Recharge efforts still under way

By Michelle Dunlop Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — Too much water and too few places to pump it.

Those are two reasons prohibiting the state from capitalizing fully on an aquifer recharge deal signed in the waning hours of the 2006 Legislature.

The Snake River may be running at its highest level since 1939, but flooding concerns and the lack of recharge sites are keeping the state from using all of the 2,000 cubic feet per second of water the state could use to replenish the declining aquifer this year.

"We currently do not have any sites on behalf of the state to do recharge" above Milner Dam, House Speaker Bruce Newcomb told The Times-News on Wednesday.

During the 2006 Legislature, Newcomb, R-Burley, introduced a bill that prioritized the use of Snake River water for aquifer recharge over the use of it for hydropower production. Newcomb asserted that Idaho Power essentially surrendered its rights to state trust water when the company signed the Swan Falls Agreement in 1994.

Idaho Power officials said that recharge wasn't one of the established purposes for which they agreed to allow the trust water to be used in 1994.

They also fought the bill, saying it would lead to increased rates for the power company's customers.

Though Newcomb's legislation passed the House, it failed to win support in the Senate. A settlement was reached when the Idaho attorney general's office found two recharge rights that the power company acknowledged in the Swan Falls Agreement.

The state now has the ability to use 1,200 cfs of water above

Milner Dam and 800 cfs in the Big and Little Wood area for aquifer recharge. However, both those sites are giving state officials fits at the moment.

Flooding concerns in the Big Wood area prevent state officials from using the full 800 cfs for aquifer recharge, said Dave Blew, with the Idaho Department of Water Resources.

The state is running about 200 cfs to a recharge spot near Shoshone and another 100 cfs through the Richfield Canal for aquifer recharge, he said.

However, canal company managers and Water Resources staff fear running

White House staff shakeup continues

By Peter Baker and Jim VandeHeil The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — President Bush's new chief of staff accelerated his election-year White House shakeup Wednesday as Deputy Chief of Staff Karl Rove surrendered the policy management duties he assumed last year and press secretary Scott McClellan resigned as the public face of an administration under fire.

Rove, who steered Bush to two national election victories, will retain his title but focus on broad strategy and politics, while Joel Kaplan takes over as deputy White House chief of staff running the day-to-day policy process.

To replace McClellan, Republican strategists said the White House is considering Fox News radio host Tony Snow and former Iraq occupation spokesman Dan Senor.

The moves effectively diminished or eliminated the roles of the two presidential aides most familiar to the general public, as newly installed White House Chief of Staff Joshua Bolten seeks to rescue the remainder of Bush's presidency.

Coupled with other changes already announced and now in the works, Bolten hopes to demonstrate to the public and the Republican Congress that it will no longer be business as usual in a White House afflicted by political defeats, an overseas war and shrinking public support.

At the same time, the changes made public so far mainly have moved around figures who have been inside the Bush orbit for years, and White House officials made clear yesterday that no major shifts in policy are envisioned.

With midterm congressional elections looming, strategists said the main goal was for public gestures that would restore faith in Bush's ability to lead.

"The decision isn't one looking back at past performance or judgment," said White House counselor Dan Bartlett. "It was one looking forward. Josh is re-energizing and rebuilding his staff for the next thousand days."

The reshuffling, the most significant of Bush's second term, got underway when the president appointed Bolten to replace Andrew H. Card Jr. as his chief aide. Bolten, who took over Friday afternoon, has moved quickly to reconstruct the West Wing. On Monday, he invited aides already thinking of leaving to submit resignations. On Tuesday, he installed trading representative Rob Portman to take over his job as director of the Office of Management and Budget.

Study finds psychiatric experts have stake in drugs

By Shankar Vedantam The Washington Post

Every psychiatric expert involved in writing the standard diagnostic criteria for disorders such as depression and schizophrenia has had financial ties to drug companies that sell medications for those illnesses, a new analysis has found.

Of the 170 experts who contributed to the manual that defines disorders ranging from personality problems to drug addiction, more than half had such ties, including 100 percent of the experts who served on work groups on mood disorders such as depression and psychotic disorders such as schizophrenia. The analysis did not reveal the extent of their relationships with industry ties or whether they agreed or followed their work on the manual.

"I don't think the public is aware of how egregious financial ties are in the field of psychiatry," said Lisa Cosgrove, a clinical psychologist at the University of Massachusetts in Boston, who is publishing her analysis Thursday in the peer-reviewed journal Psychotherapy and Psychosomatics.

The new analysis comes as debate grows over the use of medication as the primary or sole treatment for many psychiatric disorders, a trend driven in part by the rise of mental disorders in the psychiatric manual.

Cosgrove said she launched her research after discovering that one of six panel members on whying whether certain premenstrual problems were a psychiatric disorder had ties to Eli Lilly & Co., which was seeking to market Prozac to treat that very problem. The process of defining such disorders is far from scientific, Cosgrove added. "You would be dismayed at how political the process can be."

The American Psychiatric Association, which publishes the guidelines in its "bible" of disorder, known as the Diagnostic and Statistical Manual, said it was planning to require disclosure of the financial ties of experts who write the next edition of the manual, due around 2011. The manual carries vast influence over the practice of psychiatry in the United States and worldwide.

Darrel Regier, director of the association's division of research, argued that concerns over disclosure were a recent phenomenon, which may be why the last edition, published in 1994, did not note them. Both Regier and John Kane, an expert on schizophrenia who worked on the last edition, agreed with the need for

Coach finds toilet paper dangling from his trees

By Cassidy Friedman Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — A trucker wearing a funeral face slowed his truck to a near halt.

David Meza, tugging down a stream of double-ply toilet paper from a tree, looked up.

"You got it baaaaad!" yelled the trucker, who cackled and drove off.

On Tuesday night, the Mezas got it real bad. The family awoke to dozens of toilet paper rolls unravelled and draping high and low over their two large multiples. La back, garbage cans, borrowed from neighbors' yards, blocked the cars in the driveway.

Generous tokens of gratitude, they are sure, from Carlos Meza's Jerome High School tennis team.

"They're just having a good season and they're having fun," said David, 21. Carlos' son whose day off was now planned for him.

"This is just their way of saying thank you," he said, laughing as he caught a falling ribbon.

Or, perhaps, it's some type of initiation ritual of underclassmen.

David looked wearily into the mummified trees.

"I really have no idea how I am going to get all that down. It kind of sucks we're one of the few people who have trees left on the street," he said.

But Wednesday was sunny and David faced the large project of dismantling a night's worth of fun leisurely, coolly in reflective shades and a T-shirt.

In fact, his whole family reacted to the scene more or less in the same way. "Mom just laughed and started picking up toilet paper," he said.

His family noticed it at 7 a.m. when it was time to take the dog for a walk.

"Dad was like, 'Get up and look what happened.'" he said.

A car full of cute young girls screamed out the window as they drove by. "Yeoooohooooo... Nice house!"

Carlos Meza has coached the Jerome High School Junior Varsity tennis team for five years, his son said.

Americans flee big cities for affordable housing

By Stephen Ohlemacher Associated Press writer

WASHINGTON — Americans are leaving the nation's big cities in search of cheaper homes and open spaces farther out.

Nearly every large metropolitan area had more people move out than move in from 2000 to 2004, with a few exceptions in the South and Southwest, according to a report being released Thursday by the Census Bureau.

Northeasters are moving South and West. West Coast residents are moving inland. Midwesterners are chasing better job markets. And just about everywhere, people are escaping to the outer suburbs, also known as exurbs.

"It's a case of middle class flight, a flight for housing affordability," said William Frey, a demographer at the Brookings Institution, a Washington think tank. "But it's not just white middle class flight, it's Hispanics and blacks, too."

The Census Bureau measured domestic migration — people moving within the United States — from 1990 to 2000, and from 2000 to 2004. The report provides the number of people moving into and out of each state and the 25 largest metropolitan areas.

The states that attracted the most new residents: Florida, Arizona and Nevada. The states that lost the most: New York, California and Illinois.

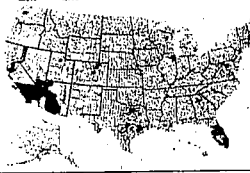

Among the 25 largest metropolitan areas, 18 had more people move out than move in from 2000 to 2004. New York, Los Angeles and Chicago — the three biggest metropolitan areas — lost the most residents to domestic moves.

FAMILIES SPEAK OF HOPE

Some relatives of Sept. 11 victims choose forgiveness over revenge

By John Riley
Newspaper

ALEXANDRIA, Va. — Six relatives of Sept. 11 victims testified with religious allusions and cracking voices on behalf of Zacarias Moussaoui at his death-penalty trial Wednesday, telling jurors that they believed an affirmation of life rather than vengeance was the best way to honor the memory of those who died.

"Every day we miss him," said Donald Bane of Wyoming, Del., of his son Michael, who died in the collapse of the World Trade Center. "But to do things that promote life, that's what I think our lives ought to be about now."

"One of the things the Bible explains is the fallen nature of human beings, that we're all sinners and we are all broken, broken people," said Robin Theurkauf of Stamford, Conn., whose husband Tom, 44, worked in the south tower as a stock analyst on Sept. 11. "But on the other side, we're all children of God, and loved by God."

Moussaoui, as he has throughout the trial, played the villain. At a court recess immediately following Theurkauf's words, he repeated one of his favorite lines, shouting "God curse you" as he was escorted from the courtroom.

While family witnesses are not permitted to say whether they think Moussaoui should be executed, Wednesday's testimony revealed a clear division among them. More than three dozen appeared for the prosecution, and told jurors their lives were almost irrevocably damaged by Sept. 11. The relatives testifying Wednesday with more to come Thursday, talked in equally moving terms about going forward with hope.

Dr. Marilyn Rosenthal, PhD., whose son Josh Allen Rosenthal died in the south tower of the World Trade Center on September 11, 2001, speaks to reporters after testifying for the defense in the sentencing trial of convicted al-Qaida conspirator Zacarias Moussaoui in U.S. District Court in Alexandria, Va., on Wednesday.

"We all have a very strong feeling we are not going to be caught up in a whirlpool of sadness, frustration and anger," testified Marilyn Rosenthal, who said she has an annual lecture series on the meaning of Sept. 11 in memory of her son, Josh, a financial executive who died in the Twin Towers. "Every-one wants something good to come out of what happened to Josh."

Later, outside the courthouse, Rosenthal, a University of Michigan professor, said she opposed the death penalty for Moussaoui because he was a "marginal figure, far less important than planners the United States is holding in overseas prisons. 'Moussaoui is the wrong person to be on trial,' she said.

Moussaoui, a 37-year-old French-Moroccan arrested at a flight school because of suspicious behavior in August 2001, pleaded guilty last year to being part of an al-Qaida hijacking plot. Jurors have found that he is eligible for the death penalty because his lies to the FBI prevented the bureau from thwarting Sept. 11.

The jury must now decide whether he should be executed or get life in prison. Moussaoui once denied having any role in Sept. 11, but at trial claimed that he was supposed to pilot a plane that day.

His defense team, against his wishes, has argued that he is seeking martyrdom, and called the second of two experts Wednesday to testify that he suffers from paranoid schizophrenia.

The family witnesses testifying for the defense included Patricia Perry of Safford, whose son John, a lawyer and city police officer who defered his resignation from the force when the planes hit on Sept. 11 and grabbed a badge he had just turned in, died helping to evacuate the Twin Towers.

Perry's testimony was focused on her son's commitment to civil liberties, the memorials and award programs set up to achieve something positive in his honor, and the kindnesses from people everywhere that helped her deal with grief.

Researchers say diversity can make a jury more thoughtful

By Hilary MacGregor
Los Angeles Times

Although social scientists say juries usually manage to produce defensible verdicts, researchers have now found that more diverse juries specifically ones that include black and white members — are more likely to share information, make fewer errors in evaluating the facts and perhaps reach fairer verdicts than all-white juries. The study, conducted with mock jurors, was published in this month's issue of the journal of Personality and Social Psychology.

The difference in jury performance could not be attributed solely to the input of minorities, the study found. Sometimes the mere presence of minorities changes the behavior of white jurors.

"I think the traditional perception about diversity is that (it) is going to be a good thing because African Americans will bring something novel to the table," said Sam Sommers, assistant professor in the Department of Psychology at Tufts University and the study's author. Although that's true, he said, "a lot of the results of this study come from white jurors acting differently when they were in diverse groups."

In short, Sommers said, diversity appears to help members of a group think more deeply and clearly. "I think the argument could be made that in a homogeneous group, where everyone is like us, it's easy to be a little lazier, and take those cognitive shortcuts," he said. "Diversity seems to be one potential way to shake us out of that, and to attend more carefully to our surroundings."

Janet Schofield, a professor of psychology at the University of Pittsburgh, said the study contradicts "the idea of a 'colorblind' society. Juries made up of one ethnic group can let stereotypes shape their assumptions, she says, but juries with at least two ethnic groups are more likely to broaden their perspective.

"There is an awareness that other jurors may be watching you and judging you," said Schofield, who specializes in integration and interracial behavior. "It might make people be, or appear to be, particularly careful. It could be that they really are, or they want to look that way, so they are not open to charges of having been unfair or racist."

For the study, Sommers recruited 121 people from a jury pool at a courthouse in Washington County, Mich., and 79 people through newspaper advertisements in the same area. All 200 of the study participants were eligible for jury duty. Of the participants, 60 percent were female and 40 percent were male; 83 percent were white and 17 percent were black. They ranged in age from 18 to 78.

Survivors, victims' relatives mark 11th anniversary of Oklahoma bombing Brook Kok, age 5, places a flag into the bouquet of flowers on the chair of his half-sister, Baylee Almon, who was killed in the 1995 Oklahoma City bombing.

By Tim Talley
Associated Press writer

OKLAHOMA CITY — In a moving roll call, loved ones of the 168 victims of the Oklahoma City bombing read their names during a ceremony marking the 11th anniversary of the deadliest act of domestic terrorism in U.S. history.

"It's very important we never forget," said Bill Cleveland as he placed a bouquet on a chair dedicated to his daughter, Pamela Cleveland Aago, that is part of a permanent memorial to the victims.

Survivors and relatives of those killed placed photographs of the victims, personal mementos and other reminders on the empty bronze chairs that mark the former site of the Alfred P. Murrah Federal Building.

Gov. Brad Henry reminded mourners of the outpouring of support from around the world after the attack, and he again thanked rescue workers who saved lives in the building's wreckage.

"The legacy of April 19, 1995, is goodness overcoming evil," the governor said. "That's what we must remember."

Jim Deany brought his children, Rebecca and Brandon, to the ceremony. The children were severely injured in a day care center on the federal building's second floor. A total of 19 children were killed in the blast.

"It's been 11 years since our tragedy," Oklahoma City Mayor Mick Cornett said. "I think you witnessed this morning this is still very much a part of our lives."

About a dozen survivors of the Sept. 11, 2001, terrorist attacks in New York City placed a wreath on the former site of the federal building and read a letter from Mayor Michael Bloomberg praising an exchange program in which survivors of the federal building bombing lend support to 9/11 survivors.

Following the ceremony, two granite memorials to the children killed in the bombing and to rescue workers were dedicated near the former site of the federal building.

The nine-story building was destroyed when a cargo truck packed with ammonium nitrate and fuel oil was detonated near its entrance. Aside from the 168 killed, more than 800 were injured.

Timothy McVeigh was convicted of federal murder charges and executed in 2001. Terry Nichols was convicted on federal and state bombing charges and is serving multiple life-prison sentences.

Lawsuits filed against Bausch & Lomb in eye fungus cases

By Kelli Kennedy
Associated Press writer

MIAMI — A Miami attorney is seeking class-action status for a lawsuit blaming Bausch & Lomb for a painful eye fungus he says permanently scarred the cornea of a woman who used its contact lens solution.

The lawsuit, following on the heels of a similar suit filed in New York, alleges the company either failed to remove the fungus from the Bausch & Lomb MoistureLac eye solution or fostered its growth in the manufacturing process.

Bausch & Lomb stopped shipping the product last week after health officials linked it to 109 cases of the eye fungus. More than 50 of those cases were diagnosed in Florida, according to the federal Centers for Disease Control and Prevention.

Jacqueline Wartmann, 57, was among those diagnosed with Fusarium keratitis, a fungus that causes blurred vision and can lead to blindness, according to the Miami lawsuit, filed Monday. It says Wartmann's corneal scarring has resulted in permanent blurry vision.

A Bausch & Lomb spokeswoman said Wednesday that Rochester, N.Y.-based company does not comment on pending litigation.

"Obviously we're working to complete the investigation into these fungal infections as quickly as possible," spokeswoman Meg Graham said.

Attorney Joel Magolnick said he had received dozens of calls from people in Utah, Georgia, Virginia and Las Vegas — all contact lens wearers who developed problems after using the Bausch & Lomb product.

New fossil supports dry-land theory

By Bryn Nelson
Newsway

The most primitive snake fossil yet found features hips and fully functional hind legs, according to a new study supporting the hotly debated hypothesis that the first serpents crawled on dry land instead of swimming in the sea. The roughly 90-million-year-old remains, from Argentina's Patagonia region, do not reveal how snakes evolved from their putative lizard ancestors, the authors say, but do suggest that this snake may have dwelt primarily on the surface while occasionally venturing into tunnels dug by burrowing animals.

"This new snake is a fresh new start for the debate on the origin of snakes," said study co-author Hussain Zahr, a professor of biology at the University of Sao Paulo in Brazil.

The researchers, who will report their findings Thursday in the journal Nature, named the snake Najash rionegrina in honor of the biblical legged snake, Najash, and the discovery site in Argentina's Rio Negro province.

Fossils of snakes with back legs unearthed from marine sediments in the Middle East have led some researchers to view the creatures as intermediaries between ancient marine lizards and modern snakes. But Zahr said a new analysis suggested their skulls were more akin to modern boas and pythons than to more primitive snakes.

The Najash snake, he said, possesses a primitive skull and is the only one yet found that retains a sacrum, the spinal region that connects the pelvis to the vertebral column. The sacrum defines the hips of lizards and other four-legged vertebrates, but in snakes suggests an early evolutionary step for the now legless reptiles.

Zahr said the snake, dated to about 90 million years ago from rocks found within the same sedimentary layer as the fossil, co-existed with terrestrial dinosaurs and boasts a body plan that suggests it was well-adapted for life on land. Researchers cannot say whether the hind limbs were used for locomotion or other purposes, but believe they were fully functional.

U.S. moves to combat mumps in Midwest

By Ja-Rul Chong
Los Angeles Times

Federal health authorities said Wednesday they are rushing 25,000 doses of mumps vaccine to the Midwest in an effort to control the largest mumps outbreak in 20 years.

Since the first cases were detected in Iowa last December, mumps has infected 1,165 people in at least eight Midwestern states, said Dr. Julie Gerberding, director of the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention.

"We're not going to be surprised to see more cases in more states," she said at a news conference in Atlanta.

Officials are still collecting data from the other six states where many of the people in Iowa who have contracted mumps were between 17 and 24 years of age.

The relative youth of those infected could explain why there have been no deaths so far, Gerberding said. Still, 20 people have been hospitalized for more serious conditions that developed from their mumps infection, including meningitis.

Mumps is a virus that can be spread by close contact through mucus or coughs and sneezes.

The disease generally causes headaches and tiredness, with a special tendency to puff up the saliva glands. Most people get over mumps in about 10 days. About 20 percent of people who catch mumps can have no symptoms.

Snowstorm closes major highways in northern Plains

By Blake Nicholson
Associated Press writer

BISMARCK, N.D. — A powerful spring storm swept through the northwestern Plains on Wednesday, dumping up to 2 feet of snow that closed major highways, cut power to hundreds and was blamed for at least four deaths.

More than 2,000 homes and businesses lost power in South Dakota's Black Hills, and many schools were closed. Some customers in North Dakota could be without electricity until Friday, said the Mountrail-Williams County Electric Cooperative.

The heaviest snow was reported in the Black Hills, with 24 inches at Lead and Rochford, the weather service said. Sundance, Wyo., reported 13 inches of snow by mid-morning with wind gusting to 60 mph. A foot had fallen at Bowman, in North Dakota's southwest corner, which was under a blizzard warning in the afternoon, the weather service said.

Bowman school business manager James Miller said the snow was mostly slush. "It's hard to move in it because it's so wet, heavy and slippery." Authorities closed about 100 miles of Interstate 94 Tuesday night from Glendive, Mont., to Dickinson, N.D., but had reopened it by midday Wednesday. A stretch of about 140 miles of I-90 was shut down from Gillette, Wyo., to Rapid City, S.D.

I-90 had icy pavement, zero visibility and trucks blocking parts of the road, said South Dakota Highway Patrol Capt. Greg Ingemansson. Three people died Tuesday in a crash on an icy North Dakota highway amid blowing sleet and snow, state police said. Authorities said a tractor-trailer collided head-on with a U-Haul truck towing a car, pushing it into an SUV.

Wind gusting to 84 mph overturned a mobile home in the Nebraska Panhandle, and gusts to 71 mph were reported in eastern Montana, officials said.

Spring storms with heavy snow aren't unusual in North Dakota, said weather service meteorologist Jim Fors in Bismarck. "We don't get them every year, but every five to 10 years, we usually get a big dump," Fors said.

Entertainer ropes in national recognition

Men's poetry comes from life

By Correen Hart
Times-News correspondent

RUPERT — "Don't call us cowboy poets," says Rudy Gonzales. "That name makes him think of ruffles on his shirt and a faraway look in the eyes. But Gonzales is anything but faraway. He's very down to earth."

Gonzales, from Eagle, Idaho, will be one of the featured entertainers at the Rupert Centennial on Friday and Saturday.

"The term, cowboy poet, has taken a negative turn in the last few years," Gonzales said. "A lot of them are poets who have never ranched, herded cattle, lived the cowboy life. I'm tired of the same old tired subjects, such as talking hats and boots. That's been beat to death. But cowboy entertainer is taking an upturn."

His red hair, freckled face and waxed handlebar mustache seem to disguise his heritage. Gonzales is of Apache and Spanish background and his parents spoke only Spanish at home. He admits his Spanish is not so good today.

"There's a strong Mexican influence in ranching and running cattle," he said.

"A lot of the words we use are derived from the Spanish, like vaeta and larist. Much of their gear and horsemanship came from the vaquero, which was shortened in later terms to buckaroo."

He's made hundreds of appearances over the past 20 years with his cowboy humor, old cowboy songs, cowboy stories and, yes, even cowboy poetry. But he can make it ring true.

He has been a rancher and working cowboy for most of his life. He is also a master farrier who has taught farrier (those shoeing) science.

He holds the distinction of being the first cowboy entertainer to perform at the Kennedy Center in Washington, D.C. His hour-long program is recorded and available at the Kennedy Center and the Library of Congress.

He has also performed for presidents and governors and has made seven international appearances. Gonzales has been the publisher of the American Cowboy Poet Magazine since 1987, and has given numerous live interviews with the BBC.

Rudy Gonzales, left, warms up for Rupert's birthday bash, scheduled for Friday and Saturday. With him is 'Barb Wire Ben' Altkin, who will be entertaining in the gazebo on the Rupert Square.

Rudy Gonzales will appear at 7:30 p.m. Friday and Saturday at the Wilson Theatre. There will be a half-hour pre-show about historical moments in Rupert's history. Mayor Audrey Nelwerth and the oldest person in Rupert will be honored. Tickets are $5 per person. The Ben and Terry Cowboy show will appear at the gazebo in the Rupert Square throughout the weekend. There is no charge. Volunteer talent is still needed to fill up the gazebo schedule. For information, call Gary Schorzman at 312-1556. Learn more about Rudy Gonzales, check out www.cowboyrudy.com.

For 11 years, he has served as the Saturday night entertainer at the world's largest cowboy poetry gathering, the National Cowboy Symposium in Lubbock, Texas. He has also served on panels there regarding Hispanic influence on the cowboy culture, publishing and how to write cowboy poetry. His second video, called "Cowboy Poetry Life" has sold 165,000 copies. Gonzales says his cowboy entertainment has roots in reality.

"Cowboy music was designed to quiet the cows and to entertain one another," he said. "It's a part of the lifestyle. It was not designed to be danced to. That's something else. He likes to get people started in the profession. Even a granddaughter of Roy and Dale Evans has turned to him for help, says Gonzales, who firmly believes in "always remember to dance with the one that brings you."

He loves Idaho and wants to give back some of the good fortune and joy the state has given him.

He raises beef cattle at his ranch in Eagle which his wife runs while he is away.

"I want to make this event in Rupert the best it can be," he said. "Ride for the brand means a cowboy will give his life for his outfit."

Arriving with Rudy Gonzales will be Barb Wire Ben Altkin and Terry Rekov, who will perform in the Gazebo on the square along with dozens of local volunteers. Barb Wire Ben was honored recently with the Top Hand Award and inducted into the Idaho Cowboys Hall of Fame.

Gary Schorzman, co-chairman of the Rupert Centennial Committee, said that when planning began two years ago, the committee was hoping for an original play.

"Then, we heard about Rudy," he said. "All of a sudden it just seemed natural."

Baseball league holds memorial for player

By Pat Marcanonio
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — Carlos Silva remembers Jesse Naranjo as a good baseball player, someone who was demanding on himself because he always wanted to be the better.

The Northwest Baseball League will hold a memorial for Naranjo, who was fatally shot Nov. 23 in Twin Falls.

At the ceremony, league representatives will present a plaque and a shirt to Naranjo's parents, Gene and Bertha Naranjo of Heyburn, and Jesse Naranjo's team number, 35, will be retired.

"The ceremony will be held at 11:15 a.m. Sunday at Cowboy Field at Harman Park in Twin Falls.

Naranjo was the second baseman for Silva's team, the Twin Falls Glans, for one season, but Naranjo had played softball for several years with his brothers, said Silva, who is league president and a league founder.

During his high school years, Naranjo also played baseball, basketball and football, and graduated from Minico High School in 1991. He is survived by six children.

News of Naranjo's death came as a shock to everyone, Silva said.

"He was a good player," Silva said. "It was Silva's idea to memorialize the player."

"We have to realize they play in that league and we have to respect them," he said.

There are six teams in the Northwest Baseball League, which started its season April 2. For more information about the league, call Silva at 212-4034. Juan Carlos Pina, 32, faces a first-degree murder charge related to Naranjo's death. Naranjo, 33, was killed by a sawed-off shotgun blast to the abdomen in Twin Falls. A grand jury also indicted 17-year-old Johnny A. Shores on a charge of voluntary manslaughter. Shores is accused of shooting Naranjo.

"The grand jury indictment alleges that Pina decided Naranjo against his will and that during the course of the kidnapping, Naranjo was killed. The indictment against Shores alleges he killed Naranjo in a sudden quarrel, but without malice aforethought and premeditation."

Pina is tentatively scheduled to go on trial in mid-June. Shores' trial date is set for July 18.

Univision anchor's life now an open book

The Associated Press

Miami — Univision nightly news anchor Maria Elena Salinas has a career investigating the lives of others, covering leaders from Pope John Paul II to former Chilean President Augusto Pinochet.

On her 25th anniversary with the top Spanish-language network, the Miami-based Salinas, who co-anchors with Jorge Ramos, turned her skills inward, offering what is rare in journalism—a look at the person behind the reporter. Salinas' memoir, "I Am My Father's Daughter," was released May 11.

In the book, Salinas explores her own family's hidden stories. She describes the discovery that her father, an illegal immigrant, was once a Catholic priest in Mexico and lost his legal status in the United States because he refused to fight during World War II.

She also traces her rise as the youngest daughter in a poor immigrant family in Los Angeles to one of the nation's top Spanish-language anchors.

Salinas talked with The Associated Press about her decision to share her own story, the current immigration debate and her regrets about her father.

AP: What motivated you to come out with your story now?

Salinas: I had the idea of writing the book many, many years ago.

After the attacks of Sept. 11, an anti-immigrant wave began to take over the country. And during the beginning of the war in Iraq, there was also this patriotism, this nationalism. I thought, "I really don't think it's time to write this book right now because I want to celebrate my father's life and the contributions he made to my life. I don't want this to be a book about an undocumented, immigrant dad—desader."

AP: What role do you think the Spanish-language media has played in the United States?

Salinas: Spanish language media in general has had a tremendous influence in the growth of the Hispanic community.

In the beginning of my career in 1991, we had little political representation, especially in L.A. At the local level, we had no one in City Hall. When a seat ask people in Lincoln Heights didn't even know there was an election. I know that we in Spanish-language media had to play a big role in helping educate them and helping them see the responsibility they had.

AP: Is that advocacy journalism?

Salinas: I can go out and tell them to vote, but I'm not going to tell them how to vote for. I think there's a fine line, and you have to know how to balance that line.

AP: Because your father was an illegal immigrant, how do you reconcile your personal feelings when covering the issue?

Salinas: I've been covering immigration for 25 years. I've been the daughter of immigrants, one legal and one undocumented, for many, many years.

I've never really changed my point of view. I don't think there should be an open border policy.

But I cannot imagine how anyone thinks logically that you can round up 12 million people and send them to their countries of origin.

Idaho's high court tackles the end run around voters

With little fanfare in the news headlines, Idaho's Supreme Court did local taxpayers a huge favor last week. No longer can local governments make a quick dash to a judge for quick approval of long-term debt, all in the name of an "ordinary and necessary" expense.

Our view: The Idaho Supreme Court wisely reins in on judicial confirmation projects. What do you think?

We welcome viewpoints from our readers on this and other issues.

Do those words sound familiar to you? They should. From Twin Falls County to Jerome to Boise, the ordinary and necessary loophole for long-term debt has helped government evade voters and the two-thirds vote needed to build projects. The justices have issued a way to rein that trend in for good.

Under the Idaho Constitution, local government leaders cannot incur long-term debt beyond one year's budget, unless they get approval from a supermajority (67 percent) vote. But the Constitution includes a loophole which allows governments to spend higher amounts for "ordinary and necessary" purposes if they get approval from a judge.

The problem is how broadly that language has been applied in recent years. The "ordinary and necessary" terminology has led to numerous projects going the route of judicial confirmation.

In Boise, officials went around voters to get judicial confirmation for a $11 million airport parking terminal.

In Jerome, officials built a $3.9 million water system by going to a judge instead of voters.

In Twin Falls County, commissioners flirted with judicial confirmation to build a new jail, all because they saw it as "ordinary and necessary," but not necessary for a public vote.

Most recently, Blaine County sought a district judge's approval for a new jail costing between $8 million and $11 million. Opponents argue that project should see a formal bond vote.

In the case of Boise, officials were pushing for a second parking terminal worth $29 million. Enter Boise activist David Frazier, who successfully blocked Boise's proposal for an $18 million police station through judicial confirmation in 2002. Frazier opposed Boise's plan for a second terminal, which was set up as a lease-purchase agreement. The bank would guarantee the financial backing on the 30-year deal, while city officials would lease the operation with an annual payment.

(Stop us if this sounds like a certain Twin Falls County deal involving a vacant lumber building.)

Frazier, however, smelled something rotten in Denmark. He asked a key question: Who pays the taxes on these buildings leased by the city? The answer is no one. Eventually the matter went to the Supreme Court, where the justices finally provided a historical context for "ordinary and necessary" that had been ignored for years.

The 4-1 decision, written by Justice Roger Burdick, reversed the district court opinion approving the terminal project. A terminal may be "ordinary" as an element of public infrastructure, but the "necessary" argument was a stretch. Conditions that warrant a project as "necessary" should be confined to public safety, repair and maintenance, or the legal obligation to make the change without delay.

Burdick said that without a clear need for an immediate or emergency response, the matter has to go to the voters, and that "there must exist a necessity, not simply for the expenditure, but also for making the proposed expenditure at or during such year."

But his long fight for public accountability has produced a clear victory for taxpayers.

As he explained, "When comes to the Idaho Constitution and long-term debt, voters hold the purse strings."

It's solitary for Rumsfeld

As the "Rummy Must Go" protests grow in ally cities and numbers, it's beginning to feel like Secretary of Defense Donald Rumsfeld's days are numbered. Three weeks into the war in Iraq, American casualties are back on the upswing, the fledgling government is stalled amid car bombings and assassinations are wreaking havoc on civilians. The war is not yet a failure, but the prospects for victory, at least the total victory President Bush and Rumsfeld initially promised, are nil.

In short, despite Bush's praise for him Friday, there is no compelling argument for keeping Rumsfeld. He fought the war the way he wanted, against the advice of many commanders, and it hasn't worked out. Military rules of accounting for the war, including the six retired generals demanding Rumsfeld's firing, must answer before the ax falls.

Second, how would such a dramatic firing affect the morale of our troops in Iraq and Afghanistan?

As to the benefits, it's hard to see what they would be unless American policies, military and political, also change. The issue is not who, but what. What are our goals and what are we willing to do to achieve them? Although Bush has lowered his sights, promising our troops will leave when Iraqis can take their place, even those diminished aims seem out of reach.

COLUMNIST MICHAEL GOODWIN

It's not clear how a new secretary alone would make a difference.

Consider one of the key critics of Rumsfeld: that he was so intent on modernizing and slimming the armed forces that he never put enough troops on the ground. While military planners had for years estimated that it would take up to 500,000 troops to occupy Iraq after Saddam was toppled, coalition forces have managed only 130,000, including 150,000 Americans. Retired Marine Gen. Anthony Zinni, for example, one of those now condemning Rumsfeld, recently said more troops would have snuffed out the insurgency before it began. When I asked Zinni whether more troops also would have led to more American casualties, he said no, that he believed a stronger presence would have actually prevented many of our losses.

Those are intriguing points, but even if Bush and a new secretary now adopted that thinking, it may be too late to act. A huge increase in our troop levels would not be welcomed by Iraqis. And here at home, the war is so unpopular that Bush and the GOP would be punished in the November elections if they tried to send more soldiers into battle.

As for the troop morale issue, virtually all reports, official and anecdotal, say it remains high.

That is a credit to the character of our forces and their training. But how would they react if Rumsfeld, their boss, were booted because of the results? We can't know for sure, but it's hard to fathom how their morale or performance would improve. Most likely, an element of doubt would surface, about themselves and the battlefield can be fatal.

Rumsfeld has said twice that he offered to quit, but that Bush refused to accept his resignation. Perhaps the third time will be the charm. Fair enough. And then what?

Mother seeks support group for triplet families

My name is Sue Hayes. I live with my family in Paul. My husband and I are the parents of almost 2-year-old triplets. We are aware of other triplet families in the Magic Valley, although we have never come into direct contact with them. I am interested in finding these families so we can perhaps build a local network of resources, support and friendship.

If anyone reading this has any ideas how I might be able to find the other, please contact me via e-mail at suehayes@pint.org. You may also contact me via phone at (208) 532-4737.

If you wish in advance for any information you may have, SUE HAYES Paul

Politicians ignore the realities of illegal labor

I'm fed-up reading about the illegal immigrants that we do about them. We shouldn't reward them for breaking our laws and make them citizens. There's people waiting to come here legally. Are we honest enough to forget the paperwork and the waiting, it's OK, we will make you a citizen anyway? A person that wants to become a citizen learns our language. They don't understand why most of us want our government to use English; we want to be paying for all the books and brochures in other languages.

I read where are the farmers going to get the labor to work the fields? Where are all the illegal immigrants that we have already come here? Think they might be working at higher-paying jobs? Jobs that citizens would like to have?

It's a pity that our elected leaders won't enforce the laws we already have; instead, they tell us they're going to pass new laws. We already have laws to cover this out-of-control problem. I e-mailed the House and Senate in Idaho. I received only two answers in return. I asked, what are your views on free trade with countries that use slave wages and have children doing the work of adults? They have no benefits and when they can no longer do the job, they're out on their own.

This is an election year. The politicians will say what we want to hear in order to be re-elected. We already know what they've been doing. Our country has more foreign debt then ever. Bush has even borrowed money from communist China to pay a change.

Commission challenger is a breath of fresh air

When an incumbent public official draws a challenger in a local primary contest, it's always a reason to cheer—and that's the case this spring in Twin Falls County where Terry Kramer is challenging Gary Grindstaff for one of the commission seats. Terry is exactly the kind of candidate we need in this seat. He has a long record of public service and, better yet, he's a listener. He appreciates people and has a listening points of view, and looks for real solutions. He's different from the incumbent.

For example, he supports the merger of Magic Valley Regional Medical Center and St. Luke's and has all along. The incumbent recently said he supported it, too, but all of last year he wanted to get the proposal defeated. Terry supports careful analysis of county space needs before attempting to buy an empty warehouse space like the former Lumber building. He helped draft a reasonable livestock ordinance. He worked to solve the jail crowding issue. When he was in leading the way to local citizens before spending big bucks for outside consultants. He believes county employees have the right to run for public office just like all citizens do.

On all of these points, he's been a responsible, commonsense, listener and leader. That's why he's the right choice for county commissioner in the May primary.

No, he's not the incumbent, but he is the right choice this time. He's got my vote. Terry will bring a fresh listening and commonsense perspective to county government. He's a great challenger, a better leader, and a great choice for county commissioner.

No way to repay your debts? No problem

We pay our debts. The national debt has grown, but we don't need to worry it's our debt. Someone else will pay it later or inflation will decrease the value of the dollar, which will decrease the debt or wipe it out.

What I meant We're debtors, we believe in responsibility and paying our bills, so let's pay it off and insist that the rest of the citizens do likewise.

The government says the amount owed by each person including children is $30,000. So if you have a family of four, you only owe $120,000. No problem, get another loan on your place or a second or third job. But we know that government accounting won't make Enron proud. If the accounting was on the accurate accrual method required of all other businesses, the per person debt would be $156,000. Wow, now we're talking real money, $624,000 for four people. You have a family of six, your debt comes to $336,000.

Fortunately, the government has a payment plan called taxes (if you could get them to pay the debt rather than blow it). You say, "I don't have any money for even the payment plan. Let me pay more; after all, they got it through all the advantages we have in this great country."

Hold it! We're responsible Idahoans. We don't believe in that. WANDA PARKER BUNDA

Fact and myth about race 'Duke' it out in lacrosse sex scandal

The two Duke indictments handed down last Monday—and a handful of inconsequential facts about race, sex and class in the South—have demolished some of our cherished stereotypes and busted the merchants of victimhood. Ever since news surfaced last month about the alleged rape of a exotic dancer by three members of the Duke lacrosse team, we've been treated to the usual litany of lamentations from the usual suspects. So familiar is the script by now that most Americans could ad-lib without cue cards.

There's a female victim, there's usually a feminist spokesperson making the case against aggressive males. There's a black victim, there's usually a black reverend making a case against racism.

Enter the Rev. Jesse Jackson—who has been performing the same gig for so long, he's become a caricature of his caricature—trying to keep the memory of slavery alive.

"The history of white men and black women, and the special fantasies and exploitation, is old and ancient," said Jackson, commenting on the case. "The historical pattern of this behavior arises so many times and conjures up so many bad memories."

No one wishes to minimize the pain of slavery or the trauma of rape, whether it's the hands of a 19th-century plantation owner or a modern-day lacrosse player, but let's be clear: The historical pattern of Jackson's behavior is what keeps those fears aroused and conjures up bad memories. Jackson was a honest dealer in the race card game, he'd have to mention that those ancient fears, though perhaps once justified, are no longer factually relevant. The U.S. Department of Justice's 2003 National Crime Victimization Survey, which breaks down crime victims by race and ethnicity, indicates that the vast majority of violent crimes, including rape, are intra-racial. Blacks tend to attack blacks, and whites tend to attack whites.

There is no current trend of white men raping black women, in other words. In fact, though sample sizes are considered too small to draw any solid conclusions, the most recent figures show that among white male victims, 15.5 percent of those rapes were perpetrated by blacks, while 0.0 percent of black victims were raped by white males. (Zero in this case is a rounded figure meaning that the total number of black women raped by white men is between 0 and half of 1 percent of the total.)

If we're going to talk about race and crime, we may as well rely on facts rather than ancient memories that serve only to sensationalize and emotionalize what is already a painful episode in Southern history.

We can't help noting that the two young men indicted are from New York and New Jersey as it turns out. Meanwhile, Duke University and Durham, located just a few miles from the University of North Carolina's Chapel Hill and smack dab in the center of what's known as the Research Triangle, are about as Southern these days as the Bronx.

Another myth shattered by facts is the claim that the alleged perpetrators belong to a privileged class by virtue of their attendance at Duke University, an expensive private school where tuition and fees run about $40,000 per year.

The impression of privilege is expanded by the perception that lacrosse is a white prep school sport. While true that lacrosse is popular at northern prep schools, it's also a popular sport in northern public schools, and it's most popular in the South.

In any case, 40 percent of Duke's students receive financial aid, and minorities represent 37.1 percent of Duke's student body, though only 9 percent are black. Another 21.5 percent are Asian and 6.5 percent are Hispanic. Nevertheless, the Journal of Blacks in Higher Education has named Duke and UNC among the most racist schools in the nation for African-Americans.

As of Tuesday, a third person was expected to face indictment in the rape case. Given that all but one of the Duke lacrosse team is white, we can safely bet that third person also will be white. Beyond that, any commentary about race and privilege is meaningless—nothing more than the tropes of snake-oil salesmen and rabble-rousers who come to town fretting and strutting upon life's stage has passed.

Do price increases point to inflation? Only time will tell

I usually don't see inflation hiding behind every tree, but some current prices give me pause. Gold, the diamond-encrusted inflation hedge, is near $600 per ounce — the highest in two decades. Copper is about $2.70 per pound, over three times its usual level during the 1990s. Other metals are at similarly high price levels.

The assessed value of some farmland my wife and I own in southwest Minnesota went up by 31 percent this year, according to a recent tax notice. The value of our house in St. Paul, Minn., has increased an average 13 percent annually for five years.

Is something going on here? As a teacher of introductory economics, I know that increases in the prices of a few goods — even when they grab headlines — do not constitute inflation. Inflation is an increase in the general price level. We measure general price levels with carefully tabulated

Indexes like the Consumer Price Index and the Gross Domestic Product Deflator.

Such indexes show only modest increases in general prices, once oil and gas are factored out. Yes, some monthly increases have been higher than the average for the preceding 15 years. But they are not out of line with the average for the six decades since World War II ended.

Plus, Milton Friedman taught us that inflation "is always and everywhere a monetary phenomenon." That is, inflation only occurs when excessive growth of the money supply allows it.

Yes, the U.S. money supply grew substantially faster than output from 2001 through 2004. But more recently, money growth has moderated while our nation's economy is growing quite strongly.

The reasons for housing price increases are an entire subject unto themselves. Midwest farmland prices are based on a very thin market with few sales in any given year. The increase on our farm does not represent a nationwide phenomenon.

So, there's no need to worry, right? Well, as economists are wont to say, "maybe no and maybe yes." Not all considerations favor complacency.

One sobering perspective is that it is nearly impossible to find a time in the last 60 years when sharp rises in the price of gold and non-agricultural commodities were not accompanied by inflation. Hold on to your hat with at least one hand.

Anchors away for female broadcasters

COLUMNIST
KAREN HELLER

Here it is 2006, and the big news is — wait for it — the old networks have gone and picked a woman to read the news all by herself.

Many publications have devoted reservoirs of ink to the business of Katie Couric jumping ship from NBC's "Today" show to the CBS "Evening News."

With a dwindling audience for broadcast evening news, totaling about 29 million, and many of the viewers candidates for Levitra, Couric seems a smart, fresh move. It's unclear whether this will be enough to get younger people to detangle from their devout love affair with the Internet, especially when Couric may appear oldish to them. Like Lindsay Lohan's mother or something, but a network exec can dream.

Still, it's amazing that Couric is news. Women are all over the place on the tube, covering wars, floods, you know, the traditional guy flak-jacket stuff, but back in the studio there's a need to hear the lead-ins from daddy or an unclesular son in a sweater vest.

Not that other countries are so far ahead. In Italy, women are allowed to read the news — provided they take off their tops.

In France, all that liberte, egalite and fraternite works as long as the citizen is white and Gallic. It was only recently that French networks started using broadcasters of African and Arab descent. Martinique-born Audrey Pulvar, speaking to the New York Times, revealed that television executives told her that "the French public is not ready" for a nonwhite face and "I already have a black and I don't need another one." That was only a few years ago.

Today, she reads the news on the state-run France 3. Again, it made news.

It's hoped that Couric will be judged as her male colleagues have been, by her work and not her wardrobe decisions (she has fabulous taste, anyway), though I have my doubts. Life is a locker room, as I've remarked before, and it's hard for many people not to get caty about women doing better than they are, even those who are deserving of such success.

Couric has put in her time, and she's shown intelligence, tenacity, charm and, yes, a certain amount of sparkle required for the trade.

Sure, she's done her share of dumb things on "Today" but, then, hasn't everyone?

In an ideal world, if she does her job well and the ratings improve, Couric should be allowed to keep the post well into late middle age, when most women tend to mysteriously vanish from screens small and large.

The true news would be that Couric is allowed to mature, even wrinkle, and still be doing the news at the same age as Schieffer.

Twin Falls boys doubles win against strong 3A Cutthroats

By Brad Guile
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — It was a bit of payback from a match that happened a few years ago.

Twin Falls doubles partners Brent Little and Chris MacMillan conquered The Community School's Christian Cairncross and Wes Flannigan in Twin Falls on Wednesday.
"I know that Christian was good because I played him when I was 14 and he... I pretty much got my butt handed to," MacMillan said.

So call it a nice bit of revenge for a couple of guys who have only played together for a month, taking the match 4-6, 6-1, 6-0 over the defending 3A state doubles champions, partners for three years.

Ultimately, The Community School toppled another school from a higher classification, winning 6-4 over the Bruins. The Cutthroats defeated 4A Jerome 7-1 last week before weather halted play.

"But the Bruins' No. 1 boys singles and doubles players left their mark on the visitors from Ketchum.

"We just fell apart," Cairncross said. "Serves were the main thing."

"Double faulting," Flannigan added, who had the most trouble putting the ball in play.

Little and MacMillan had trouble in the first set, but quickly adjusted to the different style of play.

"They both had western forehands which is different from anyone in Twin Falls. It was a little difficult at first. And we weren't getting out serves in the first set, which was hard," MacMillan said.

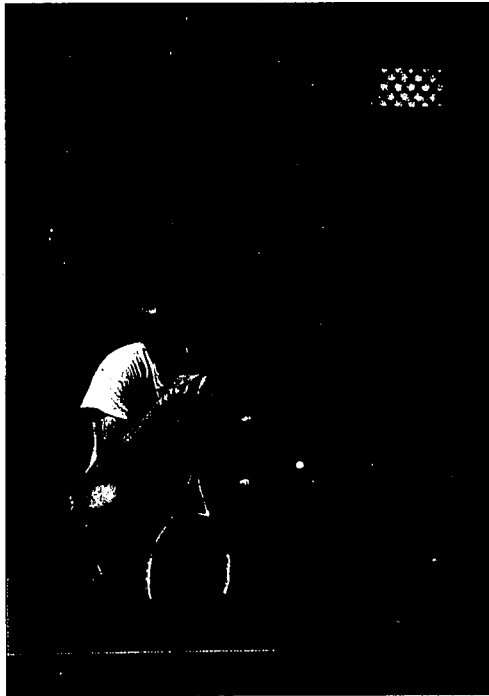

"After that, it was good," Little added.
Twin Falls coach Debbie VanEngelen said she has high hopes for the dynamic duo, who have won about half-a-dozen matches together.

"They're going to be state contenders," she said. "They love tennis and are very coachable."

Cairncross attributed the fall to a lack of focus during the second set, and they never recovered.

Community School coach Phil Huss said they were simply outmatched.
"Wes lost confidence in his serve," Huss said. "It went well for them in the first set. They were moving their feet, working well together, but they played against a tremendous team."

In singles play, No. 1 Eric Heib blew out Peter Alexander in the first set.
For the girls doubles, the opposite happened as Community School's Mandy Alexander and Devon Bunce dropped the first set and fought back to win the match against Quincy Heitcher and Meredith LaPorta.

"We lost our momentum," Heitcher said. "It was more in our head than what they were doing."
LaPorta added that the girls split and

Alexander and Bunce were able to hit the ball down the middle, with the Bruins unable to make a shot.

"As the Bruins came apart mentally, the Cutthroats found their game."
"We got rid of our jitters," Bunce said. "The Cutthroats dominated in girls singles and mixed doubles. Please see DUO, Page B2

Silver appointed deputy commish

By Brian Mahoney
Associated Press writer

NEW YORK — NBA Entertainment president Adam Silver was appointed Wednesday to the role of deputy commissioner, replacing Russ Granik as the NBA's No. 2 man behind David Stern.

Silver was elected unanimously during the league's two-day annual meeting on Wednesday and will take office July 1.

Silver, 43, will retain his responsibilities with NBA Entertainment, which he has run for nearly eight years, while adding those of Granik.

Granik announced in October he would step down following this season.

Stern originally said a successor would be announced by the end of the year or the All-Star break in February, but said he pushed back the timeline out of respect for Granik, who will remain an adviser to the commissioner.

"I wanted All-Star to be about Russ and not about anybody or anything else, and this seemed to be the better time to make the announcement," Stern said.

"We had a celebration at All-Star for Russ, we honored him amongst the owners, he presented the trophy with me for the MVP and I didn't want to detract from that."

Silver's responsibilities with NBA Entertainment have included the development and growth of NBA.com and NBA TV. He also is a key player in the league's international business ventures, overseeing operations of 12 worldwide offices.

He called the deputy commissioner position "one of the great jobs in sports" and said he was pleased he was still getting to work on his current interests, such as new technologies. He said he's prepared to fill Granik's role during collective bargaining, which often included being the tough negotiating voice.

"I work at the will of the commissioner and will do whatever I am called upon to do," Silver said. "I think Russ' role as the so-called 'black hat' has been exaggerated somewhat because I don't think it's in Russ' nature either to be a difficult person. I will play whatever role I am needed to play."

New device offers new view of NASCAR

By Jenna Fryer
Associated Press writer

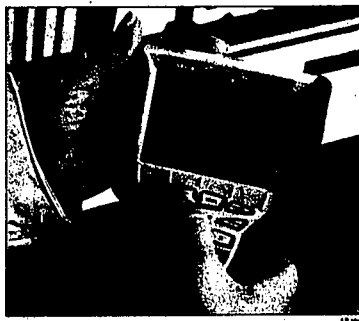

CHARLOTTE, N.C. — From his seat high in the grandstands, Lance Ramsey could see every bit of action on the race track. When he yawned for more insight into the race, he tried to look no farther than the device in his hands.

Sprint Nextel introduced its latest contribution to NASCAR this season with the FanView, a hand-held device that will undoubtedly become a must-have gadget for the die-hard gearhead.

Part radio, part scanner, part television, part statistic service, the FanView blows away any current race accessories on the market.

"It's like sitting at home and watching TV but you're still at the race. You get all the same info they put on TV right at your seat," said Ramsey, a Seattle-area resident who uses the FanView at both Daytona and Las Vegas races this year.

"For the ultimate fan, this is the ultimate device," he said. "It's excited to bring many new technological advances to NASCAR when it took over as the top series sponsor in 2004, and the FanView is its biggest contribution yet. The device launched at Daytona when all 4,000 models were rented out before race day.

The FanView is shown at the Bristol Motor Speedway in Bristol, Tenn., on March 26. The device introduced by Sprint Nextel is part radio, part scanner, part television, and part statistic service.

The company will take more than 5,000 to Phoenix International Raceway this weekend in one of the final test runs before the FanView goes on the market. It currently rents for $50 a day, or $70 for the entire weekend. Its sale price has not yet been determined.

But whatever it costs, fans as devoted as Ramsey will have no qualms plumping their money down.

One of the biggest complaints NASCAR newcomers have is that they are unable to tell what's going on, aside from cars going in circles on the track. They often aren't sure who is leading, who is in the top 10, and aren't always familiar with the drivers.

"If you are into racing, and not just there to enjoy the atmosphere, the FanView is a must-have," said Malcolm McGregor of Greensboro, N.C. "When I came to drivers and cars we weren't familiar with, like some of the up-and-coming drivers, it told us who they were."

"When they were practicing, it was letting us know who was the fastest, how many laps they had run. When you go to a race, you can lose track of who is leading the dang thing, or who is in 13th, 14th, or 15th. This thing right here, you just hit the button and there it is."

Sturdy and light — it weighs just 12 oz., the same as a can of

Loyalty stretches only so far

Pedro Martinez was on the mound the other night in New York, which was enough to attract some 13,000 walk-ups to Shea Stadium. They came to celebrate win No. 200 for one of the best pitchers in the game.

Two seasons ago, the same fans wouldn't have paid $2 to take the No. 7 train to Queens to see Martinez pitch. Before he signed a $53 million contract with the Mets, they probably didn't even know he was nearing a career milestone.

Across town, Johnny Damon is cheered every time he comes to the plate at Yankee Stadium. He cut his hair and shaved off his beard, but he's still playing suspiciously like the guy who broke Yankee hearts when he hit two key home runs — including a grand slam — to help the Red Sox beat New York in Game 7 of the 2004 American League championship series. All is forgiven. And the wounds seem to be healing quickly in Boston, too, over the $52 million signing of their center fielder.

"I know I'll always be remembered for Game 7 to help get us to the World Series and I know I'm also going to be remembered for jumping sides," Damon said after his signing in Game 7, maybe. But these aren't your father's Red Sox anymore, either.

They're not even your older brother's. Eighteen months after winning the World Series, only 13 of the 51 players who took the field in Red Sox uniforms in 2004 still wear the organization when spring training began.

Dabe Ruoff's trade to the Yankees involved a curse that lasted for more than 10 years. Damon's departure, after a brief sputter of protest from Red Sox fans, now draws little more than a yawn.

Even Red Sox fans don't really seem to care who is wearing their uniform these days.

"Most fans today don't really remember the time that when you were a Dodger you were a Dodger forever," said Robert Passikoff, who runs Brand Keys, a New York company that does fan surveys. "You're dealing with the biotic consumer of the 21st century. These guys realize that it is a business. They may not like it, but they understand that this is how the game is now played."

Red Sox fans certainly understand it. The revolving door of players in and out of Fenway Park in recent years includes players like Martinez, Damon, Roger Clemens, Wade Boggs, Nomar Garciaparra and Manny Ramirez.

But ask Boston fans how much they love the Red Sox today, and the answer is the same as when Chad Yastrzemski and Ted Williams spent their entire years in Boston uniforms. Lose a Clemens or Martinez or gain a Ramirez or David Ortiz, it doesn't matter as long as the Green Monster remains in left field and opening day is still in April.

In Boston it's simply an opportunity to sell new jerseys. Fans there are ranked No. 1 on the Brand Keys Sports Loyalty Index, an annual survey of 14,000 fans that charts the intensity of a fan's relationship with his or her team.

The Yankees aren't far behind at No. 3, while the Mets make the top 10.

All have something in common — they have enough money to reload at any time. And that makes fans quicker to both forgive and forget.

"If you lose a popular player it all depends on how many other popular players a team has that fans can identify," Passikoff said. "If it's the Red Sox or Yankees, there's a fair roster of guys that people still like."

Surprisingly enough, the Yankees have two homegrown prospects who have made careers in the Bronx. Bernie Williams is in his 16th year as a HAILEY — Wolverine hitter Jamie Stone is on fire.

 With Wood River tied with Glens Falls at three runs, the senior hit another solo shot over the fence in the bottom of the sixth, which would rally the Wolverines to a 5-3 win over the Pilots.
 It was her fourth home run this week. She had two on Saturday against Mountain Home and one Tuesday over Minico. She has hit 6-for-7 with nearly 10 RBIs.
 "She's an athlete," Wood River head coach Dale Martin said. "But the pitching wasn't sharp by either. Samantha Engel

 However, the Pilots just couldn't get anything going. The offense fizzled after the third inning, and pitcher Rachel Anichustegui was having a bad day. She struck out eight Wolverine batters, but walked six, three of which came home first on Wood River (6-6, 2-2 Great Basin Conference West) hosts Filer on Friday. Cuddyer comes through for Twins

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — Pinch-hitter Michael Cuddyer hit a two-run homer against former teammate J.C. Romero in the 10th inning to give the Minnesota Twins to a 12-10 victory over the Los Angeles Angels on Wednesday night.
 Romero (1-1) struck out Shannon Stewart to end the inning, but he walked Luis Castillo — who stole second base without a throw and moved to third on Joe Mauer's groundout. Cuddyer, then homered over the wall in right-center field.
 Joe Nathan (1-0) picked up the win with a scoreless inning, capping the Twins' comeback from a 9-4 deficit.

Minnesota Twins pinch hitter Michael Cuddyer celebrates his game-winning, two-run home run with a high-five for the batboy, left, in the 10th inning of Los Angeles Angels' J. C. Romero Wednesday in Minneapolis. The Twins won 12-10.

Adam Kennedy had four hits and two RBIs, Orlando Cabrera hit a two-run homer, Casey Kotchman had two hits and two RBIs and Darin Erstad scored twice after leadoff doubles for Los Angeles.

After totaling eight runs in 12 hits the night before, the Angels got 13 more hits against the Twins. Kyle Lohse bore the brunt of giving up eight runs in 3 1-3 innings. Minnesota's starters, expected to be one of baseball's best ERAs through a majors-worst 7.04 ERA through 14 games.

Red Sox 9, Devil Rays 1

BOSTON — Curt Schilling (4-0) opened a season with four straight winning starts for the first time in his career.

Backed by Boston's season-high, seven-run third, Schilling (4-0) allowing one run and six hits in six innings, lowering his ERA from 1.64 to 1.61. Hit tied Jim Bunning for 15th on the strikeouts list at 2.855.

Kevin Youkilis had a solo homer and two singles as the Red Sox won for the 10th time in 13 games.

Doug Weatcher (0-1) gave up seven runs — six earned — and five hits and six walks in 2-3 innings. Tampa Bay, which has lost eight straight at Fenway Park, made a season-high four errors.

White Sox 4, Royals 0

CHICAGO — Javier Vazquez's no-hit bid ended in the seventh inning on Doug Mientkiewicz's checked swing roller down the line. There was no hit for the Royals he could do as the ball went slowly up the line.

Vazquez sent the Kansas City Royals to the 10th night in the playoffs into the ninth inning of a 4-0 victory by the Chicago White Sox on Wednesday.

The reeling Royals, who had a 19-game losing streak last season, managed one run and 11 hits in the three-game series against Chicago. Kansas City's 2-1 start is its second-slowest behind 1992, when the Royals lost 16 of their first 17, and Royals starting pitchers are 0-9 this season.

Yankees 3, Blue Jays 1

TORONTO — Alex Rodriguez homered in his third straight game and Mike Mussina made another sharp start, leading the New York Yankees over the Toronto Blue Jays 3-1 Wednesday.

Mussina (2-1) struck out a season-high seven in 7 1-3 innings, allowing one run and seven hits. He lowered his ERA to 2.67.

Kyle Farnsworth got the last two outs of the eighth and Mariano Rivera pitched the ninth on Saturday's loss in Minnesota, pitched a perfect ninth for his second save.

Former Yankee Ted Lilly (1-1) gave up two runs, seven hits and five walks in five innings.

Frank Catalanotto went 3-for-4 against Mussina, improving his career average against him to .460 in 50 at-bats.

Rodriguez homered in the fifth, tying Juan Gonzalez for 35th place with his 434th home run. Rodriguez is hitting .462 (12-10-26) in New York's seven wins and 140 (4-for-27) in seven losses.

Orioles 18, Indians 9

BALTIMORE — Kevin Millar hit a go-ahead, two-run double in a seven-run fifth capped by Corey Patterson's two-run homer.

Ramon Hernandez had a home run and four RBIs, and Jay Gibbons hit a three-run homer for the Orioles, who have won five of seven.

Johnny Peralta, Victor Martinez and Aaron Boone homered for Cleveland, which had beaten Baltimore five straight times. Martinez extended his hitting streak to 14 games, the longest streak in the major leagues this year.

A night after a 1-5 loss, the Orioles had a season-high 21 hits and batted around. Jake Westbrook (2-2) failed to protect a 7-3 lead, allowing nine runs — eight earned — and 12 hits in 4 2-3 innings.

National League Braves 2, Mets 1

NEW YORK — Tim Hudson took a shutout into the ninth inning and pitched a three-hitter, and Andruw Jones hit his fifth homer in four games to help the Atlanta Braves beat the New York Mets 2-1 Wednesday.

Hudson (1-1) struck out six and walked one. He retired his first 15 batters before Ramon Castro's leadoff single in the sixth, and didn't allow a run until Jose Reyes doubled in the ninth and scored on Chris Woodward's single.

 Mets third baseman David Wright made three errors and hit a game-ending groundout with a runner on. Tom Glavine (2-1) allowed two runs in one earned — and four hits in eight innings against his former team, which won two of three in the series.

Cardinals 4, Pirates 0

PITTSBURGH — Chris Carpenter (2-1) limited the Pirates to two hits over eight innings, struck out six and walked one to lower his ERA to 1.67. Jason Isringhausen completed the two-hitter.

Jim Edmonds homered in the second off Victor Santos (1-3) and hit a two-run double in the ninth against Roberto Hernandez. David Eckstein homered in the third.

Reds 9, Marlins 8

CINCINNATI — Cincinnati tied it with three runs in the eighth, and Edwin Escobar struck out three in the ninth of Todd Wellemeyer (0-1).

Donrelle Willis, trying to improve to 10-0 career in April, turned an 8-4 lead over to Florida's bullpen after the sixth inning. The Marlins are 0-5 in one-run games.

Padres 13, Rockies 4

DENVER — Ben Johnson had a career-high four RBIs and Vinny Castilla had four hits.

San Diego had a season-high 19 hits and took two of three from the Rockies after being swept at home by Colorado from April 7-9. Adrian Gonzalez drove in three runs and had three hits, and Khalil Greene had two hits, two walks and two RBIs.

Clayton Kershaw won for the first time since beating Arizona last Aug. 31. He allowed four runs — three earned — and nine hits in seven innings.

Zach Day (1-2) gave up eight runs and a career-high 11 hits in 3-2-3 innings.

Phillies 7, Nationals 6, 10 Innings

PHILADELPHIA — Ryan Howard's RBI single in the 10th inning completed a Philadelphia rally and led the Phillies to a 7-6 win over the Washington Nationals on Wednesday night.

Bobby Abreu opened the 10th with a walk off Mike Stanton (0-2) and moved to second on Chase Utley's one-out walk. Howard then ripped a single to right to give the Phillies only their second home win in eight games.

Ryan Franklin (1-1) worked a scoreless 10th for his first win in Philadelphia.

Ryan Church homered for the second straight game and Jose Vidro went 3-for-5 with three RBIs for the Nationals, who snapped a three-game winning streak.

Brewers 7, Astros 2

HOUSTON — Andy Pettitte is becoming this year's version of Roger Clemens. When he pitches, the Houston Astros don't get too many runs.

Pettitte lost to the Brewers for the first time since 1996 despite allowing only two runs in Milwaukee's 7-2 victory over the Astros on Wednesday night.

Detroit, Win City

By Larry Lage
Associated Press writer

DETROIT — Hockeytown of Hoopstov? Detroit is both. The top teams at the end of the NBA and NHL regular seasons are from the same city for the first time, with the Pistons and Red Wings combining to pull off the feat for the Motor City.

"It's always cool to be a part of anything that hasn't happened before," Joe Dumars, the Pistons' president of basketball operations, said Wednesday in an interview with The Associated Press. "This is a great sports town, and the fans around here are about to really have some fun following both teams."

The Red Wings ended the regular season Tuesday with an NHL-best 58 wins, and the Pistons closed Wednesday night against Washington, entering the game with an NBA-best 64 wins.

"We both established ourselves at home with great crowds, and both have been the best teams on the road," Pistons coach Flip Saunders said. "Different sports, but it's like we're being looked at each other in the mirror."

Detroit faces the Edmonton Oilers in Game 5 of the first round playoffs Friday night, and the Pistons will open the post-season this weekend against the eighth-seeded team in the Eastern Conference.

If the Red Wings and Pistons win titles in two months, Detroit will be the first city to have NBA and NHL teams win championships in the same year.

Anything less will be a disappointment for both teams — their fans — because the championship-or-bust mentality that has been cultivated with sustained success.

The Pistons went it all two years ago, came just short of repeating last season and have won 50-plus games five straight years. The Red Wings won three titles in a six-year span before two straight early exits in the playoffs before the lockout that canceled last season.

Red Wings coach Mike Babcock said his players didn't want to touch the Presidents' Trophy — awarded to the NHL team with the best record — because they want to hoist the Stanley Cup.

"We all know what it's about here," Babcock said.

For Detroit fans, they know it's wise to enjoy the Pistons and Red Wings while they're in season because the other two pro teams in town — the Tigers and Lions — will likely let them down.

Detroit hasn't had a baseball

Detroit Pistons' Carlos Delfino, of Argentina, dunks over Washington Wizards' Billy Thomas in the second quarter of their NBA basketball game in Auburn Hills, Mich., Wednesday.

team with a winning record since 1993 and hasn't won a World Series since 1984. The Lions have been the NFL's worst team since 2001, and they have one playoff victory since their last title in 1957.

For the Motor City's Big Four, success — or lack of it — seems to come from the top.

Mike Ilitch owns the Red Wings and Tigers, and his hockey team's reign atop the league was established when he hired general manager Jim Devellano in 1992.

"Ilokey wasn't on the map when Mike Ilitch bought the team, but Jimmy D. did a great job of changing that," said Red Wings GM Ken Holland, who has kept Devellano's momentum going since being promoted in 1997. "We would not be the franchise we are today without Jimmy D.'s moves and vision."

Holland kept the Red Wings on top this season despite cutting their payroll almost in half to get under the salary cap because of the NHL's new collective bargaining agreement.

While it was Jimmy D. who turned around the Red Wings, who used to give cars away to attract fans, Joe D. made the Pistons a championship-caliber team after they sunk following back-to-back titles he helped them win as a player in 1989 and 1990.

Brendan Shanahan said the Pistons were irrelevant when he started playing for the Red Wings in 1996. "It was like they didn't exist," Shanahan said. "It's been great to see what Dumars has done to bring the Pistons around because I root for all of the pro teams around here."

The Lions and Tigers have been harder to pull for because their owners — William Clay Ford and Ilitch — have not seemed to find a GM like Devellano, Holland or Dumars.

"That doesn't stop Dumars, who has evolved into a 'certified Detroit sports fan' since being drafted by the Pistons in 1985.

"My wish would be that all four teams could be contenders," he said. "The Pistons and Red Wings are there, and the other two are not far behind. I think the Lions are going to take the throne off Ilitch in the draft to help right away, and I think the Tigers have a chance to be in the playoffs."

Bonds fined for wristbands

PHOENIX (AP) — Major League Baseball gave Barry Bonds a slap on the wristbands Wednesday.

Bonds was fined $5,000 for wearing wristbands that violated baseball's apparel rules because of their size and logo design.

Baseball's president for on-field operations, confirmed that a letter was sent to Bonds Tuesday. Bonds has appealed the ruling, Watson said.

"It probably will go to an arbitrator," Watson said. Watson also said Bonds had previously run afoul of baseball's uniform guidelines before.

"He's appealed it before," Watson said. "It's been fined before."

Bonds' appeal then was heard by Bob DuPuy, baseball's chief operating officer.

It's unclear whether appeal now will be heard by John McFale, a baseball executive vice president, or whether there will be a grievance filed by the players' association that is heard by an arbitrator.

The union believes the matter is subject to the grievance procedure and will be heard by the neutral arbitrator," said Michael Weiner, the union's general counsel.

Rob Manfred, MLB's executive vice president of labor relations, had a different view. "It's on-field misconduct, and it is handled like any other on-field misconduct, and that is an appeal to Mr. McFale," he said.

Bonds was not in the starting lineup Wednesday night, but it was because of his knees and elbow, not his uniform.

Vijay looks to end slump in Houston

By Chris Duncan
Associated Press writer

HUMBLE, Texas — Vijay Singh is winless in 17 starts on the PGA Tour, his longest victory drought in four years.

He can snap out of it this week at the event where he ended his last long dry spell, the Shell Houston Open.

"I've got good feelings over here," Singh said. "I've had great success in Houston."

Singh won the 2000 Masters, then went 50 starts without a victory before setting the tournament scoring record at the TPC at the Woodlands in 2002.

The tournament moved to Redstone Golf Club in 2003. Singh finished ninth that year, then regained his Texas touch, winning in 2004 and last year, being John Daly in a playoff.

The event is once again at Redstone, but it has shifted across the street to The Tournament Course, a 7,422-yard, Jones-designed layout that was completed in August 2005.

"They keep changing the golf course on me," Singh said.

Singh knows what he has to do to win again — and that's the frustrating part. He said his eighth-place finish in the Masters illustrates why he hasn't won since the Buick Open last August.

"I'm just not playing well enough to win on Sunday," he said. "There are too many mistakes. I play two or three holes that really put me down. That's what's been happening."

Singh is still the favorite in Houston, the top-ranked player in the field.

The rest of golf's Big Five — Phil Mickelson, Tiger Woods, Retief Goosen and Ernie Els — are skipping Houston and sees three others among the top 30 in the world ranking are here: Darren Clarke, the 2004 runner-up to Singh; Padraig Harrington and David Toms, who helped design the new course with Jones.

"I feel like I'm due," Singh said. "I'm playing well enough to win. It's a matter of putting everything together."

Singh had a mixed review of the new course, with its wide fairways and large, undulating greens.

"Under the gun, you can play for the middle of the greens and be OK. That's one little issue," he said. "Apart from that, I think it's OK."

The players expect to score well if the wind stay down.

"The course could be vulnerable if it's soft and still," said Stuart Appleby, the 1999 champion. "But if it's the opposite, firm and breezy, guys will be doing a lot of thinking."

The front nine ends with a 231-yard par 3, the 15th is a 608-yard par 5 and the 17th and 18th are both 480-plus-yard par 4s.

"If I had it in a perfect world, I'd like 12 under par to win the tournament," Toms said. "I've always said if you can do that, you've challenged the players, but they're not playing the U.S. Open, either."

The course is open to the public and Toms said he and Jones tried to strike the balance between a tour-caliber test that also was reasonable for average players.

"It's hard to make a golf course that will please everybody," Toms said. "Wazy you try to do is make one that everybody can play and then it doesn't necessarily play into one person's type of game. That's what we tried to do here."

Nelson, Picard in Hall of Fame

ST. AUGUSTINE, Fla. (AP) — Larry Nelson, overlooked as a Ryder Cup captain and often forgotten despite his remarkable journey from Vietnam War veteran to three-time major champion, finally got his due Wednesday when he was elected into the World Golf Hall of Fame.

"Of all the awards, nothing can top this," Nelson said. Nelson was elected on the PGA Tour ballot by getting 65 percent of the vote, the minimum required.

He will be inducted Oct. 30 at the World Golf Village in St. Augustine, Fla., along with the late Henry Picard, selected through the veterans category and Vijay Singh, who deferred his induction after being elected last year.

That will bring membership in the Hall of Fame to 123.

Nelson's election came in his 11th year on the PGA Tour ballot, and in many respects, it was overdue.

He won the PGA Championship twice and the 1983 U.S. Open at Oakmont, joining Jack Nicklaus, Tom Watson and Seve Ballesteros as the only players to capture three majors in the 1980s. Nelson played on three Ryder Cup teams, posting a 9-3-1 record and becoming the only player to go 5-0 in a Ryder Cup.

But he was passed over as U.S. captain the last four times, with the PGA of America opting for Tom Lehman for this year's matches.

Picard, who died in 1997, won 26 times on the PGA Tour, including the 1938 Masters and the 1939 PGA Championship. He later became a teacher, with Hall of Famer Beth Daniel among his pupils.

Nelson was informed of his election three weeks ago, and even for a man who went about his golf so quietly, it was difficult for him to keep this a secret until the announcement at the Legends of Golf tournament in Savannah, Ga.

His road to the Hall of Fame is unlike any other.

Nelson's joy was baseball as a kid, and he thought golf was a sissy sport until he met a burly soldier in Vietnam named Ken Hummel who told him about guys making a living playing golf.

Returning from the war, Nelson went to Kennesaw Junior College in Georgia and decided to play golf when he wasn't in class.

He was given Ben Hogan's book, "Five Lessons: The Modern Fundamentals of Golf," as a guide, and was encouraged by members at Pine Tree Country Club, where he worked, to try the mini-tours.

"I fell in love with it and got better every day," Nelson said. "I was always put in a situation where everyone was better than I was. My motivation was getting better and feeding my family."

He broke 100 the first time he played, and made it through PGA Tour qualifying school in 1973.

Six years later, he won the Jackie Gleason Inveter Classic by three shots over Grier Jones, then won his first major in 1981 by four shots over Fuzzy Zoeller at Atlanta Athletic Club.

His defining victory might have been the U.S. Open at Oakmont in 1983, when he beat Watson by one shot.

Nelson added the '87 PGA Championship at PGA National, beating Lanny Wadkins in a playoff. He ended his career with 10 victories.

Picard won the '38 Masters with a 32 on the front nine, holding off Harry "Lightnings" Cooper and Ralph Guldahl, then won the PGA a year later with a birdie on the 36th hole to square his match with Byron Nelson, and a birdie on the first hole to win.

Henry Picard was one of the country's brightest stars in the decade leading up to World War II, where his victory total compares favorably to the likes of Sam Snead during that span," PGA Tour commissioner Tim Finchem said.

St. Luke's opens local campaign office

By Sandy Miller
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — Wayne Frandsen hasn't quite made up his mind about this "hospital situation."

So he stopped by the open house for the St. Luke's Regional Medical Center's campaign office Wednesday. The office, located inside the Twin Falls Chamber of Commerce building on Blue Lakes Boulevard, will be open through May 23 — the day voters will head to the polls to decide whether the county-owned hospital should become part of a nonprofit regional health care network headed by Boise-based St. Luke's.

Frandsen worked as an industrial mechanic for more than 30 years until a year ago when complications on his abdomen forced him to retire. He figures his problems will only get worse as he gets older and he wants to know the medical care he'll probably need will be there.

"Medical care in Twin Falls is of great concern to me if for no other reason than I have medical problems of my own," Frandsen said. "I want to know I won't have to go to Boise or Salt Lake for quality medical care."

He also wants to be reassured that the county is getting the best deal. "This is a county asset and

Twin Falls is going to lose that asset," said Frandsen, who added that had it been up to him, county commissioners would have explored offers from other hospital networks. "We should get as much return on that as we can."

Frandsen wants to hear more before making up his mind. "I don't know whether I'm in favor or not," he said.

Frandsen is just the kind of person St. Luke's wants to talk to.

"We feel if they understand what it's about, they can make their own decision, which we feel would be a positive vote," said Chuck Pomeroy, St. Luke's chief financial officer.

"They'll understand a positive vote will result in a new state-of-the-art hospital without new taxes and a local board of directors to manage the facility."

The office will be staffed by volunteer Marilyn Hempleman with help from volunteers Suzanne Hickman and Joyce Grindstad.

"I feel strongly that it's a good thing for the community," said Hempleman, standing amid the signs, buttons and information pamphlets encouraging peo-

Filer High School student is helping others one bite at a time

By Joshua Palmer
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — Ingredients for a good fundraising dinner are faith, friends and a Filer High School graduation requirement.

At least, those are the things that helped Kristina Rary, an 18-year-old senior at Filer, organize a dinner tonight that will help raise money to build a men's homeless shelter.

Filer High School requires all graduating seniors to complete a senior project, where they spend at least 15 hours toward a community-based project.

The other requirement is that the project be something the student would like to do in the future.

"She doesn't exactly want to begin a career organizing fundraisers, but she does enjoy helping people when she has the time."

Rary is not a very organized person, Rary said. "But I can get it done with a lot of help."

So Rary asked for help from her friend Bobbi Stevens, also an 18-year-old senior.

"It seems like a fitting departure to an almost lifelong friendship," Rary and Stevens have been friends since kindergarten, but now that graduation is less than two months away, they will soon be going their separate ways — Rary hopes to marry her boyfriend and teach music in Montana or Oregon, and Stevens plans on being a special education instructor.

"She complained a lot about putting the dinner together," Stevens said. "And she procrastinated, which doesn't make things any easier."

Which was probably why they were going to bake the pies the night before the dinner.

But Rary has her heart into raising money for the shelter.

"I was raised up in the church," Rary said. "And I think Christians seem to be a little bit more kind and helpful, so that has definitely influenced how I treat other people."

Jerome council reviews 2006 annexation plan

By Cathy Roemer
Times-News correspondent

JEROME — Jerome City Council members reviewed the city's 2006 Comprehensive Annexation Plan at their meeting on Tuesday.

City Administrator Travis Rothweiler presented a color-coded map to the council showing properties in various stages of annexation.

Parcels designated for annexation are as far north as 16th Avenue and south on Lincoln Avenue to the 300 South Road, where property owned by Cesco and Con Paulos is slated for commercial development.

The bulk of the proposed annexations will be housing subdivisions, including several parcels adjacent to 10th Avenue West where two new schools will be built.

Most annexation is occurring east of the city with new housing slated for property across from Horizon Elementary, which is currently known as the Stauffer property.

Subdivision construction is already in progress along 100 East. In the same area, property owned by the Jerome School District will be annexed into Canyonside Christian School and the LDS Church on 100 South Road.

Many of the annexations have been requested by property owners, Rothweiler said. And nearly all of the properties involved have signed onto the annexation plan or agreed to be annexed.

Council members will now have a chance to review the annexation proposal and decide which parcels to support from annexation, if any.

Once the council has made a decision, open houses will be held to the public, followed by two public hearings: one with the city's Planning and Zoning board and the other with the City Council at the College of Southern Idaho.

Rothweiler reported that the Crossroads Point project is "well underway." Sewerline construction from the city to Crossroads is moving along as well, he said.

Also, Rothweiler told council members they can expect to see a petition from the Idaho Citizens to Support Circulated by Carl Nellis, president of the anti-Sempra group, Citizens Protecting Resources, the petition was for signatures to support Idaho's zero percent mercury emissions in the state.

Ground broken: Habitat for Humanity volunteers ahead of schedule

By Blak Koch
Times-News correspondent

TWIN FALLS — By Thanksgiving, Daniel Pamparau will have achieved the American dream of owning a home.

With the Habitat for Humanity of the Magic Valley — in partnership with Thrivent Financial of Lutherans — the single father of four will soon be enjoying his four-bedroom, 1350 square-foot house at 325 Walnut Street.

A groundbreaking celebration was held Wednesday evening with representatives from both organizations and plenty of friends and family in attendance.

"It is an honor for us to be working alongside the Thrivent group," said Gordon Saffrey, president of the Magic Valley Habitat affiliate. "We are already ahead of schedule."

In fact, the Magic Valley affiliate of Thrivent Financial is the smallest in the Northern Rocky region and is ahead of the curve, said member Mike Feller.

"Your efforts say a lot of who you are and what you are doing," Feller said. "A lot of credit is being done here."

The effort hasn't been overlooked by the Pamparaus children.

"We are so excited to finally have a home to call our own," Kenny, 11, said.

Habitat for Humanity

Habitat for Humanity is accepting applications. This summer, Habitat will be choosing families to participate in the home building/ownership program. For more information, call Linda Fleming at 734-1057.

"We have moved a lot and finally we get to stay somewhere."

Victoria, 13, said. "I like the way it is being built, with everyone being so courteous and volunteering for us. It is really awesome."

She is looking forward to painting her room purple and said, "I won't be leaving till I move out — when I'm 18, maybe."

The neighborhood is already feeling like home and friends live right across the street.

"We finally have friends right here, not all the way up the road," said Tirsten, 10.

Their father, Daniel Pamparau, is grateful for the opportunity to give his children a better life. During the ceremony he said, "I am really thankful for this opportunity and everyone helping me out. Me and my family. Thanks to my friends who are being supportive."

Daniel Pamparau, right, and his family smile Wednesday as they put shovels to dirt during the groundbreaking on their new home under construction through Habitat for Humanity.

"I'm really speechless — I want to thank everyone."

Providing an opportunity for affordable homeownership is a key goal of the Habitat program.

With the addition of Thrivent funds, the partnership will be able to provide more homes in the area than ever before, with at least two being built in the Magic Valley this year.

Thrivent Financial will be giving $74,000 for the project. Locally over $10,000 will be raised for the construction.

Pamparau will also be putting at least 500 "sweat equity" hours into the project and will be repaying his mortgage to Habitat, who holds the loan over a 30-year term at zero percent interest.

Along with financial support, Thrivent will be providing volunteers to help build the home, said Joseph Young, president of the local Thrivent chapter.

He explained that nationally Thrivent Financial has committed to providing $105 million to Habitat for Humanity over the next four years.

"This is a learning experience," he said. "Hopefully we will know what we are doing next time, but I think that it will all go well."

Four early editions of Book of Mormon stolen in Utah recovered

By Debbie Hummel Associated Press writer

SALT LAKE CITY — Four early editions of the Book of Mormon stolen in two separate thefts have been recovered, police said.

Thirteen historical religious books, including two first editions of the Book of Mormon that were published in 1830, were taken last week from the Daughters of Utah Pioneers museum. Two others have been missing since last November when a small safe was reported stolen from the LDS Institute of Religion at the University of Utah.

Early Tuesday, Utah Highway Patrol dispatchers heard from an anonymous caller who said police should check in a mailbox near a high school, said patrol Lt. Tony Garcia.

Inside the box was an envelope with no postage and no return address. It was written on the front. Two copies of the Book of Mormon stolen from the museum were inside, Garcia said.

The two copies of the Book of Mormon stolen from the LDS Institute last fall were recovered at a home Tuesday where a SWAT raid was conducted, said Midvale police Sgt. Steve Shreuve.

"It was wonderful news," said Allan Gunnerson, the Institute's director.

The value of the books is thought to be between $800,000 and $1 million. Eleven of the stolen books were recovered last week when a book store owner told investigators he paid $11,000 for two first editions of the Book of Mormon. He also gave police the seller's name. Officers traced the man's driver's license number and then staked out a Magna home, where they made an arrest and recovered nine more books.

On Friday, police booked Robert M. Lindsay, 48, for investigation of felony theft and possession of stolen property.

Tiny chemical reactor could make farms self-sufficient for energy

By William McCall AP Business Writer

PORTLAND, Ore. — A tiny chemical reactor that can convert vegetable oil directly into biodiesel could help farmers turn some of their crops into bioenergy fuel to operate agricultural equipment instead of relying on costly imported oil.

"This is all about producing energy in such a way that it liberates people," said Goran Janovic, a chemical engineering professor at Oregon State University who developed the reactor.

The device — about the size of a credit card — pumps vegetable oil and alcohol through tiny parallel channels, each smaller than a human hair, to convert the oil into biodiesel almost instantly.

By comparison, it takes more than a day to produce biodiesel with current technology.

Conventional production involves digesting a catalyst, such as sodium hydroxide, in alcohol, then stirring it into vegetable oil in large vats for about two hours. The mixture then sits for 12 to 24 hours while a chemical reaction forms biodiesel along with glycerin, a byproduct.

The glycerin is separated and can be used to make other products, such as soaps, but it still contains the chemical catalyst, which must be neutralized and removed using hydrochloric acid, a long and costly process.

The microreactor under development by the university and the Oregon Nanoscience and Microtechnologies Institute eliminates the mixing, the standing time and perhaps even the need for a catalyst.

"If we're successful with this, nobody will ever make biodiesel any other way," Janovic said.

Biodiesel production on the farm also could reduce distribution costs by eliminating the need for tanker truck fuel delivery, part of the growing effort to meet fuel demand locally — instead of relying on distant refineries and tanker transport.

Audit finds flaws in city procedure approving monument

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — An independent audit has found the Salt Lake City mayor's office and city library violated their own policies in approving a monument honoring organ donors.

The $994,000 monument was supposed to be a gift to the city from the nonprofit Quest for the Gift of Life Foundation. The foundation subsequently folded before raising all the money, but the monument was built on Liberty Square in 2004.

Because Mayor Rocky Anderson's senior adviser, D.J. Baxter, signed the construction order, the city was responsible for paying the remaining funds. The mayor and organ-donation supporters raised some $300,000 to pay Big D Construction.

The audit, paid for by the City Council, was released Tuesday and outlined six areas where the monument deal strayed from city procedure. Among the areas: The mayor's office should have had donations in place before allowing the monument to be built; it or the library should have created a fund in the city system for the project; and the mayor's office "does not have the authority to obligate the city for construction projects," the audit said.

Soggy spring has horse owners concerned about West Nile

By Samantha Young
Associated Press writer

ELK GROVE, Calif. — Every six months, Pam Murphy brings her five horses from her rolling property in the Sierra foothills town of Plymouth to suburban Sacramento for vaccinations against the West Nile virus.

Like other horse owners, Murphy is bracing for another outbreak of the virus, a potentially fatal disease that afflicts horses more than any other mammal.

"It's definitely here because people have had horses throughout the Sacramento Valley," Murphy said as she readied her 3-year-old horse Whiskey for his vaccination.

West Nile virus has killed 430 horses in California during the last two years, according to the state Department of Food and Agriculture. Veterinarians report wet spring coupled with warm weather could further spread the disease among an estimated 20 percent of horses in the state that have yet to be vaccinated.

The recent rains that have saturated Northern California since the beginning of March have created the breeding grounds for mosquitoes, the primary conduit of the virus to horses and humans.

"If there's water standing, we're going to have lots of mosquitoes," said Gregory Lanzaro, director of the Mosquito Research Program at the University of California, Davis. "And right now, we're soaked."

Female mosquitoes lay their eggs in pools of standing water, where the young insects spend their first few days. Rice fields, swollen drainage ditches and stock ponds in livestock pastures are prime breeding grounds in rural areas.

Veterinarian James Gaines gives a West Nile Virus vaccination to Rocket, a 10-year-old Arabian/Quarter Horse mix, at the Grant Line Veterinary Hospital in Elk Grove, Calif., Monday. The California Department of Food and Agriculture is urging horse owners to vaccinate their animals.

In more populated areas, mosquitoes breed in storm sewers, discarded containers that fill with rain, bird baths and dirty swimming pools.

"The more water you have, the more breeding grounds you have for mosquitoes," said Vicki Kramer, who heads the vector disease section of the state Department of Health Services.

Most of California has had water in abundance this year. The National Weather Service has reported record rainfall since March in the Central Valley, causing flooding along the San Joaquin River and its tributaries. The forecast for the rest of April is brighter, with temperatures beginning to rise with the approach of summer.

So far this year, 11 dead birds have tested positive for the West Nile virus in Sacramento, Santa Clara, San Diego and Orange counties, state health officials said.

Health experts are on watch in each of the state's 58 counties. They are especially vigilant in Sacramento County, where last year more than one in 10 mosquitoes carried West Nile.

Statewide, 1,765 people have been infected during the past two years, and 47 have died, according to the state health department. Many of the deaths occur in the elderly or people with compromised immune systems.

Among domestic animals, horses are affected most.

About 44 percent of horses in 43 counties that were infected with West Nile have died in the last few years, according to the California Department of Food and Agriculture.

Others that have contracted the virus could suffer long-term effects such as changes in disposition, muscle tremors and sensitivity to light and touch. The more seriously affected horses suffer permanent neurological impairment, rendering them unable to ride or show, said Dr. W. David Wilson, a professor of equine medicine and a director at the Veterinary Medical Teaching Hospital at UC Davis.

"It's a definite threat. Horses in California will die this year," Wilson said. "We know there are still horses that have not been vaccinated. If they get vaccinated, the danger will go down."

He said it remains a mystery why horses are more susceptible to the disease than other domestic animals and livestock.

A $26 vaccine administered every six months can shield horses from the virus. In February, state veterinarian Dr. Richard Britney issued an alert and urged horse owners to vaccinate their animals in anticipation of a high-infection year.

Hailey man charged with manslaughter

JEROME — A Hailey man involved in a wreck that killed a Jerome woman has been charged with vehicular manslaughter.

Scott E. Miller, 44, was arrested Tuesday night by the Idaho State Police in Blaine County, and taken to Blaine County Jail.

He is charged in the death of Karen Kump, a 49-year-old Jerome woman who was killed April 11 when Miller's car bumped her motorcycle on U.S. 93 near the Frying J truck stop.

Kump was southbound on U.S. 93 about 2:50 p.m. when Miller hit her from behind, ac-ording to a press release from the Idaho State Police.

Kump ended up beneath Miller's car. She was dead at the scene, and she was not wearing a helmet, according to the ISP report.

Miller failed a field sobriety test; blood test results are pending, according to Jerome County prosecutor Jon Nicholson III.

Miller has posted his $25,000 bond and his arraignment is set for Monday morning at the Jerome County Courthouse.

DOE plans $100 million for Yucca infrastructure

By Erica Werner
Associated Press writer

WASHINGTON — The Energy Department is planning about $100 million in repairs, new buildings and roads, a fire station and other improvements at the site of planned Yucca Mountain nuclear waste dump, a department official said Wednesday.

The planned upgrades — to facilities used by the 225 full-time employees who work at the dump site 90 miles northwest of Las Vegas — are needed to repair equipment and buildings that have fallen into disrepair or were never completed because of budget shortages, said Scott Wade, director of the department's office of repository development in Las Vegas.

As the opening date of the project has been delayed, structures needed to be temporary have remained in use longer than planned, he said.

"We lack some of the basic emergency response capabilities," Wade said at a meeting of the Nuclear Regulatory Commission's advisory committee on nuclear waste.

Decisions were made to complete some of the original design for those onsite structures, Wade said. "It was probably poor decisions that were made."

A fire in February burned down a trailer at the dump entrance — one of about 120 temporary structures in place. Wade told committee members, the fire, caused by a heating system malfunction, occurred during a weekend and had burned out by the time firefighters found it, but underscored the need for better emergency response.

The closest fire engine is 45 minutes away, in Mesquite Valley, in a presentation to the advisory committee, Wade outlined plans to:

- Build a new guard house at the start of the road to Yucca Mountain;

- Add a new or better access road;
- Construct permanent warehouses to replace temporary structures;

- Improve power generation, communications and cement production facilities;
- Build a fire station that can house a six-person crew.

He said the underground plans already have been approved but some of the aboveground work needs environmental reviews. Some $45 million in the 2006 budget could go to the plans.

If the Energy Department gets a license from the Nuclear Regulatory Commission to build the dump, new facilities will be required to support construction of the dump itself.

The department plans to apply for the NRC license in 2008 and hopes to open the dump by 2020 — two decades late. Yucca Mountain is supposed to hold 77,000 tons or more of nuclear waste.

Red Cross has hopes for tax checkoff

By Anne Wallace Allen
Associated Press writer

BOISE — Red Cross leaders in Idaho hope taxpayers feel generous next year as they prepare their 2006 returns.

Starting in 2007, Idahoans can check off a box on their return that will send $10 to the American Red Cross of Greater Idaho.

"The Idaho Red Cross badly needs the money. It has been in the red for several years, and now its national organization, the American Red Cross, has it on a business recovery plan aimed at getting its budget balanced."

"If we were able to get 5 percent of the filers to check that off, we would get about $250,000," said Polly Corley, a spokeswoman at the state headquarters. "We're looking at that to help us turn the major corner to reach stability."

Corley didn't say exactly how much money the state chapter needs to balance its books, but she did say it owes as much as $900,000 in dues to the national office in Washington, D.C. The Idaho Red Cross is hoping the American Red Cross will forgive those dues.

The Idaho chapter is not the only one struggling, said Peter Macias, a spokesman at the Red Cross regional office in Las Vegas.

There are some other Red Cross chapters who are challenged; there are others that are quite strong and making a little more good go of it in the locally good area the office covers, Macias said.

The American Red Cross has had problems of its own in recent years. Two presidents have resigned in a little more than four years; Dr. Bernadine Healy left soon after the 2001 terror attacks and Martha Evans quit after Hurricane Katrina.

This month the nation's largest charity promised a Senate panel it would change the way it handles disasters by sharing its aid money with other groups.

The financial problems for the Idaho Red Cross started after the terrorist attacks of Sept. 11, 2001 and continued with the December 2004 Indian Ocean tsunami and last year's Hurricane Katrina. Plenty of Idahoans responded with donations, but most of their money flowed out of state, Corley said. Under Red Cross rules, in times of major disasters, donations that don't have a specific designation on them are assigned to those disasters, Macias said.

The result is that Idaho's four Red Cross chapters in Lewiston, Twin Falls, Idaho Falls and Boise are struggling to pay their bills; the Pocatello and Coeur d'Alene offices have closed in recent years. The Boise headquarters is making the most money and has been helping the other chapters out, Corley said.

If the American Red Cross waives Idaho's overdue assessment, the Idaho group will be able to balance its budget, now about $1.8 million annually, Corley said.

"We are being watched by our mother ship, and we're under this very detailed plan on how to financially recover," she said.

Checkoffs to give money to wildlife funds, state projects, and nonprofit groups aren't unusual on state tax returns — the Red Cross checkoff that lawmakers approved this year is Idaho's fourth. But Idaho's is the only one that sends money to a state chapter of the Red Cross, Corley said.

North Idaho irrigation not harming steelhead

LEWISTON (AP) — An irrigation district in northern Idaho isn't jeopardizing the continued existence of threatened Snake River steelhead or adversely affecting designated critical habitat, according to a biological opinion by the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration fisheries division.

The agency released the opinion earlier this week on the operation of the Lewiston Orchards Irrigation District following a lawsuit last July by the Nez Perce Tribe.

The tribe had alleged that NOAA Fisheries had failed to release the study in a timely manner.

The biological opinion requires a minimum stream flow below Sweetwater Creek diversion dam, which began April 1.

Barney Metz, Irrigation district manager, said the minimum flow can be met most years, and that there is a drought exemption that could reduce the minimum flow one year out of 10. The district and bureau have until 2012 to attain minimum stream flows below the Webb Creek diversion dam.

Metz told the Lewiston Tribune that the irrigation district has worked with the tribe for the past two years to improve creek flows.

Report: Agreement reached on burning

SPOKANE, Wash. (AP) — A smoldering dispute over smoke from field stubble burning could soon be extinguished.

Wheat growers and clean air activists have agreed to accept a new program that gives the Washington Department of Ecology oversight of certain grain stubble burning while protecting air quality. The Spokesman-Review reported Wednesday.

Ecology is expected to formally release the proposed new rule this week and schedule public hearings next month in cities across Eastern Washington.

The plan will formalize a program that has been in place for several years, said Tim Connor, a representative of the Spokane clean air advocacy group Save Our Summers.

"We can't guarantee we won't have smokestacks, but the management program Ecology is using is a good one," he said. "Complaints are way down."

Although bluegrass field burning has been banned in Washington state, wheat farmers are allowed to torch their fields after harvest. In recent years, about 100,000 acres of wheat field stubble have been burned each season, down from roughly 230,000 acres burned in 1998.

Save Our Summers sued the state in 1999, claiming smoke from the annual burning of cereal grain stubble put residents' health at risk.

Bluegrass field burning is allowed in Idaho.

Under the new rule, Ecology officials will make decisions on when fields may be burned based on weather forecasts and air quality data gathered at 10 pollution monitoring stations.

Gratcheson, director of issues for the Washington Association of Wheat Growers, said the group supports the change because it allows the state agency to make burn decisions based on local conditions. "It's not one size fits all," she said.

The proposed changes stem from a settlement reached after the 1999 lawsuit, Connor said. As part of the settlement, the state was required to develop new cereal field burning regulations by next fall.

The rule is expected to be in place by midsummer, when the annual wheat stubble burning season begins.

Pentagon releases Guantanamo names

By Ben Fox
Associated Press writer

SAN JUAN, Puerto Rico — The U.S. government released the first list of detainees held at the Guantanamo Bay prison on Wednesday — the most extensive accounting yet of the hundreds of people held there, nearly all of them labeled enemy combatants.

In all, 550 people were named in the list provided by the Pentagon in response to a Freedom of Information lawsuit by The Associated Press. They were among the first kept up in the U.S. global war on terrorism for suspected links to al-Qaida or the Taliban.

The list is the first official roster of Guantanamo detainees who passed through the Combatant Status Review Tribunal process in 2004 and 2005 to determine whether they should be deemed "enemy combatants."

Those named are from Afghanistan, Saudi Arabia and 39 other countries. Many have been held at the U.S. prison at Guantanamo Bay for more than four years. Only a handful have faced formal charges.

Some names are familiar,

such as David Hicks, a Muslim from Australia charged with fighting U.S. and coalition forces in Afghanistan.

Lesser-known detainees on the list include Mohammed al-Qahtani, a Saudi who reportedly was supposed to be the 20th hijacker in the Sept. 11, 2001, attacks. Although his presence at Guantanamo had been reported, the military had previously declined to confirm it.

Others, such as an Afghan identified only as "Commander Chaman," remain mysterious. In all, the detainees on the list came from 41 countries. The largest number — 132 — came from Saudi Arabia. Afghanistan followed with 125, then Yemen with 107.

The release of the list, ordered by a federal judge, came amid widespread criticism of the almost total secrecy surrounding the Guantanamo Bay detention center, where the United States now holds about 430 detainees.

"This is information that should have been released a long time ago, and it's a scandal that it hasn't been," said Bill Goodman, legal director of the New York-based Center for Constitutional Rights, which has helped coordinate legal efforts on behalf of Guantanamo detainees.

The combatant status hearings at Guantanamo Bay were held from July 2004 to January 2005 after the Supreme Court ruled that the detainees had the right to contest their status before a judge or other neutral decision-maker.

All detainees at the prison during that period had such a hearing. Of the 558 detainees who received one, the panels classified 38 as "no longer enemy combatants" and the military later approved the transfer of 28 of those detainees from Guantanamo.

Child victims of war

Afghanistan, after 25 years of war and Taliban rule, ranks among the highest in child mortality rates, according to a recently released 2005 study.

Child deaths under five in war-torn countries since 1999

Mortality rates cause anguish in Afghanistan

By Paul Garwood
Associated Press writer

KABUL, Afghanistan — Fayzullah's doll-sized body leans limply across the forearm of her aunt, who became the infant's mother minutes after her birth.

The death of the withdrawn baby's natural mother epitomizes the leading health crisis in war-ravaged Afghanistan, where U.N. officials say 600 infants and 50 mothers die on average each day.

Afghanistan has the world's second-worst rate of mothers dying during childbirth, according to UNICEF.

Child mortality is also among the world's highest: Some 135 children die within the first year of life out of every 1,000 born. For children younger than 5, that number rises to 257 out of every 1,000, compared to eight in the United States.

A quarter-century of war and Taliban rule all but destroyed Afghanistan's meager health services. Deep poverty, restrictive social customs and illiteracy have compounded the crisis.

"Our country is rebuilding itself with the help of the international community after almost three decades of conflict, war and fighting, and in every sector we have problems and challenges, particularly health," said Dr. Abdul Salam, director of Indira Gandhi Hospital.

Most 90 percent of the hospital's patients come from remote provinces where the health problems are worst. Access to health care is limited by widespread insecurity because of militant attacks and banditry, and by the isolation of communities.

Training 12,000 community health workers — half of them women — and 6,000 midwives by 2010 is a Health Ministry goal for trying to deal with the child and maternal death rates, Fatemi said on the sidelines of the regional health conference Wednesday.

Afghanistan's widespread poverty must also be addressed if health indicators are to improve.

Top court confirms Prodi's victory

By Sarah Delaney
Special to The Washington Post

ROME — Italy's top court confirmed Wednesday that Romano Prodi and his opposition coalition won a majority in the lower house of parliament in national elections last week.

The rival, incumbent Prime Minister Silvio Berlusconi, continued to refuse to concede defeat in the bitterly contested balloting.

The Court of Cassation said that Prodi's Union coalition had defeated the House of Liberties bloc led by Berlusconi by a mere 24,755 votes in the lower house contest, enough to claim victory and receive extra seats to give it a 55 percent majority in the legislative body.

Prodi, a former prime minister and president of the European Commission, told reporters that the court's decision meant that "Italians no longer have doubts about our victory." He said that he and his Union alliance "are now working for a strong government" and that "we are aware of the divisions that we have to heal, as we are aware of the problems and difficulties that we will have to face."

The country has been on a political high for more than a week awaiting word from the court. Prodi claimed victory about 12 hours after the polls closed. His opponents protested, saying that move had come even before the court ruled on the balloting.

Members of Berlusconi's Forza Italia party, the coalition's dominant member, said they would continue to contest the results. Berlusconi himself did not appear in public after the court's decision or issue any statement. But news reports said he had met with allies and friends "we will give them battle, battle."

U.N.: Refugee numbers at 25-year low

By Paisley Dodd
Associated Press Writer

LONDON (AP) — Refugee numbers have dropped to a 25-year low because of an easing in armed conflicts and large-scale reparations to countries such as Afghanistan, the U.N. Refugee Agency said Wednesday.

But a growing number of international migrants face precarious fates because of terrorism fears, tighter asylum restrictions and growing intolerance.

The number of refugees fell from 18 million in 1992 to some 9.2 million in 2004, an agency report said. But an adequate system is needed for people who fall outside the protections of the U.N. Refugee Convention, said Antonio Guterres, the U.N. High Commissioner for Refugees.

"Everyone that needs to be protected, should be protected," Guterres said.

The agency report said the resolution of conflicts in Bosnia, Kosovo, Liberia and Afghanistan contributed to the drop in the number of refugees.

More than 4 million people have been repatriated to Afghanistan and hundreds of thousands to Angola, Sierra Leone and Liberia. But Guterres warned that lengthy Sudan could see more than 4 million refugees and internally displaced people return in the next few years.

An estimated 175 million displaced people are international migrants — some of whom fall outside the protections of the U.N. Refugee Convention, the report said.

Getting humanitarian assistance to displaced people had "been the international community's 'biggest failure,'" Guterres said.

He promised sweeping U.N. agency reforms to tackle the growing numbers of displaced people.

The U.N. report came as asylum seekers in a London detention center entered the 11th day of a hunger strike to protest the length of their detentions and the conditions.

Russia, China still oppose sanctions against Iran

By Brian Bonner
Knight Ridder News Service

MOSCOW — Talks among diplomats from the world's major industrialized countries ended here Wednesday with no agreement on how to end the stand-off over Iran's nuclear program.

U.S. Undersecretary of State Nicholas Burns said that most of the countries that took part in the talks — the five permanent members of the U.N. Security Council and Germany on Tuesday, the Group of Eight industrialized countries on Wednesday — favored imposing sanctions on Iran if it doesn't stop its nuclear program.

"Everybody talked about the need to consider actions. The majority said sanctions," Burns said.

But China and Russia, who as permanent members of the U.N. Security Council can veto any proposal, still remain opposed.

As if to underscore its position, Russia confirmed that it would sell 29 mobile air defense missiles to Iran — a step Burns criticized.

"It's a mistake for countries to have military relationships with Iran," Burns said, citing the Iranian leadership's support for the "destruction of Israel" and calling it the "central banker" for Middle East terrorism.

The talks here were really two sets of meetings. Tuesday's session involved the five permanent security council members — China, France, Great Britain, Russia and the United States — and Germany. Wednesday's session was a slightly different grouping, with China, which is not a G8 member, gone, but with Canada, Italy and Japan added.

Russian Foreign Minister Sergei Lavrov said his country wanted to wait to consider further action against Iran until the International Atomic Energy Agency reports back to the Security Council on whether Iran's nuclear program complies with international treaties. That report is expected April 28.

"We are convinced of the need to wait for the IAEA report due at the end of the month," Lavrov told reporters.

Wheat crops off to a good start

LEWISTON — Farmers in north central Idaho and south-eastern Washington say conditions for growing wheat appear good this year with abundant rain, but that they are concerned about rising energy costs.

"It is encouraging that we have good growing conditions for the 2006 crop," Alex McGregor, owner of McGregor Chemical Co. based at Coletex, told the Lewiston Tribune. "But we're also working on trying to do our best to address an energy crisis that has had a severe impact on farm families."

McGregor, a past president of the Washington Association of Wheat Growers, said that group and other commodity organizations have asked Congress to open known reserves of natural gas to supplement the current supply. They are also asking for emergency funding to cover some of the costs associated with the rise in energy costs.

Wet fields have delayed field work by a week or two in some areas.

Housing agency raises affordable housing limit

COEUR D'ALENE — The Idaho Housing and Finance Association has increased its limit on eligible home sales prices to $245,000 in northern Idaho and to $370,000 in Blaine and Teton counties.

"The agency helps moderate home income and first-time home buyers."

In most of the rest of the state, the limit on eligible home sale prices is $245,000. In Coeur d'Alene, the price is $265,000, while Ada County is $222,000 if it's new construction and $219,000 if it's an existing home.

"This increase in sales price limits will allow us to stay competitive and aggressive in helping more Idahoans," Gerald Hunter, IHFA's president and executive director, told the Coeur d'Alene Press.

"The IHFA offers below-market mortgage rates, now at 5.7 percent, and financial assistance of up to $10,000 for down payments and closing costs for first-time buyers."

Jack Beebe, an IHFA board member, said Kootenai County home prices are outstandingly high, increasing, pricing out the area's workers even with the new limits.

"The average house price has gone out the back door," said Beebe. "How does that equate to a $28,000 income?"

The payments on a $245,000 home, the new limit in Kootenai County, would be $1,422 per month for principal and interest, said Reed Holladay, IHFA's media relations officer.

He said the maximum income for a family of three or more to qualify is $71,190, with the minimum being $61,000.

Katie Marcus, manager of the residential real estate department for FirstBank in Coeur d'Alene, said it's hard to get qualified buyers.

"The average they qualify for is $150,000," she said, which is rarely found for a house in the city.

Soaring oil prices set record

Reports show shrinking U.S. gas supplies

By Brad Ross
Associated Press writer

WASHINGTON — Oil prices leapt above $72 a barrel Wednesday, setting a record high for the third straight day, after a government report showed shrinking U.S. gasoline supplies and traders fretted about nuclear tensions between Iran and the international community.

Supply constraints in Iraq, Nigeria and the Gulf of Mexico are also pushing oil prices higher, and analysts are predicting more pain at the pump this summer for motorists, who so far appear to be only lightly tapping the brakes on demand.

Light sweet crude for May delivery climbed as high as $72.40 a barrel, before settling at $72.17 on the New York Mercantile exchange, an increase of 82 cents from the previous day. The contract had risen as high as $71.60 on Tuesday.

Oil futures contracts through July 2009 are now trading above $70 a barrel. "In effect, the market is saying this is going to be with us for a while," said A.G. Edwards & Sons' commodity analyst Bill O'Grady.

In its weekly report, the U.S. Energy Department said the nation's supply of gasoline shrank by a larger-than-expected 5.4 million barrels last week to 202.5 million barrels. It was the seventh straight weekly decline, leaving inventories 4.6 percent below year ago levels.

Gasoline inventories typically decrease this time of year as refiners shut down their plants to perform maintenance ahead of the summer driving season. And oil traders typically point to the decreases as reason for concern about summertime supplies, a routine that, more often than not, sends futures prices higher.

That said, there is additional worry about summer gasoline supplies because of the prospect of tight supplies of ethanol, which is needed in increasing amounts as refiners phase out their use of methyl tertiary butyl ether, or MTBE, which has been found to contaminate drinking water.

Oil analyst John Killeuff of Fimat USA in New York said there would be a "painful ramp" in gasoline prices as summer approaches, and he said oil prices could rise as high as $80 a barrel by the end of June. Purchased today, crude for June delivery costs $74 a barrel.

However, in a sign that consumers may be responding to higher prices, the Energy Department report also showed that average daily gasoline demand at the start of the year is up 0.9 percent, compared with an increase of 1.4 percent during the same period in 2005.

John C. Chisholm, chief financial officer of Wal-Mart Stores Inc., the world's largest retailer, warned Wednesday that the company's lower income customers were likely to curtail spending this year because of higher fuel costs.

Nymex gasoline futures rose 1.55 cent to settle at $2.2394 per gallon on Wednesday and they are more than 40 percent higher than a year ago.

The average retail price of gasoline nationwide is $2.89 a gallon, though stations are charging more than $3 a gallon in many parts of the country.

SPINNING ITS WAY TO TWIN FALLS

Mario Andrade, a native Bolivian now living in Oregon, helps CSI student Angelina Monson, 20, pick out a poncho Tuesday in the CSI Student Union building, where Andrade and his partner, Rodolfo Avila, of Bolivia, sell Bolivian clothing as a traveling co-op business that helps give fair wages to the garment makers in the South American country.

Representatives from Bolivia market Alpaca wool

By Bob Kirkpatrick
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — It's not just a garment, it's a cultural experience. Representatives of Chasqui, a rural Bolivian cooperative, of alpaca wool manufacturers, are on hand through today at the College of Southern Idaho to market their handmade sweaters, hats, mittens, and scarves.

The cooperative visit, sponsored by the CSI International Business Club, is intended to help bring cultural awareness to the Magic Valley, and to educate students about the economic hardships of Bolivia.

"We're working hard to reach out to the international community," CSI Business Professor Dennis Heiner said. "Bringing in a co-op like Chasqui allows us the opportunity to be exposed to another country's way of thinking and doing business."

Heiner said Twin Falls has a bigger multicultural community than most people realize.

Chasqui, which means "messenger from the Inca sun god," has been in business since 1976. They have nearly 300 members in the cooperative that are involved in the manufacturing process of raising, feeding, clipping and spinning the wool of the alpaca into clothing. The members own thousands of the animals that roam the Andes Mountains.

"People raise their own alpacas," Mario Andrade, representative of Chasqui said. "They grow their own food and then cut and hand-spin the wool."

Andrade and Rodolfo Avila travel to more than 40 colleges and universities across the U.S. to help generate income for the impoverished regions of Potosi, Oruro, Aitiplano and Paecon. Their goal is to improve the lives of the indigenous people of rural Bolivia.

"Most of the people do not have water or electricity so we bring it to them," Andrade said. "We have also helped start schools for the people who do not speak Spanish."

Andrade said a variety of regional indigenous dialects are spoken in rural Bolivia. He said some of the profits generated from the proceeds of their handmade garments are also used to provide teachers that can speak the different languages.

But what gives Andrade and Avila the most satisfaction is seeing the people in these remote rural regions of Bolivia on the brink of self-sufficiency.

"People in Bolivia are hard workers," Andrade said. "The economy is very bad, but when the can work, they are real happy people."

COMING CLEAN THE GREEN WAY

Cleaners pay attention to environment

By Jeff Turrentine
The Washington Post

Somewhere, maybe even in your neighborhood, some ecologically minded soul is preparing to commemorate the 37th annual Earth Day (this Saturday) by having a few people over.

It's going to be a swell party. Tofu dogs will be grilled. Organic wine will be poured. The five-disc CD changer will be filled with mellow, multicultural musical offerings from around the world.

But first, the house has to be cleaned from top to bottom. Quick while nobody's looking: Time to scrub out those sinks with sodium dichloro-s-triazineirone dihydrate, better known as Comet. Those grimy kitchen countertops are no match for propylene glycol n-butyl ether, the active ingredient in Formula 409. From the Tlex tumbler, a shot of tetrapotassium EDTA, with a non-ionic surfactant chaser, will make short work of that stubborn ring on the rim of the bathtub.

It's not easy being green, especially when you're waging war against dirt. Even those who like to think of Barry Jackson of Green Clean vacuums the stairs at a Takoma Park, Md., house.

Rent increases in many Western markets

The Associated Press

SAN FRANCISCO — Apartment rents are increasing more rapidly in many of the West's major markets as the economy produces more jobs and rising interest rates prevent more people from buying homes, according to statistics being released Thursday.

The average apartment rent in March rose by at least 4 percent in nine of the 20 Western markets surveyed by RealEstate.com, a Novato, Calif.-based real estate research firm.

Rents rose fastest in San Bernardino and Riverside counties, an inland Southern California region that has become a refuge for people who can't afford to live in the Los Angeles metropolitan area — the West's most expensive rental market, according to RealEstate.com.

Apartments in San Bernardino and Riverside have climbed by 7.3 percent in the past year to an average of $1,097 in March, RealEstate.com said. Renters paid an average of $144 for rent in an apartment in Los Angeles and Orange counties, a 6.7 percent increase from last year.

San Francisco, California has ranked among the West's hottest rental markets for several years.

But landlords also appear to be gaining more leverage in areas such as the San Francisco Bay area, where a revived high-tech industry and high-priced homes are fueling rental demand.

In the five-county Bay Area tracked by RealEstate.com, rents averaged $1,374 in March, a 5 percent annual increase, while rents in Santa Clara County — Silicon Valley's hub — averaged $1,359, a 5.8 percent increase.

Rent increases also are accelerating in Seattle and Nevada's major markets, RealEstate.com said.

Colorado emerged as one of the major exceptions to the general trend in the West. Average rents in Denver rose by less than 1 percent to an average of $856 while rents in Colorado Springs dropped by nearly 1 percent to $711.

Truson, Ariz., offered the West's least expensive apartment rents at $626 in March, unchanged from a year ago.

The recent rent increases in the San Francisco Bay area underscored a significant shift in the region's economy and real estate market.

The dot-com bust of 2000 and 2001 resulted in mass layoffs that prompted many people to either leave the Bay Area or share homes with friends or family.

That trend drove up apartment vacancies and forced landlords to lower their rents by hundreds of dollars. In Santa Clara County, for instance, plunged 35 percent from a March 2001 peak of $1,955 to $1,277 at the end of 2004.

Although it hasn't returned to the boom times, the region's high-tech sector has been steadily adding more jobs — a phenomenon that is helping apartment landlords fill their units.

MONEY

More businesses race to MySpace

By Clayton Harrison The Dallas Morning News

DALLAS — Chella Cardona has found the perfect advertising vehicle for her young, successful business. And it doesn't cost her a cent. She's able to keep in close contact with loyal customers, who instantly spread the word to their friends. When she wants to promote an event at her Dallas specialty shoe store, Passport Exhibit Gallery, she can immediately distribute information to hundreds of people.

"It's been a huge benefit," Cardona said. "Because we're a small business, we don't have a lot of money allocated for marketing." Cardona has discovered the lucrative promotional secrets of MySpace.com, a site that enjoyed its first wave of success when hands used it to spread word about their music. Since Passport Exhibit Gallery set up a MySpace page in December, hundreds of customers have visited the store after discovering it on the Web, she said.

As it has become one of the most popular Internet destinations for young people, MySpace has also attracted dozens of small businesses — restaurants, bars, clothing stores, tattoo parlors — trying to reach an audience with tastes outside the mainstream. All of them use the site for free.

Now MySpace is part of corporate America. Media conglomerate News Corp. bought its parent company in July for $580 million. News Corp. executives have made it clear they want to boost the site's ad revenue, inviting large companies to advertise on the site.

This MySpace stands at a crossroads, with major corporate brands trying to figure out how to reach its young, hip audiences while small businesses prosper on the site of reaching customers with help from users themselves.

Users have created roughly 17 million profiles on MySpace, and the site had 47 million unique users in February, according to its own statistics. It's the second-most trafficked destination on the Web next to YouTube, according to comScore Networks.

Each MySpace profile page contains space in which users can post photos, write messages to friends and link lists to their friends' pages.

Setting up a MySpace page requires only a few minutes, and computer skills, an asset that has helped the site attract so many users. It's also appealing for business owners.

Charitable contributions in excess of 50 percent of your adjusted gross income are not deductible (except for an exception last year from April 25 to Dec. 31 due to Hurricane Katrina) but you can carry the remainder for five years.

Miscellaneous expenses — medical, moving, ultrimbursement job costs — are deductible only to the extent they exceed 2 percent of your AGI.

Try to double up on those etor of Dallas vintage clothing store Dolly Python, set up her own page despite being "not real computer-savvy," she said.

"My page isn't all that fancy. I have a background on the Dolly Python page, and I post pictures every once in a while. Whatever time allows me, I'll work on it," Frizzell said. "It kind of gives the store a little bit of personality."

A MySpace user can stay in contact with friends by agreeing to receive bulletins from them. The user can also make "friends" with businesses that send out bulletins as well. When a bar has a Friday night party, for instance, it sends out an image of a promotional flyer to all its friends, who can then spread it to their friends.

Stocks rise, shrugging off inflation report

By Mark Cott Knight Ridder News Service

NEW YORK — U.S. stocks ended higher Wednesday as a stronger-than-expected rise in March consumer prices only slightly dented a message from the Federal Reserve that it is close to ending its cycle of interest-rate increases.

Solid earnings from a number of companies led by United Technologies Corp. Yahoo Inc. and Texas Instruments also underpinned gains.

The Dow Jones Industrial Average rose 10 points to 11,777.

The Nasdaq Composite Index rose 14.74 points to 2,370.88. The S&P 500 index gained 2.28 points to 1,309.93.

"The important thing about today's market is that we're not backsliding at all," said Kenneth Tower, chief market strategist at CyberTrust. "The market is still in a slow recovery."

But for Charles Roitblut, senior market analyst at Zacks.com, an independent research firm, the latest consumer-price report might rekindle some concern about interest rates.

The Labor Department reported that consumer prices rose 0.3 percent in March from a year earlier, well below the 0.3 percent gain from economists predicted by MarketWatch. The policy, which includes energy and food prices, rose 0.3 percent, stronger than the 0.2 percent predicted in the MarketWatch survey.

The June meeting is kind of up for debate as to whether or not we have a rate hike given this morning's CPI report, with that unexpected jump in the core rate," said Roitblut.

On Tuesday, stocks put in a record one-day rally after a year of policy meeting showed that most members agreed the central banks' regime of steady rate hikes was coming to a close.

Most investors expect the Fed to raise its key short-term interest rate by another quarter-percentage point to 5 percent at its May meeting. The odds for an interest rate hike at its June meeting fall in the wake of the Fed minutes.

However, James Yellen, the president of the San Francisco Fed bank, said that there was an important caveat to the Fed's minutes.

"Economic data must confirm the Fed's forecast of slowing growth while inflation expectations remain contained," Yellen said in a December 2005 CNBC interview. He pointed out that she was looking out for any data surprises that would indicate that the Fed's forecast might not be accurate. Therefore, the Fed's policy was "data-surprise" dependent, Yellen said.

On the broader market for equities, advances had a 5-to-10 percent decline on the New York Stock Exchange, and by nearly 2 to 1 on the Nasdaq.

By sector, computer-hardware companies and home furnishings were among the notable decliners.

Semiconductors, Internet stocks, brokers and oil services trended higher. Volume was 1.74 billion on the Big Board, and 2.13 billion on the Nasdaq.

Better start now to save more on taxes

By Marshall Loeb MarketWatch

NEW YORK — So, you've heeded our previous advice and resolved to make your 2006 a slam dunk on Uncle Sam?

Well, here are some more tips on how you can get started now to save on taxes. They come from Warren Bernstein, a certified public accountant with the New York firm of Adelman, Katz & Mond, and Tom Ochsenschlager, vice president of taxation for the American Institute of Certified Public Accountants.

Here are several deductions that you can carry from one year to the next if you haven't used them up.

You can carry a capital loss from one year to the next if you haven't used it to offset any capital gains you may have in the future. Or you can use up to $3,000 of that loss for each year of carryover.

Business losses, which mostly apply to the self-employed, can be carried back two years or forward for 20. Why? Because, says Bernstein, a self-employed person can carry a net loss for that year a second cash, that person can file amended returns for the previous two years, reap some temporary relief and carry the remaining loss forward.

Charitable contributions in excess of 50 percent of your adjusted gross income are not deductible (except for an exception last year from April 25 to Dec. 31 due to Hurricane Katrina) but you can carry the remainder for five years.

Miscellaneous expenses — medical, moving, ultrimbursement job costs — are deductible only to the extent they exceed 2 percent of your AGI.

Try to double up on those

Save more on taxes

costs in every other year to maximize your deduction. That'll be difficult when it comes to moving, and heart surgery but it's convenient for recurring fees like those for tax preparation, lawyers, safe-deposit boxes and trusts, and it's the combined amount of all of them that matters.

If you're periodically subject to the alternative minimum tax, the right bunching strategy can minimize your exposure, says Bernstein.

Start early We'll mention it again for good measure. When does tax planning begin for prospective clients? "Tomorrow morning," he says.

Wishes come true for Scorpio

IF APRIL 20 IS YOUR BIRTHDAY: Spring is a season of new starts and growth. You, too, can also launch new projects, business matters, and personal relationships and watch them flourish. Your ability to charm others is emphasized in the months to come, especially between now and the end of August. Because you glow with happiness you will attract appropriate romantic partners if you are single and be able to land the job of your dreams if you are ambitious. The answers to your prayers may arrive in November or December, which is also an optimum time to launch long-term plans and implement improvements.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Unwind and be kind. Cooperation from others is easy to obtain under these celestial conditions, so go ahead and ask for a favor or a recommendation. People truly want to be nice to you.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Give someone a helping hand. Your instincts about people and the social climate are right on the mark. Whatever lands in your lap may be beneficial or improve your life in some way.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Throw caution to the wind. The odds are in your favor. If you are one of those times when you someone will take an unfair advantage. SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): If you wish upon a star, it might come true. The answer to your prayers may show up in the form of a helpful person who offers you just what you need at an opportune moment.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Take time to do something that's good for your health or improves your finances. You may be operating on intuition. Don't forget that you owe someone an apology or a kindness.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Be a good sport. As you know, you can catch more flies with honey than with vinegar. If you want to get rid of peaky problems, use your powers of diplomacy to strike a pleasant compromise.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Exercise wisdom where money is concerned. Your piggy bank will fatten up nicely if you concentrate on doing the ethical thing. Complete the details of agreements and contracts.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): The more you give, the more you are likely to receive. It is a good day to buy clothing, go to the spa or otherwise improve your appearance. A whimsical, romantic mood makes life chase things that require good taste and discrimination. Look for the sale tables and find a bargain.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Everyday tasks may be centered on helping your closest friends or your favorite partner. Listen to advice from family members. Your judgment about love and life is better than usual.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Faith will be rewarded. Don't neglect your work or ignore the rules this week. Do what you are supposed to do so you can enjoy free time guiltlessly. Petty economies can add up in the end.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Roll the dice where money is concerned. Buy the very best that money can buy without overextending the budget, and you'll be pleased with the results. Romantic relationships thrive this week.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Playing fair is the only way to play. Because people are more tolerant than usual, you needn't fret. Your luck is good.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): If you wish upon a star, it might come true. The answer to your prayers may show up in the form of a helpful person who offers you just what you need at an opportune moment.

Dad owes daughter an apology for springing new mom on her

DEAR ABBY: "Crushed in California" whined about her new stepdaughter's "rude, tacky, inappropriate and" reaction after Stepman and Dad dumped notice on his 21-year-old daughter — in a public place, no less — that they had loped.

Abby, the adults were the rude, insensitive, inappropriate, self-centered and inconsiderate parties in this matter — not the daughter. They are the ones who should be seeking to mend fences.

When I decided to remark, I invited my daughters (all in their 20s) over for a private dinner at home where we made the announcement, invited the to participate in the planning and answered questions. And yes, the question about a pre-nup was raised. So what? My daughters wanted assurance that I had thought things through. They wanted to know how the marriage would change our family's dynamics, home arrangements, college plans, etc. They were surprised. They got emotional. But they clearly cared about me and my happiness. Their questions weren't out of line; they were the same questions I got from close friends.

It seems to me that these self-centered, "I'm the czar of dilly-squat about what Dad's daughter felt or worried about: Keep the young woman in the dark. Don't let her contribute toward planning the event. Don't let her attend this milestone. Then dump the news on her in a public place to keep her emotional response contained. That ought to show her how important she is in her dad's new life!

DEAR ABBY
Jeanne Phillips

Get over it, Stepman. You married a man with a daughter. She needs to be part of your life right now. You and Dad blew it by shutting her out. Maybe in time the daughter will forgive you.

—A DAD IN NEW HAMPSHIRE
DEAR DAD IN NEW HAMPSHIRE: You appear to be at the helm of a close and functional family. It's sad that more families aren't like your own.

What bothered me about the letter from "Crushed in California" was that the first words out of the daughter's mouth had to do with money. I believe that people who care and save money should be able to spend it as they wish. I also believe that it is unwise to count other people's money as your own. If the father wants his daughter to have any of his assets, then he should have a will that says so. (It's called estate planning.) If already has a will leaving his property to his daughter, now that he is married he will need a new one, because here in California, his wife would have a claim on half his estate in the event of his death.

Read on for other readers' comments.

DEAR ABBY: I, too, have a stepdaughter who "broke out" when her father and I married. Her father and I were shocked at her reaction. We offered her the option of family counseling, but she refused to go. My husband and I decided to go by ourselves. I worked miracles.

Once his daughter came to grips with the fact that we were going to stay together, and she would always still have her father, things gradually got better. Now, a few years later, we're a close and loving family. It seems she was afraid she would no longer be No. 1 to Daddy, but she is — she's just No. 1 Daughter. I am No. 1 Wife. There is plenty of love to go around for the both of us.

—NO. 1 WIFE IN MINNESOTA

DEAR ABBY: If you look beyond the daughter's initial reaction, I think you'll see someone who was scared to death of losing her father. Elopement was probably interpreted as the first step to abandonment. Bottom line: She was scared. Instead of pulling away from her and resenting her, they should embrace her and reassure her that she'll always be part of their lives.

Summer proves fertile breeding ground, literally, for musicians

Certain birth dates in summer seem to breed musicians. Or maybe it's just a coincidence that Van Morrison and Izhak Perlman were both born on Aug. 31, 1945. That Jimmy Dean and Eddie Fisher were both born on Aug. 10, 1928. That Charlie Byrd and B.B. King were both born on Sept. 16, 1925. Or that Loudon Wainwright III, Freddy Mercury and Buddy Miles were all born on Sept. 5, 1946.

This day in history: The first transcontinental call using a picture phone took place between New York City and Anaheim, Calif., on April 20, 1954. In honor of the New York World's Fair, the phone company set up special booths to transmit and receive video phone images in fuzzy black and white. The cost for making this historic long-distance call $27 for three minutes (about $159 in today's money).

Can you still? It's what you do when you walk on stilts.

"Causa mortis" may sound like really bad Mexican restaurant, but it's really a legal term for something done while contemplating your own mortality. You know, like giving away your belongings or writing a will.

Repeat business is the secret of success. Perhaps that helps explain why six out of 10 patients leave their doctor's office with another appointment already scheduled.

Another reason why chivalry is dead: a knight's armor could weigh as much as a hundred pounds.

A quinquennium is another name for the pentathlon — five sports in one. In the case of the modern pentathlon, those sports are pistol shooting, equestrian, swimming, horse jumping and cross-country running.

Fruitcake reappears after 40-year absence

WAUKESHA, Wis. (AP) — Laura Nesta did what many people do when receiving a fruitcake: He set it aside. Only Nesta rediscovered his more than 40 years later in his mother's attic in fuzzy black and white.

Nesta couldn't resist taking a peek at the cake, still in its original tin and wrapped in paper.

"I was amazed that it hadn't changed at all," he said.

His two aunts sent him the fruitcake in November 1962 while he was stationed in Alaska with the Army, he said.

"I opened it up and didn't know what to do with it," Nesta said. "I sure wasn't going to eat it, and I liked my fellow soldiers too much to share it with them."

As best he can remember, he packed the cake with the rest of his belongings and shipped it home to Waukesha when he left the military a few years later.

YOU ARE NOTICED THAT:
In addition, a copy of which is attached, has been filed in the above-entitled matter in the Magistrate's Division of the District Court of Twin Falls County, Idaho, by the Prosecuting Attorney, alleging the above-named child comes within the Court's jurisdiction under the Child Protective Act. THE ACES ON BRIDGE

Bobby Wolff

"The real test of a man is not how well he plays the role he has invented for himself, but how well he plays the role that destiny assigned to him."

—Janr Patocka

When the Junior Camp in Prague had finished its regular session of bridge, the keeper players went straight on to play a Mid-night Swiss Teams game (which broke up at 4 a.m. or so) from which this deal comes.

Look at all four hands and place your bets on the success or failure of four hearts. Was your answer that four hearts is likely to go down on perfect defense? If not, watch Vladimir Machat as West at work.

He sensibly led the spade queen, judging that his diamond length meant there was not much future for the defense there. Declarer saw the threat of the ace-major unless he could do something fast. His first move was to unblock the diamond king. Then he crossed to dummy with a top club to pitch a spade loser on the diamond ace. Now a trump saw East win and play the king of spades and another spade. Declarer ruffed this trick high, and Machat pitched a club.

South pressed on with a second trump, and East won to play a fourth spade. Declarer ruffed high performance as Machat discarded his last club. Now declarer was locked in hand in the four-card ending, with no trumps left and with nothing in his hand but clubs. Meanwhile West had discarded his last club, and so could ruff the next club when declarer had no choice but to lead that suit out of his hand. Nicely done.

ANSWER: Bid three spades. Your partner's cuebid at his first turn did not set up a game-forcing auction. However his two-spade call is forcing for one round, since no suit has yet been agreed. You have nothing to spare for your bidding so far, but your raise to three spades will let your partner out here if he too is minimum.
