expanded to include more cars and more laps than ever before.

"The event previously scheduled for 125 laps and 24 cars has been changed to include 200 laps and 28 cars — making the 'Magic Valley Pipe 200' presented by Auto Zone the longest NASCAR event with the largest possible field ever held in Idaho," York said. "We believe that it is in the best interest of the competitor, fan and sponsors to increase the field size and number of laps run. With eight-hundred corners to negotiate within the course of the event, every driver will have many chances to abuse their equipment."

Tire wear will also be a significant factor in the extended lap race. Gates will open for the Aug. 20 event at 2 p.m. with time trails set for 6.

Robby Gordon struggles to improve Cup team

By Tom Gardner
Associated Press writer

So far this season, the twisty track at Infineon Raceway has been the high point of a challenging season for Robby Gordon as he struggles to develop a team, woo sponsors and work out the quirks in an engine new to NASCAR.

This weekend, Gordon — one of a handful of Nextel Cup regulars who's as comfortable turning right as left — heads to Upstate New York and Watkins Glen International, the only other road course on the Cup tour. He'll warm up in the Busch race Saturday.

"We could very easily win both races this weekend," he said. "We've got some good cars and we're definitely getting competitive. The driver definitely shows up more on road courses. The driver can come into play and make the difference."

Watkins Glen is where he took his last checkered flag two years ago, just two months after his a victory at Infineon.

But that was when he was driving for Richard Childress Racing.

Hovering around 40th in the standings with his own team this season, Gordon has not been able to break into the top 35 in car owner points, which would guarantee making the lineup at each race. Instead, he has had to make every race on speed or go home and has failed to qualify for four events this year.

Problems with his new Menard engines — one failed inspection and the replacement that lacked enough punch to qualify — kept him out of the season opener at Daytona.

That was followed by three engine failures at California, Las Vegas and Atlanta, then he failed to qualify at Bristol, Talladega and Darlington.

So Gordon shook things up by bringing in a new crew chief and team manager. He has finished every race since, including his 24th place finish last weekend in Indianapolis in an ill-handling car. It was his best finish since he was 16th at Infineon in June.

"The team's a building process. The engine's a building process, the driver and crew chief and car chief — we're all working together," he said. "We're getting better every week. You've got to crawl before you walk and walk before you run."

Gordon is no stranger to the owner-driver role, having fielded his own Cup team in 2000. Although he was strong on the road courses, he ended that season 43rd in the standings.

He has brought a lot of experience to the current project.

Before moving to NASCAR, Gordon took six off-road championships and five victories in the GTO series along with a Trans-Am win. That was followed by success in CART, now Champ Car, and a pair of seconds in the International Race of Champions. In Indy Car racing, he was leading the 1999 Indianapolis 500 when he ran out of gas on the final lap and finished fourth.

Gordon passed on an offer to spend a fourth season with Childress this year to launch his own team and pair with engine builder John Menard, who is highly regarded in open-wheel but a newcomer to NASCAR.

At 36, Gordon knows his years as a driver are limited, but says he's looking forward to a career in ownership.

"The next Rick Hendrick, Richard Childress, Joe Gibbs has to come from somewhere. It's something I want to do for sure," he said.

Busch, McMurray signings spotlight free-agent free-for-all

CHARLOTTE, N.C. (AP) — When Jamie McMurray signed a contract to drive for Roush Racing in 2007, it put his current team in an awkward position.

McMurray is signed with Chip Ganassi Racing through next season, and the team has no intention of letting him leave before then. But in the five weeks since announcing his intent, the Ganassi team has been scrutinized and criticized for holding McMurray to his original contract.

In a shocking case of what goes around, comes around, Roush now finds himself in the same uncomfortable position: Defending Nextel Cup champion Kurt Busch said Tuesday he is leaving for Penske Racing South in 2007, and he wants out of his contract next year to speed up the move.

With the tables turned on Roush, outsiders are getting a clearer picture of NASCAR's cutthroat free agent signing process.

Kurt Busch

"What I've been telling people is, when you conduct your business from the weeds, sooner or later the weedeater will run over you," said Felix Sabates, a co-owner of McMurray's car at Ganassi.

With no union or policing organization, there is very little car owners can do to prevent the competition from trying to lure its drivers away. There is usually some sort of gentlemen's agreement that prohibits teams from talking to drivers under contract. And if the conversations do occur, it is typically with permission from the rival owner.

So when Roush swooped in and signed McMurray more than a year before his current contract expired, many NASCAR insiders viewed it as a sneaky back-room deal. McMurray and Roush have declined to discuss the specifics of their negotiations, and Ganassi has refrained from voicing his opinion.

But the practice is becoming increasingly common. With several high-profile rides opening up next season, teams are desperate to secure replacement drivers. And for the first time in years, it's a sellers market.

Bill Elliott and Terry Labonte both recently stepped down from full-time racing, and Mark Martin and Rusty Wallace have both said this season will be their last. It's created a driver shortage with just a handful of top name talent out there.

With much of the available talent already under contract, car owners are scrambling to grab what's left.

"I think it is as tough as its ever been with drivers," said Richie Gilmore, vice president of Dale Earnhardt Inc. "Right now the market is really tough. I think to look at before a driver would have to win Busch championships or contend for them before you were brought up.

"I think now you have to take a chance and it works out or it doesn't."

Dell Q2 profit up, revenue disappoints

ROUND ROCK, Texas — Dell Inc., one of the world's largest personal computer makers, on Thursday said second-quarter profit rose 28 percent, driven by increased shipments during a period of tough price competition among rivals.

Quarterly revenue was light, however, and the company forecast third-quarter sales below Wall Street expectations. In Twin Falls, Dell's call center is a major employer.

Net income climbed to $1.02 billion, or 41 cents per share, from $799 million, or 31 cents per share, during the year-ago period.

The computer giant said its results included a 3-cent tax benefit, without which it would have posted earnings of 38 cents per share in the latest quarter.

Revenue rose 15 percent to $13.43 billion from $11.71 billion last year.

The results matched Wall Street profit expectations of 38 cents per share but fell below projected revenue of $13.71 billion, according to analysts polled by Thomson Financial.

Dell said it achieved industry-record shipments of 9.1 million computer systems — including 2.7 million mobility products — and company-record revenue of more than $2 billion from software and peripheral products, including printers and displays.

"While average selling prices were down more than we would have liked, we focused on balanced profitability and, in the process, delivered to our guidance for EPS," said Chief Executive Dell Rollins in a statement.

The company projects third-quarter earnings in the range of 39 cents to 41 cents per share on revenue between $14.1 to $14.5 billion. Wall Street expects earnings of 41 cents per share on higher revenue of $14.63 billion.

That's a Wal-Mart?

The house of fuddy-duddy aspires to be a trendy-setter

The Washington Post

Handbags inspired by the trendy Ugg sheepskin collection and crescent shapes seen by Fendi, Marc Jacobs and others are found at Wal-Mart, albeit made from more modest materials. But as Wal-Mart steps out of its comfort zone, it runs the risk of walking right past its conservative shoppers.

Wal-Mart's new style: plates.

Wal-Mart consumers

The average household income of shoppers at:

- Wal-Mart: $44,000
- J.C. Penney: $51,000
- Target: $55,000
- Kohl's: $62,000
- Bed, Bath & Beyond: $64,000

NEW YORK — Head south on Fifth Avenue, past the look-but-don't-touch boutiques of Bruno Magli, Salvatore Ferragamo and Henri Bendel, stop at 31st Street and look for a building on the right, between the fast-food restaurant and the souvenir shop.

There, on the sixth floor, sits the only Wal-Mart in Manhattan — not a store, but offices, a laboratory even, where veterans from Nautica, OshKosh B'Gosh and the West Elm furniture catalogue work, largely in secret, to help the nation's largest retailer earn one designation that has long eluded it:

Hip.

These retail warriors walk the streets of SoHo, sneak into boutiques in London and snap photos of teens in Tokyo to divine what's hot. They forecast trends in clothing, home decor and furniture in advance of a season, then transmit the details to the colleagues in Arkansas who ultimately determine what reaches the shelves of the company's 3,400 stores. The chain has stores in Jerome and Burley.

Given its reputation as a juggernaut, it's a curious sensation to consider Wal-Mart's vulnerability. But that is what the 2-year-old New York Trend Office is there to address.

With trends in fashion trickling down into everything from toasters to infant clothing, the chain is suddenly worried about missed opportunities. Since its 1962 founding, it has built its business on the traditional-minded, lower-income shopper who, judging by its merchandise, wants the basics: a sturdy nightgown, a reliable bathing suit, a six-pack of children's underwear. (Wal-Mart sells one of every two pairs in the United States.)

The discount giant has stuck by that consumer, earning billions in the process. But now it is rethinking things — placing ads in Vogue; having its TV commercials portray a lifestyle, not just a smiley face rolling back prices; even considering hiring a big-name designer. For it has not escaped the attention of Bentonville, Ark., that the rest of the retail world has discovered a different, more lucrative shopper — one who craves style for style's sake.

As Wal-Mart upgrades its merchandise to compete with edgier rivals, the New York staff is serving as a scouting party, watching carefully to ensure that a chain known for missing trends has the right product at the right moment. But for its globe-trotting exploits to pay off, the Trend Office must change not just what Wal-Mart carries but how the retailer thinks about merchandise, according to those inside and outside the company.

For 43 years, Wal-Mart has been obsessed with individual bargains — the $24 DVD player, the $12.90 twill jacket — regardless of how they fit in with the rest of the store's merchandise, or even whether they are in style. That singular focus on best sellers has left the chain without the storewide design aesthetic that has turned rival Target into Tar-zhay, crammed with bold, contemporary patterns and designs that evoke a lifestyle. And it has left Wal-Mart vulnerable at a time when customers at all levels want fashion.

"We are an item house," Wal-Mart's vice president of product development, Claire Watts, concedes. "But customer expectations require more than great items."

What they require, designers say, are risky forays into fashion, the kind that could alienate Wal-Mart's core customer.

For designer cachet, Target recruited architect Michael Graves and designers Todd Oldham and Isaac Mizrahi to create clothes and home furnishings exclusive to the chain. Hip Swedish retailer H&M snagged Karl Lagerfeld to do the same.

This movement goes by many names: the democratization of fashion, the dawn of cheap chic. The motivation is simple: A globalized generation of consumers, reared on the endlessly self-improving and consuming message of "What Not to Wear," is eager for the next trend, even if that skirt or sofa or sneaker lasts only one season.

Country club employee goes the extra mile for golfers

LORETTA BURKHART/The Times-News

Nancy Pierce, manager of food and beverages for Clear Lake Country Club near Buhl, has a great eye for detail, according to her clients and co-workers.

By Loretta Burkhart
Times-News correspondent

BUHL — Attention to detail and a creative knack with fabric set Nancy Pierce, manager of food and beverages for Clear Lake Country Club, apart from the crowd.

"She's changed the atmosphere a lot," said country club member Jean Alben. "And she's improved our food service a great deal."

Alben has taken note of the many coins Pierce has provided during club luncheons and golf-related functions. Although Pierce's ability for giving special attention to details plays a pivotal a role in the quality of service guests can expect at the country club near Buhl, it was her "above and beyond" provision of gingham fabric that caught Alben's eye.

"She'd make really special things for us — on not really special occasions," she said.

But it was Pierce's knack for getting it right for a planned event for upward of 100 guests that went far beyond Alben's expectations. It all began in the planning stages of a recent "for no special occasion" crab feed.

Some time earlier, Pierce had attended a large crab dinner at her church. From that experience she decided that — if organized right — such a feed had the potential for success, not only for the customer, but also economically for the club.

Enterprise to offer Star Trek 'communicators'

Newsday

Two tech companies have announced plans to boldly go where no wireless phone company has gone before, with the release in September of a mobile telephone that resembles the communicators featured on the popular 1960s television series "Star Trek."

With a black body and face plate, the new Star Trek Communicator Phones will, from the outside, strongly resemble the devices featured on the show, although they will be slightly smaller, said Marie Wiese, vice president of marketing for Sona Mobile, a mobile software company that is partnering with Viacom Consumer Products to sell the phones.

Flip them open, however, and they will look not much different than a cell phone, with the flip top forming the screen and the black body forming the dial pad, she said.

"I think it is obviously a natural," said Gary Berman, who grew up New York and says he is an avid "Star Trek" fan. "It is interesting that tech is catching up with what we have seen in the '60s."

As co-chief executive of Creation Entertainment, Berman is the organizer of the Official Fourth Annual Star Trek Las Vegas Convention. The convention, which was to start Thursday, is expected to attract upward of 12,000 "Star Trek" fans, in addition to Sona and Viacom, which will be exhibiting, he said.

The new cell phones will be manufactured by an as-yet undisclosed company and, in the United States, will be serviced by an also undisclosed cellular network administrator, Wiese said. She added that "Star Trek" fans will have to pay $10 per month on top of their usual cell phone bills to own the special Star Trek phones and the special features and services that will come with them.

These, Wiese said, will include instant Star Trek community message boards and a computer game called Fleetwars that phone users will be able to play with other phone users around the country. A Trekkie will even be able to download any "Star Trek" episode in streaming video on demand.

Unlike the devices on the "Star Trek" series, however, Wiese said that users will have to speak into them like a normal phone, not flip them open and talk into them from a distance, as the characters did in the television program.

Initially, the two companies will be marketing the phones in North America and Britain, attempting to tap into a market of loyal "Star Trek" fans that is believed to number in the millions. A Star Trek Communicator replica recently sold on eBay for a whopping 380 pounds sterling, or $682.

Berman of Creation Entertainment said Trekkies offer an attractive market for technology product developers. They are manic devotees of the program and tend to be tech savvy. What is more, she said, "They are wealthy. They are all the computer guys."

Market shakes concerns about oil prices

NEW YORK (AP) — Investors put aside concerns about rising oil prices Thursday, helping the market to a late-day rally focused on generally positive economic news.

The major stock indexes gained ground during the final two hours of the trading session, even after the price of oil momentarily crossed $66 a barrel. It finished at a record high close of $65.80 a barrel, up 90 cents on the New York Mercantile Exchange.

"I think in the end people want to be bullish," said Doug Sandler, chief equity strategist at Wachovia Securities in Richmond, Va. Some of that is a trend building on a trend — the market starts to go one way and everybody seems to jump on it."

But the ups and downs in stock prices seen Thursday, following a selloff Wednesday, reflect investor worries by investors that, despite strong corporate earnings and upbeat economic reports, oil prices will eventually exact a toll.

"Ordinarily you would expect the stock market to rise or do better, but it's not and I think the reason is it is being held in check by high oil prices," said Hugh Johnson, chairman and chief investment officer of Johnson Illington Advisors in Albany, N.Y.

"Oil prices will continue to be a nagging concern," said Steven Goldman, chief market strategist at Weeden & Co. in Greenwich, Conn.

The Dow Jones industrial average finished up 91.48, or 0.86 percent, at 10,685.89, after giving up a triple digit advance Wednesday and closing down 21.

Broader stock indicators also closed higher. The Standard & Poor's 500 index rose 8.68, or 0.71 percent, to 1,237.81, and the Nasdaq composite index rose 16.74, or 0.78 percent, to 2,174.55.

But analysts say the market of the moment is often difficult to figure by looking at the indexes, particulary the Dow. Oil prices and the concerns they seed about macroeconomic performance are having the greatest impact on the largest companies. That was the case Wednesday, when much of the selloff focused on large-cap stocks.

But economic optimism is driving demand for the stock of many small, mid-sized and even large companies just below the threshold of the index, analysts said.

The market showed Thursday it is still torn between concerns that more expensive oil will inevitably hurt consumer spending and corporate profits and evidence that the economy is coping well with higher crude.

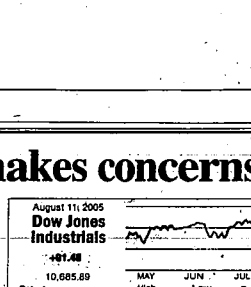
A report released Wednesday showing a decline in U.S. gasoline inventories drove fears about supply. It heightened concerns that refinery shutdowns will make it difficult for refiners to meet peak summer demand. Those concerns were tempered by a report from the International Energy Agency forecasting slower global oil demand growth in 2005.

Investors were also parsing new data from the Commerce Department showing retail sales rose 1.8 percent in July, less than analysts expected. The increase came despite weak demand at department stores. Almost all the increase derived from auto sales, which jumped 6.7 percent. Excluding autos, retail sales rose just 0.3 percent, half the gained forecast by economists.

Also Thursday, the Labor Department said the number of Americans filing claims for unemployment benefits declined last week by 6,000 — the first drop in three weeks — to 308,000.

In another Commerce Department report Thursday, inventories held by businesses on shelves and backlots were unchanged in June, marking the first time inventory levels failed to increase in nine months. That effort subtracted significantly from overall economic growth in the second quarter but set the stage for much stronger growth in coming months.

Stocks that traded heavily Thursday included Intel Corp., which fell 6 cents, or 0.22 percent, to $26.82, after it was downgraded by Goldman Sachs.



Pfizer outlines its own advertising guidelines

NEW YORK (AP) — Pfizer Inc. unveiled its attempt to quiet consumer drug-advertising critics on Thursday by pledging not to directly promote any new product to patients for at least six months and to only target adult audiences when touting impotency treatment Viagra on TV.

The move follows last week's announcement by the pharmaceutical industry of new advertising guidelines designed to better communicate benefits and risks of drugs to patients.

Pharmaceutical ads have been under scrutiny since Merck & Co. removed its pain reliever Vioxx from the market last year after a study found it doubled patients' risk of heart attacks and strokes. The drug was heavily marketed, and doctors say the ads pushed many patients to take it unnecessarily, potentially exposing them to dangerous side effects.

Federal regulators also asked Pfizer to stop advertising Celebrex, its prodigiously promoted competitor to Vioxx, after it was linked to cardiovascular risks as well last year. Regulators requested the company pull Viagra ads, too, alleging they breached federal regulations.

Criticism has mounted as drug advertising exploded. The pharmaceutical industry spent $4.02 billion on advertising in 2004, up 23 percent from 2003 and 62 percent from 2000, according to the consulting firm IMS Health.

Last month, U.S. Senate Majority Leader Bill Frist called for a two-year moratorium on advertising new drugs, saying commercials drive up health care costs. In a statement, Frist said he welcomed the industry guidelines but still wishes they included a moratorium on new drugs ads.

Others have dismissed the guidelines because there is no penalty for flouting them.

Pat Kelly, Pfizer's U.S. pharmaceuticals president, said the industry's code "provided us with a platform to build more" specific guidelines to continue providing consumers information while also addressing the concerns of our critics."

Kelly dismissed the notion that Pfizer's guidelines carried no consequences, noting that by announcing its code it was inviting the public and critics to monitor its adherence.

"It is much more" than any other company that advertises has ever done, he said.

Public relations expert Howard Rubenstein said it would be embarrassing for Pfizer or any of the drug companies to ignore the guidelines adopted. Yet the shame might pale in comparison to the discomfort caused by regulations that could be passed unless drug advertising becomes more balanced, Rubenstein said.

"The guidelines are new and codes a step toward improving the image of an industry that has been battered by high prices, product withdrawals and reports of suppressed negative clinical trials. Those issues need to be addressed too, Rubenstein said.

"They are coming up with quick fixes," said Rubenstein. "They are trying to play catch up."

"It was just something I wanted to do," Pierce said.

Still, even with her framed personal touch, this type of event would require the help of a good friend and a very large roll of red and white gingham.

The task was time-consuming, but Pierce was able to produce unique cutout aprons for more than 80 guests — no extra charge.

"It was wonderful," Alben said.

Pierce said going the extra mile to make good things happen is a delight.

And the payoff is reciprocal.

"I've never worked with anyone so easy to get along with," said Jenny Lee, a bartender at the club. "Kristen is creative and jumps in and helps with anything, even the things that nobody else wants to do. She helps with just anything that needs to be done."

2006 MAZDA5

Snug minivan built for city agility

The Mazda5 is a good family vehicle to buy

By Warren Brown
The Washington Post

Small has a chance to make it big in America. Consider the 2006 Mazda5, a minivan that is "mini" in the truest sense of the word.

It is built for the city.

It fits neatly into tight spaces. It presents no visual obstruction to other drivers. But it can carry six passengers and judicious amounts of their stuff.

The Mazda5 also fits into tight pocketbooks, starting below $20,000. But for families with small children, it offers as much utility as the Mercedes-Benz R350, a minivan that has a base price of $48,000.

That could be seen as an apples-and-oranges comparison. The Mazda5 is for the Striving Class. The Mercedes-Benz R-Class is unmistakably for the rich. But these two new-generation minivans are remarkably similar in function and design.

The R-Class also seats six. But it is made for adults who have already reared children, as opposed to those who are still rearing them. Thus, the R-Class has comfortable seating for six adult bodies. The Mazda5 has comfortable seating for four adults—two up front and two in the middle—and two small children in the rear.

I am using the term "minivan" because its euphemistic alternatives—"touring" and "tourer," preferred by fashion-conscious automotive marketers—make no sense. The official name for this week's vehicle, for example, is "Mazda5 Touring." The Mercedes-Benz R350 and its sibling R500 have been festooned with the moniker "Grand Sport Tourer."

I don't know what a "tourer" is. Here's betting that the buying public is equally befuddled. But I do know a minivan when I see one, and the tubular, high-ceilinged Mazda5 and R-Class—as well as the Chrysler Pacifica—are new-generation minivans.

Their newness is in their approach to answering an old question: How do you give sex appeal to what essentially is a utilitarian people hauler?

In the 1990s, with consumers growing weary of unstylish traditional minivans, car companies responded by rolling out sport-utility vehicles. Those models were big, bossy, bodacious. They were assertive. SUVs and other truck-based vehicles now have become so popular that their sales account for nearly 50 percent of the U.S. automotive market.

But SUVs have shortcomings. Larger models swallow fuel and space. Some models that are agile off-road are relatively clumsy on the highway. SUVs have been portrayed as environmental villains, and their owners have been maligned as selfish gluttons. SUV ownership, in that context, is not for the faint-hearted.

Many consumers want something else—something that can carry people and baggage without bearing a load of social opprobrium. Practically, they need minivans and station wagons. But psychically, they want something with more panache than traditional minivans and wagons can offer.

The Mazda5, R-Class and Chrysler Pacifica—and others, such as the Nissan Murano and Subaru B9 Tribeca—are the results of that internal consumer conflict. They are all minivans masquerading as SUV equivalents absent SUV problems. But, as shown by the Mazda5, there is much competence in that pretense.

The front-wheel-drive Mazda5 is a brilliant, space-efficient concept. It has no wasted sheet metal. That means it is the right size on the outside with enough space on the inside to do what a minivan is supposed to do—carry lots of people and things. It has the same business-class three-row seating found in the R-Class and the Pacifica, and it offers many of the amenities, often as options, sold in those more expensive vehicles.

The Mazda5 also has moxie—the guts to move nimbly and quickly through urban traffic, and the ability to steal your heart in the process. That does not mean it will satisfy racetrack lusts. It is a minivan, after all.

But there is enough oomph in the Mazda5's 2.3-liter, four-cylinder, 157-horsepower engine to get you to the church and everywhere else on time. And because that engine is fuel-efficient, especially when combined with the standard five-speed manual transmission, you should have enough money left to enjoy yourself when you arrive.

Washington Post photo

The Mazda5, like several other minivans, masquerades as an SUV equivalent absent SUV problems. But with the Mazda5 there is much competence in that pretense.

Nuts & Bolts: 2006 Mazda5

Price: Base price on the tested 2006 Mazda5 Touring minivan is $18,950. Dealer's invoice price on the base model is $17,717. Price as tested is $22,460, including $2,950 in options (including navigation) and a $560 destination charge. Dealer's price with options and charges is $20,847. Prices sourced from Mazda, Edmunds.com, and Cars.com, a Washington Post affiliate.

Downside: The rear shoulder belts in the Mazda5 need better anchoring and/or positioning. They bang against the interior wall when they are not in use. Wrapping them around the rear seat headrests—an inelegant fix—ends the noise.

Ride, acceleration and handling: Exceptionally nimble and agile in city traffic. Comfortable ride. Good acceleration, meaning that it changes lanes competently in high-speed traffic.

Head-turning quotient: Cosmopolitan, sophisticated. This one looks as though it belongs in traffic in Paris, Rome or Washington.

Body style/layout: The Mazda5 is a compact front-wheel-drive minivan expressly designed for urban areas. It has four doors and a rear hatch.

Engine/transmission: The standard 2.3-liter, inline four-cylinder engine develops 157 horsepower at 6,500 revolutions per minute and 148 foot-pounds of torque at 4,500 rpm. The engine is linked to a standard five-speed manual transmission. A four-speed automatic is optional.

Cargo and fuel capacities: The Mazda5 has seating for six people—four adults in the first and second rows, and two children in the rear. Total cargo capacity is 44.4 cubic feet. Maximum payload, the weight of what can be carried onboard, is 1,239 pounds. Fuel capacity is 15.9 gallons of recommended regular unleaded gasoline.

Mileage: I averaged 25 miles per gallon in highway driving.

> The Mazda5 also has moxie—the guts to move nimbly and quickly through urban traffic, and the ability to steal your heart in the process. That does not mean it will satisfy racetrack lusts. It is a minivan, after all.

Noise should have been investigated

Q: I just read your column in the La Crosse Tribune in Wisconsin about the man with the oil pan expense and thought I'd write to you. I just had some work done on my car including brakes and wheel bearings. The cost was $800, which I did not think was too bad.

As I drove home, my car, a 1996 Buick LeSabre, made funny noises – kerthunk, kerthunk – every time I turned a corner. I called the mechanic and his advice was to keep driving it and it would "settle down."

UNDER THE HOOD
Brad Bergholdt

Instead I took my car to the Buick repair shop and through road and analyzer tests, they found that one of the wheel bearings was dry (yes, it was a factory-sealed new one) so they installed a good one. This cost me an additional $380.

I went back to the mechanic, who I don't fault for the original problem but have to wonder why he wouldn't listen to me (because I am a woman?) when I said something was wrong. He refunded me $100.

Is the seller of these products the one at fault? Can I find out who the supplier is and get a refund? Let me rephrase that: Is it a likely option? What would you do?

– Doris Deutsch, Trempealeau, Wis.

A: Doris, your mechanic is a lunkhead. The sound you described deserved immediate attention, especially considering the serious nature of the work just performed. Also, it's likely a noise such as this would get worse rather than "settle down." Had I been the one to do the work I would be sweating bullets, waiting for the tow truck to bring in your Buick, wondering if I'd remembered to tighten the lug nuts, the brake caliper bolts, or had performed a number of other critical labor operations properly.

Good for you for taking matters into your own hands and seeking another opinion. Had the bearing seized, it could have caused an abrupt loss of control of the vehicle.

Normally, it's best to stay the course and allow the original repair shop to rectify a problem such as this. Because of his callous attitude for your concern and safety, I think you were justified in seeking another shop for the repair. Instead of eating an hour's labor and satisfying a valued customer, he owes you another $280.

If additional horsepower is needed, seek assistance from the Wisconsin Bureau of Consumer Protection at (800) 422-7128. If something similar happens in California, contact the state's Bureau of Automotive Repair through its Web site www.smogcheck.ca.gov.

THE ACES ON BRIDGE®

Bobby Wolff

"Actors must practice restraint, else think what might happen in a love scene."
— Cedric Hardwicke

In last year's Junior European Championships many defenders had a chance to override common wisdom here. Everyone knows that it is generally wrong to over-ruff with a useful trump, but just how small can a useful trump be?

Consider today's deal, where the popular contract was four spades by South. This was usually defeated after a heart-king lead, but at most tables, declarer did not give himself much of a chance. Best is to win the heart lead with the ace and cash the diamond ace before crossing to dummy with a low spade to the queen. Then a low diamond should be carefully ruffed with the spade nine, and West must decline to overruff.

Declarer continues with the spade king, which West must win to continue the attack on hearts, forcing dummy to ruff the third round. Now if declarer draws the last trump, he runs out of tricks, and if he leads a top diamond, West can ruff in and leave declarer with only nine tricks. So South must set a trap for the defense by leading a second low diamond from dummy, ruffing with his last trump, the four. West also has only one spade left — the five — and it looks like human nature to overruff. But he must decline to do so; otherwise, dummy is now high. If he discards, declarer cannot get to dummy except by ruffing a club with North's last trump, and West will be able to ruff in on the diamonds.

ANSWER: Pass; do not try for game. Although your partner heard you promise an opening bid or more and short diamonds, he announced that he had no game interest. Yes, you are fractionally better in high cards than you might be, but that does not allow you to take any further action, since bidding on would show at least a queen more than you have.
