BLM, ranchers claim water on public lands

By Michelle Dunlop
Times-News writer

SUN VALLEY — The government may own the land, but does it own the water used by livestock?

Despite years of discussion, the question remains unanswered in several disputes between ranchers and the U.S. Bureau of Land Management officials over water on public lands in Idaho.

"It just makes sense for a landholder to seek the proper permits to ensure use on their property," Bud Cribley, acting Idaho director of the BLM, recently told members of the Idaho Water Users Association at a convention in Sun Valley.

Livestock producers don't disagree that the BLM manages the land. They take issue, however, with the federal agency's claims to water used by their cattle and sheep, said Craig Prudden, who is an attorney with a Davis, Calif., firm and represents ranchers.

"In fact, the most precious resource for a rancher on public lands is his water right," Prudden said.

In 1997, the state began sorting out claims to water in the Snake River Basin. The Snake River Basin Adjudication, or SRBA, comprises roughly 150,000 claims covering about 87 percent of Idaho.

Considered one of the largest water cases in U.S. history, the adjudication is edging toward completion with more than 120,000 claims settled.

The state originally disputed federal agencies' claims to

Passing gas

Dairy readies for methane production

By Michelle Dunlop
Times-News writer

RUPERT — Now they're cooking with gas — well, almost.

Within the next few weeks, owners of an anaerobic digester which converts dairy waste into gas will know whether their methane meets industry standards. If so, the Rupert digester will be the first of its kind in the nation to turn manure into pipeline-quality biogas.

"We don't have any doubts," said

Jacob Dustin, president of the Idaho Falls company responsible for the digester. "We will know very soon."

Dustin, the new president of Intrepid Technology and Resources, said the company should have results back in the next couple of weeks on samples of biogas produced at Whitesides Dairy. Intermountain Gas will verify the quality of the methane, having already signed a contract with Intrepid for its product should it meet requirements.

Whitesides Dairy, operated by Steve Whitesides Dairy owner Steve Whitesides climbs down from the anaerobic digester tanks that help convert manure into methane.

Whitesides, has roughly 4,000 cows that produce about 110 pounds of waste daily. The digester uses about half of that waste and could heat 900 homes with the methane produced in the digester, Dustin said.

Although the digester went into operation last year, Intrepid had to install gas-conditioning equipment to make the methane meet pipeline standards. The company only recently came up with the money for the new equipment.

All hum, no spit

4-H'ers show off alpacas

TWIN FALLS — Ninety-three-year-old Anna Davis watched the afternoon pass from a padded park bench in front of the Alterra Wynwood assisted living center.

Any minute, a truck and livestock trailer would pull into the parking lot, bringing the day's diversion: a 4-H club and its alpacas.

"It breaks the monotony. Because not often do you get a chance to see alpacas, even if you don't live in a place like this," Davis said. "It's like going to a party. You don't get to go to a party every day."

Dorothy Conrad, 86, emerged through the center's front doors, plopped onto one of the benches and announced she was bored enough to climb walls.

"Everybody says, 'Take a nap.' I can't nap."

Davis confessed herself a little vague about alpacas, though she'd heard the word.

"It's something I need to go look up in the dictionary again," she said.

It's no wonder if Magic Valley folks find themselves unfamiliar with the relatively rare South American fiber-producing livestock.

This year will be the first for any 4-H club to take alpacas to the Twin Falls County Fair, said Judy Heidel, co-leader of the new Paca Kids 4-H club in Castleford.

Alpacas are too expensive for 4-H'ers to buy — $12,000 is a low price for a female — so the five Paca Kids leased male alpacas for the year, for $1 each, from a pair of local farms, Heidel said.

The 4-H'ers have been working with their new charges only since spring.

So when they arrived at Alterra Wynwood on Wednesday afternoon, they didn't risk leading the alpacas to the center's backyard.

PINA MURDER TRIAL: DAY 3

Did triggerman cut a deal?

By Cassidy Friedman
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — Her client did not pull the trigger, yet he is being charged with first-degree murder.

Public defender Marilyn Paul wants to know if the prosecutor cut a deal with Johnny A. Shores, the man who says he shot Jesse Naranjo on Nov. 29, 2005. Paul asked two detectives who took the stand Wednesday why they were not pursuing evidence that may implicate Shores in a separate felony charge.

"The witnesses in this case should testify truthfully whether or not he's getting a break," Paul said Wednesday in court.

Both times Paul asked her question, a prosecutor objected, although Shores — obliquely referred to Wednesday as the witness getting a break — is likely to testify soon against the defendant, Juan Carlos Fuentes Pina, 32.

Shores' murder was hauled in by the defense like an elephant into the room on the third day of Pina's first-degree murder trial. Shores pleaded guilty to voluntary manslaughter in the killing of Jesse Naranjo, 33, in November 2005 and may testify against Pina, who is accused of kidnapping Naranjo.

Under Idaho law, whoever initiates a kidnapping can be held responsible for first-degree murder if it is committed during the kidnapping.

The prosecution called two detectives to the stand who "investigated the Nov. 29 shooting slaying at 325 Sixth Ave. E., which they said is a known drug house.

Inside, they found two sawed-off 12-gauge shotguns, one of which could have been the murder weapon, they said.

They photographed a single spent 12-gauge shell lying on the kitchen floor, near the back door where police say Naranjo's fatal blood trail begins. He was found 50 to 60 feet away in the alley behind the house. Police also found ammunition scattered throughout the house, along with drug paraphernalia and evidence of intent to sell.

A baggy containing a white crystalline powder was found in the bedroom, police said, was used by Shores and his girlfriend.

Detective Chris Fullmer, a lead investigator, testified that he did not run tests for a controlled substance or for fingerprints on the bag.

When Paul asked why he didn't, Fullmer answered, "I was concentrating on people that had been involved in the shooting. I wasn't concentrating on drug paraphernalia."

The trial continues at 9 a.m. today.

Murder charges brought against 7 Marines, sailor

By Robert Burns
Associated Press writer

WASHINGTON — Seven Marines and a sailor have been charged with murder in the April death of an Iraqi civilian, the Marine Corps said Wednesday.

All eight also were charged with kidnaping, according to a Marine statement issued at Camp Pendleton, Calif. Other charges include conspiracy, larceny and providing false official statements.

Separately, the U.S. military in Iraq announced that murder charges were filed against a fourth Army soldier in the shooting deaths May 9 of three civilians who had been detained by troops. Spc. Jason R. Graber, 20, of the 101st Airborne Division was charged with one count of premeditated murder, one count of attempted premeditated murder, one count of conspiracy to commit murder, and making a false official statement. On Monday the military had announced that three soldiers of the 101st Airborne Division were charged with murder and other offenses in connection with the May 9 killings.

It was not clear why charges against the fourth soldier were not announced until Wednesday.

In the case of the April killing of an Iraqi civilian, the allegation is that Marines pulled an unarmed man from his home on April 26 and shot him to death without provocation. Eight soldiers from the Pendleton-based 3rd Battalion, 5th Marine Regiment were taken out of Iraq in late May and put in the confinement at Pendleton pending charges.

The Marine Corps identified the eight as: Marine Sgt. Lawrence G. Hutchins III, Marine Cpl. Trent D. Thomas, Navy Hospital Corpsman 3rd Class Melson J. Bacos, Marine Lance Cpl. Tyler A. Jackson, Marine Pfc. John J. Jodka, Marine Lance Cpl. Jerry E. Shumate Jr., Marine Lance Cpl. Robert B. Pennington and Marine Cpl. Marshall L. Magincald.

Bush wins support on N. Korea, Iran

By Terence Hunt
Associated Press writer

VIENNA, Austria — President Bush won solid European support Wednesday for his handling of escalating nuclear crises with North Korea and Iran but was challenged over the Iraq war, the U.S. prison camp in Cuba and rising anti-American sentiment.

"That's absurd," Bush snapped at a news conference in response to an assertion that the United States was regarded as the biggest threat to global security. "We'll defend ourselves, but at the same time we're actively working with our partners to spread peace and democracy."

Unbidden, Austrian Chancellor Wolfgang Schuessel rose with an impassioned defense that seemed to surprise the president.

"I think it's grotesque to say that America is a threat to the peace in the world compared with North Korea, Iran, a lot of countries," Schuessel said. Europe would not enjoy peace and prosperity if not for U.S. help after World War II, he said.

"We should be fair from the other side of the Atlantic," Schuessel said. "We should understand what September 11th meant to the American people."

But the chancellor also prodded Bush.

"We can only have a victory in the fight against terror if we don't undermine our common values," Schuessel said. "It can never be a victory, a credible victory over terrorists if we give up our values: democracy, rule of law, individual rights."

Bush came here for the annual summit of the United States and the 25-nation European Union at a time when favorable opinions of the U.S. have fallen across Europe.

About 1,200 students chanting "Bush Go Home!" marched through Vienna to a church square not far from Hofburg Palace where the leaders met. They were led by Cindy Sheehan, who lost her son in Iraq and energized the anti-war movement a year ago with a monthlong protest outside Bush's Texas ranch.

Bush acknowledged summit disputes. "We disagreed in an agreeable way on certain issues," the president said. Bush also chatted with foreign students at a round-table, toured the national library and listened to the Vienna Boys Choir before arriving in Budapest, Hungary to spend the night.

The president won backing for the demand that North Korea abandon plans to test-fire a long-range missile and in pressing Iran to accept a two-week-old offer of incentives in return for a moratorium on uranium enrichment.

Protesters are escorted by police while marching in downtown Vienna, Wednesday as they demonstrate against U.S. President George W. Bush's visit. President Bush was in Vienna to attend the EU-US summit.

U.S. rejects N. Korea's plea for missile launch talks

By Bart Horman
Associated Press writer

SEOUL, South Korea — North Korea called Wednesday for direct talks with the United States over a potential missile test, but the Bush administration rejected the overture, saying threats aren't the way to seek dialogue.

"You don't normally engage in conversations by threatening to launch intercontinental ballistic missiles," U.N. Ambassador John Bolton said. "It's not a way to produce a conversation because if you acquiesce in aberrant behavior you simply encourage the repetition of it, which we were obviously not going to do."

President Bush, meeting with European leaders in Austria, said North Korea faced further isolation if it went ahead with any launch.

Earlier Wednesday, Han Song Ryol, deputy chief of North Korea's mission to the United Nations, said Pyongyang was seeking to resolve the missile test concerns through direct talks with the United States.

"North Korea as a sovereign state has the right to develop, deploy, test fire and export a missile," he told South Korea's Yonhap news agency. "We are aware of the U.S. concerns about our missile test-launch."

So our position is that we should resolve the issue through negotiations."

Pyongyang has consistently pressed for direct dialogue with the United States, while Washington insists it will only speak to the North at six-nation nuclear talks. The North has refused to return to the nuclear talks since November, in anger over a U.S. crackdown on the country's alleged illicit financial activity.

Senate kills proposal to raise minimum wage

By David Espo
Associated Press writer

WASHINGTON — The Republican-controlled Senate smothered a proposed election-year increase in the minimum wage Wednesday, rejecting Democratic claims that it was past time to boost the $5.15 hourly pay floor that has been in effect for nearly a decade.

The 52-46 vote was eight short of the 60 needed for approval and came one day after House Republican leaders made clear they do not intend to allow a vote on the issue, fearing it might pass.

The Senate vote marked the ninth time since 1997 that Democrats there have proposed — and Republicans have blocked — a stand-alone increase in the minimum wage. The debate fell along predictable lines.

"Americans believe that no one who works hard for a living should have to live in poverty. A job should lift you out of poverty, not keep you in it," said Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass. He said a worker paid $5.15 an hour would earn $10,700 a year, "almost $6,000 below the poverty line for a family of three."

Republicans said a minimum wage increase would wind up hurting the low-wage workers that Democrats said they want to help.

"For every increase you make in the minimum wage, you will cost some of them their jobs," said Sen. Johnny Isakson, R-Ga.

He described the clash as a "classic debate between two very different philosophies. One philosophy that believes in the marketplace, the competitive system ... and entrepreneurship. And secondly is the argument that says the government knows better and that topdown mandates work."

The measure drew the support of 43 Democrats, eight Republicans and one independent. Four of those eight Republicans are seeking re-election in the fall.

Democrats had conceded in advance that this attempt to raise the minimum wage would fare no better than their previous attempts. At the same time, they have made clear in recent days they hope to gain support in the coming midterm elections by stressing the issue.

Organized labor supports the legislation, and Sen. Chris Dodd, D-Conn., said that contrary to some impressions, most minimum wage workers are adults, not teenagers, and many of them are women.

"When the Democrats control the Senate, one of the first pieces of legislation we'll see is an increase in the minimum wage," said Kennedy.

His proposal would have increased the minimum wage to $5.85 beginning 60 days after the legislation was enacted, to $6.55 one year later, and to $7.25 a year after that. He said inflation has eroded the value of the current $5.15 minimum wage by 20 percent.

VA to offer free credit monitoring to veterans after May data theft

By Hope Yen
Associated Press writer

WASHINGTON — The government said Wednesday it would provide free credit monitoring to millions of veterans whose personal information was stolen last month, and acknowledged it was not close to catching those responsible.

Veterans Affairs Secretary Jim Nicholson said in a agency would seek to protect veterans and military troops against identity theft after their names, Social Security numbers and birthdates were taken from a department data analyst's home on May 3. Eligible for one year of credit monitoring will be any of the 17.5 million people who are known to have had their Social Security numbers compromised. The VA has said up to 26.5 million could be affected, although some of them appeared to be duplicate names.

The move is expected to cost millions of dollars. That is in addition to the $14 million the VA has spent to notify and assist veterans in what has become one of the nation's largest security breaches.

"It's not going to be cheap," Nicholson said at a news briefing, adding that authorities were no closer to finding the stolen data. "Free credit monitoring will help safeguard those who may be affected, and will provide them with the peace of mind they deserve."

He said those who have given out letters from the VA saying they are at risk will receive additional information — probably in early August after the VA solicits bids from contractors — on how to sign up for the free monitoring for a year.

The VA also will hire a company for data analysis to look for possible misuse of the personal information. There have been no reports so far of any identity theft stemming from the burglary in suburban Maryland.

Veterans groups and lawmakers from both parties have criticized the agency about the theft and noted years of warnings by auditors that information security was lax. The data analyst — who is in the process of being dismissed — had taken the information home.

Three shot at Tallahassee prison after FBI tried to arrest guards

By Brent Killested
Associated Press writer

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. — A furious gun battle erupted inside a federal prison Wednesday when a guard opened fire on FBI agents who had come to arrest him and several others on charges of having sex with female inmates in exchange for money, alcohol and pot. Two people were killed and another was wounded.

The dead were the guard and a U.S. Justice Department investigator, according to a law enforcement official speaking on condition of anonymity because of the sensitivity of the situation. A prison employee helping with the arrest was hospitalized.

Three guards in all had been indicted Tuesday in an alleged sex-for-contraband scheme that authorities said went on for two years.

When FBI agents and Justice Department investigators arrived at the prison Wednesday to arrest the men, one of the indicted guards shot a federal corrections officer, said FBI spokesman John Givens. He said the officers fired back.

FBI Special Agent-in-Charge Matthew Pellegrino, second from right, talks with FBI agents following a shooting Wednesday inside the Tallahassee Detention Center, which is part of the Tallahassee Federal Correctional Institution in Tallahassee, Fla. A federal detention center guard unexpectedly opened fire on agents who came to arrest him and five other guards accused of bribing female inmates for sex.

The agents were not expecting the prison guards to be armed, the law enforcement official told the AP, though he could not immediately explain why.

The official said the guard fired with a personal weapon, wounding a Bureau of Prisons employee who was assisting with the arrest. Agents from the Justice Department's inspector general's office returned fire, killing the guard, the official said, adding that a Justice Department agent was killed in the exchange. It was not immediately clear who fired that fatal shot.

"The community is safe. The institution is in lockdown status," federal Bureau of Prisons spokeswoman Carla Wilson said.

Officials did not release the gunman's identity. But lawyer Tim Jansen said the dead guard was Ralph Hill, his client. The slain Justice Department agent was identified as William "Buddy" Sentner, 44, who formerly worked for the Secret Service before joining the inspector general's office in 2002. The identity of the survivor was not disclosed, but he was reported in stable condition.

The detention center houses mostly men who are being processed before entering the prison system and is part of the Tallahassee Federal Correctional Institution. A low-security prison for female inmates is next to the detention center.

Together the men's and women's units house 1,445 inmates.

Some funeral services go online

By Katy Stech
Newsday

WEST BABYLON, N.Y. — Donna Smith was working as a missionary in Scotland five years ago when her 94-year-old mother took ill.

Smith flew home to Utah for what turned out to be their final visit.

A week after she returned to Edinburgh, Mary Estella Dunn died.

Although Smith couldn't travel home again, she was still able to watch her mother's funeral using technology: a live video broadcast over the Internet.

"It was like a miracle," she said. "I realized that it was just technology, but to me, it was a miracle."

The same technology that let Smith view her mother for the last time is being offered at a new memorial chapel in West Babylon.

The Star of David Memorial Chapel was built with video cameras and Internet servers so that funeral services could be put online.

The broadcast, or webcast, accommodates people who are too old or too far away to make it to the funeral.

"There are just so many times when family members can't get to the service, and they feel like they've missed out," said Kevin Gray, who co-owns the chapel.

The funeral chapel, Gray says, is the first in the metropolitan area to webcast funerals.

Viewers can see the funeral from two angles: a panoramic view from the back and a close-up focusing on the speaker and the first few rows of seats.

The services aren't saved in an online archive, but funeral directors can make DVDs. Both features are included in the funeral's price.

So far, of the four families that have had services at the chapel, one chose to broadcast the service.

"They did not want to answer questions about the funeral so soon, a family representative said.

A few other New York chapels have looked into webcasting, said Randy McCullough of the state's Funeral Directors Association. But Star of David is the first he has heard to implement it.

McCullough and other industry experts expect webcasting to become more popular as younger generations of funeral directors take over and as Internet connections in family homes speed up.

The demand for webcasting is higher because people have spread out more than in the past, said Rabbi Irvin Kula, president of the National Jewish Center for Learning and Leadership, a Manhattan-based think tank on Judaism and contemporary society.

According to Jewish tradition, a funeral allows people to deal with the loss and honor the dead by listening to the retelling of that person's life. "The more people that get to hear that, the better," Kula said.

Possible 20th hijacker named

By Dan Eggen
The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — It remains one of the most enduring mysteries of the Sept. 11 attacks: Who was the 20th hijacker in 2001?

Vice President Cheney once suggested Zacarias Moussawi, the recently convicted al-Qaida operative, who alternately claimed and denied such a role.

Many other U.S. officials and terrorism experts have said it was likely a Saudi named Mohammed al-Kahtani, now a U.S. detainee at the military prison in Guantanamo Bay, Cuba, who was thwarted in his attempt to enter the country in the summer of 2001. The Sept. 11 commission, meanwhile, concluded that al-Kahtani was only the last in a series of nine "candidate hijackers" who, at one time or another, were slated to be aboard a commandeered aircraft on Sept. 11.

Now an al-Qaida-affiliated committee has offered up a new candidate — an obscure and deceased operative named Fawaz al-Nashmi, according to a person who was meant to round out a five-man team on United Airlines Flight 93, which crashed in Pennsylvania on Sept. 11.

The disclosure only adds to the uncertainty that still surrounds some of the basic details of the Sept. 11 plot, including why there were only four hijackers on Flight 93 and whether that plane was headed for the Capitol, the White House or some other site. U.S. intelligence officials said Wednesday they don't believe that al-Nashmi, a Saudi national also known as Turki bin al-Mutairy, was actually slated to be a 20th hijacker on Sept. 11. But they said al-Qaida had considered al-Nashmi as a possible early candidate for the plot. The officials conceded that they still do not know who else, if anyone, was supposed to be part of the attack.

Many terrorism experts are suspicious of al-Qaida's motives in naming al-Nashmi as a 20th hijacker, arguing that it may be a falsehood intended to remind Americans that the group still poses a threat and that numerous people have volunteered over the years to mount attacks against U.S. and Western targets.

"Why would we wish to take this at face value?" asked Ruth Wedgwood, a terrorism expert and international law professor at Johns Hopkins University's School of Advanced International Studies in Washington. "What is their interest in helping us identify the 20th hijacker who happens to be dead? It's a technique familiar from B-grade crime movies — the guy who happens to have already died is the guy who did it."

The al-Nashmi claim is contained in a 54-minute videotape attributed to al-Qaida's propaganda arm, the al-Sahab media committee, and obtained Tuesday by an Alexandria, Va.-based contractor named IntelCenter. U.S. intelligence officials, who requested anonymity because the topic involves classified information, said they are unable to verify the tape's authenticity.

The tape shows a man identified as al-Nashmi speaking about supporting attacks against the West, and contains audio from a May 2004 attack on oil facilities in Khorab, Saudi Arabia, that al-Nashmi took part in. Al-Nashmi was killed the following month in a battle with Saudi security forces.

The video release follows an audio message last month from al-Qaida leader Osama bin Laden, who said Moussawi was not the 20th hijacker "as your government has claimed." He did not provide the name of another candidate.

Terrorism experts stress that even if the claims about al-Nashmi are true, that does not rule out the likelihood that other operatives were considered as potential hijackers. Evidence for that comes from interrogations of Sept. 11 mastermind Khalid Sheikh Mohammed and others. Al-Qaida also may have been recruiting additional operatives for other attacks, experts said.

"We tend to fixate on the missing 20th hijacker as the only missing piece of the 9/11 puzzle," said Bruce Hoffman, a terrorism expert who heads the Washington office of

MySpace planning new restrictions on contacting youths

By Anick Jesdanm
Associated Press writer

NEW YORK — MySpace.com is planning new restrictions on how adults may contact its younger users in response to growing concerns about the safety of teenagers who frequent the popular online social networking site.

The site already prohibits kids 13 and under from setting up accounts and displays only partial profiles for those registered as 14 or 15 years old unless the person viewing the profile is already on the teen's list of friends.

Under the changes, expected to be announced Wednesday and taking effect next week, MySpace users who are 18 or over could no longer request to be on a 14- or 15-year-old's friends' list unless they already know either the youth's e-mail address or full name.

Any user will still be able to get a partial profile of younger users by searching for other attributes, such as display name. The difference is that currently, adults can then request to be added to a youth's list to view the full profile; that option will disappear for adults registered as 18 and over.

However, users under 18 can still make such contact, and MySpace has no mechanism for verifying that users submit their true age when registering. That means adults can sign up as teens and request to be on a 14-year-old's list of friends, which would enable the full profiles.

The partial profiles display gender, age and city. Full profiles describe hobbies, schools and any other personal details a user may provide.

Driven largely by word of mouth, MySpace has grown astronomically since its launch in January 2004 and is now second in the United States among all Web sites by total page views, behind only Yahoo Inc., according to comScore Media Metrix. The site currently has some 87 million users, about a quarter registered as minors, according to the company.

At MySpace, which was bought last year by News Corp. for $580 million, users can expand their circles of friends by exploiting existing connections, rather than meeting randomly or by keyword matches alone.

It offers a mix of features — message boards, games, Web journals — designed to keep its youth-oriented visitors clicking on its advertising-supported pages.

MySpace has recently become a target of parents, schools and law enforcement officials concerned that teens who hang out at MySpace can fall victim to sexual predators.

Just this week, a 14-year-old girl who says she was sexually assaulted by a 19-year-old user sued MySpace and News Corp., seeking $30 million in damages. And earlier this month, a 16-year-old girl who tricked her parents into getting her a passport flew to the Mideast to be with a 20-year-old man she met through MySpace. U.S. officials in Jordan persuaded the teen to turn around and go home.

MySpace officials say the new restrictions have been long planned and are unrelated to recent events.

Besides the contact restrictions, all users — not just those 14 and 15 — will have the option to make only partial profiles available to those not already on their friends list.

All users also will get an option to prevent contact from people outside their age group. Currently, they may only choose to require that a person know their e-mail or last name first; that will remain an option to those 16 and over, even as it becomes mandatory for those younger.

MySpace also will beef up its ad-targeting technology, so that it can avoid displaying gambling and other adult-themed sites on minors' profile pages and target special public-service announcements to them.

Ammonia rules may need additional work

It was definitely refreshing to see Idaho dairy operators and conservation groups work together on new state rules for ammonia emissions last year.

Whether the new rules are refreshing enough for dairy neighbors, however, is still a mystery. Idaho can pat itself on the back for being the first state to implement dairy ammonia regulations into state law. The rules go into effect on July 1 for confined animal feeding operations that produce 100 tons or more of ammonia a year.

But the new rules and air permit provisions which were crafted through 18 months of negotiations between dairies and the Idaho Conservation League, may not be fully up to snuff.

Ammonia emissions are actually not as noticeable to the senses as the other common dairy emission, hydrogen sulfide. And health risks have yet to be linked with ammonia air emissions. But some water quality issues can arise with high ammonia emissions.

Overall, ammonia is still the greatest emission material put out by dairies.

ICL and the dairies hashed out their new rules after going to U.S. District Court, where Judge Lynn Winn will raise the Idaho Department of Environmental Quality should issue permits for large ammonia-emitting dairies. The rules they agreed upon are good, maybe too good for dairies. The Idaho Dairyman's Association says most dairies in Magic Valley have met the rules, and they applauded the rules for giving operators flexibility to meet the rules "sufficient best management practices."

But those rules do not include any kind of reporting requirements, which was a sticking point to members of the ICL. Other industries that emit ammonia and hydrogen sulfide must comply with federal regulations under Superfund laws such as the Comprehensive Environmental Response Compensation and Liability Act (CERCLA) and the Emergency Planning and Community Right-to-Know Act.

Dairies are rightfully concerned about applying those industry regulations to agricultural operations. But if the new rules don't reduce the problem, a new reporting method will be necessary. In addition to revised state rules, the federal Environmental Protection Agency may also weigh in on ammonia rules tailored for larger CAFOs.

Having proven an ability to cooperate on regulation goals, dairy operators and environmental groups can build on their success if they need to return to the drawing board.

'Mac' leaves his mark

You can't give one single person credit for years of economic development in the greater Twin Falls area, but Economic Development Director Dave McAlindin is certainly high on the list.

To no one's real surprise, the amiable and hard-working McAlindin has become an economic commodity himself after 18 years of recruiting major employers to Twin Falls. This month, McAlindin will leave Twin Falls to become the economic development administrator for Glendale, Ariz. The Phoenix suburb has grown into its own boomtown with 250,000 residents and a robust economy.

"Mac" will fit right into that metropolitan expansion since he was one of the key officials who have helped orchestrate economic growth in Twin Falls. While some big fish, such as Micron, got away a decade ago, the city labored on and landed big employers Seastrom Manufacturing and Solo Cup. Then came Dell Computers, a major catch for Twin Falls in what was a slowing period for Idaho, followed by Jayco and its strong run in recreational vehicle manufacturing.

Again, McAlindin shares those accomplishments with numerous other officials in city government, chamber of commerce, Idaho Commerce and Labor, the College of Southern Idaho and Southern Economic Development Organization. But his good-humored style and intuitive mind helped land big deals and big promise for Twin Falls.

He leaves Twin Falls in a strong position for today and the future. That's what economic development is all about.

A new political plan for Newt

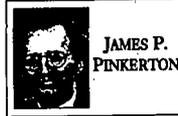

Inside the mind of Newt Gingrich, Mitt can help shape the agenda for both parties in 2006. I can win the presidency in 2008.

I'm looking now at the recent record, starting with two hot issues: health care and immigration. On health care, the June 12 Washington Post ran a front-page story, "States' Changes Reshape Medicaid/New Restrictions Aim to Save Money"; the piece gave me, and my group, The Center for Health Transformation, credit for instigating the shift toward prevention and personal responsibility among Medicaid recipients. Outcomes are improved, and money is saved — it's a win-win for governors of both parties.

And as for immigration, I was one of the first to see the importance of border control. Even before Sept. 11, I argued for a Department of Homeland Security. So now, Bush's plan for guest workers will have to wait. The House Republicans, who still listen to me, will be the big winners; they will block the White House plan and reap the benefit with the voters. By contrast, the Senate Republicans sided with the White House, taking the side of open borders; now they will reap an unpleasant political whirlwind. Indeed, the Senate whirlwind-reapers include most of the '08 hopefuls: John McCain, Bill Frist, Chuck Hagel and Sam Brownback. All voted wrong this year; all will be blown away in the GOP primaries.

Meanwhile, the Democrats are using my political ideas. Look at this headline in The Hill on June 15: "Democrats can't get enough of Newt Gingrich's slogan." Back in March I had said the Democrats could recapture Congress by using a two-word slogan: "Had enough?" Those two simple words, after all, were used by the Republicans back in their victorious year of 1946.

And now the Pelosi Democrats, proving again that they have no ideas of their own, have taken my advice. Here's a quote from that newspaper piece: "During her speech to the liberal group Campaign for America's Future this week, House Democratic Leader Nancy Pelosi asked the crowd, 'Have you had enough?' Those Democrats sure are block-heads. I tell them to use a 60-year-old campaign slogan, and they do it. Maybe I should next tell them to buy a big bill-slogan: "Had enough?" Those two simple words, after all, were used by the Republicans back in their victorious year of 1946.

And now the Pelosi Democrats, proving again that they have no ideas of their own, have taken my advice. Here's a quote from that newspaper piece: "During her speech to the liberal group Campaign for America's Future this week, House Democratic Leader Nancy Pelosi asked the crowd, 'Have you had enough?' Those Democrats sure are block-heads. I tell them to use a 60-year-old campaign slogan, and they do it. Maybe I should next tell them to buy a big billboard at Ebbefts Field.

And if "Had enough" is such a good slogan for modern times, the Dems should have wondered, why didn't I, Newt, use it in 1994 when I led the Republican campaign to recapture Congress? Well, 12 years ago, I laid out an ambitious 10-item agenda, "The Contract With America."

And if we do well in the midterm elections, I'll get again, I'll soon find out how many points I've earned, because I'm running for the White House in '08. I see Gallup has me in third place among GOPers, behind McCain and Rudy Giuliani. That's better than it sounds, because New York City's former mayor probably won't run, and, as I said, McCain can't be nominated. I can't recapture that political charm between himself and the Christian Right on immigration and gay marriage. So if I'll be me vs. the rest of the pack, and I'm already leading that pack.

Some say I'm too much of a hothead to go the distance. Well, I've made mistakes. But I've still got my brain, and my base among conservative academics. Yet, because I've been out of the House speakership for eight years, I suffer no linkage to troubled Republicans in Congress, or in the White House. I've got experience, but I'm also new blood. Finally, this is a Republican country — I know, because I helped make it such. When '08 choice becomes clearer, voters will like me better than some liberal. So if I get the nomination, I can win this thing. The 44th president.

Forcing Democrats outside the box

Judging from the amount of publicity they gleaned, the liberal bloggers who gathered in Las Vegas recently for the first annual YearlyKos convention represent the cutting edge of thinking in the Democratic Party.

But the blogs I have scanned are heavier on vituperation of President Bush and other targets than on creative thought. The candidates who have been adopted as heroes by Markos Moulitsas Zuniga, the convention's leader, and his fellow bloggers have mainly followed in the heat of battle — as was the case with Howard Dean in 2004 — or come up short, as happened to the Democratic challengers in special House elections in Ohio and California.

Fortunately, there are others than these "net roots" activists working on the challenge of defining the Democratic message. I do not include the Democratic congressional leadership in the hopeful camp. The new legislative "agenda" Nancy Pelosi and Harry Reid and Co. trotted out last week was as meager as it was unimaginative.

But a covey of relatively new Democratic think tanks in Washington are sponsoring conferences and lectures where more substantial political ideas are being aired and debated. And this past week, two new publications appeared — one online and the other in print — that promise to push the thinking of the opposition party even further.

Promising as they are, the two publications also show just how hard it is to break free from conventional wisdom without leaving the universality of realistic policy. The Democratic Strategist, the new online publication, comes with highly reputable sponsorship. Its editors are William Galston, a former Clinton White House policy adviser now at the Brookings Institution, Stanley Greenberg, the pollster for both Bill Clinton and Al Gore, and Roy Teixeira, an author now affiliated with two think tanks, the Center for American Progress and the Century Foundation.

They declare that "The Democratic Strategist will be firmly and insistently based on facts and data. It will seek strategies rooted in empirical research from the fields of public opinion research, political demography and other social sciences and will avoid empty rhetoric and abstract theorizing."

Would that it were so. That kind of intellectual discipline is sorely needed in Democratic debates. But the first issue is filled with pieces in which familiar Democratic names take up familiar positions, with few of them bothering to adduce any evidence to support their views.

Thus, we have blogger Jerome Armstrong, a Kos partner, arguing for mounting campaigns everywhere, no matter the odds; Robert Borogage of the leftist Campaign for America's Future inciting Democrats to take on big oil and all of corporate America; civil rights activist Donna Brazile plumping for cleaning up elections; and the Kennedy School's Elaine Kamarck arguing that Dukakis-style "competence" should be the Democrats' battle cry.

To be fair, some contributors such as columnist Harold Meyerson and union president John Wilhelm, do root their arguments in solid economic or demographic trends. But as Galston conceded in an interview, the editors and the readers will have to be more insistent that future authors live up to the promise of the reality-based publication.

The other new entry, called Democracy: A Journal of Ideas, is edited by 33-year-old Kenneth Baer and 30-year-old Andre Cherny, both former speechwriters for "Gore. Their first issue is really impressive.

The lead article, by Jedediah Purdy of Duke Law School, explores the demographic trends around the world. It discusses the implications of population decline in Europe and Japan and how the abortion-influenced gender imbalances in China, India, Pakistan and Afghanistan result in a "surplus" of millions of single men in those fragile democracies or authoritarian states. Purdy ends by suggesting a long-term bargain between Europe and Asia, or maybe between the United States and India, in which the advanced nations pump development money in now, in return for future help in financing their retirees' pensions.

As Baer and Cherny told me, "this is the kind of idea no politician could put forward now," but it points to a real problem — and challenges people to think creatively.

Another provocative piece, by Jason Furman of the Center on Budget and Policy Priorities, focuses on the perverse distributional effects of tax deductions for employer-based health insurance. At present, they subsidize the well-to-do and short-change those struggling to afford health insurance. This article spotlights an important and often-neglected avenue for change whenever Congress decides to get serious about tacking health care in this country.

Wendell comedy is a fast-moving laugher

'Tis the season for melodramas, and the Snake River Community Players in Wendell have one that is great entertainment and it's perfect for the entire family. "Doctor Jeckyll, No Place to Hyde" was written by Pat Cook and is directed by Wendell's own Adam Kroeger. The play takes place in the medical office of one very timid and kind Henry Jeckyll (Wade Sugden), who is keen on creating new drugs for the betterment of the world. Chives (Marc Walker), Henry's down-trodden, sarcastic manservant, holds his own with hilarious commentaries about Henry's loud and pompous fiancée, Prunella Pepperdill (Jennifer Miller), and Henry's rather large dowager mother, Madam Jeckyll (Lois Irwin).

The fun heats up with the appearance of a French cabaret singer, Andre LaPlume (Ross Irwin), and the flirtatious daughter of Andre, Mimì LaPlume (Amber Hall), and Cats LaPlume (Mindl Harms), wife of Andre. Add Officer Crackle (Sean Hake), an English bobbie, plus Ethyl Jeckyll (Nichole Bell), who is a bit dim-witted and you have an evening of pure, fun entertainment.

The transition from Jeckyll to Hyde is an amazing feat. I urge all who get a chance to support these wonderful actors as well as enjoy an evening of an actual stage play at the Wendell High School auditorium.

There's only two more days to see this wonderful fun show, June 23 and 24 beginning at 7:30 p.m. Admission is $5 worth the $6 for adults, $5 for senior citizens or 12 and under, or $25 for families. All those behind the scenes work very hard to make this play fast moving and a quick hour and a half of laughter and relaxation. By the way, can you say Ethyl Jeckyll Crackle really fast?

Veteran crusader seeks to prohibit smoking while pregnant

First they came for the workplace, then for people's homes and cars, and then the great outdoors. Now the anti-tobacco jihadists, having helped ban smoking in most public and many private places, have turned their attention to the most private space of all — the womb.

KATHLEEN PARKER

That very personal place where humans incubate could be the next battlefield between smokers and those who have never uttered the words: "It's none of my beeswax."

This latest brainstorm comes from Arkansas, where Rep. Bob Mathis successfully shepherded legislation making it unlawful to smoke in cars in which small children are passengers.

Apparently not satisfied with saving the recently born, Mathis wondered whether it would be constitutional to prohibit mothers from smoking while pregnant. Studies show, after all, that fetuses are at risk for low birth weight if their mothers smoke while pregnant.

No, wait, this just in: A new study in Australia shows that women who smoke while pregnant may cause their children to become obese.

Underweight, overweight, oh-what-ever. Both are bad, both involve tobacco, and that's enough for John Banzhaf, the heavyweight George Washington University law professor who for years has led the anti-smoking brigade.

More recently, he's best known for leading the charge against fast-food restaurants that serve fat-laden foods to unsuspecting, um, fat people — otherwise known as people who eat too much and wouldn't need a nutritional label if it had a cherry on top.

Banzhaf likes to sue people, in other words, and he's been enormously successful. Which is to say, pregnant smokers, beware.

Already Banzhaf is setting his sights on fetal rights related to their smoking moms. While it is legally defensible to abort a fetus up until moments before birth, it is apparently inconceivable that a woman would expose her unborn child to the harmful effects of smoking.

No one's suggesting that pregnant women should smoke, or drink, or pole-dance — or whatever tempts the masses these days. But people have a right to be stupid, to make bad decisions, to marry the wrong guy, to eat the wrong foods and, alas, to elect the wrong people to public office.

Speaking of which, because of Arkansas' term limits, Mathis won't be able to pursue his idea of criminalizing pregnant smokers. And Arkansas Gov. Mike Huckabee, whom Banzhaf has credited with endorsing the concept of banning smoking while pregnant, says he has been misrepresented. When reporters asked what he thought about the idea, Huckabee said he hadn't examined the legal aspects, but that from a health standpoint, "Heck, yeah, it makes sense."

Clarifying that statement Tuesday, Huckabee told me he would prefer to let common sense, rather than legislation, guide expectant mothers away from tobacco.

In a final bit of irony, the move to prohibit smoking while pregnant would actually tend to strengthen the argument that a fetus is a human being, entitled to all the rights and privileges accorded personhood.

Instead, it merely strengthens the case that government has no business regulating a woman's womb. Or any other body part.

Bush visited the Green Zone, not the real Iraq

Ah, my mind is so eased now that George has gone to Iraq for five hours to find out what's really going on in a tiny part of the four-square-mile Green Zone.

You know, that's where the new government lives and works and enjoys regular water and electricity and security, security, security. I wonder how easy it was to fit the 3,500 Bush guards in this zone.

Scott Johnson wrote in Newsweek: "One recent night at a saloon called The Bunker, a resident contractor asked, 'So, what's going on out there in Iraq anyway?' He hadn't left the Green Zone in six months. 'It's like Plato's republic in here, all of these well-meaning, smart people who want to do the right thing,' says one security contractor and Green Zone regular. 'But they never leave here and they have no idea what's happening in the country they're supposed to be building. It's totally absurd.'"

But gosh, if we hadn't kept on we wouldn't have gotten Zarqawi. That's what this administration tells us. In truth, wasn't this about the 20th time we "got Zarqawi"? And this one won't make any more difference than the last 20 did.

Try going outside of the Green Zone once in a while, even if it's only on the net because you surely won't see it on evening news. There are even pictures <http://www.alicenet.org/waruniraq/37572/>.

If you don't know by now, this is the most corrupt administration and Congress ever, then seeing you a little truth won't make any difference. There is overwhelming proof that this government has lied to and cheated the American people over and over again while systematically destroying rights which we have taken for granted.

"There's an old saying in Tennessee — I know it's in Texas, probably in Tennessee — that says, fool me once, shame on me — shame on you. Fool me — you can't get fooled again." — President George W. Bush.

Well, it's no longer possible to count the times you've been fooled even if you use all of your fingers and toes.

Military to send thousands of pieces of equipment home

BALAD, Iraq (AP) — The U.S. military has begun sending thousands of Humvees and other war-torn equipment home as more Iraqi units join the fight against insurgents and American units scheduled for Iraq duty have their orders canceled.

In the last four months, the Army has tagged 7,000 Humvees and 17,000 other pieces of equipment to be shipped to the United States to be rebuilt. They then will be distributed among active and reserve units at home, or possibly returned to equip Iraqi security forces.

The military said the shipments will result in a reduction in the amount of U.S. equipment in Iraq, a cut made possible because the area patrolled by American troops is shrinking. The move also anticipates that the number of American troops in Iraq will decline.

"This is all a byproduct of Iraqi forces accepting battle space and U.S. forces being displaced, which has allowed our government to decide not to send more forces," said Col. Jack O'Connor, commander of the U.S. Army Materiel Command's sustainment brigade in Iraq.

In one such move Monday, the U.S. Army's 1st Brigade Combat Team, 4th Infantry Division, based in Fort Hood, Texas, transferred responsibility for more than 235 square miles just north of Baghdad to the Iraqi Army's 9th Division.

Pentagon officials have said that the 132,000 U.S. troops in Iraq could be reduced to about 100,000 by the end of the year, if security doesn't further deteriorate.

Four combat brigades, in Texas, Alaska and Colorado, were notified this week that they will deploy to Iraq late this year. The roughly 21,000 soldiers would replace troops heading home from Iraq, and do not signal a change.

But analysts say that removing so much equipment now suggests commanders are laying the groundwork for an extensive reduction.

"It is much harder to move equipment than it is to move people," said Loren Thompson of the Lexington Institute. "So if the Army is increasing its movement of equipment out of the country, that may signal that it expects fewer soldiers in Iraq six or 12 months from now."

U.S. military commanders in Iraq have refused to set a timetable for a complete withdrawal of coalition troops, saying such a draw-down would be based on ground conditions. O'Connor said the exodus of American rubber and steel from Iraq is scheduled to continue into the fall. Equipment headed back to the United States includes armored vehicles used by soldiers on patrols as well as many unarmored vehicles typically used inside the boundaries of secure U.S. military posts.

In most cases, a unit returning home from Iraq has left its equipment behind for the unit sent to replace them. But as more units rotate home between June and September, fewer U.S. units will be sent in behind them, O'Connor said.

At least two brigade-size units, totaling about 6,500 soldiers, that were scheduled to deploy to Iraq have been told to stay home, he said.

Often, the military is able to fix equipment in Iraq or in nearby countries.

Chinese scientists reveal earliest human case of bird flu

The Associated Press

Chinese scientists said Wednesday that a man initially thought to have SARS actually died of bird flu in November 2003 — two years before the communist country reported any human bird flu infections on the mainland to the World Health Organization.

At the last minute, the scientists asked without explanation to withdraw the report, but a medical journal had already printed it.

The man's death in Beijing raises the possibility that other cases attributed to SARS may have actually been the deadly H5N1 flu.

"It's hard to believe that this is the only person in all of China who developed H5N1" that year, said Dr. John Treanor, a flu expert at the University of Rochester.

WHO was surprised by the report, which came not from the Chinese government but from eight scientists in a research letter in the New England Journal of Medicine.

"We will formally request the Ministry of Health to clarify this," and why it has taken more than two years to come to light, said Roy Wadwa, a WHO spokesman in China.

At least one scientist e-mailed the journal Wednesday morning, asking that the report be withdrawn. With the article already in print, journal editors were waiting to see whether the authors would now retract the paper.

"We can't speculate" what the problem was, said journal spokeswoman Karen Pedersen.

The Beijing case does not necessarily mean the world faces any greater danger of a pandemic bird flu does not spread easily from person to person, and nearly all human cases have involved close contact with infected poultry.

But the report raises questions about the ability and willingness of scientists in China to study the disease. During the SARS outbreak, some public health experts questioned whether the Chinese were being candid about the extent of the crisis.

Dr. Lindsey Baden, a New England Journal editor, said he does not know what caused the delay in reporting the Beijing bird flu case but suspects it took time for scientists to realize they had a novel H5N1 strain and to do the genetic sequencing needed to analyze it.

Cowboys hold off Denver-area all-stars

Times-News

ENGLEWOOD, Colo. — Talk about a successful pit stop. On their way to South Dakota for the four-day Rapid City Tournament, the Twin Falls Coyboys AA squad paused in the Denver area to pick up a big win Wednesday.

The Coyboys topped Cherry Creek 9-8 after belting out 14 hits and getting solid pitching from Chance Elam. "Our guys played really well," said Twin Falls head coach Tim Stadelmeier. "I was really pleased with the way we swung the bats."

Cherry Creek is Connie Mack all-star team, so coming away victorious was a big deal for Stadelmeier.

"They draw from all over the Denver area, so this is a great win for our guys," said Stadelmeier.

While his team stranded 13 runners in the win, the Coyboys also survived Cherry Creek's rally attempt in the eighth inning. The home team loaded the bases with just one out on the board, but Twin Falls survived and held on.

Elam pitched 6 1/3 innings, striking out two. Mitchell Dame relieved him and struck out one.

"Chance threw extremely well," said Stadelmeier, who praised his hurler's ability to generate ground balls that made for easy outs. Elam surrendered only one earned run.

A trio of Twin Falls' errors in the third inning let Cherry Creek take a 2-1 lead. But that was the only deficit the Coyboys faced in the game. They responded with two runs in the fourth and five more in the fifth to build an 8-3 edge.

Offensively, Kenny Steelman and Drew Bernhard both went 3-for-5, while Nate Roberson was 2-for-5, including a triple. Bo Folsking added a double.

The Coyboys open their stay in Rapid City with a 5 p.m. game Friday against Bozeman, Mont. In all, they'll play five games at the tournament before returning home to host the Cowboy Classic June 29 through July 2.

This 'Air Apparent' becomes own man

Dwanye Wade grew up like a lot of kids with a basketball in his hands and a hoop never more than a 3-point shot away. He wanted to be Michael Jordan.

"I remember when the Bulls won their first championship, sitting at home on my floor watching the games.

JIM LITKE

And then Jordan did his shot, the famous shot. I went right in the backyard, turned the lights on and couldn't do it myself," he recalled. "I had no athletic ability."

That was the 1991 NBA finals. Wade was 9 years old. It was probably the first time — but hardly the last — he realized the comparison would never be exact. That didn't stop others from anointing the slender kid with serious hops and the uncanny ability to get up off the floor as the latest in a long line of 'Air Apparents.'

Which may be why the best thing that ever happened to Wade was playing for a coach who wasn't easily impressed. After the Heat rode Wade's coattails one final time Tuesday night to claim their first championship, someone asked Pat Riley whether he'd ever seen anybody so good so early in his career.

"Yeah," he replied without hesitation. "I mean, he's good. I love Dwanye and I don't want to disrespect his development. But I watched Michael when he was young. I watched Magic and Larry. Riley has had a front-row seat on NBA benches long enough that perspective might be his strongest suit. He's won with the best, and been buried by them more times than he cares to remember. It's why he didn't have to think long to recall an even better playoff debut than Wade's, including the crowning achievement of finals MVP."

Riley was a Lakers assistant when Magic, all of 20, moved from the backcourt into the center-jump circle for Game 6 of the 1989 championship, filling in for the injured Kareem Abdul-Jabbar. Forty-two points, 15 rebounds, seven assists and three steals later, Johnson became the first rookie ever to be named MVP. Small wonder Riley wanted to steer the conversation in a different direction.

"Dwanye is who he is," the coach added. "His signature is all over this league."

Wade's signature was all

Remembering the longest game

PawSox to mark 25th anniversary of marathon contest

The Associated Press

PROVIDENCE, R.I. — They played baseball through the night and into the morning as the scoreless innings mounted and daybreak drew nearer.

By the time the minor league game finally ended — after eight hours, in the 33rd inning, on a bases-loaded single to left field — it would be part of baseball history.

On Friday, the Pawtucket Red Sox celebrate the 25th anniversary of the longest game in professional baseball history, their 3-2 victory over the Rochester Red Wings that spanned two nights over two months and booted future big-league stars like Wade Boggs and Cal Ripken Jr.

"It was a little difficult to stay focused because in the back of your mind, you've got to be thinking, 'Geez, when is this game going to end?'" said Dave Koza, who drove in the game-winning run for Pawtucket.

The game began April 18, 1981 at McCoy Stadium in Pawtucket, a low-scoring duel between the Triple-A affiliates of the Baltimore Orioles and Boston Red Sox.

The score was tied 1-all after the first nine innings, and after the next nine innings, and beyond. As the game dragged on, players struggled through bitter cold and wind to push another run across the plate.

Batter after batter failed.

"Guys that were big-league players and on their way to being big-league players couldn't get a hit and couldn't do anything to change the course of the game for 32 innings," said Dallas Williams, a Rochester outfielder who went a remarkably futile 0-for-13 and is now the hitting coach for the Triple-A Ottawa Lynx.

At one point, Sam Bowen, a home run hitter for Pawtucket, belted a ball that sailed out of the park and looked to be a homer — until it was blown back onto the field and caught.

"I remember thinking, 'This is different,'" said Bruce Hurst, who was the seventh pitcher of the night for the PawSox and later pitched for Boston.

As the game wore on, the temperature dropped into the low 40s. To keep warm, players built a bonfire in a metal trash can with wood from broken bats.

Finally, in the 21st inning, Rochester scored to go up 2-1. But just when it seemed the game would end, the PawSox tied it in their turn at bat.

"People were very upset as it went on," said Marty Barrett, who later went on to play with Boston. "They were like, 'Come on,' especially after it got on to 1 o'clock."

But minor league ballplayers are also hungrier to make it to the majors. A dominant pitching performance or dizzying power display can get them a chance at the big leagues. Giving up wasn't an option.

"The team that we had, you play for a certain amount of innings, you're not letting this one go," Koza recalled. "You're going to win this."

Several players on the field that night went on to success in the major leagues.

Boggs, a Hall of Fame Red Sox third baseman, was 4-for-12 that night for Pawtucket. Ripken was celebrated for his endurance long after the longest game, setting the record for consecutive games played and earning the nickname "Iron Man" with the Baltimore Orioles.

Boggs, Hurst and Barrett were among the members of the 1986 Boston team that reached the World Series.

"We ran the gamut," said Hurst, who recalls striking out Ripken around 4 a.m. and facing him in the major leagues. "We went from, 'OK, let's win this thing' to 'OK, I don't care who wins this thing,' to realizing that the game had a shot at breaking a record."

At the time, the record in the minor leagues was 29 innings, set in 1966, according to Freddy Berowski, a researcher at the National Baseball Hall of Fame in Cooperstown, N.Y. The record for a Major League game was and still is 26 innings, established in 1920.

The game was suspended shortly after 4 a.m., after 32 innings, on the orders of the International League president. Hurst remembers the sun pecking out as he and his wife drove home that Easter morning.

The game resumed in Pawtucket on June 23 when the Red Wings, returned to town. With Major League Baseball interrupted by a players' strike, litte

World Cup is a fashion bonanza — of sorts

The Associated Press

COLOGNE, Germany — Dan Lavender needed something special to show his irrational devotion to England — a simple hat and T-shirt wouldn't cut it.

His first thought was a short mohawk, similar to David Beckham's at the 2002 World Cup. Then came his epiphany: His dome would resemble St. George's Cross, the symbol on England's flag, if he left another thin strip of hair from ear to ear.

And why not dye the whole 'do England red?

Fifty bucks and 45 minutes later, Lavender had put the fan in fanatic, needing only to nod his head when others wear England's flag.

"I can't explain it," said Lavender, cheerfully unapologetic. "It's in your blood, really. You feel like you have to go to your full length for your country."

Certainly to the edges of good fashion sense.

The World Cup is the greatest sporting spectacle in the world, and a style bonanza, as well. Head-scratching hairstyles, bold color choices, accessories that defy logic — and that's just the players.

It's like New York's Fashion Week, only without the catfiness and the Olsen twins.

"Style really has nothing to do with soccer," said Ivory Coast's Bakary Kone, who wears his hair long and shaggy in the back. "Winning is all that matters."

Yes, but when the world's watching, you've got to look your best. Or at least make yourself stand out.

Beckham, the England star who launched trends the world over with his mohawk in 2002 and corrows a year later, is downright tame this time around. He's gone for the unkempt look — which surely he still spends plenty of time achieving.

Plenty of others are stepping up to — and down from — the fashion plate. Italian players were styling in sharp, dark blue Dolce & Gabbana suits when they arrived in Germany. The U.S. team's formal uniform was made by Hugo Boss, but the brownish-grey duds are just that, and the players have been seen in little besides workout gear.

The Dutch and Ivory Coast clinched the all-Halloween team for their orange flows. Angola's bright yellow socks could double as flashlights if the team gets out, while defender Loco has a halcyone to match his name — his head shaved except for a small, fringe-like patch of braids at the front hairline.

Ukraine is halfway to a Beatles cover band with two mop tops. Ivory Coast's Ndré Romaric went for the Denus Rodman look, bleaching his hair blond.

"It's just a style I came up with," Romaric said. "Just a style and nothing else."

The Croatians appear to have gotten a deal on their red-and-white checked uniforms from the Big Boy restaurant chain, but they get a pass. The checkerboard dates back to the first Croatian king, though it was banned while Croatia was part of Yugoslavia and people were jailed for displaying it. Now that they're free to wear it again, don't think they're doing it small.

For fans, it goes without saying team colors are the uniform. But apparently there's no such thing as too tacky when it comes to supporting your country.

Fifteen Americans went to the first U.S. game dressed as Elvis: white polycarbonate jump suits with silver and gold eagles on the front. And bad black wigs of course. Some of the Swedes are sporting chessheads, and the Swedes are wearing blue-and-yellow Viking helmets, complete with yellow braids.

Clemens readies for return to the major leagues

HOUSTON (AP) — Roger Clemens is prepared for his 2006 major league debut on Thursday night against the Minnesota Twins just 23 days and three minor league starts after rejoining the Houston Astros.

Houston Astros pitcher Roger Clemens, right, hugs outfielder Preston Wilson prior to a baseball game against the Minnesota Twins Tuesday in Houston. Clemens came out of retirement for the third time to re-sign with Astros and is scheduled to pitch today against the Twins.

But the 43-year-old seven-time Cy Young winner doesn't think the return would have been possible if not for the little reason — his son Kobay's injured pinky finger.

Playing in the World Baseball Classic, followed by Kobay returning home after the injury forced him into more intense training during his off time than he would have done otherwise.

"I don't know if I'd be here today," he said. "I don't know if I would have made that commitment because I advanced a little bit further. It was somewhat of my spring training."

His first start comes exactly eight months after his last major league appearance, when he left Game 1 of the World Series with a strained hamstring.

In his Class-A start for the Lexington Legends, where he played alongside Kobay, he allowed an early home run then struck out six and walked none in three innings. In act two at Double-A Corpus Christi he struck out 11 to tie a team record for strikeouts and in his Triple-A start Friday, he allowed three runs and struck out five in 5-2-3 innings.

Clemens said he knows his pitch count will be watched carefully by Astros manager Jim Garner and pitching coach Phil Hickey. He hopes to last between 100-110 pitches.

"I'm going to try to be as honest as I can with them on how I feel," Clemens said. "I've done the work to prepare myself. I think my arm is where I want it to be. My legs, I still think I can get a little more endurance and stamina there."

He's eager to "get it going" with his teammates in the majors and has two he'll remind himself of a few things when he takes the mound: "Staying tall, not rushing, not trying to overdo things until I know I'm good and hot," he said.

Unfortunately for the Twins, Clemens' comeback coincides with the first series between the two teams in five years. Clemens has the highest win total of any pitcher against Minnesota with a 23-12 record and a 3.01 ERA.

When told of the glowing things Twins players were saying of him, Clemens blew it off.

Brewers bring end to Tigers' win streak

MILWAUKEE (AP) — Rickie Weeks' two-run homer with two outs in the seventh inning helped Milwaukee to a 4-3 victory over Detroit on Wednesday, snapping the Tigers' six-game winning streak.

Detroit Tigers' Craig Monroe slides safely home as Milwaukee Brewers catcher Chad Moeller waits for the throw during the second inning of a baseball game Wednesday, June 21, 2006, in Milwaukee. Monroe scored from second on a hit by Nate Robertson.

Weeks' seventh homer of the season was off reliever Joel Zumaya, Detroit starter. Nate Robertson gave up three runs over two earned in 6-2-3 innings before giving up a pinch-hit single to Chris Barnwell, his first major league hit. Zumaya (3-1) came in and gave up the home run.

struck out a season-high six in five innings and drove in a run with a sacrifice fly. Johnny Damon went 3-for-3 with an RBI for New York, which has won two straight after losing eight of 11.

SAN FRANCISCO — Maicer Izturis hit a tiebreaking, three-run double in the eighth inning, and Los Angeles avoided a three-game sweep by San Francisco.

Devil Rays 3, Diamondbacks 2

ST. PETERSBURG, Fla. — Roidke James Shields allowed four hits in seven innings and Rocco Baldelli continued his torrid hitting with a run-scoring double to help Tampa Bay beat the slumping Diamondbacks.

Shields (4-0) became the first Devil Rays pitcher to begin his career with four straight victories. He held the Diamondbacks hitless until the fifth inning and finished with five strikeouts and three walks.

Blue Jays 6, Braves 3

ATLANTA — Lyle Overbay had two RBIs in Toronto's four-run third inning and the Blue Jays beat Atlanta to give the Braves their longest losing streak in 18 years.

Tim Lincecum (6-9), who has dominated Toronto in his career, couldn't rescue the Braves from their first nine-game losing streak since opening the 1988 season with 10 straight losses.

Red Sox 9, Nationals 3

BOSTON — Jon Lester struck out 10 in six innings in his third major league game. David Ortiz hit a grand slam and the Red Sox won their sixth straight.

Lester, Boston's top pitching prospect when he joined the team on June 10, allowed three hits and two walks. He finished his night by striking out Matthew LeCroy on a 92 mph fastball. The left-hander punched his first three strikeouts toward the dugout to a standing ovation.

Lester (2-0) had the most strikeouts since Casey Fossum also had 10 against Cleveland on Sept. 18, 2002.

White Sox 13, Cardinals 5

CHICAGO — Paul Konerko, Jim Thome, Joe Crede and Juan Uribe homered and the Chicago White Sox put on another double-digit offensive display.

The White Sox scored 11 runs with 12 hits in the third inning during Tuesday night's 20-6 victory that featured 24 hits. On Wednesday, they scored four in the first and five in the second to take

Buhl blasts Hillcrest

BUHL — The Buhl Tribe did it again, sweeping yet another Area 4 opponent, in Hillcrest on Wednesday.

Game 1 was a close call as the Tribe broke up a 1-all tie with six runs in the bottom of the fifth for the 7-1 win.

getting by on singles alone.

Hurler Trent Gramer is still undefeated.

In Game 2, it was closer to the Buhl blowout with a 17-5 run-rule win in five innings.

"They're probably saving arms," Reynolds said of Hillcrest, who started a six-game road stretch with the Buhl doubleheader.

Tribe sweeps DH

BUHL — The Buhl Tribe did it again, sweeping yet another Area 4 opponent, in Hillcrest on Wednesday.

Game 1 was a close call as the Tribe broke up a 1-all tie with six runs in the bottom of the fifth for the 7-1 win.

"He had us shut down," Buhl head coach Allyn Reynolds said of Hillcrest pitcher Russ Phillips. "Then he walked a few guys in the fifth. As they say in baseball, walks and errors kill."

Never so fine, in fact.

A season filled with turmoil ended in celebration — and, for Riley, vindication.

As he showed on the dance floor, Riley still has all the right moves. His sweeping roster changes last summer worked. His decision to return as coach when Stan Van Gundy resigned worked. And it all came together Tuesday, when the Heat beat the Dallas Mavericks 95-92 to win Game 6 of the NBA finals — Riley's seventh championship, fifth as a head coach.

"I'd give up six of them for this one. I just would have," Riley said Tuesday night. "I would have traded them all in for this one. It's not disrespectful to any of them that I won. But after 18 years, and chasing, you know, you keep chasing it, you keep chasing it, you get tired. So this gives me a sense of absolute freedom."

Tarheels into championship round of CWS

OMAHA, Neb. (AP) — Jay Cox homered twice and pitched great catch in the ninth inning to help North Carolina move to the College World Series championship round with a 6-5 victory over Cal State Fullerton on Wednesday night.

The Tar Heels (53-13) won Bracket 1 and will play either Rice or Oregon State in the best-of-three final beginning Saturday. Those two teams met later Wednesday, with Rice needing one victory to win Bracket 2. Oregon State would have to beat the Owls twice to reach the final.

North Carolina, which defeated Fullerton 7-5 in 12 innings on Friday, won a rematch that featured 27 hits in what was an anticipated pitcher's duel between Carolina's Daniel Bard and the Titans' Wes Roemer.

Bard (9-3), a first-round draft pick of the Boston Red Sox, gave up a career-high 12 hits in six innings.

Roemer (13-2) allowed six runs on 10 hits in 4-1-3 innings, the shortest of his 30 career starts. The Big West pitcher of the year gave up both of Cox's homers and another by Tim Federowicz.

After allowing three home runs in 16 regular-season starts, Roemer surrendered six in four NCAA tournament starts. He gave up two in his first CWS start against the Tar Heels.

Cox's three-run homer in the third inning put Carolina up 4-2. He and Federowicz hit back-to-back homers in the fifth — the first consecutive homers in the CWS since Missouri State's Greg Mathis and Jacob Hildendorfer did it in 2003 — to give the Tar Heels a 6-3 lead.

Bard left in the seventh after Brett Pill doubled and Danny Dorn singled. David Cooper's single off John Estes and pinch-hitter Cory Vanderhook's sacrifice fly pulled Fullerton to 6-5.

The Titans (50-15) tried to tie it after John Curtis doubled leading off the eighth and moved to third on a groundout. Curtis took off for home on a suicide squeeze but was thrown out when reliever Andrew Cainigan picked up Blake Davis' bunt in front of the mound.

"The Titans, who had come from behind to win their previous two games, stood at the top of the dugout steps in the bottom of the ninth, hats backward and linked with their arms behind their backs."

After Cox crashed into the wall in left field when he caught Cooper's fly for the second out, first-round draft pick Andrew Miller came on for his first relief appearance since 2004. Miller earned the save by getting pinch-hitter Bryan Harris on a soft grounder to shortstop for the final out.

Pawtucket became the focus of the sports world. Players say representatives from Japanese and British media outlets attended the game.

But that night, the longest game in history would end in stunning quick fashion.

Steve Grill, who wasn't even with the Red Wings when the game began, came in to pitch the 33rd inning. He loaded the bases, and the pitcher who relieved him threw a 2-2 curveball to Koza that was lined into left field. Barrett came home with the extra-base-winning run.

"The competitive juices in my body were flowing and, unfortunately, I disappointed myself and the rest of the team," Grill said.

The 33-inning record has held ever since. The PawSox will honor the 25th anniversary with a players' luncheon in Providence and a banquet ceremony.

Hayes said he ran into Ripken on a golf course not long ago.

"We both looked at each other and said, 'Remember that night?' Through it all, through his Hall of Fame career, through it all, that's still the night we talk about."

Portugal powers into Round 2

GEISENKIRCHEN, Germany (AP) — Portugal powered into the second round of the World Cup. Mexico scrambled through.

Luiz Felipe Scolari's makeshift Portugal team, featuring five backups, finished a sweep of its opening-round games with a 2-1 victory over Mexico on Wednesday. Scolari extended his World Cup record of consecutive coaching victories to 10, seven with Brazil in 2002 and three here.

Mexico, coming off a win and a draw, missed a penalty kick and played the last 30 minutes with 10 men. But its door to the knockout round opened when Angola drew with Iran.

Mexico has advanced in the last four World Cups.

Portugal will play the Netherlands in the second round. Mexico gets Argentina.

Argentina 0, Netherlands 0

FRANKFURT, Germany — In his debut as a World Cup starter, Lionel Messi did everything but give Argentina victory.

It didn't matter. The Argentines confirmed their role as title contenders.

Fielding four second-string players, Argentina showed its depth. The Dutch were less impressive.

As soon as the 18-year-old Messi got going, there was little doubt who was running the show for Argentina. During the 69 minutes he played, he set up chances for teammates, tested the inexperienced Dutch defense himself, and showed skills precious few players possess.

Even fewer at such a tender age.

Iran 1, Angola 1

LEIPZIG, Germany — Angola's first World Cup goal wasn't nearly enough to send the Black Antelopes into the second round of the tournament. Sohrab Bekhatiradz scored the tying goal in the 75th minute for Iran.

Needing a win, a Mexico loss to Portugal and help on goal differential to move on, the Angolans couldn't deliver the one part they controlled. They finished in third place in Group D with two points, one ahead of Iran.

Substitute Flavio gave Angola its first goal of the tournament when he broke free from Kaabi Hossain in the penalty box to head a cross from Ze Kalanga over goalkeeper Ebrahim Mirzapour and into the net.

Ivory Coast 3, Serbia-Montenegro 2

MUNICH, Germany — Another 2-0 deficit wasn't enough to stop orange-clad Ivory Coast from stomping away in its eleventh dance.

Taking advantage of two handballs by Milan Dudic that led to goals, Ivory Coast beat Serbia-Montenegro on Boñaventure Kalou's penalty shot in the 86th minute.

Aruna Dindane scored the Elephants' other two goals in a game as thrilling as it was sloppy, with thunder and lightning over head and explosive play by two teams that had already been eliminated.

The first penalty shot by Dindane, who played sparingly as a reserve in Ivory Coast's 2-1 loss to the Netherlands last week, cut the Elephants' deficit to 2-1. He then headed in the tying goal in the second half.

over Game 6, too, but like Magic, his numbers — 36 points, 10 rebounds, five assists, four steals and three blocks — only hint at how special a player he's become. More revealing, Riley pointed out, was how the Heat's cadre of veterans kept looking to Wade for leadership.

Shaquille O'Neal, Gary Payton, Antoine Walker, Alonzo Mourning — each was good enough to be The Man at some other time in some other town. Yet there was never any squabbling and even fewer doubts about whose hands they wanted the ball in when the game was on the line.

"Wouldn't you?" Riley said. "All those guys experienced the same thing for years and years. The ball kept coming to them, coming to them, coming to them, coming to them."

"But they had so much respect for him because they trusted him. They trusted that he wasn't for himself, only they trusted that he was all about winning. And a team of veterans can turn over something to him that's that valuable to them because they know he's going to deliver."

On this night, Wade delivered with the Heat leading 87-81 and a little less than 4 minutes left. He'd stubbornly burned the Mavericks' double- and triple-teams all series long — "Some of that stuff you can't teach," Dallas coach Avery Johnson marveled afterward — and when Wade drifted to the right side of the 3-point arc, defenders Devin Harris and Jerry Stackhouse raged over and dared him to try again.

Instead, Wade spotted James Posey alone in the right corner and dished one more time. In the moment after that, suddenly, the comparisons didn't seem so far-fetched.

All night long, Dallas' defense lived by a simple credo: make somebody, anybody other than Wade beat them. But all night long, those somebody in Miami uniforms struggled to hold up their end of the bargain. But Wade kept giving them opportunities. How many? As a team, the Heat finished 2-for-18 behind the arc. Walker was 0-for-6, Jason Williams 1-for-7 and Payton 0-for-1. Posey was 0-for-3 when Wade went back to him one more time. This time, the 3-point drew nothing but net.

"Biggest play of the game," Riley crowed.

"And here's why: For all his reticence to usher Wade into the Michael, Magic & Larry stratosphere, Riley knows the real measure of greatness isn't what a player can do by himself, but how much better he makes those around him."

Jordan forged his teammates into reliable tools by turning practices into white-hot tests. No one dared to let him down. Magic turned the trick with wondrous passes, putting them in positions where missing a shot was almost tougher than making it. His attitude was infectious. Bird was a little of both, taskmaster or cheer-leader, depending on what the moment demanded.

Wade is still a work in progress. He doesn't have Jordan's dominating presence, Magic's inspirational skills or Bird's versatility — yet. And he only has one ring — so far.

But he already has as much of a following as he could want. "You know, to me, it's still crazy when I walk around and I see people wearing my jersey, people wearing my shoes, people out there, the demand for 'Wade' stuff, it's truly a blessing and still weird to me," Wade said.

"I'm sure some kids will go in the backyard and try to be like me, and that's great. But it's one kid that really does it, and that's my son at home. I see him do it every day. He wants to be Dwyane Wade, and you know," he added, "it's just great, man."

Fashion

One England fan was spotted in a blowup sumo wrestler's costume. What sumo has in common with soccer, or England, wasn't clear. Scottish fans in kilts are roaming Germany — and their team isn't even here.

Fans are, of course, wrapping themselves in flags and painting them on their faces. But the more unusual display is the skunk-flag combination: mohawks made of synthetic hair in the various nations' colors. For women, there are multicolored extensions that look like Barbie hair.

Odd, but stores can hardly keep up. "They're crazy," Ramona Gierlitz, who works at a souvenir shop in Dortmund, said when asked if she had an explanation for the fad.

Another big seller is the stove pipe hat that Abe Lincoln favored — except Abe's hat wasn't puffy or fuzzy, and it's a safe bet he never had one in red, white and blue.

"Or one made to look like a soccer ball."

"I traded some guy on the subway for it,"

said Patrick Hammond of New York, who swapped a red, white and blue fishing hat to get the big, furry version.

The oddest thing of all? Hammond would never consider going to a game in the United States decked from head to toe in team colors as he did for last weekend's match against Italy. Few fans would.

Oh, plenty will wear team jerseys and one or two might even paint their faces. But it's the World Cup that unearths the hidden fashionista.

"You want to be unique when you go to sporting events," said Ben Dekker, a Chicagoan following the U.S. team. "Here you want to be unique, but with the overall goal of supporting your country."

Even if the pictures make you cringe afterward.

TWIN FALLS — No crime was committed by a pregnant woman who miscarried Monday night in a grocery store bathroom, Twin Falls police say.

An unidentified woman informed employees at Smith's Food and Drug of the miscarriage, then left the store, Staff Sgt. Dennis Pullin said. The employees called the police, who found blood in a toilet.

An investigation turned up no sign of foul play.

"We don't even really suspect that Pullin said. 'We just wanted to cover our bases in case something had happened. ... They weren't trying to conceal or hide anything.'"

BLM investigates wildfire

By Nabo Poppio
Times-News writer

WENDELL — The Bureau of Land Management is still investigating the cause of an 8,700-acre fire Tuesday at mile marker 7 on Highway 45.

The 2006 fire, which covered about 13.6 square miles, was definitely man-made, said BLM spokeswoman Sky Buffat. The BLM investigator still has witnesses to talk to before the exact cause is determined.

"It was started on the roadside," Buffat said. "The investigator hasn't come up with anything conclusive."

The fire required 30 BLM wildland fire engines, three air tankers, two helicopters, two air attack planes, two dozers, three water tankers, and 150 federal firefighters in addition to firefighters and equipment from the Wendell, Gooding and Jerome rural fire departments. The fire was driven by wind and for a while could only be fought from the air, Buffat said.

"The wind carried flames so fast that they didn't burn sagebrush, but burned the grass underneath," she said. Most of the firefighters stayed on Wednesday to mop up.

A helping hand

On eve of anniversary, agency faces uncertain future

By Nabo Poppio
Times-News reporter

TWIN FALLS — Seven months ago, Kristy and Robert Tapp were homeless.

Now, they and their two children have their own apartment and a steady source of income.

Their fortune isn't due to anyone else — they did all the work — but they were started down the road to success by the South Central Community Action Partnership.

The agency, which contributed $2.5 million in services to more than 7,045 families between April 2005 and March 2006, will celebrate its 40th anniversary next year. It is part of the state branch of a federal program that helps low-income families and individuals move out of poverty.

In the case of the Tapps, the program is helping pay for their rent, food, a bicycle to get Robert to work and daycare for Michael, 22 months, and eventually Keric, 4 weeks. In return, the Tapps are working through a series of three-month goals that they hope will result in their own home.

Kristy said they would not be where they are now without the agency, especially because they had no money for a home or daycare.

"I have time to get rested, do the things I need to do," she said.

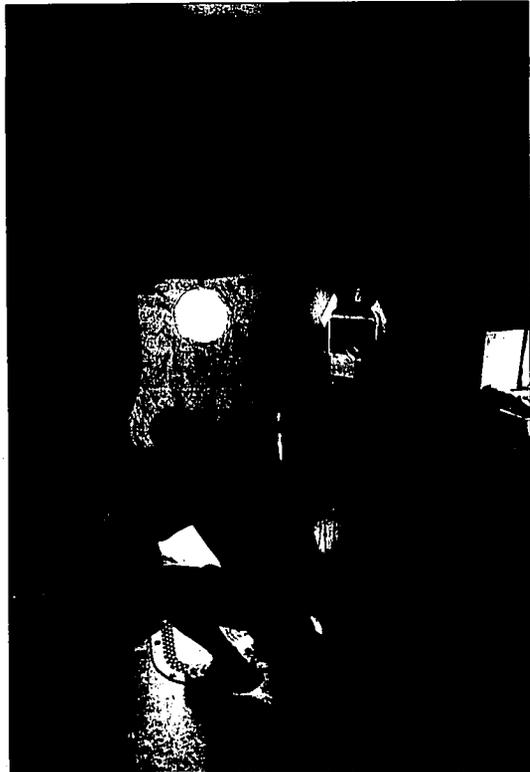

South Central provides such services as food donations, emergency medical assistance and home maintenance, said Ken Robinette, the agency's executive director. It helps people pay their utility bills and buys school supplies for children.

Most of the money comes from federal grants. Several programs are paid for entirely through donations from companies and individuals.

Robinette has big plans for the anniversary next year. He wants to find people the agency has helped over the years and bring them back to talk about where they are now.

"It'll take about a year to prepare," Robinette said.

Sadly, he said, the agency may not be around for its anniversary. The federal Community Service Block Grant, which lawmakers tried to kill last year, is slated for at least a 29 percent cut. The House Appropriations Committee is debating the grant as part of the bill funding the Departments of Labor, Health and Human Services. A budget proposed by President Bush would cut the grant entirely.

"(The grant) is the driving force behind this entire agency," Robinette said. "We're hurting our own citizens."

Four of those citizens, the Tapps, still have a ways to go before moving into a house, but they are determined to get there. After a break to get used to the newest member of the household, they will begin working in July on budgeting and meal planning.

"They're the ones doing this," said Leanne Trappen, the agency's community service director. "All we do is point them in the right direction and they open the door."

Murtaugh to
subdivisionBy Julie Peace
Times-News correspondent

MURTAUGH — Magic Valley's building boom might soon reach out even as far as the tiny burg of Murtaugh.

Local real estate agent Louise Ward presented to the Murtaugh City Council recently a proposal for 47 moderately priced stick-built homes on 57 acres at 4500 N and 3300 East. The subdivision, to be called "The Legacy," will run parallel to U.S. Highway 30. The land is owned by Salt Lake City residents Steve and Debra Camp.

"You are getting the first view," Ward said. "We're just trying to get a feel from you on what issues you might have."

Council members discussed emergency access and septic and water concerns and then unanimously gave Ward the green light to proceed. Her husband, Larry Ward, who is involved in project design, said excavation for roads and construction could begin as early as this fall. Louise Ward said they have already had several parties express interest in building homes in the subdivision. The Camps said they plan to build there.

Murtaugh, a Magic Valley town in eastern Twin Falls County near the Snake River canyon, was founded in the early 1900s about the same time Twin Falls was founded. In its early days there was rapid growth, and founders hoped Murtaugh would overtake Twin Falls, but that never happened. Though a few families have moved manufactured homes into Murtaugh during the past decade, today only about 200 people live within the city limits and in the area of impact. It is about a 25-minute commute from Murtaugh to either Twin Falls or Burley.

Ward hopes the subdivision will help revitalize the community.

"We're hoping to bring some people in to help build up the property tax base and get some more kids into the schools," she said.

The Camps said they intend to design an attractive entrance to the subdivision that might include quaint antique farm machinery to symbolize the area's agricultural origins. They also said they intend to name streets after Murtaugh's founding families.

"Our intent is to move here," Steve Camp said. "We want to be able to hike pride in this project."

Plans are in the works for a homeowners association, Louise Ward said. She also said there will be covenants, conditions and restrictions placed on the subdivision on such things as house design and property management. A few farm animals will be allowed on lots that are a minimum of one acre. The lots run in size from .6 of an acre to three acres, and people will be allowed to purchase more than one lot to increase their acreage.

Highway 75 to be five lanes

Plans include an HOV lane as wellBy Pedro G. Salas
For the Times-News

HALLEY — State Highway 75 will have three lanes including a passing lane, from Timmerman Hill to Bellevue, and five lanes from Bellevue to Elkhorn Road, including a center turning lane.

The Federal Highway Administration and the Idaho Transportation Department announced the changes this week.

Now all the project needs is money.

The most unusual component of the plan will be the high-occupancy vehicle lane between McCrcher Boulevard at the north end of Halley and Elkhorn Road.

According to the plan, in the morning the right-hand lane heading north and in the afternoon, the right-hand lane heading south, will be reserved for vehicles carrying more than one passenger.

"Unless you live in the Roaring Fork Valley in Colorado (home to Aspen), you've never seen this before," said Chuck Carnohan, ITD project manager.

Carnohan said the key to the success or failure of the HOV lanes will be up to the Wood River Valley. Elected city officials from Bellevue, Halley, Ketchum and Sun Valley have unanimously supported the idea of HOV lanes.

Carnohan said he hopes to have a decision by early 2007.

Planning a burn? Get a permit

Times-News

TWIN FALLS — Where there's smoke, there's not always a fire — at least, not a wildfire that requires the expertise at the Bureau of Land Management.

In two weeks, the BLM has sent equipment on seven smoke reports that turned out to be private burns of trash or fields. The bottom line: people need to get burn permits.

BLM officials are urging people to obtain a State of Idaho burn permit when conducting private burns. A permit allows the South Central Idaho Interagency Dispatch Center to know that a smoke report is Burning is not illegal on private land. When burning debris, clear an area around the fire, have water on hand and be aware of weather conditions. When conducting agricultural burns, be sure that local fire departments are aware of the burn, that weather is favorable and that adequate resources are available to keep the burn within field boundaries.

Burn basics

If a private burn goes out of control or spreads onto public land, civil charges of negligence and a misdemeanor charge will result. In the case of arson, criminal charges will be pursued. The BLM sends a fire investigation specialist to all fires that are not confirmed to be caused by lightning. Burn permits are free and are required by state law between May 10 and Oct. 10. A permit will prevent negligence charges, but burners will still be charged for the cost of public land cleanup. Permits are available by calling (800) 974-2373. Cell phone users can dial #FIRE. Permits are good for 30 days and can be renewed over the phone.

PAUL — John Ray Firth, an 88-year-old resident of Paul, died Tuesday, June 20, 2006, at his home surrounded by his family.

He was born Nov. 14, 1917, in Bothwell, Utah, the son of Earl M. and Bertha (Ray) Firth. He received his education in Tremonton, Utah, graduating from Bear River High School. He was a veteran of World War II, serving in the United States Army. He married Lucille Mae Lind on Jan. 30, 1948, in the Logan LDS Temple. Following marriage, Ray and Lucille moved to Lynn, Utah, where they started their ranching career. In 1960, they moved to Tremonton so their children would be closer to school. They relocated to Paul in 1970, where they were engaged in farming. Ray's heart never left their large ranch in Lynn, and he continued to bring things into the home.

Ray was an expert in his field and was an outstanding farmer and rancher, but also was a good mechanic. He used these skills in fixing equipment and in restoring old tractors. He enjoyed hunting, training horses and playing the harmonica. Ray was a valiant member of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, where he served in various callings including bishop of the Moulton Ward, a counselor in the bishopric, was a member of the high council and had served as a Sunday school president. He served many years in the Boy Scouts of America and, in 1993, was honored with the Silver Beaver Award. He was a wonderful husband, father and grandfather, where he instilled the value of hard work and the importance of family.

He is survived by his wife of 58 years, Lucille Firth of Paul; his children, Linda (Wade) Zollinger of Oakley, LeAnn Neilbur of Heyburn, John (Carolyn Hurs) Firth of Heyburn, Connie (Reid) Smith of Burley, Dawn L. Payne of Paul and Paul (Robin Paul) Firth of Paul; two brothers, LeRoy Firth of Bothwell, Utah, and Dee Firth of Garland, Utah; a sister, Rebecca Horton of Honeoyville, Utah; 24 grandchildren; 21 great-grandchildren; and six great-great-grandchildren. She spent her childhood years growing up in Keddie, Calif., where she loved to swim and play in Spanish Creek, which was near the Keddie "Y" treatery. She was fond of reading old magazines and goings of the many trains, the family boat named "The Marilee," and her cocker spaniels, Sandy and Christy.

With her wonderful smile and happy way, Marilee devoted herself to the loving care of all her family and friends. She was tender-hearted and was known to give a home to more than one stray cut or dog.

In 1973, the family moved to Gooding, Idaho, to ranch. She was involved in her neighborhood club, Lady Elks, and was the kindest Avon lady in the county. In 2003, Don and Marilee retired and moved to Salmon, Idaho, where they made their home near Carmen. She greatly enjoyed planting flowers, decorating for every holiday, playing cards with friends and looking forward to visits from all her family and, in particular, her grandchildren. Jean L. Hasselstrom PAUL — Jean L. Hasselstrom, 81, of Paul, Idaho, went home to be with her Lord and Savior on June 20, 2006, after an extended illness.

Jean was born March 22, 1925, in Rupert to Wayne and Lucille Bell. She was the oldest of five children and learned to work hard on her family farm, cooking, baby-sitting and getting up early in the morning to hoe beets. She loved music and had a beautiful soprano voice. Baseball was her favorite sport, and she would ride her bike to town for practices and games in her younger years. In 1943, she graduated from Paul High School and then worked the following year as a stenographer for Dr. Slavin, a dentist in Rupert. On Feb. 17, 1944, she married the love of her life, Elton Hasselstrom. To this union, four children were born: Darla (Mike) Taylor, Carla (Chris) Ketchum of Rupert, Lora Butler of Twin Falls and LuAnn (Dean) Hadden of Pocatello.

Jean was an active member of the Congregational Church in Paul, serving as a Sunday school teacher and president of the Ladies Fellowship Group. She belonged to Gideons International for many years and held different offices. She was a 4-H leader, baseball coach and loved providing a home for children's Good News Club. Her biggest joy was telling others about the love of Jesus. She was a wonderful homemaker, a great cook and a very loving wife and mother who thought of others before herself. Jean was always there lending a helping hand to others in need. She was our "hero" and a great example for her family.

Jean is survived by her husband, Elton; their four daughters: 11 grandchildren; four grandsons; four great-grandchildren; one sister, Verlee (John) Hall of Paul; and one brother, Dwight Bell of Twin Falls. She was preceded in death by her parents and two brothers.

When you drive by our Funeral Home, it is nice to know that the owners are right inside.

It can be hard to tell who owns a funeral home in today's world of big business. We'd like you to know that unlike some other local firms, we are family owned and operated. So next time you see our facility and it looks like it's a family owned business, there is a good reason for it... it is.

Skilled workers wait out immigration backlog

By Garance Burke
Associated Press writer

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — The latest fights over immigration have focused on who should get a place in line for a legal life in the United States. But the real agony, says Tien Bui, comes when you finally get in line.

Bui, who came to the U.S. as a Vietnamese refugee and is now an engineer for Boeing Inc., can't take the career-boosting position he's been offered because his citizenship application is lodged somewhere inside the Department of Homeland Security. With green card in hand, Bui has waited patiently since 2003 for his fingerprints to clear background checks, a process that's become more involved since Sept. 11.

But if Congress approves a new guest worker program, the overall waiting period for Bui and the millions of legal immigrants like him could grow even longer, says a report by the Government Accountability Office.

President Bush mandated that by September of this year, cases in DHS's immigration backlog should be processed in six months or less, a deadline the agency is optimistic it can meet.

But a spider web of agencies — including the Department of Labor, the Department of State and the Federal Bureau of Investigation — are also involved in evaluating and approving legal immigration applications.

If there are more petitions to process, the overall delays could increase, experts say. At DHS alone, some skilled foreign workers must wait five years to apply for a green card, something American engineering companies say is harming their competitive edge.

"I truly think if Albert Einstein were in my office in 2006, he would be saying 'I'm going to Canada rather than wait any longer,'" said Judy Bourdeau, a Kansas City immigration attorney who is filling employment petitions for several Fortune 500 companies.

Bui got his green card through his parents, who came to the U.S. as refugees, fleeing Vietnam once the communists took over. After excelling at the University of Missouri-Kansas City, Boeing offered him a job. But each time his bosses have tapped him to work on the company's exclusive defense contracts, Bui said he's had to turn down the offer because he hasn't yet been naturalized as a U.S. citizen, a requirement for the position.

"I believe I belong in the United States, because it's the first country I really know," said Bui, 28, a structural engineer in the company's Everett, Wash., plant. "I'm just disappointed because I can't broaden my options."

That also has consequences for some American corporations. Overland Park, Kan.-based engineering firm Black & Veatch Corp. says it's lost skilled foreign workers because their employment-based immigration applications took so long to clear.

"(We're) concerned about the delays in the system to obtain permanent residence for our workers," said Vice President for Government Affairs Robert Rioridan in a prepared statement. "For some, the wait is too long and they simply go, somewhere else."

Hiring a permanent foreign worker means first getting approval from the Department of Labor, which has to certify that the company is unable to fill the position with a qualified American worker. Then, the employer turns in a petition for an alien worker with a division of Homeland Security called U.S. Citizenship and Immigration Services, or USCIS.

The employee files a separate application for permanent residency. But not everyone can immediately apply. As of one July 2006, most foreign workers must wait nearly five years from the time the employer began the sponsorship process to file their paperwork, according to the Department of State web site.

"If any part of that pipeline slows down, then the whole thing slows down," said Tony Edson, the agency's deputy assistant secretary for visa services.

If the file clears those initial hurdles, then DHS sends the worker's fingerprints to the FBI, beginning what Bui's lawyer calls the "black hole" of the security check process. USCIS ultimately decides whether to grant the green card or citizenship.

As of February, the backlog at USCIS was 608,029 cases. Including applications for green cards and naturalizations, said Bill Strassberger, a USCIS spokesman. He said that's about half of what it was a year ago, and that the agency is hiring extra staff, shifting funds to backlogged offices and modernizing computer systems to meet the September deadline.

Tien Bui, an engineer for Boeing Inc. in Everett, Wash., poses for a photograph recently. Bui, originally from Vietnam, has been in the U.S. since he can remember. But he is unable to work as an engineer for NASA because his paperwork for U.S. citizenship has yet to go through, nearly two years after he applied.

Smoke from the Brina fire rises above the red rocks of Sedona, Ariz., Tuesday. Firefighters struggled Wednesday to stop the 2,450-acre wildfire from jumping a highway in scenic Oak Creek Canyon and roaring into an area of evacuated homes and resorts.

Arizona wildfire continues advance, despite backfires

By Amanda Lee Myers
Associated Press writer

SEDONA, Ariz. — Firefighters successfully burned away some fuel from the path of a wildfire that moved into a scenic northern Arizona canyon, threatening hundreds of homes there, but still faced a battle Wednesday to keep it from moving any further.

Firefighters are using Highway 89A, which runs through the center of Oak Creek Canyon, as a firebreak to try to halt the advance of the 2,450-acre fire. Most of the canyon's roughly 430 homes and 30 businesses are on the east side of the highway, and the fire is to the west.

No homes were lost as of Wednesday evening but the fire remained just 7 percent contained.

"We've kind of drawn some lines in the sand and we're going to be working hard to solidify them," said Sedona Fire District Chief Mike Sheehy. "It's going to be hand-to-hand combat — blood, sweat and tears trying to fight the fire."

Nearly 600 firefighters were on the lines Wednesday, trying to stop the fire from reaching evacuated homes in the bottom of Oak Creek Canyon, about 90 miles north of Phoenix.

Officials said the fire burned at a moderate rate Wednesday but cautioned that any strong winds could change everything.

"It can get real bad, real quick with the right weather conditions," said Mike Dondoro, deputy incident commander for the team fighting the fire. "If we get any weather that makes the fire cross 89, that's our biggest fear."

Crews planned to continue working on containment lines overnight — especially on the Brina's north end that saw some flare-ups Wednesday.

Seven helicopters dropped water on the flames all day Wednesday with eight helicopters expected to do the same Thursday.

Meanwhile, the residents of some of the 180 homes on the north side of Sedona who were evacuated Sunday said they had been back in their homes for days, even though an evacuation order wasn't formally lifted until Wednesday afternoon.

Judith Ledogar said she and her husband had returned home Monday and stayed there since. "We're not afraid of the large fire," she said. "We're afraid of ashes coming down. It's the scariest thing I've ever been through."

Ledogar said they knew the fire wasn't finished and "right now we're not celebrating."

John Roberts, who returned to his home Tuesday, said he felt relieved when he heard from a neighbor earlier in the week that people were returning to their homes but that he had never been very worried about his house.

No timetable has been set for the return of the canyon's residents. The Coconino County Sheriff's Office said it would coordinate shuttles to take residents to their homes in the canyon, where they would be given a few minutes to retrieve personal items.

Voting Rights Act renewal delayed amid complaints it unfairly singles out South

The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — House Republican leaders on Wednesday postponed a vote on renewing the 1965 Voting Rights Act after GOP lawmakers complained it unfairly singles out nine Southern states for federal oversight.

"We have time to address their concerns," Republican leaders said in a joint statement. "Therefore, the House Republican Leadership will offer members the time needed to evaluate the legislation."

The abrupt change of plans in the House could affect the legislation would come up this year. The temporary provisions don't expire until 2007, but leaders of both parties had hoped to pass the act and use it to further their prospects in the fall's midterm elections.

The statement said the GOP leaders are committed to renewing the law "as soon as possible."

The four-decade-old law enfranchised millions of black voters by ending poll taxes and literacy tests during the height of the civil rights struggle. A vote on renewing it for another 25 years had been scheduled for Wednesday, with both Republican and Democratic leaders behind it.

The abrupt change of plans in the House could affect the renewal in the Senate, where an identical bill was set for consideration next week by the Senate Judiciary Committee, according to Chairman Arlen Specter, R-

Pa. "There's less pressure to do it if the House is not doing it," Specter said in a telephone interview.

The shift came after a private House GOP caucus meeting earlier Wednesday in which several Republicans also balked at extending provisions in the law that require ballots to be printed in more than one language in neighborhoods where there are large numbers of immigrants, said several participants.

"The speaker's had a standing rule that nothing would be voted on unless there's a majority of the majority," said Rep. Lynn Westmoreland, R-Ga., who led the objections. "It was pretty clear at the meeting that the majority of the majority wasn't there."

Tornado-strewn timber may pose fire threat

By Jesse Marian Alderman
Associated Press writer

BOISE — A rare tornado that struck through a 13-mile swath of the Payette National Forest earlier this month increased the fire danger by downing thousands of trees, the Forest Service says.

A damage assessment issued Tuesday on the June 4 twister that touched down near the remote central Idaho town of Bear (pop. 14) near the Oregon border found that it uprooted or destroyed 26.8 million board feet of ponderosa pine, Douglas fir and white pine trees. A board foot is the equivalent of a piece of lumber measuring 1 foot by 1 foot by 1 inch.

The twister was blamed for tearing roofs off four homes, and snapping off trees on farmland next to the national forest. Only one injury was reported: A 12-year-old camper suffered a broken collarbone and third-degree burns when trees hit his tent and plumed him against a cooking stove.

The downed trees increase the fire danger on 2,700 acres of the national forest, said a spokeswoman Denise Cobb said. Luckily, she said, the areas of highest fire risk are in a checkerboard pattern, spread among less-damaged pockets of forest.

Most of the downed timber will be cleared through salvage logging. The Forest Service is working on an accelerated schedule to draft an environmental assessment by August. If the plan clears a 30-day public comment period, bidding on a timber sale could start in early fall, Cobb said.

Some loggers are urging officials to open bidding sooner to prevent the death of more trees.

Bark beetles, which have killed millions of trees throughout the West, are drawn to dead trees like magnets, said Gerry Ikola, a member of the Idaho Forest Products Commission, an advisory panel of industry experts created by the Legislature.

Ikola, who owns a logging business near McCall, said that after the beetles invade the dead trees, they quickly spread to standing trees, drying out the timber and raising the fire threat.

"The Forest Service needs to move in an expedient manner. They should have a salvage program ready to move for bid this summer, easily," he said. "You're never going to have 100 percent agreement, but in a case like this, the path we should follow is pretty clear," Large-scale tree clearing will not start this summer, Cobb said. She downplayed the short-term fire danger. "Things are pretty green, so it's not like you've got this big tinderbox out there," Cobb said. Environmentalists have targeted salvage logging, arguing the practice hampers future regrowth of trees and imperils plant and animal habitats. However, tornadoes are so uncommon in Idaho that in this case, a salvage sale is likely the best way to clear the Payette National Forest, said Jonathan Oppenheimer of the Idaho Conservation League.

In this aerial photo provided by the U.S. Forest Service, a portion of a 13-mile long swath of timber destroyed in a June 4 tornado is seen on the Payette National Forest near Bear, Idaho. The downed trees increased fire danger on 2,700 acres of the forest, officials said Tuesday.

Still, he said, the Forest Service should take the time to minimize damage to wildlife and water quality.

"It's going to take some time," he said. "Frankly, it's getting to be the end of June and they're talking about putting an assessment out in August. That's already pretty quick."

Ikola said a sawmill he works for already owns timber slated for salvage on national forest land in the northern reaches of the tornado area.

He estimated that the timber downed in the tornado is worth at least $5 million.

On a recent drive through the blowdown area, Ikola said he saw uprooted trees 30 inches in diameter. Some were thrown 20 feet, he said.

"I've seen several small microbursts in our area over the years," he said, "but never anything like this."

The tornado also wrecked some 12 miles of trails and 37 miles of road, both private and federally owned, according to the Forest Service report.

About 10 miles of range fences were ripped from the ground. Many animals in the forest likely died, too, Cobb said.

Citing staff shortage, sheriff closes jail

NEZPERCE — The Lewis County sheriff has shipped out inmates and closed the county jail until Aug. 1 because of staffing shortages.

"I wasn't willing to pull deputies off the street," Sheriff Phil Steen told the Lewiston Tribune.

The jail closed Friday and the county is paying $12,000 a month to house the inmates elsewhere. The 21-bed jail held inmates for Idaho and Nez Perce counties as well as the Nez Perce Tribe.

Steen told Lewis County commissioners on Monday that it would cost another $300,000 a year to run the jail properly. He said the sheriff's office is underfunded and the staff isn't paid enough, causing worker shortages.

"With the money we have to work with, it's not there," commission Chairman Chuck Doty said. "We're not going to do this right now."

Steen said that because the sheriff's office has so few workers, no one gets time off. They have two jailers to cover shifts 24 hours a day, seven days a week.

None of the sheriff's staff is paid overtime, but instead is given comp time, for extra hours. However, there is no one to cover when one employee takes comp time, so employees are working without compensation.

"There are no anniversaries, no birthdays," Steen said.

Lisa Winner, the head dispatcher, said the office tries to offset low pay and no benefits for families by offering broad experience opportunities. In Lewis County, new officers can work on investigations.

But she said the excitement of big cases can be offset by the area's low crime rate.

"Most of the employees who have left were extremely dedicated," wrote Chief Deputy Damon Deter in a statement to the County Commission.

"But dedication is short-lived when they can work for another agency that is compensating them for their dedication."

Head Jailer Perry Larson said the jail could not meet legal requirements of checking on inmates every 30 minutes, making meals, booking new inmates and giving them five hours of recreation each week.

"With the present staffing levels in the Lewis County jail it is impossible to meet those standards," he said in his written statement to the commission.

Bailey the beaver's teeth grow back

PULLMAN, Wash. (AP) — Bailey the beaver finally has her choppers back.

The beaver was struck by a car near Lewiston, Idaho, last April, losing her four rust-colored front teeth.

But under care at Washington State University's veterinary hospital, Bailey has grown her teeth back and is preparing to return to the wild. Teeth are a beaver's most important tool, used to gnaw through just about anything, including the tree trunks and the mainstay of their diet. A beaver wouldn't last long in the wild without them.

"They're stone chisels, is really what they are," said Charl Powell, spokesman for the WSU veterinary school. Chances are good Bailey will be released back into the wild by August, said Angela Teal, a veterinary technician who helps care for injured wildlife at the school.

That's a happy ending, since lots of wild animals become too spoiled or softened by human contact to be turned loose again.

The WSU vet school treats scores of wild and domestic animals each year, but beavers have been relatively rare. Powell said this is the second one he's seen in his 17 years there.

Other than the loss of her teeth, Bailey wasn't too badly injured, Teal said. But they had to improvise to figure out how to feed the 41-pound beaver, who's likely 1½ to 2 years old.

"We don't really carry a supply of bark, and we don't have a pond with lily pads for them to eat," she said.

They started by feeding Bailey baby food, then soft berries and dandelions and corn.

Powell said media inquiries have flooded the school, following the announcement of Bailey's recovery since April.

"These are probably the most famous beaver teeth in all of human history," he said.

Washington State University veterinary hospital technician Angela Teal holds 35-pound Bailey the beaver Tuesday in an outdoor enclosure at the WSU Veterinary Hospital.

Study: Big quake overdue

LOS ANGELES (AP) — New

earthquake research confirms the southern end of the San Andreas fault near Los Angeles is overdue for a Big One. The lower section of the fault has not produced a major earthquake in more than three centuries. The new study, which analyzed 20 years of data and is considered one of the most detailed analyses yet, found that stress has been building since then, and the fault could rupture at any moment.

"The southern section of the fault is fully loaded for the next big event," said geophysicist Yair Eilatko of the Scripps Institution of Oceanography in La Jolla.

Predicting exactly when that might happen, however, is beyond scientists' ability. The analysis was published in Thursday's issue of the Journal Nature.

Experts have estimated that a quake on the southern San Andreas of magnitude-7.6 or greater could kill thousands of people in the densely populated greater Los Angeles area and cause tens of billions of dollars in damage.

It was the 800-mile San Andreas fault, which runs down California like a scar, that caused the 1906 San Francisco earthquake that led to about 3,000 deaths.

But scientists know very little about the 100-mile dormant southern segment, which slices through Southern California from San Bernardino, east of Los Angeles, to near the Mexican border.

The section last popped in 1690, producing an estimated 7.7-magnitude quake, but caused little injury or damage because hardly anyone lived there at the time.

Using satellite radar and global positioning data, Eilatko measured the movement of the southern San Andreas between 1985 and 2005. Small movements along a fault can relieve strain. Calculating those subtle motions allows scientists to figure out how much strain is building up.

Eilatko found that the southern end of the fault has shown little movement and that significant strain is building up. The fault's slip rate, or average annual movement, was measured to be about an inch a year — similar to previous estimates.

Surprisingly, Eilatko found the two sides of the southern San Andreas behaved differently, with one side showing more flexibility than the other. This could help scientists understand potential earthquake risks, he said.

Ken Hudnut, a U.S. Geological Survey geophysicist in Pasadena, who had no role in the study, said the latest research reaffirms the need to study the mysterious southern San Andreas more closely.

In the fall, Hudnut will head a $240,000 project that would conduct tests on the southern segment to get a better idea of the threat it poses.

Bush accepts gov's roadless forests request

GRANTS PASS, Ore. (AP) — The Bush administration approved requests Wednesday from three eastern governors to keep logging out of national forest roadless areas in their states, a decision one official said should reassure western governors that the administration will work with them.

The petitions from Virginia, North Carolina and South Carolina, covering a total of 555,000 acres of national forest, were the first to come to the administration under its new rules to ease logging restrictions on the remote areas.

Agriculture Undersecretary Mark Rey said in a telephone interview from Washington, D.C., that he hoped the decision would show governors around the country, including four in the West who have sued to overturn the rules, that the administration is willing to work with them on whether to open roadless areas to logging.

"We've always been green," said Rey. "We just haven't gotten credit for it."

The petitions still must go through a formal public review.

The three governors asked to return roadless areas in their states to the protections under 2001 rules initiated by the Clinton administration, citing the value of the areas as sources of clean water, and fish and wildlife habitat when the rest of their states are being developed. The areas would remain open to logging for ecological reasons, such as controlling insect outbreaks.

"The approval of our request to keep these areas roadless — along with our ongoing efforts to protect other ecologically significant land in the state — is an important step toward preserving the way we look and feel as a state and preserve our competitive advantage with respect to our quality of life," South Carolina Gov. Mark Sanford said in a statement issued by the U.S. Department of Agriculture.

Mike Anderson of The Wilderness Society said from Seattle that there is little pressure in those three states to log in national forests, making the decision an easy one for the Bush administration.

"The timing of it is pretty ironic," he said. "The administration is telling these three eastern governors that they will protect their roadless areas, when in Oregon the Forest Service is proceeding with the first round of logging against the strong request from Gov. (Ted) Kulongoski not to log the areas."

In Oregon, U.S. District Judge Owen M. Panner denied a motion by the Cascade Wildlands Project and other conservation groups to stop logging the Mike's Gulch timber sale within the South Kalmiopsis Roadless Area of the Rogue River-Siskiyou National Forest while he considers their lawsuit.

However, he told the U.S. Forest Service to hold off awarding the sale to the high bidder until the end of the day Monday, giving plaintiffs time to appeal to the 9th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals.

Panner wrote that the conservation groups were unlikely to win their lawsuit, which argued that the Forest Service should reconsider the logging on the basis of new scientific information about forest regeneration and future fire danger. The Forest Service was reasonable in rejecting their petition, he said. The purpose for the logging was generating jobs, and the area to be logged was very small, the judge added.

Rey said the Mike's Gulch sale did not fall under the administration's assurances, that there would be no logging in roadless areas pending the state petition process, because it was intended to speed recovery of the forest after the 1992 Biscuit fire. He added that the logs would be removed with helicopters, and no new roads would be built, maintaining its character as roadless.

Roadless areas are tracts of national forests generally larger than 5,000 acres that have long been considered too remote and too rugged to be logged economically. They were inventoried as part of a national survey of potential wilderness areas, where logging is prohibited by law.

The Clinton administration-generated rules that went into effect in 2001 putting 59.5 million acres of roadless around the country off-limits to most logging, based on scientific evidence they were far more valuable as sources of clean water, and pristine fish and wildlife habitat, than as timber. They constitute 31 percent of national forests.

Pressure has been growing from the timber industry to open them to logging, as they represent the last big source of untouched old growth timber in the country, particularly in the West.

After a federal judge in Wyoming overturned the 2001 rule, the Bush administration developed a new rule, giving governors the option to petition for protecting them or opening them to logging, but with no assurances those petitions would be accepted.

The states of Oregon, California, Washington, and New Mexico have joined in a lawsuit trying to overturn the new roadless logging rule.

Draper Rice, president of the United Brotherhood of Carpenters and Joiners of America, commended the three eastern governors for working with the administration, and urged the governors of the western states suing to overturn the new roadless rule to do the same.

A burned, cut tree inside Unit 2 of the Mike's Gulch timber sale on the Rogue River-Siskiyou National Forest in southwestern Oregon near Salmis is shown June 12. A federal judge in Oregon on Wednesday denied a request to stop the sale.

Washington state foster parents want to unionize

By Curt Woodward
Associated Press writer

OLYMPIA, Wash. — Daniele Baxter, who has opened her home to more than 700, abused and neglected children over the past two decades, carries a business card that lists her occupation as "professional parent."

The full-time foster parent hopes to become a genuine card-carrying union member as well.

She and others are trying to organize what is believed to be the nation's first union of foster parents, and hope to win the right to bargain with state government.

They want to establish higher training and education standards and create an experienced, professional corps of foster parents. They also hope to secure better compensation, including retirement benefits and perhaps medical insurance.

That, in turn, could reduce the high turnover in their ranks that results in youngsters being bounced from one foster home to another, they say.

"We really are the professionals in this field," said Baxter's husband, Steve Baxter. "When you have a really hard job to do, who do you call in? You call in the union plumber, the union carpenter — and the union foster parent."

Washington state's Children's Administration, which oversees foster care, has refused to say what it thinks about the effort to organize the state's estimated 6,000 foster parents.

Daniele Baxter said foster parents are signing up in droves. But she would not give numbers. The foster parents would be part of the Washington Federation of State Employees, an AFL-CIO affiliate that is the largest union representing Washington state government workers.

"If we do it right here, I think it will set a pattern around the country," said Greg Devereux, director of the state workers union.

Observers around the country are watching the first-of-its-kind organizing drive. But the National Foster Parent Association has declined to take a position.

"The other states are in a wait-and-see mode, because there are a lot of questions to be answered," said Karen Jorgensen, director of the organization. "Is this going to increase the rift between the department and the foster parents? One of the questions is: what are the benefits?"

Republican state Sen. Joe Zarelli rejected the idea of foster parents unionizing as contrary to the volunteer nature of the job.

"The whole idea of opening your home to children that need parental role models is one of volunteerism and not one of employment," said Zarelli, himself a former foster parent. "You don't do it for what you get, other than directly from the kids in the form of appreciation."

Washington state has about 9,600 children in foster care. Like their counterparts elsewhere, Washington state's foster parents are paid by the state on a sliding scale for taking in abused or neglected children, receiving roughly $375 to $525 a month. Foster parents also receive medical coupons, clothing vouchers and other assistance for the children, along with training for themselves.

Relations between foster parents and state child welfare agencies can be frosty, though. Foster parents complain that the amounts they are paid do not cover their true costs, and say too many of them drop out in frustration because they do not get adequate training.

Turnover among Washington's foster parents is estimated by the state at 20 percent to 25 percent a year.

The Baxters — presidents of the Foster Parents Association of Washington State — said a more professionally trained corps would ultimately save the state money.

"Basically, if we can give the support to the foster parents so they can view this more as a profession, a supported and respected profession, the turnover might be less," Daniele Baxter said. "What we've been called for years and years and years is volunteers, and we're not volunteers. This is a career choice."

Sad days

By Pat Marcantoni
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — A new federal study held some sad news about young Latinos. The study by the U.S. Centers for Disease Control showed that Hispanic high school students attempted suicide and used drugs at far higher rates than their non-Hispanic and black classmates. In fact, more than 11 percent of all Hispanic students and 15 percent of Hispanic girls said they had attempted suicide. The rates for other students were about 7.5 percent.

About 36 percent of Hispanics reported prolonged feelings of sadness or hopelessness, slightly higher than previous years. That compares to 28.5 percent of black students and 26 percent of white students. A local survey revealed that this is not just a national problem.

At risk

Some 13,314 young people in the eight-counties of the Magic Valley, Mini-Cassia and Wood River areas from the sixth to 12th grade were surveyed in 2002 about risk-taking behaviors, said Maggie Machala with the South Central District Health Department.

Of those, 2,141 were Hispanics or about 16 percent of the total number questioned. That percentage reflected the Hispanic population in the region. Of the Hispanics surveyed, 20 percent said they felt sad or depressed most or all of the time during the month, and of those, 28 percent were females, compared with 13 percent boys. Nineteen percent of the young Hispanics had attempted suicide one or more times, with 26 percent of those females and 12 percent male. "It's significant," Machala said of the numbers. Sixteen percent of young Hispanics said they had tried illegal drugs three or more times during a year, with 20 percent of those boys compared with 11 percent girls.

The local survey showed the ninth grade was a critical point for Hispanics and other young people, a time between middle and high schools, when they seem more vulnerable to risky behaviors, Machala said.

The Health District, hospitals, other health care partners and community residents organized coalitions and started programs to build "assets," that is, developmental building blocks of family support, self-esteem and the like, to help young people become healthy adults. The local survey showed that the more assets in their lives, the fewer risky behaviors.

assistance programs. • Services may be accessed by contacting a Medicaid mental health provider or a doctor. Parents can contact any local Health and Welfare office for an application for services. Source: Idaho Department of Health and Welfare.

About the survey

• The CDC survey of 14,000 U.S. high school students is conducted every other year. Results were from last year's survey. Students in grades nine to 12 in public and private high schools in all 50 states and the District of Columbia were surveyed. • The study showed one in eight Latino students said they had used cocaine, 1 in 10 tried ecstasy and 1 in 11 methamphetamines. For the full report go to www.cdc.gov/.

Cultural differences

But why are Hispanic young people feeling depressed?

A 2005 report called "Depression in Urban Hispanic Adolescents" produced by Sam Houston State University's Department of Educational Leadership and Counseling gives some hints. For example, depression factors for first-generation immigrants can include low school achievement, loss of friends, fear of deportation, language differences and a perception of prejudice.

Other factors for Hispanic young depression may be ineffective coping skills, low self-esteem and stress from adapting to a new culture.

One study showed Hispanic girls had lower self-esteem and more negative feelings about their bodies than non-Hispanic girls.

According to the National

Mental Health Association, Hispanics tend to experience depression through body aches and pains, such as stomach or back aches. They may feel nervous, tired or restless and show changes in eating or sleeping habits.

Clinical depression, however, is one of the most treatable of all medical illnesses, the Association reports. In fact, more than 80 percent of people with depression can be treated successfully.

Experts do say that untreated childhood mental health disorders may have a high cost later.

Trying to help

"What we are trying to do and still trying to do is try to develop those positive assets in the kids. We're trying to have a positive affect of the using older kids to help younger kids and get them on the right path and get them into extracurricular activities and healthier lifestyles. I think we are making a difference in that," said Joel Rodgers with the Mini-Cassia HealthNet Coalition, which offers programs such as Lunch Buddies, where older students mentor younger ones. A good percentage of the children in its programs are Latino, and Rodgers estimates the programs affect 300 to 400 children.

Parents are key

Melanie Shouse, facilitator with the Twin Falls County HealthNet Coalition, says parents are the key in dealing with teen troubles.

"They are the ones the kids go to and trust," she said. However, when both parents have to work, finding time to deal with teen woes is a problem. Not only for Hispanics, but all parents, Shouse said.

Mario Umans, a Jerome

County juvenile probation officer, said the federal study results are not a big surprise, but he has not seen any more drug use among Hispanics over non-Hispanic young people in the cases he handles.

All teens who are vulnerable in their lives are also vulnerable to drugs abuse, he said. "Kids who are involved in sports and families, they have less chance of getting affected by drug use," he said.

Families are an important part of the Hispanic culture, but the federal study showed substance abuse was higher in Hispanic students more at home with American culture.

"The way I see it, with a lot of kids this day and age that (the Mexican) culture seems to disappear slowly," Umans said.

Good news

Children's mental health services are available, as well as substance abuse treatment.

The mental health services provided by Medicaid and Health and Welfare to children in the Magic Valley have continued to grow, says spokesman Ross Mason. For example, clinical counseling services paid by Medicaid in Region V increased from 1,455 children in 2003 to 1,771 in 2005.

A group has also started groundwork to bring a Big Brother and Big Sister mentoring program to the area, Melanie Shouse said.

HealthNet coalitions are operating several programs for teens, from Lunch Buddies to youth action councils, Machala says what has helped is a change in community attitudes about young people. They are now seen as resources to be cared for, valued and supported.

"If you have healthy youth, you have a healthy community," Machala said.

Actress makes 'Nacho' first U.S. movie

The Dallas Morning News

DALLAS — Ana de la Reguera would make many a monk rethink that whole celibacy thing. In "Nacho Libre," she plays the beautiful new comer, Sister Encarnacion, who draws the attention of the friars who run the orphanage at the center of the film. The 29-year-old native of Vera Cruz, Mexico.

"Nacho Libre" is directed by Jared Hess' follow-up to his cult hit, "Napoleon Dynamite." Had you signed on to do "Nacho"?

A. Of course! I love that movie. One of my favorite genres in film is comedy. I was real excited to be in this one because I love "Napoleon Dynamite." It was a completely different movie — it has no bad words or anything sexual. It's just humor, and that's really hard to make.

Q. You've done a lot of work in Mexican television. Have you acted much in English before this movie?

A. No, this was my first American movie.

Q. How was that for you?

A. Well, it was harder. You don't hear yourself the same, and I really had to study my lines. But when I got on the set, it really was like, "You know what, I think you should say this, and change this (for something else)." So I was like, "really?" I studied this so hard, and a minute before shooting I'd have to change my lines... But I just tried to do my best and not complain. I'm a professional, and I want to work more in English films, so I have to get used to it.

Q. When you were living in Mexico, did you ever go to watch the Lucha Libre?

A. Just before we did the movie. But I had seen it on TV, and the luchadores go to parties and you see them with their mask, and they never take it off. It's part of our culture. I just wasn't a follower... It's a whole fantasy going out there with the costumes and colors and the people just yelling and having fun.

RUNNING NECK-AND-NECK

Democratic Revolution Party (PRD) presidential candidate Andres Manuel Lopez Obrador warms during a rally in Monterrey, Mexico, June 19 in the final week of campaigning for the Mexican presidency. Voters are torn evenly between Obrador, a leftist who offers himself as a savior of the poor; and Felipe Calderon, a conservative who trusts the markets to keep living standards rising. Polls place them neck-and-neck.

A new romance may be ahead, Cancer

IF JUNE 22 IS YOUR BIRTHDAY, the pace of your life should settle into a dependable rhythm over the coming 12 months. Do not start anything new or enter into important agreements in late August and ignore schemes cooked up by others. Between mid-November and mid-December, Lady Luck is smiling in your direction, so it is a good time to put your most important plans into motion or reap the blessings you so deeply deserve. People in general will be more willing to be generous, so don't be afraid to ask for favors.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Maintain propriety. Actions that you consider warm and friendly may cross someone's imaginary line of decorum. If you feel like fooling around, be sure to do it in your own back yard.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Time is the one commodity that can't be replaced if wasted. The water-cooler crowd may lure you into frivolous discussions. Don't neglect deadlines or commitments to play romantic games.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Plan your work and work your plan. Be sure to write down important phone numbers and addresses because you may be more easily distracted than usual over the next few days.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): A new romance is a passing possibility. You may be feeling your amorous oats but will most likely only find pure contentment with the tried and true. Pass up impetuous purchases.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Today's passing fancies are going to do just that. A casual flirtation or a warm, sociable interlude is something to make the workday fly faster. Don't carry a great deal of cash in your pocket.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Keep your eye on the bank account ball. The money you waste on this and that throughout the day might add up quickly. Take advantage of spur-of-the-moment amorous moments at home.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Don't do anything you can't tell your mother about. That deliciously tantalizing flirtation might land you in hot water. Remain businesslike in public — but do whatever you wish in private.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Avoid frostbite. Seductive glances from a certain someone could warm the cockles of your heart. Don't take a flirtation too seriously; by tomorrow, burning ardor may cool.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): The more the merrier. It is easy to gain cooperation, so enlist some extra hands to help with a pending project or running errands. Romantic attractions may quickly burn out.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Money might burn a hole in your pocket. Take along just what you need and don't indulge in overpriced conveniences just to save time. Romantic fires may be burning brightly at home.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Easy come, easy go. That fascinating new hookup may leave you standing alone to pay the bill. Tackle important phone calls and finish detailed reports while you have time.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Don't let the tail wag the dog. Pay attention to admonitions and follow up on necessary precision tasks. Pick up the phone and touch base with others to iron out plans well ahead of time.

Stories may bear repeating to make the point sink in

DEAR ABBY
Jeanne Phillips

Maybe "Pete and Repeat" could promise their kids a quarter for every time the grandparents repeat themselves. I promise you, everybody's attitude will change for the better.
—MISSING MY M-M-L IN NEW JERSEY

DEAR ABBY: Your advice to "Pete and Repeat" was right on. My mother-in-law started out promising herself more than 15 years ago, at the young age of 61. Her children wrote it off as "old age," but her daughters-in-law saw it as an early sign of dementia. Unfortunately, we were right.

I hope "Pete and Repeat" won't put off encouraging her parents to visit their doctor. Medications can slow the onset of Alzheimer's disease. The sooner they know what's going on, the better they all can prepare for the future.
—LISA IN BLOOMFIELD HILLS, MICH.

DEAR ABBY: I have another thought. Perhaps the in-laws were trying to elicit an acknowledgment of what they were saying, so they kept saying it. Thinking it over, call me. I find myself doing the same thing when it appears my daughter isn't listening or hasn't reacted to something I have said — particularly if it's something important to me.
—ANNIE IN ORTONVILLE, MICH.

DEAR ABBY: I just read the letter from "Pete and Repeat in Ohio" whose in-laws constantly repeat themselves. My mother-in-law does the same thing. She's 61 and has done it for at least 10 years. I do not believe it's a sign of early dementia, but it drives me crazy.

I think the reason is she cannot stand silence. If there is a pause in the conversation, she is compelled to fill it with endless drivel about herself or family that's been told 100 times before.

Because she doesn't seem to notice or care if the person she is speaking to is blowing me off, patronizing me, misunderstanding me or not acknowledging me, "Pete and Repeat" should try the following before sending the older folks to a doctor or deciding they have dementia: When Mom and Pop repeat themselves, look them straight in the eye, and gently and sincerely acknowledge the message. Example: Say, "Mom, thank you for telling us about the surprise! You always plan such great gifts, we can't wait to see what it is." They should teach their children to do the same.

"Pete and Repeat" may think they are acknowledging their parents by telling them they already heard them eight times, but my guess is the parents are looking for a more positive form of affirmation.
—LARAMIE IN LARAMIE, WYO.

DEAR ABBY: My husband's mother was a wonderful mother-in-law, but she also told the same stories over and over. Finally, I started charging my husband a dollar for every time I had to listen to a story I already knew. This way I was more than polite to his mother — I was enthusiastic when she repeated herself, and I silently counted up my winnings.

Arizona town is oldest in country

RANDOM KINDS OF FACTNESS
Erin Barrett & Jack Mingo

The town of Oraibi, Ariz., is the oldest still-existing town in the USA. Founded by the Hopi Indians in about A.D. 1150, it still has inhabitants today.

This day in history: On June 22, 1969, Judy Garland passed out of this world and over the rainbow. In a cosmic convergence, a tornado touched down in Kansas on the same day.

In 1638, the Virginia Legislature passed a law banning slaves. It still doesn't sound like such a bad idea.

Elephants suffer from natural tooth loss and decay — in the wild where their diet is low in sugar. And unfortunately for wild elephants, this tooth loss often leads to starvation.

Corn is very versatile. The cobs can be used in the production of nylon.

American persimmon wood is the preferred wood for golf clubs.

Cat owners may already suspect this, but Slimese cats are considered the most vocal of all cat breeds.

Until the late 1800s when British doctor Joseph Lister proved that good hygiene was the most important factor in eliminating bacteria and infections after surgery, doctors used cloth fibers, swept from the floors of textile mills, to bandage surgery incisions. About 10 percent of surgery patients died after their operations. Lister's patients fared much better using sterile bandages.

Next time you have a fight with your big brother, call him a "lobbernow!" That's an old British word for "blockhead."

Goats are easier to milk than cows for a few reasons. First, they're smaller. They also aren't being around people a lot more than cows. Finally, since a goat only has two teats instead of four, your workload is cut in half.

'Heaven on a bun' goes for $100 in Florida

BOCA RATON, Fla. — A hundred bucks might buy you more than six dozen burgers from McDonald's, but the swanky Old Homestead Steakhouse will sell you one brawny beef sandwich for the same price.

Boca Raton Mayor Steven Abrams could barely speak between bites as he devoured the 20-ounce, $100 hamburger billed as the "beluga caviar of sandwiches."

"Heaven on a bun," restaurant owner Marc Sherry said.

The burger debuted Tuesday at the restaurant in the Boca Raton Resort and Club, where a membership costs $40,000 and an additional $3,600 a year.

"We've never had a hamburger on our menu here so we really wanted to go to the extreme," Sherry said, calling it "the most decadent burger in the world."

At about 5 1/2 inches across and 2 1/2 inches thick, the mound of meat is comprised of beef from three continents — American prime beef, Japanese Kobe and Argentine cattle.

The bill for one burger, with garnishing that includes organic greens, exotic mushrooms and tomatoes, comes out to $124.50 with tax and an 18 percent tip included.

The restaurant will donate $10 from each sale to the Make-A-Wish Foundation.

Odds & ends

The robber broke into the grocery in Uthai Thani province, 25 miles north of Bangkok, in the middle of the night, stole a few beers and quickly sought cover when he heard the owner of the shop stirring, police Capt. Prasert Hewanwong said Wednesday.

The robber made a bad situation a bit worse by choosing to hide under a bed in the shop — the same bed that the owner was sleeping on at the time, he said.

While waiting to flee, the robber drank a few of the stolen beers, passed out and started snoring so loudly that he woke up the shop's owner, who quietly called police.

had received interest notices from bank but didn't know who to contact about the money, told her about it and she then called Michael Welles, the former class president.

"My first reaction was, 'This has got to be a mistake,'" said Welles, 38, of Chicago.

The account is now worth almost $56,000 after interest. The class reunion committee decided to use the money to set up a scholarship fund for future Wausau East graduates.

"I don't know if it was a former classmate or parent who donated this money, but whoever it was obviously chose our class because they thought we'd do the right thing with it," Moore said.

$50,000 donation made to class of 1986 account

WAUSAU, Wis. — Organizers of a high school class reunion made a surprising discovery while looking for classmates' names and addresses — a forgotten bank account containing more than $50,000.

The Wausau East High School class of 1986 started the $210 account 20 years ago with a bank raised during a bake sale.

About 10 years ago, someone anonymously made a $50,000 donation to the account.

The account largely went unnoticed by class members until alumna Wendy Moore, 37, of Minneapolis, called the school district's foundation looking for names and addresses of former classmates.

Drunk tries to pay bar tab with bartender's check

STATESBORO, Ga. — A 21-year-old man was arrested after trying to buy drinks with a checkbook he found at a bar. Unfortunately, the checkbook's owner was one of the bartenders serving him.

Jody Brian Minor was arrested on theft after forgery charges early Saturday morning, Statesboro Police Detective Terry Briley said.

He was "extraordinarily intoxicated," Briley said.

Minor was at Dingus Magee's bar when he found a checkbook and began paying his tab with it, Briley said.

One of the bar's employees realized the checks belonged to a fellow bartender named Hubbe Beasley, who called police.

Briley said Minor's father has paid the delinquent $129 bar tab.

Saddam lawyer assassinated as violence escalates

About 85 workers abducted, another dozen killed

By Patrick Quinn
Associated Press writer

BAGHDAD, Iraq — Saddam Hussein and his seven co-defendants went on a hunger strike Wednesday to protest the shooting death of an attorney on the ousted Iraqi leader's defense team — the third such killing in the month-old trial.

In other violence, gunmen kidnapped roughly 85 workers north of Baghdad, forcing them into a bus and a minivan, and later released about 30 women and children. About a dozen people were killed across Iraq, and an al-Qaida-linked insurgent group announced that it will execute four Russian hostages.

Lawyer Khamsi al-Obaidi, a Sunni Arab who represented Saddam and his half brother Barzan Ibrahim, was abducted from his home Wednesday morning by men wearing police uniforms, his colleagues said. His body was found riddled with bullets on a street near the Shiite slum of Sadr City. Police provided a photo of al-Obaidi's face, head and shoulders drenched in blood.

Khamsi al-Obaidi

Saddam's chief attorney, Khalil al-Dulaimi, blamed the killing on the Interior Ministry, which Sunnis have alleged is infiltrated by so-called Shiite death squads.

"We strongly condemn this act and we condemn the killings done by the Interior Ministry forces against Iraqis," he said.

There was no comment from the ministry. Hit squads and other gangs are known to often disguise themselves as police officers.

Married with six children, al-Obaidi was the third member of Saddam's defense team to be killed since the trial began Oct. 19.

Al-Dulaimi and his colleagues said the brutal slaying was an attempt to intimidate the defense before it begins final arguments July 10, a process that will take about 10 days.

"We consider his killing a message to us in the defense: To continue what you are doing will result in death in broad daylight on the streets of Baghdad. It is a message that's written in blood," said Mohammed Moneib, an Egyptian lawyer retained by Saddam.

Chief prosecutor Jaafar al-Moussawi said the trial would continue.

"We will defy terrorism," al-Moussawi told The Associated Press. "We will continue with the trial and will not be deterred," he said. The prosecution has demanded the death penalty for Saddam in the killing of 148 Shiites during a crackdown against the town of Dulail in the 1980s.

Despite the killing, Saddam's lawyers said they would forge ahead with their closing arguments. However, al-Dulaimi told the AP in Amman, Jordan, that Saddam and his co-defendants "went on a hunger strike today to protest the killing of Khamsi al-Obaidi."

Al-Moussawi noted that members of the defense team had turned down an offer to live with their families in Baghdad's heavily protected Green Zone, home to the Iraqi government, parliament and the U.S. Embassy.

Unlike al-Dulaimi, who shuttles between the Jordanian and Iraqi capitals, al-Obaidi lived in the predominantly Sunni Arab neighborhood of Azamiyah in northern Baghdad.

The U.S. Embassy urged the lawyers and their families to "accept the full range of security measures offered for their protection."

"The U.S. considers defense counsel a vital part of the judicial process. This criminal act will not prevent the defendants before the tribunal from continuing to receive a full and fair defense, or halt the tribunal's efforts to restore justice and rule of law for the Iraqi people," it said.

The State Department expressed its condolences to al-Obaidi's family and said "any attack that kills a participant in a judicial process is to be condemned, and we condemn this murder."

"We are committed to helping the Iraqi government bring those responsible to justice," Ertel said.

A spokeswoman for Amnesty International said both Iraqi

The kidnapping of the 85 workers north of Baghdad was only the most recent case involving mass abductions.

Police said it was unclear why gunmen seized the workers as they left the al-Nasr General Complex, a former military plant that now makes metal doors, windows and pipes, but noted that the assailants apparently looked at their captives' identity cards. In Iraq, it is often possible to determine someone's ethnic, sectarian and tribal affiliation from their names. The workers were thought to be mostly Shiite, while the plant is located in Taji, a predominantly Sunni Arab area.

Scientists double estimate of wild pandas in China

The Associated Press

SHANGHAI, China — Scientists using DNA samples have doubled their estimates of the wild panda population in a nature sanctuary in China, a finding they say bodes well for the survival of the endangered species.

The researchers believe between 66 and 72 pandas are living in the Wanglang Nature Reserve — more than twice the previous estimate of 32, said Wei Fumin, a zoologist at the Chinese Academy of Sciences.

The scientists arrived at the estimates by taking samples of panda droppings in the reserve and developing genetic profiles, said Wei, who was a member of the research team.

The rising numbers are likely the result of natural population growth, migration from other areas and a logging ban aimed at preserving panda habitat, he said Wednesday.

"We're really seeing these policies start to have an effect," Wei said.

Results of the research, conducted by a joint British-Chinese team, were published in Tuesday's edition of the journal Current Biology.

Despite the rising numbers in Wanglang, Wei said it was too early to say whether similar studies in other preserves would show a higher overall number for China's wild panda population, now estimated at about 1,600.

"There could be other factors at work in different places," he said.

The Worldwide Fund for Nature, which uses a panda in its logo, said the findings were "a positive sign."

"We are thrilled by this new study," said Olivier van Bogaert, spokesman for the Switzerland-based group, known as the World Wildlife Fund in the United States.

He urged continued vigilance. "There are still very low numbers of pandas in the wild. Even if this study might prove that there are more than we thought, the number of pandas is still very low. All the measures that are being taken to protect their habitat need to be enforced and implemented further. Deforestation and habitat loss are still issues that we need to tackle."

Study author Michael Bruford, of Cardiff University in Wales, said the environment at Wanglang wasn't significantly different from China's 40 other panda sanctuaries, indicating there could be many more pandas than previously believed.

And while conservation programs were clearly working, the degree of genetic diversity uncovered at Wanglang seems to indicate panda numbers never fell as low as had been thought, Bruford said.

The researchers said they don't expect their findings to dampen China's enthusiasm for assisted breeding, which has proven effective in boosting the numbers of captive pandas.

Bruford said the field work carried out by graduate student Zhan Xiangling was arduous, not only due to the mountainous terrain but also because of the need to obtain fresh samples for DNA analysis.

Ketchum hotels see occupancy rise

By Susan Bailey
The Wood River Journal

KETCHUM — Retail sales might be slow this month, but hotel occupancy in Ketchum shows a considerable increase over June last year.

"It's a snapshot, and it says we're doing better than last year in some areas," said Carol Waller, executive director for the Sun Valley-Ketchum Chamber and Visitors Bureau.

Waller said statistics for weekend occupancy in Sun Valley and Ketchum hotels, motels and inns during the first three weekends in June 2006 indicate substantial increases over weekends in June 2005. Hotels, small inns and motels are roughly half the available beds in the area.

Condominium rentals provide the other half.

Waller said occupancy for the June 1-3 weekend was 58 percent in June 2006 and only 38 percent in June 2005.

The weekend of June 8-10 saw 70 percent occupancy in June 2006 compared to 63 percent in June 2005. Last weekend, June 15-17, hotels, inns and motels reported 72 percent occupancy compared to 57 percent in June 2005.

In addition to better hotel occupancy rates, Waller said employees at the SVKCVB Visitors Center were busier answering calls for information and handing out materials to people walking in.

"We seem to have lots of drivers and people passing through," said Waller. "Maybe they aren't buying, but they're here."

Unemployment rate rises slightly

TWIN FALLS — Idaho's seasonally adjusted unemployment rate edged upward slightly to 3.5 percent in May, but still remains 1.1 percentage points below the national rate of 4.6 percent, according to a news release from Idaho Commerce and Labor.

While there were fluctuations in the labor figures for Idaho, the employment situation was essentially unchanged from April. The number of people working remained above 700,000 for the 16th consecutive month at 733,100, but down 2,400 from April. Those individuals looking for work in May increased by 700 to 25,300, the news release said.

Foundation shaking

The PATH Malaria Vaccine Initiative in Seattle and other groups have received nearly $500 million from the Bill and Melinda Gates Foundation to develop, test, manufacture and eventually distribute a malarial vaccine. Here, the Gateses in 2003 listen to village leaders in Momeno, Mozambique, discuss the impact of malaria on their families.

Gates' vision, capital could force global change

By Yuki Noguchi
The Washington Post

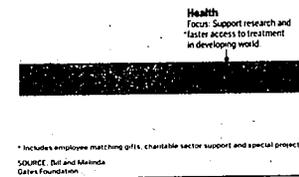

WASHINGTON — Melinda Moree met plenty of naysayers who dismissed the prospects of a malaria vaccine. Then she encountered Bill Gates.

No one had developed a human vaccine against a parasite like malaria before, and the monetary incentives simply did not exist for pharmaceutical companies to develop drugs targeted at poor children. Development would require cooperation among scientists, drug companies, health groups and international governments — an alliance so large it didn't seem possible, she recalled someone telling Gates.

"Of course it is," Gates countered, according to Moree, now director of the PATH Malaria Vaccine Initiative in Seattle, which along with other groups has received nearly $500 million from the Bill and Melinda Gates Foundation to develop, test, manufacture and eventually distribute a malarial vaccine. "There's something about vision and belief that these things are possible," Moree said.

Funding Priorities

The Bill and Melinda Gates Foundation has given out $10.07 billion in grants since 1994. How the funding breaks down:

People in the nonprofit world say Gates, 50, could fundamentally alter the methodology of philanthropy with his announcement last week that he will quit his day-to-day role at Microsoft Corp. in two years to spend more time on his foundation. He will take the same energy he once directed toward software technology to global health, education and other intractable issues, they say.

Even as Microsoft is grappling with a changing competitive environment in which the software that Gates championed is losing ground to Internet-based services, the foundation is facing hurdles that observers say only Gates may be able to clear.

The co-founder of Microsoft has given $25.9 billion of his personal wealth to the foundation and has pledged to give billions of dollars more to devote to several dozen specific programs, such as minority scholarships, clean water initiatives, updated computer systems in libraries and the development of a variety of vaccines. (His wife, Melinda Gates, is on the board of The Washington Post Co.)

Dow surges on earnings from Morgan Stanley and FedEx

By Elise Simon
Associated Press writer

NEW YORK — Stocks rose sharply Wednesday as stronger-than-expected earnings from FedEx Corp. and Morgan Stanley Inc. put investors' inflation fears on the back burner. The Dow Jones industrial average gained more than 140 points.

Morgan Stanley's second-quarter profit more than doubled from a year earlier and FedEx saw a 27 percent jump in its fiscal fourth-quarter earnings. The results quieted concerns about the possibility of an economic slowdown caused by rate hikes from the Federal Reserve.

"With the backdrop of rising interest rates, if we're still able to see good earnings for the second quarter, it will bode well for the market," said Jim Herrick, director of equity trading at Baird & Co.

Every sector except consumer staples and utilities was trading higher by early afternoon, with the energy and materials sectors seeing the most dramatic gains.

the Dow Jones industrial average rose 146.96, or 1.34 percent, to 11,121.80.

Broader stock indicators were also higher. The Standard & Poor's 500 index rose 17.37, or 1.40 percent, to 1,257.49, and the Nasdaq composite index rose 43.32, or 2.06 percent, to 2,150.38.

Advancers led decliners by roughly 4 to 1 on the New York Stock Exchange. Small cap stocks also rallied. The Russell 2000 index of smaller companies rose 15.25, or 2.25 percent, to 692.75.

Bonds were flat, with the yield on the 10-year Treasury note at 5.15 percent. The U.S. dollar was mostly lower against other major currencies. Gold prices were higher.

Crude oil futures were higher after the U.S. Department of Energy reported that gasoline inventories grew at a slow pace last week, despite high production levels.

A barrel of light crude was quoted at $70.75, up $1.41 in trading on the New York Mercantile Exchange.

Initiation jitter has been shaking stocks recently, with the major indexes swinging to losses in early June before rebounding. May was Wall Street's worst month of the year by far, as investors sold off on fears the Fed would continue its streak of rate hikes.

"I think the correction we've had may have been overdone," said Ed Kotler, chief investment strategist with Prudential Equity Group in New York. "If we get even the slightest bit of encouragement from the Fed and if earnings from shaking stocks recently, this could be a pretty good summer for stocks."

Development group OKs guidelines for workforce training

The Times-News

TWIN FALLS — Guidelines for a new revolving loan program to increase the number of workers in high-demand, high-growth occupations were approved Tuesday by the executive committee of the Idaho Workforce Development Council, which oversees the state workforce training program.

The panel's unanimous vote during a telephone conference clears the way for applicants to participate in the program created during the final weeks of the 2006 Legislative Session as the Incumbent Worker Training Revolving Loan Fund.

The training loan fund was set up as a two-year pilot focusing on training for nurses and commercial truck drivers. Under the proposed guidelines, businesses can borrow up to $50,000 a year to train nurses or drivers. The money must be repaid at 3.5 percent interest over two years if the training lasts less than six months and over four years if the training exceeds six months. The initial monthly payment is not required until the seventh month after the loan is made.

To qualify, the applying business must have a contractual relationship with the proposed training before training can begin. The business must also agree to pay the trainee at least $12 an hour plus medical benefits upon completion of the training. The wage and benefit requirement has been increasing since training began. Legislature and the Council as a way to encourage creation of not just any job but jobs that pay higher wages.

"This is an economic development standpoint, we're starting to shy away from helping companies that don't provide benefits," said Twin Falls businessman Con Paulos, a member of the council's executive committee.

AFL-CIO President Dave Whaley, also a committee member, said the wage level will be monitored over the next two years to determine whether rising wages for either nurses or truck drivers justify increasing the minimum under the training loan program.

"We want to keep a close eye on that if it's getting low because we want to get the best bang for our buck here," Whaley said.

The Legislature marked $2 million for the pilot phase of the program and directed Idaho Commerce and Labor to report on its initial impact during the 2007 session.

It's pronounced 'Tar-zhay'

By Ylan Q. Mai
The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — Fans of Target stores long ago nicknamed the retailer "Tar-zhay" for its cheap and chic clothes, the French accent lending the discounting acceptance among fashionistas.

Perhaps it was inevitable, then, that the company would spin the pet name into a marketing opportunity.

Target Corp., which has a Twin Falls store, recently has been its fly-by-night name and consulting firm Brand Central LLC for use in a new line of high-end clothing called Target Couture. (The line's logo even adds an extra "t" to the "t" in Target to make it look more French.)

Target's red-and-white logo, "has really become sort of a symbol of cool," said Ross Misher, chief executive of Brand Central.

But don't expect to find any Target Couture at actual Target stores. The line, launched last month, is sold only at the hip Los Angeles shop Intuition. After the summer, it will expand to other boutiques and high-end department stores across the country.

"Who we're targeting is the trendsetting market, the influencer," Misher said. "Not all Target shoppers are enamored with the concept, however. The Slave to Target blog, which features posts with subjects such as "where are you Tara Jarmon pull sleeve t-shirt" has spawned the Target Couture line: "Target is a Sell Out though — they're sellin' out to the fads and the faddiest store ever ... Intuition."

Michael Silverstein, a senior vice president with the Boston Consulting Group Inc., said he was skeptical of whether Target-branded merchandise would sell outside its stores. It may confuse customers, he said.

"People ... would say, 'Well, why is that here?' They need an explanation," he said. "And in the world of consumer marketing, explanations cost money."

It remains to be seen whether the line will catch on, but at the moment it doesn't matter. The move is part of the retailer's efforts to hold onto the elusive and often ephemeral designation of "cool" according to Marshall Cohen, a senior analyst with consumer research firm NPD Group Inc. Target Couture allows the chain to elevate its brand beyond the walls of its big-box stores and into the glitzy arena of celebrity high fashion. Selling clothes is secondarily.

"I think they're tickled pink — or in their case, tickled Cohen said. "But I don't think they care about that. What they're most concerned about is maintaining the integrity of the brand."

Target helped pioneer the trend of bringing class to the masses six years ago when it signed designer Michael Graves to create a private line of sleek and affordable house-wares. Shoppers snapped up the funky tee kettles and minimalist toasters, and Target quickly followed up with collections by Philippe Starck, home decor by Cynthia Rowley and Ilene Rosenzweig, and apparel by Isaac Mizrahi.

Most recently, it has signed up-and-coming foreign designers: Lella Burchi and Tara Jarmon to create limited-edition apparel for its "Go International" campaign.

The strategy has driven sales growth at stores open at least one year, a key measure in retail, that consistently outpaces that of its rival Wal-Mart Stores Inc., which has a store in Jerome and is looking at building a Twin Falls store.

Last month, Target posted a 5.7 percent increase in sales at those stores, while sales at Wal-Mart stores rose just 2 percent.

Jaye Hersh, owner of Intuition, is heading up the creative side of the project. She wanted the line to convey a cheery and fun attitude but still be wearable.

The foundation has not been able to carry many of its projects through to completion because of the enormous logistical, political and commercial barriers inherent in distributing a universal vaccine to Africa, for example, and developing a vaccine against HIV and AIDS. Finishing those tasks requires political diplomacy, organizational efficiency, and monetary and human resources — challenges that Gates may be uniquely positioned to take on as one of the most successful businessmen of the era.

"A lot of the corporate foundations were born in the 1940s and 1950s," Gates said. "But few have had someone of Gates' stature get involved personally in the execution of their programs, said Sharon Oster, director of the Program on Social Enterprise at Yale University.

Logistics: getting vaccines into places such as Rwanda quickly, for example — will be a large part of what the foundation will need to do, and Gates will probably have to make most decisions about which worthy causes are deserving of his money, such as medicines, infrastructure or education, she said.

Decisions about operational controls and investments are made by Gates, Oster said, adding, "There are also more complicated governmental issues, and certainly Microsoft has dealt with those." But this time Gates' enemy isn't another company — it's disease, and that requires ignorance, political unrest.

And vanquishing those requires a different approach to partnership, she said. It will require working with a diverse group of governments, other nonprofit groups and companies that do not answer to him.

Vaccines have to be tested in human populations in large numbers. Collecting that data in the impoverished, remote villages where malaria diseases occur requires managing, organizing and funding.

Once a drug is ready for production, it has to be mass-produced in a way that allows it to withstand transportation, high temperatures and other environmental factors that can be tough on vaccines.

Some countries charge tariffs or are in states of civil unrest that makes it hard to deliver services.

The most frustrating problem with vaccine delivery is the lack of political will and social infrastructure in some countries whose people need the vaccine. That's why Adil Mahmood, incoming chief executive of the Global HIV Vaccine Enterprise, another group sponsored by the Gates Foundation.

The pharmaceutical industry also needs a business case to justify such work. By helping to fund drug development and trials for diseases such as malaria, tuberculosis and acute diarrheal disease, which usually affect poorer populations, the Gates Foundation has essentially created a new market for drug companies.

GloaxoSmithKline PLC conducted malaria vaccine trials on 100,000 children, and that wouldn't have taken place without the Gates Foundation," said Nils Daulaire, president and chief executive of the Global Health Council, a Gates Foundation group. "As lead investors, they're almost like a country in themselves, with their own world aid programs."

THE ACES ON BRIDGE® Bobby Wolff

"When we play the fool, how wide the theatre expands!"
- Walter Savage Landor

In today's deal from the 2005 U.S. Trials, Ira Chorush reaped the reward for discipline. Sitting East with his shanely 1-count, he heard his right-hand opponent pass, neither side vulnerable, and elected to pass rather than open with one diamond. (You don't want partner to lead that suit!)

At his third turn Ira continued his disciplined approach by passing over two spades rather than competing with a bid of two no-trump to show the minors.

Accordingly, when West, Hemant Lal, led the club 10 against four hearts, declarer had no knowledge of bad breaks ahead. Chorush took dummy's club jack with the king and now had a choice of defenses. A legitimate approach would have been to try to cash a second club or to lead the spade king, looking for a ruff.

Instead, Ira opted for deception by shifting to the spade jack at trick two! Look at it from South's perspective: East, a passed hand who was known to hold the ace and king of clubs, surely did not have the spade king too, since he had never bid. Rather than risk a spade ruff, declarer quite reasonably concluded that it must be better to play for hearts 3-2, in which case there would be just a spade, a heart and a club to lose.

Up went the spade ace, and now declarer simply cashed the heart ace and king to try to avoid any ruffs on defense — and down went the contract!

ANSWER: Bid two hearts, a new suit here being natural and forcing. In this sequence you have no idea what suit you will end up in. It best to keep the auction low with natural and forcing calls, letting partner describe his hand further. (Incidentally, many would play a jump to three hearts by you as a splinter — a singleton heart with good diamond support!)

VIDEO GAME REVIEW

'Karaoke Country': Singalong with a twang

BY JOHN BREEDEN II
 The Washington Post

On a warm summer's evening, on a train bound for nowhere, I met up with a karaoke singer; we were both too tired to sleep.

Sorry about messing up the lyrics to Kenny Rogers' "The Gambler," but after playing "CMT Presents Karaoke Revolution Country" (Konami, for PlayStation 2, $55), I seem to have country on the brain.

"Karaoke Revolution Country" is set up like many of the popular music titles these days. It's all about timing, only instead of pounding on a mat with your foot or strumming a key, you have to sing — and be on key — at the right time.

First you create a character to be your onscreen icon. There are plenty of options, and if you have an EyeToy camera, you can even put your face on your crooner. Then you go public in a variety of venues — from a TV station to a rooftop to downtown Las Vegas. The better you sing, the more the crooner will love you. Mess up too much, and they will boo you off the stage.

You play by following your chosen song's lyrics as they scroll across the screen. A line showing the proper pitch of the notes will also be scrolling. When a word is highlighted, you try to sing it on key, just like at a karaoke bar. A pitch meter shows whether you are too high, too low or spot on. And since this is karaoke, a singer will be singing along with you, helping you hit the right notes.

The game comes with a high-quality Logitech USB microphone, and if you add a second, you can sing duets with your friends or even go head-to-head in knockout rounds.

There is a good tutorial and practice mode that helps you sing the right notes and learn such tricks as singing a song one octave higher and the judges will count it.

In addition to "The Gambler," there are 35 of some of the most well-known country songs, including "9 to 5," "All My Ex's Live in Texas," "Friends in Low Places," "On the Road Again," "Stand by Your Man," "Redneck Woman," "Crazy," "It's Five O'Clock Somewhere" and "Chattahoochee." My wife and I have spent hours belting out country's greatest hits, and at a recent party the karaoke machine (really by PlayStation 2) was the hit of the evening.

Gone country, coming home

Twin Falls' Standards plan series of summer concerts in Magic Valley

BY TIENA TEGAN
South Idaho Press

TWIN FALLS — When it comes to music, there are the classics, New Wave and The Standards.

The five-part a cappella harmony of the Williams brothers, original(s) in Twin Falls and will be returning home for a series of concerts throughout the Magic Valley, starting Monday at the College of Southern Idaho Fine Arts Center auditorium.

"It's always nice to come back home," said Nic Williams, the group's 28-year-old bass. "And we have something extra special in mind for our hometown."

Brothers Nic, Jordan, Nate, Quinn and Morgan, who now range in age from 24 to 31, have been singing together since they were small, performing with a Twin Falls children's theater group called the JUMP Company.

"That's where we learned to love being on stage and performing," said Jordan, 31, a tenor.

In 1991, the Williams brothers sang on a cappella number in a variety show and things began to snowball from there. They began to have requests to perform at weddings, parties and community events.

The Standards were formed in 1993 and their first concert was held at the CSI Fine Arts auditorium. Since then they have toured the nation, opening for such groups as Lone Star and All 4 One and performing at various venues and events. They have twice sung in China.

"Music is expressed without language," said Morgan, a 30-year-old tenor-baritone.

The Standards have been away from the Magic Valley for more than a year. In Nashville, Tenn., working on a record deal. The group has produced five albums to date with music ranging from '50s rock 'n' roll to modern-day ballads and many of their own songs.

"We like to mix the new with the familiar," said Nate, 26, a bass/baritone.

Recently, the Standards have concentrated more on country music, but the group is in continual evolution, according to Nic. Their sound appeals to all ages, he says. Is all done a cappella with no instruments other than their own voices. The Standards work to always keep the flavor of the music fresh and new. When arranging music, the group works together to develop the best quality and find a sound the audience can connect to, Nic says.

"The creation process is very exciting," said Quinn, 24. "We try to anticipate the energy of the audience."

And energy is what The Standards bring to every performance.

"We are excited for the opportunity to be back in our home state of Idaho to perform for all the fans who have supported us on our musical journey," Nic said.

"We are looking forward to each and every show and can't wait to kick it up in the summer sun."

Sandler a master of juvenilia

BY DAVID GERMAN
The Associated Press

Adam Sandler is stuck between the boys' locker room and the teachers' lounge.

His latest comedy, "Click," overflows with the juvenile hijinks that made Sandler the cinematic god of filly among 13-year-old boys of all ages. The movie also ventures into the adult territory Sandler has tentatively mined with "Punch-Drunk Love" and "Spanglish."

Locker room Sandler reigns in the first half of "Click," a fantasy about an overworked architect who's given a remote control that allows him to magically take command of his messy home and office life.

Teachers' lounge Sandler takes over for much of the last half, and he manages to wring genuine pathos out of a character who comes to regret taking the easy way out as the remote leaves his life in ruins.

The result is an Adam Sandler movie that works — to a degree — for just about everyone.

It's an OK date flick along with a comedy for people who love to see a man kicked repeatedly in the groin. It's a movie for sitcom nostalgics, presenting a lovable odd married couple played by Julie Kavner (Valerie Harper's sister on "Rhoda") and the voice of Marge Simpson) and Henry Winkler (the Fonzie himself from "Happy Days").

It has a strong ogle quotient, with Kate Beckinsale looking like the world's hottest housewife. It lets Christopher Walken cut loose with another of those comedically menacing performances for which he has such a knack.

It even has David Hasselhoff for fans still in denial that "Knight Rider" and "Baywatch" are no longer on the air.

But first and foremost, it's an Adam Sandler movie, and that means plenty of mean-spirited Three Stooges-style mayhem, abrupt daps upside the head and one of the grossest flatulence gags ever.

and perfect boyish dad to their adorable young son and daughter, the next an insensitive lout (OK, so maybe that's another sign that Sandler's maturing into the typical adult male).

Michael's a hotshot hoping to make partner at his architectural firm, bowing to the excessive demands of his ladies man boss (Hasselhoff). The job continually strains Michael's family life, and his perpetual inability to figure out which of the remote controls about the living room controls what finally drives him to go shopping for a device to run all his electronics.

At a Bed, Bath & Beyond, he wanders into a murky netherzone where weird salesman Marry (Walken) who gives Michael a prototype remote control that not only runs electronics, but also his life.

Michael's able to fast-forward through unpleasant moments; freeze-frame people and go back and review his past. But soon the remote adds to Michael's "preferences," hurling him into a loop in which the device is controlling him and his future begins to slip away.

The screenplay by Steve Koren and Mark O'Keefe offers some clever moments early on, including an amusing joke about James Earl Jones' voice-over work when Michael discovers there's running audio commentary for his life.

But the first hour of "Click" often is so tiresomely sub-morose that it's surprising director Frank Coraci — who made Sandler's

"The Wedding Singer" and "The Waterboy" — is able to pull out a movie that shows real heart at the end.

Ultimately, "Click" is like channel-surfing. You bounce from "Big Daddy" to "It's a Wonderful Life," "Happy Gilmore" to "A Christmas Carol," "Billy Madison" to "The Twilight Zone."

At least the channel never switches to anything as bad as Sandler's "Little Nicky."

The eclectic soundtrack is a highlight, ranging from Frank Sinatra and the Captain and Tennille to Peter Frampton and Gwen Stefani. Watch for Dolores O'Riordan of the Cranberries as a wedding singer doing a torch-song rendition of her band's hit "Linger."

"Click," released by Sony's Columbia Pictures, is rated PG-13 for language, crude and sex-related humor, and some drug references. Running time: 107 minutes.

Movie nuggets

• "The Break-Up" / C So broke even the capable stars can't fix it. The movie is being sold as a cute romantic comedy starring are-they-or-aren't-they hot couple Jennifer Aniston and Vince Vaughn as a Chicago couple who've broken up. Problem is, neither is willing to leave the condo they share. Reportedly, it was meant to be a darker film, but, as is, the abysmal script sends helter-skelter mixed signals that leave an audience at first confused, then frankly uncomfortable. Too bad, because this had some intriguing possibilities. Rated PG-13 (sexual content, some nudity and language). 1 hour, 46 minutes.

• "Cars" / G A critique-proof horror a garish, noisy, soulless, sure-fire hit from John Lasseter and the folks at Pixar. Yes, the same geniuses who gave us the "Toy Story" movies, "Monsters, Inc." and "Finding Nemo." An route to a race, an arrogant hot-shot race car (voiced by Owen Wilson) is forced to spend time in a sleepy little town, where he discovers life out of the fast lane. And gets some high-octane tips from a mysterious old Hudson Hornet (Paul Newman). The animation is terrific, but the life lessons are imparted with zero charm or nuance and, at almost two hours, it somehow manages to be both frenetic and leaden. That said, the kids will like it though you may feel like you've been run over. Rated G. 1 hour, 56 minutes.

• "Click" / No rating Adam Sandler's latest comedy overflows with the juvenile cliché god of tidily among 13-year-old boys of all ages. The movie also ventures into the adult territory Sandler has tentatively mined with "Punch-Drunk Love" and "Spanglish." As an overworked family man who's given a remote control that magically allows him to take command of his messy home and office life, Sandler spends much of the movie engaging in mean-spirited. Three Stooges-like mayhem. But as tiresomely sub-morose as the first half of the movie often is, Sandler and director Frank Coraci manage to craft genuine paths toward the end out of a character who comes to, regret taking the easy way out as the re-note leaves his life in ruins. Christopher Walken's a hoot as the salesman who provides the remote. Kate Beckinsale, David Hasselhoff, Henry Winkler and Julie Kavner co-star. PG-13 for language, crude and sex-related humor, and some drug references. Running time: 107 minutes.

• "The Da Vinci Code" / B If you liked the book, you'll probably like the movie. If not... well, it's hard to say. Ron Howard's very literal adaptation of Dan Brown's best-seller stars Tom Hanks as a Harvard symbologist (he does codes, hence the title) unwittingly caught up in a mystery that could crack two millenniums of traditional Christian doctrine wide open. Less blasphemous than boring (if you know the book) or confusing (if you don't know the book), the film is, please remember, fiction, not, well, gospel truth. Ian McKellen steals his every scene as a guy as mad about the Holy Grail as Monty Python and Indiana Jones put together. Rated PG-13 (disturbing images, violence, some nudity, thematic material, brief drug references and sexual content). 2 hours, 29 minutes.

• "The Fast and the Furious: Tokyo Drift" / C Lucas Black ("Sling Blade," "Friday Night Lights") is a bad boy American street racer as the third installment of the "F&F" franchise moves to Japan, where revved-up car culture is spot-welded to disaffected youth culture in a videophone version of "Rebel Without a Cause." The adrenaline-charged racing sequences have a kind of brutally modern elegance. But when their fingers slip from the nitro fuel-injection buttons, and the teens are forced to say a few syllables, big chunks of the movie come to a tre-screeching halt. And that stop-and-start action ultimately makes "Tokyo Drift" exhausting to watch. Rated PG-13 (reckless and illegal behavior involving teens, violence, language and sexual content). 1 hour, 44 minutes.

• "Ice Age: The Meltdown" / B Welcome back Manny the mammoth (Ray Romano), Sid the sloth (John Leguizamo) and Diego the saber-toothed tiger (Denis Leary). And meet Ellie (Queen Latifah), a mammoth who believes she is an opossum, and her two opossum "brothers," Crash and Eddie (Seann William Scott and Josh Peck). Global warming is going to melt the glaciers and flood their valley, so off they go, on a series of amiable adventures. The stakes aren't quite as high as the first "Ice Age," and the intensity is dialled down. Good for families, but the filmmakers could have tried harder. Rated PG (mild language and innuendo). 1 hour, 30 minutes.

• "The Lake House" / C+ The sort of movie you either go with or run from. Based on a Korean film, it's a time-tripping romance that's part "Ghost," part "Twilight Zone," part "You've Got Mail." Former "Speed" co-stars Sandra Bullock and Keanu Reeves share a lake house outside Chicago and fall in love via notes they leave in their magical mailbox. See, she's living at the house in 2006 and he's there in 2004. If you need a certain logic in your fantasy-romances, never mind, but if you can forgive some gaps in a time-warped love story, well, the movie holds up its end. Rated PG (some language and a disturbing image). 1 hour, 38 minutes.

• "Mission: Impossible III" / B A solid enough popcorn movie, "III" is probably the best action film so far out of the "Impossible" pipeline. It cost about $150 million but it's got the money shots, eye-candy locations (China, Italy), bits of humor, special-effects bravado and acting prowess to suggest the outline has been worth it. Director J.J. Abrams (TV's "Lost") keeps us interested in this latest version even when his story about some secret something that threatens the world and must be found by Tom Cruise's good-guy spy, Ethan Hunt, as he battles a sadistic arms dealer (Philip Seymour Hoffman) goes a little haywire. Abrams seems to understand pacing and can handle intimate scenes with the same finesse he shows with high-adrenaline action sequences. Rated PG 13 (intense sequences of frenetic violence and menace, and disturbing scenes and some sensuality). 2 hours, 6 minutes.

• "Nacho Libre" / C The deadpan allure of director Jared Hess' "Napoleon Dynamite" doesn't quite translate to this south-of-the-border sendup of "Rocky"-style sports flicks. Jack Black plays a Mexican monk who dreams of being a luchador, a masked freestyle wrestler. A lot of toilet humor and pratfalls ensue. Kids will probably love it, and maybe so will the grownups who get on the offbeat wavelength. But it's this thing most of the time. And Hess hired odd-looking Mexican locals as extras, and they are across as a punchline to a mean-spirited joke. Rated PG (some rough action and crude humor, including dialogue). 1 hour, 31 minutes.

• "The Omen" / C+ This remake is mostly identical in story line to the fine and horrific 1976 original a diplomat (the capable and cardboard-like Liev Schreiber) and his wife (the equally capable and cardboard-like Julia Stiles) end up with a newborn son, Damien, who may or may not be the Antichrist. The movie is so like its original growing dogs, strange deaths, a priest knowing warnings one might suspect this "Omen" to be a predictable retread. It isn't. Though often noticeably inferior to its predecessor, this "Omen" is watchable for its solid supporting performances (Pete Postlethwaite, David Thewlis, Michael Gambon and, especially, Mia Farrow) and gruesome depictions of death. Rated R (disturbing violent content, graphic images and some profanity). 1 hour, 50 minutes.

"Syriana"
R

Written and directed by Stephen Gaghan, "Syriana" is a fearless and ambitious piece of work, made with equal parts passion and calculation, an unapologetically entertaining major studio release with compelling real-world relevance, a film that takes numerous risks and thrives on them all. An Oscar winner for writing "Traffic," Gaghan is not shy about using traditional Hollywood ingredients such as dramatically supercharged plot elements and a major-player cast (including Matt Damon, Jeffrey Wright, Chris Cooper and Amanda Peet), but what he does with them is the opposite of standard.

"Syriana's" complicated plot revolves around a fictional but oil-rich emirate in the Persian Gulf, which begins the narrative by announcing it has transferred drilling rights to Connex, a giant Texas firm, to the higher-bidding People's Republic of China. As Connex tries to recover from its loss, it decides to merge with a smaller firm called Killen. Owned by Jimmy Pope (Cooper), Killen has acquired the drilling rights to a rich field in Kazakhstan. One of "Syriana's" key players is Bennett Holiday (Wright), a smooth, controlled Washington lawyer changed by his power-broker boss, Dean Whiting (Christopher Plummer), to do whatever it takes to ensure that the Department of Justice approves the merger.

Two of "Syriana's" other major figures are also in the oil business, albeit at opposite ends of the spectrum. Bryan Woodman (Damon) is an energy analyst who lives with his wife, Julie (Peet) and their two sons in posh Geneva. Wasim Kahn (Mazhar Munir) is an impoverished Pakistani oil field worker employed by Connex in that mythical emirate who loses his job when the firm loses those drilling rights to the Chinese.

"Syriana's" last major player is veteran CIA field operative Bob Barnes (Clooney), a beer-around intelligence agent who speaks Arabic and Farsi and has never hesitated to get his hands dirty in unsavory covert operations. Now nearing the end of his career, Barnes gets drawn into what is happening in the emirate in a way that eventually affects not only his life but also the lives of all the film's major players.

What makes "Syriana" unusual is not so much its plot complexities, but Gaghan's strategy of obfuscation and willful withholding of information. For "Syriana" is a film that chooses consistently to place the audience one step behind the action, to in effect eliminate the kind of information-providing exposition that we can ordinarily count on.

To be heedlessly thrown into things heightens the film's sense of reality, giving us the feeling that we are on the inside, deliciously eavesdropping on behind-closed-doors situations.

ALBION — You don't expect culinary subtlety in an isolated Idaho town of 260 people.

But then nothing about the Sage Mountain Grill — from the dining yurt out the back door to the raspberry cheesecake complimentary with your Saturday night dinner — is routine.

About Sage Mountain Grill

255 N. Main, Albion — Pizza, pasta, burgers, salmon, rib-eye steak, $5.50-$16.95. Full bar. Hours: Mondays through Thursdays, 8 a.m.-9 p.m.; Fridays and Saturdays, 8 a.m.-10 p.m.; Sundays 9 a.m.-9 p.m. Tom and Ina DiGrazia, owners 673-6696.

The six-year-old eatery on Albion's Main Street has become Cassia County's worst-kept secret. In addition to the workaday fare of burgers, sandwiches and pizza, it offers four-course meals and gourmet dinners. And it's worth the drive.

My wife and I stopped by on a recent Saturday night. She had the prime rib special; I chose the smoked salmon with dill sauce.

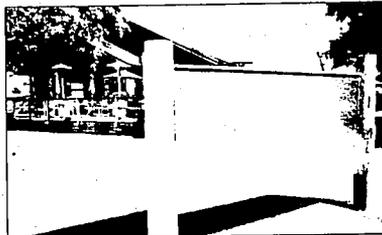

For an appetizer, we ordered insalata caprese — the classic Italian aperitif of tomato, mozzarella and basil, drizzled with olive oil.

The tomato makes or breaks this dish; if it's tasteless, you're basically eating a slice of cheese. Turned out to be the most flavorful tomato — hydroponically grown, I suspect — I've eaten in years.

I was intrigued by how Sage Mountain's chef would handle the combination of smoked salmon and dill.

You don't have both eaten a lot of bad smoked salmon, largely because very few folks who smoke fish know how to modulate the intensity.

But this was clearly salmon prepared by a pro, robust enough to pique your interest but not so overpowering that you'd forget you're eating fish.

The salmon was served with Dutch-oven potatoes — a delightful riff on same-old, same-old restaurant spuds.

At the end, I didn't feel as though I'd eaten just another

It's time for 'Fun Days'

TIMES-NEWS

FILER—There are nearly three dozen community festivals of one kind or another in the Magic and Wood River valleys between Memorial Day and Labor Day each year, but nobody concentrates the fun quite like Filer does.

In 45 hours between Friday evening and Sunday afternoon, Filer Fun Days will include a fish fry, two pancake breakfasts, a flea market, a parade, bingo, live entertainment, a street dance, kids' games, horseshoe pitching, a vintage car show, a raffle, a demolition derby, a spaghetti lunch and a church service.

That's in addition to what is arguably the signature event, the "Famous Chicken Drop" on Saturday afternoon. The principle of a chicken drop is to back the right bird on a numbered, grid-pattern playing surface and wait for nature to take its course.

It will, often to excess. Guess correctly, and you're a winner. You can find out Saturday at 2 p.m. next to the free stage at the Twin Falls County Fairgrounds.

The parade starts at 11 a.m. Saturday at the fairgrounds, travels west on Main Street to Stevens, south on Stevens to Sixth, east on Sixth to Yakima, south on Yakima to the last crossing, then north on Yakima to Sixth, ending at the fairgrounds.

It typically attracts about 1,000 spectators.

Between 1,500 and 2,000 folks typically turn up for three days of fun. Fun Days are unique in that it's the only summertime community-wide festival in the Magic Valley run by a single service club, although the Kiwanis get support for the event from the city of Filer and a Saturday's Fun Days parade traditionally heartens to Filer's past — and this year to its centennial.

Cruise this weekend

The Classic Cruisers Car Show will be held this weekend in Twin Falls and Filer.

The fun starts Thursday night with early registration from 7 to 9 p.m. at A&W restaurant on West Addison Avenue in Twin Falls.

On Friday, there's a street party scheduled at 7 p.m. on Main Avenue in Twin Falls, with a live DJ, slow songs and a flame-throwing contest.

Saturday's events include a parade at 11 a.m. at the Twin Falls County Fairgrounds in Filer, followed by a show 'n' shine at the fairgrounds from noon to 2 p.m. On Saturday night, the show's signature event — the Blue (Dress Boulevard North cruise — starts at 8 p.m.; spectators should bring chairs. An after-cruise party is planned at Hart's 506 and 106 Café.

On Sunday, there will be breakfast in City Park in Twin Falls from 9 to 10:30 a.m., and a show 'n' shine from 10 a.m. to 3 p.m.

Most of the weekend's events are free, and the public is invited.

dozen West End and Twin Falls businesses.

The proceeds go to scholarships for Filer High School students, sending local students to Boys State and Girls State, youth softball and soccer, Filer High track, Filer High Key Club, the high school music department, Filer High BPA and helping fund trips by Filer Middle School students to Washington, D.C.

LOS ANGELES (AP) — With concerts scheduled throughout Europe this summer and its 10-years-in-the-making album slated for release this fall, Guns N' Roses appears ready to make its rock 'n' roll comeback.

Does anyone care?

Some clearly do: Tickets for the band's four New York shows sold out in a snap. Tracks from its long-anticipated album "Chinese Democracy" leaked onto the Internet and caused a frenzy. A surprise radio appearance by GNR frontman Axl Rose stirred up a swirl of online chatter.

Still, rockers at classic haunts along L.A.'s Sunset Strip mostly greeted word of a Guns N' Roses comeback with a yawn. Or worse.

Gina Penney, a talent booker at the Strip's Whisky a-Go-Go, where the band played its earliest shows in the '80s, said Rose is old news.

"He really lost it for himself," she said. "The other guys were taking other projects and keeping themselves visible in the industry, where Axl just became a recluse. I think a lot of people just feel that he's kind of a joke."

A return to the group's glory days will take a lot more than Rose, said David Boivin, wearing a top hat and shades as he dined with friends at the legendary Rainbow Bar & Grill.

"It's just Axl, not Guns N' Roses," he said. "I don't care at all because it's not really the band."

Formed in Los Angeles, Guns N' Roses rose to multiplatinum prominence with its debut record, 1987's "Appetite for Destruction." The group was one of the loudest forces in rock when it disbanded in the mid-1990s.

While Rose faded into obscurity, his former bandmates — guitarist Slash, bassist Duff McKagan and drummer Matt Sorum — joined with Stone Temple Pilots singer Scott Weiland to create Velvet Revolver.

Rose staged something of a Guns N' Roses comeback effort in 2002, though only he and keyboardist Dizzy Reed remained from the band's original lineup. The group ran into problems during the North American leg of its tour, when Rose failed to show up for a performance in Philadelphia.

Picasso muse, casino mogul to speak at arts forum

BY KAREN BOSSICK

TWIN FALLS — Three of the arts world's most intriguing characters will offer a glimpse into their world during this weekend's Inaugural Sun Valley Visual Arts Forum.

Las Vegas developer Steve Wynn, whose long list of developments includes the Bellagio Hotel, will lead things off from 6 to 8 p.m. Friday night at the nextStage Theatre.

He will be followed by Francoise Gilot, artist and mother of Pablo Picasso's children.

Barbara Guggenheim, arts consultant to celebrities, will give a free talk on "How to be Smart Money and Art" at 2 p.m. Saturday at the nextStage.

If you go ...

Steve Wynn and Francoise Gilot will speak from 6 to 8 p.m. Friday at nextStage Theatre. Tickets are $35 for reserved seating, including an open bar. They're $15 for general admission. Wine and beer is available for purchase for those with general admission tickets.

Participants may call in a credit card to Gallery Delivno at 726-8180. Some tickets may be available at the door, as well.

Barbara Guggenheim, arts consultant to celebrities, will give a free talk on "How to be Smart Money and Art" at 2 p.m. Saturday at the nextStage Theatre.

The two-day event also will feature a Saturday morning gallery walk with coffee and muffins. Some of the galleries have planned special exhibitions for the event from 9 a.m. to noon.

There also will be a special outdoor sculpture garden set up across the street from the nextStage Theater through July 20.

with scroll from the Ming Dynasty, which lasted from 1368 to 1644.

That was nearly twice the previous $5.7 million record.

He also is famous for purchasing Picasso's "Le Reve," which now enjoys a spot as the centerpiece of the Wynn Las Vegas.

Gilot is an internationally renowned artist whose time as Picasso's muse was chronicled in her autobiography, "Life With Picasso." The book became the basis for a film starring Anthony Hopkins in 1996.

Now 84 years old, Gilot was with Picasso during the 1940s and '50s and was his partner and model on many famous works. She also married Jonas Salk, who pioneered the polio vaccine.

"She was a French artist in the true meaning of the word, her most prominent influence being Matisse, rather than Picasso," said Sun Valley gallery owner Frederic Boloix, who met her through an art dealer friend.

"One of the interesting things she told me was that artists tend to paint according to how they see the world. Artists who live in areas of humidity, for instance, often feature lots of haze in their work. Artists who live in clear sunny areas focus more on forms and shapes."

Boloix noted when he visited her studio was her collection of Schumann symphonies.

"She also told me she found the Golden Mean in her paintings, which is something architects used in creations like the Gothic cathedrals," he added.

Wynn is lending the gallery association a couple of Gilot's paintings for the event, Boloix added.

"I think it will be a very unique glimpse into one of the richest and most creative periods of the 20th century—where artists like Picasso, Matisse, Chagall and others were at the height of their powers. And Francoise had contact with all of them."

Ketch'em Alive kicks off Tuesday

BY KAREN BOSSICK
The Wood River Journal

KETCHUM — Ketch'em Alive begins its seventh season on Tuesday with a musical lineup that's heavy on the world beat.

But, first, an acoustic rock-bluegrass band called Ten Mile Tide will lead off the series of free concerts in Ketchum's Forest Service Park.

The five-piece band from San Francisco will take the stage from 7:30-9 p.m., following a half-hour set by a local band.

"I decided to go with more of the world beat sound that's been so popular—that sets this year apart," said Will Caldwell, who organizes the concerts for the Sun Valley/Ketchum Chamber and Visitors Bureau.

"We'll have a reggae band, Rising Lion, on Fourth of July—we've never had a concert on the Fourth before but that's when Tuesday falls. And we'll also have a band on tour from Finland that plays a hot fusion of Finlandia string music. And I think Moter will be back on Aug. 27. Too bad for the Doobie Brothers, who play on Warm Springs that night, because people here really like Moter."

Ten Mile Tide, which takes the stage at First and Washington streets Tuesday, was formed in 1999 by twin brothers Jason and Justin Manning.

It was nominated for a Jammy for New Groove of the Year in 2006, selected as New Groove of the Month by Jambands.com in 2005 and selected a finalist in Roll magazine's Jamoff Competition in 2004.

It has shared the stage with such groups as The Wallers, The Clumsy Lovers and Jerry Joseph and has played such music festivals as High Sierra and Utah Arts.

The group's albums include "Ten Mile Tide," "Midnight is Early" and "Flow."

Other groups on tap for this year include Afrodesia, an all-ginger band that does a great job playing African rhythms and songs, and the hip-hop band known as the K-23 Orchestra, which performs hip-hop without cuss words.

The 812 Band is the only local headliner.

Opening acts will include the Sonic Skilletz, Public Radio, In Search of a Red-Headed Stranger and the Ketchum Wood Street Band.

Drinks provided by the Sun Valley Brewery will be available for purchase. There will be no food for sale, but picnics are welcome.

Sponsors are the chamber, city of Ketchum, Atkinson's, Barry Peterson Jewelers, Ketchum Dry Goods and Rocky Mountain Hardwear.

with especially salacious details of the Freddy-Jason mad-slaughterer genre of films, is a great reworker.

The basics are this: A disputatious, dysfunctional red state clan is headed to California in a big SUV and trailer. You can tell they're doomed to slaughter. But as the Wicked Witch says in "The Wizard of Oz," quizzically nosedding her polyni chin: "But... it's how to do it!" Aja comes up with all sorts of ways. Hmmm, burning at the stake, for one. How about a pickax in the head (a favorite), or the first recorded close-up kill with the new Smith & Wesson .500 magnum (messy), but there are all sorts of other new and different ways.

Even as he reinvents, Aja invents. He's clearly working on a big-budget for his first American film and has been told he can do anything he can think of. Visually, the movie is wildly alive, full of sure touches

—The Washington Post

"The World's Fastest Indian" PG-13

There always seems to be something endlessly fascinating going on inside the characters played by Anthony Hopkins, and it's not merely the suggestion of an inner life. The man he's played—whether it's Hannibal Lecter in "The Silence of the Lambs"; Stevens, the preternaturally stoic butler in "Remains of the Day"; C.S. Lewis in "Shadowlands"; or Richard Nixon in "Nixon"—all share a seemingly oxymoronic quality of Zen "unconsciousness. Hopkins' men—often in the grip of acute repression—are so focused that they literally have to be shaken back to the world around them. Rather than distancing the audience, the characteristic pulls us in closer, eager to see what makes them tick.

Burt Munro is no different, but rather than repressed he's irrepressible. In "The World's Fastest Indian," Hopkins portrays the sexagenarian New Zealand pensioner who hopes to set a land speed record for motorcycles in 1963—a man who doesn't take no for an answer and would rather die trying than give up his dream. Grinning beneath a thick New Zealand accent and a well-earned layer of grime, Hopkins charms us into looking past the film's "Crescille Dundee" corniness and the story's possibly unavoidable predictability to experience a man's quest for grace.

Based on the real-life exploits of Munro, it's a boilerplate fish-out-of-water/road trip/underdog sports movie—but it's a deck of a ride with Hopkins leading the way.
