

The next governor of Idaho will be a Roman Catholic. This is likely the first time in Idaho's 116-year history that two Catholics have faced off for the state's highest office. So how will Democrat Jerry Brady or Republican Butch Otter's religion affect the way he governs a state that is only 11 percent Catholic? More to the point, how will their faith influence public lic policies on issues such as abortion and the death penalty? Times-News correspondent Julie Pence interviewed Otter and Brady about how Catholicism shaped their public lives and their views on the relationship between church and state, and she talked with political observers about why — so far — religion hasn't been an issue in this campaign.

Buhl man kills wife, himself

By Cassidy Friedman
Times-News writer

WENDELL — The relationship of a Buhl couple with a history of domestic violence ended yesterday morning in a cornfield southwest of Wendell. Eva Magana's body was found next to her dying husband, Bulmaro, in a pickup. "He shot her and then shot himself," said Gooding County Sheriff Shaun Gough. Bulmaro was pronounced dead before medics were able to get him on Life Flight. The couple leave behind an 8-year-old and a child of Eva's first marriage, said Gough. "They were going through a divorce," Gough said. "They have had domestic problems in the past. There has been a divorce filed." The sheriff said there were no signs of beating. The couple's pickup was sitting on a private dirt road 3300

S 1800 E early Saturday when a passerby spotted it. Gough said. Authorities got the call at 1 a.m. Gough said he believes the shootings occurred not long before that.

Idaho enacts first ammonia rule in nation for dairies

By Michelle Dumlop
Times-News writer

BOISE — Idaho will lead the nation in regulating ammonia emissions from dairies when a temporary rule takes effect at the end of the month.

By July 1, operators of roughly 40 Magic Valley dairies need to file for an air quality permit with the state. The new rule comes after about 18 months of negotiations between state officials, members of the Idaho Dairyman's Association and the Idaho Conservation League. It applies to any dairy confined animal feeding operation, or CAFO, that emits 100 tons or more of ammonia annually. "Idaho is the only state in the nation that has regulation for ammonia emissions from dairy CAFOs," said Martin Bauer with the Idaho Department of Environmental Quality. "Ammonia is the largest emitter for the dairies." There isn't a health risk linked to ammonia emissions, Bauer said. However, ammonia can cause water quality problems such as algae growth.

DEQ will issue the air quality permits, while the Idaho Department of Agriculture will inspect dairies for compliance with the ammonia rule. The Ag Department has staff on site at many of the 52 dairies affected by the rules statewide, Bauer said. However, the DEQ retains enforcement authority, he said.

Bob Naerbout, executive director of the Idaho Dairyman's Association, said the majority of dairies in the region already meet the state's requirements under the new rule.

There are some dairies that are not in compliance," Naerbout said. The rule applies to dairies based on size and waste management procedures. Dairies reach compliance by implementing "best management practices" that control ammonia emissions. While dairymen worry about over-regulation, Naerbout said, the new ammonia rule allows for a lot of flexibility. Dairymen can pick from a variety of practices to comply with the rule. The dairymen teamed up with the Idaho Conservation League in early 2005 to devise a Clean Air Act permitting process. The conservation group had sued Adrian Boer regarding emissions from the dairy he proposed for Gooding County. U.S. District Court Judge B. Lynn Winnmill ruled that the DEQ had the responsibility to issue permits for facilities emitting 100 tons of air pollutants annually. However, the new ammonia rule does not require dairies to report ammonia emissions.

GOING BIG CSI prepares for aggressive growth

TWIN FALLS — Sometimes the College of Southern Idaho amazes even state officials. The Idaho State Board of Education praised CSI for its ability to prepare students amid a changing job market, and for building community support for the institution. Then it asked how the college manages to do it. "If people think we can benefit them, and the economic interests of the community, then I think they will be more willing to pay for our services," said Jerry Beck, president of CSI. "And to do that, we have to be nimble and quick to respond to the needs of the community." To do this, State board OKs new funding formula. CSI works closely with local businesses to train employees and keep them up-to-date. When Simplot closed its factory in Burley, CSI designed courses to prepare laid-off workers for new jobs. Dairyman faces water shortages and rule changes

By Michelle Dumlop
Times-News writer

WENDELL — At its most basic, it's about getting the milk into tanks. That part hasn't changed, says one local dairyman. But, in recent years, Edwin Southfield has a lot more to worry about. Not only has the dairy industry changed, but so have other factors in Magic Valley, Dairy near Wendell. Water shortages, regulations and low milk prices — all sit on a list of concerns for Southfield. "For me, the initial concern is low milk prices," he said. Dairymen are getting less today for milk than they got in 1976, Southfield said. There's just too much milk in the market right now — that's driving prices down, he said. "We're getting too good at what we do," Southfield said. And, dairymen are doing more than they did in the past, he said. In the past five to See page DAIRY, Page A2

Cheese moved to the area, CSI immediately began working with those businesses to create training programs.
But Beck said immediacy requires a local board.
One of the advantages we have is that your (employer) can tell one of us that they need more (workers), Beck said. 'And within a few days, we can gather board members in a board meeting to see how we can start some kind of training program.'
Teaching technology
CSI also uses the latest technology to teach students in their homes.
A large part of our success is due to our ability to operate in our off-campus areas," Beck said. "Enrollment in our Internet-based courses keeps growing, so we have to keep up with the demand. We are the first college to integrate VoIP (Internet protocol voice system), which gives students the ability to communicate through a video connection."
He said CSI's service area includes many rural communities, so online courses often are more convenient.
Besides the main campus in Twin Falls, CSI also operates smaller campuses in Burley, Hailey and Gooding. All four campuses are connected through a video network so instructors can teach from studios on the main campus.

The long-term
Not all of CSI's growth is happening away from the main campus.
The college is requesting money through grants and the state to build a health center on its main campus to coincide with the planned expansion of its nursing program.
School officials also are working with the city of Twin Falls to increase the size of the campus by one-third. The city will have to build another street to go around the campus.
"We will implement that as our resources entail," Beck said. "But with the construction of Wal-Mart, the new high school and the hospital, we see this as an opportunity time to begin preparing."
Now may be the best time to prepare for growth after the State Board OK'd the new funding formula. Under the formula, CSI can increase state funding by increasing student enrollment.
"Maybe we have more opportunities," Beck said. "Of course, you always make some of that opportunity by being business aggressive."

Panel OKS new formula for funding community colleges
By Joshua Palmer Times-News writer
The new formula will distribute state money between the College of Southern Idaho and North Idaho College based on each school's enrollment. The funding formula will give CSI an additional $400,000 because it has more students.
CSI had included the meeting on its budget, so it was depending on the board's approval of the formula to avoid budget cuts. Although officials at CSI said they would not cut employees, they said the college would be forced to cut programs.
"One of the critical parts of putting our budget together is having this (information)," Beck said. "We're glad to have this so that we can use it to make it easier for our residents to go to school."
However, the funding formula is not permanent. Stone said the board can still make changes to the formula, which will be the case if the state changes the way community colleges are governed.

Water shortages and milk prices together with counties' more stringent ordinance changes could slow down dairy growth in the region, he said. Over the past year, Gooding County's board of commissioners proposed stricter regulations for building new dairies or expanding existing ones in the county. The changes didn't garner support among the industry and didn't stick.

10 years, Southfield has watched as dairymen incorporate more and more operations under their own umbrella. Instead of hiring out different jobs on the dairy, Southfield said, now many dairy owners try to do it all - from keeping their own books to chopping their own grain to hauling their own manure.
"Dairymen are so independent, they think they can handle everything," he said.
But low milk prices make it difficult for dairymen to accommodate outside change - such as lingering calls for water by surface water users along the Eastern Snake River Plain Aquifer. A lot of those stock water rights held by dairymen are junior to the water rights held by surface water users, meaning some dairymen and groundwater pumpers could see wells shut down in times of shortage.

The Idaho Dairymen's Association had been working with surface and spring water users on a mitigation plan - or a way for dairymen to provide water to senior users, said Bob Naerobout, executive director.
"Water shortages and milk prices together with counties' more stringent ordinance changes could slow down dairy growth in the region, he said. Over the past year, Gooding County's board of commissioners proposed stricter regulations for building new dairies or expanding existing ones in the county. The changes didn't garner support among the industry and didn't stick."
I think a lot of the changes they presented will end up being more friendly," Southfield said.
However, Southfield doesn't see new dairies being built in several parts of the region like Twin Falls and Jerome counties. "It's still about air emissions from Elmore County, as well as parts of eastern Idaho might still welcome dairies, he said.
Overall, Southfield said, "in this Magic Valley, I think they already put the kibosh on expanding dairies."
With all the issues swirling around, Southfield said, it's easy to get distracted from the milk's important.

New Southern Baptist president wants to push a warmer style for the denomination

By Tim Whitnire
Associated Press writer

GREENSBORO, N.C. — The surprise pick for president of the Southern Baptist Convention says he'll stand up for the denomination's conservative beliefs — but he'll do it with a smile.

"I believe in the Word of God," says the Rev. Frank Page. "I'm just not mad about it."

The pastor from South Carolina comes from outside the conservative leadership that has held tight control of the nation's largest Protestant denomination for more than a decade. But he cautions that does not represent a move toward the political middle for a group fervently opposed to abortion and gay sex.

In his campaign, and again after winning Tuesday over two better-known SBC leaders, Page was quick to proclaim his credentials as a conservative and a believer that the Bible is the unerring Word of God. But he also was blunt about his determination to perform cosmetic surgery on the face that the SBC presents to the nation.

Asked how he would determine who would have a voice in Southern Baptist leadership under his presidency, Page cited "a sweet spirit" as the first requirement.

SBC leaders have often come off as filled with righteous fury in recent years, a carry-over from the long, vicious battle for control of the denomination that conservatives and moderates waged in the 1970s and 1980s. The struggle ended when moderates dropped out of SBC politics in the early 1990s, but a confrontational tone had been set for a generation of conservative SBC leaders.

In 1997, the Southern Baptists adopted a resolution calling for a boycott of The Walt Disney Co. after it decided to offer benefits to partners of gay employees. Citing changes in Disney executives and more family-friendly entertainment, the SBC ended the boycott eight years later although the company had not changed its gay policy.

SBC declarations banned women pastors and declared that wives should "submit graciously" to their husbands. On Wednesday, a day after Page's election, the SBC's annual meeting adopted a resolution urging that anyone who drinks alcohol be barred from leadership positions.

Many within the SBC see the 53-year-old Page's victory as the start of a new era.

Wade Burleson, a 44-year-old pastor from Enid, Okla.,

On the Net:

Southern Baptist Convention:
<http://www.sbc.net>

Page's church:
<http://www.taylorstbc.org>

was one of Page's most outspoken supporters. A conservative like Page, he was nonetheless dismayed at the way SBC leaders handled dissent within the powerful International Missions Board after he joined the panel.

Burleson was publicly reprimanded by board members for writing about the board's internal debates on his Internet blog and threatened with removal, which stoked his desire for change.

Burleson and other dissenting bloggers were given part of the credit for carrying the little-known Page to victory over Ronnie Floyd, pastor of a northwest Arkansas megachurch, and Jerry Sutton, a prominent conservative who leads one of Nashville, Tenn.'s most politically active congregations.

"They had their concerns, and their concerns were the battle for the Bible," Burleson said. "And you know what? I affirm my respect for them over that, but sometimes you win and you've got to move on. ... I think today we've moved on."

He said Page's election sends an important message about Southern Baptists to the rest of America.

"What they (other Americans) can say is that Southern Baptists are concerned about the good news, getting out to people in need," Burleson said. "They can say of Southern Baptists, 'Man, those folks love people.' That's what I hope they hear, loud and clear."

Bill Leonard, dean of Wake Forest University's School of Divinity and a frequent critic of SBC leadership, is less sure that the Southern Baptists have reached a turning point. He noted that Sutton and Floyd likely split the traditional conservative vote, allowing Page to eke out his win.

"Whether it becomes a 'kinder, gentler' denomination, publicly depends on how much the traditional leadership — especially certain seminary presidents — respond," Leonard said in an e-mail interview.

"Page's narrow election may give false hope to many," said Robert Parham of Nashville's Baptist Center for Ethics, which also opposes the SBC leadership. "Even if Page wants to pursue a reformation, he can't overturn decades of fundamentalist control and organizations stocked with fundamentalist employees."

Page says his election should not be viewed as a harbinger of moderating Southern Baptist philosophy. But he did say he hopes for a "broadening" of voices heard within the denomination and embraced the notion of a "kinder, gentler" SBC.

"For too long, Baptists have been known for what we're against," he said. "It's time to say, 'Please, let us tell what we're for.' There is a life transforming, relevant-to-today's-people message that we have to share."

Man paralyzed 35 years ago is father to triplets

By Jennifer Maloney
Newsday

Ken Kunken almost said the wrong words when he introduced himself to his newborn sons 16 months ago. For years, he had greeted children by saying, "It's Uncle 'Ken'." But as he peered that day into three incubators at North Shore University Hospital's neo-natal ward in Manhasset, N.Y., he said, "It's Daddy."

Kunken never imagined himself a husband, much less a parent. Paralyzed for 35 years, he can move only his head, right shoulder and left arm. But Kunken, 55, who despite his paralysis completed degrees at Cornell, Columbia and Hofstra universities, has achieved what he had believed impossible.

This weekend, the Rockville Centre, N.Y., resident will celebrate his second Father's Day with his wife, Anna, and their triplets, Timmy, Jimmy and Lucy.

"I still have to pinch myself every day," Ken Kunken said. "It's the best. The absolute best." Ken and Anna conceived thanks to in-vitro fertilization.

For men with spinal cord injuries and normal sperm counts, the procedure's success rate is 90 to 100 percent, said Dr. Bruce Gilbert, who said he is one of three urologists on New York's Long Island who perform sperm retrievals. The success rate of in-vitro fertilization depends on a woman's age and health.

Ken Kunken, a Levittown, N.Y., native, was 20 years old when playing for Cornell's lightweight football team, he tackled an opponent and couldn't get up. He had broken his neck.

Major cities aren't ready for catastrophes, government says

By Lara Jakes Jordan
Associated Press writer

WASHINGTON — New Orleans is still woefully unprepared for catastrophes in 10 months after Hurricane Katrina, and the two cities attacked on 9/11 don't meet all guidelines for responding to major disasters, a federal security analysis concluded Friday.

Ten states were rated in a Homeland Security Department scorecard as having sufficient disaster response plans. But the analysis found the vast majority of America's states, cities and territories still are far from ready for terror attacks, huge natural disasters or other wide-reaching emergencies.

"Frankly, we just have not in this country put the premium on our level of catastrophe planning that is necessary to be ready for those wide-scale events," Homeland Security Undersecretary George Foreman told reporters.

sheltering of victims, public alerts and other emergency priorities.

The tepid ratings gave fodder to state and local officials who have hammered Homeland Security for cutting their emergency response funding. And the ratings may oversimplify security gaps that can't be measured in a one-size-fits-all formula.

"You really have to look at each state individually and how they're prepared for the emergencies that their experts anticipate," said Jeff Welsh, spokesman for Maryland's emergency management agency. "It's a snapshot of the country as a whole, and to have an honest, realistic assessment of a single state you have to look at that single state."

Foreman said the results highlight disparate and disconnected emergency plans in the absence of national preparedness standards. "This is not something that is a grand surprise — it has simply put documented numbers on what we intuitively knew in the post-9/11 era," he said.

Bright spots in the analysis were 10 states with response plans that Homeland Security deemed "sufficient" — the highest rating. Those states are: Florida, Maryland, Massachusetts, Mississippi, New York, Rhode Island, South Carolina, Tennessee, Texas and Vermont. It also found that 18 hurricane-prone states, from Maine to Texas, appeared to be better prepared for disasters than the rest of the country.

Florida, accustomed to being whipped with hurricane winds, was the only state assessed as ready in all nine categories of catastrophe planning. But state emergency manager Craig Fugate said he wasn't that interested in the rankings.

"All this is nice, but the bottom line is we have to continue to strive to get better," Fugate said. "Is it going to change anything that we're doing No."

By comparison, Louisiana's plans were deemed "insufficient" as the state continues to grapple with devastation from hurricanes Katrina and Rita.

Similarly, New Orleans' plan received the lowest ranking possible, with only 4 percent of preparedness measures meeting federal standards first outlined in this scorecard.

New Orleans emergency preparedness director Chief Joseph Matthews said the city has been working with Homeland Security to develop "a sound evacuation plan." The city learned "real-time lessons as a result of Hurricane Katrina, and we are working hard to put these into practice," Matthews said in a statement.

In New York and Washington, al-Qaida's targets on Sept. 11, 2001, the analysis found lukewarm results.

The majority of the preparations for both cities were described as only partially sufficient by the department. Those ratings came two weeks after top New York and Washington officials complained bitterly that Homeland Security cut their federal aid for emergency responders this year.

"If we ever needed proof of the hypocrisy of the Department of Homeland Security we just got it," said Sen. Charles E. Schumer, D-N.Y. "Today they say that New York, despite the efforts of the mayor and the city, is still not adequately prepared for disasters including terrorism, and yet they dramatically short-changed our funding. They are not even reading their own reports."

Foreman said there was no connection between the emergency plan analysis and the department's grants. But he noted that while Homeland Security has sent $18 billion to spur state and local preparedness since 9/11, "very little of it has gone to planning, training and exercise."

The scorecard was compiled by teams of former state and local emergency response directors over six months.

House backs Bush's policies in Iraq

By Jon Weisman and C. Cabington
The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — The House on Friday voted 256 to 153 to back President Bush's policies in Iraq after two days of passionate and partisan debate that saw Republicans declare that the United States must complete the mission to create a sovereign, free, secure and united Iraq "without setting an arbitrary date for the withdrawal or redeployment" of U.S. troops.

Three Republicans — Reps. Ron Paul, Texas, John Duncan Jr., Tenn., and Jim Leach, Iowa — joined 149 Democrats and one independent to oppose the resolution. Five others — three Democrats and two Republicans — voted present in protest.

Public opinion polls continue to show the Iraq war is deeply unpopular, even in the wake of the death of al-Qaida leader Abu Musab al-Zarqawi. But, convinced they cannot avoid the issue in an election year, Republicans tried to put Democrats on the defensive with the first extended debate on the war since Congress authorized the use of force nearly four years ago.

House Republicans tried to frame the conflict in the broadest possible terms, linking it to not only the Sept. 11, 2001, attacks and the war on terrorism but also to what they saw as the Clinton administration's repeated failures to act after terrorist attacks in the 1990s.

"The American public deserves to hear from their elected leaders will respond to international terrorism and those enemies who seek to destroy our American way of life. Will we fight or will we retreat?" asked House Majority Leader John Boehner, Ohio. "Let me be clear: Those who say this is a war of choice are nothing more than wrong. This is a war of necessity."

House Majority Whip Roy Blunt, R-Mo., said the question before the House was whether "the global war on totalitarianism is worth fighting."

House Minority Leader Nancy Pelosi, Calif., countered. "Republicans in Congress continue to try to mislead the American people by suggesting a link between the war in Iraq and the war on terror. They are distinct, and efforts to portray one as part of the other are a disservice to the truth and to the men and women fighting in Baghdad, Kirkuk and Ramadi."

"We've become the enemy. We've given a microphone to people like Zarqawi," said Rep. John Murtha, Pa., the hawkish Democrat who rocked Capitol Hill last year by calling for a rapid withdrawal of forces. "We support the troops. It's the policy we don't support."

For much of the past four years, House Republicans have avoided serious debate on Iraq. The Senate, not the House, held hearings on prisoner abuse at the Abu Ghraib prison. The Senate, not the House, descended into bitter debate last year over an amendment by Sen. John McCain, R-Ariz., to ban torture at U.S. detention facilities. And the Senate, not the House, pushed into law a measure declaring 2006 a "year of significant transition" in Iraq.

But with midterm election less than five months away, House leaders — driven in part by dissenting GOP voices — decided their members needed to engage the Iraq issue directly. "I think all members are going to have to express themselves on this issue as the year goes on. There is no way of avoiding it," Boehner said.

But Republicans wanted to air it out under the most favorable circumstances, debating a leadership-tailored resolution over 10 hours that would not be subject to amendment and would not face competing policy statements. By drafting a resolution that supported U.S. troops, emphasized triumphing over terrorism and called for victory in Iraq, GOP leaders had constructed a measure that was "hard not to support," Rep. Tom Davis, R-Va., said.

Pentagon report details abuse of Iraqi detainees

By Lolita C. Baldor Associated Press writer

WASHINGTON — U.S. special operations forces fed some Iraqi detainees only bread and water for up to 17 days, used unapproved interrogation practices such as sleep deprivation and loud music and stripped at least one prisoner, according to a Pentagon report on incidents dating to 2003 and 2004.

The report concludes that the detainees' treatment was wrong but not illegal and reflected inadequate resources and lack of oversight and proper guidance rather than deliberate abuse. No military personnel were punished as a result of the investigation. The findings were included in more than 1,000 pages of documents the Pentagon released to the American Civil Liberties Union on Friday under a Freedom of Information request. They included two major reports — one by Army Brig. Gen. Richard Formica on special operations forces in Iraq and one by Brig. Gen. Charles Jacoby on Afghanistan detainees.

While some of the incidents have been reported previously and reviewed by members of Congress, this was the first time the documents were made public. Many portions of the report were blacked out, including specific names and locations such as the identities of the military units involved. The report comes as the military is grappling with new allegations of war crimes in an increasingly unpopular conflict in Iraq. It could hamper the Bush administration's election-year effort to turn public opinion around with upbeat reports about the progress of the new government in Baghdad.

Both the Formica and the Jacoby report demonstrate that the government is really not taking the investigation of detainee abuse seriously," said Amrit Singh, an ACLU attorney.

Singh called the reports "a whitewash" and questioned why they only focused on a limited number of incidents. In particular, she said there have been numerous documents showing that special operations forces abused detainees, and yet Formica only reviewed a few cases.

Pentagon spokesman Lt. Col. Mark Ballesteros said, "We've undertaken significant steps to investigate, hold people accountable and change our operations as appropriate. This is all part of our effort to be transparent and show that we investigate all allegations thoroughly, and we take them seriously."

Less than a week ago, three detainees committed suicide at the Guantanamo Bay detention facility in Cuba, highlighting new accusations of abuse. A little more than two years ago, the Abu Ghraib prisoner abuse scandal in Iraq came to light with its graphic photographs of detainees being sexually humiliated and threatened with dogs.

The Bush administration has been criticized internationally, including by U.S. allies, for abusive treatment of terror war detainees. Late last year, Congress forced Bush to accept a ban on the cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment of prisoners by U.S. troops.

"Administration officials have said the U.S. does not use torture but rather legal interrogation techniques to gain information that could head off terror attacks."

Ordered more than two years ago, the Formica review recommended changes including better training, new standards for detention centers and updated policies for detainee operations. His final report is dated November 2004 but was just released to the ACLU in its unclassified, censored form on Friday.

According to a senior defense official, all eight of Formica's recommendations for changes and improvements in detention policies were implemented shortly after he completed the report. The official spoke on condition of anonymity because he was not authorized to speak publicly about it.

Formica reviewed three allegations of abuse by special operations forces who held detainees in temporary facilities, often hastily set up near where they were captured. Other conditions "did not comport with the spirit of the principles set forth in the Geneva Conventions," which require humane treatment of prisoners.

Formica said, for example, that the forces used five interrogation techniques that were allowed at one point but had been rescinded by then; sleep or food deprivation; yelling and loud music; forcing detainees to remain in stressful physical positions and changing environmental conditions — which could include making their locations too hot or too cold.

Formica also found that the nakedness "was unnecessary and inconsistent with the principles of dignity and respect" in the Geneva Conventions. And he said that while one of the prisoners fed just bread and water appeared to be in good condition, 17 days of that diet "is too long."

In his recommendations he said detainees should receive adequate bedding, food, water and holding areas, get systematic medical screenings and a clear record of their detention at every level. He dismissed other specific allegations of more serious abuse in several other cases. He said that the allegations of rape, sodomy and beatings were not substantiated by medical examinations and that the accusers' stories changed over time and were not credible.

Jacoby was dispatched in May 2004 to examine the treatment of detainees at facilities in Afghanistan. His report found "no systematic or widespread mistreatment of detainees," but concluded that the opportunities for mistreatment and the ever-changing battlefield there demanded changes in procedures.

He said that there was a "consistent lack of knowledge" regarding the capture, processing, detention and interrogation of detainees and that policies varied at facilities across the country. Jacoby also concluded that the lack of clear standards created opportunities for abuse and impeded efforts to gain timely intelligence and that interrogation standards were "inconsistent and unevenly applied."

To date, there have been about 600 investigations into detainee-related incidents of all kinds, including natural deaths and detainee assaults on other detainees, according to Army spokesman Paul Boyce. As a result, he said, 267 soldiers have received some type of punishment, including 85 courts-martial and 95 non-judicial actions.

Teacher fighting for job because of topless photos posted on Web site

By April Castro Associated Press writer

AUSTIN, Texas — Until they found the topless photos, Austin High School officials considered Tamara Hoover an excellent art teacher with a knack for helping students find their creativity.

Now, she's fighting for her job. The photos, which were posted on Flickr by her partner, depict Hoover in the shower, lifting weights, getting dressed, in bed and doing other routine activities.

Hoover said Friday the photos are art and makes no apologies.

"I'm an artist and I'm going to participate in the arts," Hoover said. "If that's not something they want me to do I want to be told that. I don't feel as if I was doing anything that was beyond expect-tations." The school district said the photos were inappropriate and violate the "higher moral standard" expected of public school teachers. As she was escorted out of class last month she was told she's become an ineffective teacher.

The district wants to revoke her teaching certification, which would keep her out of Texas classrooms permanently. Hoover will appeal the ruling and is prepared to take the case to court, she said.

Hoover's abrupt dismissal highlights a new concern for employees: Your boss has instant access to you.

"People don't realize when they put their entire diary out there, they're giving very private information to the public," said Kate Brooks, director of career services for liberal arts students at the University of Texas at Austin.

The photos came to light last month as a result of a feud over ceramics equipment with another art teacher, according to school affidavits. Students who had seen the pictures showed the teacher, who then notified school officials.

Austen Clements, one of Hoover's students, noted that many artists have nude pictures, including Georgia O'Keeffe. "If Georgia O'Keeffe wanted to teach at Austin High, I don't think they'd say, 'No, you have nude pictures online,'" Clements said.

Scientists discover largest ball of hot gas

By John Johnson Jr. Los Angeles Times

Scientists have discovered the largest ball of hot gas ever found, a monstrous sphere of fire streaking through a galaxy cluster millions of light-years away.

The size and velocity of this gas ball is truly fantastic, said physicist Alexis Finoguenov of the University of Maryland, Baltimore County. "This is likely a massive building block being delivered to one of the largest assembly of galaxies we know."

The gas ball, which was found using the European XMM-Newton X-ray space observatory, is 3 million light-years across — 5 billion times the size of our solar system. Images show it as a circular X-ray glow with a stumpy, comet-like tail.

The ball is moving through a galaxy cluster called Abell 2266, which contains hundreds of galaxies. The gas ball and other gas formations are thought to be held together by unseen dark matter that many scientists think makes up as much as 90 percent of the universe. Abell 2266 is part of the Horologium-Reticulum supercluster, one of the most massive accumulations of galaxies in the southern sky. It continues to grow, and the newly discovered gas ball feeds that growth.

The researchers, who announced the discovery Tuesday, estimate that material equal to the mass of four sun is being stripped away every hour.

Mark Henriksen, a physics professor at the Baltimore County campus and the co-author of a paper describing the findings in the June issue of The Astrophysical Journal, said that as the gas ball races through the cluster, individual galaxies tear portions of it away to seed future star growth.

Henriksen contrasted the gas ball to a giant comet streaking through the heavens. Their differences are temperature and composition: A comet is made of ice and dust, but the heat of the ball of gas is 100 million degrees, so hot it is invisible in optical light.

OPINION

Rep. Simpson's vote on wages deserves respect

CHEERS to Mike Simpson for braving away from Republicans in a minimum wage vote.

Simpson was one of seven Republicans on the powerful House Appropriations Committee who backed a measure boosting the federal minimum wage from $5.15 to $7.25 an hour.

Republicans are anxious about any effort to lift that wage and its affect on employers who will have to pay more on wages. That could create a drop in some jobs as a result.

But Simpson's risk may be attached to the fact that the minimum wage has been untouched since 1997, while inflation and $3-per-gallon gas prices are steadily out of whack. (And remember, congressional salaries have seen steady jumps in that time period, as well.)

"I just think it was the right thing to do," Simpson said. "As long as we've got a minimum wage, it ought to be a fair wage."

CHEERS to local businesses and Realtors for rising funding for this year's fireworks show.

Officials with the Twin Falls Association of Realtors, this year's $20,000 contribution for fireworks will exceed last year's $15,000 costs. A number of businesses went into action to make the show bigger, longer and better, including Bishop's RV Super Center, the OMI Water Treatment Plant, Blip Printers, Irwin Realty and D.L. Evans Printing.

But it's important for the public to keep contributing — as they should. The fireworks fund has grown more successful because organizers leave a certain amount in the bank for the following year. Citizens should also continue to contribute to the cause, long after the grand finale hits on this July 4.

JEERS to the U.S. Department of Interior, for keeping park accident information away from the public eye.

Interior Department policy has repeatedly taken on a new trend of late. When accidents or fatalities occur in the nation's parks, as was recently the case in Grand Teton

National Park two weeks ago, officials are not releasing any names with that news.

These are still public parks, mind you, preserved for use and understanding of the taxpayer. Yet unlike local law enforcement, the National Park Service reveals little if anything from tragic events.

Waiting until family or loved ones know about the death is certainly appropriate. But the public should know how certain fatalities are happening in our recreational areas. Tourists and travelers should know all the risks.

CHEERS to Twin Falls city street crews and engineers, for quickly removing rocks from Canyon Springs Road.

As Jazz in the Canyon festivities open today at Centennial Park, visitors that shuttle into the celebration will have an easy path. Crews acted quickly to clear last Friday's rock slide, but also discovered more loose rock above the road on the canyon rim.

Crews then went into action Wednesday to scrape off canyon rim rock that posed a threat to the road below. The final pieces of rubble were to be taken off the road on Friday, in time for today's activities.

CHEERS to Terry Patterson of Twin Falls, member of a four-man team cycling for a charitable cross-country race.

Patterson, 53, and his teammates will take turns riding in shifts on a 3,100-mile road race across America on behalf of Dreams for Kids, a charity focused on helping disabled children. The ultra marathon starts Sunday and will unfold against a continuous time clock. Each rider will go in varying lengths. Patterson's team will try to make the trek in eight days, requiring an average riding speed of 20 mph.

A team of 10 people will go along for the trip. While one person rides, the other three cyclists rest eat and take in fluids in the shuttle van.

Our flag and our freedom

BOB KERREY

With campaigns at full tilt and the Fourth of July just around the corner, the Senate's new priority is to create and vote on yet another resolution to amend our remarkable Constitution. This time it's an amendment that would allow Congress to prohibit a form of protest that a large majority of Americans do not like: the burning or desecration of the American flag. Since 1989, when the Supreme Court decided narrowly and correctly that these rare, unpleasant demonstrations are expressions of speech and therefore protected by the First Amendment, there have been many such attempts. Fortunately, all have failed.

Unfortunately, enthusiasm for this amendment appears to have grown even as flag-burning incidents have vanished as a means of political protest. The last time I saw an image of the U.S. flag being desecrated in this way was nearly 20 years ago, when the Senate passed its decision. Thus this amendment — never appropriate in the oldest democracy on Earth — has become even less necessary but necessity is not always the mother of legislation.

In defense of speech I do not like, I recall a ceremony I have come to love: a military funeral. The finest of all conducted at the Arlington National Cemetery. At graveside, the honor guard held the American flag while taps are played as a final farewell. The guards then fold the flag into a triangle and deliver it to the next of kin.

It is as if the flag becomes the lifeline. In the hands of a widow or mother it is much more than a symbol of the nation. At that moment the American flag is the sacred object that holds the sweet memory of a life given to a higher cause. Or so it seems to me each time I am witness to these hallowed events.

Our First Amendment is altered to permit laws to be passed prohibiting flag desecration would be like to see our police powers used to arrest an angry mother who burns a flag? Or a brother in arms whose disillusionment leads him to defile this symbol of the nation? I hope the answer is no. It is not a surprising enough to tolerate such rare and wrenching moments. I hope our desire for calm and quiet does not make it a crime for any to demonstrate in such a fashion. In truth, I know nothing about the spirit of our compatriots, some Americans might even choose to burn their flag in protest of such a law.

No doubt the sponsors and advocates of this amendment mean well. They believe it is a reasonable and small sacrifice of our freedoms. They believe no serious consequence will come of this change.

No doubt, too, some of the interesting in limiting free speech is a response to the Sept. 11 attacks. It was a remarkable moment, when the hearts of most of us filled with a kind of pure patriotism we had never felt before. It was a patriotism that bound liberty to equality and fraternity. It was a patriotism that brought us together, friend and stranger alike. We discovered heroes who inspired us. No longer did we say, "It's good to see you," and not mean it.

Most impressive to me was that the "we" included men and women of many nations, every religion and every ethnic group. "We" was global. The patriotism we felt extended beyond our boundaries and beyond the cramped spaces of ritual nationalistic fervor. We understood that the vulnerability of our freedom bound us together more than any symbol or slogan can. Millions of Americans, then and now, proudly flew their flags because they wanted to, not because any law told them to.

All the more reason, then, for patriotism to turn aside the understandable impulse to protect our flag by degrading the constitutional freedoms for which it stands. Real patriotism cannot be coerced. Our freedom of speech was attacked — not our flag. The former, not the latter, needs the protection of our Constitution and our laws.

Bob Kerrey, a former Democratic senator from Nebraska, is president of The New School, a university in New York.

'Movimiento' aims to take back America

Advocates of an open border between the U.S. and Mexico do their best to present a mellow American-flag-waving image to the public. But when they gather in semiprivate, they communicate much differently to each other. Perhaps they need to be even more careful.

In the big pro-immigration marches this spring, Hispanic activists sought to present themselves as "civil rights" advocates in the gentle and inclusive tradition of Rev. Martin Luther King Jr. Of course, some of the recent marchers went "off message," carrying Mexi-an flags and calling for "reconquista," but for the most part, the demonstrators were well-behaved.

But oftstage, as it were, a different and harsher truth comes out. It's not a "movement," they tell each other when cameras aren't watching, it's a "movimiento" — and that Spanish-language phrasing speaks volumes about the truth of pro-immigration activists.

How do I know this? On Tuesday, I attended a panel discussion titled "The New Immigrants Movement," part of a "Take Back America" conference convened in Washington, D.C., by the left-wing Campaign for America's Future. The event was open to anyone, although fewer than 100 people showed up. But to give you a favor of the meeting, here are the surnames of the people on the panel: Lovato, Salas, Contreras, Lopez, Ramirez and another Lopez. All Hispanic — and some quite angry.

Consider the words of Roberto Lovato, identified as a writer for New American Media, describing itself as "the country's first and largest national collaboration of ethnic news organizations." Speaking first, Lovato declared that he had problems with the words "civil rights." Why? In part because that phrase had been used by black Americans half a century ago — it was their term. But mostly, he continued, the term is inapt because today "a lot of the members of the movement were political revolutionaries in countries such as Nicaragua and El Salvador." And that's why, he concluded, "this is not just a civil rights movement — this is the northernmost expression of a continental rights movement." Got that? This is "the northernmost expression of a continental rights movement" led by "political revolutionaries" from Nicaragua and El Salvador. Could Lovato have gotten carried away? Could perhaps I have misquoted him? Fortunately for the sake of a verifiable record, Lovato made the same argument in an article, "Voices of a New Movimiento," in the June 19 issue of The Nation magazine. And how do I know about this piece? Because it was handed out to all attendees of the breakout session.

And on Page 11 of the article, Lovato writes the following, reinforcing his argument that immigration is a "quintessentially global issue." This on this global issue, he declares, "Reframing it as a 'new civil rights movement' risks erasing his roots in the Latin American struggles and history." Is that clear enough? Then, for good measure, Lovato's article cites the "radical" efforts of one

Miguel Ramirez, who left El Salvador in 1979 and now heads up Centro Hispano Cuicatlan in Queens. The transnational experience of Ramirez and others, "shows that the U.S. movimiento is ... the northernmost expression of a resurgent Latin American left." Is that what we want to let into the United States?

In fairness, no others on the panel were as vehement as Lovato. The U.S. movimiento took issue with his radicalism. More typical was Rudy Lopez, from the group Wellstone Action, based in St. Paul, Minn. "In spite of the makeup of the panel," Lopez told the audience, "this is not only a Latino movement."

But then he proceeded to discuss key electoral states, providing the robust Spanish pronunciation of California, Texas and "La Florida." This is a free country. Advocates for unlimited Hispanic immigration are free to advocate a radical, even revolutionary, worldview — indeed, they do the rest of us a favor when they do.

Because then we are free to oppose them.

Pelicans were always predators to fish
(Regarding "Fish thieves," Times-News, June 8)

Some years back, the Idaho Fish and Game article in the Times-News stated how great it is to see pelicans nesting in Idaho.

I tried off not one but two letters to the editor as to the evils of the dastardly pelican. No one took heed then, and that wasn't now.

Support for BASE jumping goes awry

I find it really strange that our governing bodies and our law enforcement are not trying to protect the BASE jumper from hurting or killing themselves. It is because they, as reported, are bringing in $50 per day per person for an average of three weeks?

We have laws requiring us to wear seat belts to protect us from injury whether we want that protection or not, and if you want to put your boat in the water at Centennial Park to watch the BASE jumpers from below, you had better have all the required equipment on the boat to keep you safe. If the sheriff's deputy is there to inspect your equipment and you don't have a whistle or a life jacket, he will not let you launch the boat. However, you may tie knots in the sleeves of your shirt and ropes to the shirt tails, jump off the bridge, regardless of what may happen. What's wrong with this economic picture?

Traffic dangers go up with cell phones

I am presently a traffic flagger in Twin Falls. That's the person with a paddle at road construction sites that says "stop" or "slow." I know the word "slow" means a lot of different things to different people, but that is not my concern today. Instead I want to alert good motorists to forego talking on their cell phones while on the road. You would not believe all the crazy and inattentive driving I see out there by people talking on their cell! When someone is speeding through our construction zone, it is invariably someone whose attention is divided between a conversation and the road. Cars who change lanes late, don't signal their intention (and scare me!) are often neglecting full attention by their casual talk on the phone. Many times I lament seeing that the errant driver is a young mother with children in the car who is busy chatting and driving with her precious load, endangering other friendly motorists, me, herself and her young family by talking on her cell phone.

These things ought not to be! Please save yourself an ugly accident by putting the cell phone down while on the road.

MEXICO'S PRESIDENTIAL ELECTION

Calderon hopes voters follow the pipes of PAN

By Sam Enriquez
Los Angeles Times

MEXICO CITY — Presidential candidate Felipe Calderon learned politics at the family dinner table. Mostly it was about how to lose.

His father had helped found the conservative National Action Party, and belonging to the PAN in those days meant losing elections, losing jobs and losing friends.

A kid taunted Calderon at school once and said that even if by a miracle his father ever won, Mexico's ruling party would never let him take office.

"I asked my dad, 'Is that true?' and he said it was," Calderon said. "So I asked him, 'Why are we doing this?' He said, 'We do it because no one else wants to do it, and if no one else does it, Mexico is never going to change.'"

Decades later, Mexicans were finally ready for change, catapulting the PAN and Vicente Fox to the presidency in 2000 and ending 71 years of single-party rule.

If his dad was a man ahead of his time, Calderon says he's almost exactly where he wants to be. The earnest, conservative PAN loyalist is in a neck-and-neck sprint to the July 2 presidential election with the brash leftist Andres Manuel Lopez Obrador.

Calderon doesn't generate the same passion as Lopez Obrador. Only a year ago, nobody outside Calderon's party even considered him a contender.

Since March, he's run an aggressive and expensive TV and radio campaign assailing Lopez Obrador as a dangerous radical. Calderon's weekly bus tours seem to reach any pueblo with a plaza big enough for his giant stage and megawatt sound system.

Calderon, 43, is a rudimentary guitar player who loves to sing. But a tin ear plagues his songs, as well as his speeches. He'll sometimes rush punch lines or interrupt spontaneous cheering with his next paragraph.

His studious manner, Friday-casual slacks and pressed shirts often clash with the inescapable vulgarity of campaigning. While tossing handfuls of cheap campaign hats out the window of his bus at a stop in Aquismón a town in the central state of San Luis Potosí, he turned well-bred Catholic schoolboy, waggling a finger at a man and ordering him to take only one.

Touting more tourism, he plays on local pride: "See this plaza?" he said at several stops. "This is the beauty of Mexico."

His campaign is steeped in the free-market principles of his father's party. His speech breaks down this way: Fox has averted economic crisis, so let's stay the course but do more — more jobs, more investment, more roads, universal health care, safer streets.

Calderon's core constituency includes a new Mexican middle class that has taken advantage of a stable peso and expanding credit to buy houses, cars and take vacations.

Under Fox, Mexico has for the first time since the 1970s escaped devaluations and other economic disasters. People feel safer about savings accounts and buying on credit. With NAFTA, supermarkets and big-box retailers offer a selection of U.S. goods.

Calderon campaign ads warn that Mexicans could lose what they've gained if they pick a leftist president. He promises what nearly everyone here wants: better jobs.

"That's what people need," Maribel Hernandez, an engineer at the hydroelectric plant in Tamazunchale, also in San Luis Potosí, said during a Calderon speech. "There's a lot of richness here that can't be enjoyed until you put people to work."

Calderon is trying to bridge the divide that splits Mexico between those in poverty and those who've escaped it. Part of the reason is campaign arithmetic: He needs votes from the poor.

The other reason, he says, comes from his father.

Luis Calderon believed that helping people was the first duty of God-fearing people, the candidate said, and the best way was to steer Mexico toward democracy. That became the family's mission and routine in their hometown of Morelia in Michoacan state. After clearing the dinner table, which doubled as campaign headquarters, Felipe and his five older brothers went door to door for their dad.

General completes Haditha cover-up report

Los Angeles Times

WASHINGTON — The general charged with investigating whether Marines tried to cover up the killing of 24 civilians in Haditha has completed his report, military officials announced Friday.

The report, meant to determine if there was a failure in the chain of command that allowed the deaths to go unexamined for months, will be reviewed by Lt. Gen. Peter Chiarelli, who oversees day-to-day military operations in Iraq. In the official announcement made by the report, Maj. Gen. Eldon Bargerwell, a military spokesman, said that Chiarelli faced no timetable, but would "thoroughly review the voluminous report, as quickly as possible."

"That means don't hold your breath," a defense official said.

Military officials on Friday also released new details about the deaths of three other Iraqi civilians in American custody in May in southern Salahuddin province.

Williams hopes long road of recovery ends with NBA return

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Jay Williams remembers the freedom and the rush he felt taking his red-and-black Yamaha R6 on the open road, darting through traffic like he was leading a fast break, without a care and without a helmet.

Jay Williams brings the ball up past Boston Celtics forward Paul Pierce during their first regular-season NBA game with the Chicago Bulls on Oct. 30, 2002.

And without thinking of the worst-case consequences. It was the same indelible feeling Ben Roethlisberger likely felt when he defied the Pittsburgh Steelers' wishes that he not ride his motorcycle, or at least wear a helmet if he did.

Chicago Bulls. Williams hopes his long road to recovery will end with his return to the NBA this season. It's been working out with a handful of teams, including the Philadelphia 76ers on Friday, to show he's healthy and capable of handling the rigors of a grueling season.

THE VALLEYBuhl seeks bucks for centennial bang

BUHL — The city of Buhl is celebrating its centennial this year, but lacks the money to do it with a bang.

The city can't afford the estimated $5,000 for a fireworks show July 4.

The Buhl Chamber of Commerce is trying to raise the money and has installed donation buckets at area businesses.

Donations also can be mailed to the Buhl Chamber of Commerce, 716 Highway 30 East, Buhl, Idaho 83316. For more information or to help underwrite the event, call the chamber at 543-6682.

Senior center raising money for new oven

HAGERMAN — A luncheon and fashion show hosted by the Hagerman Valley Senior and Community Center will be held from 11:30 a.m. to 2 p.m. June 24 at the center, 140 E. Lake St.

The affair will feature a wine bar, lunch, musical entertainment, a silent auction and a fashion show by Black Rock Clothiers. Fashions will be modeled by local women, and guitar music will be played by Gene Loranger. Items donated for the auction will be artistic, exceptional and unusual.

Cost is $15 per person, with all proceeds going toward the purchase of a new oven for the center's kitchen. A limited number of tickets is available. Call Mary Valentine at 837-6120 to get a ticket.

Glanbia seeks renewal of wastewater permit

TWIN FALLS — The Idaho Department of Environmental Quality is seeking public comment on a draft permit renewal for Glanbia Foods Inc. to continue operating a wastewater re-use system at its facility in Richfield.

The draft permit specifies site-specific loading rate limits and monitoring requirements designed to protect public health and water quality.

A public meeting on the draft permit will be held at 7 p.m. June 27 at the Senior Citizens Center, 130 S. Main in Richfield. Written comments on the draft permit will be accepted through 5 p.m. Mountain Daylight Time on Wednesday, July 12, 2006.

Copies of the draft permit are available for public review at the DEQ's state and Twin Falls regional offices and on the DEQ's Web site in PDF format at www.idaho.gov/public/comment.cfm.

Questions, comments and requests may be directed to David Anderson, DEQ Twin Falls Regional Office, 1363 Fillmore St., Twin Falls, ID 83301; phone 736-2190, or by e-mail at david.anderson@deq.idaho.gov.

Company to explore
Carey mining potential

KETCHUM — WEXCO Inc. has filed a Notice of Intent to conduct exploratory drilling on its unpatented mining claims located in Garfield County, a tributary of Copper Creek. Copper Creek is located in Blaine County approximately 10 miles north of Carey.

WEXCO plans to drill two or three exploratory holes and analyze cores for precious and base metal content.

The proposed operating period would begin summer/fall 2006 and end summer/fall 2007, subject to weather and availability of the drill. Previous exploratory drilling at this location was conducted in 1987.

Copies of the proposed Notice of Intent may be obtained by contacting the Ketchum Ranger District office on Sun Valley Road in Ketchum, or by calling 208-622-5371.

Written comments on the proposal are requested and need to be sent to Ketchum Ranger District, PO Box 2356, Ketchum, ID 83340. Attn: Mike O'Farrell.

State starts high school redesign over

By Joshua Palmer
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — It was an all-or-nothing battle between the State Board of Education and state lawmakers.

And, in this case, education got nothing.

The Idaho State Board of Education decided to temporarily withdraw a rule that would have required high schools to hire additional math and science teachers.

The rule was the last surviving part of the proposed Idaho High School Redesign. The redesign was supported by the state House of Representatives at this year's session, but the Senate denied funding most parts of it.

School districts held their breath when the State Board discussed continuing the rule to increase the number of math and science teachers.

Many superintendents thought the rule would become yet another unfunded mandate.

"We made a promise to the schools that if the funding wasn't there, then we wouldn't push the rule," said Laird Stone, State Board president. "If we wouldn't have done that, (schools) would have had to hire those additional teachers without the means to do so."

Last year, the State Board and Gov. Dirk Kempthorne pushed for high school reform. The Idaho High School Redesign proposed to increase required credit hours in math and science, as well as more qualified teachers in those areas.

Idaho's high school graduation requirements are some of the lowest in the nation. Currently, Idaho only requires a minimum .75 grade-point average and a passing score on the Idaho Standards

Achievement Tests (ISAT).

"Even if you look at what other states are doing, you will see that they are increasing the rigor in math and science," said Lucie Willis, communications officer for the State Board. "It's definitely a big area of concern."

Stone said the board will — once again — begin designing a proposal for high school reform.

Head brewer Eric Buehner stands by the copper 'brew house' that can store up to 220 gallons of beer for Trail Creek Pub in Twin Falls and Ketchum.

Almost last call for Trail Creek alcohol

By Candace Baltz-Smylie
Times-News correspondent

TWIN FALLS — The Trail Creek Brew Pub is closing the pub but keeping the brew.

The restaurant closed last night after nine months serving award winning beers in Olde Town Twin Falls. Trail Creek Brewery will continue to operate a pub in Sun Valley, and is looking for a distributor to market the locally-made beer around the Magic Valley.

Currently it's on tap across the street from the brewery at Woody's Bar and Grill.

Operators decided to close the pub about two weeks ago after several attempts at increasing business.

"We don't get the support the beer needs to really make a business like this work," said Brewmaster Eric Buehner. "We do thank our loyal beer drinkers, but we just didn't have enough of them."

Buehner and the Trail Creek Brewery were honored with a gold medal for their amber ale and a silver medal for their dunkel (dark) beer at the most recent North American Brewers Association competition. Even though the pub is locking the doors, the brewing will continue.

"We'll keep using the brewery in Twin Falls and we may lease the rest of the space while still brewing or sell the building; we haven't decided," said Buehner. "It could be a lot better, but we're hanging in there."

Buehner's business neighbor, Woody's owner Dave Woodhead, is disappointed with the pub's closure.

"It's a shame, it really is, because Eric makes great beer," said Woodhead. "The building is awesome, the venue is terrific, it's a shame they couldn't make it work."

Commerce President and CEO

Shawn Barigar said even though the pub's closure is the latest in a string of business closures in the Olde Town area, it is not a reflection of the location's potential.

"I think that's disappointing. I think Trail Creek and so many of the other businesses provide unique services and products to the community. It's really unfortunate," Barigar said. "They face so many challenges as all businesses do, but I think there are a ton of opportunities there as well...it is a bad location? No, it's a different location."

But last night wasn't the Magic Valley's last chance to sample the local beer. Buehner and others from the brewery will be at the Twin Falls Jazz In The Canyon today serving their ale. And then it's back to work, though without the direct contact with their customers.

"We'll be ready to brew tomorrow," said Buehner. "And we will continue doing that."

Rupert man charged with arson, assaultBy Renee Wells
For the Times-News

RUPEET — A Rupert woman is trying to pick up the pieces of her life after her estranged husband, Nester Gebhardt, 37, of Rupert, has been charged with aggravated assault and arson.

Debby Gebhardt called police at 2:24 a.m. Thursday to report her husband had come home drunk and threatened her with a knife, according to a Minidoka County Sheriff's Department report. When he stepped out of the home, Debby gathered all her children in one bedroom and escaped with them through the window.

Officers responded to the couple's home after Debby filed the report, but did not find Nester at the home, the report said. Two hours later, the Gebhardts' next-door neighbor called dispatch to report that Nester had returned to the home and was standing at one corner of the home with a gas can, trying to light the frame on fire. By the time officers arrived, they found Nester standing in the backyard and the neighbor who had reported the fire trying to extinguish it with a garden hose.

The fire department was called, but the home was engulfed in flames by the time they arrived. The home was nearly gutted by the fire, East End Fire Chief Terry Tracy said. He estimated the damage on the home alone to be $85,000 to $90,000.

Nester Gebhardt has been arraigned in Minidoka Magistrate Court, charged with one count of first degree arson and one count of aggravated assault. His bond was set at $100,000. Halverson said.

Wendell Fire Department
awarded grant Hydraulic rescue equipment, training will be a few monthsBy Blair Koch
Times-News correspondent

WENDELL — About $15,000 in rescue equipment has been awarded to the Wendell Fire Department.

The hydraulic equipment is used primarily to cut and pry open wrecked cars so victims can be rescued.

"I'm guessing that it is worth about $15,000," said fire Chief Bob Bailey.

"We should be getting the hydraulic rescue equipment in the next few months."

It is applied in January for the equipment through the Commercial District Assistance Program Grant from the Department of Homeland Security.

The grant also includes money for training.

"It is intended for use in collapsed buildings and wrecked cars," Bailey said. "We are really excited about getting the grant and being able to serve the community better."

In other council news, police Chief Dave Fisher reported the resignation of two officers, Lt. Curtis Gaston and Officer Colin Ruddle.

"We have been short-handed for some time and these resignations will just be a continuation of that," Fisher said.

Quilting team prepares quilt to raise money for Filer Centennial celebration

By John E. Swartz
Times-News correspondent

FILER — Filer area residents Debra Loughmiller and Sharon Myers credit their grandmother with introducing them to a skill they have been practicing for 40 years: quilt-making.

"She instilled us with a love for the warmth and association that happens with a project like this, Loughmiller said.

Last year these two sisters, and 14 other women from the Eller Idaho Stake Relief Society of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, were approached with an opportunity to make the quilt.

The quilt, which measures approximately 80 inches by 90 inches, is a red, white and blue Americana design with the slogan: "Filer Centennial 100 Years of Memories. The quilt, on display at the U.S. Bank in Filer, will be raffled at 4 p.m. June 24 at the fairgrounds.

Tickets are available at the bank for $1 each or for $5.

Sagittarius: Be upfront about mistakes

IF JUNE 17 IS YOUR BIRTHDAY, this year may be one in which there is a spike in your ambition. By becoming engrossed in a consuming interest or looking up with a new partner who challenges you to perform at peak level, you can make huge progress. Do not neglect other matters that are just as important - and don't burn any bridges. Because you will not let anything stand in your way, you can be successful at anything you attempt, especially during the period between October and January. In November something fortunate could land in your lap or you could start something of importance that brings you enduring prosperity or peace.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Break out the picnic basket. Ignore unfair competition and party annoyances. Take some time to relax in peaceful surroundings with congenial company. You may too busy to party next week.

Taurus (April 20-May 20): Stick to your guns. Those who stand for nothing might fall for anything. Confrontations may occur over key issues but you can salvage your dignity and maintain the peace by playing it cool.

money rather than spending it. SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Adversity reveals character. It isn't how you deal with the easy things of life, but how you handle the tough things that counts. Don't purchase anything on credit or take on more responsibility.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Excuses won't hold water. Don't make your mantra "could have, should have, would have." Face up to responsibilities and be totally upfront about your errors and mistakes.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Be a complete pro. The definition of a professional is someone who does his or her best when he or she doesn't particularly feel like it. You will be happiest if you go the extra mile.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): It is impossible to live happily in the past. Focus your mind on the future and don't dwell on misfortunes or opposition. This isn't a good time to pursue the latest romantic fantasy.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Focus on reaching an admirable destination instead of avoiding what you fear. Try to be as cooperative as possible with those in your immediate circle. Don't take on long-term obligations.

Suspected bank robber caught in cowboy clothes

FORT WORTH, Texas — A suspected bank robber stopped at a nearby Western store after the heist to escape in new cowboy clothes, police said.

New Zealand and Ireland last weekend before being escorted aboard by security guards.

When her case was called in the Hamilton Magistrate's Court on Friday, Lewis was convicted of disorderly behavior and fined $206.

"I'm happy, eh. I thought it was going to be a lot more," she told National Radio, adding "if I was in court I would have jumped up and given the judge a hug."

A man in a baseball cap and polo shirt held up a downtown bank Tuesday, asking a teller for a deposit slip and returning with a note demanding money and threatening to use a concealed weapon.

Lewis said she "couldn't believe the judge was so forgiving."

Earlier this week, Lewis began an online auction of the bikini to help pay the fine, and just hours before it was due to close, Friday, the price of the garment had reached $2,496.

After walking out with an undisclosed amount of money, he stopped at a nearby Western store to buy new Western-style shirt and cowboy hat and put them on, police said.

"I'm just blown away" by the support from "people who don't even know me and can be so forgiving about my past," the former stripper told National Radio.

He then boarded a bus heading south, witnesses told police, who were still searching for the suspect.

Students can seek jobs at conference

SUN VALLEY — Idaho college students at TechLaunch 3.0 can create virtual employment speeches, visit a career assistance centers and learn about Idaho employers. The career-assistance program will be held June 28-29 in Sun Valley.

The first day of the event will focus on student careers and a market-research assessment competition. Students will be coached on how to create a virtual employment speech for digital distribution and receive resume development assistance. Student teams from Idaho universities will also present their plans to commercialize innovations that have come from the Idaho National Laboratory.

Early stage entrepreneurs will present their business plans before a panel of judges on the second day. These competitive presentations will focus on attracting angel and venture capital.

TechLaunch is presented by Idaho TechConnect, a statewide organization that helps entrepreneurs connect to resources to start and expand businesses.

Some TechLaunch scholarships are available to students. Contact Sari David at (208) 684-4397 for eligibility. For information, or to register, go to www.ieda.biz.

Ambassador from Mongolia to visit

BOISE — Mongolia's ambassador to the United States will arrive in Idaho on Sunday to continue economic and humanitarian missions between the two governments.

Ambassador Raydan Bold is scheduled to meet with Gov. James E. Risch and officials with Idaho Commerce & Labor and the Idaho Department of Agriculture on Monday and Tuesday to discuss trade opportunities and other areas of possible cooperation.

Bold will also meet with representatives from state and Boise art and history organizations to discuss highlighting Mongolian art and culture and with business development and higher education leaders.

The relationship between Mongolia and Idaho began in 2002 when children from Preston schools and several Preston families donated 100 handmade quilts to the northern Asia country.

Mongolia, somewhat smaller than the state of Alaska, sits between China and Russia and is home to 2.8 million people.

RUPERT — A panel of community and state leaders, including Gov. Jim Risch, will meet at 5:30 p.m. Tuesday at the Rupert Civic Gymnasium with Kraft employees and their families.

The meeting's purpose is to help with the transition and closure of the Kraft plant in Rupert, organizers said Friday.

Kraft announced in May that it will close its Rupert plant in January and consolidate production into other facilities that make similar products. The Rupert plant, which employs about 140 people, makes cream cheese and string cheese. Production from Rupert will move to plants in Missouri, New York and Wisconsin, Kraft officials said.

The company will offer separation benefits to the Rupert employees, including severance pay based on years of service, company-paid medical benefits for six months following each employee's last day of work and outplacement assistance. Kraft plans to sell the facility once production has ended. The Rupert plant opened in 1935. Cream cheese production began there in 1967 and string cheese production began in 2004.

"Our plans are not a reflection on our employees in Rupert," Tom Hedge, vice president of manufacturing for Kraft's cheese, dairy and food-service sector, said in a statement. "This is a strategic decision having nothing to do with their performance."

In addition to assistance from the company, panelists at Tuesday's meeting will discuss the community, state, regional and other resources being tapped to help with the transition and closure of the plant.

Risch will be joined on the panel by Sen. Dean Cameron, R-Rupert; Jerry Beck, College of Southern Idaho president; Brent Tolman, Minl-Cassia Idaho Commerce & Labor manager; Jan Rogers, Southern Idaho Economic Development director; Rupert Mayor Audrey Newerth; and Robert Christensen, Rupert City Council chairman.

Gates leaves others ready for center stage

By Yuki Noguchi
The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — Microsoft Corp. will gradually lose the day-to-day participation of its longtime iconic leader, Bill Gates, but the company should make the transition "without missing a beat," he said Thursday, as he begins to focus more on his charity work and the company continues to battle its software rivals.

"The world has had a tendency to focus a disproportionate amount of attention on me," said Gates, who over the next two years will move to concentration on the operations of his philanthropic organization, the Bill & Melinda Gates Foundation. "In reality, Microsoft has always had an unbelievable depth and breadth of technical talent," he said.

A Harvard University dropout who co-founded the company three decades ago, led it to prominence and became the world's richest man. Gates Thursday urged the public to recognize that his departure will refocus attention on other people at Microsoft, including those who will fill his shoes.

Microsoft's chief technical officer, Ray Ozzie, 50, will take over Gates' role as chief software architect, while Craig Mundie, Microsoft's chief technical officer for strategies and policies, will assume Gates' research and strategic initiatives. Ozzie, who founded International Business Machines Corp.'s Lotus Notes Inc., joined Microsoft through the acquisition of the office software company Groove Net-works Inc. in 2005. Mundie is a 14-year veteran of Microsoft.

Steven Ballmer, a Harvard classmate who took over as chief executive from Gates in 2000, will remain in that role, and Gates himself will remain chairman of the company and will continue to act as "counselor" for the company.

"We've all grown up in his shadow," Mundie said in an interview. "Bill has left a pretty indelible mark on the company."

Shares of Microsoft rose 19 cents to close at $22.07 before the announcement, which was made after the close of financial markets. In after-hours trading, shares had fallen 12 cents, as of 8 p.m. Gates is the largest single shareholder, with nearly 10 percent of the company's outstanding common stock.

William H. Gates III, the son of a prominent Seattle lawyer, dropped out of college in his junior year and founded Microsoft in 1975 with his childhood friend Paul Allen, now the owner of professional football's Seattle Seahawks. Of the two, Gates' workish devotion to trade journals and his high-stakes risk-taking style was credited with the company's steady growth.

The company's software, the MS-DOS system, was introduced in 1981 on International Business Machines Corp. personal computers. Microsoft later vanquished its software rivals, gaining a reputation for its fierce competitiveness.

Microsoft's operating systems still dominates personal and office computing, with about more than 95 percent of computers relying on Microsoft programs for word processing, e-mail, Web browsing and PowerPoint presentations, among others.

The Redmond, Wash., company Gates is leaving behind is locked in an intensifying rivalry with companies like Google Inc., Yahoo Inc., Mozilla, AOL and other software companies, many of which are making money by selling online advertisements.

The key battle for Microsoft, which in 2000 lost an antitrust case brought by the Justice Department, is to maintain the attention of customers. Microsoft was once the primary gateway for all computing — it controlled nearly all operating systems and the vast majority of Internet browsers. But its rivals have made big inroads into both, drawing in customers by offering free software.

Shareholders approve Lexar-Micron merger

By May Wong Associated Press writer

SAN JOSE, Calif. — A majority of Lexar Media Inc. shareholders on Friday approved the flash memory card maker's acquisition by Micron Technology Inc. in a sweetened, all-stock deal valued at about $801 million.

The approval clears the way for a merger that could strengthen memory-chip maker Micron, as it gains Lexar's consumer products business and patent portfolio.

Investors representing more than 50 percent of Lexar shares

OK'd the deal, Lexar spokesman Michael Scarpelli said. The outcome will likely stay the same after a certification process, he said.

Flash memory is the storage component commonly found in digital cameras, music players, keychain storage devices and a variety of other electronics. Industry sales worldwide are expected to reach $13.5 billion this year, up from $10.6 billion in 2005.

With the acquisition, Micron will be able to offer a more complete package of flash products, said spokesman Daniel Francisco.

"Together with our NAND designs, technology, manufacturing capability and distribution channels, Micron is a flash storage solution to serve the flash storage requirements of the consumer electronics and enterprise segments," he said.

Boise, Idaho-based Micron, the world's fifth-largest flash memory maker in 2005 according to market researcher IDC, also teamed up last year with chip maker Intel Corp. in a joint venture to better compete in the fast-growing NAND flash memory market.

Under the Micron-Lexar deal, Lexar shareholders will trade each of their shares for 592.5 shares of Micron stock. Micron's initial bid in March was 5.3 percent lower at an exchange rate of 562.25.

Some shareholders, including billionaire investor Carl Icahn, who owns about 6 percent of Micron, had opposed the earlier offer saying it was insufficient. Their opposition, which included a failed attempt at a court order to block a June 2 shareholder vote, prompted Micron to sweeten the proposal at the last moment and postpone the vote for two weeks.

It was unclear Friday if the deal will be changed, but Icahn did not return a call for comment.

Micron, whose board supported the acquisition, needed the majority vote by Lexar investors to make it happen. The merger, which does not require Micron shareholder approval, is expected to close as soon as possible, Lexar said. "The final value of the deal will be set at that time."

"We are extremely pleased with the outcome of today's vote," said Eric Stang, Lexar's chairman, chief executive officer and president. "We believe that our merger with Micron is the best option for our stockholders, our employees and the future of Lexar."

Fremont, Calif.-based Lexar has struggled to make money amid tough competition and steep prices. The company does not make the silicon wafers that form the basis for NAND flash memory and has relied on subcontractors, including competitors, to supply the guts for many of its products.

Shares of Micron gained 31 cents, or almost 2 percent, to close at $16.35 on the New York Stock Exchange.

Google launches federal government search site

By Kim Hart The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — The ever-expanding Google Inc. is making its move on the federal government.

On Thursday, the company announced a new online product aimed at being a one-stop shop for searching federal government Web sites. The launch of Google U.S. Government Search, usgov.google.com, targets federal employees who often need to search across several government agencies.

The site is also designed to help citizens navigate convoluted pages of government-speak and tailors news feeds to their interests. Users can customize the layout of their page to remain updated on government-related news from official and commercial sources, including the White House, Department of Defense, Washington Post and CNN. Google is also working with agencies to increase the frequency of news updates to keep content current.

"People are moving away from directory access to enter these sites," said Kevin Gough, product manager for Google U.S. Government Search. "They just want to type in a few words to pinpoint the information they need."

The product is an outgrowth of the company's flagship site, which has the largest share of the U.S. search market — 50 percent in April, according to Nielsen-NielsenNetRating. Gough said, so Web

The government search site joins similar engines that target the same audience. The five-year-old FirstGov.gov, a government-sponsored site powered by Microsoft Corp.'s MSN, is geared to help citizens locate federal, state and local information without sifting through individual agency measures customer satisfaction of Internet sites. The new site could drive traffic away from other government-related search engines that buy ads on Google's main search engine, he said.

"Google drives a fair amount of traffic to those sites," he said. Now that Google has its own portal that serves the same purpose, "it could potentially be creating competition for their customers."

Many government employees access documents and information through agencies' intranets, or interface Web sites, and through e-mail.

Said Stephanie Zaiser, communications director for the National Association of Government Employees: "But they may switch to the new engine if it is easier to use, she said. Zaiser expects federal employees to use the Google site because of the company's "ubiquitous presence" in the search-engine market.

More than 87 million unique visitors used Google's search engine in May, compared with 443,000 that searched FirstGov, according to Nielsen-NetRating.

In recent years, Google has launched several specialized search engines to help users narrow their results. In addition to heavily used sites geared specifically for news, directions and education, it has searched the contents of scholarly journals, books and blogs. On Wednesday, Google Book Search launched a Web site geared toward searching Shakespearean plays.

Stocks fall slightly after two days of dramatic gains

By Eben Simon Associated Press writer

NEW YORK — Stocks fell slightly Friday at the end of a week of zigzag trading that saw a steep slide followed by a dramatic rebound. The major indexes finished the week mixed, with large caps seeing gains and small caps slipping.

Traders paused after a two-session rally amid weeks of selling that had erased the gains in the major indexes for the year. The Dow Jones Industrial average gained 110 points Wednesday and nearly 200 points Thursday. It was the index's best two-day run since April 2005.

"The mentality of the market is one in which investors are looking to sell into strength," said Mike Malone, trading analyst, Cowi & Co. "You're seeing a little bit of profit taking today coming off yesterday's move up."

The day's economic data was robust. The deficit in the broadest measure of foreign trade showed an unexpectedly large improvement during the first three months of this year, but soaring global oil prices are expected to limit such gains.

Inflation-wary traders chose to hang on Thursday's comments by Federal Reserve Chairman Ben Bernanke that record energy and commodity prices could account for some of the recent uptick in core prices but that inflation expectations have remained within historical ranges.

The Dow Jones Industrial average lost 0.64 points, or 0.01 percent, to 11,044.55. The Dow had jumped 198.27 points Thursday. Other stock indicators also slumped. The Standard & Poor's 500 index dropped 4.62, or 0.37 percent, to 1,251.54, and the Nasdaq composite index fell 14.20, or 0.66 percent, to 2,129.95.

Declining issues led advances by nearly 2 to 1 on the New York Stock Exchange. Bonds were lower, with the yield on the 10-year Treasury note rising to 5.15 percent from 5.10 percent late Thursday. Bonds have fallen hard this week, sending yields sharply higher. The yield on 10-year Treasury notes Monday was 4.98 percent. The U.S. dollar was up against other major currencies. Gold prices were higher. Crude oil futures fell a barrel of light crude settled at $69.88, up 38 cents, in trading on the New York Mercantile Exchange. After two days of steep losses, the market's recovery Wednesday and Thursday helped the major indexes recover somewhat, and gave hope to investors looking for an end to Wall Street's month-long slide. The week's Dow gained 1.13 percent, while the S&P 500 was up 0.05 percent and the Nasdaq lost 0.24 percent.

The question for investors now is whether the late rally's gains are sustainable. "Nothing has happened from the fundamental perspective to change the basic facts that have haunted the market since May," said Robert Koestler, chief portfolio manager at Barclays Global Investments in San Francisco. "Inflation is accelerating, there's tighter monetary policy not just here but internationally and this is going to cause investors to sell riskier assets."

In corporate news, the Home Depot Inc. fell 46 cents to $36.91 after it found about $10 million in unrecorded stock option expense. Home Depot, the nation's largest home improvement store chain said the amount is not material and it does not plan to restate any of the past year's financial results. Oracle Corp. jumped 49 cents to $14.19 after the business software maker said it would beat analyst expectations with a better-than-expected fourth-quarter profit. Oracle made the announcement after the close of trading Thursday.

Lower second-quarter earnings from Carnival Corp., the world's largest cruise operator, still has analysts' estimates and company projections and the stock rose $2.02 to $40.15. The company also reaffirmed its full-year forecast. Adobe Systems Inc. rose 16 cents to $25.12 despite a weak earnings report. Analysts estimated Oppenheimer upgraded the software company's shares to "buy" from "neutral."

Final consolidated volume on the New York Stock Exchange was 2.99 billion shares, up from 2.99 billion the previous session.

All this fuss over a simple 'y' chromosome

There is playful discussion in the extended Walker family these days on the subject of fatherhood.

This is not a metaphysical discussion. We are not pondering the various roles, relationships and responsibilities of fathers. Nor are we considering the theological implications of fatherhood as a way of understanding God and his divine interactions with his children.

No, the discussion is purely physical, and not especially godly. It's about, for lack of a better word, manhood.

And all of the folly that word implies.

The conversation started when Cousin Daniel started boasting in the family newsletter about how "manly" he must be because his sweet (and extraordinarily patient) wife Stephanie is expecting their fourth child — and fourth son. Said Daniel: "Some of us are cursed with masculinity to the point that we are incapable of producing female offspring."

JOSEPH WALKER

This was unsettling to Cousin Jeff, who, with the considerable help of his wife, Karen, has sired five sons. "Before the younger members of the family pound their own chests with such verbiage, I would ask that they remember those who truly merit such a claim," wrote Jeff, who went on to "humbly cite himself as an example of the truly worthy, along with brother Bob, Cousin Ron and Uncle Sandy, all of whom are fathers to twin sons."

"To produce two sons at once," Bob has said often, "surely this is the ultimate manifestation of manhood, plethorically speaking" (don't bother looking up the word "plethorically." You won't find it in your dictionary. It's a word Bob has coined to mean — well, just about anything he wants it to mean. And in this case it has something to do with manhood and the reproduction thereof — or something like that).

None of which was intended to infer that having sons is somehow better than having daughters. Just that it is somehow more — you know — manly.

The very idea of which my son, Joe, found to be positively Neanderthal.

"Men are, by their very nature, simple creatures — physically, emotionally," Joe said. "For a man to participate in the creation of another man is little more than going to the genetic copy machine. You're re-making yourself. Big deal. It's like tracing a copy of the Mona Lisa and calling it art. How much more amazing is it if a male participates in the creation of something completely different than himself and infinitely more complex a female."

Yes, you should probably be aware that Joe's wife, Jen, is due to give birth to their third child — and third daughter — at any moment.

For myself, I happen to think there is much to be said for those who have the genetic dexterity to create both male and female offspring.

I mentioned this to my wife, Anita, who suggested that I could take full credit for the creation of the Mona Lisa and calling it art. Three girls and two boys, thank you very much — as soon as I could remind her of exactly where in my body I had carried the babies during my respective pregnancies.

And where they had — you know — come out.

Of course, all of this angst over the placement of a single, simple "y" chromosome has little to do with manhood one way or the other. Nor does it have anything to do with fatherhood, when it comes right down to it. For fatherhood isn't about biology or chemistry or physiology or even genetics. Fatherhood is about love, pure and simple. Loving enough to teach. Loving enough to play. Loving enough to care. Loving enough to just be there. Plethorically speaking, or otherwise.

For the first time, two Catholics face off for Idaho's governorship

Butch Otter waves to supporters during the Fourth of July parade in Boise last year. If I don't see that the (Catholic) church's feelings on abortion is in conflict with the state of Idaho's, Otter says.

Jerry Brady campaigns in Twin Falls during his unsuccessful bid for governor in 2002. When fellow Catholic John Kennedy ran for president in 1960 'people were afraid the pope would be running the country,' he says. 'I just laughed. I knew about the lack of control that Rome had over the civil decisions of government.'

BOISE — They're both divorced, church-going Roman Catholics who say their faith helps shape their public lives. But Republican C.L. "Butch" Otter and Democrat Jerry Brady insist there will be no divided loyalties when it comes to running the state.

That's one reason why religion hasn't been a factor in what is probably the first Catholic-vs.-Catholic matchup for governor in Idaho's history.

"What's most interesting to me now that I think about it, is that I haven't even heard anyone discuss this," said Boise State University political science professor James Weatherly. "I suspect it will be a non-factor."

Both Otter and Brady were Catholic-school educated, and both say they attend Mass every Sunday. It's probably a safe bet that in Idaho's 116-year history, it's the first time voters will be choosing between two Catholics for their governor, says longtime political analyst Randy Stapilus.

Only 11 percent of Idaho's population is Catholic, according to the Web site of the Idaho Catholic Diocese. Still, Catholics comprise the second-largest religious affiliation in Idaho. Mormons — the state's largest religious group — account for roughly one-third of Idahoans who profess religious belief, according to the Web site Adherents.com.

In 1978, two Mormons ran for governor. Democratic Gov. John Evans, originally from Malad, defeated Allen Larsen of Blackfoot. Weatherly is fairly sure that's the only other time two gubernatorial candidates were of the same religion.

Stapilus says Larsen played up his religious roots to eastern Idaho voters, and in the end it probably cost him. There's not a hint so far of some similar happening this year, Weatherly and Stapilus agree.

Otter, a Boise native who was born into a Catholic family with nine children, speaks in detail about what's happened in the Catholic Church during the past half century.

"Fundamentally there were some very obvious changes, but philosophically the changes have been more subliminal," he said. It has been all about making the church more accessible, he explains.

Brady is equally versed in Catholic dogma and history. His own faith makes it easy for him to recall fellow Catholic John F. Kennedy's race for the presidency in 1960.

"I was the Catholic university (Notre Dame)," Brady said. "People were afraid the pope would be running the country. I just laughed. I knew about the lack of control that Rome had over the civil decisions of government."

About Butch Otter

About Jerry Brady

The issues that Idaho voters tune into these days, Weatherly says, are cultural questions such as abortion and the death penalty.

That could be a problem for the two candidates, given that the Catholic Church's official positions on abortion and the death penalty are often portrayed as fairly black and white. But both Otter and Brady say they can follow church teaching and administer state law with a clear conscience.

"I don't see that the church's feelings on abortion is in conflict with the state of Idaho's," Otter said recently from his Washington D.C. office, where he is serving out his third term representing Idaho's 1st Congressional District.

"I was in the state Legislature when Roe vs. Wade came down," Otter said. He explained he always voted for any protections that the state could provide for the fetus, given the U.S. Supreme Court's landmark 1973 ruling.

But he supports a point of view within the church on abortion that has become more understanding. Whereas once Catholics were taught there was never any occasion for condoning abortion, these days there are some church leaders who counsel the mother's health does matter when considering an abortion, Otter says.

'Captain Noah' brings musical message to Roper stage

Times-News

TWIN FALLS — Jim Montanus invites you to take a musical stroll through the book of Genesis.

"It is the goal of the cast and crew of 'Captain Noah's Travelling Zoo' to help others experience the life-changing realization of God's love and forgiveness through our musical presentation," Montanus said.

Montanus is the creator and director of "Captain Noah," which is in the first weekend of a two-weekend run at Roper Auditorium. It's a musical play about the events leading up to the great flood.

Noah's grandfather Methuselah (played by Tad Crothers) is the protagonist. And a cast of other characters, some from the Bible, some not, offer supporting roles. It's reconciliation between the vengeful Old Testament God and the forgiving New Testament God, Montanus says. And the whole thing takes place in the dream of a girl named Samantha, a role shared by Jene Johnson and Kelsie Fadness.

It's a 67-member cast, with production assistance from the Magic Valley School for the Performing Arts. The Rev. Dan Marks, pastor of the Lighthouse Christian Fellowship, wrote a few of the musical numbers, and the church is largely funding the stage version.

"While the ark probably didn't look like the Titanic, the content in 'Captain Noah's Travelling Zoo' is biblically accurate," Montanus writes in his program notes. "Methuselah was Noah's grandfather, and he died the year of the flood when he was 969 years young... The descendants of Ham (played by Bill Perry), Shem (Teddy Laird) and Japheth (J.T. Garner) were scattered geographically after the Tower of Babel event and

MISSIONARIES

Several Magic Valley-area residents have been called to serve or returned from serving missions for The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints.

Called to serve

Sister Kami Lentz will serve in the El Salvador area with Salvador East Mission. She will do regular missionary work and be the medical care specialist.

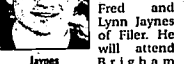

Lentz

Lentz graduated from Twin Falls High School in 1999, where she was active in National Honor Society and Future Career and Community Leaders of America. She attended Utah State University and Idaho State University, graduating in 2004 with a bachelor's degree as a registered nurse. She has been working at the hospital in Logan, Utah, and has made two medical charity trips to Peru. Her parents are David and Karen Lentz of Twin Falls.

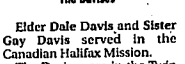

Hobbs of Twin Falls

Elder Levi W. Jaynes served in the Alabama Birmingham Mission. Jaynes is the son of Fred and Lynn Jaynes of Fillet. He will attend Brigham Young University-Idaho in the fall to major in physics education.

Jaynes

Elder Dale Davis and Sister Gay Davis served in the Canadian Halifax Mission. The Davises are in the Twin Falls 13th Ward. They returned from their mission June 5.

The Davises

Elder Jeffrey Monte Crandall served in the Russia Vladivostok Mission.

Crandall is an Eagle Scout and 2003 graduate of Twin Falls High School, where he was active in National Honor Society, Key Club, Chamber Singers, Symphonic Band and Jive. He attended Brigham Young University-Provo and was involved in the Men's Chorus and Symphonic Band, and will return to BYU in the fall.

Elder Vern E. Barnes and Sister Katherine Joy Barnes will serve as full-time temple construction missionaries for the Twin Falls Temple.

The Barneses

The Barneses live in Twin Falls and are in the Twin Falls 6th Ward, Twin Falls West Stake. They are assigned to the Idaho Boise Mission. They served a mission to the visitor's center in Independence, Mo., from 2000 to 2001.

Elder Terry Darrington served in the Texas San Antonio Mission.

Darrington is the son of Kony and Cheryl Darrington of Raft River and is in the Raft River Ward. He graduated in 2003 from Declo High School, where he participated in football, basketball and track, and attended Idaho State University for one year before his mission. He will return to ISU in the fall.

Elder Brad Hobbs and Sister Sandy Hobbs serve in the North Carolina Charlotte Mission, with Elder Hobbs as the mission president.

The Hobbes

Elder Hobbs is a former stake president of the Twin Falls Stake. Sister Hobbs has served in Young Women and Primary presidencies.

Returned from serving

Elder Shawn Potter served in the Argentine Resistencia Mission. Potter is the son of Mark and Susan Potter of Hagerman.

Potter

He will return to the U.S. Military Academy at West Point, N.Y.

Elder Brandon Scott Denney will serve in the Peru Lima South Mission. Denney is the son of Scott W. and Jann Denney of Twin Falls, an Eagle Scout and is in the Twin Falls 15th Ward. He graduated from Twin Falls High School in 2005 and attended Utah State University in Logan. He will enter the Mission Training Center on Wednesday.

Whatever happened to hell?

Scholars sense belief is weak

The Associated Press

Belief in hell is going to you-know-where. And belief in heaven is in trouble, too.

That's the concern of some Christian thinkers, including Jeffrey Burton Russell, an emeritus professor of history at the University of California, Santa Barbara, and author of the new book "Paradise Misled: How We Lost Heaven and How We Can Regain It" (Oxford).

Russell and other fretters aren't impressed by fads like the sudden popularity of the girl's name Ninsoah (heaven spelled backward) or polls that show most Americans believe in some sort of heaven.

The growing problem, according to Russell and others, is that the way U.S. Christians conceive of both heaven and hell is so feeble and vague that it's almost meaningless — vague "superstition."

It's "not that heaven is deteriorating," he says. "But we're getting reports in 2004 that 81 percent of Americans believed in heaven and 70 percent in hell. An earlier Gallup Poll said 77 percent of ever-optimistic Americans rated their odds of making heaven as "good" or "excellent." Few saw themselves as hellbound.

"The percentage who say they believe in heaven has remained pretty constant the past 50 years, but what people mean by it has changed an awful lot," Russell said in an interview.

Some people are so confused they believe in heaven but not God — "I suppose a New Age thing," he said.

But if today's notion of paradise is off base, and sentimental images of clouds, harps and cherubs are the stuff of magazine cartoons, then what's the best way to think of heaven? "For Christians... basically, heaven underneath all the decorations means living in harmony with God and the cosmos and your neighbors and being grateful," said Russell, who studied hell and Satan for 15 years before first turning his attention to heaven in a 1997 book.

Jeffrey Burton Russell, emeritus professor of history at the University of California at Santa Barbara, is the author of the new book, "Paradise Misled: How We Lost Heaven and How We Can Regain It."

"In Russell, it's healthiest to see heaven as starting on earth, not an existence that 'suddenly happens when you die.'"

What about hell and its fire and brimstone? "There is a tendency to over-dramatize hell in order to get (it) across to people," he said, but it's simply "the absence of God, the absence of heaven."

"Heaven has gradually been shut away in a closet by the dominant intellectual trends," Russell writes. Likewise with hell; Russell cannot remember the last time he's heard that unhappy subject treated in church or in religious literature.

What happened? Russell's book is largely a heartfelt appeal against "physicalism," the modern claim that knowledge comes only through the physical senses and empirical science.

Such an outlook is arrogant and unprovable, Russell believes, because it ignores humans' moral sense and the supernatural — including heaven and hell.

Among Protestants who share Russell's angst, perhaps the most outspoken is the Rev. David E. Wells of Gordon-Conwell Theological Seminary in Massachusetts. He has spent years bemoaning the erosion of Christian teaching, through books like last fall's "Above All Earthly Powers: Christ in a Postmodern World."

Wells said in an interview that western Christianity is on the defensive against religious skepticism, secularism, materialism and consumerism.

He said that when Christian truth collides with the dominant cultural belief, promoted by psychology, that individuals should choose whatever they want, then "something has to give. And in our world today, in America and much of the West, what is giving is Christianity." That includes the faith in "ultimate right and wrong" that undergirds heaven and hell.

So, many who say they believe in heaven are "projecting from their very best therapeutic experiences into eternity," not meeting God "on his own terms," he thinks.

A related question, is who enters heaven. On that, Americans are predictably expansive. A Newsweek/belletrist.com poll last year asked, "Can a good person who isn't of your religious faith go to heaven or attain salvation?" Fully 79 percent said yes, with somewhat lower percentages among evangelicals and among non-Christians.

In Catholicism, the Second Vatican Council (1962-65) declared that persons who do not know the Christian gospel but sincerely seek God "can attain to everlasting salvation." The church decided that requiring explicit Christian faith was too pessimistic, said U.S. theologian Cardinal Avery Dulles, writing in First Things magazine.

But now, he cautioned, "thoughtless optimism is the more prevalent error," with many Christians mistakenly assuming that "everyone, or practically everyone, must be saved."

Christians are permitted to "hope that very many, if not all, will be saved," Dulles said. Still, the New Testament teaches "the absolute necessity of faith for salvation" and says that "many of us face just two possibilities, either 'everlasting happiness in the presence of God' or 'everlasting torment in the absence of God.'"

God between the white lines

Athletes' faith goes public

Coax News Service

AUSTIN, Texas — An hour before the Round Rock Express takes the field, hundreds of people gather outside Dell Diamond to hear from star outfielder Luke Scott. A hot sun bears down, but Scott appears cool and polished in crisp white baseball pants and a blue pinstriped jersey.

"I'm here today because I'm not ashamed," Scott begins, his voice a faint contrast to his muscular frame. The crowd presses closer to hear him. He briefly recovers a past marked by drinking and partying before stalling with force.

"I gave my life to God on June 9, 2001."

The crowd erupts, clapping and exclaiming, "Praise God!" Scott, who was speaking at the team's first pre-game Faith Night earlier this month, sees his position as "a good stage to preach the good word and talk about the Lord." He is by no means unique in his evangelism. In recent years, more athletes have been using their celebrity status and media access to witness for Christ.

These players are doing more than pointing heavenward after hitting a home run or kneeling in the end zone to pray after a touchdown. They are modifying their uniforms, crediting Jesus in post-game interviews and talking candidly about the role God plays in their lives and careers.

And thanks to the increased visibility of evangelical Christians, who helped Pittsburgh Steelers quarterback Ben Roethlisberger is among a growing number of athletes who use faith to manifest their faith.

President Bush win re-election in 2004, Christian athletes are encountering a more receptive audience in the press box and beyond.

Ben Roethlisberger, quarterback of the 2005 Super Bowl champion Pittsburgh Steelers, wore PF (Play For Jesus) on his cleats until the NFL forbade it last year, citing uniform rules.

After winning the Verizon Heritage tournament last spring, golfer Aaron Baddeley told reporters he stayed focused by reciting a passage from the book of Timothy and proclaimed, "Jesus, this is for you" just before knocking in the final putt.

Vince Young, the University of Texas quarterback who led the Longhorns to a Rose Bowl victory and a national championship in January, decided to go pro after consulting with his pastor, who led a service for Young and his family before and after the NFL draft.

• Red Sox pitcher Curt Schilling, after shutting down the team's archrival New York Yankees in a crucial 2004 play-off game, announced, "Tonight was God's work on the mound."

Though evangelical Christianity has long been a presence in the locker room, it has never been more prominent than in this visible. Promoters, team officials and the media have taken notice of the faithful athletes. And many Christian fans are rejoicing.

"I think it's great that you get people standing up for what's right in the world," said Rick Delong, a Baptist from New Braunfels, who listened to Scott's testimony last Sunday.

"I'm shocked at the number of believers that are playing in sports today and that are willing to get out and share their testimony and proclaim their faith openly," said Mike Snider, president of Third Coast Artists Agency and the brains behind the Faith Night promotions, which have caught on in 44 cities and are held outside the parks before or after games.

"Ten years ago? Five years ago? That wasn't happening," he said. "People would have complained. They would have looked at you funny and said, 'What are you doing?'"

Snider said he thinks the sports world is reflecting an evangelical movement in the country. He cited the influence of Christian voters; the success of "The Passion of the Christ," Mel Gibson's 2004 film about the last days of Jesus; and the increasing popularity of Christian music in mainstream markets.

Those trends are not lost on team owners, coaches and promoters, who also recognize the benefits of cultivating more family-friendly teams.

The bad-boy persona that elevated basketball player Dennis Rodman to stardom has lost its cachet. Steroid use, loutish behavior, and even rape and murder charges have tarnished the reputation of athletes and major-league sports in general. Many fans are looking to spiritual players to redeem professional sports by promoting a more wholesome image with Bible study, clean living and chapel attendance in the clubhouse.

But religion is a sensitive topic that can also alienate fans. The Colorado Rockies drew national attention last month when a USA Today article highlighted the baseball team's recruitment of players with strong moral (read: Christian) character. Rockies players have publicly assured fans they are not trying to build an exclusively Christian team.

The Washington Nationals faced a stickier situation last year when a prayer leader in the team's Baseball Chapel, a ministry that serves major-league players, reportedly nodded when a player asked whether Jews were "doomed for not accepting Jesus. The Nationals suspended the volunteer chaplain.

Indeed, some fans simply don't want to be preached to and say that churches, not ballparks, are the appropriate venue for religious expression.

"It's really more annoying than anything else," said Ellen Johnson, president of American Atheists Inc. "It's just becoming obnoxious."

Brady says the same.

"In the case of rape and incest it is permissible, and when the life of the mother is in imminent threat," said Brady, a former student body president at Notre Dame.

"But I am deeply opposed to partial-birth abortion," he said.

The latest flap over the subject at both the state and national levels, having to do with parental consent, requires moderation, Brady says. He supports legislation requiring parental consent, but he also believes there should be room for a judge to intervene if a pregnant girl is in a life-threatening situation.

Both Otter and Brady acknowledge the Catholic Church's position that it is not a person's right to take the life of another unless it is in self-defense. But in the United States, there is a line between church and state, and that applies if the death penalty is the law, they note.

"It's not the Catholic Church that is providing the penalty, but it is the state," Otter said. "The church believes in the rule of law."

Both Otter and Brady have broken the church's prescription on divorce. Though reluctant to discuss the details, both explained they obtained divorces through the state, and then they spent considerable time and effort to work through the church's complicated annulment process.

An annulment, says church attorney Mark Raper, is completely separate from a civil marriage. The Catholic Church recognizes all civil marriage, but it has its own definition of a sacramental marriage. If Catholic officials determine, for example, that one partner was not open to having children or one did not have a spiritual commitment in life, then possibly an annulment can be granted, he says.

"If it appears a person entered into a union without thinking about all the ramifications of a full-time marriage, then we could be gathered testimony," Raper said.

Brady said he obtained his annulment more than 20 years ago. Otter, who plans to marry former Kimberly resident Lori Eastley on Aug. 18 in Meridian, secured his annulment four years ago from his former wife, Gay, the daughter of Idaho mogul J.R. Simplot. He said his first marriage of almost 30 years ended in a civil divorce 12 years ago.

BYU instructor let go for opposing church gay marriage stand

PROVO, Utah (AP)—A part-time instructor at Mormon church-owned Brigham Young University will not be rehired because he publicly opposed the church's stand against gay marriage.

Jeffrey Nielsen, a philosophy professor, said in an op-ed piece for the June 4 edition of The Salt Lake Tribune, "I believe opposing gay marriage and seeking a constitutional amendment against it is immoral."

Leaders of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints have spent millions of dollars campaigning against gay marriage and on May 28 called on members to support a constitutional amendment banning gay marriage.

Nielsen, a Mormon, said he learned of the school's decision regarding him in a June 8 letter from Daniel Graham, chairman of the Department of Philosophy.

"In accordance with the order of the church, we do not consider it our responsibility to correct, contradict or dismiss official pronouncements of the church," the letter said.

"Since you have chosen to contradict and oppose the church in an area of great concern to church leaders, and to do so in a public forum, we will not rehire you after the current term is over," the letter said.

Nielsen said he has endured sleepless nights since the column appeared, is sticking by his views and his religion.

"I have no desire to be anything but a member of the church," he said Tuesday.

BYU spokeswoman Carri Jenkins confirmed that the decision to not rehire Nielsen for the summer term was made by Graham on the basis of the op-ed piece. She said decisions on hiring part-time instructors are made by departments on a term-by-term basis, and Graham's decision did not need or receive confirmation by higher officials.

Man charged in beheading, fatal car crash

By Jesse Harlan Alderman
Associated Press writer

BOISE — An Idaho man charged with beheading his wife, then causing an accident that killed a Boise woman and her 4-year-old daughter, was on a suicide mission, prosecutors said Friday.

Alofa Time, 50, of Nampa, was charged Friday in suburban Canyon County, west of Boise, with first-degree murder in the decapitation death of his estranged wife, Theresa Time, 47. If convicted, he could face the death penalty.

Investigators were led to Theresa Time's headless body after Alofa Time, prosecutors say, deliberately swerved his Dodge Ram pickup into oncoming traffic, while carrying the severed head in the truck. The impact caused the head to fly onto the roadway.

The head-on collision Thursday, on a major arterial through downtown Boise, killed Samantha Murphy, 36, and daughter Jae Lynne Grimes, 4, both of Boise. Murphy's other daughter, 8-year-old Syndee Murphy, was in fair condition Friday at Saint Alphonsus Regional Medical Center in Boise.

For his role in the car wreck, Alofa Time faces two charges of second-degree murder in Ada County. At an arraignment Friday in 4th District Court in Boise, a magistrate judge set bond at $1 million and scheduled a preliminary hearing date later this month.

Prosecutors said Time pleaded with arresting officers to kill him. Police also found a suicide note and reported that he had set aside money for unspecified arrangements after his death.

Time stood for arraignment in the Boise courtroom via video conference from the Ada County Jail. His voice trembled as he answered questions from the magistrate judge.

If he meets the $1 million bond, authorities said Time will immediately be transferred and imprisoned in neighboring Canyon County, where a judge has already denied bail.

According to court records, Alofa Time had a history of abuse. He faced domestic battery charges for allegedly choking his wife in March. A trial already was set for July 26. A judge issued a no-contact order, which barred Time from seeing his wife.

Theresa Time filed paperwork asking that the order be withdrawn. Last month, after she completed "Safety Planning Classes" at a local crisis center, the no-contact order was lifted.

The magistrate judge in Boise also said Time had a criminal record, stemming from sexual abuse incidents in California.

Andrea Schmierer is shown looking over a map of the United States at her home in Dublin, Calif., Monday as she talks about the locations where at least 81 people in 17 states, most of them probably illegal immigrants trying to get work, used her Social Security number to try to get work.

Woman's identity stolen, used by dozens of people

By Peter Franzmann
Associated Press writer

DUBLIN, Calif. — Andrea Schmierer's Social Security number really gets around. It has been used by at least 81 people in 17 states, most of them probably illegal immigrants trying to get work.

The federal government took years to discover the number was being used illegally, but authorities took little action even then.

"They knew what was happening but wouldn't do anything," said Schmierer, 33, a housewife in this affluent San Francisco suburb. "One name, one number, why can't they just match it up?"

Her case is an example of an increasingly common problem: Many thieves are able to steal personal information because employers do not have to verify Social Security numbers or other documents submitted by job seekers.

The situation has long drawn fire from anti-illegal immigration groups, but Congress has only recently moved to fix it. Both the House and Senate have passed immigration-reform bills that call for employers to verify Social Security numbers in a national database.

Homeland Security officials have taken it a step further, calling on Congress to allow the Social Security Administration to share information with immigration-enforcement agents at work sites.

Under current law, if the Social Security Administration or the Internal Revenue Service find multiple people using the same Social Security number, the agencies send letters informing employers of possible errors.

The IRS fines employers $50 for each duplicate number, a punishment that companies often dismiss as just another cost of doing business.

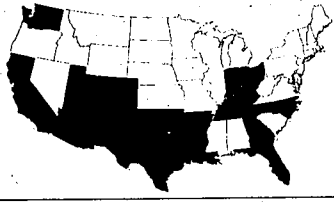

"Sending letters is the limit to what can be done," Social Security spokesman Lowell Kentle said. "We expect that will be able to fix any records that are incorrect."

The information on mismatched names is seldom shared with law

Identity used illegally in multiple states

From W-2 and 1099 statements received between 2001 and 2004, Andrea Schmierer found that her Social Security number was used without her knowledge in 17 states.

States where Social Security number was used enforcement agencies.

Schmierer realized she had a problem in February 2005, when she got a statement from the IRS saying she owed $15,013 in back taxes — even though she had not worked since her son was born in 2000.

"Perhaps even more surprising, the taxes were due from jobs in Texas."

Schmierer called the IRS and learned that numerous people were using her Social Security number. Officials said the erroneous balances would be eliminated, but the agency would have to correct the problem again in future years.

"They told me they couldn't do anything else," Schmierer said.

IRS officials declined to talk about Schmierer's case, citing privacy laws.

Schmierer has done a little investigating of her own, combing through tax bills sent to her for names and locations of employers who hired people using her number.

She has also obtained more than 200 W-2 and 1099 tax forms that contained her Social Security number but different names. Schmierer provided copies of the records to The Associated Press.

People used her Social Security number from Florida to Washington state, at construction sites, fast-food restaurants and even major high-tech companies. Some opened bank accounts using the number.

Most of the people worked multiple jobs in the same year, though some remained at the same company for several years. The top wage earner made $39,465, but most reported income of less than $15,000.

Though impossible to verify in every case, information gleaned from criminal investigations, tax documents and other sources suggested that most of the users were probably illegal immigrants.

Schmierer filed a police report after learning one man had used her information in 2003 at janitorial and landscaping companies near Hall County, Texas.

Investigators found the man, who told officers he had bought a fake Social Security card at a flea market, according to a police report. He was not arrested.

Schmierer tracked down other people, finding that her number had been used to get work but to not access her credit card or bank accounts.

What started as a hassle turned into a major headache earlier this year when she sought work through a temporary agency that learned her Social Security number had been used by a woman in Texas two years earlier. The agency could not hire Schmierer for more than a month while the situation was clarified.

"How do you prove that you are you?" Schmierer said.

Firefighters get upper hand on Utah blazes

The Associated Press

SALT LAKE CITY — Continued cooler weather was helping fire crews Friday to contain two large fires in Utah.

The Navajo Mountain fire, on the northern, Utah side of the mountain on the Navajo Indian Reservation along the Utah-Arizona border, was still at 5 percent containment, but officials were optimistic that number would grow by the end of the day.

"Things are looking really well. The wind forecast yesterday didn't materialize so that's kept things a little more controlled," said Karen Takai, a fire spokeswoman.

Takai said cooler temperatures have let crews strengthen fire lines. The 445 people working the 3,000-acre blaze would be managing those lines and using aircraft to drop water on hot spots Friday, she said.

The Buckskin fire, burning 1,400 acres about 20 miles east of Kanab, also near the Arizona border, was 55 percent contained Friday, said LaCee Bartholomew of the Bureau of Land Management.

The fire burned under some power lines Thursday. Power to the lines, which feed Las Vegas, was shut off and rerouted through Phoenix so no outages occurred, Bartholomew said. She said the blaze would likely be turned back Friday.

Several hand crews, a helicopter and heavy air tanker would remain on the fire Friday, but some of those resources would likely be reassigned at the end of the day, she said.

The 1,463-acre Blackbird Mine fire six miles east of Maysvale and the 28-acre Meadows fire eight miles southeast of Fillmore continued to be managed for resource benefits instead of being suppressed.

Raise fuel tax, say former state officials

The Associated Press

LEWISTON — Idaho needs to increase fuel taxes and highway spending to handle expected growth and trade opportunities, speakers at the annual convention of the Association of Idaho Cities said.

Dwight Bower, former head of the Idaho Transportation Department, as well as James Kempton of Albion, a former state legislator now on the Northwest Power Planning Council, were the main speakers Thursday. The state spend more money on roads to accommodate Idaho's economic growth.

Idaho is the third-fastest growing state in the country, said Rogan Madsen, director of Idaho Commerce and Labor. The state does $555 million worth of business with China and five other Asian nations, and Idaho's economy is booming.

"I've never seen it stronger," Madsen said. "To keep the growth moving, Kempton said the state gas tax should be raised by 12 cents a gallon from the current 25 cents-per-gallon rate, unchanged the past 10 years."

Kempton chaired a study commission earlier this year that examined Idaho's future transportation needs and declared that $20 billion more for roads would be needed by 2035.

"How do you advocate a 45 percent hike in drivers' license fees, vehicle registration charges and other motor vehicle-related costs assessed by the state, as well as imposing tolls along with steepier costs during peak congestion periods."

Crews recover a car in which police say two people were killed after it was struck by a pickup being driven by Alofa Time in Boise Thursday morning. The severed head of Time's estranged wife flew from the window of the pickup.

Registration of larger UTVs hits sticker snag

The Associated Press

COEUR D'ALENE — Owners of utility-type vehicles will have to wait until Jan. 1 before they can legally drive them off private property.

UTVs are larger versions of the popular all-terrain vehicles, or ATVs. They can carry two people side-by-side and a large payload. Some are built to carry four people.

ATVs can be licensed to be driven on state and county roads. Owners can also obtain an off-road sticker to drive them on designated roads, trails and areas.

UTV owners currently can do neither, and there are no plans to allow them to be licensed for highway operation. A plan to register UTVs to be legal on specific state and federal public lands on July 1 has been delayed to Jan. 1.

"As it stands now, Idaho doesn't recognize the vehicle at all," Mark Magill, North Idaho ATV Association vice president, told The Spokesman-Review.

"Quite honestly, it's just taking us a little longer to get our system updates completed," said Dave Claycomb, the Idaho Parks and Recreation off-highway vehicle program manager.

The Legislature in March approved a plan for UTV owners to register their vehicles, but not license them," Steve Frost, recreation resources bureau chief for the Parks and Recreation Department, said UTVs will essentially not be legal on roads where passenger cars can travel.

He also said they will not be allowed on ATV trails on public land, but only on trails designated by land managers.

"There are roads and trails that you can't reasonably drive a full-sized vehicle down," Frost told The Associated Press on Friday.

"That's the type of opportunity that would be provided for the UTVs. A county road or state highway, main forest highways, you wouldn't be able to legally drive a UTV."

Frost said "backcountry roads not maintained for passenger vehicle use" would be legal for UTVs. He said it is up to the UTV owner to find out which trails are open to their use.

Like ATVs, UTVs began as farm and ranch equipment but have been making the jump to recreation.

"It's a relatively new recreational vehicle," Frost said. "They haven't had a place to go the past. This registration system recognizes them and provides them a place to go legally, and where they can't go."

HARD #74
Fill in the grid so that every row, every column, and every 3x3 box contains the digits 1 through 9. That's all there is to it. There's no math involved. The grid has numbers, but nothing has to add up to anything else. You solve the puzzle with reasoning and logic. Find the answers for today's puzzle on page E-6.

THE ACES ON BRIDGE

Bobby Wolff

"In my time, the follies of the town crept slowly among us, but now they travel faster than a stagecoach."

— Oliver Goldsmith

Against six diamonds West obediently led a spade and Dummy's ace won. Declarer ruffed a spade to hand, drew trump in two rounds, and finished eliminating the spades.

At this point when he cashed the three top hearts ending in dummy, East could form a very clear picture of the South hand, and precisely a 1-3-3-4 distribution. Since the auction had very strongly suggested that South must have the king and queen of clubs, there appeared to be no practical chance to defeat the contract, so East realized that he must resort to deception.

Accordingly, when South played a club from the dummy, East contributed the jack, thus giving declarer a losing option in the suit by trying to suggest he had the J-10 and not the ace. Declarer duly put up the king, which held the trick, then crossed back to dummy with a trump and led a second club, East following low impatiently.

Declarer now had to decide where the club ace and 10 were. Had West ducked the club ace (a reasonable enough defense)? Eventually declarer got it wrong and put in the nine, letting West score the 10 and return a club for one down.

At first glance, declarer's play looks foolish, for who would play the jack of clubs from the J-10? But, if declarer's clubs were A-Q-8-6, it would have been a necessary defense to prevent partner from being unduly played when South put in the eight.

ANSWER: With this distribution, always rebid two clubs, not one no-trump. Partner will expect a balanced hand for the no-trump rebid, so may end up in spades when no-trump would be better. Sometimes he will miss out on a minor-suit fit, unaware of your extra shape. (However, with four hearts and three clubs in the same hand, rebidding one no-trump would be better than reversing into two hearts.)
