County, St. Luke's agree to merger

Voters will have final say on hospital in May

By Michelle Dunlop
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — A few moments of handshakes, smiles and signatures essentially brought an end to years of discussion and months of negotiations over the fate of the county-owned hospital.

On Wednesday, the Twin Falls County commissioners signed a letter of their intent to transfer ownership of Magic Valley Regional Medical Center to St. Luke's Regional Medical Center.

"This is the best proposal we've been able to get," said Commissioner Gary Grindstaff. "And now the citizens of Twin Falls County can decide."

But don't expect to see mention of a merger on the November ballot.

Although the major issues separating the parties have been resolved, some of the finer details still need to be addressed in a final proposal, said Grant Loebs, county prosecutor. The complete proposal will be submitted to the county for approval no later than March 20. If the commission approves the detailed agreement, the proposal should make the May 2006 ballot, Loebs said.

Earlier this month, county commissioners outlined major concerns they had with St. Luke's proposal to team up with Magic Valley Regional to create a regional health care system. Under the proposal, St. Luke's would build a $120 million hospital and assume $22.7 million in existing hospital debt.

"It's been a spirited debate at times, but one that was worth the debate," said Commissioner Tom Mikesell.

Recently, St. Luke's officials let it be known that they intended to build a facility in Twin Falls regardless of the county's decision. Many local physicians, including much of Magic Valley Regional's staff, have supported a merger.

"I think the agreement is going to benefit the community as a whole," said John Kee, Magic Valley Regional's chief executive officer. "I think we've worked through everything in a

Teachers continue to push their case

By Joshua Palmer
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — About 150 people including teachers, parents and students congregated in front of the Twin Falls School District administration building Wednesday night wearing their now ubiquitous orange ribbons — a symbol of solidarity among teachers during contract negotiations.

The Twin Falls Education Association (TFEA) called it a tailgate party, and if it truly was, then the school board meeting that followed was the hometown rivalry.

"I'm here because I support the teachers," said Deanna Carter, a parent of three children and an aide at Sawtooth Elementary. "The district is very top-down management, but the teachers are the ones who are with my kids."

But each parent also seemed to have another reason for attending the demonstration. Carter said she was infuriated by the way the district handled a concern she had in the past when she was a PTO co-president.

Those from the crowd who were able to attend the board meeting, listened to board comments and supported Steve Hoy, the spokesman for the TFEA.

Hoy spoke on the TFEA's concern about a Times-News letter to the editor written by Superintendent Wiley Dobbs, which explained the challenge of rising insurance costs. The rising cost of health care has been a concern for teachers who fear they may be required to either pay more for services or receive less in benefits. Teachers say the board has enough money to provide the current level of benefits, but they feel the board is not managing the district's money appropriately.

Linda Baird, human relations director for the district, said the letter was intended to communicate with educators and the public.

"The TFEA certainly has a responsibility to communicate with their constituents," Baird

Two died of CJD, tests show

The Associated Press

BOISE — Preliminary tests on the remains of two Idaho women show they died of the brain-wasting illness Creutzfeldt-Jakob disease, but additional tests are needed to determine whether it was the naturally occurring form or the variant related to mad cow disease.

Idaho Department of Health and Welfare officials announced the findings Wednesday after notifying the families of the women, one of whom was in her 60s and lived in Twin Falls County and the other who was previously identified by her family as 53-year-old Kathy Isenberg of St. Maries.

The results bring to three the number of confirmed deaths this year in Idaho due to diseases related to prions," or malformed proteins. Earlier this year, tests by the National Prion Disease Pathology Surveillance Center at Case Western University in Ohio determined that another Twin Falls County woman had died from a prion-related disease believed to be Creutzfeldt-Jakob disease.

Additional tests are under way at the lab to determine what form of CJD was responsible in the three confirmed cases.

There have been eight suspected cases of CJD in Idaho since January. Of the four cases from Twin Falls County, one has been ruled out, an autopsy was not conducted on another and two are now confirmed, along with the confirmation of Isenberg's case in Benewah County. Autopsies also were not conducted on reported CJD victims in Bear Lake and Minidoka counties. Preliminary tests have not been received for an Elmore County man in his 60s who died last month and whose doctor suspected CJD as the cause.

Oregon's controversial law will go before the U.S. Supreme Court

The Associated Press

PORTLAND, Ore. — Idlie McMurchie and her four siblings watched as their 68-year-old mother, Peggy Sutherland, lifted a lethal dose of barbiturates to her lips.

It was difficult for them to accept that their mother was about to die, McMurchie said. But Sutherland was in a long and painful struggle with lung cancer, and her children supported her decision to end her life, McMurchie said.

"We were all hugging and kissing her and telling her it was OK to let go," McMurchie said. "Mom held up the glass of medication and said, 'I don't think anyone understands how much pain I've been in.' Then she drank it herself. She was asleep in five minutes and she died within 20 minutes."

Sutherland took her own life under Oregon's Death With Dignity law, legislation that took effect in 1997 that allows terminally ill patients to obtain lethal doses of medication from their doctors. No other state has such a law.

The Bush administration is challenging the measure, arguing that hastening someone's death is an improper use of medication and thus violates federal drug laws.

The U.S. Supreme Court will hear arguments in the case on Oct. 5. Supporters of the assisted suicide law say a favorable high court ruling could lead other states to follow Oregon's lead.

Oregonians approved the law in two separate votes, and many have come to see it as part of their state's identity — something that sets them apart from the rest of the nation.

Still, only a tiny portion of terminally ill Oregonians have used the law to take their lives — 208 people, representing about one in 1,000 deaths.

The reasons for the law's solid

Robotic vehicles hit the desert for $2M contest

Government sponsors race in hopes of developing new military vehicle

The Associated Press

FONTANA, Calif. (AP) — It's the ultimate robot reality show: 43 contestants battling for a spot in a government-sponsored desert race intended to speed development of unmanned military combat vehicles.

The reward? A $2 million cash prize.

The autonomous robotic vehicles began competing Wednesday in the first of a series of qualifying rounds at the California Speedway. Half will advance to the Oct. 8 starting line of the so-called Grand Challenge.

The grueling, weeklong semifinals are designed to test the vehicles' ability to cover a roughly 2-mile stretch of the track without a human driver or remote control.

Participants ranging from souped-up SUVs to military behemoths will be graded on how well they can self-drive on rough road, make sharp turns and avoid obstacles — hay bales, trash cans, wrecked cars — while relying on GPS navigation and sensors, radar, lasers and cameras that feed information to computers.

The robots also have to heed speed limits in certain zones and pass through a 100-foot-long tunnel designed to temporarily knock out their GPS capabilities.

None of that thwarted the first competitor, a converted Nissan Xterra built by the Colorado-based Mojavaton team. It finished in about 20 minutes to cheers from the grandstands.

A modified Volkswagen Touareg dubbed Stanley raised the bar by navigating the course almost flawlessly in about 10 minutes. It was followed by a custom-built vehicle called NavIGATOR, a collaboration between the University of Florida, Gainsville and Autonomous Solutions Inc.

"It went exactly as I had predicted," said Sebastian Thrun, a computer science professor at Stanford University, which built Stanley. "I knew exactly how it would react."

A series of vehicles that came afterward stumbled and had to be manually driven off the speedway. One vehicle tried to go around two pieces of metal guardrail instead of between it and stalled. Another made an er-

Key issues resolved in the hospital merger

The merger of the Twin Falls county-owned Magic Valley Regional Medical Center and Boise-based nonprofit St. Luke's Regional Medical Center has hinged upon several key issues:

- Local governance: The local hospital board and the St. Luke's system board jointly will nominate individuals to serve on the MVRMC board. Commissioners also will appoint one representative to the local hospital board.
- Indigent care and mental health services: If the county's total indigent care obligation surpasses $1 million in any fiscal year, St. Luke's will reimburse the county for the excess. The current level of mental health services provided by Canyon View and MVRMC will be maintained under the new system.
- Community reinvestment fund: St. Luke's will contribute $200,000 annually to this fund plus annual adjustments
- Transaction costs: If the commissioners put the final proposal on the ballot, the St. Luke's system will reimburse the county for all costs related to the transaction, including consultant and attorney fees.
- Existing hospital campus: The county retains ownership of the existing MVRMC facility with the exception of Canyon View. For at least five years, the new owner will lease all real and personal property of MVRMC for $2 million annually.
- Use of property after new hospital opens: Under the proposal, a $120 million hospital and medical center will be built most likely on the southeast corner of Pole Line and Grandview roads. If the new hospital has not been completed in five years, then the lease rate will continue under certain conditions. The system can rent the existing hospital or pay the county up to $1.5 million to raze or remodel the facility.
- Restrictions on sale: St. Luke's agreed not to sell the hospital for 15 years. The county wants to receive a reversion interest in the hospital free and clear if ownership is transferred, but that decision will be determined in the final proposal. In the event of a transfer, the county wants to be able to consent to a 15 percent interest in proceeds received, down from an original 22 percent.
- New Health Initiatives Trust: St. Luke's must contribute $20 million to a fund to compensate Twin Falls County residents for their equity in the hospital. At closing, $15 million will be made available with the remaining $5 million to be paid in equal installments over 10 years.

really positive way."

Commissioner Bill Brockman said both parties made compromises on some of the proposal's final figures, such as the amount of money the county would be required to pay for indigent care and St. Luke's contribution to a trust to compensate county residents for their equity in the hospital. Those major figures won't be up for negotiation in the final contract.

"We have agreed on all the figures going into the contract," Brockman said.

In signing the letter of intent, commissioners also agreed not to consider other offers made on the hospital. The county has received offers from other hospital networks, including the nonprofit Sisters of Charity of Leavenworth Health System and the for-profit Capella Healthcare.

All parties have a responsibility to the community to complete the transfer as quickly as possible, said Ed Dahlberg, St. Luke's president and chief executive officer. Therefore, with Wednesday's signed resolution behind them, St. Luke's officials will start looking at designs for a new hospital, he said.

"I feel like there is energy building in the community," Dahlberg said. "We are very much looking forward to this."

roneous right turn at the start and rammed into the wall.

Vehicles have at least two chances to loop around the speedway during the qualifiers. The 20 finalists will be announced next week.

Of the 16 vehicles that ran the course, seven finished. During last year's semifinals, no vehicle completed the course in the first day. Eventually, only seven entrants completed a flat, 1.4-mile obstacle course. But eight others that failed were allowed to advance. Organizers expect most vehicles this year to finish the qualifying course.

The Grand Challenge is sponsored by the Pentagon, which is spending $9 million on this year's event. The competition is part of the Pentagon's efforts to have a third of the military's ground vehicles unmanned by 2015.

public support are connected with Oregon's famous independent streak, said Jim Moore, who teaches political science at Pacific University in Forest Grove.

"This is about access to assisted suicide, not necessarily being personally in favor of assisted suicide," Moore said.

George Eighmey, executive director of Compassion in Dying of Oregon, a group that advises assisted suicide patients in Oregon, said the law offers terminally ill patients a humane way to end their suffering.

"The law is working well, in the sense that the few individuals who do use it are individuals are strongly independent; well-educated, financially secure and family-oriented," Eighmey said. "These are people who wish to exit on their own terms."

Opponents include some doctors and religious organizations.

"Assisted suicide is a reversal of the proper role of a doctor as a healer, comforter and consoler to an improper role of the physician causing a patient's death," said Dr. Kenneth Stevens of Physicians for Compassionate Care, a leading opposition group.

The U.S. Conference of Catholic Bishops, which has filed briefs in the Supreme Court case, contends that Oregon "is sending a very negative message to sick, elderly and vulnerable patients that their lives are not worth protecting and their suicides are not worth preventing," spokesman Richard Doerflinger said.

Dr. Peter Rasmussen, a Salem oncologist, said he has helped more than 10 of his terminally ill patients end their lives with prescriptions.

"In one case, there were members of a bikers club who came to say their goodbyes to their friend," he said. "It almost had a party atmosphere, because that's what the patient wanted."

said. "And the district also has a need to communicate with its own constituents."

Hoy also spoke about the lack of materials for classrooms.

"We're still curious about Open Court," Hoy said. "It's frustrating for the classroom teachers when they don't have the materials. And I'm curious about science books. It's been about two years and it makes it difficult to work with books when the pages are falling out of the bindings."

The board did not comment on the lack of materials, but Baird did say the materials were ordered in a timely fashion, but the publisher has not been able to keep up with demand.

Lori Halle Ward, a board trustee, asked how many in the audience had ever attended a proposed budget hearing or district audit. None in the audience said he or she had.

"I'm getting the impression that the news about the state of the district is somehow a surprise to people in this room," Ward said. "You know, we do pay a larger percentage of our budget to salaries."

The district spends about 85 percent of its budget on salaries.

Rob Atkins, a board trustee, said the district was operating in the red last year, and the district expects the same this year.

"Is the union contending that the (district's) figures are not good?" Atkins asked.

Hoy replied that it has been an ongoing concern among teachers that the district's budget figures do not match the figures calculated by an independent TFEA accountant. He asked the board to allow Robert Seaman, the business manager for the district, and the TFEA accountant to reexamine the budgets together.

"If we have to go through the process twice, it will be cumbersome," Dobbs said. "And we're kind of between mediation and fact-finding as it is."

After the board meeting, most teachers said they were disappointed with the boards response to the TFEA's concerns. Some teachers left the meeting in tears, while others, such as Kathy Graham, were infuriated.

"They're not getting the point," Graham said. "I'm so mad that I'm shaking. 'Oh, I'm so mad.'"

Jeannine Berriochoa, a teacher at Twin Falls Senior High School, left the meeting in tears after hearing the board's response.

"That was embarrassing for the teachers that way they were treated in there," Berriochoa said.

Former House majority leader calls indictment weak, baseless

The Dallas Morning News

AUSTIN, Texas — A grand jury indicted U.S. House Majority Leader Tom DeLay on Wednesday, toppling him from congressional leadership and forcing him to answer charges that he helped launder corporate money to GOP candidates in the pivotal 2002 statehouse elections.

In Washington, an angry and defiant DeLay called the indictment "a sham" that would not "hold up under even the most glancing scrutiny."

While he will keep his congressional seat, House Republican rules dictate that he relinquish his leadership position while facing criminal charges. Republicans selected Rep. Roy Blunt of Missouri, who had been No. 3 in the party's House leadership, to take over DeLay's duties.

The four-page indictment stems from a three-year investigation of the Texans for a Republican Majority Political Action Committee, known as TRMPAC. The inquiry has spawned 41 indictments involving 81 counts of criminal wrongdoing, though Wednesday's indictment will probably be the last.

DeLay was accused of conspiring to violate the Texas election code, a fourth-degree felony punishable by up to two years in prison and a $10,000 fine. Two of his lieutenants, Jim Ellis and John Colyandro, also were reindicted under the conspiracy charge.

Representative Tom Delay, R-Tex., talks to reporters Wednesday on Capitol Hill after resigning as house majority leader following his indictment by a Texas grand jury on conspiracy charges.

District Attorney Ronnie Earle, a Democrat, said he expected to be pilloried with accusations of partisan prosecution.

"I don't know what else they would say," Earle said.

Instead, he said, he was following century-old state laws that prohibit corporations and unions from swamping elections with the easy cash of their shareholders. In Texas, corporate money cannot be used in political campaigns.

The case revolves around the work of Ellis, director of the DeLay-created Americans for a Republican Majority political action committee, with TRMPAC its sister organization.

TRMPAC, run by Colyandro, had identified 21 key House races where victory would give Republicans control of the Texas House for the first time since Reconstruction. Then, a dream of DeLay's could be realized — a midterm redrawing of congressional districts that would allow Republicans to pick up six seats and dominate the Texas congressional delegation for the first time.

The scenario played out just that way, giving DeLay a more comfortable majority to push conservative legislation. But at the same time, the redistricting fractured the Texas Legislature, and the acrimony lingers today.

The grand jury alleges that Colyandro provided Ellis with a $190,000 check drawn entirely from corporate contributions. Because that money couldn't be put in key statehouse races, the two sent the check to the Republican National Committee with a list of seven Texas candidates that needed contributions.

Within two weeks, on Oct. 4, 2002, the RNC issued checks, numbered in sequence, to the seven candidates for a total of $190,000. Earle said the act constituted money laundering and is a felony under Texas law.

"My job is to prosecute crime. I'm doing my job," he said.

He declined to say what role he believes DeLay played in the transaction, saying that would constitute evidence that will come out during a trial. The indictment lists no specific actions by DeLay.

Attorneys for the congressman said he has met with Earle, cooperated with the investigation and even waived the three-year statute of limitations that ran out Sept. 13, three years after TRMPAC's check to the national Republican group.

"Tom DeLay didn't do anything wrong," said Houston attorney Dick Deguerin.

Earle denied that the investigation had a partisan stench, pointing out that during his tenure, the public integrity unit had pursued investigations against 15 elected officials — 12 Democrats and three Republicans. The most famous was his failed prosecution of then state Treasurer Kay Bailey Hutchison on charges of official misconduct for using state resources for political purposes. In Washington, DeLay said the accusation was a partisan shot by "a rogue district attorney" who was punishing him for his redistricting successes.

"This is one of the weakest, most baseless indictments in American history," he said.

21 Senate Democrats say they'll vote for Roberts

WASHINGTON (AP) — A divided Democratic caucus on Wednesday assured Supreme Court nominee John G. Roberts Jr. of a comfortable, bipartisan Senate confirmation as the nation's 17th chief justice, the youngest in 200 years.

Roberts

Many say they would have chosen someone else for the position, yet 21 Senate Democrats agreed he has "a brilliant legal mind" and will be among the 76 senators — more than three-fourths of the 100-member Senate — who say they plan to vote to confirm the 50-year-old Roberts as the successor to the late William H. Rehnquist.

Democrats are uniting, however, in sending the White House a warning not to nominate a conservative ideologue to replace retiring Justice Sandra Day O'Connor. President Bush is expected to nominate O'Connor's replacement soon after Roberts is sworn in as chief justice.

"While this nomination did not warrant an attempt to block the nominee on the floor of the Senate, the next one might," said Sen. Charles Schumer of New York, chairman of the Democratic Senatorial Campaign Committee, and a member of the Senate Judiciary Committee. He was out front on filibusters of Bush's lower court judicial nominees and is one of the 21 Democrats who oppose to Roberts.

Sen. Mark Pryor of Arkansas is one of the 21 Democrats who have announced support for Roberts, yet he too cautioned the White House on the upcoming pick, saying, "If Bush nominates another conservative activist judge, there will be problems in the Senate."

Senate Judiciary Committee Chairman Arlen Specter, R-Pa., condemned talk of blocking Bush's next Supreme Court pick but also urged the White House to nominate "in the mold of Judge Roberts," who has gone through the Senate relatively unscathed from the day Bush tapped him as the nation's 109th Supreme Court justice.

"If the president can find someone in Judge Roberts' mold, I think by putting up that nominee, he disarms his opponents," Specter said.

Roberts is expected to have a long tenure as chief justice.

Not since John Marshall, confirmed in 1801 at 45, has there been a younger chief. Oliver Ellsworth was 50 — about six weeks from turning 51; And John Jay, the first chief justice, was 44. He served from 1789-1795.

If Democrats voted against Roberts as a bloc, it would give Republicans a reason to block the next Democratic president's nominee if they are still in charge of the Senate, said Ron Wyden, D-Ore. "A sword forged in ideology in 2005 can be used against a progressive nominee in 2009 with an equal disregard for the Constitution and the individual," he said.

Missouri congressman succeeds Delay – for now

WASHINGTON (AP) — Rep. Roy Blunt of Missouri emerged as temporary House majority leader Wednesday in a fast-paced episode of Republican power politics triggered by the indictment of his old-time patron.

Blunt

With Texas Rep. Tom DeLay obliged to relinquish his leadership post for the time being, Blunt forcefully asserted his claim to the job in personal meetings with Speaker Dennis Hastert, according to several GOP officials.

At the same time, conservative lawmakers quickly made known their unhappiness when reports circulated that Hastert was on the verge of recommending that Rep. David Dreier of California assume most of the duties of majority leader.

"What we do here is more important than who we are," Blunt said at a news conference after fellow Republicans named him temporary majority leader at a closed-door meeting. "We have an agenda to move forward here."

At 55, Blunt possesses an easy-going manner and a solidly conservative voting record.

"He's a very good guy," said Rep. Michael Castle, a Republican from Delaware.

At the same time, Castle said Blunt "will sit there and say, 'Well, that's good, Mike,' and the next day he'll beat you anyway."

Blunt's conservatism, perhaps more than his listening skills, served him well after DeLay stepped aside in the wake of his indictment by a Texas grand jury on a single charge of criminal conspiracy.

Hastert presented his recommendation after a closed-door meeting of the rank and file. Republicans agreed unanimously, although officials said Hastert was first prodded to give assurances that lawmakers could return to the issue early next year if they wanted.

The developments capped a quick rise for Blunt, first elected to Congress in 1996. His district in southwestern Missouri includes Branson, a town of a few thousand residents that draws millions of country music fans each year to its performance stages.

Blunt regularly receives ratings in the 90 percent range or higher from the American Conservative Union.

Lobbies line up at the trough for relief riches

From oil refineries to airlines, groups portray projects as storm assistance

By Jeffrey H. Birnbaum
The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — With Congress dangling as much as $200 billion in hurricane-related aid, lobbyists for oil companies, airlines, manufacturers and others are clamoring to get their share.

"It's been all Katrina all the time, and now it's Rita, too," said J. Steven Hart, chairman of Williams & Jensen PLLC, a top lobbying firm in the capital. "Except for the Supreme Court, hurricane recovery is what Congress will be up to so we have no choice but to adapt."

Lawmakers are receptive to many of these requests, congressional aides said. For example, House Energy and Commerce Committee Chairman Joe Barton, R-Texas, is moving legislation this week, much of it recommended by lobbyists, that would waive regulations to help oil companies build new refineries. The reason: the hurricanes drew attention to the nation's dependence on a small row of Gulf coast refineries.

AP photo

Workers are reflected in floodwaters in the Ninth Ward of New Orleans Wednesday, Sept. 28 as they make repairs on the Industrial Canal which broke twice flooding the neighborhood following Hurricanes Katrina and Rita. The area has been devestated for nearly a month since Katrina hit.

Oil lobbyists, like so many others, are using the storms as an excuse to win long-sought legislation, even when their plans relate only tangentially to the hurricanes.

Earlier this week, groups as diverse as the American Institute of Architects and the American Petroleum Institute were freshening their requests for tax breaks and other favors. The architects changed "Katrina" to "hurricane disaster" in their pitch.

The troubled airline industry has been particularly active on the hurricane front. Delta Air Lines Inc. and Northwest Airlines Corp. are trying to include relief from their pension obligations in hurricane legislation this year. The firms, which have been pressing for the change since the spring, are telling lawmakers that the fuel price hikes in the wake of Katrina have made the aid more necessary.

"Katrina adds an urgency," Delta spokeswoman Benet Wilson said. So far the proposal remains stalled.

The Air Transport Association, the airlines' trade group, is seeking a national change in response to the regional devastation. It wants Congress to waive for a year the 4.3 cent-per-gallon tax on jet fuel, a plan that would cost $600 million. "Katrina exacerbated an already untenable situation with respect to the price of oil on our industry," association President James May said.

"I am quite confident there will be many who make that change, that we are self-serving," May said. "But I am equally confident that the impact that Katrina had on this industry is real."

Insurers have been using Katrina as an argument for approving their long-held top priority, an extension of the Terrorism Reinsurance Act (TRIA), which provides for the government to pay a portion of the damage caused by a foreign terrorist attack over certain thresholds. To illustrate the tie benween the hurricane and the legislative effort, Carl Parks, senior vice president of the Property Casualty Insurers Association of America, has coined the term "KA-TRIA."

Farmers, even those outside the disaster zone, are begging for hurricane cash. "It is important to remember that the economic impact of Hurricane Katrina is harming much more of U.S. agriculture than producers in those three states," Bob Stallman, president of the American Farm Bureau, wrote to legislators. "As the Senate and House Appropriations Committees prepare to address this natural disaster, we urge you to include emergency disaster assistance for farmers and ranchers."

The nation's for-profit hospitals are trying to persuade Congress to carve an exception into a decades-old law specifying that only nonprofit institutions qualify for grants from the Federal Emergency Management Agency to rebuild critical facilities after a natural calamity. "Storms do not damage hospitals based on their ownership status," said Richard Coorsh, spokesman for the Federation of American Hospitals, which represents investor-owned hospitals.

The change for hospitals would not apply only to those damaged by Katrina. Coorsh said the group would like Congress to grant for-profit hospitals permanent access to FEMA funds wherever a natural disaster occurs. The federation sought the same change, unsuccessfully, following the Sept. 11, 2001 terrorist attacks.

Other industries have been careful to focus their proposals on the people and businesses of the Gulf Coast. The Travel Business Roundtable, a coalition of chief executives of hotel, restaurant and other travel-related companies, is campaigning for a host of grant, tax-cut and loan relief proposals, all specific to the storm-affected region and time limited. "We're not going to be irresponsible," said Charles Merrin, the roundtable's chief Washington representative.

Red Cross draws heat over Katrina

Charity has raised nearly $1 billion

NEW YORK — As its hurricane relief donations near the $1 billion mark, more than double all other charities combined, the American Red Cross is encountering sharp criticism of its efforts and mounting pressure to share funds with smaller groups.

The complaints — that Red Cross operations were chaotic in some places, inequitable in others — have stung deeply within an organization that is proud of its overall response to Hurricane Katrina, by far the most devastating natural disaster it has confronted on U.S. soil.

"It's frustrating to our thousands of volunteers out there every day, away their families, helping people," said spokeswoman Devorah Goldburg. "We never said we were perfect — we're trying to do our best under extraordinary circumstances."

The frustration stems partly from the fact that the Red Cross has worked to avoid a recurrence of the humbling fundraising controversy that flared after the terrorist attacks of Sept. 11, 2001.

Back then the Red Cross raised about $1.1 billion — its record so far for a single disaster — but the organization was assailed when donors belatedly learned that $200 million of their gifts were being earmarked to prepare for future crises rather than to help victims. Red Cross president Bernadine Healy resigned, the money was shifted back to the Sept. 11 Liberty Fund, and the organization promised greater accountability in future fundraising campaigns.

Because of that experience, Goldburg said the Red Cross is determined to use its massive donations for purposes its donors were asked to support. These include emergency shelter and food, plus short-term financial aid, but not longer-term recovery or rebuilding. Such efforts have never been part of the Red Cross mission.

"After 9/11, we learned we had to be very specific as to where our money is going," Goldburg said. "Our donors are saying to us, 'We want this money spent on Katrina right now.'"

The Red Cross estimates it will need $2 billion to finance Katrina-related emergency services. Even if the goal is reached, Goldburg said, any policy change that would allow support of recovery programs would have to be authorized by the Red Cross board of governors.

Paul Light, a professor of public service at New York University, said he has been impressed with the Red Cross' adjustments after Sept. 11 and its emergency response to Katrina.

But he is among numerous experts and activists who believe Katrina's impact is so severe that the Red Cross should depart from tradition and help finance the long-term recovery. "A lot of small non-profits in the Gulf Coast are staring at deficits and will be hoping for partnerships," he said. "The Red Cross would be wise to invest in them."

Kathleen McCarthy, director of the Center for the Study of Philanthropy at the City University of New York, also advised the Red Cross to consider flexible, creative ways of sharing donations.

"How funds are allocated between relief and development is always a problem because relief is sexy and development is not," she said. "We're seeing a huge amount of money poured into relief, and far less attention paid to how you get money to local organizations which can find the best way to help rebuild their communities."

Across the Gulf Coast, a coalition of black-led community groups called Saving Our Selves is urging the Red Cross to consult with their leaders as attention shifts to recovery.

"This work is so immense — it's dangerous anytime you have a single organization monopolizing relief services," said coalition leader LaTosha Brown. "The Red Cross needs to recognize its limitations and reach out by partnering with local agencies who have people on the ground."

Yet the executive director of the watchdog group Charity Navigator said such pleas to the Red Cross are unrealistic, and many reflect envy of its fundraising prowess.

"The Red Cross raised the money fair and square by making a compelling case to the American public that they were the best organization to get these dollars," Trent Stamp said. "To come in after the fact and ask them to share the money — I can't think of anything more pie-in-the-sky and naive."

Several other complaints have arisen. Among them:

• Some black activists have contended that the Red Cross response, notably in the first few days after Katrina, provided better services in mostly white areas than mostly black areas. "For the first 72 hours, they did not do an equitable job of responding to all communities," said Joe Leonard of the Washington-based Black Leadership Forum.

Red Cross chief diversity officer Rick Pogue said this perception arose because the organization, though committed to serving all in need, had more trouble getting teams into some impoverished black areas early in the crisis than into more affluent areas. "The need was so great, we'd go first to the areas we could get to the easiest," Pogue said.

• In DeKalb County, Ga., the Red Cross was asked to vacate a relief center still filled with hundreds of Katrina evacuees after a dispute with the county's chief executive. Goldburg said the dispute involved financing; DeKalb County CEO Vernon Jones said victims were "treated like cattle" by overwhelmed volunteers unprepared to handle the demand for services.

• Many people seeking help complained of trying futilely for hours to get through to Red Cross telephone hot lines. The Red Cross acknowledged this problem and appealed for patience.

• Richard Walden, president of the relief agency Operation USA, urged donors to consider alternatives to the Red Cross in a scathing column Sunday in the Los Angeles Times titled "The Red Cross Money Pit." Among other charges, Walden said the Red Cross had not made clear to donors that some of its spending on emergency housing for evacuees would be reimbursed by the federal government.

Red Cross focuses on immediate aid

Red Cross officials said they will use Hurricane Katrina funds for emergency aid, not longer-term relief. The organization was assailed when donors learned $200 million of Sept. 11 funds were earmarked for future crises.

Child Find

In cooperation with parents and non-school agencies, the Twin Falls School District engages in Child Find activities throughout the school year. These activities are conducted to create public awareness of special education programs, advise the public of the rights of students, and alert community residents of the need for identifying and serving children with disabilities from the age of three through the semester in which they turn 21.

If you know of a child who may have individual needs that result from disabilities or developmental delays, and who is not enrolled in a school program, please contact Support Services at 733-8456.

These children may have difficulty walking, talking, hearing, or learning, or may display behaviors that appear different from other children their age.

If you need more information or would like pamphlets to distribute, please call 733-8456.

Artist donates paintings to Buhl school, arts council

BUHL — Artist John Horejs of Burley has donated a piece of art to beautify the new Buhl High School.

He is also donating a painting for a raffle to benefit the Buhl Arts Council.

The painting entitled, "Morning Fog at Moose Junction" is an oil on canvas, 55 by 72 inches, and is a permanent donation to the new high school, reported Kelly Daluiso, executive director of the Buhl Arts Council.

Also as a fundraiser, the Buhl Arts Council is selling raffle tickets to win a Horejs painting, valued up to $1,400. Tickets are $5 each or $20 for five tickets.

The drawing will be held Dec. 10, which is the evening of the Light Parade and caroling at the arts council's Eighth Street Center.

The raffle winner may choose one of Horejs' paintings in the center gallery or at his studio, valued up to a $1,400, Daluiso said.

Horejs said he felt that it is important to give back to the community and was thrilled to be able to have his work hanging in the new Buhl High School, according to the Buhl Arts Council. Horejs' family resides locally, while he and his immediate family spend the summer months at their home in Burley and winters in Phoenix, Ariz.

He is considered one of the top landscape artists in Idaho and exhibits in leading galleries all over the country, the Buhl Arts Council reported. In Idaho, he has works for sale at the Buhl Arts Council Eighth Street Center, Browns Gallery in Boise and Kneckarth Gallery in Ketchum.

The Buhl Arts Council Board reported that it is "honored to be involved in such a gift by one of Idaho's leading artists."

Buhl class of 1955 makes new memories at reunion

BUHL — The Buhl High School class of 1955 reunited for its 50th class reunion on Sept. 3 and 4.

Thirty-three classmates attended from Idaho, Washington, Oregon, Utah, Arizona and California.

On Sept. 3, the classmates and guests toured the recently completed new high school building. A gift of an Indian head hand carved by Jim Lindsey of Twin Falls will be presented to the high school from the class of 1955 at a later date.

Following the tour, a social hour and dinner was enjoyed at Blue Rock Winery & Vineyard. Master of ceremonies Jim Lindsey welcomed the returning classmates, and Don Smellie of Providence, Utah, gave the invocation. In memory of the deceased classmates, single roses were placed in a vase as each name was read, followed by a minute of silence.

Lindsey also shared good wishes and comments from absent classmates. Following a suggestion by Janet Smutny of Buhl, a collection was made for the class of 1955 to purchase a Buhl centennial brick.

Lindsey thanked Jerline Hawkins of Boise, Lewis Andrews of Boise, Bob Howard of Meridian and Marvin Mackie of San Pedro, Calif., for black and gold latte cups given to each classmate. Gene Shamess of Buhl also provided San Francisco sourdough bread served with the meal.

Classmates and guests returned to Blue Rock Winery & Vineyard the next morning for a brunch. Bob Wigington of Twin Falls presented each classmate with a copy of the class picture taken the previous evening.

A 55th reunion is planned for the year 2010.

LETTERS OF THANKS

July 4th events make for great family tradition

A big thanks to those responsible for the July 4th fireworks and the Twin Falls County Fair. Both of these events have become Harshbarger family traditions. First, we took our kids, now we take our kids and our grandkids.

The College of Southern Idaho deserves a big thanks for providing such a beautiful setting for the band concert, picnics and fireworks. Our county fair is clean and fun. The Petting Zoo was the best ever, better placement, better organized.

Thank you all for providing places for great family fun.

State control of grizzlies wakes out of hibernation

Good news, Idaho. The continuous howling over wolf recovery may be distracting wildlife officials from an even bigger success story — the comeback of grizzly bears in southeast Idaho.

Now in its third decade, the grizzly bear recovery plan for the Greater Yellowstone ecosystem has grown some real claws. Placed on the Endangered Species List as a threatened species in 1975, the Yellowstone ecosystem bears have gone from fewer than 200 bears to upwards of 600.

Our view: The possible delisting of Yellowstone grizzly bears is a huge success for southeastern Idaho.

What do you think? We welcome viewpoints from our readers on this and other issues.

The progress is so positive that U.S. Fish and Wildlife officials, as well as wildlife agencies in Idaho, Wyoming and Montana, agree the Yellowstone bears could be delisted in the coming year. The state of Idaho should have a proposed rule for delisting in place some time next month.

Idaho Fish and Game officers estimate actual numbers in the ecosystem to be between 400 and 600 bears. Nailing specific numbers down is tricky. State agencies count bears in one of three ways — general observations from the public and agency personnel, aerial counts, and following females with cubs.

That said, Idaho Fish and Game officers are more than satisfied with what they're seeing in southeastern Idaho below Yellowstone.

"It's very encouraging because bears reproduce at a very low level," said Lauri Hanauska-Brown, a regional wildlife biologist for the Upper Snake Region of Fish and Game. "Unlike wolves that can have five cubs a years, bears will have one to two cubs every three years. Then she's keeping them with her until they're 2 years of age."

Scientific numbers aren't the only encouraging signs, but the political details are just as bright. State and federal officials agree that all recovery requirements have been met for delisting. And unlike the wolf recovery plan, where Wyoming's state-control management plan falls short of plans in Idaho and Montana, all three states are on the same page for a satisfactory grizzly management plan.

As we've said before with wolves, meeting federal requirements and transferring control to state wildlife agencies is the best management track for predators.

Hanauska-Brown said state management policies would be determined based on population. Property owners and ranchers will have more ability to remove an aggressive grizzly.

"Females are given more chances than are males," she said. "That's because of the slow reproduction scale. Females are really important to keeping populations at a stable level."

Perhaps just as important as monitoring the bears, however, is making sure towns and tourists become more bear-resistent. "Don't feed the bears" isn't just a trite national park slogan, but a way to stop the omnivores from human interaction.

"There's a lot of responsible human activity that has to go along with a sustainable expanding bear population," Hanauska-Brown said.

True enough, but with less federal restrictions on bear management, state residents will feel a lot better knowing local officials are on the grizzly watch.

Government drowns in Katrina corruption

The hurricane Katrina disaster exposed to the world the corruptness and ineffectiveness of our government. The arrogance, greed and decay of morality in politics disgrace this nation. However, the responsibility rests with citizens. Some are too complacent and don't live up to their duty as citizens. Many are too fed up to go to the polls, and I have heard the same excuse more than once: "They are all crooks, why bother to vote." On the other hand, many voters blindly follow their party affiliation without scrutinizing the candidate's behavior. Typically, from elected officials to government agencies officials, many are too busy consolidating their positions and padding their personal wealth and care nothing about the best interests of this nation or its citizens.

When I talk about the virtue of honesty, they have told me why should they be honest in paying taxes when elected officials and government officials cheat and lie, and the Legislature passes laws that only benefit the financial contributing special interests with no concern for the detrimental effects on the ordinary citizens.

Everything is focused on financial gain and profit at any cost. They are willing to trade human life, our environment, our health, clean air and pure water for the illusion of progress as long as it benefits them financially. It seems like they are blinded to everything except powerful money. It appears that there is no integrity, morality or ethical behavior in our government. It reminds me of what happened to an advanced civilization and powerful Roman empire when arrogance, greed, corruption and moral decal pervaded its empire.

The government's ineffective response to hurricane Katrina wasn't a surprise for me after what I have learned in the last five years of how Idaho government functions. The way the Idaho Legislature allows the Idaho State Department of Agriculture not to regulate and not to solve the dairy odor problem is just one example of how ineffective our state government and its agencies are. The odor legislation that was passed four years ago still languishes today with no odor standard established.

Citizens need to wake up and have a radical change in their perceptive of the political process. Good and effective government rests in citizens' hands. We have the responsibility to form a good government for our city, county, state and our nation, and we have the power to vote those self-serving politicians out of office.

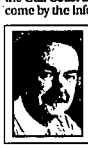
Media blindside in hindsight

What do you "know" about the recent hurricanes that struck the Gulf Coast and how did you come by the information?



CAL THOMAS

If your knowledge was acquired from watching the broadcast and cable networks, as it was for most people, you "know" only what their reporters and anchors told you. What they told you initially was that as many as 10,000 people probably died in New Orleans after the city was hit by Hurricane Katrina. They also reported on roving gangs who looted and terrorized survivors. And they claimed people were being raped in a darkened Superdome due to lack of security.

You also "know" that emergency relief efforts were either nonexistent or ineffective and that it was the federal government that was largely responsible because it is incompetent and its white leaders don't like poor black people.

President Bush's approval ratings are at a record low due, in part, to the public's disapproval of how the media characterized his performance in the aftermath of Katrina and the largely unrebutted assault by some Democrats who engaged in political opportunism.

Cable TV reporters and anchors made their own kind of news by screaming for help and accusing the government of not sending any. Some newspapers lauded them for becoming involved in their stories and for demonstrating a moral conscience.

Weeks after these "facts" have been deeply implanted in the public consciousness, we are now learning that much of what we "know" is incorrect.

On Monday, the New Orleans Times-Picayune reported the body count numbers had been inflated. The paper also described the reported sniper attacks on civilians and fire and rescue personnel as some of the "scores of examples of myths about the (Super)dome and the Convention Center treated as fact by evacuees, the media and even some of New Orleans' top officials."

Ten bodies were recovered from the Superdome and four from the Convention Center, according to the Louisiana Department of Health and Hospitals, and among the 841 recorded deaths related to the storm, just four were identified as gunshot victims. National Guard spokesman Major Ed Bush was inside the Superdome and told the Los Angeles Times, "What I saw in the Superdome was just tremendous amounts of people helping people." He noted that most of those stories never made it into the newspapers or on TV.

It is dangerous in chaotic situations for journalists to accept as truth accounts of distressed "witnesses" who repeat rumors as if they have actually seen what they describe.

The Mayor of New Orleans, Ray Nagin, didn't help when he told Oprah Winfrey's vast TV audience about people "in that frickin' Superdome for five days watching dead bodies, watching hooligans killing people, raping people." Police Chief Eddie Compass told Oprah about "little babies getting raped" at the Superdome. Not true, but it made a riveting story and the public rewarded cable networks with high ratings.

A Los Angeles Times story Tuesday on the media's failure to report truthfully and accurately noted that journalists blame the breakdown of telephone service for the inaccuracies and says that race may also have been a factor.

Bad telephone service is not a sufficient excuse for putting anything and everything on the air without fact-checking. Waiting until you can get it right is always preferable to whatever ratings advantage one gets from allowing the journalistic equivalent of polluted water to pour into the public mind. The media should have acted as a levee in keeping out the bad stuff, but in too many cases it failed to do so.

Journalists like stories about the black poor because it allows them to beat up on a supposedly "uncaring" Republican administration, though they mostly seem to ignore such people when a Democrat is in the White House.

Few white reporters want to question or imply anything negative when it comes from a poor black person for fear they might be tarred with the "racist" label. It didn't help that some of New Orleans' top officials confirmed many of the accounts of lawlessness. But did they "know" these things, or were they repeating rumors? Did journalists bother to ask them, or was the story too good to be hurt by facts?

The Los Angeles Times story noted, "The media inaccuracies had consequences in the disaster zone." It also had unwarranted consequences on the president's approval ratings and may have caused Congress to throw too much money at the recovery effort without sufficient accountability.

U.S. entering the endgame in Iraq

UMM QASR, Iraq — Even a brief visit to this southern Iraq port leaves me convinced that we are entering the endgame here. The coming Iraqi votes, in October over the new constitution and in December over a new Parliament, are going to tell America whether it is worth staying here or not for much longer.

THOMAS FRIEDMAN

Despite all the shameful blunders of Donald Rumsfeld, Iraq, at the end of the day, was always going to be what the Iraqis decided to make of it. And the Iraqi majority — the Shiites and Kurds who make up roughly 80 percent of this country — have spoken. They want an Iraq that will be decentralized and will allow each of their communities to run its own affairs and culture — without fear of ever again being dominated and brutalized by an oil-backed Sunni minority regime in Baghdad.

Equally important, both the Kurds and the Shiites have made it clear that they have no interest in telling the Sunnis how to live, and will cut them a slice of Iraq's oil revenue and maintain Iraq's basic Arab identity.

So now we know what kind of majority the Kurds and Shiites want to be, the question is what kind of minority the Iraqi Sunnis want to be. Do they want to be the Palestinians and spend the next 100 years trying to mobilize the Arab-Muslim world to reverse history and restore their "right" to rule Iraq as a minority — a move that would destroy them and Iraq.

Or do they want to embrace the future? I know the Sunnis are terrified by Iran's influence in this southern region, but, as the Brits who run the Basra area, which includes this port city of Umm Qasr, will tell you, the Iraqi Arab Shiites here are obsessed with not being dominated by Iran. Despite growing cultural and commercial ties with Iran, they are Iraqis first. That attitude would only be enhanced if Iraqi Sunnis, rather than allowing or abetting the murders of Shiites, would instead embrace the new constitution and let the U.S. cut the Sunnis an even fairer slice of the pie.

"We have a lot of overlapping interests with the Sunnis of Iraq," a senior U.S. official in Baghdad said. Indeed, in the latter stages of the constitutional negotiations in Iraq, the talented U.S. ambassador in Baghdad, Zalmay Khalilzad, was basically acting as the Sunnis' lawyer in dealings with the Kurds and Shiites. The problem was that the Sunnis never knew when to say yes, "that's enough," and the U.S. got fed up with their demanding much more than their due.

Do the Iraqi Sunnis understand their own interests, and does the Sunni world have any moral center? Up to now the Sunni Arab world has stood mute while the Sunni Baathists and jihadists in Iraq have engaged in what can only be called "ethnic cleansing": murdering Shiite civilians in large numbers purely because they are Shiites in hopes of restoring a Sunni-dominated order in Iraq that is un-restorable. A fatwa has just been issued against a female Indian tennis player who is Muslim, condemning her for her short skirts, but no fatwa has been issued by Sunni clerics condemning al-Zarqawi's butchering of Iraqi Shiite children and teachers.

Some courageous Sunnis have begun to speak out. "One of the most bizarre phenomena of recent times has been the refusal of Arab governments to condemn terrorist acts in Iraq or to commiserate with the victims," Abdul Rahman al-Rashed wrote in the Saudi daily Asharq Al Awsat. He added, "Take the most recent atrocities in which more than 200 Iraqis lost their lives in two days of carnage: No Arab government raised its voice in condemnation, although most of them shrilly objected when the new Iraqi Constitution failed to mention that the country was part of the Arab nation. The official Arab position vis-a-vis Iraq has always been spineless."

So, folks, we are faltering in Iraq today in part because of the Bush team's incompetence, but also because of the moral vacuum in the Sunni Arab world, where the worst are engaged in murderous ethnic cleansing — and trying to stifle any prospect of democracy here — and the rest are too afraid, too weak, too lost or too anti-Shiite to do anything about it.

Maybe the cynical Europeans were right. Maybe this neighborhood is just beyond transformation. That will become clear in the next few months as we see just what kind of minority the Sunnis in Iraq intend to be. If they come around, a decent outcome in Iraq is still possible, and we should try to help build it. If they won't, then we are wasting our time. We should arm the Shiites and Kurds and leave the Sunnis of Iraq to reap the wind. We must not throw more good American lives after good American lives for people who hate others more than they love their own children.

Liberal rantings ignore the facts on Katrina

If the terminally naive and narrow-minded liberals out there will take time out from reading Maureen ("Moron") Dowd's myriad of Jeremiads in The New York Times and do some actual research, they may learn what I did recently: According to the National Hurricane Research Center (the first year for which data is available), in 1901 there were 18 major hurricanes in the United States; 21 in 1910 and 24 in 1940. Now how exactly do all the full-time global warming alarmists out there reconcile those facts with what they're laughably claiming — that the "huge" increase in the number and velocity of U.S. hurricanes is a recent phenomenon?

Although it's ostensibly a novel, Michael Crichton's fact-filled best seller, "State of Fear," does a super job of debunking of a myriad of hysteria- and partisan-inspired environmental myths — its bibliography runs almost four pages — including global warming, and certainly contains more salient environmental information in any one chapter than a year's worth of The New York Times, Washington Post and Village Voice issues put together, as does a trip to the Hurricane Research Center's Web site!

Fishermen may be taking coastal salmon

All this talk about breaching the dams or increasing the spills to save the salmon is a never-ending subject.

In all solutions mentioned, I have never had anyone bring up the fact about the Japanese fishermen who are constantly entering our coastal waters and fishing there near the river outlets. They are run off only to return again and again.

Could this be the problem of fewer salmon returning to the spawning grounds?

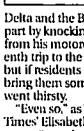
Dancing in the darkness



MAUREEN DOWD

I can't wait to see what's next. Dick Cheney carpooling downtown with Brownie? Rummy rollerblading down the bike path to the Pentagon? Condi huddling by a Watergate fireplace in a gray cardigan?

Maybe our new conservation president will downgrade from Air Force One to a solar-powered Piper Cub as he continues to stalk the Gulf Coast towns and oil rigs like Banquo's ghost.

The once disciplined and swaggering Bush administration has descended into slapstick, more comical even than having Clarence Thomas et al. sit in judgment as Anna Nicole Smith attempts to get more of the moolah of her late oil tycoon husband.

We've got the clownish Brownie still on FEMA's payroll, giving advice on cleaning up the mess he made. (Let's hope the White House is paying him only long enough to buy his good will, not to take any of his bad advice.)

We've got two oilmen in the White House whose administration was built on urging us to consume and buy as much oil and energy as possible. Now they're suddenly urging us to conserve. (Since Cheney considers conservation a "personal virtue," at least he'll get some virtue.)

The president called on Americans to drive less, and told White House staff members to turn off their computers at night, turn down the air-conditioning, form carpools and take the bus.

At the same time, he set a fine example by wasting gazillions of gallons of fuel with all the planes and Secret Service vans and press motorcades and police escorts that follow him around every time he goes on one of his inane photo-ops from the Colorado bunker to what's left of the Mississippi Delta and the Bayou. He did his part by knocking off a few cars from his motorcade on his seventh trip to the gulf Tuesday — but if residents had hoped he'd bring them some water, they went thirsty.

"Even so," as The New York Times' Elisabeth Bumiller wrote, "security dictated that Bush's still-impressive caravan pick him up at the base of Air Force One in Lake Charles, La. — and drop him off just yards away for a meeting with local officials at an airport terminal."

Noting that the Bush administration has proposed new fuel economy standards that critics say could make huge SUVs and pickups even more popular, Reuters published some arithmetic about the president's notorious fuel inefficiency.

Air Force One costs $83,200 to fill up and more than $6,000 per hour to fly. Then there's the cost of helicopters and a 2006 Cadillac DTS limo that gets less than 22 miles per gallon.

Karen Hughes, the Bush nanny who knows nothing about the Muslim world and yet is charged with selling the U.S. to it, wasted even more fuel this week flying to Saudi Arabia to tell women in black abayas how much she likes driving even though they can't.

She knows so little about the Middle East that she looked taken aback when some Saudi women told her that just because they could not vote or drive did not mean that they felt they were treated unfairly.

One thing Saudi women like even less than not having certain rights is to have hypocritical Americans patronize them.

The moment when America should have used its influence to help Saudi women came on Nov. 6, 1990, as U.S. forces gathered in the kingdom to go to war in Iraq the first time. Inspired by the U.S. troops, including female soldiers, 47 women from the Saudi intelligentsia took the wheels from their brothers and husbands and drove a short way until the police stopped them.

They were branded "whores" and "harlots" by Saudi clerics, had their passports revoked, and were ostracized from society for a dozen years. Even their husbands suffered.

The experience made them more angry at the U.S. than at their own rulers. They feel that the Bushes play up the repression of women in the Middle East when it suits their desire to bang the war drums, but do not care what happens to women once the ideological agenda has been achieved.

They feel the administration and the American media have emphasized the repression of Saudi women post-9/11 as a way to demonize Saudi Arabia and paint Saudi men as bullies and terrorists.

When Hughes goes to Saudi Arabia to introduce herself as "a mom" and to talk about Americans as people of faith, guzzling fuel all the way in a country getting flush selling us oil, I think we can consider it taxpayer money well spent.

W. doesn't really need to worry about turning down the lights in the White House. The place is already totally in the dark.

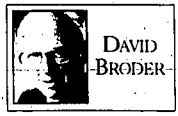
Assemble big thinkers for emergency response reform



DAVID BRODER

However hapless he appeared at the congressional hearing Tuesday on Hurricane Katrina, former Federal Emergency Management Agency head Michael Brown was right about one thing.

The failure to respond to that disaster exposed one of the few real structural weaknesses in our Constitution: a mechanism to coordinate the work of local, state and national governments.

The federal system of divided power and responsibility is one of the glories of the Founders' work, a scheme that has helped preserve individual liberty and the flexibility needed to run a continent-sized nation.

But when a task requires those separate governments to work together, there is no ready forum in which they can meet.

This is a problem that urgently requires presidential attention. Before the United States spends $60 billion, or $200 billion, or whatever the final bill may be, there needs to be a coordinated federal response — not a dictated Washington plan.

President Bush wisely has rejected calls to appoint a Washington czar to issue orders to Gulf Coast officials. But he has yet to enlist the ideas of the people who could make this a new model of federal-state-local cooperation. Instead of repeating his flying photo-ops to the region, he ought to be on the phone inviting people to a summit on how to fill this gap in our constitutional structure.

Who to invite? Because the president is more comfortable with fellow Republicans, I'd start with someone he knows well, a member of his own Cabinet: Secretary of Health and Human Services Mike Leavitt. As governor of Utah and chairman of the National Governors Association, Leavitt was probably the most creative thinker on federalism issues among a talented cohort of state executives.

Next, another man he knows well, former Secretary of State Colin Powell. Before he entered government, Powell founded America's Promise, the largest consortium of faith-based and secular non-profit and private organizations working on urban and human service problems. Those groups have a vital role to play in rebuilding New Orleans and the Gulf Coast.

Then, Sen. George Voinovich of Ohio, unique in his background as mayor of Cleveland, Cuyahoga County commissioner, state legislator and governor. When I talked to Voinovich this week, he said the president should be in touch with all the organizations representing local and state governments. Like the others, he's yet to hear from the White House.

As it happens, the president could reach all those groups through another Republican. Rep. Michael Turner of Ohio, the head of the House speaker's urban working group. Turner, the former mayor of Dayton, and his colleagues have enlisted a strong advisory panel, including National Urban League president and former New Orleans Mayor Marc Morial, and have established liaison on a bipartisan basis with all the major organizations, public and private, with a stake in housing and economic development.

But Turner, like the others, has heard nothing yet from the White House. Last Friday, a presidential aide made a conference call to 220 groups, briefing them for an hour and answering questions about the response to Katrina and the preparations for Rita. But participants said there was little opportunity — or appetite — for them to offer ideas.

If the president were smart, he'd invite Jack Kemp, who is on Turner's advisory panel, and two other dynamic former housing and urban development secretaries, Carla Hills and Henry Cisneros, to brainstorm with him.

He should include Dick Moe, the head of the National Trust for Historical Preservation, who could remind him of the contributions that the craftsmen of New Orleans — plasterers, ironworkers and the rest — can make to refurbishing their city.

If Bush wanted to make this effort really bipartisan, he could also usefully tap the minds of Harry McPherson, the wise old man of Lyndon Johnson's domestic staff, and his new law partner Dick Gephardt, who before he came to Congress was an energetic and imaginative alderman in New Orleans' sister city on the Mississippi, St. Louis.

Bush definitely should call former Gov. William Winter of Mississippi, who helped found the University of Mississippi's Institute for Racial Reconciliation. If Bush is serious about tackling the problems of race and poverty, a repository of knowledge awaits him there, and Winter is eager to help.

And, finally, he should call William H. Gray III, the Philadelphia preacher and former congressman who for years headed the United Negro College Fund — the group whose slogan, famously mangled by Dan Quayle, could well be paraphrased as advice to this president: These minds are a terrible thing to waste.

Weather conspiracy was bad story choice

I completely agree with the letter writer of Sept. 23. It was a puzzling and inappropriate choice to put someone's kooky theory about the causes of Katrina and Hiroshima on the front page.

I am pleased that the new editors have increased in-depth news coverage and added national columnists like Maureen Dowd. We've enjoyed reading a range of views instead of just grumpy old Cal Thomas.

When much good is happening at the paper, it was a shock to see the offensive Japanese mobster theory headlined. Next time, I suggest leaving this kind of topic for the tabloids.

Former governor's trial begins

CHICAGO (AP) — The biggest corruption trial in Chicago in decades opened Wednesday with a federal prosecutor launching a blistering attack on former Gov. George Ryan, saying he betrayed the public's trust by taking cash and gifts to help insiders land lucrative state contracts.

"The fix was in in Illinois government," said Assistant U.S. Attorney Zachary Fardon.

The verbal pounding brought Ryan defense attorney Dan K. Webb to his feet to demand a mistrial the minute Fardon sat down. The request was denied.

Ryan, 71, is accused of giving a lobbyist friend, Larry Warner, free rein to steer contracts to his clients in exchange for gifts and favors during Ryan's term as Illinois secretary of state in the 1990s. Ryan faces 18 corruption counts, including conspiracy and fraud. Warner, a co-defendant, faces 12 counts.

The federal case, dubbed Operation Safe Road, began seven years ago as a probe into the paying of bribes for driver's licenses and ballooned into a full-scale investigation of political corruption in Illinois.

Ryan, a capital punishment opponent who cleared out Illinois' death row by commuting the sentences of 167 inmates, was ultimately driven out of politics by the burgeoning scandal. The Republican decided not to seek a second term in 2002, and was indicted about a year after leaving office.

Warner did nothing wrong, his lawyer said.

"What he did was business, what he did was smart business what he did was lucrative business, but what he did was legal business," said Warner attorney Terence Gillespie.

Senators introduce medical mistakes legislation

By Deirdre Shesgreen
St. Louis Post-Dispatch

WASHINGTON — Two high-profile Democrats introduced legislation Wednesday that they said would provide "common ground" on medical malpractice suits, a divisive issue that has pitted doctors against lawyers in a long-running partisan stalemate.

Sens. Barack Obama, D-Ill., and Hillary Rodham Clinton, D-N.Y., said their bill would help reduce medical errors, unnecessary litigation, and skyrocketing insurance premiums with a simple approach: encouraging doctors and hospitals to apologize for medical mistakes.

Modeled after an Illinois pilot program called "Sorry Works," the bill would provide liability protection for doctors who quickly disclose medical errors and enter into negotiations with injured patients or their families for compensation.

"The debate in Washington has centered on caps and lawsuits," leading to permanent political gridlock, said Obama. This bill "will help us all find some common ground."

"... Instead of closing ranks and keeping people in the dark," Obama said, the bill will encourage doctors and hospitals to be up front with patients when errors occur. As a result, patients would be less likely to sue and health care professionals would be better able to learn from their mistakes.

The Illinois program was recently enacted by that state's legislature as part of the broader medical malpractice bill signed into law last month by Gov. Rod Blagojevich.

Congress has been struggling with the issue for years. Republicans have generally favored caps on damage awards — a proposal favored by doctors but anathema to trial lawyers and their Democratic supporters.

The resulting logjam, said Clinton, has contributed to a dysfunctional health care system.

"We have 98,000 people dying (each year from medical errors), doctors under the gun hospitals practicing defensive medicine," she said. "Something has to give."

Doug Wojcieszak, founder of the Sorry Works! Coalition, said the bill would spark fresh debate about the long-simmering problem.

"This really has potential" to change the discussion, he said. "It's anger, not greed" that drives people to sue, he said, so an apology — as simple as it sounds — can change the dynamic.

Standout quarterback Zach Kline (center) hands off to a running back during practice. The Castleford sophomore has 22 touchdown passes and has averaged about 200 yards per game passing so far this season.

Sophomore quarterback Zach Kline lights it up in Castleford

By Nathaniel Garrabrandt
Times-News writer

CASTLEFORD — Sophomore quarterbacks are supposed to be a sort of starter kit.

You've got to add water, get additional parts, tweak, fine tune, and hope talent and ability make for results sometime in the future. They're raw works in progress requiring simplified passing schemes, devoted blockers, a solid running game, and the patience of Job.

At least that's how it usually seems to work.

For Castleford High sophomore quarterback Zach Kline, the learning curve was just an obstacle to be passed along to opposing teams.

So far they've spent five games trying to climb it and if Kline's numbers get any bigger they should form a mountaineering club.

Looking anything but sophomoric, the 15-year-old has amassed a stunning 22 touchdown passes in just five starts for the unbeaten Wolves, while giving up only a pair of interceptions to lead an offense that has outscored opponents 264-48.

"We've been doing pretty good, 5-0, the best since we won the (1A 8-man football) state championship back in 2002," said Kline.

While such production doesn't come without athleticism, Kline isn't particularly large as of yet, with 150 pounds on a 5-10 frame. But like so many good quarterbacks, his game is predicated upon intangibles and played above the shoulders.

"He's got confidence," said Wolves coach Tyler Gaston. "He's confident in everything that he does. He just goes through his progressions really well. In 8-man, you don't have tons of receivers. A lot of the time, if we're in trips or something, we'll have routes where they're all three in a line and you look from inside out, short to deep and he runs through those pretty quick and he always picks the right guy."

Booking up on the Castleford offense since middle school probably didn't hurt either.

"He's been watching Castleford game films for the last five years, since he was a little kid," said Gaston. "So he knew the system before he got here, a lot of it."

Burley midfielder Bonifacio Sanchez corrals the ball Wednesday as Jerome's RJ Ramirez closes in during their soccer game in Jerome.

Burley soccer gets on track

By Joe Paisley
Times-News writer

JEROME — Burley picked a good time to get out of its offensive doldrums.

The Bobcats offense clicked into high gear early in the second half Wednesday against Jerome, scoring three goals in the first 10 minutes to turn a 3-1 edge into a 6-1 command en route to a 7-1 Class 4A Great Basin West conference boys soccer victory.

Eduardo Anguiano scored four goals to increase his career total to 57 while Bonifacio Sanchez scored twice and Braxton Greener once.

The 9-2 Bobcats dropped their first two games of the season recently, losing 2-1 to rival Wood River and Great Basin East contender Century.

"The last two games we've just had a hard time getting the ball into the back of the net," said Bobcats coach Wes Nyblade.

It looked that way in the first half as Burley struggled to finish, generating good chances only to see the foray into the Jerome zone snuffed out by an errant shot or Tigers defender. The Bobcats outshot Jerome 26-9 with three shots hitting iron.

Some of those shots were difficult ones as the Bobcats failed to make the extra pass needed for an open shot.

"It was 11 individuals out there in the first half," Nyblade said. "We started to pass the ball around and we got those three goals fairly quickly."

"We have a lot of offensive potential out there. We generate 10-15 opportunities a game. Today, we finished them."

With Burley's offense out of sync in the first half, a young Jerome team was able to keep it close. Alejandro Ramirez pounced on a loose ball after Burley goalkeeper Michael Kelsey was unable to control Roy Araiza's shot in the 25th minute, making it 2-1, Bobcats.

Greener headed a shot in six minutes later to make it 3-1 at the half. Anguiano scored his first two goals in the sixth and 21st minutes for the early Burley (3-1 Great Basin West) lead.

Sanchez opened the scoring in the second half off a free kick four minutes in. Anguiano recorded the hat trick, knocking in a rebound past Jerome's Christian Leon four minutes later. Sanchez then converted a breakaway to make it 6-1 in the 50th minute before Anguiano finished off the

Croyle hopes to lead Tide to biggest win of career

The Associated Press

No. 5 Florida at No. 15 Alabama
TV: CBS, 1:30 p.m.

TUSCALOOSA, Ala. — Brodie Croyle knows exactly how Alabama quarterbacks are measured: By wins. Big ones.

It's how the senior hopes to be remembered by Crimson Tide fans, not for his injuries or for being the quarterback during the program's lean times. Leading No. 15 Alabama to an upset of fifth-ranked Florida Saturday would certainly leave a mark with the fans.

"That's all they care about," said John Croyle, Brodie's father and a former Tide player. "That's the mark of a great quarterback. Bart Starr wasn't remembered for his career at Alabama because he was there during tough times, kind of like Brodie's been. He's remembered for going to the NFL and winning."

And Croyle? He could own all the big school passing records at Alabama (4-0, 2-0 Southeastern Conference) before he's done. But he's had the dual misfortunes of bad timing — guiding a team depleted by NCAA sanctions — and injuries, including a torn knee ligament that sidelined him for the final nine games last season.

He's not about to get into a discussion of what beating the Gators (4-0, 2-0) would mean personally or how it would affect his legacy.

"I'm not going to win the game," Croyle said. "If anything I'm going to lose it. I don't get into all that, 'Brodie beat Florida, the No. 5 team in the nation.' If we come out with a win Saturday, if anything it's going to be because of our defense."

His coach has other ideas.

"He definitely is the key for us," Mike Shula said.

While Florida's Chris Leak grabs far more national headlines and passing yards, Shula likes his own QB. He cites Croyle's leadership on the sidelines and in the huddle, but he also raves about his poise.

"He's a guy that when he comes off for timeouts, he's very calm," said Shula, a former Tide quarterback known for keeping his emotions in check. "When he tells you he sees things out there, he's very accurate. He doesn't get rattled.

"His pulse kind of slows a little bit during the course of the game when a lot of guys' are racing."

Croyle needs just two touchdown passes to match the Tide's record of 35 held by Shula and Andrew Zow. He's also within range of Zow's mark for career passing yards by season's end.

Croyle, who has won his last seven starts, is right in the middle of SEC quarterbacks statistically. His 828 passing yards ranks sixth and he has thrown for six touchdowns against two interceptions.

His numbers aren't as impressive as Leak's despite throwing only five fewer passes in markedly different offensive systems. The Tide has the SEC's leading rusher in Ken Darby.

Bulls' Curry at center of a fight bigger than sports

CHICAGO — Until last spring, Eddy Curry was just another cautionary tale about kids drafted before their time.

The Chicago Bulls plucked the 6-foot-11 manchild out of high school in 2001, and he played his first three seasons more flabby than feared. But Curry showed up for the final year of his rookie contract 40 pounds lighter, converted some of that enormous potential into production, and made the Bulls think they might yet see a return on their considerable investment.

JIM LITKE

Then, before a March 30 game at Charlotte, Curry's heart skipped a few beats.

And then, a few more.

Nearly six months later, after a diagnosis of benign arrythmia sent the 22-year-old scurrying to cardiologists from coast to coast and cost him the rest of the season, Curry finds himself in a fight with Bulls management his lawyer calls "far bigger than just the sports world."

At issue is the one-year, $5 million deal Chicago offered Curry, with this proviso: before he sets foot on the court, Curry must submit to DNA testing.

"Think about what's at stake here," said Alan Milstein, Curry's attorney. "As far as DNA testing, we're just at the beginning of that universe. Pretty soon, though, we'll know whether someone is predisposed to cancer, alcoholism, obesity, baldness and who knows what else.

"Hand that information to an employer," he added, "and imagine the implications. If the NBA were to get away with it, what about everyone else in this country looking for a job."

Chicago general manager John Paxson insists the Bulls can test Curry as part of a routine physical when training camp opens next week. Milstein calls that notion "flat-out wrong," and one already rejected by the players' union during the last collective bargaining agreement.

"Besides, there are privacy laws on the books, both state and federal, so there's no way they'd win," he added. "It makes you wonder what they're really worried about."

Milstein isn't the only one asking. Miami Heat forward Antoine Walker, like Curry a Chicago native, played pickup games alongside the youngster the last three weeks, and the dispute has him shaking his head.

"He looked fine, but a lot of teams seem concerned with risks nowadays. Maybe because the investments in players have become so big," Walker said. "Maybe the Bulls want Eddy long-term, and maybe this is some kind of bargaining chip. Either way, DNA testing is taking things a little too far."

Paxson says the team's only motive is to learn whether Curry's generic makeup leaves him susceptible to cardiomyopathy, a heart condition that combined with arrythmia, could prove fatal. He said the DNA test was suggested by Barry Maron, a world-renowned specialist in hypertrophic cardiomyopathy, and complained the team's stance is unlikely being portrayed as though "we have some other motive."

"The bottom line," Paxson added, "is if Eddy had not had any incident and a doctor hadn't suggested it, we wouldn't be asking for it."

Curry has already been cleared to play by several prominent cardiologists, but he can't get disability insurance for his contract should he be sidelined again — or worse — with heart problems.

"There's one guy who isn't sure," Curry told the Chicago Tribune on Tuesday, making his first comments in a while. "I can live with that because of what the other doctors say."

If this was a private medical dispute, chances are the hype would be less and the stakes

Indians stumble in AL Central race

CLEVELAND (AP) — Tampa Bay's Seth McClung pitched eight shutout innings and the Indians dropped three games behind the first-place White Sox with four to play with 1-0 loss.

Cleveland remained tied with Boston for first in the wild-card race.

McClung (7-11) allowed four hits and only two runners reached second base. He outpitched Cliff Lee (18-5) and handed the Indians their third straight setback — the club's first three-game slide since being swept by the Devil Rays on Aug. 12-14.

Lee, who had gone 9-0 with four no-decisions since his last loss on July 8, took a five-hit shutout into the eighth when Toby Hall led off with a double and was lifted for pinch-runner Joey Gathright.

Damon Hollins sacrificed and Julio Lugo's sacrifice fly made it 1-0.

Danys Baez pitched the ninth for his 41st save.

White Sox 8, Tigers 2

DETROIT — Jose Contreras won his eighth straight start and Scott Podsednik had four hits, leading Chicago to an 8-2 win over Detroit on Wednesday night that opened a three-game lead for the White Sox in the AL Central.

Chicago would clinch no worse than a wild-card berth in the playoffs with one more victory.

With Chicago's win and second-place Cleveland's 1-0 loss to Tampa Bay, the White Sox lowered their magic number to two for clinching their first division title since 2000.

Chicago, which had lost its previous two games, led the AL Central by 15 games on Aug. 1 — no team with a lead of more than 13 games has ever failed to finish first.

Carl Everett's two-run triple broke a 1-1 tie in the fifth, and Juan Uribe and Aaron Rowand homered for the White Sox, who had 15 hits.

Yankees 2, Orioles 1

BALTIMORE — Alex Rodriguez hit a milestone homer, Derek Jeter singled in the tiebreaking run in the seventh inning, and the Yankees used a fine pitching performance by Shawn Chacon to beat Baltimore.

The Yankees took a one-game lead over Boston in the AL East with four games to play.

Rodriguez hit his 47th homer off Daniel Cabrera (10-13) to tie it at 1 in the sixth. The shot broke Joe DiMaggio's season club record for home runs by a right-handed batter, set in 1937.

New York went up 2-1 in the seventh. After Jorge Posada hit a leadoff single and Cabrera hit Bernie Williams with a pitch, Robinson Cano moved the runners up with a sacrifice bunt against Tim Byrdak. Jeter then hit an opposite-field single to right off Todd Williams.

Chacon (7-3) allowed one run and four hits in 6 2-3 innings. Tom Gordon held the lead for Mariano Rivera, who got three quick outs for his 43rd save.

Javy Lopez put the Orioles ahead 1-0 in the second with his 14th homer.

Blue Jays 7, Red Sox 2

BOSTON — Bronson Arroyo gave up three homers and all seven runs for Boston, which dropped one game behind New York in the AL East with four games remaining.

Frank Catalanotto doubled, tripled and homered for the Blue Jays, who won their second straight over the Red Sox.

Boston remained tied in the wild-card race with Cleveland.

Vernon Wells and Eric Hinske also homered, and Ted Lilly (10-11) allowed two runs and six hits in 6 2-3 innings to improve to 3-0 against the Red Sox this season.

Boston was 1-for-10 with runners in scoring position and has been shut out for 9 2-3 innings by Toronto relievers.

Jose Lima allowed three runs and six hits in 6 2-3 innings for the Royals, who lost 104 games last season.

National League

Astros 7, Cardinals 6

ST. LOUIS — Morgan Ensberg's tiebreaking double in the ninth inning, his fourth hit of the game, gave Houston a 7-6 victory over St. Louis on Wednesday night and maintain the Astros' 2.5-game lead over Philadelphia in the NL wild-card race.

With the score 6-6, Willy Taveras led off the ninth with his major league-leading 69th infield hit. He scored without a play on Ensberg's double into the left-field corner off Jason Isringhausen (1-2).

Lance Berkman and Mike Lamb homered for the Astros (87-71), who are a season-best 16 games above .500. Chad Qualls (6-4) worked a perfect eighth, and Brad Lidge finished for his 40th save.

Phillies 16, Mets 6

PHILADELPHIA — Chase Utley hit a three-run homer and drove in five runs, and David Bell and Kenny Lofton each had four hits to keep Philadelphia's postseason hopes alive.

The Phillies avoided a three-game sweep and remained 2.5 games behind the Astros, who beat St. Louis 7-6.

Jimmy Rollins extended his club-record hitting streak to 33 games with a leadoff single, and Shane Victorino and Pat Burrell each homered during a seven-run eighth inning. Utley drove in two runs in the eighth to give him 101 RBIs, and the Phillies had a season-high 20 hits.

Rockies 10, Braves 5

ATLANTA — Colorado's Clint Barmes drove in the go-ahead run with a two-run double in the sixth.

Fourteen rookies started for the Braves and Rockies, including the starting pitchers for both. It was the most rookies to start a major league game since Sept. 24, 2003, when 14 started for Cleveland and Minnesota.

Davies was a fill-in starter for John Smoltz, who is resting his stiff right shoulder the last week of the regular season.

Nationals 11, Marlins 7

MIAMI — Preston Wilson homered and had five RBIs and Nick Johnson added a home run with four RBIs as Washington swept the three-game series.

Miguel Cabrera had three hits, including his 33rd homer, and four RBIs for the Marlins, who lost their season-high sixth straight and 12th in 14. Rookie Jeremy Hermida also had three hits, including his second home run.

Reds 11, Brewers 4

MILWAUKEE — Adam Dunn hit his 39th home run and Felipe Lopez drove in three runs to lead Cincinnati.

Chris Capuano (18-11) pitched five innings, giving up six runs and eight hits. It was the second straight game he allowed six runs, although he was able to get the win over St. Louis on Sept. 23.

He was trying to become the first Brewer to win 19 games since Teddy Higuera won 20 games in 1987.

Pirates 3, Cubs 2

CHICAGO — Rookie Nate McLouth homered for the third straight day to lead Pittsburgh to a 3-2 victory over Chicago on Wednesday.

The Cubs finished the season 38-43 at Wrigley Field.

Paul Maholm (3-1), in his sixth major league start, outpitched Mark Prior (11-7), who lost to Pittsburgh for the first time in his career. Maholm gave up two runs and six hits in 6 2-3 innings.

scoring in the 73rd minute, one-timing it into the twine.

"We started concentrating on our game," Anguiano said of the sudden offensive spurt. "We played like a team."

While the young Tigers (1-8-1, 0-2) often struggled to put together a consistent offensive attack, the team kept playing hard throughout.

"We just weren't getting shots off," said co-head coach Brent Rogers. "Burley is a good team and they're competitive every year. We're a young team so we're hoping to be competitive by districts."

Burley entertains Minico next Monday while Jerome hosts Wood River. Burley will have to continue to finish on offense in hopes of setting up a battle for the No. 1 seed in districts when the Bobcats host Wood River on Oct. 12.

Wood River boys hold off Minico

The Times-News

PAUL — The Minico Spartans boys soccer team put a scare into the favored Wood River Wolverines.

The Wolverines escaped with a 2-1 win Wednesday over the Spartans in Great Basin Conference West action at West Minico Middle School in Paul.

"I told them if we hang around, you just never know," Minico coach Dennis Haynes told the South Idaho Press.

The Wolverines opened the scoring with a goal in the third minute of the match by Carl Jablonski off an assist from Ross Parsons. Jablonski headed it home off Parsons' crossing pass.

Wood River added a second goal in the 16th minute of the second half off a corner kick by Spencer Cordovano that Minico goalkeeper Josh Lloyd was unable to corral.

Minico got a goal back in the 28th minute of the second half as Colton Douglass headed in a ball off a free kick from Mark Lloyd.

The outcome could have been much worse since the Wolverines out shot Minico in the match, 18-6.

"We definitely generated a lot of opportunities," said Wolverines coach Farrell Swain. "We just didn't finish."

Among the 18 saves Minico's Josh Lloyd made was a save of a penalty kick in the 35th minute, which kept the Spartans within a goal.

"I told them to keep their heads," Haynes said. "Wood River is one of the best teams in the state."

Wood River swept Minico this season. On Aug. 31, the Wolverines defeated Minico 5-1 in Hailey.

Minico (3-8-1) hosts Pocatello Saturday before playing at Burley on Monday. Wood River (7-3-1, 4-0) plays at Jerome that day.

HAILEY — Seven different Wolverines found the back of the net Wednesday as Wood River downed the Minico girls soccer squad 7-0 in Great Basin West play.

Wood River led 3-0 at halftime.

The goal scorers in order were: Nikki Schulz, Aimee Evans, Kaitlin Gasenica, Calley Brown, Sam Johnson, Ellen Ard and Kacie Femling.

Wood River (9-1-2) plays at Century Saturday and hosts Jerome next Monday.

Burley 3, Jerome 0

BURLEY — The Burley Bobcats soccer team dominated play Wednesday afternoon en route to a 3-0 win over the Jerome Tigers in Great Basin Conference West action.

"Every single position played well out there today," Burley girls coach Shane Ogden told the South Idaho Press.

Burley's Jenna Williams scored twice, while Jessica Alvarez added a third goal as the Bobcats picked up their second win in the last three games.

Williams opened the scoring for Burley in the sixth minute as she scored off an assist from Jaymee Thurston. In the 11th minute, Williams scored on a solo effort to extend Burley's lead to 2-0.

In the second half, Alvarez added her goal in the ninth minute of the half off a corner kick. Despite the three goals, Ogden would have liked to have seen more offensive production from his team.

"It's a little concerning that we didn't score more than three," Ogden said. "We're still not seeing what we need to see. We switched things up and played a two-man midfield."

Rios and Jenny Perez held down the midfield position for Burley and drew praise from their coach.

Burley (3-6-2) will return to action Monday with a match at rival Minico at 4:30 p.m. The two played to a scoreless tie on Sept. 12 at Burley.

Filer 3, Wendell 1

WENDELL — Filer (4-12) split Games 1 and 2 with Wendell before pulling away Wednesday for a nonconference victory, 28-26, 23-25, 25-18, 25-20.

"We just had a tough time in the third game," said Trojans coach Beth Andrus. "Kelsy Newton had a great run for them with her serves. You can credit her with the win."

Trojans senior setter Jessi Lancaster led Wendell in service points while Eric Cox led the Wendell frontline.

"We really played together as a team," Andrus added.

The Filer junior varsity defeated the Trojans JV 24-26, 26-24, 25-21, 25-27, 15-11.

Wendell (1-9, 0-2) hosts Camas County and Castleford on Monday and Glenns Ferry on Tuesday.

Fehr says agreement possible by Series

WASHINGTON (AP) — The head of the baseball players' union told Congress on Wednesday that a new drug-testing agreement could be reached next month — after he heard Hank Aaron and other Hall of Famers call for tougher steroid penalties.

Commissioners and union leaders from the NFL, NBA and NHL also testified at a Senate Commerce Committee hearing about legislation that would standardize steroid testing in U.S. professional sports. But the focus was squarely on Major League Baseball — and, more precisely, on players' association chief executive Donald Fehr.

"I particularly single out baseball. And in baseball, I particularly single out the players," said Sen. Jay Rockefeller, D-W.Va., "because they have negotiated reluctantly, if at all."

Lawmakers looking at steroids in sports have focused on baseball since March 17, when Mark McGwire, Rafael Palmeiro, commissioner Bud Selig and Fehr testified before the House Government Reform Committee. Palmeiro emphatically told Congress he never used steroids; he was suspended Aug. 1 after failing a drug test.

"We're at the end of the line," Sen. John McCain, R-Ariz., said Wednesday. "How many more Rafael Palmeiros is there going to be?"

Five weeks after that March hearing, Selig proposed going from a 10-day ban to 50 games for a first violation, from 30 days to 100 games for a second, and from 60 days to a lifetime ban for a third.

Fehr this week outlined an approach that would increase the first penalty to 20 games and wouldn't mandate a lifetime ban. He stressed Wednesday the need for case-by-case examination of players who fail drug tests.

"Don't you get it?" McCain asked Fehr. "Don't you get it that this is an issue that's greater than the issue of collective bargaining? Don't you understand that this is an issue of such transcendent importance that you should have acted months ago? The patience of this body ... is at an end."

Pressed to say when there will be a new steroids agreement, Fehr said: "Can I give you a precise date? No. Do I expect to know within the reasonably near future whether that will be done? Yes. Would I expect it to be by the end of the World Series? I would certainly hope so."

The World Series is scheduled to begin Oct. 22 and end no later than Oct. 30. Asked whether that's a workable deadline, Selig said, "I don't see that we have a choice."

Selig received more criticism in past congressional appearances. But now he's advised by former White House spokesman Ari Fleischer and has received praise for proposing changes to baseball's drug policy. On Wednesday he brought along former stars Aaron, Ryne Sandberg, Phil Niekro, Robin Roberts and Lou Brock.

The Senate is considering two bills that call for a two-year suspension for a first positive drug test and a lifetime ban for a second.

RedHawks pound Bearcats, win Victory Bell

OXFORD, Ohio (AP) — Josh Betts passed for 359 yards and three touchdowns, leading Miami (Ohio) to a 44-16 victory over Cincinnati on Wednesday night.

Betts, a senior who missed the game's first series for violating an unspecified team rule, completed 22 of 35 passes against a freshman-laden defense.

Martin Nance had eight receptions for 119 yards and two TDs, and Ryne Robinson caught six passes for 127 yards and another score for the RedHawks (2-2).

Brandon Murphy rushed for 120 yards and also scored for the RedHawks, who totaled 539 yards on offense.

The win enabled Miami to reclaim the Victory Bell, the prize that goes to the winner of the annual series the schools bill as the oldest Division I-A rivalry west of the Allegheny Mountains. The series began in 1888 and Miami holds a 59-44-7 lead.

Miami, which had been giving up 440 yards and 27.3 points a game, didn't have any trouble with the Bearcats' offense. Quarterback Dustin Grutza threw five interceptions for Cincinnati (2-2).

The RedHawks scored 24 consecutive points after the Bearcats cut a 17-3 halftime deficit to 20-10 midway through the third quarter.

Kline

There was a lot to learn, Gaston has a thick playbook and Kline committed 58 plays to memory prior to his debut at home in the season opener against Camas County.

However it was a rough start for the sophomore, whose first career pass was picked off at his own 15-yard line. But the Wolves defense held, recovering the ball on downs, and Kline responded by marching the team 90 yards down field, capping off the drive with his first touchdown pass. Four more followed that night.

"The ball's always in the right spot at the right time," said receiver Nate Pryor. "The leads are perfect, it's great."

In retrospect, the interception looked like a quirk and even more so when the same thing happened the following week against Sho-Ban. This time, the game-opening pick was returned for six points. Kline responded with seven touchdown passes en route to a 52-6 rout.

"At the beginning of the season, I was pretty nervous because it was my first year," he said. "But now I know that my team's behind me and we can do it together."

It was an assurance that began to take hold early.

"Probably the third game of the season," said Kline, "I just kind of calmed down and my teammates, did everything for me. I really didn't do much, I just threw the ball, they caught it and scored touchdowns."

Predictably, opposing teams have started taking notice and have begun to structure game plans to stop the pass, such as Murtaugh's Cover 2 defense last week. Kline only threw three TDs and wind was a factor.

"Other teams have played man-to-man, but then Murtaugh played zone," he said. "It was a little different, but you kind of get used to it as the game goes on."

Though nobody fears Kline's ferocious start to be merely a flash in the pan, some of the pressures of sudden expectations will be lessened as Gaston rounds out the Wolves' offense.

"We just need to become, as a team, more balanced," said Gaston. "We're just working on balance and not just the pass."

Kline, who prefers discussing his teammates to himself, doesn't seem one to mind.

"It's not only me," he said. "We've got Drew (Tverdy) and Lance (Illick) and they're our big players and Michael (Brubaker), and they can play pretty much every position on the field. If we need them to play somewhere, they can play there and be some of the best in the conference. Then you've got Danny (Hill) and Nate, they're all-state track and they run fast, they catch balls, and they score touchdowns."

For now Kline is only concerned with tomorrow night, a homecoming conference matchup against Hagerman with major postseason ramifications. Castleford, Hagerman and Raft River are expected to battle for one of two playoff berths this fall.

"The last game we lost was to Hagerman," he said "And that's been all we're focusing on right now is just beating Hagerman. Because if we beat Hagerman, we're in the playoffs."

Can Sun Devil Stadium halt Trojans' streak?

By Ralph D. Russo
Associated Press writer

Southern California brings a 25-game winning streak into Sun Devil Stadium, a place where college football's two most recent notable winning streaks have come to an end.

Six games matching unbeaten teams are on the schedule Saturday, but top-ranked USC's game at No. 14 Arizona State (2-1) is probably the most significant.

The two-time defending champion Trojans (3-0) have looked unbeatable, outscoring opponents 178-47, but history and location might be on the side of the Sun Devils.

The 2003 Fiesta Bowl played in Tempe was the site of one of college football's greatest games. Ohio State's 31-24 overtime victory over Miami, which gave the Buckeyes a national title and snapped the Hurricanes' 34-game winning streak.

In 1996, Nebraska was coming off two straight national titles when Arizona State and Jake Plummer knocked off the Cornhuskers 19-0 and broke their 26-game winning streak.

A victory by USC over the Sun Devils this week will break the school and Pac-10 record for longest winning streak. The Trojans won 25 straight from 1931-33.

"I didn't even know it," USC coach Pete Carroll said. "Those things are great, but just winning this football game is way more important."

Of the six games matching unbeatens, only one features two ranked teams: No. 5 Florida (4-0) is at No. 15 Alabama (4-0) in the Southeastern Conference's game of the week. The only other time the Gators and Crimson Tide have met with both teams unbeaten was 1964.

The other games feature ranked teams against others trying to prove their perfect records are legit.

No. 23 Iowa State (3-0) is at Nebraska, where the Cornhuskers are 3-0 despite one of the worst offenses in the country.

No. 18 Minnesota (4-0) visits Penn State. The Nittany Lions are 4-0 for the first time since 1999.

Kansas (3-0) plays at No. 16 Texas Tech (3-0). Both teams have much to prove after playing laughable nonconference schedules that included a total of three Division I-AA teams and three Sun Belt Conference members.

No. 3 Virginia Tech (4-0) plays at rival West Virginia (4-0), a series that ends after 33 straight years following Saturday's matchup. The Hokies' move from the Big East to the Atlantic Coast Conference is the reason the series is ending.

Indiana is 3-0 for the first time since 1994. The Hoosiers take a serious set up in competition at No. 17 Wisconsin (4-0).

• Season: 57-18 (straight); 38-29-3 (vs. points).

Idaho professor studies athletes' behavior

By Nicholas K. Geranios
Associated Press writer

MOSCOW — Sharon Stoll knows why the sports page often reads like a police blotter — filled with news of illegal drugs, rapes, beatings and other crimes committed by athletes.

Stoll, a professor at the University of Idaho, has spent her career studying the values and morals of elite athletes, and concluded that a great many jocks are deficient in moral reasoning, which governs honesty, fairness and responsibility.

"In sport we have moved away from honorable behavior," Stoll contends, with more emphasis on winning at all costs and material rewards.

Stoll's conclusions are the result of a 17-year-study during which 72,000 athletes filled out questionnaires designed to measure their moral reasoning abilities.

"The environment of athletics has not been supportive of teaching and modeling moral knowing, moral valuing, and moral action," Stoll's 2004 study found, in part because there are few consequences for immoral behavior in sport.

Stoll operates the Center for Ethical Theory and Honor in Competitive Sports. The center contains the results of tens of thousands of Hahm-Beller Values Choice Inventory tests, developed by Stoll and her colleagues. It measures athletes ranging from junior high to college sports on their moral reasoning.

Jennifer M. Beller of neighboring Washington State University is the measurement specialist for the center, and one of the principle authors of the test.

Stoll's most recent client is the Atlanta Braves baseball team, whose coaching staff will receive a teaching curriculum by next February intended to produce better teamwork, better anger management and a steroid-free environment, Stoll said.

Stoll and her team develop the curriculum and teach it to coaches, who then teach it to their players.

The Braves plan to use the program throughout their minor league system, said Dayn Moore, assistant general manager of the Atlanta team.

The Braves have long had a program to teach good behavior to players, but felt Stoll's proposal was more concrete, Moore said.

Moore said one key area for the Braves is teaching young players to appreciate diversity. Former Braves pitcher John Rocker gained infamy in 1999 for remarks he made in an interview with Sports Illustrated in which he bashed gays, minorities and foreigners.

The Braves also want to impart character traits like learning to deal with failure.

"We want to stress having balance in their lives and making good decisions off the field," Moore said.

While athletes have traditionally scored well for values such as teamwork, loyalty, self-sacrifice and work ethic, they have not done as well in moral values such as honesty, fairness and responsibility.

Stoll works not from an ivory tower but from real life, in a program for Arizona State University, players studied the life of alumnus Pat Tillman, a professional football player who forsook sports to join the U.S. Army after Sept. 11. He died in Afghanistan.

Unfortunately, Stoll doesn't need to look hard to find examples of prominent athletes behaving badly.

Rapes, brawls and drug abuse are in the sports pages daily.

Her research has found that members of male sports teams scored lower in morals than individual sport athletes. The longer they compete in sports, the more morally calloused male athletes become. That also appears to be happening to female athletes in team sports.

Stoll's clients include the U.S. Military Academy at West Point, the U.S. Naval Academy, the U.S. Air Force Academy, the CIA, the American Bar Association, the President's Commission of the NCAA, the National Youth Sport Coach's Association and the National Federation of High School Activities Association.

The first stop is an organization's mission, Stoll said.

"If you say your mission is to win, I can't work with you," Stoll said. "You can be vastly immoral and win."

But if an organization values honesty and respect and responsibility, Stoll can help them find ways to impart those values to athletes. Stoll's courses require a coach to spend about 45 minutes a week passing the information to students. But the time is worth it, she said.

Coaches are especially interested in teaching young people about responsible sex, she said.

Charges of rape have been leveled against football players at the University of Colorado, against basketball star Kobe Bryant, and many, many lower-profile athletes in recent years. Unplanned pregnancy and out-of-wedlock children also pose problems.

She instructs male athletes to treat women the way they would want their sister to be treated. Athletes are also taught how to properly deal with women who are offering themselves for sex.

"We want to develop young men to be decent human beings," she said. "Many of these young people have no sense of what is acceptable behavior."

Stoll is a partner in a company called Winning With Character with Bobby Lankford, who is the assistant coach for character and leadership for the University of Georgia football team. Lankford said Georgia coach Mark Richt is interested in instilling proper values in his players.

The main goal, Lankford said, is to get athletes to consider two questions: Is it honorable? Is it responsible?

"If you can't answer yes to both questions, you better turn and go in another direction," Lankford said

Sports and Ethics

Examples of questions Sharon Stoll of the University of Idaho uses to measure the moral reasoning abilities of athletes. There are no right or wrong answers, and athletes are asked to decide if they strongly agree, agree, are neutral, disagree or strongly disagree with the scenario:

1. During a youth sport football game, an ineligible pass receiver catches a long touchdown pass and scores. The officials fail to determine that the player was ineligible. Because it is the referee's job to detect the ineligible receiver, the player or the coach does not have to declare an ineligible receiver.
2. During a volleyball game, Player A hits the ball over the net. The ball barely grazes off Player B's fingers and lands out of bounds. However, the referee did not see Player B touch the ball. Because the referee is responsible for calling rule violations, Player B is not obligated to report the violation.

Jackson sets the bar low for the Lakers

EL SEGUNDO, Calif. (AP) — Championships have always been the goal for Phil Jackson's teams. Now that he's back with a different Los Angeles Lakers team, it's a matter of simply making the playoffs.

Jackson did his best Wednesday to lower expectations, defining postseason qualification as the goal for a young, rebuilt team coming off a horrible season.

Back as coach of the Lakers following a year off and an unlikely series of events that preceded his return, Jackson talked publicly about a team that barely resembles the one he left after the 2004 NBA Finals.

"I have my hopes as to how we can grow as a basketball club," Jackson said. "It's like baking a cake — you have to put it all together and see how things work out.

"We definitely want to make the playoffs — that's a goal for us. We won't know how far we can go in the playoffs for a long time. To make the playoffs is a goal we think we can accomplish. This is going to be a process. You're not going to see a finished product for a while."

The Lakers leave Monday for training camp in Honolulu, where they'll spend 10 days.

Curry

lower. But because of the liability issues, Curry's high profile, and the value a healthy, motivated big man can command in the NBA marketplace, it's become an expensive, mean-spirited mess.

Besides arguing over medial opinions and the science underpinning DNA testing, both camps have recently invoked the deaths of former Celtics star Reggie Lewis and Loyola Marymount's Hank Gathers. Both suffered from hypertrophic cardiomyopathy when they collapsed and died; what the Bulls and Curry's advisers disagree over is whether he is treading the same path.

"My best guess?" Milstein said. "Eddy shows up at camp, refuses the test, we go to arbitration and the arbitrator tells the Bulls they simply can't compel him. We'll find out soon enough."

That's what scares Jerome Stanley, Lewis' agent. He recalled the ride through Boston with Lewis' family in a limousine on the way to the funeral as one of the toughest things he ever had to do. Stanley said Tuesday he wishes now that DNA testing had been an option.

"I've seen this movie before," he said. "Eddy Curry and his family and his agent do not believe he can drop dead and die. You know what? He can drop dead and die. It goes just like that.

"If I'm the team, let the insurance be your guide," Stanley said. "The insurance won't insure it, that should tell you something. They've got the biggest group of risk managers.

"Now maybe they're wrong," he added. "But if you lose the bet, you don't just lose the player. The player dies."

Jim Litke is a national sports columnist for The Associated Press. Write to him at jlitke@ap.org.

Tide

Croyle has no complaints about the Tide's system, though he does admit spread offenses like Florida's are "fun to watch."

"They're 4-0, we're 4-0. That's all that matters to me," he said. "I'm perfectly happy throwing whatever we throw in a game. Some games we'll throw it 40 times a game, some games we'll throw it 20. As long as we're winning, as long as we're putting up points, I'm not concerned with how many yards I throw for."

Croyle's teammates praise his savvy and his arm strength. Fullback Tim Castille said Croyle isn't likely to "do anything dumb with the football" in tight situations.

"He's a football player," Castille said. "That's the ultimate compliment to me is if somebody says I'm a football player. That just means you do things the right way."

If that's not the ultimate compliment, maybe this assessment of Croyle from offensive coordinator Dave Rader is:

"This is the kind of guy you want in a big game."

Grandview Drive detour announced

TWIN FALLS — Access to the south entrance of Grandview Drive from Pole Line Road in Twin Falls has been closed and will remain so through October during concrete paving work for Stage 1 of the U.S. 93 Twin Falls Alternate Route.

Motorists can reach Grandview Drive by using North College Road and Falls Avenue.

Western Construction of Boise is the contractor for the $18.8 million Stage 1 of the Twin Falls Alternate Route.

CSI warns of scam touting financial aid

TWIN FALLS — At least two College of Southern Idaho students have been called by people claiming to represent companies that will pay their tuition.

The students say the callers asked them to provide their bank account information so the company could transfer money to their account.

Colin Randolph, CSI financial aid director, said CSI would never give student information to an outside company that would be calling students with such offers. He urged students who may be contacted with similar offers to call the police immediately with as much information as they can provide.

CSI maize maze opens for business on Friday

TWIN FALLS — The third annual College of Southern Idaho Corn Maze will be open from 5 to 10 p.m. every day starting Friday through Nov. 5.

The maze is located in a 5.5-acre cornfield across North College Road from CSI's Eldon Evans Expo Center, one of several projects by CSI horticulture students. Students have cut about 1.5 miles of trails through the field and have tilled the maze paths to make for easier and safer walking. The maze will be managed by students in CSI's Horticulture, Judo, Emergency Medical Technician and Equine programs. A small warming fire will be available each evening. Students will sell hot dogs, hot chocolate, hot cider, coffee and water.

Group rates are available if arranged in advance. The maze will be $2 for adults and $1 for children 12 and under. Students who show a school identification card will be admitted for $1. Mondays will be Family Nights at the Corn Maze. Admission will be $5 per family.

To make group arrangements or for more information, contact Dave Kiesig at 732-6431 or at dkiesig@csi.edu.

Disney to talk about college program at CSI

TWIN FALLS — A representative from Walt Disney World will be at the College of Southern Idaho on Monday and Tuesday to talk about the Disney College Program to students and prospective students.

The program, now in its 25th year, provides education and work experience to students year-around. Students live in apartments adjacent to Walt Disney World in Orlando, Fla., while they work and take college-level classes related to the hospitality and resort industries. Courses include communications, hospitality management, experiential learning, human resource management, and organizational leadership. During a one-semester paid internship, students work in attractions, culinary, custodial, food and beverage, hospitality, housekeeping, lifeguarding, merchandise, park greeting, restaurants, recreation and transportation.

The information meetings will be at noon Monday and at 2 p.m. Tuesday in Room 276 of the Taylor Building. Admission is free. All interested students already in college and those who expect to enroll in college in the next year or so are invited.

For more information, contact Betty Giffin, CSI hospitality management professor, at 732-6407 or at bgiffin@csi.edu. Inquiries can also be made to Melissa Alley, a CSI campus representative and student who has completed one of the internships, at alleycam2000@yahoo.com.

Panel discusses coal-fired plant

By Michelle Dunlop
Times-News writer

Public meeting
A public forum on the coal-fired power plant proposed for Jerome County will be at 7 p.m. Friday in the Jerome High School auditorium. Everyone is welcome to attend.

JEROME — Bring questions and an open mind to the public forum this Friday on the proposed coal-fired power plant.

That's the message of the professional teachers' organization putting together an opportunity for Magic Valley residents to listen to facts on the 600-megwatt coal-fired power plant planned for a site northeast of Jerome.

"We just thought it would be of use to everyone to hear both sides about the coal-fired plant," said Lulu Maye Coates, who represents the Theta Chapter of Delta Kappa Gamma.

The teachers' society, which has about 35 members in the area, has invited not only representatives of Sempra Energy, the San Diego-based company proposing the facility, but also local opponents to the coal-fired plant.

Sempra spokeswoman Patty Nance welcomed the chance for company officials to provide facts about the project to residents. Acting under the subsidiary Idaho Valley LLC, Sempra will have two panel members at the forum, Nance said. Douglas G. Smith, who studied environmental health science at Harvard School of Public Health, has more than 25 years of experience with analyzing risks of airborne materials. Bruce McCulloch serves as the manager of project development for Sempra and has worked in the development of power plants — including coal — for 18 years.

Dr. James Irwin and Joe Ruschetti will be on hand as local opponents to the coal-fired plant, Coates said. Irwin is a longtime Jerome resident and physician. Ruschetti, of Twin Falls, has a 30-year career in business, industry and health care.

Each side will have 28 minutes to present facts about the project before fielding written questions from the audience, Coates said. Concluding remarks from the panel members will conclude Friday's forum.

Martin Horejsi

TWIN FALLS – Some people collect Beanie Babies. Martin Horejsi collects meteorites.

An associate professor at Idaho State University in Pocatello, Horejsi first began as a regular rockhound while teaching high school science. He collected various minerals and brought them to class to share with students "so they could see science up close," he said.

But it didn't stop there.

As he graduated to teaching at the college level, his collecting became as specialized as his course offerings.

He once owned more than 1,000 meteorites and meteorite samples. Now he has distilled his collection to his favorite 250, with a focus on meteorites found in Idaho, as well as ones with a human interest story or historical significance.

"There is a meteorite for every war," he said.

He said most people who stumble upon a meteorite know they've found something unusual, but aren't sure what. Horejsi says the one thing almost all meteorites have in common is that they look odd.

"Many look very much like the background rock, except that they might be angular or have funny corners or be pointed," he said. "Or they have large dimples, like thumbprints or the surface of a golf ball."

Meteorites are also usually colored very differently on the inside than on the outside.

Horejsi said meteorites often are found in fields or deserts, where they are easier to spot. Once found, he says, they often end up in a rock garden or on a bookshelf because the owners don't know what they've found.

But, he says, that strange rock could be worth more than gold.

"Collectors purchase them by the gram," he said. "I often spend a few hundred per gram, but sometimes it costs more than a thousand."

Meteorites are older than Earth, and provide needed clues to the beginning of the solar system, he said.

"It's like picking up debris from a construction site when the building finishes," he said. "But there are broken bricks and concrete around. It tells you how the building was made, and maybe even the order it was put together."

The clues provided in meteorites could help explain the beginning of the solar system, he said. Some meteorites contain amino acid - the building blocks of protein and life. Which is more than any Beanie Baby can boast.

Horejsi said he hopes people will take a second look at the weird rock they have in their possession, and maybe even take it to someone to find out if it's a meteorite. And then, maybe start a collection.

Wood River community speaks out

Officials take public comment on fate of airport

By Karma Metzler Fitzgerald
Times-News writer

HAILEY - If decisions were made based on an applause-o-meter, Friedman Memorial Airport would have to move.

Wednesday night's public hearing regarding the airport's fate was for the most part quiet. But when comments were made suggesting the airport move, the audience clapped and cheered.

The hearing was one of the final steps in a two-year process to find a new airport location. Three sites have been proposed, but talk continued Wednesday night about expansion.

Rick Silvia lives in Hailey in a section of the Woodside neighborhood that could be condemned if the airport were to expand.

"It's much safer to move the airport," he told members of the Friedman Memorial Airport Authority, which hosted the meeting. "It's pretty obvious the community doesn't want this airport to expand. As taxpaying citizens, we gotta have a say in where this airport goes, and not just a few people worried about jets flying in tourists to the resort."

At issue is an airport too small to handle the large jets that want to land there. Friedman Manager Rick Baird said the Gulfstream V and the Dell'avilland Dash 8 Q-400 routinely fly into the airport and he has regular requests to land Airbus 319, Boeing 737 and Boeing 757s on the airfield – even though the location is technically not equipped to handle aircraft of that size. However, because Friedman accepts Federal Aviation Administration funding, he cannot turn those aircraft away.

"The community has no ability to limit this demand," Baird said.

In May, a site selection committee recommending putting a new airport in Lincoln County, but that option has brought opposition from the influential tourism industry in Blaine County.

Sun Valley resort officials said the company has never advocated expanding the airport, but they said they want an airport closer than Lincoln County 30 miles away.

"I'm very concerned about how this might affect the needs of the resort community," said Sun Valley Resort Manager Wally Huffman.

Martha Burke, the head of the airport authority, said Wednesday night's meeting was one of a series the board will have before it makes a final decision. Once that decision is made, the FAA will have to study the location to ensure it is suitable.

Karma Fitzgerald covers the airport issue for The Times-News. She can reached at 735-32385 or kfitzgerald@magicvalley.com.

Neighbors appeal CAFO approval

By Renee Wells
For The Times-News

BURLEY - One neighbor's admission that he agrees with the "not in my backyard" philosophy was no surprise to a dairy farmer who faced a county commission appeals board Tuesday night.

Darrell Funk of Murtaugh applied to the Cassia County Planning and Zoning Commission May 20 for dairy and feedlot Confined Animal Feeding Operation (CAFO) permits. But both applications were appealed by his neighbors, who call themselves Milner Concerned Citizens.

Cassia County commissioners held an appeal hearing Tuesday, attended by Funk, his legal counsel and a handful of people opposed to the operation.

Only two of the dissenters spoke to commissioners to assert that both of Funk's applications were incomplete and should, therefore, be thrown out.

Tom Draper of Murtaugh told commissioners Paul Christensen and Clay Handy he does not want a feedlot in his backyard.

Draper contended that because former Zoning Chairman Dee Yeaman was not present during the oral comment period of the zoning hearing, but arrived in time to discuss the issue with his colleagues and vote in favor of the permit, the process was not proper and should therefore negate the permit.

Kenneth Warr, another member of the concerned citizens, told commissioners that gravel pits on Funk's waste management acres are going to result in groundwater contamination.

Funk said although there are gravel pits in the vicinity of his property, there are no gravel pits to his knowledge on any of his waste management acres.

Warr told the commission that the zoning board has approved two dairies and a feedlot in a three-mile area near his home.

"That will (result in) 23,120 animal units in that area," Warr said. "That is 12.3 animal units per acre."

Funk told the commission both his proposed dairy and feedlot were at least four miles from any property belonging to Warr or Draper.

"I am my own nearest neighbor," Funk said. "The topography of the area will move odors to the south, away from these (Warr and Draper) residences."

Funk said sagebrush and dry ground border the property to the west and the landfill sits north of his proposed CAFOs.

"It is six miles to the nearest residence north, so I don't see much of an impact anywhere," Funk said. "We've plowed this ground (in a previous hearing) once, and I just want to be able to run my operation like anyone else would."

Funk's counsel, Rod Williams of Jerome, contended the complaints by Draper and Warr were not pertinent in this appeal hearing. He noted some information used by the Milner Concerned Citizens was gathered from sources out of Treasure Valley.

Warr, in rebuttal, told commissioners where the manure lies makes little difference.

Cancer claims long-time Times-News correspondent

By Terry Smith
Times-News writer

Lorraine Cavener

PAUL - Lorraine Cavener, a longtime correspondent and former staff writer for The Times-News, died Wednesday after a seven-year battle with cancer.

Cavener, 49, lived in Paul but was well-known around the Magic Valley, having covered stories throughout the area. She was a frequent contributor to Ag Weekly, a sister publication of The Times-News.

Cavener continued working until shortly before her death — a story she wrote on potato harvest was published in Ag Weekly on Saturday.

She worked as a full-time reporter in the Mini-Cassia area from 1998-2000 and was a correspondent from 2002 to the present. Cavener wrote hundreds of stories on a wide-range of topics, including farm issues, crime, government, gardens, business, taxes and even cancer.

Times-News news editor Troy Foster, who previously supervised correspondents for the newspaper, said there was no subject she was unwilling to cover.

"She'd take stories I couldn't get other correspondents to take," he said. "Lorraine's byline has been a staple in our newspaper for years," Foster said. "I'll bet half of the people in this part of Idaho have bumped elbows at one time or another with Lorraine."

Former Times-News editor Clark Walworth, now editor of the Casper Star-Tribune, hired Cavener to cover the Mini-Cassia area.

"Lorraine was always cheerful, always compassionate," he said. "No one knew Mini-Cassia better or loved it more."

Lucille Landers

PAUL — Lilah Lucille Wheeler Landers, a 92-year-old Paul resident, died Monday, Sept. 26, 2005, at the Parke View Care & Rehabilitation Center in Burley.

She was born June 5, 1913, in Tucson, Ariz., the daughter of William Clinton and Lilah Exene Feier Wheeler. Lucille attended Berkeley High School, Mills College, Fullerton College and Northrup Aeronautical School of Engineering, all in California. She prided herself in being one of three female engineers in over 800 engineers. She also was an entrepreneur and had a health food store in Westchester, Calif., and she was also a published writer, having written three books. Lucille married Martin Oscar Landers in Hollywood, Calif. She was a member of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. She served in many capacities including being Young Women's President twice, Relief Sake Society President for seven years, served four stake missions and went on a full-time mission to Santa Clara, Calif.

She also taught seminary. Her favorite thing was doing genealogy and has done the work for hundreds of names. She won many "blue ribbons" for her flower arrangements in flower shows. She was an engineer and loved working. In her later years she enjoyed writing to "Letters to the Editor." Her many interests included swimming, sailing, tennis, tailoring, upholstering and drapery making. She loved art, pottery making, classical music, piano playing, writing poetry and was a prolific reader.

Survivors include two sons, Dan (Dorene) Landers of Paul and Martin (Marva) Landers of Apple Valley, Calif.; two daughters, Lilah (Darrold) Myers of Tustin, Calif., and Ardith (John Michael) Freebairn of Las Vegas, Nev.; a sister, Dorothy Turpen of Ashland, Ore.; 22 grandchildren; 22 great-grandchildren; and one great-great-grandchild.

She was preceded in death by her parents; her husband, Martin Oscar Landers; two grandsons, Erik Landers and John Landers Peart Freebairn; and a sister, Helen Edwards.

A funeral will be held at 11 a.m. Friday, Sept. 30, 2005, at The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints Paul Stake Center, 424 W. Ellis in Paul. Burial will be in the Paul Cemetery. Friends may call from 6 to 8 p.m. Thursday at the Payne Mortuary, 221 W. Main St. in Burley, and from 10 to 10:45 a.m. prior to the funeral on Friday at the church.

Lenn Garner

HEYBURN — Lenn M. Garner, an 83-year-old resident of Heyburn, passed away Tuesday, Sept. 27, 2005, at his home with his family at his side.

He was born Aug. 22, 1922, in Blackfoot, Idaho, the son of Charles Leroy and Rye Marine Staples Garner. He married Cherril Rae Berkey on Oct. 7, 1940, in Burley. Their marriage was later solemnized in the Salt Lake LDS Temple.

Lenn was a foreman at the Burley Flour Mill for 28 years, and was involved in various agriculture related businesses. He was a professional dog trainer and competed throughout the Western United States. He loved the outdoors and enjoyed camping, hunting, fishing and horsemanship.

Lenn was an active member of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. He served faithfully in various callings including the Stake High Council, two bishoprics and was a dedicated Boy Scout Leader.

He loved his family and his greatest joy was quality time spent with them.

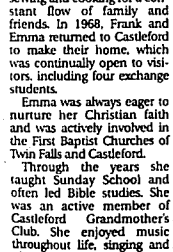
He is survived by his loving wife of 65 years, Cherril of Heyburn; his children, Sandra Stimpson of Nampa, Ivan (Julie) Garner and Janine Miller, both of Burley and Cosette (Michael) Rasmussen of Nampa; one sister, Rosalie Garner of Mount Shasta, Calif.; 20 grandchildren; 59 great-grandchildren; four step grandchildren; and 14 step great-grandchildren.

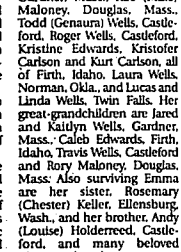
He was preceded in death by his parents; four brothers; one sister; three half-brothers; four half-sisters; a son-in-law, Donny Stimpson; a grandson, Teague Rasmussen; and one great-granddaughter, Bethany Svedin.

The funeral will be held at 11 a.m. Friday, Sept. 30, 2005, at the Paul 3rd and 4th Ward Chapel of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, 300 S. 500 W., Paul, with Bishop Kay Catmull officiating. Burial will be in the Paul Cemetery with military rites provided by local veterans. Friends may call from 6 until 8 p.m. Thursday at Rasmussen Funeral Home, 1350 E. 16th St., Burley, and from 10 until 10:45 a.m. Friday at the church.

The family expresses their appreciation to Dr. Michael Klett and the staff at IHC Hospice for the tender care and concern given to Lenn, making his last days more comfortable. Their service was simply wonderful.

Emma Jane Wells





CASTLEFORD — Emma Jane Wells, 89, of Castleford, peacefully went home to her Lord on Monday, Sept. 26, 2005.

She was born Aug. 17, 1916, at Teakean, Idaho, to Louis and Margret Holderreed, the third of six children. The family lived in the Teakean and Potlatch communities of Northern Idaho before moving to Burlington, Wash., and finally settling in Oakville, Wash. Emma graduated as valedictorian from Oakville High School in 1934 and continued her education at Linfield College in McMinnville, Ore., earning her bachelor's degree in 1938. It was there that she met the love of her life, Frank Wells.

After graduation, she embarked on her lifetime passion as a teacher at Gates, Ore., followed by a memorable year teaching high school on the Indian Reservation at Siletz, Ore.

On Aug. 10, 1940, she and Frank were married at Oakville, Wash.

They continued their studies at the Berkley Baptist Divinity School that summer, but the impending war prevented them from serving as agricultural missionaries in Burma, so they returned to Twin Falls to make their home and start a family.

Emma worked as executive secretary for the Twin Falls YWCA before the family moved to Castleford in 1943. Emma enjoyed being a farm wife, homemaker and mother, raising their four children. In 1949 they bought a farm in Hansen, Idaho. It was there that she returned to the classroom. In the years to follow, Emma fervently continued her passion of learning and sharing knowledge, always encouraging her students, her children and her grandchildren to seek wisdom and never stop learning. She continued to teach in Hansen and later in Twin Falls until retirement in 1981, after 33 years of service in education.

In 1953, the family bought a farm south of Twin Falls and Emma enjoyed gardening, sewing and cooking for a constant flow of family and friends. In 1968, Frank and Emma returned to Castleford to make their home, which was continually open to visitors, including four exchange students.

Emma was always eager to nurture her Christian faith and was actively involved in the First Baptist Churches of Twin Falls and Castleford.

Through the years she taught Sunday School and often led Bible studies. She was an active member of Castleford Grandmother's Club. She enjoyed music throughout life, singing and playing the piano. The beauty of God's world, often seen in her flower garden, inspired her to reach out generously to others.

Frank and Emma enjoyed traveling, whether to the family's grazing areas of Northern Nevada or abroad. They toured Europe, visited Baptist mission stations in El Salvador and Nicaragua, took a cruise through the Panama canal, drove to Alaska and visited China, Japan and India.

Survivors include her husband of 65 years, Frank; her four children, David (Georgia) Wells of Nampa, Jon (Carol) Wells of Castleford, Angela (Ron) Carlson of Firth, Idaho, and Robin (Vivian) Wells of Twin Falls. She is also survived by 10 grandchildren including, Andy (Michelle) Wells, Gardner, Mass., Rae (Mike) Maloney, Douglas, Mass., Todd (Genaura) Wells, Castleford, Roger Wells, Castleford, Kristine Edwards, Kristofer Carlson and Kurt Carlson, all of Firth, Idaho, Laura Wells, Norman, Okla., and Lucas and Linda Wells, Twin Falls. Her great-grandchildren are Jared and Kaitlyn Wells, Gardner, Mass., Caleb Edwards, Firth, Idaho, Travis Wells, Castleford and Rory Maloney, Douglas, Mass. Also surviving Emma are her sister, Rosemary (Chester) Keller, Ellensburg, Wash., and her brother, Andy (Louise) Holderreed, Castleford, and many beloved nieces and nephews.

She was preceded in death by her parents; sister, Elsie Holderreed; brothers, Elzie Holderreed and Francis Holderreed; and great-granddaughter, Katie Marie Edwards.

Viewing and visitation with the family will be held from 4 to 7 p.m. Friday evening at White Mortuary, "Chapel by the Park," Twin Falls. A celebration of Emma's life will be held at 10 a.m. Saturday, Oct. 1, at the Castleford First Baptist Church. Burial will be at 3:30 p.m. at Sunset Memorial Park, Twin Falls.

The family suggests that memorials be made to the Castleford Baptist Church.

Judge recuses himself after evicting stinky defendant

SANDPOINT (AP) — A northern Idaho judge has disqualified himself from hearing nearly 300 civil and criminal cases until a complaint is resolved alleging he wrongfully evicted a man from the Bonner County Courthouse because of the way the man smelled.

First District Judge Steve Verby of Sandpoint voluntarily recused himself from 220 criminal cases and 54 civil cases on his calendar Friday because the lawyers involved in the cases are investigating the complaint against Verby filed by Steven Aver of LaClede.

Aver, who has a long history of acting as his own attorney in a string of legal battles with local officials, said he was confronted by bailiffs and told to leave on Jan. 27. It happened again on Feb. 7, even though he says he had showered and was wearing clean clothes. On Feb. 8, he was allowed to remain in the courthouse after passing what he calls a "smell test."

Courthouse workers say Aver's odor makes them nauseous. He has dogs and has at times smelled of their feces, workers told the Bonner Daily Bee newspaper.

But Aver argues he cannot legally be barred from a public courthouse because of the way he smells.

"That's not something you can remove somebody for," he told the newspaper. "You can't just grab someone and throw them out because they smell."

Verby declined to comment Tuesday on the complaint Avers filed against the judge, which alleges numerous felony and misdemeanor offenses, including false imprisonment, assault, battery, criminal conspiracy and disturbing the peace.

OBITUARIES

George Miroslav Fiala

JEROME — George Miroslav Fiala, 80, of Jerome, passed away Sept. 27, 2005, at his home with his family by his side, after a courageous fight with Amyotrophic Lateral Sclerosis (ALS).

George was born April 11, 1925, in Hansen, Idaho, the son of Miroslav Fiala and Bessie Sirucek Fiala. The family moved to Jerome in 1930 and settled on a farm northeast of Jerome. George attended the Jerome schools and graduated from Jerome High School in May of 1944. He married Donna Kaufman of Wendell on Feb. 4, 1950. They raised four children: Randy, Jim, Helen and Gary. George was a lifelong resident of the Magic Valley.

He was a retired potato farmer who never missed a potato harvest. He enjoyed spending time outdoors fishing and hunting. George was a long-time member of the LDS church and was sealed to his family in the Idaho Falls Temple. He was very active in square dancing, traveling for exhibitions and entertainment.

George was also active in the "Good Sam's" Club serving as the club treasurer. He loved spending time with his family and he will be missed very much.

George is survived by his mother, Bessie Fiala of Jerome; his sister, Evelyn (Kenneth) Lane of Arlington, Wash; his children, Randy (Gwendolyn) Fiala of Loveland, Ohio, Jim (Jackie) Fiala, Helen Fiala and Gary (Heidi Jo) Fiala, all of Jerome. He is also survived by seven grandchildren, Ryan Fiala, Stefanie Byrne, Katie, Amy and Alison Fiala, Annie and Donna Fiala; three great-grandchildren, Alexandria, Derrick and MacKenzie Byrne and many extended family members and friends.

He was preceded in death by his father, Miroslav; his beloved wife, Donna; and his younger brother, Roger.

A graveside service celebrating George's life will be conducted at 11:30 a.m. Saturday, Oct. 1, 2005, at the Jerome Cemetery, West Avenue I, Jerome, with Bishop Andrew Lott officiating. A visitation will be held where family and friends may call from 6 to 8 p.m. Friday evening, Sept. 30, 2005, at Farnsworth Mortuary, 1343 S. Lincoln, Jerome.

Lorraine Sue Cavener

PAUL — Lorraine Sue Cavener, age 49, of Paul, Idaho, passed away Wednesday, Sept. 28, 2005, at the Minidoka County Memorial Hospital, Rupert, Idaho, from complications of cancer.

She was born Dec. 31, 1955, in Anchorage, Alaska, to Harold and Dorothy Cavener. She moved to Paul, Idaho, in 1956 with her parents who homesteaded north of Paul.

She graduated from Minico High School, Rupert, Idaho, in 1974. She graduated from Concordia University, Portland, Ore., in 1983 with a BA Degree in English. She married Arthur Oetting in 1981. They were later divorced. After living in Oregon for about 20 years she returned to Idaho. She was a member of Trinity Lutheran Church in Rupert. At the time of her death she worked as a correspondent for The Twin Falls Times News.

She is survived by her parents, Harold and Dorothy Cavener of Paul; her brother, Alan Cavener, his wife, JoLynne, their sons, Lucas and Levi of Meridian, Idaho; her sister, Marielle Westphal, her husband, Alan, and their children, Evan and Nicole of Boise, Idaho.

A funeral will be held at 2 p.m. Saturday, Oct. 1, 2005, at Trinity Lutheran Church, 909 Eighth St., Rupert, Idaho, with Pastor David Poovey officiating. There will be a viewing from 6 to 8 p.m. Friday evening at the Hansen Mortuary Rupert Chapel, 710 Sixth St., and one hour prior to the service on Saturday. Interment will be at the Paul Cemetery following the service.

County will produce just as much ammonia as cows in the Treasure Valley," he said.

He reiterated his concerns about the cumulative effects of having three large CAFOs in a concentrated area near his home that will cause pathogens, odors and flies with which he and his neighbors should not have to live.

Williams said despite the dissent, there is no proof that CAFO odors, pathogens or flies have caused illnesses in humans.

"Where are the sick people in Jerome County? Maybe I'm one," Williams said. "They never point that out because there simply aren't any."

Commissioners took the information from both hearings Tuesday night under advisement.

County Attorney Al Barrus said the commissioners would spend this week reviewing both Tuesday's testimony and that from previous zoning hearings, and will likely make a decision at their next regular meeting, scheduled for 9 a.m. Tuesday.

Cavener

Dumas said Cavener was a "team player, sending me story tips for other reporters and offering to cover whatever another reporter couldn't get to."

"She had a strong will and a great attitude about her illness — it wasn't going to get her down," Dumas said. "Lorraine did a story on cancer when she had it — that's pretty gutsy, to share something private like that."

The story Dumas mentioned was published in The Times-News on Oct. 26, 1998, shortly after Cavener was diagnosed with cancer.

"Breast cancer has crossed my mind, and like most women, I did worry about it occasionally. But for the most part, I was confident I would not get it," Cavener wrote.

The story continues, showing Cavener's dry wit and sense of humor: "I'm also not scared — upset and scared are two different things. I'm at peace with myself. They say whatever happens is for a reason. There better be a damn good reason for this."

Funeral services will be 2 p.m. Saturday at Trinity Lutheran Church, 909 8th St., Rupert, with Pastor David Poovey officiating. There will be a viewing from 6 to 8 p.m. Friday at the Hansen Mortuary Rupert Chapel, 710 6th St, and one hour prior to the service on Saturday. Interment will be at the Paul Cemetery following the service.

DISASTEROUS ROMANTIC GETAWAY

Palm trees were bent by Hurricane Emily after it roared through the Mexican Yucatan.

Couple runs into hurricane aftermath during honeymoon

Hurricanes often equal disaster. Through the years, names such as Gilbert, Camille, Emily and now, Katrina bring thoughts of devastation and turmoil to many in the U.S. and Mexico.

BUENAS VISTAS
Karla Barnes

Hurricane season runs from July to November in many tropical regions. These catastrophic storms take shape when a low-pressure system meets the water vapors that are evaporating off of a warm ocean surface. Many tourists travel to Mexico and other southern vacation destinations during these months, oblivious to hurricane dangers that can sometimes become a frightening reality.

This summer, Mexico experienced one of these horrific hurricanes. Hurricane Emily, a Category 4 storm, barreled across the Yucatan peninsula, leaving a scar of severe destruction that won't soon be forgotten.

As we prepared for our daughter's wedding, we were frightened to hear rumors and reports of the intensity of Hurricane Emily. It appeared that the route of this horrible hurricane was headed right for our daughter, Holly's and her husband, Joel's soon to be honeymoon destination, the Island of Cozumel. Holly and Joel were so caught up in wedding planning that they didn't give much thought to the storm. They hoped, like all of us, that the people who were caught in the path of Emily would be safe, and that by the time they arrived, a week later, everything would be all right

But Hurricane Emily caused chaos for those who were vacationing on the Yucatan on July 18. This fierce storm slammed the Mayan Riviera, sending thousands of tourists into leaky, crowded shelters as they waited for the storm to weaken. Many Yucatan residents were living in flimsy shelters obliterated by the storm. Tourists and residents experienced extreme devastation from Hurricane Emily.

Crowds gather on a Yucatan beach after Hurricane Emily.

Utility poles were knocked over, trees and roofing strewn in every direction, plate glass windows exploded with severe flooding over much of the Yucatan. Thousands of tourists and residents were displaced.

Fortunately, there was no loss of life, and most tourists resumed their vacations in the midst of temporary turmoil, or opted to return home.

Holly and Joel arrived several days after the eye of the hurricane hit the Yucatan. They were able to catch the ferry from Playa Del Carmen to Cozumel and get settled into their bungalow on the beach. Locals were exasperated from the storm. Many were suffering not only from the results, but from a severe reduction in tourist flow. Construction was under way to quickly get the island up and running. While Holly and Joel were on the island, only a few inconveniences were noticed.

The east side of Cozumel was closed. The ruins could not be accessed, and lots of foliage and palapa roofs were down. Palm trees were roped to one anther in effort to renew their upright appearance. Swamp life, such as alligators, were frequenting populated areas, which according to the locals was an "odd occurrence."

Overall however, the honeymooners had a wonderful time. Holly said it best when she told me, "Being in a different country takes a person out of their comfort zone. It was an eye opener to see the people of Cozumel so happy even after struggling through a hurricane. We were very blessed to have this time together. It was the perfect place to bond. Next time we visit Mexico, I think we will go during the winter to avoid the intense summer heat, and the hurricane season."

Karla Barnes of Burley and her husband are frequent visitors to Mexico.

Hurricanes

By category, wind speeds and damage

Category 1 — 74 to 85 mph — damage.

Category 2 — 96 to 110 mph — minimal tree branches and shrubs.

Category 3 — 111 to 130 mph — mobile homes and poorly constructed buildings.

Category 4 — 131-155 mph — Extreme, outer wall damage, large trees, doors and windows, and mobile homes destroyed.

Category 5 — over 155 mph — Catastrophic and complete roof failure, severe window and door damage on many buildings and destruction.

The Dreamscaper: Cesar Menendez enjoys fruits of his artistic labor

Los Angeles Times

LOURDES COLON, El Salvador — Stepping onto the grounds of his rustic estate, Cesar Menendez is master of all he surveys: the big wooden barn and well-tended gardens; the thriving corn and coffee plants; the horses, fighting cocks and gimlet-eyed guard dogs that patrol his property's perimeter. At one far corner of the yard, a doorway beckons toward Menendez's airy studio, packed floor to ceiling with his paintings and sculptures.

"This is my zone. San Salvador for me doesn't exist," he says, referring to the nation's hectic capital, several miles distant. "Here, I am protected."

Yes — but from what? El Salvador's problems are sadly familiar: crime, crushing poverty and corruption all persist like a low-grade fever years after a brutal civil war ended here. That would explain the high walls and heavy gates surrounding Menendez's home.

But the artist isn't walled off from the phantoms that stalk his mind, the dusky fantasies that alternately seduce and menace his viewers. A Menendez painting can lure you into a shadowy realm of enigmatic symbols and sensual encounters. It can bring you face to face with a grotesque bestiary of truncated horses, glowering dogs, sawed-off torsos. It can plunge you into nightmarish visions of ghostly steam engines and sinister merry-go-rounds. It can make you want to run for your life.

These obscure images emerge, literally, out of pitch darkness. Menendez starts each of his paintings in a similar manner, using a broad brush to swab the canvas with diluted black acrylic paint. He may leave the canvas this way for hours or even days before returning to brood over its visible shadows and chiaroscuro contours.

Vida Latina

Menendez then shuts himself in his studio, sometimes for weeks or months at a time, painting like a madman. Gradually, the demons that have been lurking in the darkness find their way into the finished work.

Many of these figures are recurring characters: circus acrobats, centaurs. Beds make frequent cameo appearances, sometimes tumbling out of giant cyclone funnels.

"Surrealist" and "magic realist" are, not surprisingly, the terms most often affixed by critics to Menendez's work. The artist, fiercely averse to aesthetic labels, disdains both. But he has acknowledged in interviews that he feels a spiritual kinship with the verve of Francis Bacon and the sensual longing of Edward Munch.

Certain of his works also admit his obvious debt to Symbolist painters such as Arnold Bocklin, whose uber-Romantic "Island of the Dead" (1880) inspired Menendez's spooky Stygian homage, "Al Otro Lado de la Isla" (The Other Side of the Island).

Menendez, who grew up in a small village in Sonsonate in the country's western half, still appreciates the intrinsic worth of a well-made thing. He believes that installation art and conceptual art have led to a devaluation of traditional artistic craft, and he takes satisfaction in being able to draw human figures without using a model. "Artists of today say that it's not necessary to know how to draw. Today, what has worth is the idea."

BORDER CITY SLAYINGS

Investigators remove the partially clad body of a woman who was found Tuesday in Ciudad Juarez, Mexico, dumped in a soccer field in this border city infamous for a string of largely unsolved killings against women. The woman, who has not yet been identified, was found near the state prosecutor's office in Ciudad Juarez.

Javier Garcia mixes new and old on tropical music

Associated Press

MIAMI BEACH, Fla. — He wears a black case around his torso looking like a gunslinger, ready to whip out a little four-string ukulele in case a song comes into his head.

Later, he's standing in front of a cafeteria window strumming a new tune as raindrops fall behind him, drawing polite smiles from a lady shoveling pastries to a customer who's probably wondering if he has to pay for this musical display.

All the while, this impromptu strumming and singing is captured on a minidisc recorder.

He is Javier Garcia, modern tropical man.

"It's the climate," says Garcia, who recently spoke with the Associated Press at an outdoor cafe on South Beach. "If it was cold and not as humid, I would probably be doing slower music. Tropical music is daytime music. Happy music."

After arriving in Miami at 16, Garcia has embraced the city, mixing musical styles such as reggae, ska, '70s-style funk, hip-hop and an array of tropical rhythms on his new album, "13," which seems inspired by the city's cultural salad bowl. He even throws in Miami-Cuban street slang and rap, adding a fresh lyrical edge to his music.

His new album provides a blast of tropical rhythms and energy in a tightly produced collaboration with Gustavo Sataolalla, one of Latin rock's most accomplished producers who has worked on albums with Juanes, Molotov and Cafe Tacuba, among others.

Born in Madrid, the 31-year-old Garcia is the youngest of six children from an Irish mother and Cuban father. In his early teens, he was sent to a boarding school in Ireland.

"I was hanging around with the rough kids who would steal motorbikes and smoke hash," Garcia said.

Before he left Spain, one of Garcia's brothers gave him a guitar, and he began to learn the instrument on his own.

"That's when I began to take refuge in music," he said.

Growing up in Europe, Garcia listened to English-language acts such as Journey, Foreigner and Boston. But showing a tendency to explore musically, his first CD was by Terrence Trent D'Arby.

Garcia was "asked to leave" the boarding school and came to Miami to live with his father, a lover of Cuban music's older styles, such as son.

Garcia got hooked on the old tropical masters, such as Beny More and the Fania All-Stars — helping him turn a page in his life.

His new album provides a blast of tropical rhythms and energy in a tightly produced collaboration with Gustavo Sataolalla, one of Latin rock's most accomplished producers who has worked on albums with Juanes, Molotov and Cafe Tacuba, among others.

"13" also features two musicians who add cache and texture to Garcia's music — Cuban-American trumpeter Arturo Sandoval and drummer Abe Laboriel Jr., who's toured with Paul McCartney among other big names.

Lebanon invites FBI into investigation

Presence of U.S. experts might be a signal to Syria

FBI agents collect small debris in front of the wrecked car of political talk show host May Chidiac near the port city of Jounieh in Lebanon on Wednesday. The FBI has joined an investigation into the latest spate of explosions in Lebanon.

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — FBI agents sifted through the debris Wednesday of the latest in a spate of bombings in Lebanon, a move that might unnerve Syria as it comes under stepped-up U.S. pressure to stay out of its neighbor's business.

Until now, Lebanon had shied away from seeking direct U.S. assistance, although federal agents investigated a bombing in June and a U.N. probe is under way in the assassination of former Premier Rafik Hariri.

But the difficulty the government has encountered in identifying those behind the explosions since Hariri's murder in February has led authorities to turn to Washington for help. Not a single arrest has been made in connection with the blasts.

FBI agents picked through metal fragments and lifted fingerprints from the site where a bomb tore through a car Sunday near the port city of Jounieh north of Beirut. The vehicle belonged to May Chidiac, a prominent anchorwoman and talk show host on a television station that has taken a line against Syria. She was maimed in the attack.

Three agents examined the destroyed vehicle. Wearing gloves, one sifted through debris and collected fragments while another shot pictures. A third took notes. Journalists were kept behind a Lebanese police cordon; team members declined to respond to requests for comment.

A black box carried by a team member was marked "explosives unit" and bore the Washington address of the Federal Bureau of Investigation.

Both the Lebanese government and U.S. Ambassador Jeffrey Feltman took pains to explain that the American assistance was merely technical — to provide expertise in evidence-gathering. But it also carried a message to Damascus, the former overlord of Lebanon for nearly three decades.

Syria, which was forced to withdraw its army from Lebanon in April under intense U.S. pressure, has been accused by Washington of continuing to interfere in Lebanese affairs and been warned to stay out.

In Syria, the arrival of the FBI was seen as intervention in Lebanese affairs.

"For sure, they don't like Lebanon that much. They are coming for other reasons, part of which is uncovering the bombings but most importantly to study the situation and to spy on Lebanon," said Elias Murad, editor-in-chief of Syria's state-run Al-Baath newspaper. "This is a direct intervention in Lebanese affairs that is an admission of the weakness of the Lebanese security services."

Syrian officials are reportedly the target of the U.N. probe into Hariri's assassination. The findings, expected in late October, could reach Syrian President Bashar Assad's regime, giving rise to fears of increased violence in Lebanon. Damascus has denied any involvement.

Prime Minister Fuad Saniora has warned of more attacks and drew links between the Hariri probe and the series of bombings, which have largely targeted opponents of Syria and areas where anti-Syrian sentiment runs high.

Interior Minister Hassan Sabei underlined the government's helplessness when he said this week that Lebanon faced a "phantom" intent on destabilizing it.

The issue of any American involvement is sensitive for the Lebanese government. It is opposed by the militant Hezbollah, which Washington brands as a terrorist group, and other pro-Syrian factions, some of whom are in the government.

The attempt to kill Chidiac, who lost an arm and a leg in the explosion, provoked wide indignation in Lebanon. The United States, the European Union and the United Nations joined Lebanese politicians in condemning the bombing, while students staged protests in Beirut.

U.N. investigators returned to Lebanon on Friday after four days of questioning officials in Syria, whose army and intelligence units were in control of Lebanon when a massive bombing targeted Hariri's motorcade on a Beirut street, killing him and 20 others.

Suicide attacker kills nine, wounds 28 in Afghanistan

KABUL, Afghanistan (AP) — A suicide attacker on a motorbike detonated a bomb Wednesday outside an Afghan military training center in Kabul, killing nine soldiers and wounding 28 other people, the Defense Ministry said.

The attacker struck in a parking lot where officers and soldiers of the Afghan National Army were waiting to take minibuses home at about 4 p.m. A purported Taliban spokesman claimed responsibility and threatened more suicide attacks.

It was the deadliest bombing in the Afghan capital in at least a year and breaks 10 days of calm after landmark parliamentary elections. Those polls were relatively peaceful despite Taliban threats of violence.

The U.S.-trained Afghan National Army is a key plank of international efforts to rebuild the country after decades of war and factional strife.

President Hamid Karzai condemned the attack in "the strongest terms" as he ordered an investigation.

The commander of the training center, Gen. Ghulam Saki, said the bomber killed nine army personnel. The 28 people treated in a military hospital included three civilians.

Defense Ministry spokesman Gen. Mohammed Zaher Azimi said the attack appeared to be the work of a suicide bomber. He blamed "international terrorists" but did not elaborate.

Suicide attacks are far less frequent in Afghanistan than in Iraq.

Khail Mohammed, an Afghan soldier who witnessed the attack, said a uniformed man on a motorbike, believed to be the attacker, drove into the parking lot of the Kabul Military Training Center on the Jalalabad Road in the city's eastern section as the buses were preparing to leave.

"I saw the bodies of badly mutilated soldiers and the buses were on fire," he said.

In the aftermath, an Associated Press reporter saw three blackened, badly damaged minibuses, one lying on its side. Investigators examined the blast site under mobile floodlights, while NATO peacekeepers searched nearby woods with flashlights.

NATO troops, U.S. soldiers and Afghan police blocked roads to the area.

In a call to The Associated Press nearly five hours after the attack, purported Taliban spokesman Mullah Latif Hakimi said the bomber was an Afghan Taliban known as Mullah Sardar Mohammed.

Hakimi's account of the attack seemed at odds with witness accounts. He claimed the attacker struck at the headquarters of the Afghan army as foreign instructors were training Afghan cadets.

He said other Taliban fighters were ready to launch suicide attacks on U.S.-led coalition and Afghan government forces.

Information from Hakimi in the past has sometimes proven exaggerated or untrue. Afghan and U.S. military officials say he is believed to speak for factions of the rebel group, though his exact ties to the Taliban leadership cannot be verified.

The Sept. 18 elections were viewed as a key step in the country's transition toward democracy after two decades of war and civil strife, but many outlying areas in the south and east remain prey to Taliban-led insurgents. The capital, patrolled by NATO peacekeepers, is regarded as relatively secure.

For Egypt, a new dilemma rises at Gaza border

Nation grapples with how tough it will police seven-mile strip

RAFAH, Egypt (AP) — Armed with an automatic rifle, the Egyptian guard, Ahmed, took shelter from the scorching sun in the ruins of an old border crossing.

Nearby, a Palestinian teenager from the Gaza side of this poor border town emerged from a bushy trail that stretches across the buffer of clumsy barbed-wire fences and guard posts. The 14-year-old, Salama, sneaked across the porous frontier, hauling a plastic bag.

"They are only jeans — nothing else," he said of the bag's contents. The Egyptian soldier shrugged: "What can I do?" he asked.

This sand-swept and divided town has for years been a trafficking hub, not only for clothes and other goods but also for weapons smuggled into Gaza for militants fighting Israel. For years, that caused Egyptian-Israeli tension.

But now, two weeks after Israel ended its 38-year occupation of the Gaza Strip, Rafah is proving a stark new dilemma for Egypt.

On the one hand, Egypt fears that extremists from Gaza will spill over into its territory, worsening its own extremist problem in the Sinai desert. On the other, it fears a domestic political backlash if it cracks down too hard on Palestinians from Gaza.

Palestinian leader Mahmoud Abbas met with Egyptian President Hosni Mubarak on Wednesday in Cairo to discuss the border issue and the growing chaos in Gaza. Abbas said the militant group, Hamas was partly to blame for the latest bout of violence, and he sought to enlist Egypt's help in halting the deteriorating conditions.

Last week, Abbas said the official Gaza-Egypt border, which Israel closed when it pulled out, would reopen only as part of an international agreement.

Egypt, which has suffered major strikes on its tourist resorts in the Sinai, has a large stake in keeping the radical Islamic groups in Gaza, like Hamas and Islamic Jihad, under control and off its side of the border.

Yet Egypt also is leery of being seen as Gaza's jailer. In the first few days after Israel pulled out of Gaza earlier this month, Egyptian officials allowed a stream of illegal crossings in a goodwill gesture.

"Gaza will not be turned into a big prison, be sure of that," Egyptian Foreign Minister Ahmed Abou el-Gheit said Monday in an interview with Al Arabiya television.

Even now, more than two weeks after the Israeli pullout, a small force of lightly armed Egyptian troops has yet to take up fully its responsibility for policing the 7-mile border line, which stretches from the Mediterranean Sea to the dunes of the Sinai desert.

That has allowed many poverty-stricken Egyptians and Palestinians — like Salama, the 14-year-old who would not tell a reporter his last name — to venture through gaps in the fence, making money by smuggling goods and sometimes people.

Israel sealed off Gaza's main border crossing with Egypt as it was withdrawing its troops from the territory, making legal crossings impossible.

Before the pullout, Egypt agreed to deploy 750 of its poorly trained border guards under an agreement with Israel to secure its side of the frontier and prevent weapons smuggling. In a separate agreement with the Palestinian Authority, Cairo also agreed to help rebuild the fractured Palestinian security forces.

But as the Israelis left, thousands of joyous Palestinians and Egyptians streamed across the border in celebration of the end of Israeli occupation. Most were shopping for cheaper goods or visiting relatives.

Others brought back to Gaza large quantities of arms.

Leo: It may be time to move on

HOROSCOPE
Jeraldine Saunders

IF SEPT. 29 IS YOUR BIRTHDAY: You may have made some important changes in 2005, so the year ahead will be a time when you can settle into routines and rebuild your life just the way you want. December may be a trying month in which you must count your pennies and learn to be more self-reliant. Work hard and do what you are supposed to do, but don't start anything new because the cosmos will present you with rewards in January. Put plans in motion in late January for the best success and you may receive assistance from others that creates a permanent improvement. In February and March, your popularity skyrockets and a new relationship could take shape.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): So many parts of your life are running like well-oiled machinery that it is easy to make time for new friends. Join forces with groups that maintain high standards and seek to improve the world.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Receive your 15 minutes of fame today or tomorrow when you can prove your networking genius. For a few hours today, irritations can ruffle serene feathers if you let them.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Tune in to the mass consciousness. Your best asset is a feel for the common man and knowing what makes things tick. Your inventive creativity can delight the boss or a lover.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Easy does it. Don't let a sense of hurry get under your skin and force you into rash actions. A crucial piece of information can transform your financial outlook or revolutionize your home life.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): If you have outworn your welcome, then maybe it is time to move on. A positive shift in relationship dynamics may be to your advantage. Start key projects that require public approval.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Adopt new directions. Although there may be an atmosphere in play that calls for a sprint to the finish line, it is still a good time to iron out agreements and discuss important matters.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Those under extreme pressure could be short tempered for a few hours. Laugh it off and set your imagination loose. It is a perfect evening to get together with friends and escape from routines.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Make a fresh start. Even if those close lose their temper for a short period or seem rushed, don't let it put you off. Push for recognition and attention where business and career are concerned.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Strangers may turn into friends. A casual acquaintance may share a common background. Your significant other may be tuned into your mood and filled with ideas for fun tonight.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Be spontaneous and do something out of the ordinary. A special someone may be uncooperative and out of sorts for a few hours. By evening you can get back on the same wavelength.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Stand out in the crowd. If free to come and go as you please, you will be happy as a clam. It isn't possible to maintain double standards since others close will demand the same freedom.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): What's good for the goose is good for the gander. Your sparkle can draw others to you. A new hookup may turn into a close friend, but a certain amount of freedom will always be necessary.

Wife's hygiene habits get under man's skin

DEAR ABBY
Jeanne Phillips

DEAR ABBY: I have been married to a wonderful woman, "Leora," for 35 years. We have five grown children any parent would be proud of. Throughout our marriage, I worked while Leora took care of the children. I retired about three months ago. Now I am home with Leora all the time and have just realized that she bathes only about three times a week. This has not only upset me, but also disgusts me!

I know she used to bathe the children every night when they were little, and she insisted they bathe regularly growing up. When I asked her about this, she said she has "always bathed when she needed it," and that might be nightly — or not. She attributes this to being raised on a ranch where water was scarce. Abby, we live quite comfortably. The cost of water is not an issue.

I told her that people have to bathe daily in order to be clean. She asked if I could ever tell she hadn't bathed daily and the answer is no, but I know now, and it bothers me.

Please tell her that people have to bathe daily to remove dead skin cells, etc. She seems to think if I couldn't tell for 35 years that she hasn't bathed every day the topic is not an issue. It's getting to the point that I don't want to sleep in the same bed with her knowing she hasn't bathed that day.

— SEPARATE BEDROOMS IN THE FUTURE

DEAR SEPARATE BEDROOMS: You say you retired three months ago and now you're at home with your wife "all the time." If ever I heard about someone who needed to get out and find a hobby, do volunteer work or start a new business, it is you. For the sake of your marriage, please stop obsessing about your wife's hygiene.

For people with oily skin, or in professions where their skin becomes sweaty or soiled, a daily bath is a must. However, for people with dry or delicate skin, a sponge bath may do the job very well. If you haven't noticed until now that your wife didn't bathe every day, it's time for you to ask yourself why you are digging for trouble. At the rate you're going, you could wind up with more than separate bedrooms.

DEAR ABBY: My fiance, "John," wears women's underwear and hose. He likes it, and I realize it doesn't mean he's gay. That's not the problem.

His ex-wife, "Anita," insists on starting conversations with me about it, preferably within earshot of others. She asked, in front of their attorneys after a recent court hearing, if I "liked" the fact that John wears women's silk panties! (She owes child support and doesn't feel a need to pay it.)

I realize Anita is doing this to embarrass John and me, and I don't know what to do when she starts these "conversations." I've never met anyone so cynical, defensive, verbally abusive and in need of counseling. She's also an alcoholic in denial, but she doesn't have to be drunk to start these conversations. This is one of the reasons Anita doesn't have custody of their minor children.

I have tried ignoring her, but she'll stand there and talk to the back of my head, and the comments get increasingly personal and intrusive. How can I stop Anita in her tracks?

— EMBARRASSED IN PENNSYLVANIA

DEAR EMBARRASSED: One way to stop her would be to turn around, look her in the eye and say, "Anita, I know you are bitter and angry, but the kind of underwear he chooses is up to him and is longer your business. So knock it off." And then smile.

DEAR ABBY: I'll be brief. Can a person get a sexually transmitted disease from oral sex?

— NEEDS TO KNOW IN ORANGE COUNTY

DEAR NEEDS TO KNOW: Yes, and that is why it is so important to know the person and his or her health status before beginning a sexual relationship.

In the feline family, only the cheetah runs down its prey

DEAR ABBY
Jeanne Phillips

In cats, it's only the cheetah that runs down its prey. Other felines use the good old stalk-and-pounce method.

This day in history: On Sept. 29, 1915, scientists routed a transcontinental radio telephone call from New York City to Mare Island in San Francisco Bay — and then, later that night, to Honolulu, sparking the public imagination and inspiring popular songs like "Hello, Frisco, Hello!" ("Please, long distance. Do connect me. Get her on the telephone. Hello, Frisco, hello.")

The Dutch game of Kolven — played on any hard surface — has the distinction of being the first golf-like game European colonists played in the New World. It was also the first to be banned. A 1659 ordinance of Fort Orange, N.Y., forbids "all persons from playing 'het kolven' in the streets."

"Take another ton of rock off Lincoln's nose!" To carve Mount Rushmore, artist John Gutzon Borglum stood at a distance giving instructions over a walkie-talkie to the guys on the mountain with jackhammers.

What happens when you mix two incompatible blood types? In a beaker you can see the blood turn into globs of red, swimming in a pool of yellow liquid. You can see why in a person. It would bring on sudden death.

When the word "nice" found its way from Latin to English back in the late 13th century, it meant "foolish" or "ignorant." It took a few centuries before it evolved to mean something good.

According to studies reported in the AMA Journal, elderly men were among the top 25 percent of consumers of dark green and yellow vegetables and had a rate of heart disease 43 percent lower than those in the bottom 25 percent. They also had a 70 percent lower rate of cancer.

The top 20 percent of Manhattan society has incomes 52 times higher than the bottom 20 percent. Put another way, for every dollar earned by the top 20 percent, the bottom 20 percent made less than 2 cents. Back in 1980, the income advantage was "only" 21 times higher.

One study has it that the average item of food on your dinner plate has traveled about 1,600 miles to get there.

Ricky Gervais steps forward in the HBO comedy 'Extras'

NEW YORK (AP) — Ricky Gervais is fascinated by how a camera can skew the flow of ordinary life.

On "The Office," his hilarious British "mockumentary" series, he explored the effect of a film crew on David Brent, the fame-lusting office manager, who clowns it up as cameras occupy his dreary workplace for a TV reality show.

Now, on his new comedy "Extras," Gervais has turned his attention to actor manque Andy Millman and the show-biz obscurity of being an extra. Portrayed by Gervais (who also played Brent), Andy is what is called "background talent." His workdays are spent on London film shoots helping fill the frame with his unnoted presence — and laboring to justify his marginal status.

Extras, as Gervais explains, "are just bodies. They're pushed in and told where to stand. It's like hanging drapes." He chortles with delight. "We try to show how Andy is desperate for respect."

On the next episode (10:30 p.m. EDT Sunday on HBO) Andy's role is that of a nameless prisoner in a film about modern-day genocide directed by, of all people, Ben Stiller.

At first glance, "Extras" may seem overly similar to "The Office." But first impressions can deceive.

"Brent was essentially an idiot who wasn't that bad but just wanted to be popular," says Gervais, "whereas Andy has a different theme: The world owes him a living."

David Brent was a doughy bloke with a goatee and a cajoling grin. Andy Millman shares that gift of glib, often loutish, gab. But he has lost the foppish goatee and gained a measure of unrealized ambition. He craves stardom, and thinks he's entitled. Comparing Robert De Niro to himself, he thinks: not better, just luckier.

In short, he's ripe to be taken down a few pegs, and is, with regularity.

"He was born smart, and he can't let it go," says Gervais. "He'd rather make a joke than listen. He's clever, but he hasn't applied it as well as some other people."

Making matters even worse, Andy has a conscience. For instance, he just can't bring himself to fire that pitiable agent.

Preparing to move Andy forward for a second season of six more episodes, Gervais remains fascinated by fame and how so many people chase it. But he disavows his own.

"It's the one thing I actively don't like: just being recognized," says Gervais, a 44-year-old chap who, casually dressed for this interview in slacks and sports shirt (shirttail out), gives the strong impression he is on no star trip.

Woman suicide bomber kills six in Iraq

Insurgents may have exploited a cultural boundary

BAGHDAD, Iraq (AP) — The woman slipped into the town, passing checkpoints where women are not searched. Then, donning a man's "dishdasha" — a traditional white robe — and kaffiya headscarf, she blended in with the men waiting in line to join the Iraqi army.

She then set off the explosives strapped to her body, killing six would be recruits and wounding 35 — and sparking worries over a potentially dangerous new insurgent tactic.

The attack Wednesday in the northern town of Tal Afar, near the Syrian border 260 miles northwest of Baghdad, was the first successfully carried out by a female suicide bomber since Iraq's bloody insurgency began.

The move exploits a hole in security that is tough to fill, especially ahead of an upcoming referendum on the country's new constitution, in which men and women are expected to be lining up at the polls. Iraqi officials on Wednesday worried about having to step up searches of women at the numerous checkpoints that guard facilities across Iraq — a process that requires extra resources and irritates cultural sensitivities.

Gen. Ahmed Mohammed Khalaf, the regional police chief, said insurgents likely sent a woman from outside the area to carry out the attack because women are rarely searched at checkpoints entering Tal Afar "because of religious and social traditions." Islamic customs frown on such close physical contact by men with women, so female personnel — who are few — must carry out any searches.

The Tal Afar attack also appeared aimed at showing that militants could still strike in a town where U.S. and Iraqi offensives drove out insurgents only two weeks before.

Iraq's most notorious insurgent group, al-Qaida in Iraq, claimed responsibility for the attack in an Internet statement, saying it was carried out by a "blessed sister."

The bombing came a day after U.S. and Iraqi officials announced their forces killed the second-in-command of al-Qaida in Iraq, Abdullah Abu Azzam, in a raid in Baghdad over the weekend. The killing has not slowed insurgent violence, with at least 84 people — including seven U.S. service members — killed in attacks since Sunday.

President Bush warned violence will increase in the days leading up to the Oct. 15 referendum. The draft constitution that the U.S. hopes will be approved has sharply divided Iraq's Shiite Muslim majority and Sunni minority, who form the backbone of the insurgency.

"We can expect they'll do everything in their power to try to stop the march of freedom," Bush said. "And our troops are ready for it."

The U.S. military announced Wednesday that two more American soldiers and an airman were killed in violence and a Marine was killed by a noncombat gunshot. The deaths brought to 1,922 the number of U.S. service members who have died since the Iraq war started in March 2003, according to an Associated Press count.

In the holy city of Najaf, south of Baghdad, an attacker set off an explosion in the home of a bodyguard of radical Shiite cleric Moqtada al-Sadr on Wednesday, killing two people and wounding five, al-Sadr aides and a hospital official said.

In the attack at the Tal Afar army recruitment center, the female suicide bomber disguised herself in a traditional clothes worn only by men to stand in the line of Iraqi applicants, Maj. Jamil Mohammed Saleh said.

She detonated explosives packed with metal balls and hidden under her clothes, Saleh said.

In a photo of the attacker's head taken by Saleh and shown to AP, the woman appeared to be in her early 20s with dark eyes, light skin and brownish hair. Saleh said it was not known whether she was Iraqi.

U.S. and Iraqi troops swept through Tal Afar in a Sept. 8-12 offensive, with Iraqi authorities claiming nearly 200 suspected militants were killed and 315 captured, though many of the insurgents in the town escaped. Since then the bulk of the forces participating in the offensive withdrew, though a U.S. base remains.

Though it was the first known successful attack, it was not the first attempt by a woman to carry out a suicide bombing.

In March, four women, reportedly sent by the insurgent group Islamic Army in Iraq, were caught in a town south of the capital before they could set off explosives belts they were wearing. Before the insurgency began, Saddam Hussein's regime is known to have used female suicide bombers at least once: Just before the April 2003 fall of Baghdad, two women detonated their car near the city of Haditha, killing three American soldiers.

Big game hunters have good reason to hope for success in the Magic Valley region this fall. The Idaho Department of Fish and Game's Randy Smith reports that the combination of "incredible habitat and excellent yearling survival" should result in quality hunting area-wide.

Abundant spring rains produced a flush of vegetation that continues to supply a large amount of forage. Optimal nutrition is not only contributing to good body condition for all species, but also to favorable antler growth.

Deer

According to Smith, ongoing fawn mortality studies south of Snake River indicate "the best survival rates that we've seen in the last seven to eight years." That translates into a good crop of two-pointer for this fall's hunters to chase, especially for those with controlled tags drawn in Units 54, 55, and 57.

Unit 56 also benefited from optimum conditions and will contain many deer, but will also likely entertain numerous huhters. Offering an open hunt for the second straight year due to a change in management strategy, the unit will be crowded during its seven-day any-buck hunt and subsequent fourteen days of two-point only harvest.

Units north of the river benefited from ample spring precipitation much like their southern counterparts. The result again is healthy deer, lots of yearlings, and some good sized racks on mature bucks. The liberal doe harvest continues in Unit 45 due to the abundance of wintering deer that migrate from more mountainous terrain to the north.

One major change from last year is a state-wide standardized season for open deer hunts. All these hunts will start on Oct. 10

Please see PLAIN, Page D2

General any weapon mule deer season opens Oct. 10

JEROME – The Idaho Department of Fish and Game has moved the opening date for general deer seasons to Oct. 10. This change was made to standardize season dates across southern Idaho and to provide hunters with the last week of October for hunting.

Closing dates will vary from Oct. 16 to Oct. 31. In the Magic Valley Region, all open general season any-weapon hunts will close on Oct. 31. The only variation on the general-weapon antlered hunt in the Magic Valley Region is in hunting unit 56. Hunters may harvest any buck from Oct. 10 to Oct. 16. From Oct. 17 to Oct. 31, it is a two-point only season.

Be sure to check the hunting regulations for season dates, point rules, weapon and motorized vehicle restrictions for the big game unit you are hunting.

Hunting fitness: Heart and lungs of it all

By Ron Yates
Times-News correspondent

Is your gear ready for the hunting season? New scope, shells, high-tech headlamp, treadmill?

Treadmill?

Sure. The best gear includes a fit body and that three-pound weight between your ears, even your brain, functions better when your heart and lungs are in shape.

Some treadmills even tilt to resemble a more realistic hike. Pack your pack and gun and carry it just as you would afield, this way you will find problems with new gear at home before you go.

No treadmill, you say? Then pack your pack and walk down into the canyon to Centennial Park, turn around, and hike out.

Idaho hunting is diverse. You may be hunting quail two miles out of town for a few hours, camped along the Owyhee River hunting bighorn sheep 55 miles from a paved road for two weeks, or at 10,000 feet hunting mountain goats in 10 inches of snow.

John Turner of Trapper Creek Adventures guides hunters within Unit 54 (South Hills). Turner is able to guide for deer and antelope but most of his clients book hound-hunts for mountain lion.

When asked what he recommends for pre-hunt exercises to his clients, Turner said it's a matter of heart.

"As much cardiovascular conditioning as possible," he suggested. "This could be running, use of a treadmill or stair-machine. Typically hunters book a lion hunt a year in advance and I tell them to get with it and exercise. In the last four seasons only two have been close to being fit."

Turner says the older the client, the more prepared they are. Younger hunters typically think they are "bullet-proof" and able to withstand any terrain.

"Sadly, this can really strain the enjoyment of a hunt and one they pay hard earned money for. I use machines to locate a lion track, and from that point, when we turnout on a good track the commitment stands paramount and there is no turning back."

Turner explains one hunt made last year was especially extreme — almost 20 waking hours. He and his clients started out at 7:30 a.m. and covered 16 miles (liken this distance from Clover almost to Kimberly).

"When it was over at 9:30 p.m.," Turner said. "We still had to pack it all up and drive home. This is rugged hunting but all hunting can become extreme without proper physical conditioning."

Trevor Dowd and his father in-law discovered the body of a dead hunter while hunting in 1998. The man, a seemingly in shape 57-year-old, had camped next to them in the Fish Creek drainage within Unit 49. He was the victim of a heart attack.

Dowd's resonating comment was this, "sure finding the body was a shock but the thing that really moved me was when I led the dead man's three children, who were my age, to the spot where their father had died."

The man had successfully shot a buck three miles from camp and was bringing it out on a deer caddy when his heart failed. His body was a quarter-mile from the deer caddy. The man may have been heading back for help after experiencing chest pains, according to the coroner. Earlier at camp, Trevor and Glenn had offered their help to retrieve the deer but the man thanked them and replied that he could handle the job alone.

Dowd, 34, took this lesson to heart, literally. He begins training for hunting season by running and bicycling two months prior to hunting season. This gets his body ready for the demands of hunting which at times can surprise even the most experienced hunters.

"Jogging in Twin at 4,000 feet is far different from packing hunting gear up even a slight slope two to four feet, or 6,000 feet higher in elevation. That altitude and exertion will humble you quickly. Because I'm fit, hunting is more enjoyable."

In a sport where your ethics are the referee, you are also responsible for your own well-being and, at times, the safety of others. Placing physical conditioning at the top of your to do list before you hunt is sensible.

One more thought. before you squeeze the trigger; just how far is it to the truck?

OUTDOORS

Youth pheasant hunt to start

JEROME — Youth hunters between the ages of 10 to 15 can have an early shot at a pheasant by participating in the youth pheasant hunt on October 1, 2.

The rules for the youth hunt are simple. The hunters must have a valid hunting license and be accompanied by an adult 18 years old or older while hunting. The season opens at noon on Oct. 1.

The goal of the youth pheasant hunt is to give youths an opportunity to hunt pheasants before they are disturbed by hunters during the general season. It's a great opportunity to get them out hunting without the pressures surrounding the general opener. One adult may accompany more than one youth hunter.

Outdoors in brief

To help the youth, the Idaho Department of Fish and Game will release 50 pheasants at the Niagara Springs Wildlife Management Area (WMA) north of Buhl along the Snake River.

Bag limits remain the same as the general season. The daily limit is three cocks, and the possession limit after the first day is six. At WMAs where pheasants are stocked, the bag limits are two cocks and four after the first day.

Hunters opting to hunt on private land are reminded to ask first before hunting.

Sportsman's Warehouse teaches steelhead clinic

TWIN FALLS — The fishing desk of Sportsman's Warehouse will host a seminar on steelhead fishing on Wednesday, Oct. 5 from 6 p.m. to 8 p.m. The clinic will be taught by Jeff Duncan. For more information call 737-9900, Ext. 2.

Twin Falls Rec. offers several activities

TWIN FALLS — Summer may be gone, but the Twin Falls Recreation Department still has classes to help individuals enjoy the weather with these outdoor activities:

• Discover the joys of Scuba Diving in a one-day class scheduled for Oct. 1 and Oct. 29. The fee is $15.

• Relax and enjoy the beautiful colors of fall on a Pontoon Boat Trip from Centennial park to Pillar Falls. Trips are planned for Oct. 7 and Oct. 15. Cost is $15.

• Visit Box Canyon and Blue Heart Springs with a Paddling Adventure on a seven-mile canoe trip from Banbury Hot Springs to Sligar's Resort. Events will be held Oct. 8 and Oct. 22. The fee is $25.

• Enjoy scenic Idaho with a 10-mile Rafting Trip along the Hagerman section of the Snake River on Oct. 8. Cost is $40, which includes equipment and shuttle transportation.

Registration should be done 24 hours before the event. For more information or to register, call 736-2265.

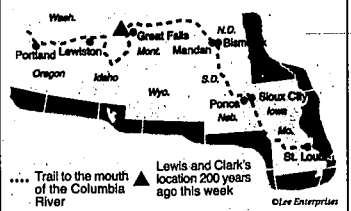
'Capt Lewis verry sick'

THE LEWIS & CLARK JOURNALS

Nearly everyone in the Corps of Discovery was ill. It was up to Captain William Clark to act in the role of physician. He liberally prescribed Rush's pills, otherwise known as "Thunderclappers." They were made of calomel, a mixture of mercury and chlorine, and jalap, the root of a Mexican plant used as a purgative.



September 25, 1805 – a verry hot day most of the Party Complaining and 2 of our hunters left here on the 22nd verry Sick they had killed only two Bucks in my absence.... when I arrived at Camp found Capt Lewis verry sick, Several men also verry sick, I gave Some Salts & Tarter emetic, we determined to go to where the best timbr was and there form a Camp.

– William Clark

September 27, 1805 – all the men able to work comened building 5 Canoes, Several taken Sick at work, our hunters returned Sick without meet....

– William Clark

October 1, 1805 – All the men are now able to work; but the greater number are very weak. To save them from hard labour, we have adopted ... burning out the canoes.

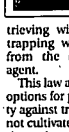
Landowners can take action on trespassers



ASK THE OFFICER
Gary Hompland

Question: "I've had tremendous problems with hunting trespass and damage from hunters. How do I legally post my property to successfully prosecute hunters on my property without my permission?"

Answer: It's unfortunate you've had to deal with problems and damage from unethical hunters. This behavior does not need to be tolerated by landowners and should not be tolerated by sportsmen and women. It's not difficult to understand why some landowners no longer allow hunters access to or through their private property.

There are two Idaho laws that deal with hunting trespass. The first law (I.C. 36-1602) says it is unlawful to "hunt with a dog or weapon upon lands of another that is cultivated, posted, or enclosed by fences sufficient to show the boundaries without first obtaining permission from the owner, occupant, or his agent."

The second law (I.C. 36-1603) is more specific about what activities are prohibited on lands cultivated or posted "no trespassing." Activities covered in this law include hunting, retrieving wildlife, fishing and trapping without permission from the landowner or his agent.

This law also provides several options for posting real property against trespass if the land is not cultivated. "No trespassing" signs, signs of like meaning, or 100 square inches of fluorescent orange paint on posts surrounding the property or in conspicuous places near the boundary at intervals of one notice per 660 feet are required to identify private property. If metal fence posts are used to identify the property boundary the entire metal post must be painted with fluorescent orange paint.

A violation of these trespass laws is a misdemeanor. At the discretion of the court the magistrate may impose penalties including a fine of $25 to $1000, 6 months incarceration in the county jail, and up to 3 years license revocation. Conviction of trespassing to hunt, fish or trap in violation of no trespassing signs (36-1603 IC) results in a mandatory one year license revocation. In addition, subjects convicted of violating these laws shall be responsible to the landowner for all damages.

Landowners wishing to prosecute trespassers must be willing and able to identify the trespassers. Landowners can assist investigators by collecting as much information about the identity of the trespassers as possible. Photographs, video, or detailed descriptions of the trespassers and their vehicles, including license plate numbers, is critical to successfully prosecuting a trespass.

Landowners interested in maintaining some controlled or restricted public access for hunting or fishing may be interested in the Department's "Access Yes" program. The "Access Yes" program allows some landowners to receive financial compensation for allowing public access onto or through private land.

Landowners apply for the "Access Yes" program by submitting proposals to allow public access through or onto private property for a fee paid to the landowner. The proposal to the Department outlines the landowner's access restrictions. A sportsmen's advisory group reviews the landowner proposals and makes a recommendation to the department based on their opinion of the most beneficial access to the sporting public.

This program is funded by the sale of chances for superhunt big game tags. For more information about the "Access Yes" program contact your nearest regional office. For help with trespassing, landowners can call either their local sheriff's office or their nearest Fish and Game regional office for law enforcement assistance.

Plain

and run through the Oct. 30. This change restricts hunters from moving out of one unit as it closes and into another that is still open. It also addresses the desire to hunt later in the month rather than earlier, when often dry, warm weather dominates.

Elk

Due to poor flying conditions, the department was unable to make aerial surveys of elk herds in Units 44, 48, and 49. While unable to obtain firm numbers to establish population trends and compare to previous bull, cow, and calf ratios, ground observations indicated good calf survival. Again, this desired recruitment into the population, combined with an optimum spring and abundant forage, should bode well for this fall's hunters.

For hunters that failed to draw a controlled permit or didn't partake in the early archery hunts, all is not lost. Several any-weapon open spike hunts run for several days in early November.

South of the Snake River, elk that were planted in Elko County nearly 15 years ago are spreading across the bottom of the state. Smith reported that during the South Hills hunt last year, the 15 bulls taken were all six-pointers or better. While only a few hunters can again pursue members of this herd, anyone frequenting the hills has a chance at a sight that only a short time ago was nearly impossible.

Other news

Off-road travel restrictions remain in place for Units 45, 47, 48, 49, 52, 53, and 56. The attempt to keep hunters on designated trails and roads is helping reduce conflict between those hunters favoring motorized access and those who don't. In addition, the restrictions have increased the amount of escape cover available for many animals.

After the hunt is over, sportsmen are encouraged to return their mandatory harvest reports. The department not only relies heavily on the data to help formulate future management plans, but uses the feedback as a barometer to measure hunter satisfaction.

Finally, hunters are being reminded to pick up tags and licenses early to avoid that last-minute rush that always slows and sometimes crashes the state-wide computer system. And Smith encourages anyone with questions about their specific unit or species to visit the department's Jerome office or call 324-4359.

Fickle Klickitat running heavy with fish and anglers

By Rich Landers
Spokesman-Review

KLICKITAT, Wash. — Like blood pumping from a giant heart, the year's last pulses of steelhead and salmon are spreading from the Columbia River and into tributaries. The fish are running in every direction, and so are the anglers.

The game of catching this bounty making its way inland from the ocean can be made even more fun, if not more exhausting, by trying to outrun the competition which brings more than a few anglers, such as Carmen Macdonald, to Washington's Klickitat River.

Macdonald is a Portland advertising agency associate who manages accounts for Lamiglas Rods and other fishing product companies because he prefers to keep the gap between work and fishing as narrow as possible.

He handles fishing gear like a pro and he can catch steelhead anywhere they are willing to be caught, and probably in a lot of places where the fish are not willing.

When catching fish isn't challenging enough, Macdonald is one of those guys who'll ante up and take a gamble on the Klick in mid-September.

"It's just far enough away from cities like Portland and Seattle to where a lot of fishermen don't like to take chances with the water conditions," he said. "But anybody who's fished here much knows that if you hit it right, the fishing can be very good."

As it was recently.

The Klickitat free-flows roughly 100 miles from its source in the glaciers of Mount Adams to the Columbia near the town of Lyle. For most of the year, the river provides no attraction to anglers. The steelhead are gone and the season is closed during winter. When the season opens June 1, the weather gods barely have to sneeze on the volcano's snowy slopes to turn the river off-color.

> "We never got around to salmon the other day. We hooked eight steelhead and landed seven, all on jigs."
> – Carmen Macdonald, angler

Yet June is considered one of the prime months to fish for fresh summer steelhead heading into the river.

You simply have to take your chances on the rain.

Hot weather is the angler's nemesis in July and into September, when the sun bears down on the mountain's ice and fills the Klickitat with glacial flour.

But sometime in September, the river will gradually become more accommodating. Just about the time chinook salmon are joining the steelhead en route to spawning grounds.

Macdonald came to the river this month ready for anything. He had steelhead rods rigged to drift salmon eggs and others rigged to fish pink jigs under slip bobbers, plus some stouter rods rigged for plugging in the deeper, swifter holes that hold salmon.

"We never got around to salmon the other day," he said. "We hooked eight steelhead and landed seven, all on jigs."

And one was a hot 16-pounder that was enough to hang his hat on for the week.

The next day was a bust, nothing out of the ordinary for a steelheader.

The third day, his party of two had caught and released two wild steelhead by 1 p.m.

"But look at this," he said on a pleasant September afternoon. "We're practically the only ones here. That's worth something."

The Klickitat has several personalities as it tumbles from Mount Adams, and most of them are downright scary to drift boat anglers.

The lower river narrows into a gorge of basalt walls. Tough anglers backpack their gear into the gorge and find some good fishing. Only a nut case would go in a boat in most conditions.

The upper Klickitat from Summit Creek to "The Slide" a boat launch that's almost a vertical drop from the highway just upstream from the town of Klickitat has numerous good fishing runs. Crowd-shy anglers might consider the minefields of boulders and the occasional logjam to be a bonus, considering that they scare away anyone with weak skills at the oars.

"There's no road access to most of the upper, so there aren't as many anglers," Macdonald said.

But when the river came into a good mood at midweek in mid-September, even the midsection of river along State Highway 142 north and south of Klickitat was virtually angler-free.

"When the river's right in October and November, the fly fishers come out in force and it won't be nearly so lonely up here," he said.

Tips for a successful hunt

Pull on your boots, grab those binoculars

By Jeffery P. Mayor
The News Tribune

TACOMA, Wash. — Here are 10 tips some hunting experts offered to make sure your scouting trip proves worthwhile:

1. PACK YOUR GEAR.

While a pair of sharp eyeballs is mandatory, don't rely solely on them. Most hunters will take along a pair of binoculars to expand their search area. Some will even pack a spotting scope.

John Dahll, an archery salesman at Sportco in Fife, Wash., prefers binoculars between eight and 10 power for checking hillsides for deer or elk.

"When I'm scouting, I do a lot of glassing, I have a pair of eight-power myself. It's softer on the eyes. If they're too strong, it can hurt your eyes after a while," he said.

2. GET OUT OF YOUR TRUCK.

The mistake many hunters make is not getting out of the vehicle. Hyder said a hunter should find topographic maps and maps of the game management unit where the hunt will take place.

"Go into those units, get out of the vehicle, and do some hoofing," was the advice of Doug Hyder, owner of Great Northwest Archery in Puyallup. "A lot of guys don't get away from the truck."

Al Prante, president of the Narrows Strut Busters chapter of the National Wild Turkey Federation, echoes that advice.

"Most animals will stay away from roads or other high-traffic areas, so just driving up and down roads will not get the job done," he said. "Get into the woods and use all the skills of woodsmanship and stealth to slip in and out of the areas frequented by the animals."

It's important, Prante said, not to leave any trace of your presence that could alarm the animals and change their patterns.

3. FIND THE WATER.

A good place to focus your scouting efforts is on water sources, especially after a dry summer like this year. "Look for water. Critters got to have water, so if you find water, you'll find animals," said Hyder.

4. WORK INTO THE WIND.

When you are out scouting, don't forget some of the basic principles of hunting.

"Your main enemy out there is the wind. You have to work the wind in your favor," Hyder said.

"Remember that the animals' senses of smell, sight and hearing are greater than ours," Prante added. "Scout with the wind in your face or at least crosswise to you. Spot him or his movement before he spots you and your movement by moving slow and deliberate, pausing and scouting new terrain as it opens before you and using land features or vegetation to conceal your movement."

5. KEEP YOUR HEAD DOWN.

Jim Williams bow hunts for elk in Idaho, hunts elk in southwest Washington with a muzzle loader and hunts deer in Eastern Washington with a rifle.

"What I'm mainly looking for is tracks and droppings," the Puyallup hunter said. "If you're going to hunt, you want to see animals. And you're not going to see animals if you don't see any tracks."

As for droppings, Williams said that when he scouts elk he looks for fall droppings.

"Summer droppings are softer and not the little round pellets, in the fall, they're firmer. You want to see the fall droppings," he said.

Prante agreed: "All game animals leave traces of evidence behind when they are inhabiting an area. Look for their droppings, their tracks and trails, their beds and other signs that will paint a picture of the animals activities in an area."

6. CHECK THE CLEAR CUTS.

Both Williams and Prante said they scout game in clear cuts.

"Like us, they don't want to go through the thick stuff unless they have to," Prante said.

Turkeys, Prante said, eat mostly insects as adults.

"Those bugs are usually found along forest edges. They also like to stay close to places where they can make a quick escape if they have to," he said.

Williams said he also walks in about five yards from the edge to find game trails.

7. THINK AHEAD.

Williams uses scouting trips to prepare a place to hunt, especially if he will be using his bow.

"I carry gloves and a folding saw in my backpack, so I can clean up a spot to make sure I will have a clean shot," he said. "I know now that I can walk up to that place in the afternoon and have a spot to shoot from."

He also uses his scouting trips as a chance to meet landowners and ask permission to hunt later, when the season opens.

8. DO DOUBLE DUTY.

Sportco's Dahll recommends taking advantage of some of the seasons that have already opened to increase scouting opportunities. As a bow hunter, he typically starts scouting in August.

"For one, I can go and hunt bear and also check out the areas where I'm going to hunt later," Dahll said.

This month is a good time for gun hunters to scout. Grouse hunting opened Sept. 1.

"If a guy has a deer permit, it's a good time to go ahead and have some fun. They're tasty birds. You also get used to the woods you're going to hunt, and figure out what those animals you're going to hunt are doing," Dahll said.

9. GO AFTER THE SEASON.

Just because the hunting season is over, don't stop heading afield. Dahll said this is a good way to find the big bull elk and deer bucks that have survived the season.

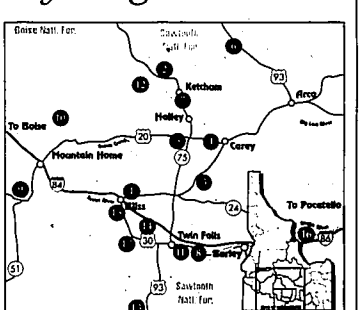
"You don't have the foliage to contend with. You can find rubs, beds and things like that much easier," Dahll said. "With a GPS, you can go back to those areas the next season. If you do it late enough in the year, it's also a good way to find some (antler) sheds."

10. GO ONLINE.

OK, say you can't get out to scout. You can still do a little cyberscouting. Go online to http://wdfw.wa.gov/mapping/gohunt/index.html to access the Washington state Department of Fish and Wildlife's Go Hunt page. The site includes maps of major public lands, including the agency's wildlife areas and water-access sites, as well as topographic maps and aerial photos.

Magic Valley Angler's Guide

The Magic Valley fish report is for the week of Thursday, Sept. 29. Updated conditions from Silver Creek Outfitters and Sportsman's Warehouse are listed for family fishing waters and major rivers in the Magic Valley/Wood River regions. Check Idaho Department of Fish and Game regulations for restrictions.



Malad River: GOOD. Hoppers and midges for best results early in the day; try hoppers as the day warms up.

Big Wood River: EXCELLENT. The Wood is on fire! Red Quills and especially the fall Baetis are turning these fish on. With a combination of prolific hatches and cool nights the Wood River fish are getting gluttonous. Big fish seem to obsess over the little Fall Baetis and will move to the flattest water to find them and eat them one after the next.
October Caddis are out and about and imitations of these, like Orange Stimulators, are good morning and evening choices when the fish are less active.

Little Wood River: FAIR. Parachute hoppers, Mackay special and small PMDs are the best to try.

Silver Creek: GOOD. Luckily anglers don't have to adhere to Copyright laws, or we wouldn't be able to cast beautifully tied imitations of the fall Baetis or eager and aggressive fish down on the Creek. Cloudy days are the best days to witness a huge Baetis emergence and many anglers have had the best days of the season in the last week under these conditions. Sunny days may provide less action with this insect, but the Mahogany Dun makes up for this.

Magic Reservoir: FAIR. Troll small spoons in orange or red or orange California buggers.

Big Lost River: GOOD. The Lost is very low and wade fishing is as easy as it's been all season. A bigger variety of Baetis (sz 16) is the main player for dry fly enthusiasts as well as a late morning / lunch hour Trico spinner fall. These late season Trico rises are common on our two favorite tail waters, the Lost, and the Wood below Magic Reservoir.

Warm Springs/Trail Creek: GOOD.

Milner Dam: GOOD. Catfish are still hitting by bass point, bass fishing is good by the golf course. Use pumpkin seed or watermelon plastics.

C.J. Strike Reservoir: EXCELLENT. Perch are still on fire by cottonwood campground or up the Snake arm; cut bait or small jigs.

South Fork of the Boise. GOOD. Use Pink Alberts or small mahogany duns.

Dierkes Lake: SLOW. Spinner baits for best luck at bass, or small Rapalas for trout.

Dollar/Penny and Lake Creek Lakes: GOOD. These little waters are still fishing and are virtually deserted as well. The ponds still have plenty of stocked fish and a warm day and a bunch of kids are all that is needed to complete the circle of - trout and future trout angler- on all out little waters.

Salmon Falls Creek Reservoir: FAIR. Wedding rings or needle fish for the best trout results, deep diving plugs for walleye.

Clear Lake: SLOW. Same old story as it has been for the past few months, but few big fish still milling around..

Billingsley Creek: FAIR. Using small callibaetis patterns — with a hare's ear dropper — will work best for the brown trout.

Lake Walcott: FAIR. Only open until the end of the month. Use crawpattems for bass or troll spoons for trout.

Hagerman WMA: GOOD.

Bears take stand in hunting incident

By Sam Cook
Knight Ridder News Service

DULUTH, Minn. — When bear hunter Joel Klinke climbed up to his hunting stand recently, he found it already occupied.

By two bears.

"Here's two bears about 10 inches away from me, looking me directly in my eyes," said Klinke, of Cottage Grove, Minn. "One opened his mouth and did this spitting noise. That's when I let go."

Hunting on Sept. 12 near Duluth, Klinke, 35, fell about 10 feet from the 15-foot-high stand, catching himself on one of several 2-by-4s that had been nailed to the tree for climbing purposes.

Klinke's guide, Rob Parrott of Duluth, was over at the bait pile adding more Gummi Bears, candy hearts, sweetbread and potato chips for the evening hunt.

"I hear him yell a death-curdling yell, like he fell out of the tree," Parrott said.

Klinke hit the ground, scrambling to grab his 7mm Winchester short magnum rifle.

"He hit the ground going crazy," Parrott said. "I've never seen a hunter so excited in my life. He said, 'What should I do?' I said, 'Shoot him.'"

The bears both had scurried higher in the twin trees above the permanent stand built on private property. One went up one trunk, another up the other trunk, Klinke said. They both appeared to be 2-year-old bears, said Parrott, who operates Bear Down Guide and Outfitting with Todd Haedrich.

Klinke frantically untangled his rifle from the rope he had planned to use to haul the rifle up to his stand, and then shot the largest bear, about a 125-pounder, Parrott said. The other bear clambered down the tree and scampered off.

Klinke, who was hunting bears for only the second year, said he plans to have his bear mounted.

"I'm going to have them put it in a tree," Klinke said.

Not that he'll have trouble remembering the experience.

"It was awesome," he said. "I've got it videoed in my brain."

Contacted recently, he was going out to the woods again, but with a video camera instead of a rifle.

"My wife says, 'Maybe you want to look up in your stand tonight,'" Klinke said.

Klinke thought he might.

Painted lady butterflies feast in a Colorado Springs, Colo., garden Tuesday. Vast numbers of painted ladies, which look a bit like small monarch butterflies, are fluttering across the West this year.

Migrating butterflies fly across the West

COLORADO SPRINGS, Colo. (AP) — Of course a butterfly bush will attract butterflies, but that didn't prepare gardener Lynette Higgins for the riot of speckled orange, brown and white butterflies that descended on her bush in Monument, Colo., in recent weeks.

"It's beautiful. I have hundreds," she said Tuesday. "They started as a trickle and now they're everywhere. I've heard from other gardeners that their yards are full of them, too."

Vast numbers of the showy painted ladies, which look a bit like small monarch butterflies, are fluttering across the West this year. A population boom was spurred by above-average rainfall in the deserts of the Southwest and northern Mexico.

"This species is an environmental-indicator species. They show that a large area has had good rains that grew ample food plants," said David Marriott, a butterfly specialist in Encinitas, Calif.

Large populations have been spotted from Iowa to Washington. This spring in California, swarms along the freeways were so thick they painted passing windshields with a thick, yellow goo.

Painted ladies winter along the U.S.-Mexico border, then wing north following spring blooms as far as Canada and Alaska.

"By fall, they're skedaddling back to escape the cold weather," Marriott said.

The last notable migration in Colorado was in 1992.

Painted ladies follow the same pattern on the other side of the Atlantic Ocean, wintering in northern Africa and following the thaw north as far as Iceland.

Painted ladies take several generations to make one round trip from Mexico. The fast-growing flutterers grow from egg to caterpillar to frisky butterfly to parent and die in just more than a month.

As summer ends, their offspring flutter south again, led by a scantily understood navigation system passed down in their genes.

Along the Rocky Mountains, many stop to feed in the lush gardens of the Front Range.

"That's what people are seeing now, the butterflies on their way back to Mexico," said Jerry Prisk, an insect expert at the Colorado State University Cooperative Extension.

On Tuesday, dozens of painted ladies could be seen dipping through the air above downtown parks and tilting in the traffic in Colorado Springs.

The miller moth, another winged visitor that tends to concentrate seasonally in Colorado Springs, gave the city a break this year, Prisk said. A cold, wet spring on the eastern plains left only a few moths to thump against area windows and TV screens. The weather didnt seem to faze the butterflies.

"That's fine with me," Higgins said. "The butterflies are a lot prettier than the moths."

Passengers wait to reboard the Cumbres & Toltec Scenic Railroad after a lunch stop in Osier, Colo., Aug. 7. The Cumbres & Toltec, billed as the longest and highest narrow gauge railroad in the country, snakes its way between Antonito, Colo., and Chama, N.M., a 64-mile zigzag back and forth across the state line at elevations reaching 10,000 feet.

Scenic steam railroad becomes popular in fall

OSIER, Colo. (AP) — Trains on the Cumbres & Toltec Scenic Railway start running each year in late May, as soon as snow is cleared from the tracks at Cumbres Pass. But fall — when the aspen trees are a blaze of gold and the Gambel oaks a brilliant red against the dark green mountains — is the most popular time for travel on the scenic railroad.

The cinder-spewing steam train, which meanders at 12 mph through the backcountry, is billed as the longest and highest narrow gauge railroad in the country. The 125-year-old railway runs between Antonito, Colo., and Chama, N.M., a 64-mile zigzag back and forth across the state line at elevations reaching 10,000 feet.

The route includes trestles and tunnels, switchbacks and curves, and stunning views of the Toltec Gorge from 600 feet above the river that helped carve it, the Rio de los Pinos.

Everyone has a reserved seat, in coaches or a fancier parlor car. But it's more fun to stand in the open observation car — swaying, squinting, and trying to dodge the occasional blast of acrid smoke from the coal-fired steam locomotive.

"I see something new every time I come through here," said Jim Ward, an enthusiastic docent aboard the train who has spotted deer, elk, bear and fox during his trips this summer.

The trip takes about six hours — including a lunch stop. The season ends Oct. 16.

Cattle, sheep, lumber, coal, oil and mail once were hauled over this line, which was built in 1880 and once was part of the Denver & Rio Grande Western Railroad — as was the Durango-to-Silverton line in Colorado, which now also operates as a scenic railway.

The Cumbres & Toltec is just one of more than 150 tourist trains operating around the nation, according to Dan Ranger, executive director of the Tourist Railway Association, or TRAIN, an information clearinghouse for such railroads.

But he said only about 15 others are narrow gauge — 3 feet between the rails, good for climbing steep terrain and popular with the lumber and mining industries in the late 1800s.

This year, about 40,000 passengers are expected to ride the Cumbres & Toltec, which is jointly owned by New Mexico and Colorado.

Trains typically leave simultaneously from Chama and Antonito and meet in the middle for a break in the old stagecoach town of Osier — now a sprinkling of historic structures alongside a cavernous, modern-day dining hall.

Lunch consists of turkey and all the trimmings, meat loaf, soup and salad bar, or mix and match. Desserts include chocolate cake, peach cobbler and buttermilk pie.

Passengers switch trains at Osier if they're going all the way to the end of the line, or re-board the same train if they're just making a round trip to Osier.

On a recent Sunday afternoon, summer monsoon rains that coincided with lunch kept the Antonito train's passengers in the dining hall during the wait for the Chama crowd. The tourists talked, read, poked around in the gift shop, or sprawled on the benches of the long dining tables, backpacks under their heads.

Wanda Burger and her husband, George, a retired firefighter, from Pilot Point, Texas, had four grandchildren in tow: Brittney, 11, Brenden, 10, and Branson and Bryson, both 8.

The train trip "is fantastic for grandparents, because you get to see their enjoyment," Burger said.

If you go ...

Trip schedules: Through Oct. 16, one train a day Mondays through Thursdays, departing Antonito at 10:30 a.m. on Mondays and Wednesdays and departing Chama at 10:30 a.m. on Tuesdays and Thursdays; no service on Fridays. On Saturdays and Sundays, two trains daily, departing Antonito and Chama at 10:30 a.m. Fares can include return by bus to departure town.

Trip prices: Fares for coach seating range from $54.75 to $69.75 for adults, and $29.50 to $37 for children 2 through 11. Parlor car fares are $108.75 for trains departing Chama and $103.75 for trains departing Antonito. Parlor cars feature complimentary snack and attendant service.

Accommodations: Restrooms on the trains, at the Chama and Antonito depots, and in the dining hall. Snacks, film supplies and souvenirs available on board.

Forecasters say recession possible

WASHINGTON — Economic forecasters and Wall Street analysts are quietly hedging their bets after months of rosy reports about a vibrant U.S. economic outlook. They're now mentioning the growing possibility of recession ahead.

Why? Soaring gasoline prices, nightmarish home-heating costs this winter, plunging consumer confidence, rising interest rates and falling new-home sales.

Similar energy-price spikes, rising interest rates and housing slowdowns played important roles in past recessions. While most forecasters caution that recession remains unlikely, they nevertheless are dusting off the R-word, which almost all of them brushed aside before hurricanes Katrina and Rita.

"People are starting to hedge bets. Obviously it's an uncertain time," said Jay Bryson, global economist for Wachovia, the big bank based in Charlotte, N.C.

Ed Yardeni, a veteran Wall Street seer who's now with Oak Associates Ltd., rose to prominence in years past largely on bullish forecasts, but since Rita hit, he sounds decidedly bearish.

"The U.S. economy has been remarkably resilient in recent years, but consumers may start to postpone discretionary spending to build some cushion to pay their higher heating bills on top of paying more to fill up their gasoline tanks," he wrote to investors this week. "In other words, I am not sure that the economy is resilient enough to withstand the one-two punches from the Katrina/Rita tag team."

Yardeni said it was "increasingly likely" that the U.S. economy soon could face a six-month bout of stagflation — in which prices rise but wages and hiring stagnate — the economic curse of the 1970s.

Plaintiff testifies in painkiller trial

ATLANTIC CITY, N.J. — A Boise, Idaho, postal worker who blames his heart attack on Vioxx on Wednesday emotionally described how he went from feeling "bulletproof" to unmanly after his 2001 heart attack.

Occasionally fighting back tears, Frederick "Mike" Humeston, a 60-year-old Vietnam veteran, said he began taking the Merck & Co. painkiller two months earlier.

Merck, based in Whitehouse Station, withdrew Vioxx from the market last September after its own research showed the popular arthritis drug doubled risk of heart attack and stroke after 18 months' use. Humeston's case is one of about 5,000 pending Vioxx product liability lawsuits.

Red Lion sells hotels, including one in Boise

SPOKANE, Wash. — Red Lion Hotels Corp. announced Wednesday it has completed sales of five hotel properties and has purchase agreements for two others and the Crescent Court commercial building in Spokane.

The transactions are part of the Red Lion's reinvestment plan, announced in November 2004, to sell 11 hotel properties and the Crescent office building to fund a $40 million facility improvement program and revitalize the Red Lion brand.

Red Lion owns, manages and franchises 60 Red Lion Hotels in 11 Western states and British Columbia. It announced last week that it plans to expand into more than 100 markets in the next five years.

The five completed hotel transactions include the Red Lion ParkCenter Suites in Boise, Idaho, Red Lion Inn Klamath Falls, Ore., Red Lion Inn Bend South in Bend, Ore., Red Lion Inn Aberdeen, Wash., and the Budget Inn in Spokane.

Sales are pending at the Red Lion Inn Kalispell, Mont., and the Crescent Court.

The company expects to complete the sale of the Red Lion Hotel Yakima Gateway and the Red Lion Hotel on the Falls in Idaho Falls, Idaho, in the fourth quarter of 2005.

Iger is the flipside of Disney's Eisner

By Kim Christensen
Los Angeles Times

Michael Eisner — Bob Iger

HOLLYWOOD — During his five years as No. 2 to Walt Disney Co. Chief Executive Michael Eisner, Bob Iger has earned a reputation as a hard worker, a quick study and, well, a pretty buttoned-down guy.

Steven Bochco came to know another, looser Iger in the early 1990s, when the prolific television producer sat down with the then-head of ABC to map out "NYPD Blue," the gritty cop show that would feature, among other things, its stars' naked derrieres.

"I remember sitting in Bob's office, just the two of us, with a pad and a pencil, drawing dirty pictures like a couple of sixth graders," the producer recalled.

Bochco laughs at the memory of using those sessions "to decide what was acceptable and what wasn't." But he is quick to credit Iger for developing a clear set of standards for the series, which ran for 12 years beginning in 1993, and for standing by the show when the religious right assailed it for its racy themes.

Bochco and others say it is this Iger — deliberate and steadfast — who will prove effective when he officially succeeds Eisner at midnight Friday.

"Bob has a terrific metabolism for that job," Bochco said. "He may not have been the exciting choice, given all of the drama that surrounded the whole issue of succession. But I think he is absolutely the right choice. He knows that company inside and out."

In a sense, Iger is the flip side of Eisner, who had little compunction about rolling the corporate waters and seeking the spotlight. Iger is known for being more collegial than combative, a man who hopes to create a calmer environment in a company that has been through much upheaval in recent years.

For all practical purposes, Iger, 54, already has put his mark on Disney. Soon after the board picked him in March, Eisner handed over the reins to the entertainment empire, whose theme parks, movies, television networks and consumer products generate more than $30 billion a year. So far, he's drawn good reviews from company insiders, investors and analysts.

For starters, Iger dismantled a strategic planning unit that many executives viewed as Eisner's right hand in micro-managing the company. He also began talks with Pixar Animation Studios chief Steve Jobs, who after clashing openly with Eisner had vowed to end Pixar's partnership with Disney.

Iger even negotiated a truce with Roy E. Disney and Stanley P. Gold, former directors who led a shareholder revolt against Eisner and filed a lawsuit challenging Iger's selection as CEO as "a sham."

Lately, it seems, everyone loves Bob.

In keeping with Hollywood's tradition of never kick 'em while they're up, public criticism of Iger is hard to come by. Even some people who had only

Nicholas Negroponte, founder of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology Media Lab, speaks during an presentation of a '$100 laptop' in an emerging technologies conference at MIT in Cambridge, Mass., Wednesday. The $100 laptop computers that MIT researchers want to get into the hands of the world's children would be durable, flexible and self-reliant.

Design of $100 laptop for world's children unveiled

The Associated Press

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. — The $100 laptop computers that Massachusetts Institute of Technology researchers want to get into the hands of the world's children would be durable, flexible and self-reliant.

The machines' AC adapter would double as a carrying strap, and a hand crank would power them when there's no electricity. They'd be foldable like traditional notebook PCs, and carried like slim lunchboxes.

For outdoor reading, their display would be able to shift from full color to glare-resistant black and white.

And surrounding it all, the laptops would have a rubber casing that closes tightly, because "they have to be absolutely indestructible," said Nicholas Negroponte, the MIT Media Lab leader who offered an update on the project Wednesday.

Negroponte hatched the $100 laptop idea after seeing children in a Cambodian village benefit from having notebook computers at school that they could also tote home to use on their own.

Those computers had been donated by a foundation run by Negroponte and his wife. He decided that for kids everywhere to benefit from the educational and communications powers of the Internet, someone would have to make laptops inexpensive enough for officials in developing countries to purchase en masse. At least that's Negroponte's plan.

Within a year, Negroponte expects his nonprofit One Laptop Per Child to get 5 million to 15 million of the machines in production, when children in Brazil, China, Egypt, Thailand, South Africa are due to begin getting them.

In the second year — when Massachusetts Gov. Mitt Romney hopes to start buying them for all 500,000 middle and high-school students in this state — Negroponte envisions 100 million to 150 million being made. (He boasts that these humble $100 notebooks would surpass the world's existing annual production of laptops, which is about 50 million.)

While a prototype isn't expected to be shown off until November, Negroponte unveiled blueprints at Technology Review magazine's Emerging Technologies conference at MIT.

Among the key specs: A 500-megahertz processor (that was fast in the 1990s but slow by today's standards) by Advanced Micro Devices Inc. and flash memory instead of a hard drive with moving parts. To save on software costs, the laptops would run the freely available Linux operating system instead of Windows.

Overdue credit card bills reach record high

The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Charge it! That refrain is producing an unwanted response for more Americans: Your bill is overdue!

Surging energy prices, low personal savings and the higher cost of borrowing have combined to produce a record level of overdue credit card bills.

The American Bankers Association reported Wednesday that the percentage of credit card accounts 30 or more days past due climbed to an all-time high of 4.81 percent in the April-to-June period. It could grow in the months ahead, experts said.

The previous high of 4.76 percent came during the first three months of the year, in keeping with a generally steady rise over the past several years.

"The last two quarters have not been pretty," said Jim Chessen, the association's chief economist.

Chessen and other analysts mostly blamed high prices for gasoline and other energy products, but said that low savings and higher borrowing costs also played a role.

"The rise in gas prices is really stretching budgets to the breaking point for some people," Chessen said. "Gas prices are taking huge chunks out of wallets, leaving some individuals with little left to meet their financial obligations."

New study shows used books are a $2 billion industry annually

The Associated Press

NEW YORK — For as long as there has been a publishing industry, there have been used books, that supposedly quaint world of polymaths and antiquarians poking about musty, cluttered stores for titles few readers would know.

But a landmark study released Wednesday confirms what publishers, authors and booksellers have believed — and feared — since the rise of the Internet: Used books have become a modern powerhouse, driven by high prices for new works and by the convenience of finding any title, new or old, without leaving your home.

According to the Book Industry Study Group, used book sales topped $2.2 billion in

External symbols of faith can add to interview stress

By Amy Joyce
The Washington Post

Job interviews are full of stress. We worry about what to wear, whether to carry a briefcase, how to get there, and whether our sweaty palms will be that noticeable when we shake hands with our interviewer.

And some worry their traditional day-to-day appearance will cost them a job offer.

I recently received an e-mail from a woman in the Washington area who has been looking to change jobs within the nonprofit, international-development sector. The issue? She is a Muslim woman who chooses to wear a head scarf.

"While I may wear this external symbol of faith, I consider my faith intensely private and will never discuss it unless someone asks me something," she wrote. "When I walk into interviews, I find that literally interviewers' jaws drop. They are excited on the phone, but in person they lose the energy."

The woman, who asked to remain anonymous, explained that she was born and raised in this country (not that this should matter) and is well educated, with a master's degree in public policy. She has had a solid six years of work in international development.

After feeling as if she were shocking her interviewers, she said she considered sending a small, post-interview e-mail, explaining that she is Muslim woman, that she hopes no one was taken aback by her manner of dress and that her faith has nothing to do with how well she works or what level of commitment she brings to a job.

2004, an 11 percent increase over 2003. Much of that growth can be credited to the Internet. While used sales at traditional stores rose a modest 4.6 percent, they jumped 33 percent online, to just over $600 million.

"I think consumers are increasingly starting to notice that they can get used books in good condition, in a timely manner," says Jeff Hayes, a director at InfoTrends, a market research firm that served as the principal analyst for the BISG study.

More than 111 million used books were purchased last year, representing about one out of every 12 overall book purchases. By the end of the decade, the percentage is expected to rise to one out of 11, a troubling trend when sales for new works are essentially flat: authors and publishers receive no royalties from used buys.

"Obviously, these are not statistics to warm the heart of publishers," says Simon & Schuster spokesman Adam Rothberg.

The BISG, a nonprofit organization supported by publishers, booksellers and others in the industry, reports that price is the greatest appeal for choosing used books over new ones. While hardcovers often cost $25 and higher, used books purchased in 2004 averaged $8.12 — except for text books, which averaged $42.31.

The study will likely revive the complaints of authors and publishers who say that online retailers are hurting new sales by aggressively promoting used copies. On Amazon.com and eBay, for example, used editions are often available at the same time, or even before, a new book is released.

The industry, indirectly, may even contribute to the problem: Author signings for upcoming releases are a tradition at BookExpo America, publishing's annual convention. But they also lead to a wave of offerings on eBay, publishers say.

> "Obviously, these are not statistics to warm the heart of publishers."
> – Adam Rothberg, Simon & Schuster spokesman

"I have made it clear that I do not like the signings at BookExpo," says Jane Friedman, CEO of HarperCollins. "The author should at least make the signature personal, 'Dear Jane,' so it's worth less to sell."

The BISG survey looks at both education and general markets. The cost of text books has long been a matter of contention and the BISG reports that educational buys totaled an estimated $1.6 billion — nearly all through traditional stores — an increase of 8 1/2 percent over 2003.

But Hayes was more impressed by the nearly $600 million — much of that online — spent on noneducation books, a 25 percent jump.

"I think you may be seeing consumer behavior changing," he says. "It could become like going to the movies: 'Do you want to the see the movie in the theater or do you want to wait for the DVD?' The 'DVD' is available a lot faster now."

"One of our cautionary tales is what happened in the textbook industry," says Paul Aiken, executive director of the Authors Guild, which represents thousands of published authors.

"Because of used books, educational publishers tried to make up for the loss by raising the prices of new ones and quickly issuing new editions to make old ones obsolete. We don't want to see that cycle again for the nonacademic market."

The size of the used book market has never been calculated before, and the industry study group report represents an unusual cooperative effort among the leading used book retailers. Amazon.com, Alibris.com and eBay are among those who provided precise sales figures, usually the dearest of industry secrets.

"There's a great deal of curiosity about this market. We all know our own numbers, but we could only guess about our competitors," says Boris Wertz, COO of Abebooks.com, an online retailer that, according to Wertz, had used sales of more than $100 million last year.

Sales from individual retailers were not provided by the BISG.

The BISG study raises other questions, such as how publishers can respond to the used market. Friedman rejects the idea of lowering prices, but acknowledges that she has no specific solution. "It's something we've looked at for a long time," she says.

The study also does not resolve a fundamental dispute over used books: Are they hurting the market for new books, as many publishers and authors believe? Or, as retailers say, do they simply enable customers to acquire books they otherwise wouldn't have purchased?

"My sense is, excluding textbooks, that at least half of used books sales come at the expense of books still in print," Hayes says.

"But there may be an upside, because a consumer might buy a used book by a certain author, and like it enough to buy the author's next book. So at this point, the impact is hard to quantify."

Thomas Ferguson, Director for the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, holds a new $10 note during an interview after its unveiling on Ellis Island, New York, Wednesday. The most noticeable difference in the newly designed bill is the addition of subtle background colors of orange, yellow and red. Additionally, the words "We The People" are printed in red next to the portrait of first Treasury Secretary Alexander Hamilton. The note is expected to go into circulation in early 2006.

Stocks mixed as oil tops $67 per barrel

NEW YORK (AP) — Wall Street ended a volatile session mixed Wednesday as investors welcomed new government data showing a reinvigorated industrial sector but wrestled with a jump in oil prices that sent crude futures above $67 per barrel.

Crude oil futures surged higher after the Energy Department reported a larger-than-expected drawdown in the nation's crude oil reserves, although the report also showed a surprise surplus in gasoline inventories. A barrel of light crude was quoted at $66.35, up $1.28, on the New York Mercantile Exchange after reaching $67.40.

good things to say about Iger called his office for clearance before returning a reporter's calls.

Privately, however, some who have worked with Iger question whether he has the creative chops to replace Eisner, who since 1984 has guided Disney's revenue growth from $1.5 billion a year to more than 20 times that much. While they rate Iger high on hard work and likability, they are less enthusiastic about his prospects as CEO.

One former associate described Iger as more technocrat than visionary. Another questioned whether his "great temperament and people skills" would translate to creative leadership.

Iger declined requests for an interview and had little to say to reporters Tuesday at a Hollywood Radio and Television Society luncheon for Eisner in Beverly Hills.

"This is Michael's event," he said. "I'm trying to avoid it being about me right now."

His friends and colleagues say such statements typify his modesty. Still, he does seem to relish his achievements.

"I have to admit I'm excited about this opportunity and deeply appreciative to have that," he said Tuesday.

Last fall, Iger sent an e-mail to the principal of Fulton Avenue School No. 8 in Oceanside, N.Y., as it prepared to celebrate its 50th anniversary. Iger said "he'd heard about the celebration and had wonderful memories" of the school, but could not attend the festivities.

That surprised principal Ronald Schoen because Iger hadn't been invited. What surprised him even more was Iger's sentimental connection to the school, which he attended some 40 years earlier. In one of several more e-mails, Iger asked Schoen whether the words, "America's hope for the future passes through these doors," still graced the school's entrance. Yes, the principal told Iger, who then sent another message.

"He said, 'Isn't it amazing that a little boy of that age who walked through those doors could actually become president of Disney?' " Schoen said.

Four years after moving to Disney with ABC, Iger became Eisner's second-in-command as president in 2000. In a rough and tumble five years since, the company has endured the shareholder revolt led by Roy Disney and Gold; survived a hostile takeover bid by Comcast Corp.; and been dragged through the embarrassing details of a lawsuit over Eisner's hiring and firing of Michael Ovitz, Iger's predecessor as president.

Faith

"It is sad that I even have to go this route, but a number of my friends have been told that the headscarf has affected the potential employers' image of them," she said.

Her feelings may be legitimate, unfortunately. General religious discrimination charges made up 1.9 percent of all charges filed in 1992, while they accounted for 3.1 percent in 2004, according to the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission. The number of charges filed by Muslims alleging discrimination doubled from the four years before the Sept. 11, 2001, terrorist attacks to the four years after, according to David Grinberg, a spokesman with the EEOC.

"That's one of the sad realities that many women of faith who wear traditional head covers face. This is because it's more of an easy symbol to identify a person's faith and make them subject to this negative backlash for a typical stereotype that goes along with that," said Imad Hamad, a regional director of the American-Arab Anti-Discrimination Committee.

Companies have a duty, and are legally bound, not to discriminate against anyone based on religion. Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 prohibits workplace discrimination based on religion, national origin, race, color or sex. But still, employers discriminate against individuals for things such as wearing a hijab, both subtly and not-so subtly. Some may not even realize they are doing it, said Zachary A. Hummel, a partner with Bryan Cave LLP who counsels companies on such issues.

"I have clients look back at their applicant pool and hiring and make sure that as a proportion of the applicants, their workforce is at least somewhat representative of those applicants," he said. "If I have 100 Muslims that identify themselves as such, and ... none of them have been hired and they were a significant proportion of the applicants, you have to go back and say how did this happen."

Hummel has had wide experience with discrimination. He is an attorney who works to prevent liability against employers, but he also was, until recently, chairman of the board of the International Institute of St. Louis, which helps refugees resettle in the United States.

"Obviously in a post-9/11 world, there have been a whole series of issues, a whole bunch of consequences for people of Middle Eastern descent," Hummel said. "There can be some prejudices out there, and certainly many Muslims feel more conspicuous," particularly if they choose to wear a head scarf, he said.

We all probably know by now the protections workers have under the law. But there's more: Diversity, as I've written many times before, is key to a good workforce.

"Promoting and making sure your workforce is a reflection of the community you're in is important," Hummel said.

NOTICE OF PROPERTY TAX INCREASE BY SCHOOL BOARD

The Gooding Jt. School District #231 has proposed to increase the amount of ad valorem tax dollars it collects by certifying a school emergency levy pursuant to Section 33-805, Idaho Code, for the period December 2005 to November 2006. The total amount of dollars to be collected pursuant to this levy is estimated to be $131,686. The amount of dollars to be collected pursuant to this levy on a typical home of $50,000 taxable value of last year is estimated to be $24.00. The amount of taxes to be collected pursuant to this levy on a typical farm of $100,000 taxable last year is estimated to be $47.00. The amount of dollars to be collected pursuant to this levy on a typical business of $200,000 taxable value of last year is estimated to be $95.00.

CAUTION TO THE TAXPAYER: The amounts shown in this schedule do NOT reflect tax charges that are made because of voter approved bond levies, override levies, supplemental levies, or levies applicable to newly annexed property. Also the amounts shown in this schedule are an estimate only and can vary with the amount of dollars and the levy amount certified and the taxable value of individual property.

NOTICE OF HEARING
In the Matter of the Application of CHELSEA POWELL
for Changes in Names for SAYDI BROOKE MAYES and CAYLEB CLINT MAYES,
Minors.

A petition by Chelsea Powell on behalf of minors Saydi Brooke Mayes and Cayleb Clint Mayes proposing the name changes to Saydi Brooke Powell and Cayleb Houston Powell has been filed in the above-entitled court, the reason for the changes in name being that petitioner desires to have her children known by her last name. The name and address of petitioner is Chelsea Powell, 572 Jefferson Apt A, Twin Falls, Idaho and the minor children's father is Clint Earl Mayes, 1705 Maplewood Ave., Twin Falls, Idaho. Such petition will be heard on Monday, the 17th day of October, 2005, at 9:00 o'clock a.m., and objections may be filed by any person who can, in such objections, show to the court a good reason against such a change of name.

Case No. CV-05-3812
NOTICE OF HEARING
In the Matter of the Application of
DEVAR JAMES OWEN,
For Change in Name

A Petition by DEVAR JAMES OWEN, born June 23, 1944, at Preston, Idaho, now residing at Purple Sage Manor, 1827 Kimberly Road, Twin Falls, Idaho 83301, proposing a change in name to DEVAR JAMES HULSE has been filed in the above entitled court, the reason for the change in name being that he has used the name Devar James Hulse, all of his life. He did not know that his legal name was Devar James Owen until only recently when he acquired a copy of his birth certificate. He desires to have his birth certificate amended to reflect the name he has used all of his life. The Petitioner's father is deceased; the names and address of Petitioner's near relatives are: Pearl Christensen - Aunt by marriage, 7264 East Mink Creek Road, Preston, Idaho 83263, LaVana Hulse - Aunt by marriage, 257 Francis Avenue, Layton, Utah 84041
Such petition for change in name will be heard on Wednesday, the 5th day of October, 2005, at the hour of 9 o'clock AM, at the Courtroom of the above entitled Court located at Twin Falls, Idaho. Objections may be filed by any person who can, in such objections, show to the Court a good reason against such a change in name
WITNESS by hand and seal of said District Court this 1st day of September, 2005.

THE ACES ON BRIDGE®

Bobby Wolff

"Confession of our faults is the next thing to innocence."
— Publilius Syrus

Bjorn Fallenius very generously presented me with today's deceptively difficult deal, telling me he had mistimed the play in four spades at the table.

You need to make something out of the diamonds — but you can play a diamond toward the king any time you like. However, if spades are 4-1 with East (of course) having the length and holding four clubs, he will have to follow to all your club winners, and so you may somehow be able to score all your trumps in hand.

If trumps are 3-2, draw them all and eventually take your main chance in diamonds. But if you find a bad spade split, then try to cash four clubs to throw a heart away, and next give up a heart. If the diamond ace is right, you can win the diamond return in dummy and ruff a heart. Then you need to re-enter dummy to lead a third heart and make your last trump en passant.

But to get to dummy to make that heart play, you must keep a top trump in North. So you must use the spade king and only one of dummy's top trumps at the start, rather than frittering away both of dummy's top spades at once.

If you play the ace and queen of spades at tricks two and three, a defender will take the first heart and switch. You will then be able to manage one ruff in hand, but you never get your last trump trick.

YOU ARE NOTIFIED THAT:
A Petition, a copy of which is attached, has been filed in the above-entitled matter in the Magistrate's Division of the District Court of Twin Falls County, Idaho, by the Prosecuting Attorney, alleging the above-named children come within the Court's jurisdiction under the Child Protective Act.
You are hereby directed to appear personally for a Review Hearing at the Twin Falls County Courthouse, 425 Shoshone Street, Twin Falls, Idaho, on December 1st, 2005, at 9:30 AM.
You are notified that service of the attached Petition upon you, as the parent(s), guardian or custodian of the child, confers personal jurisdiction of the Court upon you and subjects you to the provisions of the Child Protective Act.
You are notified that if you fail to appear without reasonable cause, the Court may proceed in your absence or you may be proceeded against for contempt of Court.
You are notified that the parent(s), guardian, or a custodian may be financially liable for the support and/or treatment of the child.
You are further notified that the child and parent(s), guardian, or custodian have the right to be represented by an attorney of your choosing, or if financially unable to pay, have the right to have an attorney appointed by the Court to represent the child or the parent(s) guardian, or custodian at county expense if you request to have an attorney appointed at county expense, you must appear before the date of the hearing given above, at which time the Court shall consider appointment of an attorney for the child and inquire whether the parent(s), guardian, or custodian require the separate appointment of an attorney.
You are further notified that there shall be a rebuttable presumption that if a child is placed in the custody of the IDHW and was also placed in care out of the home for a period not less than fifteen (15) out of the last twenty-two (22) months from the date of Adjudication, the IDHW shall initiate a Petition for Termination of Parental Rights. This presumption may be rebutted by a finding by the Court that the filing of a Petition for Termination of Parental Rights would not be in the best interest of the child and their family, or that the child is placed permanently with a relative.

EASY # 6

Fill in the grid so that every row, every column, and every 3x3 box contains the digits 1 through 9. That's all there is to it. There's no math involved. The grid has numbers, but nothing has to add up to anything else. You solve the puzzle with reasoning and logic. Find the answers for todays puzzle on page E-9.

Certified Used Cars

If you are looking for a late model Honda car, van or SUV, make sure it's Middlekauff Honda Certified. No other certification even comes close. Honda factory certified eliminates 100% of the risk associated with buying a used vehicle and guarantees you peace of mind. There's ordinary used and then there's risk-free Middlekauff Honda certified used. The difference is extraordinary!
