Bug bites Idaho potato industry

Japan, Mexico, Canada block fresh potato imports because of pest

By Anne Wallace Allen
Associated Press writer

BOISE — Japan has banned all fresh U.S. potato imports, and Canada and Mexico all fresh potato imports from Idaho, after a microscopic wormlike pest called the potato cyst nematode was found on an eastern Idaho farm this week.

The discovery of the pest was the first time this particular nematode has been detected in the United States, said Pat Takasugi, director of Idaho's Department of Agriculture.

Takasugi said Friday he doesn't expect any U.S. states to ban Idaho potatoes, because his agency and the U.S. Department of Agriculture have quarantined fields and a shed at the farm where the nematodes were found.

"We have definitely caught this in the early stages," Takasugi said.

The bans by the three countries only involve fresh potatoes, not those processed into french fries and other food products.

The pest is not harmful to humans and doesn't have any effect on the potatoes themselves, Takasugi said. But it feeds on the roots of the potato plant and can reduce crop production by as much as 80 percent.

323 cats

Dr. Jeff Rosenthal of the Idaho Humane Society examines a cat Thursday afternoon after it was taken from the Rocky Mountain Cat Resort in Twin Falls. More than 300 cats have been retrieved from the cat boardinghouse by the Twin Falls County Sheriff's Department.

Cat Resort owner surrenders guests

By Cassidy Friedman
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — 323.

That's how many cats were found living in unsanitary conditions inside the Rocky Mountain Cat Resort on South Washington Street — some with serious health problems.

"Some of them were really sick," said Nancy Howell, public information officer for the Twin Falls County sheriff's office, the agency in charge of the investigation.

Janet Rasmussen, the cat boardinghouse owner, agreed in court Friday to surrender the cats to the state of Idaho for medical treatment and quarantine.

Veterinarians euthanized some cats that "could not be rehabilitated," Howell said. "Some were blind because of illness. One had infected skin. All of them had ear mites."

The goal of Friday's hearing, Howell said, was to determine how to provide care for the animals. The state accepted custody of the cats under the direction of Idaho Department of Agriculture veterinarian Debra Lawrence.

No charges have been filed against Rasmussen, who appeared in court with her attorney.

According to the sheriff's office, there have been prior complaints associated with the boardinghouse. In one case, an Idaho health certificate signed Nov. 10 by Dr. Patrick Jones in Boise stated a cat sold to a Michigan lady by Rasmussen was healthy. A Michigan veterinarian who inspected the cat assessed that the cat's infections could not have progressed so much in such a short time.

Jones said Friday he examined a cat for Rasmussen but that "the cat I examined was perfectly healthy. I was very surprised when the lady who got the animal called me."

Howell said the state will not put the cats up for adoption until they have been quarantined and treated.

Oregon man survives 12 nails to the head

By Sarah Skidmore
Associated Press Writer

PORTLAND, Ore. — A 33-year-old Oregon man on methamphetamine and suffering from mental health problems fired 12 nails from a nail gun into his head and survived.

The man, who has not been identified by medical officials for privacy reasons, went to an Oregon hospital last year complaining of a headache.

Doctors were surprised when they took X-rays and found the nails — six clustered between his right eye and ear, two below his right ear and four on the left side of his head.

No one before is known to have survived having intentionally fired so many foreign objects into the head, according to the current issue of the Journal of Neurosurgery, where the case is detailed.

The nails were not visible when doctors initially examined the man in the emergency room of a hospital, a day after he'd fired the nail gun. When doctors saw the X-ray results, they transferred him to Oregon Health & Science University in Portland for intensive neurological care.

Lawsuit:

State still shorting schools

Court battle over facility construction costs resurfaces

By Anne Wallace Allen
Associated Press Writer

BOISE — A month after lawmakers passed a bill aimed at improving the way Idaho pays for school construction, plaintiffs in a long-running lawsuit are back in court, saying the state isn't doing enough.

"The Legislature didn't do what the Supreme Court said they should do," said Stan Kress, superintendent of the Cottonwood School District and a lead plaintiff in a case that has been churning through Idaho's legal system for more than a decade. "I don't think they put enough money into it; there's lots of things they didn't do."

Until lawmakers passed the new school construction bill last month, Idaho provided no direct support for public school construction, though the state Education Department subsidized some bond interest. Then, as now, district bond votes required a two-thirds majority vote to approve local construction bonds.

Kress' group of school districts, Idaho Schools for Educational Opportunity, sued the state in 1990 over poor conditions in several school buildings. They said the state should provide a better match to all water-approved school bonds, and provide more money for school building maintenance.

The complex case dragged on for years. In 2001, 4th District Judge Deborah Ball ruled the system for funding schoolhouses was unconstitutional, because it left the poorest districts unable to afford safe schools.

Ball also rejected a 2002 Idaho law passed to try to address the 2001 decision, forcing courts to order no-vote local property tax increases if districts didn't fix schools that were falling into disrepair.

The Idaho attorney general's office then asked the state high court to reject Ball's decision, but in December the court sided with Kress' group and ordered lawmakers to come up with a new way of paying for buildings and repairs.

—Amanda Fomichev, 21, who lost a leg last October while working at a car wash

Moving past the pain

Six months after an accident took her leg, Amanda Fomichev moves on

By Cassidy Friedman
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — Fifteen minutes remained in her shift on a day she wishes had never happened.

In the entryway to the car wash, she turned. "And that was it," said Amanda Fomichev.

Paramedics screamed "Hold on!" as she faded towards unconsciousness.

After five days in the hospital — including a six-hour surgery that could only save one leg — the young newlywed wanted to go home.

Without the high dosage of pain-killing medication, she began having withdrawals — crying, hating every body. Could it not have just killed her, she wondered.

The highs and lows of recovery impress the 21-year-old far less today than they did when she first began fumbling through her recovery last October. The fact that her progress has been less than steady bothers Fomichev, who more than anything wants her life back.

Doctors amputated her right leg after a sport utility vehicle accelerated off the tracks at a Mr. Gas car wash, crushing the 21-year-old against another car in line before dragging her sideways into the car wash wall. Doctors saved her right leg by screwing a metal plate into the thigh.

After learning to walk with a prosthetic leg, all progress gained suddenly reversed course when the screws fastened into her right thigh failed. Now, back on pain-killing medication, it will be at least six more weeks before she can put pressure on her right leg again — provided operations run according to plan.

Shoshone Falls visitors pouring in

SHOSHONE FALLS — The "Niagara of the West" continues to draw crowds with the highest flows the falls have seen in seven years.

Roughly 1,500 vehicles ventured into the Shoshone Falls Park on Thursday, the highest number of visitors during the week the park has seen since at least 1997, said Dennis Bowyer, director of the Twin Falls Parks and Recreation Department.

Bowyer expects even more visitors this weekend.

About 18,800 cubic feet per second of water was pouring over Shoshone Falls on Friday, Bowyer said. That level could climb even higher this weekend, he said.

Bowyer will have law enforcement on hand today and Sunday to help guide cars and ensure safety, but falls viewers should still expect delays.

FBI says two Atlanta-area men plotted terrorist attacks

By Giovanna Dell'Orto
Associated Press writer

ATLANTA — A 21-year-old Georgia Tech student and another man traveled to Canada to meet with Islamic extremists to discuss "strategic locations in the United States suitable for a terrorist strike," according to an affidavit made public Friday.

Syed Hani Ahmed and Ehsanul Islam Sadeque, both U.S. citizens who grew up in the Atlanta area, met with at least three other targets of ongoing FBI terrorism investigations during a trip to Canada in March 2005, an FBI agent's affidavit said.

The affidavit said the men discussed attacks against oil refineries and military bases and planned to travel to Pakistan to get military training at a terrorist camp, which authorities said Ahmed then tried to do.

Ahmed, who was indicted on suspicion of giving material support of terrorism, was being held at an undisclosed location. He waived his right to arraignment and pleaded not guilty.

Ahmed was arrested March 23 when the indictment was returned under seal. It was unsealed by the court Thursday. The charge carries a maximum sentence of 15 years in prison and a fine of up to $250,000. Ahmed's court-appointed attorney, Jack Martin, did not return messages seeking comment.

Sadeque, 19, who is accused of making materially false statements in connection with an ongoing federal terrorism investigation, was arrested in Bangladesh and was en route to New York City to be arraigned.

Several phone messages left with his sister were not immediately returned.

"There is no imminent threat," said FBI Special Agent Richard Kolko, a spokesman in Washington.

Authorities said the two men spent several days in Canada, where they met with others being investigated by the terrorism task force.

Sadeque is accused of lying about the trip when he was interviewed at John F. Kennedy International Airport in August as he was about to leave for Bangladesh. The affidavit said Sadeque had said he traveled alone in January to visit an aunt.

When Sadeque's suitcase was searched at JFK, agents found a CD-ROM containing encrypted files that the FBI has been unable to decode and a map of the Washington area hidden in the lining, the affidavit said.

One day later, federal agents interviewed Ahmed, who was coming back from a monthlong trip to Pakistan, at Atlanta's Hartsfield-Jackson International Airport. He said he had gone to Toronto with Sadeque, according to the affidavit.

Web hoax: a rented 747, a paint job and a video camera

WASHINGTON (AP) — A startling Internet video that shows someone spraying graffiti on President Bush's jet looked so authentic that the Air Force wasn't immediately certain whether the plane had been targeted.

It was all a hoax. No one actually sprayed the slogan "Still Free" on the cowling of Air Force One. The pranksters responsible for the grainy, two-minute Web video — employed by a New York fashion company — revealed Friday how they pulled it off: a rented 747 in California painted to look almost exactly like Air Force One.

"I wanted to do something culturally significant, wanted to create a real pop-culture moment," said Marc Ecko of Marc Ecko Enterprises. "It's this completely irreverent, over-the-top thing that could really never happen: this five-dollar can of paint putting a pimple on this Goliath."

High-ranking CIA official dismissed in leaks case

By Greg Miller
Los Angeles Times

WASHINGTON — The CIA has fired a senior officer for leaking classified information to news organizations, including material for Pulitzer Prize-winning stories in The Washington Post that said the agency maintained a secret network of prison facilities overseas for high-ranking terrorist suspects.

The termination, announced Friday, marks the latest in a series of high-profile crackdowns on spy agency and Bush administration officials accused of unauthorized disclosures of classified information.

The CIA would not disclose the identity of the fired officer, citing Privacy Act protections. But current and former intelligence officials identified her as Mary O. McCarthy, a former White House aide who until this week held a senior position in the CIA's inspector general's office.

CIA spokesman Paul Gimigliano would only say that an unnamed individual had admitted to having contacts with the press and discussing classified information.

"That is a violation of the secrecy agreement that everyone signs as a condition of employment with the CIA," Gimigliano said.

U.S. intelligence officials, who requested anonymity because they were not at liberty to discuss the case, said McCarthy's admission came after she failed a polygraph test conducted as part of several ongoing CIA investigations into leaks. She was fired Thursday and escorted from the agency's campus in Langley, Va., the officials said.

The officials said McCarthy could face criminal prosecution, and that the Justice Department has been apprised of developments in the internal CIA probes. One U.S. official indicated that she had engaged in a "pattern of contacts" with more than one reporter.

McCarthy has held a series of high-level positions in the intelligence community during a career spanning two decades, according to a short biography posted on the Web site of the Center for Strategic and International Studies, a Washington think tank where she was a visiting fellow in 2001 before returning to intelligence work.

According to the biography, McCarthy served as senior director for intelligence programs at the White House's National Security Council under President Clinton and, until July 2001, for President Bush.

Previously, she held positions with the National Intelligence Council, which was formerly based at the CIA and is responsible for producing assessments on major national security issues.

McCarthy holds a Ph.D. in history from the University of Minnesota and had taught there; she also worked at Yale University before joining the government.

Filer teacher one of three to win award

FILER — Filer High School teacher Ed Richards recently joined an elite group.

Richards was honored Thursday with the 2006 Governor's Industry Award for notable teaching in science.

Richards and two other winners — selected from teachers of grades first through senior level — received $2,000 and met with Gov. Kempthorne in Boise.

Established in 2000, the GILANTS award is sponsored by both the Idaho Department of Education and the Idaho State Board of Education in conjunction with industry leaders such as Hewlett-Packard, the Micron Foundation, Washington Group International, the National Laboratory and the Idaho Office of Science and Technology.

Recipients are recognized as outstanding educators who use the classroom to provide students with skills that are vital to the Idaho economy.

Richards, who began teaching science at Filer High School in 1992, introduces his students to a world of science that extends beyond the textbook.

In 2002, his age-appropriate class designed and built a mature digester as a possible dairy odor solution. Working with local law enforcement, his students have also participated in mock crime scene investigations by collecting DNA and other forensic evidence.

CSI holds Mars Rover Challenge for students

TWIN FALLS — Teams of fifth- and sixth-grade students will converge at the College of Southern Idaho as part of the Idaho TECH: Mars Rover Challenge from 9:30 a.m. to 3 p.m. today.

The NASA Idaho Space Grant Consortium's Teaching Engineering to Children (TECIC) Challenge tests the students' engineering skills. Students use LEGO to create a motorized Mars rover, then teams of four to six students test the rover's ability to maneuver through obstacles, climb steep hills and pick up small objects, among other things.

Teams from American Falls, Blackfoot, Boise, Driggs, Emmett, Idaho Falls, Jerome, Leadore, Mackay, Mountain Home, Pocatello, Preston, Teton, Twin Falls, and Highland, Utah, will compete today. The top four winners will compete against finalists from the north Idaho competition April 29 at the University of Idaho in Moscow.

Idaho TECH is part of the festivities for Idaho's Space Week, April 23-29.

The event includes a paper rocket activity, Idaho's FIRST (For Inspiration and Recognition of Science and Technology) Robotics teams demonstrating their robots, Clark Bowen, a NASA Aerospace Education Services Program Representative, will speak during the awards assembly at 2:15 p.m.

Buhl students learn to conserve and recycle resources

By Blair Koch
Times-News correspondent

BUHL — Reduce. Reuse. Recycle.

The three R's of using resources, responsibly have been taught for years in schools across the country. Today on the 36th anniversary of Earth Day, the three R's remain the mantra.

Students at Popplewell Elementary have taken the opportunity to spread the lesson across the community.

"Here at Popplewell, our third- and fifth-grade students are creating art, work with an environmental theme," said Priscilla Sisson, multimedia supervisor. They are spending part of their library time decorating bags donated by Ridley's Family Market of Buhl.

Shoppers will be getting a reminder to recycle the paper bag once the groceries are unloaded.

About 200 bags, decorated colorfully and containing messages like "We Love Our Planet" and "We Care About the Earth," will be used at the grocery store today.

"It is important to reuse our resources," said David Murdoch, 10. "If you don't recycle and reuse things, you may run out of them."

The hope is that the bags will continue being reused and the environmentally friendly reminder from the students will continue to inspire the community to think about other ways to conserve, Sisson said.

This school's theme for this Earth Day is "Earth Day Every Day," the most cans and newspapers.

He is also part of the school's K-Kids Club, which holds a yearly recycling contest.

"We hold a competition to see which class brings in the most cans and newspapers," he said. "We take it to the re-

The club also plants flowers, Murdoch said.

Classmate Cinthia Gonzalez, 11, said her family recycles at home.

"We recycle cans and other metal stuff. It is good to save things and recycle other things so they can be reused and not wasted," she said.

Earth Day comes to Twin Falls big time

By Michelle Dunlop
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — It started out as a small idea.

But when organizers of this year's Earth Day started asking others to join in the event, it kept growing.

"Every time someone heard about it, they wanted to be a part of it," said Steven Paulsen, whose business, Conservation Reading and Restoration Inc., is sponsoring the event.

Conservation Reading and Restoration Inc. is coordinating the Twin Falls Earth Day celebration, which is a day-long event in environmental issues. The Magic Valley Fly Fishermen group, a local organization and government agency, will also have a booth. Twin Falls County Parks and Watersheds and Sawtooth National Forest Service. There will be games, readings and other events for children, Paulsen said.

Dave Anderson, with the Idaho Department of Environmental Quality, says that his agency's theme at the fair centers on conservation. The department will have information on both surface and groundwater as well as drinking water. Anderson also is involved in the Magic Valley Fly Fishermen group, which will provide both fly-casting and fly-tying demonstrations.

"The whole idea is to come out, have some fun and to engage people," Paulsen said.

HIGHER-ED AT A HIGHER PRICE

CSI and NIC remain Idaho's most affordable

By Joshua Palmer
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — The College of Southern Idaho will remain one of the most affordable sources of higher education.

The State Board of Education approved tuition increases Friday for all but two of Idaho's colleges and universities — tuition at the College of Southern Idaho and North Idaho College are controlled by the local board of trustees.

Tuition and fees have always been an access issue for us," said John Mason, vice president of finance for the College of Southern Idaho, in a board meeting on Monday. "If we raise our tuition too high, it can make it difficult for some students to enroll. And that's not a position we want to be in."

Mason said he did not know if lower tuition rates at CSI would attract more students, but he said the college's great cost was for its local constituents.

Full-time students at CSI and North Idaho College will pay about $2,000 per year — a little more than a 5 percent increase — beginning in the fall semester.

Board members at North Idaho College will make a final decision on its tuition increase next week.

Boise State University, Idaho's largest university with more than 18,000 students, charges $3,872 per year for residents and $11,260 for nonresidents, but will raise tuition by 8.73 percent. Idaho State University in Pocatello, which charges Idaho residents $4,000 and out-of-state students $11,700, received a 7 percent increase. Lewis and Clark State College in Lewiston received a 6 percent increase in tuition that is now $3,714 for Idaho residents and $10,266 for out-of-state residents.

Dene Thomas, president of Lewis and Clark, said the college sought to raise tuition in part because the Legislature reduced its payments to Idaho colleges and universities in recent years.

"It's a balance between state-appropriated dollars and student dollars," Thomas said. "Students are paying more of their education costs today than they were five years ago."

Rod Lewis, president of the State Board of Education, said the board approved the increases while keeping student costs in mind.

"The board is very mindful of our students' ability to pay for higher education," Lewis said. "We have carefully evaluated each fee and tuition request by our colleges and universities in correlation with state funding."

But students at CSI said they are feeling the pinch.

Craig Zeng, a spokesman for Boise State, said Boise State tuition went up 10 percent last year. He said next year's increase will amount to $338 for a full-time Boise State student, but even with the increase, Boise State would be less expensive than the University of Idaho and Idaho State.

BSU continues to be a good bargain for higher education," he said, noting that 12,000 BSU students receive financial aid in the form of grants or loans.

Historic Mormon handcart heads east to Fort Kearney

By Laurie Welch
For The Times-News

RUPERT — One of only three known, intact Mormon handcarts from the 1856-1860 exodus, owned by a Rupert family, will travel to Fort Kearney State Historical Park in Nebraska on June 2 and 3 for the 150th Anniversary of the Handcart Pioneers.

The handcart, known as the "Stanley Cart," is owned by the Tony and Jacquie Clapier family. The cart was built by Chauncy Webb, who was appointed by Brigham Young to be the handcart supervisor in Iowa City, Iowa.

Webb, his brothers and eventually his sons made all the handcarts and wagons that carried the church members to the Utah territory.

The Rupert cart is the only Mormon handcart known to have traveled west to Oregon from Salt Lake City and the only one to have passed through Cassia County.

The Stanleys traveled along an immigration trail to Independence, Ore., where they were instrumental in establishing a branch of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints.

The family eventually moved to Idaho and the cart came with them. It is often used in Fourth of July parades

Handcart history

Mormons were driven by mobs from their homes in Nauvoo, Ill., in 1846. Under the direction of Brigham Young, the first pioneer company arrived in the Salt Lake Valley in July 1847. More than 70,000 Mormons traveled by covered wagons, handcarts or handcarts to Salt Lake City between 1847 and 1869.

and in July 24 Pioneer Day celebrations, the anniversary of the first pioneers who arrived in the Salt Lake valley.

The Clapiers bought the cart at a public auction 30 years ago and are the second owners since Stanley.

"I will remember the day we bought the cart," Tony Clapier said. "My father and I took some steer calves to the auction. We had raised to pay for our family vacation. While we were waiting for our check, we were looking at handcarts and on an antique auction (hall) we saw this cart. It was a beautiful, highlighted an original Mormon handcart with history. My dad picked up the vacation check and said 'Let's go.'"

"To make a long story shorter, we bought the cart. Spent all the money we had. Got the cart home. Loaded up some more calves and got back to the auction all before Mother figured out what we had done."

Clapier said he asked his father if he thought they could get away with all of this unscrupulous and he replied that they would provide a better financial aid to buy another original handcart.

"Of course, Mom forgave me," he said. "She just didn't let us go to the sale alone for a long time."

Water managers try to fill dams and avoid floods in S. Idaho

By Keith Ridler
Associated Press Writer

BOISE — After six years of drought, a large snowpack has dam managers across southern Idaho trying to fill reservoirs without risking flooding areas downstream.

"There's always risk and uncertainty when you're dealing with Mother Nature," said Bryan Willis of the Army Corps of Engineers, which coordinates operations of the three dams that control the flow of the Boise River through the state's capital. "She's given us a couple of storms that have put us in the situation that we're in now."

Friday, the three reservoirs have about 100,000 acre-feet too much water in them for this time of year.

Two other reservoirs, Magic Reservoir near Twin Falls and Owyhee Reservoir in eastern Oregon near the Idaho border, have already filled. Managers looking to get rid of excess water include those at American Falls Reservoir on the Snake River near Twin Falls, Palisades Reservoir on the Upper Snake River in eastern Idaho, and the Little Wood Reservoir near Carey.

Full reservoirs mean the dams can't provide flood control.

"That's a really serious situation if you have an uncontrolled flow," said Jay Breidenbach, a

On the Net:
Boise River reservoir status: <http://www.idwr.gov/pr/ty-drome/boisrtye.cfm>

National Weather Service hydrologist in Boise. "It doesn't hurt the integrity of the dam, but you could end up with much more serious flooding if you have no control of the inflow."

Managers use guidelines called "rule curves" to manage reservoirs and avoid uncontrolled flows. A rule curve is unique for each reservoir or system of reservoirs. It's based on such things as building capacity, anticipated snow melt, refilling, irrigation, flood control, history of the basin, and weather forecasts. It tells managers how much storage capacity they need for a given time of year.

How much water is in a reservoir, and how much water in the snowpack that's expected to make it to the reservoir can be accurately determined.

"The third variable is what will weather and climate conditions be like, say a month or two months in the future," said Breidenbach. "That's a lot less certain."

For the Boise River, the rule curve is telling managers to get rid of water, which is why 7,000 cubic feet per second was passing under the Glenwood Bridge in the Boise suburb of Garden City on Friday and causing some minor flooding.

"We believe we can catch up in the next 30 days," said John Helstuman, a hydrologist with the Army Corps of Engineers.

Lucky Peak and Arrowrock reservoirs on the Boise River, and American Ranch Reservoir on the South Fork of the Boise River have a combined holding capacity of 974,000 acre-feet. About 54 percent of that has been used, leaving about 450,000 acre-feet. An acre-foot is the amount of water needed to cover an acre one foot deep.

However, another 1.8 million acre-feet of water is expected in the system from snow melt this spring. If that overwhelms the reservoirs, "You'd have to pass that directly through to Boise and that would be greater than the 100-year flood," Breidenbach said.

To avoid that, the Corps of Engineers essentially takes control of all three dams and runs them as an integrated system. The Corps operates Lucky Peak and the Bureau of Reclamation operates Arrowrock and Anderson Ranch.

Helstuman said flows up to 6,500 cfs on the Boise River are historically not that uncommon, though they might seem so following six years of drought.

Naples man pleads

guilty to manslaughter

COEUR D'ALENE (AP) — A Naples man has pleaded guilty to charges in a drunken driving crash that killed three people.

Jake Allen Peterson, 27, pleaded guilty to one count each of aggravated drunken driving and vehicular manslaughter. The pleas were part of an agreement with the prosecutor and were entered Wednesday in 1st District Court.

They stem from a July 29 crash on U.S. Highway 95 south of Bonners Ferry.

Boundary County Deputy Prosecutor Lewis Hull presented 1st District Judge Charles Hock with an amended criminal complaint against Peterson, incorporating three manslaughter counts into one. Peterson, who is out on bail, was accused of killing Tabitha Saunders, 21, her boyfriend, Bart Burton, 24, and their 2-year-old daughter Kjestine Saunders in the early morning collision.

Idaho State Police said Peterson drove his Dodge pickup into oncoming traffic and slammed head-on into the Dodge Neon driven by Tabitha Saunders. A fourth occupant, Lyssa Saunders, who was 2 months old at the time, was seriously injured.

Peterson's trial had been scheduled to begin Monday. Hock told Peterson the manslaughter charge carries a maximum prison term of 15 years and 10 years for the aggravated DUI count. The sentences could run consecutively.

Peterson was ordered to undergo a substance abuse evaluation before the sentencing, set for May 23 in Bonners Ferry.

Eagle to see two new health care centers

EAGLE — Two of the Boise area's largest health care providers are establishing medical centers in Eagle.

Saint Alphonsus and St. Luke's regional medical centers are each putting up buildings that represent a combined $27 million investment. The outpatient facilities will employ more than 120 health care workers when they open. Saint Alphonsus is opening this fall and St. Luke's is opening a year later.

Surveys have showed Eagle residents want more access to primary care services such as family practice, internal medicine, OB-Gyn, and pediatrics, said officials of the two medical providers.

The medical centers are needed by the many young families moving into the community, said Robin Navert, an Eagle mother of three.

"We're thrilled," said Navert, who takes her mother to Saint Alphonsus in Boise and her children to St. Luke's in downtown Boise and Meridian. "Saint Alf's is quite a haul."

Boise and Meridian aren't too far to travel for health care services, but the traffic makes travel difficult, residents said. "Traffic in our community going anywhere is busy and congested," said Teri Bath, president of the Eagle Chamber of Commerce.

The two new medical centers will offer urgent care, so patients can be seen without an appointment. They also will offer laboratory testing, medical imaging and physicians' offices.

Eagle has almost doubled in size since 2000, with more than 20,000 now living in the city.

Prosecutor asks district judge to disqualify himself

COEUR D'ALENE (AP) — A prosecutor has asked a judge to disqualify himself from a case because the family of a murder victim, upset at what they consider a too lenient sentence issued by the judge, has donated money to the judge's opponent for an upcoming election.

Kootenai County Prosecutor Bill Douglas asked 1st District Court Judge John Mitchell to disqualify himself from a post-conviction relief hearing for Giovanni Mendiola, who wants his sentence reduced.

Mendiola pleaded guilty to second-degree murder in the death of Molly and Stewart Butler's son, Brendan Butler of Coeur d'Alene.

Brendan Butler, a 20-year-old former honors student, was strangled and stabbed in 2002 "in a remote area near Hayden Lake. Police said he headed a lucrative drug ring smuggling marijuana into Idaho from Canada. Prosecutors said Mendiola killed Butler in a dispute over money."

The plea agreement made by Mendiola suggested life in prison with a 12-year fixed sentence. In 2003, Mitchell sentenced Mendiola to life in prison with an opportunity for parole after eight years.

The Butlers have donated $1,000 to Mitchell's opponent in the judicial campaign, Coeur d'Alene attorney Rami Amaro.

"It isn't that we do not like John Mitchell personally," Stewart Butler told The Spokesman-Review. "We think he's lacking in judicial competence in his understanding of the law and the way he meets it out."

Stewart Butler said he also didn't like "the rather extensive comments (Mitchell) made about (Mendiola) and what a wonderful person he was" at the sentencing.

Mitchell told The Associated Press on Friday that he could not comment on the case.

In court papers, Douglas said the state is concerned that the financial and vocal support the Butlers have given Amaro could "give the appearance of bias or prejudice" against the prosecution.

Meanwhile, Amaro said she has received threats, and contacted the prosecutor's office after an anonymous post on a Spokesman-Review blog that asked, "Would Rami know if her kids were kidnapped?"

She said she wants Mitchell to rein in his supporters.

"Mitchell, put your foot down, be an ethical, moral citizen and tell your supporters to stop," Amaro said.

On Friday, Mitchell said he doubted the people who support him are the kind who would be likely to write negative posts on the blog about Amaro.

"I looked at the blog several weeks ago, and the things that were being said about both of us were both supportive and hateful," he said. "Hateful to the point that I've never gone back and looked at it again."

Balog by man accused in killings had discussed guns, pedophiles

By Clarke Canfield
Associated Press writer

PORTLAND, Maine — A blog belonging to a Canadian man accused of shooting two sex offenders in Maine underscores his interest in guns as well as his disdain for pedophiles.

Stephen Marshall included links to his favorite guns as well as a guide to spotting pedophiles, including instructions on what their most subtle smiles tell about their intentions. The blog was created several years ago while he lived with his father in Caldwell, Idaho, as a teenager.

State police investigators have not yet discussed Marshall's motives for coming to Maine, but his online journal or blog, further painted a picture of a young man who liked guns and found pedophiles to be repugnant.

The 20-year-old, who had lived in several different places over the years, also told viewers of his blog "Please e-mail me, I'm lonely."

Marshall used a computer to review 34 profiles from Maine's online sex-offender registry before killing two of the men on Easter morning, investigators say. He later killed himself on a Boston-bound bus that was detained by police.

His half-sister, Margaret Miles of Little Bras D'or, Nova Scotia, said she learned of the blog on Thursday. Miles found parts of the blog disturbing, but she also knew it was wrong.

"I'm glad it's there because it gives insight into his personal-

In this undated photo, Stephen Marshall is shown in his mother's kitchen in Little Bras D'or, near North Sidney, Nova Scotia, Canada. ty," she said.

But Miles is still at a loss to explain what might have prompted the shootings.

"It's hard to speculate," she said. "I don't think enough information is in."

Marshall's laptop computer was being examined by the Maine Computer Crimes Task Force, but investigators do not plan to release any information until they have a complete picture of the material they retrieve, said Stephen McCausland, spokesman for the Maine Department of Public Safety. That process could take several days.

The details of Marshall's blog were reported by The Globe and Mail newspaper in Toronto.

The Web site had been removed as of Friday morning. An automated message said Marshall's page violated the terms established by the Web site. Officials at Tycos.com "had been reviewing the site after it was called to their attention. Meredith LeDuc, assistant to the general counsel for Lycos, said from Walldham, Mass.

A friend of Marshall's when he lived in Idaho, Joe Reischopf, said the Web site was several years old and may not have represented Marshall's current views. He said Marshall posted some of life's annoyances at the time.

The blog in many ways was like a typical personal Web site for a teenager. It includes quotes from the late musician Kurt Cobain and suggestive photos of tennis player Anna Kournikova and actress Carmen Electra.

Under his likes, Marshall listed food, "chicks," maple syrup, Canadians, hockey and pornography.

His dislikes included law enforcement, homosexuals, "minorities getting special treatment" and "women in general." The Globe and Mail reported.

In an eerie foreshadowing of his own death, Marshall listed suicide methods in a section labeled, "How to kill yourself like a man."

Marshall expressed strong feelings about sexual predators when the subject came up in the news. Reischopf told The Associated Press. He said they agreed that sexual predators were "worthless" and their crimes made them "worse than killers."

Maine's sex offender registry was taken off-line for 24 hours after the killings but it is back online and remains as popular as ever, officials said.

McCausland said it averaged 200,000 viewings per month. But officials said Friday that the number is much higher, averaging 575,000 "hits" a month during the first three months of 2006.

On Monday, the day after the killings, there were 116,200 hits and on Tuesday that number was 189,592, McCausland said Friday.

So far, Simcox said, landowners owning a total of some 70 miles of border property have said they would allow Minutemen to build fortified fencing.

Of that, about 20 to 25 miles are in Arizona, the busiest illegal entry point on the U.S.-Mexico border, he said. The longest contiguous line is about 15 miles. The rest of the committed land is in California, Texas and New Mexico, he said.

Minutemen say calls pour in over fencing proposal

TUCSON, Ariz. (AP) — Volunteer offers are flooding in to a border watch group that said it will build a fence on the Mexican border, according to President Bush militarizes the border and adds new security fencing, group spokesmen said Friday.

"We've certainly struck a chord with a nerve with the American people on this one," said Chris Simcox, national leader of the Minuteman Civil Defense Corps, which is conducting monthlong border watch operations in Arizona and more than a half-dozen other states on the Mexican and Canadian borders.

Group members are watching for illegal immigrants and smugglers entering the country and are reporting them to federal authorities.

Minuteman spokeswoman Connie Hall called the response to the fence proposal unbelievable — "people wanting to donate, to help build a fence, people wanting a fence on their land."

People have called talk radio programs "offering to buy 100 feet of fence," she said. Others have pledged to bring earthmovers to the border, as long as they can operate the machinery themselves, or promised a trade union's assistance.

So far, Simcox said, landowners owning a total of some 70 miles of border property have said they would allow Minutemen to build fortified fencing.

Of that, about 20 to 25 miles are in Arizona, the busiest illegal entry point on the U.S.-Mexico border, he said. The longest contiguous line is about 15 miles. The rest of the committed land is in California, Texas and New Mexico, he said.

Delta pilots union ratifies tentative agreement

ATLANTA (AP) — The leaders of the pilots union at Delta Air Lines Inc. have ratified a tentative agreement, endorsing concessions that include an initial 14 percent wage cut and assurances the union won't block any company effort to terminate its pension plan.

The vote by the leadership was 12-1 in favor of ratification, according to a memo sent late Friday to pilots, who will be asked to approve it.

The agreement was reached between the nation's third-largest carrier and union negotiators on April 14, clearing one hurdle for Atlanta-based Delta by avoiding a crippling strike. It also ends a hub in Salt Lake City.

Now comes what could be the harder part — getting the airline's 5,000 pilots, who came to the brink of a walkout, to approve the deal.

Union leaders had been meeting since Wednesday in New Orleans to discuss the agreement.

The deal represents "a concessionary agreement," Lee Monk, chairman of the union's executive committee, told pilots.

But, he said, "Our goal throughout the Chapter 11 process has been to reach a comprehensive, consensual agreement that will lead to our working for a profitable airline with long-term viability that protects the major interests of our (contract) and that provides strong returns for our sacrifices. I believe this agreement meets that goal."

The bargaining will begin in mid-May and will remain open for 15 days.

Delta spokesman Bruce Hicks said the company would release a statement today.

According to the agreement obtained by The Associated Press, effective June 1, pilots' composite hourly pay rates will be reduced 14 percent from the composite hourly pay rates that were in effect on Dec. 14.

Gooding crews stood ready for action

CHEERS to the sandbag brigade and flood relief team in Gooding County.

Last week's precipitous rain and snow added to the surging Big Wood River. But relief crews and area first responders were already at work with sandbag support to help halt areas of flooding.

Gooding city and Gooding County officials, as well as the Army Corps of Engineers, deserve rounds of applause for keeping communications lines open and the flooding situation in control. Sandbag efforts started as early as Tuesday of last week.

Once the Big Wood started to rise, officials were more than prepared with evacuation plans aligned in case the roads were closed. Preparation once again proved essential for what happened and what didn't happen.

JEERS to the Rocky Mountain Cat Resort, which resembles something other than a resort.

The cat boardinghouse and store owned by Janet Rasmussen received a visit from Twin Falls County sheriff's deputies on Thursday after numerous complaints about the operation. The visit was merely the start of an investigation and no charges were issued. But regardless of how that probe turns out, it's questionable wisdom for anyone to stick so many cats into one small area. A team of officers and veterinarians tagged and inspected the animals at the scene Thursday and Friday.

When they were done, investigators counted 323 felines, including some with blindness, earmites and some skin infections. Several cats had to be euthanized.

CHEERS to the LDS temple groundbreaking in Twin Falls.

Community leaders and members of the Mormon faith gathered last Saturday to break ground on the church's temple to be located on Eastland Drive. In their remarks, Elders Neil L. Andersen and Paul E. Koelliker, two members of the church's worldwide leadership, praised city leaders, property neighbors, and other religious denominations for their supportive acceptance of the project.

That praise was well earned in Twin Falls, as leaders from many sides worked together to resolve concerns with the building and its construction. The experience proved how differences can turn into real cooperation.

An ecumenical spirit between various faiths can and should be a common theme as many churches experience growth in coming years. Diversity in worship will make Twin Falls an even greater place to call home.

JEERS to Rawlie Henry, who pleaded guilty to second-degree murder and first-degree arson in the death of her husband, Joseph Glen Henry.

Henry's case came to an end last week after a mediated plea agreement that was announced with the state attorney general's office.

Henry accepted a life prison sentence with 35 years fixed.

Investigators determined that Joseph Henry died from a gunshot wound on October 8, 2004. In the early morning hours of November 17, 2004, the couple's Jerome home was burned to the ground to cover up the murder.

If there's anything to cheer in this case, it's the mediation process that helped avoid costs of a trial and appeal. Those efforts would have cost Jerome County taxpayers heavily in the long run.

CHEERS to Paul Ostyn for his induction into the National High School Hall of Fame.

It takes a special breed to be an athletic referee, but it's even more noteworthy when you wear the striped shirt five decades. Ostyn has earned the honor admirably after 52 years of officiating at many levels in Idaho.

Ostyn is just the fourth Idahoan to earn the national honor. A former Twin Falls city mayor, city councilman, and athletic director at the University of Idaho, Ostyn has been craft officiating in basketball, baseball, softball, and wrestling. In each of his 52 years of officiating, he was called to referee the Idaho state football playoffs.

His followers include many local student athletes whom he coached while at Twin Falls High and the College of Southern Idaho. Whether as a coach or referee, Ostyn has been a recognizable and respected face on the playing field.

Is he a king, or a two-buck Chuck?

STEPHEN BAYLEY

Queen Elizabeth II still rides horses and is, by all accounts, still active and fit. But she did turn 80 Friday, so it's not mere morbid voyeurism that puts the succession under scrutiny. Her eldest son, the future Charles III, is being watched very closely.

At 57, Charles is not an enigma, but he is both confused and confusing, well meaning but ham fisted, with a bizarre catalog of eccentricities to his name. His royal head is full of contradictions. As head of the Church of England, he is, in the Latin, "fidei defensor" — defender of the faith — yet Camilla and Diana were only the latest in a long stream of wives in his life (which recent reports say, hilariously, might have included Barbara Streisand) to enjoy his life. He cheerfully admits on television to having committed adultery.

An enthusiastic champion of environmental causes, he flies to an official appointment in the Czech Republic — but sends his driver overland in a turbo-charged Bentley (at about 100 miles to the gallon) so he can enjoy his comforts while abroad. He chatters commercial jets to take him and his entourage to lecture the dispossessed on eco-accountability.

Although he is deeply conservative in style and traditional in manners, he sells his own line of sausages and organic food in supermarkets throughout his future realm. He has an abundance of palaces but takes a keen interest in the urban sprawl of London.

Although he was the first of his immediate family to go to a university, Charles was never distinguished academically. Not possessed of great speculative intelligence, emotionally constipated and needy, he has looked for mentors and gurus outside both his family and conventional academe.

One such mentor was Laurence van der Post, a South African adventurer, journalist and pop anthropologist whose books and teaching stirred mysticism in the young prince of Wales. Never content that recent biographies have suggested that Van der Post's work included a greater imaginative element than normally would be thought appropriate in nonfiction, one nevertheless imagines the two of them spending stirring evenings in front of the campfires discussing the Kalahari bushmen and their concept of the myth of the perpetual return.

Is his eccentricity genetic? Does guillemot run in the royal DNA? The duke of Windsor, for instance, fed his pugs from custom silver bowls and had servants hand cut his toilet tissue. And Charles' mother is one of the richest women in the world but insists that her staff walk on the edge of corridor carpets to prevent unnecessary wear.

Charles exists in a universe of neo-feudal privilege. Footmen iron his shorts; valets squeeze his toothpaste. He does not carry cash. It is irresistible to speculate what this might do to a fragile psyche. If not passed over for one of his sons, Charles might be older than 60 when he becomes king, arriving at a position of awesome authority as an immature graybeard.

For now, with his regal future on hold, with the tabloids screaming irrelevant headlines about him and his family (such as "Will In Sex and Drugs Scandal"), the man who would be king has busied himself with organic horticulture and, less happily, with architecture.

It is this last that has been most controversial, not least because his family — while strong on pugs and horses — has a very dim record in matters of both patronage and appreciation. Asked what she thought of "taste," the queen replied: "I don't think it helps."

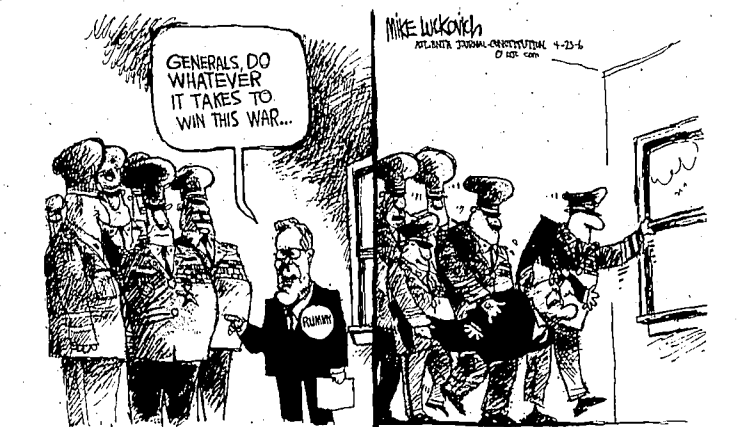

Today, the country's mood toward its future monarch is one of tolerant exasperation. Forty years ago, when we think about Charles, a decent man tormented by public and private devils comes to mind.

Eighty years ago, when his mother was born, Britain still had late imperial poets doing verse in resonant meter. It had more than 30 car manufacturers and perhaps as many as 20 companies making aircraft. But that has disappeared.

Charles was born into a rational, beige, depressed London — a city exhausted and dispirited. He grew up in a period of post-imperial confusion. Now London is again, and for very different reasons from those Queen Victoria might have understood, a true world city. It is rich, cosmopolitan and exciting, its only authentic reason as a capital of finance, creativity and gastronomy is New York.

Can a prince of Wales who wears Scottish kilts and who does not carry a credit card cope with this new reality?

Rumsfeld sticking to his empty guns

At first Rummy was reluctant to talk about the organizing generals' belated objections to the irrational and bullying decisions that led to carnage in Iraq. The rebellious retired brass complain that the defense chief was contemptuous of advice from his military officers and sabotaged the Iraq mission with willful misjudgments before and after the invasion.

"I kind of would prefer to let a little time walk over it," Rummy told reporters at a Pentagon briefing on Tuesday. But seconds later, he let loose a river of ruminations, a Shakespearean, or maybe Nizorian, soliloquy that showed such a breathtaking lack of comprehension that it was touching, in a perverse way.

He faltered and floundered through anecdotes from his first and second stints at the Pentagon, arguing that he drew criticism because he was a change agent, trying to transform the lumbering military bureaucracy.

He talked about things that most people wouldn't understand — how 20 years ago he chose a M-1 battle tank with a 120-millimeter cannon and turbine engine instead of the 105-howitzer and diesel engine the Army had wanted. He babbled on about reforms in the Unified Command Plan, the Defense Logistics System, the

MAUREEN DOWD

Quadrant Defense Reviews, and the National Security Personnel System and about going from "service-centric war fighting, to interoperability and now towards interoperability."

When you yank the military from the 20th-century industrial age to the 21st-century information age, Rummy said, you're bound to cause "a lot of ruffles."

Asked why he twice offered to resign during the Abu Ghraib prison abuse scandal but has not this time, Rummy smiled and replied, "Oh, just call it idiosyncrasy."

Idiosyncrasy, indeed, with Iraq in chaos, the military riven and depleted, the president poleaxed, the Republican forces for the midterm elections dwindling, and Republican lawmakers like Chuck Hagel questioning Rummy's leadership and Democratic ones like Dick Durbin proposing a no-confidence vote in the Senate.

The secretary made it sound as if the generals want him to resign because he made reforms. But they really want him to resign because he made glib, horrible, arrogant mistakes that will be taught in history classes forever.

He suggested invading Iraq the day after 9/11. He didn't want to invade Iraq because it was connected to 9/11. That was the part his neocon allies at the Pentagon, Wolfie and Doug Feith, had to concoct. Rummy wanted to invade Iraq because he thought it would be easy, compared with Iran or North Korea, or compared with the Iraqis. He could do it cheap and show off his vaunted transformation of the military into a sleek, lean fighting force.

"Cloistered in a macho monastery with W. ('The Decider'), Dick Cheney and Condoleezza Rice, Rummy didn't want to hear dissent, or delve into worries about Iraq, the tribes, the sears, the likelihood of an insurgency or a civil war, the need for more troops and armor to quell postwar eruptions."

"He didn't worry about the culture in Iraq," said Bernard Trainor, the retired Marine general who is his former colleague and the co-author of "Cobra II." "He just wanted to show them the front end of an M-1 tank. He could have been in Antarctica fighting penguins. The small raise made her better fit $500 a month. Now the children may have to stay home alone until she gets off work."

This woman is strong, headstrong and intelligent. She wants to be self-sufficient. Does she get a good job and take one that pays less? Quit entirely and live off, what he did to Shinskei in the baggage, make him an example, say, 'I'm in charge, don't mess with me.'"

The stoic Gen. Eric Shinseki finally spoke to Newsweek, conceding he had seen a former classmate wearing a cap emblazoned with "TUCWAS RIGHT" at West Point last fall. He said only that the Pentagon had "a lot of turmoil" before the invasion.

Just as with Vietnam, when LBJ and Robert McNamara were running the war, or later, when Richard Nixon and Henry Kissinger took over, we now have leaders obsessed with not seeming weak, or losing face. Their egos are feeding their delusions.

Asked by Rush Limbaugh on Monday about progress in Iraq, Rummy replied, "Well, the progress has been good." He said that if you always listened to critics about war, "we wouldn't have won the Revolutionary War" or World War I or World War II, and America would have been a different country "if it existed at all."

But the conscience-stricken generals are not critics of war. They are critics of having a war run by a 73-year-old who thinks he's a force for modernity when he's really a force for fantasy. It's time to change the change agent.

State system seems to encourage welfare

I have watched a single mom of four boys ages 5 through 13, struggle to make ends meet. She moved 11 times during her marriage, the kids going from home to home, changing schools, losing friends. Her ex-husband stalked her, was addicted to meth and has given no child support. The state she was living in moved them back home for their safety. She got a good job, works hard and is an excellent mother.

She made a vow that she was going to have a stable home for him and the boys and never have to move again. Then her ex-husband came after her for the money owed, an IRS tax lien against it and was taken.

Through state assistance and work, she was able to get by. Then the IRS came after her for the monies owed, as she was a working adult. Her husband had fled the state and his whereabouts were unknown. He is now in custody and the state is taking good care of him.

The IRS is taking her tax returns. She got a raise at work. The small raise made her better fit $500 a month. Now the children may have to stay home alone until she gets off work.

This woman is strong, headstrong and intelligent. She wants to be self-sufficient. Does she get a good job and take one that pays less? Quit entirely and live off, the state? Many women have made the choice not to work and live off the state just because it's easier that way.

Because of this, others suffer the consequences. What is a woman who wants to work and get ahead supposed to do?

The system is telling her to quit — or move to Iraq?

A full tax-paying, frustrated mother.

Kramer demonstrates an ability to lead

We would like to share with you why we are excited about Terry Kramer's decision to run for a county commissioner seat.

We have known Terry Kramer for 36 years. In that time, we've learned he has some very consistent traits.

Terry is honest. He will listen to all sides of an issue, then tell you where he stands on that issue while respecting and considering other positions. He normally does more research on the question to obtain facts to support his actions. The great thing about Terry is that he is able and willing to put decisions into action. This applies to his farming, community service and personal relationships.

Terry cares about individual persons. I (Jon) have worked with Terry for 23 years as a full-time volunteer emergency medical technician with the Castleford Quick Response Unit. I have often noted how he really does care for those people we assist. Terry makes a sincere effort to live out his Christian commitment.

Terry is an unusual candidate in that he has already demonstrated and proven his ability to lead, direct and make decisions for the benefit of those he serves. His time spent on Twin Falls County Planning and Zoning Commission, serving to formulate the original Twin Falls County Comprehensive Plan, serving as a director of the American Falls Water District, and volunteering as an EMT bear witness to his ability and desire to better the environment of his community.

The people of Twin Falls County need a commissioner who understands agriculture, business and local community issues. Terry Kramer is the candidate we need to support in the May 23 primary election for Twin Falls County commissioner.

Maintain pressure with key energy issues

I have held off writing. Why? I have been trying to see how this Interim Energy Committee is going to play out. As usual, it looks like the big guns are pushing their weight around. We see that Idaho Power has already submitted its proposals. Typically, they play down renewable energy and play up money-making energy, better known as coal-fired generation.

Idaho, which has issues with renewable energy, already has submitted its take on the future of Idaho's energy planning. Also on the agenda will be the Department of Water Resources, Department of Environmental Quality, and Public Utilities Commission. To me, something is wrong with this picture.

These same people have lobbied the state legislators for the past three months for their own purposes and they are back in force. We, as concerned citizens, can't sit back and watch this go on. If we don't keep up pressuring this committee, nothing will change. A two-year moratorium will turn into a small setback for these companies and we'll be right back fighting off coal-fired plants in spades. Sempra hasn't really left. The air isn't getting better. What is the solution? It's easy: stay involved. Keep writing these legislators and keep up the fight. We have two years to make a difference. We need to push for energy conservation, renewable energy, siting bills, zero mercury admissions, clean water, and no cap and trade policies.

Let's make Idaho the clean state and show the world it can be done. This Interim Energy Committee meets every third Wednesday and Thursday of each month in the Stachouse. Find out who the members are and let them know how you feel.

Know the real facts on event center finances

There is a boatload of misinformation floating around the valley about the proposed Pioneer Events Center. It bothers me enough that I want to clear up a couple of the issues.

Misinformation No. 1: People are saying, "We already have the CSI Expo Center to use for events." Yes, we do, and it is so popular for community events and CSI is so amiable making it available that college programs and Western events are seriously crowded in use of their own building. Demand outstrips its capacity.

Misinformation No. 2: "The construction cost estimate is inaccurate." No, it is not. I have reviewed the estimate several times with the former fair manager, John Pitz, and agree that the plan and the dollars budgeted are sufficient for Phase 1. I know that Phase 1 is not a fully finished building, but it does build a weather-tight, lighted facility that will work for many events. And the extra touches can be added later as operations generate money to pay for them.

Misinformation No. 3: "Local residents will be continually paying for operation of this facility." I don't think so. In my nine years on the Twin Falls County Fair Board, I saw more than a hundred requests to rent a large, indoor events center for ice shows, circuses, car shows and other events. No, this building will be operated by entertainment dollars — most of them coming from outside our county.

Twin Falls County residents don't miss this opportunity to further improve our lifestyle choices and community assets. Vote yes for the events center bond issue.

Aim for change in local county races

On May 23, you have the opportunity to change your way of life by replacing incumbent elected officials with people who really care and listen. In Gooding County, Terrell Williams is running for county commissioner. I've known her forever, and she doesn't have a misleading bone in her body. In Jerome County, Diana Obenauer and Stu Williams are running to replace Lierman and Davidson. I've met with both of them and heard them at a Citizens Protecting Resources forum, and they speak without hesitation and with integrity.

Your tax dollars in Jerome are being abused. When I filed an appeal in the Quesnell dairy confined animal feeding operation permit, the commissioners hired Will Herrington, an outside attorney, even though they have four prosecutors on the payroll. They did not comply with the required provision to show a "necessity" for this but have spent well over $10,000 of your money on him.

When I filed an appeal on the Sempra met tower, the commissioners wasted money. Mason, an outside attorney, even though they still had four attorneys on staff. I wasn't able to find out how much this defense of Sempra has cost the taxpayers.

Now that the Quesnell appeal has moved to the Supreme Court, the commissioners have hired both Herrington and Mason to oppose me. Quesnell has his own lawyer, but the commissioners must feel more loyalty to Mr. Quesnell than to the taxpayers. Your money will be spent to defend their indefensible actions.

In another court case, the commissioners wasted more than $2,500 of your money as fees to the appellant's lawyer by defending their right to disobey their own ordinance. That case hired both Herrington and Mason to oppose me. Quesnell has his own lawyer, but the commissioners must feel more loyalty to Mr. Quesnell than to the taxpayers. Your money will be spent to defend their indefensible actions.

Are you better off because of the wasteful bazaar? Vote Obenauer and Williams May 23.

Fair event center not a necessity

The Twin Falls County Fair Board needs to find other alternatives when it comes to funding sources for a new event center. I myself avoid the Twin Falls County Fair because of the inflated costs of admission and concessions. Why would I want to get "bilked" again, this time on my property taxes? The Fair Board needs to realize where Twin Falls residents have their priorities: Library expansion — no; sound bylaws — barely a yes vote. Fair bond?

Hopefully, it will be a no vote. It comes down to what are needs and wants — the fair bond is "want" in my book.

Power company wastes aquifer recovery

The state of Idaho has allowed Idaho Power and its cronies to squander a huge opportunity to rectify years of aquifer depletion in one season.

At the bottom of the Snake system, Teller Canyon, the Snake River is running 300 percent of normal flows as of April 19. American Falls is essentially full and Palisades Dam, the last significant reservoir upstream, is releasing twice as much water as it is taking in because otherwise it will overflow.

Although Idaho Power is running its turbines at full throttle, the demand for the power at this time of year means they are getting a fraction of its mid-summer value. And they are wasting more water than they are using. All of the Palisades and American Falls water presently wasted (flushed down the toilet) could have been put in the underground reservoir where it would replenish the springs, raise the aquifer, and produce water and power for future needs.

Conservative estimates suggest Idaho Power will waste at least 40 percent of this abundance — probably much more. American Falls and Palisades water could have been used for months of recharge during the winter not costing Idaho Power a nickel in power generation and making it millions in the future as this water would eventually find its way in the system at a more opportune time. Meanwhile the pumpers, idle land, irrigation districts raise their rates to justify higher pumping costs instead of lower, the fish industry loses its flows, and people like two of my non-farm neighbors living on meager retirements spend so-called thousands each deepening their domestic wells.

Idaho Power misrepresents and passes millions of attorney fees and propaganda costs on to ratepayers.

PERRY GILLETTE

(Editor's note: Perry Gillette is a former member of the Idaho Potato Commission. He owns surface water rights in the Minidoka Irrigation District, pumping rights on ABB District land and personal pumping rights in Minidoka County. His family owns spring water above American Falls Reservoir used for trout production.)

Idahoans stand behind wolves in ecosystem

The Idaho Anti-Wolf Coalition is currently sponsoring a ballot initiative calling for the removal of all "Canadian" wolves from Idaho. As it is impossible to tell the difference between "Canadian" and "Idaho" wolves, this ballot measure becomes an initiative to destroy them all.

The proposed initiative could set back the national recovery and delisting of wolves, as its passage could result in wolf management in Idaho reverting back to the Federal Government. The 100 rule and other state initiatives could be voided.

The initiative doesn't reference the strain placed on wildlife managers. Who would pay for wolf removal? Could it be guaranteed that other wildlife wouldn't suffer from methods used? What about the impact on tourism and national public opinion?

While there are some in this state who want public lands and wildlife all to themselves, these belong to every U.S. citizen.

Whether this initiative fails at the polls or fails to appear on the ballot, the message will be clear. Idaho citizens will have voted by their actions and stated clearly that wolves, a part of our grand wildlife heritage, belong in Idaho's forests.

Howl on, oh wolf.

Bulldogs blow by Beavers

Kimberly girls
'get 'er done'
against A.F.

By Brad Gulre
Times-News writer

KIMBERLY — With bases loaded and most of the American Falls hits staying on the dirt, guarding the plate is crucial.

During the top of the third, Kimberly shortstop Jessica Turcotte made a spot-on throw to catcher Megan Stradley for the biggest out of the game, preventing Beavers second baseman Tiffany Bernal from scoring from third.

"(Stradley is) one of our senior leaders," Bulldogs coach Rich Bishop said. "She does a good job of running the field out there. She's the captain. Turcotte is quick and has got a strong arm at short, and we did what we had to."

The play secured what would be a shutout performance by the Kimberly defense, giving the Bulldogs a 10-0 Game 1 win in five innings in Kimberly on Friday.

"Our team is really solid, and I can rely on them a lot," Stradley said of her teammates. "You have that confidence behind you that they'll get 'er done."

And get 'er done they did, with Stradley stepping up at key moments both at and behind the plate.

The third inning was a close one for the Bulldogs (14-2-1, 3-1 Sawtooth Central Idaho Conference). Three American Falls batters advanced on errors, loading the bags, but they were stalled when third baseman Shannon Curry struck out. First baseman Channel Phillips singled to Turcotte who made the throw home for the second out. A 4-3 groundout ended the inning.

Kimberly produced hits that mattered, most of them in the bottom of the fifth.

Whitney Peterson, Ashton Upton, Rebecca Price and Turcotte scored to put Kimberly up 9-0. With two outs, center fielder Kassie Newberry pitched, putting herself in scoring position.

"We made some good hits when we needed to and scored when we got to," Newberry said.

A crisp base hit from Stradley to score Newberry secured the win.

Kimberly third baseman Kyle Butler rounds third base on her way to scoring a run Thursday during the fourth inning of their game with American Falls in Kimberly. Short stop Jessica Turcotte, rear, made the hit to score Butler, but was thrown out from home.

Stradley was modest of her performance. "Our bats are starting to — well, everyone's hot but mine — started to come around," she said.

But credit also goes to the entire Kimberly defense. With the exception of the third inning, the Beavers never had more than four at-bats in an inning.

"(Peterson) is doing really good, throwing the pitches she needs to. Defense is just backing her up all the way," Newberry said.

Peterson gave up only four hits, threw four strikeouts and walked none during Game 1. Most American Falls batters simply grounded out.

In Game 2, it was more of the same as Kimberly won 8-2.

Peterson started again, this time notching seven strikeouts and no walks. Stradley had a triple.

The Beavers managed to put together more hits, but fell nonetheless. "We've had five practices and five games. We're gonna get better," Beavers coach Loren Capell said.

"We're gonna make a couple of teams worry," Stradley said. "We're getting better."

Ottawa Senators harness Lightning

The Associated Press

OTTAWA (AP) — Martin Havlat and Jason Spezza scored power-play goals 1:07 apart early in the third period and Mike Fisher added a short-handed goal as the Ottawa Senators rallied to a 4-1 victory over the Tampa Bay Lightning in the opener of the Eastern Conference playoff series Friday night.

Daniel Alfredsson scored into an empty net with 1:02 remaining and Bay scored 35 saves for the Senators in his postseason debut. Game 2 of the best-of-seven series will be Sunday in Ottawa.

Emery, who drew an assist on Spezza's go-ahead goal 6:13 into the third, has carried the load for the Senators since Dominik Hasek was injured during the Olympics. He won 12 games in March to tie an NHL record for wins in a month.

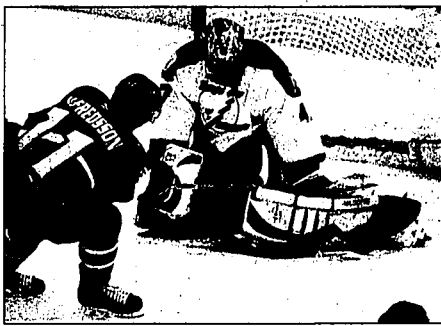

Vincent Lecavalier opened the scoring on a two-man advantage late in the first and Tampa Bay — which outshot Ottawa 16-11 in a fast-paced opening period — held a 1-0 lead through 40 minutes.

Havlat, limited to 18 minutes because of injuries, tied it during Ottawa's fifth power play at 5:06 of the third. The Czech forward deked Lightning goalie John Grahame and fired a shot over his outstretched right pad. Havlat then skated to the left corner and jumped into the boards, banging his gloves against the glass as fans jumped to their feet to create a sea of red jerseys, shirts, jackets and Thundersticks in the crowd.

Spezza assisted on Havlat's goal and gave the Senators a 2-1 lead moments later, beating Grahame's left shoulder with a sharp-angled shot for Ottawa's second straight power-play goal.

Fisher made it a two-goal lead at 9:37 when he scored over Grahame's right pad to finish off a pretty pass from Peter Schaefer on a 2-on-1. The Senators led the NHL with 25 short-handed goals.

LeBron James enters new realm — the NBA Playoffs

By Tom Withers
Associated Press writer

CLEVELAND — You're on, LeBron. Three years into his thus far impeccable pro career, Cavaliers star LeBron James will take center stage for the first time when legends either grow or get swept away like a weak lineup.

In the NBA playoffs, nothing comes easy. The fouls are a little nastier. The whistle blows a little less frequently. The intensity is ratcheted to an extreme level. The stakes, well, they've never been higher for Cleveland's 21-year-old superstar.

Everything is bigger — just how, James likes it. "It's a different ballgame," he said. "The crowd is into it for 48 minutes strong. The lights in the arena look brighter. It's a different feeling. Now to be a part of it, it's going to be great." James makes his playoff debut Saturday as the Cavaliers host the Washington Wizards in Game 1 of their best-of-seven Eastern Conference series. Game 2 is scheduled for Tuesday night at Quicken Loans Arena.

For championship-deprived Cleveland, the wait is over. A city fueled by sports is at last embarking on another chance at winning a world title. The Cavaliers are the first of Cleveland's three pro teams to reach the postseason since 2002, and the first to host a playoff game since 2001.

No Cleveland team has finished on top since the Browns won an NFL title in 1954. Since then, the Indians, Browns and Cavaliers are 0-for-a generation. Maybe two.

"It's intense to change that. James intends to change that. Guys are talking about making the playoffs. I want to win a championship."

That may not happen this year, but there's no reason to think an NBA title — or several championship rings — aren't in James' blinding future. He has impacted the league like no other player in history.

None before have scored, passed and rebounded like him at such a tender age. With MVP-type numbers, he has carried the Cavaliers, taking to his fourth 50-win season and back to the postseason for the first time since 1998.

Now, it's time to see if James, who joined Oscar Robertson (1963-64, 65-66), Jerry West (1965-66) and Michael Jordan (1988-89) as the only players to average at least 31 points, 7 rebounds and 6 assists in a season, can do it in the playoffs.

First-year Cavs coach Mike Brown expects James to soar higher than ever.

"Not comparing him to Michael Jordan, but LeBron has the necessary talent to take his game to another level," Brown said. "On a stage like this, it would be a great time to do it. It's interesting to note that when you bring up Jordan and the great ones, I don't know if any of them got it done right away."

It will be interesting to see if LeBron can. As great as he was, Jordan, who scored 23 points in his playoff debut, didn't advance in the postseason until his fourth trip, when he hung in the air and made the famed "Shot" over Cleveland's Craig Ehlo to oust the favored Cavaliers from the 1998-99 playoffs.

That moment, as much as any other, defined Jordan in the clutch. Of course, he would go on to have other magical

Golden Eagles offense explodes for 18 runs

The Times-News

PRICE: Utah — Sunny days are great for parades.

The College of Southern Idaho baseball team was greeted to a sunny day in Price, Utah on Friday, and held a parade of their own, marching around the baseballs for 18 runs during a two-game scenic West Utah at Carlson Field. The Golden Eagles rolled to an 11-1, five-inning victory in the first game, before taking the bottom half of the double dip by a 7-0 score. With the wins, CSI improves to 32-12 on the season and moves ahead of Dixie State College for first place in the SWAC standings at 21-7.

"That's good, you bet," CSI head coach Boomer Walker said. "It'd be nice to have a little cushion going into that series with Dixie State, because we're two evenly-matched teams and you never know what's going to happen."

CSI took little time in putting the first game squarely in their favor, as they produced six runs on five hits and four walks in the bottom of the third to take a 6-0 lead. Alex Hancock's bases-loaded base-on-balls walked in Mike Griffin before Nick Gurneson laced a two-RBI single to drive in CSI's first run. A Kenny Fuglerdunt single later, and Grant Eveder drove in Hancock with a sacrifice fly before Jordan Daley drove in CSI's final two runs of the inning with a single of his own.

Pitching with a nice cushion, CSI starter Adam Umling cruised through four shutout innings of ball, allowing only four hits. The Golden Eagles tackled on four more runs in the top of the fourth on two hits, two walks and a CEU error before earning the eventual game-ending 11th run on a JeffVickers sacrifice fly in the top of the fifth.

CSI reliever Shawn Loggiss made his eighth appearance of the year, yielding CEU's only run before a Gurneson and Daley turned a 4-6-3 double play to end the game.

Daley finished 3-for-4 with two RBIs to lead the CSI attack, while the patient Griffin walked four times and scored twice. Hancock and Gurneson drove in two runs each, while Vickers finished 1-for-2 with two runs scored, a RBI, and a walk. Hancock also made an all-out diving catch in the bottom of the second that helped ignite CSI.

Jordan Daley made, man, four plays that were unbelievable," Walker said. "Alex made a huge diving catch in the first game that really got things going. If we can get those guys on base maybe six times in a doubleheader, I think it really helps out Kenny and Jeff and Mike and the top of our order."

The CSI trio of Todd Privett, Tim Mosier and Ben Connors combined for a three-hit shutout in the 7-0 blanking of CEU in the second game.

"Todd threw as good as he possibly could today," Walker said. "He was outstanding. He had all four pitches in command. That week off was big for him, because he said his arm was tired all week. Having that bye, I think will keep him strong throughout. He had his best fastball I've seen him throw in his history with CSI today."

Gurneson got things started for CSI in the top of the third, doubling and

Pilots, Trojans baseball spit

The Times-News

WENDELL — The Glenns Ferry Pilots and Wendell Trojans split a Canyon Conference play Saturday, with Glenns Ferry winning Game 1 11-6 in eight innings and Wendell taking revenge with a 7-6 Game 2 victory. The Pilots win allows them to host district play in May.

Glenns Ferry catcher Cody Darrington hit two home runs and solo shot three times in Game 1 and a two-run dinger in the seventh of Game 2, nearly "bringing" the Pilots to another win.

The pitchers kept pace for much of the game, as David Zito had 11 strikeouts and Joey Rocha netting 10 Ks.

"It was a pitching duel, kind of," Wendell head coach Jesse Koopman said of Game 1. "They hit the ball well, and we walked a few. We couldn't close it out."

Tendell (6-4, 1-2) plays at Filer Tuesday.

The Alan Larson Project

By Linda Brittman

Times-News correspondent

KIMBERLY — Name almost any racing division at the Magic Valley Speedway over the years and Alan Larson has probably driven in it.

Larson's racing career began in the Thunder Stock division several years ago, but he has since taken on the Street, Pony, Late-Model, Hornet and Race Truck divisions and became one of the most versatile drivers the Magic Valley Speedway has seen in more than 20 seasons. Larson is also a regular participant in the trailer races and will never pass up a chance to launch a car up a ramp to take part in roll-over contests.

Larson even tried to sneak his way into a Queen Bee race last season. However, his disguise did not fool the keen eyes of the officials and was ushered off the track before he could add that particular racing division to his list of accomplishments.

This year, Larson is focusing his efforts on the InterMountain Pro Truck Series. The series will make six appearances at the Magic Valley Speedway this season, along with three races apiece at Meridian Speedway and Rocky Mountain Raceway in Salt Lake City, Utah. Larson will be introducing a newly built truck to the fans when the series debuts tonight at the Magic Valley Speedway.

Lee Piggett, who has worked with Larson for the past three years in the truck series, is the owner and chief mechanic of the all-new No. 14 truck. The truck was designed by Rob Dixon for Thompson Truck Sports and eight full-time employees began production the new project in early February.

looked," Piggett explained. "So I contacted Thompson Motorsports, who also built Kenny's truck and basically asked them to build a truck around Alan."

The proud new owner stood by as Larson was able to fire up his new ride for the first time just four days prior to the running of the first race of the season. After a few practice laps, both driver and owner liked what the truck had to offer so far.

"I'm still learning it but I'm impressed with how it ran tonight," Larson said. "And I think Lee has the faith in me to rely to him what the truck is doing out on the track."

Piggett says there may be a few minor adjustments to the truck before tonight's main event but is confident that his sportsman builder and driver can produce that win that has eluded the team thus far.

"In the past we've always qualified well and raced well but never won a race," Piggett said. "We were always the bridesmaid but never the bride. But we hope to win a race real quick this year."

With as many racing stripes Larson has earned over the course of his career, that first trip to the winner's circle in the truck division should be far off. One thing is certain, Larson has captured the respect of his competitors in every event he participates in.

Larson was honored with the Energy Release "Choice of Champions" award in 2004 which was presented to the driver who demonstrated outstanding sportsmanship throughout the season.

"It's a very outgoing person who just enjoys life," explains Randy Korr, race director at Magic Valley Speedway.

Larson sums up his racing personality on the track a little differently.

"I think I'm a conservative driver," Larson said. "Maybe sometimes I'm even too courteous. But I admit that I drive with my pocketbook. I try not to tear up myself or the other guy. I just want to have fun out there."

And while the self-proclaimed "buyer's helper" of farm machinery for more than 20 years has to race a tractor at the Magic Valley Speedway, you can bet if and when there is such a race, Larson will be the first one to sign up.

"Yep, I'll race anything with a motor," Larson said.

NASCAR THIS WEEK

NexTel Cup

Subway Fresh 500

Last race: Kasey Kahne became the 11th different winner in as many NexTel Cup races held at Texas Motor Speedway, yet he still managed a first — by doing it from the pole. Kahne sped away from the field after the final restart with 17 laps to go for his second victory in the series. Kahne, who turned 28 on Monday, earned his third career victory. The last three times he's been on the pole, he's won.

Last year, Kurt Busch led 219 of 312 laps on the mile oval, emphatically putting behind him a streak of bad luck that included crashes at four consecutive events. The No. 12 Checker Auto Parts 500 is the penultimate race of the season. ... In 19 years, no pole winner has won this race and only two winners — Jeff Burton in 2000 and Kurt Busch in 2004 — have come from the No. 2 position.

Next race: Aaron's 499, April 30, Talladega, Ala.

Busch Series

Last race: NexTel Cup driver Kevin Harvick raced to his first NASCAR Busch Series victory of the year, taking the lead with 52 laps to go and holding off teammate Clint Bowyer after a late caution in the Pepsi 300. Harvick finished 0.5 seconds ahead of Bowyer, his Richard Childress racing teammate, en route to his 18th career Busch Series victory.

Last year, Greg Biffle survived an early spinout and grabbed another dominating victory, overpowering the field. The former Busch Series champion, winner of the Cup race the previous week at Texas Motor Speedway, followed it with the win on the mile oval at Phoenix, leading 112 of the 200 laps. It was his 17th Busch victory, but his first since last September at California Speedway. He previously won in Phoenix in 2001.

He also became the eighth NexTel Cup driver to win in the first eight races of the Busch Series season. ... Mike Wallace, who drove in the season-opening Daytona 500 for James Finch, has replaced Jason Keller as driver of Fiebel No. 1 Dodge in the Busch Series on an interim basis. ## Racing action continues at MVS

TWIN FALLS — The InterMountain Pro Trucks are slated to make their first six scheduled appearances at the Magic Valley Speedway this Saturday night.

At least 13 trucks are expected to take up the field for their first event of the season. Kenny Vanderham of Jerome won the opening main event in 2005 and will be looking to repeat the trip to the winner's circle this year. Father and son Alan and Kevin Larson will be hunting for each of their first wins in the division and other local drivers such as Wayne Gunderson are also expected to be in the running.

The Premier Series will once again be in action as the drivers see what they can find to chal-

Current Pony Stock point leader Jason Whited won the opening-night race with last season's champion Lou Anderson directly in tow. It's still anyone's game however, as it's early yet in the racing season as the drivers continue to work on their set-ups to find the fastest way around the one-third-mile track.

Bushes are big news in Phoenix

AVONDALE, Ariz. (AP) — Kurt Busch left the desert last year in disgrace, embroiled in a reckless driving arrest that cost him the final two weeks of the season and tarnished his already shaky image.

Now he's back for Saturday night's race at Phoenix International Raceway, the center very behind him and his sense of humor intact. He arrived in Arizona early to complete the 50 hours of community service he was sentenced to after pleading guilty for the Nov. 11 traffic stop.

His work included a fundraiser at Chase Field, where he also threw out the first pitch for a game between the Arizona Diamondbacks and the San Francisco Giants game and saw slugger Barry Bonds in person.

"When Barry Bonds came up to bat there were all the boos — poor guy, I know what you're going through," he quipped. "I was asked if I expected to get booed louder than Barry Bonds. I said, 'There's no way, dude.'"

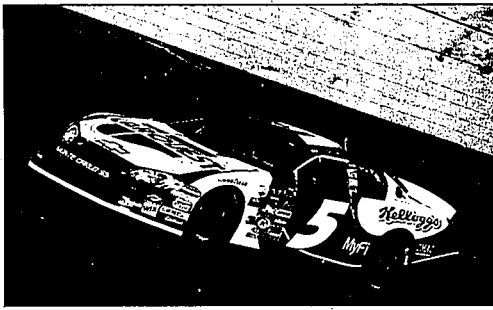

Busch isn't at the same level of animosity as Bonds, but the driver is still poorly received almost everywhere he goes. But he's working hard to change that, especially in Arizona, where his free fall from champion to chump was completed.

Busch was pulled over last November and deputies, who said they suspected him of driving drunk, accused him of being rude and belligerent to them. Although he was ticketed only for reckless driving, his Bush Racing employees kicked him out of his car for the final two races of the season.

Busch, the defending series champion, would finish the season out at home. He immediately pleaded guilty to the charges to a speeding ticket, and he paid a $500 fine. He had until next February to knock out his community service, but got it all taken care of the past two weeks.

His trip was a fitting public service announcement with Sheriff Joe Arpaio that preached safe driving. The two were adversaries just five months ago, with Arpaio taking a strong stance against Bush's behavior.

"This is Maricopa County and our streets are not to be used as raceways," Arpaio said after the traffic stop. "He ought to confine his speeding to the racetrack. And I don't like anybody being abusive to my deputies — I don't care who they are."

But their reunion went off without a hitch.

"That was fun to meet with him," Busch said. "He was very surprised with my demeanor and how open I was to him and some of his sarcastic jokes about last year. We definitely had a great time meeting one another."

Then it was off to Friendship Park in Avondale, where he signed autographs for hours and donated $16,000 worth of baseball equipment to the Westside Recreational Program.

"Since last December, we've been putting this together to make an impact in children's youth sports," Busch said. "Winning the championship, kids recognize me when I'm out and about. If I could have just one kid go, Man, that was my guy."

"If I could have just one kid root for me, then that's the motive to go out there and do these types of things."

But Busch still has a lot of repair work to do. Although he took the highroad last month when rival Kevin Harvick lobbied several verbal volleys at him, he's raked former teammates Matt Kenseth and Greg Biffle in two on-track altercations. The one with Biffle started a larger conundrum on Saturday night, Kyle, who won here in November, will start from the pole; Kurt qualified seventh.

Despite all his troubles, Kenseth still believes Kurt and his younger brother, Kyle, must be considered contenders on Saturday night. Kyle, who won here in November, will start from the pole; Kurt qualified seventh.

"I think they'll be two of the guys to beat," Kenseth said. "Both those guys are really good here, but they run pretty good everywhere. Both of those guys are really talented and they figure out how to run out front at most tracks."

Houston Open takes shape

Trevor Immelman watches his tee shot on the 15th hole during the second round of the Houston Open PGA golf tournament on Friday in Humble, Texas. Immelman shot a 5-under-par 67 and is 8-under-par for the tournament.

Natalie Gulbis tees off on the 11th hole during Friday's second-round play in LPGA Florida's Natural Charity Championship golf tournament in Stockbridge, Ga.

Leaderboard crowded at LPGA tour event

Looking again like a dominating force on the LPGA Tour, Webb followed her win in the first major of the year with a second straight 5-under 67 Friday, leaving her two strokes off the lead in the Florida's Natural Charity Championship.

Sung Ah Yim charged to the top with a 64 at Engle's Landing Country Club south of Atlanta, pushing her 36-hole total to a 12-under 132. Two fellow South Koreans were right on her heels — 20-year-old Jee Young Lee was 11 under after a 65, and Jee-Won Han was tied with Webb at 134.

It was really solid out there," Webb said. "I think I hit it even a little better today."

Han had seven birdies on the front side for a 29, but couldn't keep it going after the turn. Still, she signed for a 64 that equaled Yim for the best round of the day.

Defending tournament champion Annika Sorenstam was right in the thick of things with a 69 that left her three strokes back. But she's unlikely to run away from the lead as she did in 2005, when she coasted to a 10-stroke victory that was essentially clinched by Saturday.

Webb, the only player other than Sorenstam to be ranked No. 1 in the world over the last 11 years, is coming off a thrilling victory in the Kraft Nabisco Championship. She holed out a wedge from 116 yards to get into a playoff, then beat Lorena Ochoa for her seventh career major title.

After a three-week break in which she traveled back to her native Australia, Webb showed she's not jet-lagged in the least. She missed a couple of short putts, took her only bogey of the day on the par-5 13th but still matched her score from the opening day.

"I feel like I can go out there and really just trust it because I sort of got that monkey off my back," she said. "I can just go out there and do what I did for four rounds at the Nabisco."

Webb didn't have that sort of confidence a year ago. She failed to win for the first time since joining the tour and slumped to 27th in the rankings, quite a comedown from her heady days as the LPGA's most dominating player.

"I'm a perfectionist," Webb said. "I want to be as good as I can."

She appears to have sorted out her problems. Webb's iron honed in on the flag, leaving her five birdie putts that were no longer than 8 feet. She could have gone even lower, missing a 5-footer at the par-5 13th — her lone bogey — and a birdie try from about the same distance at No. 16.

Haas takes two-shot lead in Legends of Golf

SAVANNAH, Ga. (AP) — Jay Haas, seeking his first win of the season, breezed to a two-stroke lead Friday in the first round of the Liberty Mutual Legends of Golf.

Haas, who splits his time between the Champions Tour and regular PGA Tour, shot a 6-under-par 66 at The Club at Savannah Harbor. Mark McNulty, Tom Wargo, Jerry Pate and Gil Morgan each shot 68s as the wind-swept, 7,087-yard island layout in the middle of the Savannah River.

"I'm a little surprised, to tell you the truth," said Haas, who missed the cut last weekend at the Verizon Heritage, a PGA Tour event at nearby Hilton Head, S.C. "I hadn't been playing that well lately."

He was certainly at the top of his game among the over-50 set on this sunny day.

Haas started fast with a wedge to within 5 feet for birdie at the first hole, chipped in for birdie at the par-5 fourth, blasted from a greenside bunker to inside 3 feet for birdie at No. 11 and rolled in putts of 19 and 23 feet for birdies at Nos. 14 and 15. He finished with seven birdies.

Haas' only mistake came at the par-3 third, playing at about 202 yards, when his tee shot missed the green and he missed a 12-foot putt.

"Four really turned things around. I never expected to make a 4 there," Haas said. "Then the birdies at 14 and 15 turned a good round into a really good round."

McNulty, who has had just one top-10 finish in six events this season, rolled in a 35-footer for birdie on the par-4 16th. He had only one bogey.

"I've made a couple of changes with my swing," McNulty said.

Wargo, who also had just one bogey, reached the 530-yard 11th in two and two-putted for birdie.

"The wind was blowing just enough to tease you," Wargo said. "Some of the tees were up today."

Pate, winner of the Outback Steakhouse Pro Am in February, had a round of six birdies and two bogeys. Morgan, who was second at the AT&T Classic last month, got to 4-under with a birdie at No. 11 — which plays as the easiest hole on the course — and stayed there with a steady string of pars the rest of the way.

Bob Murphy and Craig Stadler each were at 3-under 69. Hale Irwin and defending champion Des Smyth were among eight players at 70.

Defending U.S. Senior Open champion Allen Doyle, a fan favorite from La Grange, Ga., had the midtown of the day. Doyle turned at 4-under 32 and was 5 under after a birdie at No. 11.

Then things fell apart.

Doyle walked off with his chin on his chest after a bogey at No. 12. He then bogeyed Nos. 14, 17 and 18 for a 39 on the back to finish at 71. Larry Nelson, a Georgian who soon will be inducted into the World Golf Hall of Fame, also was at 71.

Loren Roberts, who won the first three events on the Champions Tour this season, was at even par.

The Tournament Course at Redstone, delaying the start of the second round 2.5 hours.

Owen teed off late in the afternoon and birdied five of his last seven holes for a 65, the lowest score of the tournament.

A month ago, a three-putt from 3 feet cost Owen a chance to win at Bay Hill. Owen talked to noted sports psychologist Bob Rotella shortly after the golf.

Rotella's advice? "Concentrate on everything you did right," Owen said. "The majority of the things were all positive."

A pre-dawn storm dumped five-eighths of an inch of rain at the sun was setting to retake the outright lead.

"You put it in the fairway. The game becomes a lot easier," Appleby said. "I drove it well, putted pretty good. But nothing fancy. Just good, solid golf."

South Africa's Trevor Immelman was 8 under after a 67.

The 26-year-old Immelman has missed the cut in his last four starts, but said his results don't reflect how well he's played.

"I would say frustration sums the whole thing up because I really felt like the whole year I've hit the ball quite well," he said.

Abbott acquires stent business

Abbott Laboratories' purchase of Guidant Corp.'s heart stent business Friday could realign the worldwide market for heart stents and help Boston Scientific secure its hold on the $6 billion industry.

No. 1 stent maker Boston Scientific was required to sell off Guidant's stent business to satisfy antitrust concerns in its $27.5 billion acquisition of Guidant, which closed Friday. Abbott played a major role in helping Boston Scientific beat out archrival Johnson & Johnson in a bidding war for Guidant.

North Chicago, Ill.-based Abbott will go from being an also-ran in the stent business to a major player once its drug-coated stents hit the market in the United States early in 2008, analysts say. Although Indianapolis-based Guidant was late to the drug-coated stent game, it owned valuable stent-delivery technology and had some promising drug-coated stents in the works.

Delta asks employees to help clean planes

Delta Air Lines Inc. said Friday it is inviting employees to volunteer to help clean aircraft after an effort to boost morale and improve customer service at the nation's third-largest carrier.

Employees who volunteer aren't being paid for the work, but the Atlanta-based company said the effort is not a cost-cutting initiative.

The initiative launched earlier this week includes increasing the frequency of aircraft deep cleans and refurbishing aircraft interiors. "We feel it is not eliminating its overnight cleaning crews, and it said it has committed millions of dollars in additional resources to support the cleaning effort."

The company said dozens of Delta leaders, including several executives, so far have participated in cleaning activities in New York, Cincinnati, and Salt Lake City.

Pipeline may link Salt Lake and Las Vegas

Holly Energy Partners, which operates an oil refinery in Woods Cross, is surveying potential customers to determine if there is enough interest to build a fuel pipeline to Las Vegas.

"The pipeline would carry gasoline, diesel and jet fuel. We'll be soliciting support from potential shippers through the end of May. After that we'll be able to step back and see what the appetite level is and whether we should proceed," Holly Energy spokesman M. Neale Hickerson said.

Typically, refineries in Southern California supply the Las Vegas area. But continued growth in California and above-average demand in fast-growing Las Vegas and Phoenix are straining supplies in the region.

Oil price hits record, tops $75 a barrel

By Madlen Read
AP Business writer

NEW YORK — Crude-oil prices broke through $75 a barrel to hit a new record Friday, fueled by concerns about Iran's nuclear ambitions and tight U.S. gasoline supplies.

Prices at the pump also kept rising, with the average price of a gallon of unleaded regular gasoline at $2.85, up 3 cents from a day earlier and more than 60 cents higher than a year ago, according to AAA's daily fuel gauge report.

Crude prices, which are more than 40 percent higher than a year ago, have risen 6.4 percent from Thursday's closing price — the biggest week-long jump since the week that ended June 17, 2005, when crude futures rose 9 percent.

Analysts say oil prices are likely to climb even higher in the weeks ahead as worries grow about how international pressure on Iran, OPEC's No. 2 oil producer, will affect its crude output.

"You put all these headlines together, you see the situation is getting charged up and getting out of control. That's why oil traders and speculators are having a field day — this is exactly the kind of environment that speculators want to operate in," said Oppenheimer & Co. oil analyst John Glick.

Light, sweet crude for June delivery rose $1.46 to settle at a record $75.17 a barrel Friday on the New York Mercantile Exchange, after peaking at an all-time trading high of $75.35. The May contract, which expired Thursday, had settled at $71.95 on Thursday.

Accounting for inflation, prices are still about 20 percent below the records reached in 1981, when supplies became tight after a revolution in Iran and a war between Iraq and Iran.

Traders worry that U.S. gasoline supplies may not meet summer demand after seven straight weeks of drops in domestic gasoline stocks, which are now at their lowest level since November. U.S. refineries are performing seasonal maintenance on a greater scale this year, given the destruction wrought by last fall's hurricanes that battered the Gulf Coast. Also, the transition from gasoline additive MTBE, found to be a groundwater pollutant, to ethanol is creating additional fears about an already tight gasoline market.

Friday afternoon, U.S. Energy Secretary Samuel Bodman said phasing out MTBE could be complicated, and that there is no simple solution to lowering oil prices. At this point, there's no peak in sight.

Company's $1.2-billion loss has many second-guessing strategy

By Rick Popely
Chicago Tribune

CHICAGO — Ford Motor Co. had a tough act to follow and didn't quite make it.

One day after the also-ailing General Motors Corp. won investor and analyst approval in posting a $323 million first-quarter loss, the nation's second-largest automaker reported a $1.2 billion loss Friday.

The decline, Ford's biggest since 2001, compared to a $1.2 billion profit a year earlier. And it has analysts questioning the turnaround program the company announced in January.

"We believe implementation has been slow, and it could be some time before benefits are realized," Merrill Lynch analyst John Murphy said.

Still, Chairman and Chief Executive Bill Ford Jr. plans to stick with the program, which includes closing 14 North American plants and cutting as many as 30,000 jobs by 2012. Ford expects to trim 13,000 of those this year.

"The major thrust is restructuring," Ford said in response to a question about whether it would lower prices, as GM did in January. "For us to base our plan on pricing would be a mistake."

Morgan Stanley analyst Jonathan Steinmetz agreed.

"Ford needs to show greater cost reduction going forward as the revenue side gets more competitive," Steinmetz said in a research note, adding that Ford faces new challenges to its profitable F-Series full-size pickup from GM and Toyota Motor Corp. and from several new sport utility rivals.

Bill Ford acknowledged that this company has relied too much on home-run products, such as the F-Series and the Explorer full-size sport utility vehicle, to generate profits. He plans to play more "small ball," in which most models will sell in lower volumes but all will have to make money.

"We will try to hit a lot of singles and doubles instead of home runs. Every one of our vehicles has to be a contributor," Ford said.

The company earned $458 million from continuing operations, down from $1.26 billion last year. But it took $2.5 billion in charges for layoffs and plant closings, resulting in a net loss. GM, too, would have posted a profit in the quarter had it not been for restructuring-related charges. Ford's results were a letdown for investors. Its stock fell 7.9 percent, or 63 cents, to $7.32, on the New York Stock Exchange. GM, whose shares gained 10 percent Thursday, fell 3.7 percent, or 45 cents, to $21.79.

Burnham Securities analyst David Healy thinks GM got a boost Thursday because its results exceeded analysts' expectations. Ford met estimates on an operating basis, but took a hit from the restructuring charges.

"On the write-offs, they have to do it, take the medicine upfront," Healy said. "They're in reasonably good financial shape, and they can afford it. They have more cash than GM, and they're a smaller company."

All Ford business units except its North American operations made money. North America lost $457 million, compared with a $564 million profit in the first quarter of 2005. North America lost $1.6 billion for all of last year, in part from slumping sales of SUVs.

Bill Ford did not give full-year financial guidance, but said the vital North American unit will be profitable in 2008.

Ford's revenue fell 9 percent, to $41.1 billion, partly from a 3 percent decline in U.S. sales and higher incentive spending. Ford's U.S. market share dropped a half-point, to 17.2 percent.

GM narrowed its first-quarter loss by $1 billion in part because of brisk sales of its new large SUVs, the Chevrolet Tahoe and GMC Yukon, among its most profitable models.

Merck ordered to pay damages in Vioxx case

By Lynn Brozosky
Associated Press writer

RIO GRANDE CITY, Texas — A state jury found Merck & Co. liable Friday for the death of a 71-year-old man who had a fatal heart attack within a month of taking its since-withdrawn painkiller Vioxx and ordered the company to pay $32 million. Merck said it would appeal.

The damage award will likely be reduced because of a state law capping punitive damages.

The jury of 10 men and two women deliberated for about seven hours over two days before returning the verdict in favor of the family of Leonel Garza, who had suffered from heart disease for more than 20 years and had taken Vioxx for less than a month.

The company was ordered to pay $7 million in non-economic compensatory damages and $25 million in punitive damages. But the punitive damage amount is likely to be reduced since state law caps punitive damages at twice the amount of economic damages — lost pay — and up to $750,000 on top of non-economic damages, which are comprised of mental anguish and loss of companionship.

Because Garza was retired, the jury awarded no economic damages. That means the most Garza's family could receive under state law is $77.5 million.

"Merck will appeal," spokesman Kent Jarrell said.

"This is the first case in the country where short-term usage has been found by a jury to be causative of heart attacks," said plaintiffs' attorney Joe Escabedo. "We hope this will go a long way in dispelling this '18-month' science fiction myth."

Vioxx was found to greatly increase the risk of heart attacks in people who took the painkiller for 18 months or longer.

Lehman Brothers analyst Tony Butler said he was "a little shocked by the verdict given all of Mr. Garza's health problems."

He thinks Merck is pursuing the correct strategy by trying such cases individually because in the past, drug companies have only forked over big settlements when they entered into massive class action suits.

"I don't see any pressure on them to settle in the near term," Butler said.

But the defense lawyer Josephson noted that such verdicts are common in the blue-collar Rio Grande Valley. "Starr County has always been a difficult jurisdiction for corporate defendants.... The people here are good people, they just tend to favor individuals in cases where there are corporate defendants involved. It's just a fact of life."

Federal security ID could cause delays at ports, officials say

The Associated Press

LOS ANGELES — Cargo industry officials are worried that a federal ID system aimed at boosting security could cost many port workers their jobs, something that would burden the flow of goods destined for virtually every U.S. community.

Details of the program — more than three years in the making — are still being worked out. But according to industry officials who have discussed it with the Transportation Security Administration and Coast Guard, illegal immigrants and people convicted of certain crimes might be barred from the positions they now hold.

At ports, that could mean thousands of people will be out of jobs, including dock workers and truck drivers.

"Of course there are concerns," said Chuck Carroll, executive director of the National Association of Waterfront Employers, a trade group for terminal operators. "You have the same number of boxes but fewer people to move them, and that could mean major congestion."

Steve Stallone, spokesman for the International Longshore and Dockworkers Union, said a conviction shouldn't automatically preclude someone from working.

"Just because a guy got into a bar fight does not make him a terrorist," said Stallone, whose union represents nearly 14,000 West Coast longshoremen and clerks. "These acts are one thing. But that you beat up your next-door neighbor? I don't think so."

The issue in question is the Transportation Worker Identification Credential program, a post-Sept. 11 security measure that seeks to better control access to harbors, rail yards, airports and other cargo transit areas terrorists might target. It could affect as many as 6 million people.

TSA and Coast Guard officials have refused to discuss details of the plan before it is unveiled, which could be as early as next week.

"We are the first to admit that we need to finish the job," the agency said in a statement. "This is an initiative that has languished for too long."

Since the Sept. 11 attacks, the federal government has spent many billions of dollars increasing airport security but less has been done at ports.

Stocks close mixed as oil hits $75

By Christopher Wang
Associated Press writer

NEW YORK — Wall Street gave up early gains and closed mostly lower Friday after oil prices topped $75 a barrel for the first time. The Dow Jones industrial average rose about one-sixth after strong earnings from 3M Co. and the major indexes managed gains for the week.

Investors' inflation fears intensified as oil prices climbed to a new record, rising $1.08 a barrel at $75.17 a barrel on the New York Mercantile exchange.

The continued gains in oil, gold and bond yields are keeping inflation worries at the forefront, said Ken Loeb, chief market strategist at Schwab & CyberTrader. Evidence of economic growth in next week's reports will renew the debate over when the Federal Reserve might hike its rate.

The Fed is going to have a hard time stopping their increases if the economy seems to be gaining strength. "Tower said, 'I think the Fed will have the inflation hawks it had in the early 1970s in stronger than expected.'"

The Dow rose 4.56, or 0.04 percent, to 11,347.45, the Nasdaq rose 0.12 percent, to 2,419.12, while the S&P 500 rose 0.01 percent, to 1,311.22, while the Nasdaq composite index fell 0.09, or 0.03 percent, to 2,342.86. An analyst's downgrade of Dell Inc. helped send technology stocks lower.

Bonds edged higher, with the yield on the 10-year Treasury note slipping to 5.01 percent from 5.02 percent late Thursday. The U.S. dollar was mostly lower against other major currencies; gold prices rose and lingered at 25-year highs.

The major indexes ended the week with gains, due largely to the big advance Tuesday after minutes of the Fed's late March meeting showed the central bank was leaning toward continuing its interest rate hikes. Inflation data released in subsequent sessions and oil's ascent stifled the market's enthusiasm, but the Dow still rose 1.88 percent, while the S&P 500 index rose 1.72 percent, the Nasdaq rose 1.22 percent.

Analysts say next week's trading will depend on the market's interpretation of the latest government reports, which include first-quarter GDP, employment numbers, new home sales and consumer confidence. Earnings reports will also continue flowing in.

On Friday, Google Inc.'s earnings pushed its stock up $2.10, or 5.3 percent, to $437.10, but the technology sector stumbled after Citigroup cut computer maker Dell Inc. to "sell" on concerns about slowing growth and weakening margins. eBay Inc. also saw a second day of losses following its last-quarter quarter. Dell sank $1.23 to $27.01, and eBay fell $1.68 to $35.09.

Ford Motor Co. posted its highest incline, up 1.2 percent after taking $1.7 billion of pretax charges from its costly North American restructuring plan. Sales slid 9 percent and continued slump in U.S. vehicle demand. Ford fell 63 cents to $73.21.

Dow industrial 3M rose $2.46 to $106.06 after saying its quarterly profit swelled 17 percent on a sturdy rise in sales. The market was also encouraged by 3M's increased output.

Fellow Dow component McDonald's Corp. said its earnings dropped 14 percent from the year before when a tax break boosted its results. However, sales grew 6 percent to top Wall Street estimates. McDonald's slid 48 cents to $34.60.

Drug company Wyeth's profit advanced 4 percent from strong sales of antidepressant Effexor and heartburn medication Protonix. Wyeth climbed 73 cents to $177.50.

Advancing issues led declines 17 to 15 on the New York Stock Exchange, where first consolidated volume was 2.52 billion shares, down from 2.63 billion Thursday.

Banks try to cut losses from security breach

At least 350,000 accounts may have been rifled

By Richard Burnett
The Orlando Sentinel

ORLANDO, Fla. — From Citibank to SunTrust, credit unions to community banks, American financial institutions are scrambling to deal with the biggest cyber-heist of customer debit-card numbers to date.

The huge computer-hacking incident, which took place more than a month ago, has led to potentially millions of dollars in theft by a global ring of hackers using stolen debit information and personal identification numbers, industry experts said.

In recent weeks, the nation's banks have quietly tried to distinguish the problem by hundreds of thousands of debit-card accounts and how many customers have new cards, account numbers and PINs, industry officials said.

Exact figures are unknown — some banks have reported more than 1 million accounts thought that at least 350,000 accounts across the country were defrauded, involving more than 140 million in losses, according to some estimates.

"In terms of financial damage, this is definitely the biggest documented case of debit-card fraud we know of," said Avram L. Linn, a banking analyst and on-line fraud expert for Gartner Inc., an information-technology research company.

Three major banks — Bank of America, Wachovia and SunTrust — have acknowledged notifying certain customers about the problem, closing an unspecified number of accounts and issuing new cards and PINs.

The banks said they were closely monitoring the affected customers for suspicious activity and that a large majority of their customers were not hit by the electronic theft.

Customers whose accounts may have been affected are getting new cards in the mail with letters instructing them to destroy the old ones. Most banks are telling customers that their old cards may have been exposed to fraudulent activity because of a "third-party" security breach.

Kurt Koehler, a Valencia Community College student and part-time house painter, said he got a notice from Bank of America that included a new debit card but said little.

"It was very low key, not a big deal, but it didn't give me much information at all, nothing about how it happened or what it might have happened," he said. "And that made me feel even more uneasy."

SunTrust began to take action about four weeks ago after detecting fraudulent charges on some accounts, bank spokesman Hugh Suhr said. Not all customers who were affected became victims of fraud, he said.

"Our card processor gave us a list of account numbers that had been affected," Suhr said. "As a precaution, we've been replacing them in several waves. We're probably in the final wave of that right now."

MONEY TIP

It's not too late to line up a good summer job

By Marshall Loeb

NEW YORK — Summer is straight ahead and high school students across the country have lined up plum jobs that should teach them a thing or two and put some money in their pockets.

Wait, your kid hasn't even gotten started? Anything he or she can do?

While many teens still find work in those summer main-stays — life-guarding, manual labor, retail — more and more are looking for formal internships, which require application like those at the college level.

But there are also informal gigs with local companies and nonprofits that don't require as much or at all. It's a good bet many of those are still open. To start looking, you need to have some idea of what you want to do.

Shaker Heights High School

outside of Cleveland helps its students find summer work, but Eileen Blattner, who runs the careers office, says the best resources are parents.

"They should ask friends and colleagues if they're willing to have a teenager come and work on a few weeks of their summer," Blattner said. "If your child will be fetching coffee and making copies, the chance to shadow someone in a profession that might interest them is what's valuable."

They're deciding what to study a few years down the road.

Smaller, local businesses are also usually late in publicizing summer jobs or may be willing to create a position if you call them up and sound enthusiastic.

Blattner tells students interested in journalism to approach community newspapers, and she has the schools' art teachers find jobs in the local art scene. Two nearby hospitals have with research laboratories, are also big sources of summer jobs.

Do the right thing when nobody's looking

T rue story: a woman calls her husband at work. "Honey," she says, "we've got a problem." Uh-oh, he thinks to himself. Whenever she says "we have a problem," he usually finds the one in trouble. So he quickly scans the ol' memory banks to see if he can figure out what he needs to apologize for. Let's see — her birthday is still a few months away. Their wedding anniversary was six months ago. He remembers putting yesterday's dirty socks in the hamper. And he's pretty sure he put the lid back on the toothpaste.

"OK," he responds hesitantly, "what did I do?"

"Nothing," she replies, chuckling, "unless you ordered this cable TV movie service." He reminds her of their mutual decision to pass on the premium channel, since basic cable is about all the television luxury their budget can handle right now.

VALUE SPEAK
Joseph Walker

"That's what I thought," she says. "So why are we getting the channel?"

He explains that they have been previewing weekend all the time. By giving you a taste of their service, they hope to entice you into signing up full-time.

"But the preview was two weeks ago," she says. "Why are we still getting it?"

It's a good question. The only thing they can conclude is someone somewhere forgot to disconnect their household when the preview was over. Through no fault of their own they were receiving a valuable service without having to pay for it.

"So," the man finally asks, "what's the problem?"

"The problem," the woman replies loudly, "is that we shouldn't be receiving it."

"But that's not our fault," he responds. "I mean, it's not like we know what we're doing to steal the signal or anything. It's their mistake, so it's their problem."

"Maybe," she says. "But is it right for us to allow that mistake to continue? If they charged us too much by mistake we'd make sure they knew about it, wouldn't we?"

"Well — yes. But that's different."

"Is it really?" she asks. She pauses before hauling out the heavy artillery. "The thing is, this is a cable TV service. It's not like we're stealing anything. It's just for whatever it's worth, they agree with you (translation: Sweetheart, you're talking like an idiot again). But I worry about the message we're sending if we allow this to go on. Are we saying that honesty is relative, and that it's OK to take advantage of someone else's mistake if it works out in your favor?"

Don't you hate it when that happens? You just get settled into a comfortable position of moral apathy, and along comes someone who, in a few simple words, can reduce the question to a simple case of right vs. wrong. It's like you're painting a situational landscape with assorted shades of gray, which you find perfectly satisfying until someone introduces you to the functional clarity of black and white.

So guess what? That family's TV isn't connected to a cable movie service any more. But I think they have something infinitely more fulfilling: self-respect. And integrity. And a little more appreciation for what it means to be honest.

Their expertise even got our family talking about honesty. And we've come to a couple of interesting conclusions.

First, we decided that honesty simplifies life in a world that is growing frighteningly complex. On a superficial level,

T.F. man reinterprets story of flood

By Matt Christensen
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — Jim Montanus isn't a preacher. He's not a prophet. And he's no pulpiteer. This 43-year-old Twin Falls man is a computer programmer — with a message.

God isn't vengeful. He is patient. And he loves you.

Montanus plans to relay this message via a Pixar-style animated children's video he's designing and a soon-to-be-performed stage play he wrote. He hopes these media will reach thousands. And he's doing it all in Twin Falls.

Montanus has made some biblical sacrifices for his project. He quit his job as a video-game designer. He moved from Virginia to Twin Falls to be closer to collaborators. And he scrapped his original idea — a video game — in order to reach a wider audience.

"This is not the thing that is going to make me rich," he said. "I'm doing this to spread God's message."

Montanus' story focuses on the events leading up to the great flood described in the book of Genesis — it's Noah's granddaddy, the protagonist. A cast of other characters, some not, offer supporting roles. It's a reconciliation between the vengeful Old Testament God and the forgiving New Testament God, Montanus said. And the whole thing takes place in the dream of a girl named Samantha.

But no spoilers here. You can see the story — called "Captain Noah's Traveling Zoo" — performed live at the Roper Auditorium June 16-18 and 23-25. And the video will be available, well, sometime.

The video portion of the project stalled when Montanus ran out of funds. So now he's adapted his idea for the stage. Partly to get the message out sooner and partly to spark investor interest in the movie.

"I'm doing this (stage play) with the help of mostly volunteers," Montanus said. "I'm expecting a loss."

Nevertheless, Twin Falls has rallied around Montanus. His partner for the film is Twin Falls' 43-year-old husband, Mike Ulrich, whom Montanus met at a Christian game-development conference. (Being close to Ulrich's talents is the primary

To find out more information about "Captain Noah's Traveling Zoo," contact Jim Montanus at 732-5462.

Image from the "Captain Noah's Traveling Zoo."

Jim Montanus is working on religious children's video which tells the story before the biblical flood. He's turned his idea into a stage play, which he hopes will generate enough funds to complete the Pixar-style video. It's called "Captain Noah's Traveling Zoo" and debuts early this summer.

reason Montanus relocated to Twin Falls. A staff from Magic Valley School for the Performing Arts is helping with stage production. The Rev. Dan Marks, pastor of the Lighthouse Christian Fellowship, wrote a few of the musical numbers, and the church is largely funding the stage version. The play's cast is all Magic Valley. And many of the voices in the partly finished video are Magic Valley actors.

This isn't your typical church production, Montanus said. "We don't want to do a really boring church musical. We're doing this at a high-level quality not usually associated with Christian productions."

Montanus said he got the idea for "Captain Noah's Traveling Zoo" while working as a video game designer.

"I wanted to make a game that had some value," he said. "I wanted to make a game that told people God loves them."

The company Montanus worked for wasn't biting. But Ulrich was.

"This story is really cool because it's complex, but it has a simple message: God loves you," Ulrich said.

Though Ulrich hasn't invested much money into the project, he has donated hundreds of hours of time over the past three years. He developed all the 3-D animation for the movie and some video effects for the stage play. All this while commuting from his Twin Falls home to his job in Salt Lake City where he works for a game-development company.

Both men said if they can manage to pull the project off — to get people to see "Captain Noah's Traveling Zoo" either on stage or video — it'll all be worth it.

About Noah

The hero of the biblical flood story in the Old Testament book of Genesis, Noah is the image of the righteous man made party to a covenant with Yahweh, the God of Israel. In which nature's future protection against catastrophe is assured.

In the story of the Deluge (Genesis 6:11-9:19), Noah is represented as the patriarch who, because of his piety, was chosen by God to perpetuate the human race after his wicked contemporaries had perished in the flood. A righteous man, Noah "found favour in the eyes of the Lord" (Genesis 6:8). He was instructed to build an ark, and in accordance with God's instructions, he took into the ark male and female specimens of all the world's species of animals, from which the stocks might be replenished. Consequently, according to this narrative, the entire surviving human race descended from Noah's three sons. The story of the flood is similar to Babylonian traditions of apocalyptic floods in which Utnapishtim plays the part corresponding to that of Noah. These mythologies are the source of such features of the biblical flood story as the building and provisioning of the ark, its flotation, and the subsidence of the waters, as well as the part played by the human protagonist.

Tablet XI of the Gilgamesh epic introduces Utnapishtim, who, like Noah, survived cosmic destruction by heeding divine instruction to build an ark. The religious meaning of the flood is conveyed after Noah's heroic survival. He then built an altar on which he offered burnt sacrifices to God, who then bound himself to a pact never again to curse the earth on man's account. God then set a rainbow in the sky as a visible guarantee of his promise in this covenant.

Despite the tangible similarities of the Mesopotamian and biblical myths of the flood, the biblical story has a unique Hebrew perspective. In the Babylonian story the destruction of the flood was the result of a disagreement among the gods; in Genesis it resulted from the moral corruption.

Look, I just want to minister," Montanus said. "I needed a project, and this story seemed like a natural."

100 YEARS OF REVIVAL

Pentecostalism celebrates important birthday

The Associated Press

LOS ANGELES — It was 1906 when William Seymour, the son of slaves, traveled to a small church to preach that speaking in tongues was the ultimate path to salvation. The congregation rejected his message and promptly kicked him out.

But that wasn't the end of the story. Committed to his belief, Seymour started his own prayer group — first at a friend's house and then at an abandoned church in northeast Los Angeles. Within weeks, people of all races were streaming to the City of Angels to see the services where worshippers fell to the ground and uttered strange, unintelligible sounds.

The bolsters, three-year revival that followed made him a household name and is widely credited as the birth of modern-day Pentecostalism. The movement, once relegated to the theological fringe, now claims out to 600 million followers worldwide and remains one of the fastest-growing sectors of Christianity, according to Vinson Synan, dean of Regent University's School of Divinity and an ordained minister of the Pentecostal Holiness Church.

Starting this weekend, up to 60,000 followers will descend on Los Angeles to mark the movement's 100th birthday. A celebration that begins with a visit to the street corner where the revival church once stood. The Azusa Street location, now in the heart of Little Tokyo, bears a commemorative plaque.

We see the centennial as a homecoming for the movement, a wonderful memory of what God did 100 years ago," said the Rev. Billy Wilson, executive director of the Center for Spiritual Renewal, the celebration's sponsor. "We want to show the world that Pentecostals are about more than just feeling good and speaking in tongues."

Pentecostals believe in a personalized commitment to Christ and a second experience known as "baptism in the Holy Spirit." That baptism is most commonly accompanied by speaking in tongues, though other "gifts" from the Holy Spirit can include faith healing, the casting out of demons and modern-day prophecies. Followers base the practice on Acts 2:1-4, in which Jesus' apostles were "filled with the Holy Spirit and began to speak in other tongues, as the Spirit gave them utterance."

Mainline Christians had rejected speaking in tongues for more than a thousand years, believing that the Holy Spirit's gift stopped with the apostles. But when Seymour came to Los Angeles in 1906, conditions were ripe for the long-forgotten message.

Revival

The rough-edged town of 240,000 residents had doubted its population in just six years, and the city sprouted so many new churches that modern-day experts have called it an "American Jerusalem."

Hundreds of Christians were so concerned about the free-wheeling mentality of the rapidly growing city that they had broken away from mainstream denominations to pray for a massive spiritual revival.

Those concerns reached a fever pitch on April 18 — just five weeks after Seymour's strange prayer meetings — all-night services so rowdy that two policemen were posted full time at the church to keep order. The story bore the headline "Weird Babes of Tongues: New Sect of Fanatics is Breaking Loose."

Soon, all eight major newspapers were covering the revival, as were religious newspapers called "holiness circulars" that were passed among evangelical churches nationwide. Word spread across the nation — about the massive revival under way in Los Angeles.

One of the revival's most notable characteristics, experts say, was that blacks and whites worshipped under the same roof and shared pastoral duties. "It is highest, it draws people from all classes, wealthy and poor, Hispanics, blacks, Jews — you name it, everybody came," said Synan. "Whole churches collapsed and joined it. There was a force there, it was almost supernatural. People said they could feel it in the air from about three blocks away."

Within eight months, nearly 20 missionaries from the revival struck out for Africa, India and China to start Pentecostal churches, said Cecil M. Robeck Jr., professor of church history and ecumenics at Fuller Theological Seminary in Pasadena.

Revival attendees also established Pentecostal churches across the South and the Midwest, including the Pentecostal Holiness Church, the Church of God in Cleveland, Tenn., and the Church of God in Christ in Memphis.

Catholics combat drop in priest numbers

Church focuses on the positive

The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — Picking at her black fingernail polish and fiddling with her shirt and shoulder-length blond hair, 16-year-old Chelsea Sledgeski seems every bit the typical teen. Like her friends on the basketball team or her classmates hanging around Anne Arundel County, Md.'s new malls and subdivisions, she has pressures: divorced parents, an injury that landed her on the team bench and an argument she just had with her father about her report card.

In the past few months, though, she has found a savior. It sets her apart from her family, her neighbors, even her friends at Our Lady of the Fields Catholic Church in Millersville, where she stood beaming at a packed youth Mass one recent Sunday night.

Sledgeski is considering becoming a nun.

When she talks about what would attract a suburban girl with a sparkly shirt and a spidery-themed room to a life of chastity and poverty, her first words aren't about devoting herself to the needy or saving souls from eternal damnation. Her inspiration sounds pretty pragmatic: Nuns and priests seem really happy compared to adults trailing other life routes.

"God brings happiness. And if

Walker

that means it's a lot easier to keep your facts straight if you always tell the truth, and there's less stress around the office if you don't have to worry about justifying your expense account. But more than that, living honestly allows us to feel good in the presence of the only person who knows for sure if we are honest: ourselves. And it gives us a chance to build relationships on a solid foundation of confidence, security and trust.

And second, it's been our experience that it's harder to do "just one" dishonest act than it is to eat "just one" potato chip. Dishonesty tends to breed dishonesty. The child who steals a quarter from Dad's dresser may very well lie to cover up the deed. The teenager who cheats on a test at school may have been telling the truth about his homework, either.

KATHERINE PREY/FreePress/Post

"God brings happiness," says Chelsea Sledgeski, 16, of Anne Arundel County, Md., helping at Our Lady of the Fields in Millersville, Md. The Catholic church is trying to figure out themes that will pull in young American Catholics. One such theme is how to find happiness.

you are a priest or a nun, you know that you will always bring happiness. And you always have somewhere to turn to find an escape," she said of her inspiration.

U.S. Catholic Church officials are eager to hear comments such as hers as they conduct an intensified campaign to reverse the plunge in Catholics pursuing religious vocations. In the United States last year, 454 priests were ordained, down from 994 in 1995. In that period, the U.S. Catholic population swelled from 45 million to nearly 65 million, leaving 3,251 parishes without priests. The number of nuns dropped from 179,954 to 68,634.

For now, priests and nuns are being imported from countries, such as Vietnam and Nigeria, that have rising seminary populations and more conservative religious cultures. But the longer-term strategy requires deciphering the themes that will pull in young American Catholics. And churches' recruitment drives increasingly are focused on what Sledgeski talked about: how to be happy.

"Fishers of Men," a 20-minute video released this month by the U.S. Conference of Catholic Bishops, presents priests as handsome and heroic, appearing in scenes of war and civil rights marches that are contrasted with the image of bored-looking people riding an escalator to meaningless jobs. The video will be shown at Catholic schools, churches and religious retreats around the country.

SEEKING GOD IN A POSTMODERN WORLD

Noted historian tries to make sense of life

The Washington Post

NEW YORK—After she left the convent, Karen Armstrong called herself an atheist. "I used to hate religion," she says. "I loaded it in my angry days."

Seventeen books later, she is recognized as one of the great religious historians, and she has reconsidered her label. She regards herself to be deeply religious but with no denomination. "Sometimes I call myself a freethinker," she says in her melodious English accent. "I can't see any one of the great religions as superior to others... I'm seeking to make sense of life, looking for its meaning and how we can have a better humanity."

Borrowing for the moment from Buddhism, she explains, "Nirvana is something within you. It is not an external reality. No god thunders down from the mountains, just as the great mystics in the Christian, Jewish and Muslim faiths all discovered. God is within the self. God is virtually inseparable from ourselves."

"Religion," she says, "is very complicated. Some do it very well. Some do it badly. It's an art form. Not everyone who plays the piano plays like Vladimir Ashkenazy."

Karen Armstrong is sitting in a restaurant in Manhattan musing over her beliefs, her life, her work. Her new book, "The Great Transformation: The Beginning of Our Religious Traditions," is the second in a two-book deal.

After she left the convent, Karen Armstrong called herself an atheist. "I used to hate religion," she says. Now, 17 books later, Armstrong, shown in New York, is recognized as one of the great religious historians, and she has reconsidered her label.

the first being "The Spiral Staircase," her enthralling account of her Catholic upbringing and her falling away from the church after leaving the convent in England. Knopf, her publisher, is so confident of its success that it has printed 100,000 copies.

At 61, she is short and light-haired. Candid and self-assured, she has a pronounced sense of humor about herself and her work. She is quick to admit that her own religious beliefs are a work in progress.

"When I write my books, I find out what I think of religion," she says. And it is in her study that she feels the most spiritual.

"I do nothing but my work for days. That's when things start growing, when connections are made. It's what the Jews do when they study the Torah."

Her new book is about the Axial Age, from 900 to 200 B.C., a time of ferment when four different philosophies took shape in four distinct cultures—Confucianism and Taoism in China, Hinduism and Buddhism in India, monotheism in the vicinity of Israel and philosophical rationalism in Greece. She describes the era as "one of the most seminal periods of intellectual, psychological, philosophical and religious change in recorded history," and when she talks about it, she makes it sound totally relevant to today's world.

"I was intrigued," says Armstrong, "with the similarities of the traditions that evolved even though the four cultures didn't have much contact with each other. For one, they did not seek to impose their own views on others. For another, what mattered was not what you believed, but how you behaved."

"These guys worked hard at it," she says, "to find a solution to the spiritual and political ills of humanity. The Axial Age people seem to be talking to us."

Teenager is sick of only getting hand-me-downs

DEAR ABBY: I'm 13, and please don't get me wrong. I'm grateful to be living in my parents' house with my family. I know everyone isn't as lucky as I am.

My room is sort of a problem, though. There isn't enough room in my closet to hang anything. My dresser, which holds clothes that don't fit me anymore, was made in 1956 and is falling apart. My bed looks like a crib and holds my sisters' old bedding. I also have a desk that looks as if the hutch is about to fall off. It used to belong to my sisters, too.

My bed and desk are white, but the dresser looks like oak. The walls are white because Dad never wanted to paint them. Dad built our house three years ago — but he didn't buy a proper bedroom set like my sisters have.

During Christmas when I was in the sixth grade we all got computers. They got theirs in their room, but mine is in the study and is used by everybody, which means if someone wants to use it, I have to stop. I always get the last choice of everything, and I am sick of it. Please tell me how to convince my parents to fix my room.

—OVERLOOKED IN INDIANA

DEAR ABBY
Jeanne Phillips

DEAR OVERLOOKED: It's hard being the youngest child and the last in line for hand-me-downs. My suggestion to you is to ask an adult — a relative to whom you can confide your feelings, or a friend of the family — to speak to your parents on your behalf. I'll keep my fingers crossed for you.

DEAR ABBY: I live in Canada, so I may not be familiar with all of your etiquette customs in the U.S. I was visiting relatives in the states recently, and my hosts invited a friend over who came with a bottle of Irish Cream liqueur. The friend knew that this was the hostess's favorite drink.

After having a few glasses together, the hostess was told by her daughter that "good manners dictate that the hostess give back the half-empty bottle to the guest when leaving the party."

Can you please advise me if such a rule of etiquette exists? —CURIOUS IN CANADA

DEAR CURIOUS: If one exists, I have never heard of it. Traditionally, when someone brings food, alcohol, etc. to someone's home, it is considered to be a "hostess gift," and once a gift is given, it belongs to the host or hostess to do with as he or she wishes.

DEAR ABBY: I lost my husband, "Jon," in 2003 after 14 wonderful years of marriage. He left behind not only a wife who adored him, but also our three children, who were 4, 8 and 12 at the time of his death.

When making announcements, I would like to recognize Jon as my father and as my former husband. How should they be worded? If I say, "The former Jon and Karen Jones," I'm afraid it will sound like both of us died. Also, I would like to — hopefully — remarry one day. How would an announcement be worded then?

—WANTS TO REMEMBER IN WHITESBORO, TEXAS

DEAR WANTS TO REMEMBER: When issuing announcements or invitations for your children, they should say "... the son (or daughter) of Mrs. Michael Ross and the late Jon Jones."

Police force trains bomb-sniffing rats

BOGOTA, Colombia — Watch out Fido, your days on the force may be numbered.

Police in Colombia are training Leila and Espojo, two whiskered, red-eyed rats, to sniff out bombs and land mines. The rodents are part of a six-star squadron that police are preparing for missions to defuse more than 100,000 mines that litter Colombia's countryside.

Unlike dogs, rats weighing less than half a pound each and "don't trigger any explosions when they walk on a mine," said Col. Javier Cifuentes, director of the Sibite police academy. The rats have spent the past

Retiree flushes $18,900 in old bills down his toilet

BERLIN — A 64-year-old retiree in Germany flushed some 30,000 marks worth $18,900 down the toilet, believing the notes were worthless, police said.

Officials were alerted by a blocked pipe in the northern city of Kiel. A cleaning company employee extracted soggy bundles of bank notes, but more money got away as the water started flowing again.

Investigators then discovered that the retiree had reported a blocked pipe at his house the same day. They visited the man and he confirmed he had flushed the money, police said.

He "was of the opinion that bank notes no longer had any value," the statement said. —compiled from wire reports

Former Taliban envoy says U.S. must negotiate in order to stop violence

KABUL, Afghanistan (AP) — Violence will persist in Afghanistan unless the U.S.-led coalition starts to negotiate with the toppled Taliban regime and other armed groups, the Taliban's former ambassador to Pakistan told The Associated Press.

The warning from Abdul Sattar, a former Guantanamo Bay prisoner, came this week as fighting continued in the Afghan countryside. A U.S. soldier was killed Friday in a Taliban ambush, and more than 100 militants killed 50 Afghan policemen, afterward burning four of their bodies.

In recent months, Afghanistan has seen a surge in bombings and shootings targeting coalition troops and Afghan forces, particularly in southern provinces, including the volatile southern provinces like Helmand, up from the current number of 6,000. Some 19,000 U.S. soldiers are now in Afghanistan.

Zaeef said military action against insurgents will only exacerbate Afghan instability. "I think the problem (of violence) is increasing and people have to decide whether they will solve it through use of power or negotiation," Zaeef told The Associated Press on Thursday at the outskirts of the capital, Kabul. "Afghanistan needs reconciliation but I don't think the (Americans) want to negotiate."

"We know the Taliban and (Gulbuddin) Hekmatyar (the renegade former premier now wanted by the United States) can do something (against the coalition) and create further problems," Zaeef said. "Afghanistan is not like Germany and Japan."

The death of the U.S. soldier on Friday was in Dilaward, a district in the central Uruzgan province about 270 miles southwest of Kabul. Gunmen struck while coalition troops were inspecting a weapons cache. An Afghan soldier was wounded.

In a particularly grisly attack last Thursday, suspected Taliban militants raided a police checkpoint building on the Kandahar-Herat road in the Kandahar province district of Nijrab. Two police were killed and their bodies set on fire on the building's roof and two more slain. Police were found bound and gagged, and a provincial highway police chief, Raz Mohammed Khan, two others were shot dead outside the building before the militants fled.

The Taliban government hosted Osama bin Laden at the time of the Sept. 11, 2001, attacks on New York and Washington. A subsequent American-led military campaign toppled the regime and sent bin Laden into hiding. However, Taliban resistance to the U.S.-backed regime has continued. At least 224 U.S. military personnel have died in Afghanistan and neighboring Pakistan and Uzbekistan since the U.S. invasion of Afghanistan in late 2001. Of those, at least 141 were killed by hostile action.

To counter the bloodshed, new often from ambushes or roadside bombs. U.S.-led coalition forces have swept through numerous trouble spots.

By late July, more than 9,000 NATO-led troops will be stationed in volatile southern provinces like Helmand, up from the current number of 6,000. Some 19,000 U.S. soldiers are now in Afghanistan.

Iraqi leaders end impasse

Officials agree on new prime minister candidate

By Nancy A. Youssef and Laila Fadel Knight Ridder New Service

BAGHDAD, Iraq — Iraqi leaders on Friday ended an impasse in forming a new government and agreed on a new candidate for prime minister, an inexperienced Shiite Muslim known for his harsh criticism of rival Sunni Arabs.

Iraqi political leaders were expected to present the name of the new prime minister candidate, Jawad al-Maliki, and those of a new president, two vice presidents and speaker of the parliament for a vote in the parliament on Saturday.

The potential end of political deadlock is a small step for a nation that some believe already has descended into civil war and a government that remains divided along ethnic and religious lines. Iraq's new leaders, most of them inexperienced, must choose ministers, resolve disputes over the constitution and other problems and find a way to stop the rampant violence.

"You are dealing with an unproven prime minister," said Anthony Cordesman, an analyst with the Center for Strategic and International Studies in Washington. "It's the beginning of a very contentious process. It's very unlikely that all of these issues are going to get resolved by the end of the year."

Al-Maliki, 56, a top member of the Dawaa Islamic Party, has publicly chastised Sunnis, spoken in favor of Islamic law and played an active part in de-Baathification, the effort to purge the government of remnants of Saddam Hussein's regime.

In an interview with Knight Ridder Newspapers last year, after scores of Shiites had been killed, al-Maliki said it was only orders from the religious leadership to remain calm that stopped him and his Shiite brethren from killing Sunnis.

But he's also known as a strong politician. Many Iraqis had complained the current interim prime minister, Ibrahim al-Jaafari, was weak.

Al-Maliki is "regarded as a highly sectarian figure, but he is also seen as more Iraqi and less

al-Maliki

Sunni leader, they said they accepted al-Maliki because they felt they had to respect the will of the majority Shiites. They said his past statements must be forgiven.

"The Sunnis have many times publicly attacked the Shiites. One day we attack each other, the next day we are on good terms. That's politics," said Mahmood Mashhadani, the Sunni Arab candidate for speaker of parliament.

Nepal's king vows to bring back democracy

Protests might continue despite leader's promise

KATMANDU, Nepal (AP) — A visibly uncomfortable king of Nepal promised Friday to bring democracy back to this Himalayan nation, trying to end a bloody political crisis that has engulfed the country. His efforts, though, met only with an opposition pledge of more demonstrations.

With well over 100,000 protesters filling the streets and a top envoy warning the government could be nearing collapse, King Gyanendra's promises showed little sign of mollifying the political opposition — or a public desperate for change 14 months after he seized power.

The king, though, insisted in his speech he was acting on behalf of the nation his family has ruled since the 18th century.

His dynasty, he said, has an "unending commitment toward constitutional monarchy and multiparty democracy," and he called on the seven main opposition political parties to "quit the streets."

"Executive power ... shall, from this day, be returned to the people," he said in the announcement broadcast on state television and radio.

Gyanendra, never an electric public speaker, looked particularly uncomfortable during his speech, frequently glancing in front of a closed backdrop and staring directly into the camera as he spoke.

His glumness is unsurprising. In a country where kings and queens are revered as gods, he has for years ago, Gyanendra is deeply unpopular. Isolated in a collection of palaces and has lost control of much of the rural areas to a Maoist insurgency that has left nearly 13,000 people dead as it tries to create a communist Nepal.

Many fear the country could, at its worst, descend into chaos, creating a power vacuum into which the Maoists, with their long history of violence, could step in.

In addition, many demonstrators are increasingly demanding that he give up all his power — something the king is clearly loathe to do. Late Friday, the U.S. State Department urged the king to follow up his promise to restore democracy to the country of 27 million people, a place once famed for its spectacular mountain ranges and hippies in search of Eastern spirituality — but now known for its chaotic, bloody politics.

Many of Nepal deserve a democratic government that can restore stability and peace to their country, spokesman Sean McCormack said in a statement.

Opposition leaders saw little in the speech to resolve the crisis, which began when the king seized power in February 2005, saying he needed to crush the Maoist insurgency.

"This is incomplete," said Mithendra Rijal of Nepal Congress Democratic Party, one of the seven opposition parties that have joined with the Maoists to protest the king's seizure of power.

The king, he noted, fell short of a key opposition demand — the return of parliament and creation of a special assembly to write a constitution. The constitutional assembly "is the aspiration of the people."

Most opposition leaders want the king to step down and make the king a ceremonial figure or eliminate the monarchy entirely.

monarchy and apparently keep control of the military.

"This looks like another attempt by the king to fool the people," said Subash Neupane of the Communist Party of Nepal. "It is a desperate attempt to save the regime."

In the streets, the reaction was angry. On the outskirts of Kathmandu, scene of the most violent protests, many said Gyanendra could not be trusted.

Other demonstrators voiced cautious optimism. "We have won the battle, but we still must win the war," said Girindra Shrestha.

Now, Friday, the coordinating body of the seven-party alliance issued a short statement, though it was unclear whether it was a direct reaction to the speech. The general strike and other protests will further intensify, it said.

Abbas bars Hamas plan for militant security force

GAZA CITY, Gaza Strip (AP) — Prime Minister Mahmoud Abbas on Friday vetoed Hamas' plan to set up a security force of 4,000 militants, but Hamas insisted it would go ahead, deepening the bitter clash yet between the Islamic group and the moderate Palestinian leader.

Hamas, which ousted Abbas' Fatah Party from power in January parliamentary elections, had spoken in the past of incorporating militants into the Fatah-dominated Palestinian security forces.

But the concept of a shadow security force headed by the No. 2 fugitive on Israel's wanted list appeared to go too far for Abbas, who favors talks with Israel and is trying to keep the West from shunning the Palestinians over Hamas' violently anti-Israel ideology.

The new force, to be based in chaotic Gaza, is to have about 4,000 members, or nearly one-fourth the size of the 18,000-member armed security contingent in the coastal strip.

Egypt, meanwhile, invited interim Israeli Prime Minister Ehud Olmert for an official visit there he has been postponing since his government, signaling it is eager to do business with a man keen to draw Israel's final borders with the Palestinians within the next four years.

Egyptian President Hosni Mubarak extended the invitation in a telephone call to Olmert, and a date for the visit is to be set next week, aides to the Israeli leader said. Israel and Egyptian leaders have not met since February 2005.

Egypt's MENA news agency reported the phone call but did not mention any invitation.

Olmert has said he prefers a negotiated settlement with the Palestinians, but is expected to act unilaterally because of Hamas' refusal to disarm or recognize Israel's right to exist.

Hamas' hard-line policies have already cost it hundreds of millions of dollars in Western aid and Israeli transfer payments. Abbas, who was elected separately, saw the proposed militants' security force as yet another act of defiance, and on Friday, wielded his ultimate power — the presidential veto — to block the force.

"All the officers, soldiers and security personnel are asked not to abide by these decisions and to consider them null and void," Abbas wrote in a letter to Prime Minister Ehud Olmert, a copy of which was obtained by The Associated Press.

Government spokesman Ghazi Hamad said Interior Minister Salam Fayyad, who nominally controls three of the six existing security forces, would form the new force as planned regardless.

The decision of the interior minister conformed with the law — which gives the minister the authority to take the necessary decisions to guarantee security, Hamad said. The aim of the decision was to support and strengthen the efforts of the police, and not to replace the police.

In Syria, Hamas' political chief, Khaled Mashal, lashed out at Abbas' veto, without mentioning the Palestinian leader by name.

"We can understand that Israel and America are persecuting us, and seeking ways to besiege and starve us, but what about the sons of our people who are plotting against us, who are following a studied plan to make us fail?" Mashal said.

After job law fiasco, France retreats on other fronts

By Molly Moore The Washington Post

PARIS — Julien Rey, a pack-a-day smoker, should be content with his government. It has just negotiated an anti-smoking law that would have banned him from enjoying a cigarette with a mug of beer at his neighborhood bar.

Instead, Rey views his leaders as spineless and paralyzed by fear of public rejection. "They're not going to do anything for a year, until the next elections," says Rey, 28, at Aux Petits Tonneaux ("At the Little Barrels") bar in central Paris. "And that's too bad — we need a lot of reforms."

In the nearly two weeks since French officials backed down from a controversial youth labor law under pressure from militant protesters in the streets nationwide, the government has started retreating from laws — large and small — on subjects as diverse as smoking, pollution and flea markets.

"The government leaders are so frightened they cannot move," said Claude Evain, a former French health minister who has spent years advocating smoking bans and other health-related initiatives. "They are paralyzed by their own shadow."

France is facing a terrible situation with such leaders. Government officials had been set to initiate the law banning smoking in bars, restaurants and other public

Julien Rey, 28, though a pack-a-day smoker, criticizes French leaders as spineless because they have failed to proceed with a ban on smoking in bars and other public places. "And that's too bad — we need a lot of reforms," he said.

venues in a few weeks, sweeping away a national ritual of a cigarette and a cup of coffee in a cafe. Non smokers are usually assigned to the worst tables in the most cramped corners of restaurants.

At an April 12 breakfast meeting — the same breakfast, according to the weekly newspaper Le Canard Enchaîné, officials discussed weakening legislation that would make polluters — including Rey — responsible for paying to clean up rivers and lakes. That bill is scheduled for a parliamentary vote next month.

And this past Tuesday, Commerce Minister Renaud Dutreix announced that the governments is considering loosening the rules of another new law regulating vendors at flea markets.

Villepin took up his position almost a year ago pledging to energize a lethargic government and reform a nation increasingly viewed as a sluggish competitor in the global economy. In recent months, he has watched his political standing and presidential ambitions plummet in the face of the massive demonstrations that forced him to back down on the youth labor law, which allowed employers to fire workers under age 26 anytime during their first two years on the job.

Now, he's vilified and ridiculed almost daily in the French press. In a poll published on Thursday by the daily newspaper Le Figaro, only 6 percent of respondents said they would vote for Villepin for president. Six months ago surveys placed him as the leading contender in the 2007 presidential election.

Government critics say the retreat on the smoking ban is particularly symptomatic of the current administration's impotence. They say his final year in office before next spring's presidential election. In a move certain to push the debate beyond the election, the government has said it will conduct another study on the ramifications of the law.

A recent survey by the IFOP polling group found that 78 percent of respondents supported a smoking ban.

HARD #59

Fill in the grid so that every row, every column, and every 3x3 box contains the digits 1 through 9. That's all there is to it. There's no math involved.
