FBI thwarts plan to flood Manhattan

By Tom Hays
Associated Press writer

NEW YORK — A terrorist plot to flood lower Manhattan by attacking train tunnels under the Hudson River used by tens of thousands of commuters was thwarted before the conspirators could travel to the United States, authorities said Friday.

Eight suspects — including an al-Qaida loyalist arrested in Lebanon and two others in custody elsewhere — had hoped to pull off the attack in October or November, federal officials said. But federal investigators working with their counterparts in six other countries intervened. The other five suspects remained at large. Please see TERRORISTS, Page A2

Crowd sees Schilling off on record quest

TWIN FALLS — A crowd lined the canyon rim Friday evening as Air National Guard Capt. Dan Schilling set out on his quest to make a record-setting 200 BASE jumps in 24 hours — and raise some money doing it.

The crane is a 60-ton construction crane outfitted with a basket. Schilling is reeled up to the top of the bridge after every jump to cut the time between jumps.

Some onlookers just happened upon the event. Twin Falls resident Melissa Pease said she had been down in the canyon playing golf when the jumping started. While she enjoyed the sight, she said she would never consider the sport herself.

Schilling made his first jump at 8:10 p.m., delayed slightly from his intended start of 8 p.m.

"We needed to make sure the crane was fully operational," said John Schilling, Dan's son.

"Well, watch a few more, then I'll have to leave," she said. Please see JUMPS, Page A2

Don Natzke of RC Framing in Twin Falls works on a new home Friday in the Cambridge East Subdivision. Natzke said that the building boom across the area keeps him and other construction workers busy throughout the year. TWIN FALLS — It's a good time to be looking for a job in south-central Idaho.

Unemployment numbers are down most everywhere in the eight-county region, according to the latest numbers from Idaho Commerce and Labor. And in the Mini-Cassia region, the jobless rate has hit an historic low. The combined unemployment rate for the two-county region in June was 4.3 percent, down from 4.9 percent the same month a year ago.

That's amazing, considering it was just a few short years ago that Simplot, one of area's major employers, closed its doors and put national 700 employees in perspective.

See JOBS, Page A2
The closure also affected an additional 1,000 workers and put Minidoka County's jobless rate at double digits — 10.1 percent in October 2004. Last month's jobless rate in Cassia County was 4.1 percent.

down from 4.8 percent a year ago. That's the lowest it's been in three decades, Greg Rogers, regional economist for Idaho Commerce and Labor, said Friday.

"We're looking at a definite economic recovery from the Simplot closure," Rogers said. "There's been some excellent ag hiring and a lot of construction projects. A lot of people are entering the work force again. More people are employed."

"That is a huge drop," Rogers said. Please see JOBS, Page A2

Hours of earnings disappear with boy's wallet

By Virginia S. Hutchins
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — He mowed lawns and baby-sat and won a spelling bee to earn that money.

Even stayed home for a week to mow grass and deliver newspapers while his brothers — his business partners — vacationed.

And 11-year-old Michael Kezele gave portions of his earnings to his church and his savings account before tucking the rest into his navy blue wallet with the zipper and the Velcro and the "N" logo.

But that wallet, and its precious contents, are gone.

At PetSmart on Thursday, Michael bought crickets for Nathan the salamander, then waited in front of the store for his mother to pick him up. And left his wallet behind.

The wallet also held his library card and school ID and a U.S. Army recruiting card.

But what Michael's really missing is the cash.

"I worked hard to get the money," he said.

Michael is offering a reward for the return of his wallet. If you find it, call him at 734-1252.

He's been calling stores in PetSmart's vicinity and on Friday placed a call to the reporter who wrote about his family's airplane-building project last year. Michael's hoping for a happy ending, and he knows something about the power of the press.

Idaho wants flu pandemic meds in state, not with feds

By Rebecca Boone
Associated Press writer

BOISE — Idaho officials won't decide whether to order additional supplies of antiviral influenza medicines until they know whether the federal government will let Idaho's share of existing stocks be stored in-state, said Tom Shannahan, spokesman for the Idaho Department of Health and Welfare.

As part of its preparations for a flu pandemic, the federal government is stockpiling Tamiflu and other medications designed to reduce the symptoms associated with influenza at distribution sites nationwide.

The Bush administration plans to buy enough antivirals to treat 44 million people, and Idaho has been promised more than 203,000 courses of the drugs. States can buy more if they want, with the federal government paying a quarter of the cost, up to a prescribed amount for each state. In all, states could use the subsidy to buy antivirals for an additional 31 million people.

With more than 1.3 million people living in Idaho, 203,000 courses of antiviral drugs would only be enough for an initial response to a pandemic outbreak, Shannahan said.

One course is enough to treat one person with influenza. Idaho has the option to buy more than 143,000 additional courses, which would bring the state total to enough medication to treat more than 347,000 people.

But each additional course purchased would cost Idaho $14.43 after the federal subsidy, for a cost of a little over $3 million if Idaho were to buy the maximum allotment.

Terrorists

Continued from page A1 "It was never a concern that this would actually be executed," Homeland Security Secretary Michael Chertoff said in Boston. "We're not, as I say, all over this." Initial reports said that the terrorists wanted to attack the Holland Tunnel, a major thoroughfare for cars entering the island of Manhattan. But officials said the group had specifically mentioned only the train tunnels under the Hudson River used by commuters on their way to New York and New Jersey. "This is a plot that involved martyrdom and explosives" and focused on the "tubes that connect Jersey and lower Manhattan," said FBI Assistant Director Mark J. Merhson. The men believed that, by bombing the train tunnels they could unleash massive flooding in lower Manhattan, where Wall Street and the World Trade Center are located, New York Police Department Commissioner Ray Kelly said. A federal law enforcement official, who spoke on condition of anonymity because the investigation is ongoing, said investigators believe that an attack on a train tunnel, unlike the Holland Tunnel, could have achieved that goal. The official said the suspects hoped to inflict damage on the U.S. economy. Investigators decided in recent weeks that the "plotting for this attack had matured to a point where it appeared that the individuals were about to move forward," Merhson said.

Jumps

Continued from page A1 said, "I don't want to think of this all night." Locals Dew Raddburn and Russell Rudd spent time watching others make jumps prior to Schilling's first leap. "Tells you how much power they have to shut down one lane on the state highway," Rudd observed. Schilling had support from Utah as well. Curtis Harris, who lives across from Schilling, described his BASE-jumping neighbor as a patriotic, generous man. "He's a great guy," Harris said. "The fact that he's doing this for charity is who he is."

Besides Schilling's son, Dan's brother and his children were out to watch the jump. Fish Scheffey, Dan's aunt who couldn't make it, said his whole family is supportive but concerned. "Everybody I could tell, including his family and everyone," is praying for him, right now, said Scheffey of Ukiah, Calif. Twin Falls police are asking that the public watch their step on the rim as the jumps continue today. "I just hope that people wouldn't get too close to the edge to undermine their safety," said Twin Falls police Sgt. Ron Fustos.

Jobs

Continued from page A1 said, "What we've seen and what's encouraging is that it's all across different sectors. Advertising is up, retail hiring is up, tourism-related jobs in hotels and restaurants are up. Manufacturing is up. Construction has seen a huge increase." That might offer a little encouragement to the 140 employees at the Kraft Food Inc. plant in Rupert who will be looking for new jobs when the plant closes in January. However, to the unemployed or soon-to-be unemployed, it's about more than just numbers. "These statistics are nice and it can give you encouragement as a job seeker, but one thing statistics don't do is take into consideration the human factor," Rogers said. "Unemployment might be 4 percent, but if you're displaced from your job through no fault of your own, the unemployment rate is 100 percent because you are the one who is unemployed. Job loss is one of the top five most stressful and traumatic things that can happen to a person, so we can't minimize that." Camas, Blaine and Gooding counties boasted jobless rates of under 3 percent in June. "Typically, economists consider full employment as 4 percent," Rogers said. "You always have some workers who are between jobs or training for jobs. If you're under 4 percent, you're doing very well. Under three percent is just incredible." The combined jobless rate for Twin Falls and Jerome counties in June was 3.2 percent, down from 3.5 percent the same month a year ago. Twin Falls County had a 3.1 percent jobless rate in June, down from 3.4 percent the same month a year ago. "Our construction employment is one of the strongest in the state," Rogers said. "Twin Falls shattered new housing records last year, and the year before and the year before." And that's keeping home contractors busy. "We are staying extremely busy compared to what we were a few years ago," said Jay Markle, marketing and sales manager for T-KO Construction, a local residential home builder. "There's also plenty of commercial construction and it doesn't show any signs of slowing down soon. The Magic Valley Mall recently got a renovation and Jayco is getting ready to expand. Dirt is now being moved to make way for the construction of a new Mormon temple. "That's going to employ a couple hundred workers," Rogers said. "Twin Falls County is also getting a nationwide reputation for being a great place for businesses to expand or relocate. "The recruitment of Dell in 2002 put us on the national, maybe the worldwide map as far as being a viable area," Rogers said. "Since then, we've brought in Jayco and of course, retail is up." The unemployment numbers are good, but there are some other numbers that have Rogers concerned - the numbers at the gas pumps. With gas prices around $3 a gallon, people are thinking twice about taking that weekend trip, which affects the tourism and service sectors. And people who commute 30 minutes away to their jobs are feeling it in the pocketbook. "Sometimes, it's $100 extra a month," Rogers said. "That really cuts into the family's budget. Those who are commuting to marginally paying jobs might have to think whether they can continue to do so."

Fallen soldier gets a Bronze Star but no pagan star

By Alan Cooperman
The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — At the Veterans Memorial Ceremony in the small town of Fernley, Nev., there is a wall of brass plaques for local heroes. But one space is blank. There is no memorial for Sgt. Patrick Stewart.

That's because Stewart was a Wiccan, and the U.S. Department of Veterans Affairs (VA) has refused to allow a symbol of the Wiccan religion — a five-pointed star within a circle, called a pentacle — to be inscribed on U.S. military memorials or grave markers.

previously had served in the Army-in-Korea-and-Operation Desert Storm. He was posthumously awarded a Purple Heart and a Bronze Star.

His widow, Roberta Stewart, scattered his ashes in the hills above Reno, Nev., and would like him to have a permanent memorial.

She said the veterans cemetery in Fernley offered to install a plaque with his name and no religious symbol. She refused.

"Once they do that, they'll forget me. They don't like having a hole in the wall," she said. "I feel very strongly that my husband fought for the Constitution of the United States, he was proud of his spirituality and of being a Wiccan, and he was proud of being an American."

Wicca is one of the fastest-growing faiths in the country, its adherents have increased almost 17-fold from 8,000 in 1990 to 134,000 in 2001, according to the American Religious Identification Survey. The Pentagon says that more than 1,800 Wiccans are on active duty in the armed forces.

Wiccans still suffer, however, from the misconception that they are devil worshippers.

Some Wiccans call themselves witches-pagans or neopagans. Most of their rituals revolve around the cycles of nature, such as equinoxes and phases of the moon. Wiccans often pick and choose among religious traditions, blending and feminine gods with ritual dancing, chanting and herbal medicine.

Federal courts have recognized Wicca as a religion since 1986. Prisons across the country treat it as a legitimate faith, as do the Internal Revenue Service and the U.S. military, which allows Wiccan ceremonies on its bases.

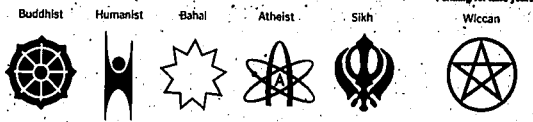

"My husband's dog tags said 'Wiccan' on them," Stewart noted.

But applications from Wiccan groups and individuals to VA for use of the pentacle on grave markers have been pending for nine years, during which time the symbols of 11 other faiths have been approved.

Seeking VA's Blessing

The Department of Veterans Affairs (VA) has approved the symbols of 38 faiths for use on gravestones and memorials. It has not yet approved requests for the Wiccan symbol.

not have. But that requirement was eliminated last year, she noted.

"I really have no idea why it has taken so long" for the Wiccan symbol to gain approval, Schuda said.

The department declined repeated requests from The Washington Post to speak to higher-ranking officials about the issue.

Retired Army Chaplain William Christal, a United Church of Christ minister who was chaplain of Stewart's National Guard unit, has strongly backed Roberta Stewart's request.

"It's such a clear First Amendment issue. I can't even conceive of why they are not granting it, except for political reasons," he said. "I think the powers that be are afraid they'll alienate conservative Christians if they approve a symbol that connotes witches and warlocks casting spells and brewing potions."

Nevada's congressional delegation, including Senate Minority Leader Harry Reid (D), also has supported

Roberta Stewart. But letters printed by Nevada newspapers indicate how much hostility Wiccans face. "I don't see how anything that supports witchcraft and satanism can legitimately be called a religion," one reader wrote to the Reno Gazette-Journal.

Stewart said that she is trying to educate people about Wicca, as well as to fulfill her husband's wishes. "Until he is laid to rest," she said, "I cannot rest."

NASA adds day and spacewalk to Discovery mission

By Karen Kaplan
Los Angeles Times

After analyzing the shuttle's energy consumption, NASA officials decided Friday to extend Discovery's mission by a day and to add a third spacewalk to the astronauts' itinerary.

Astronauts Piers Sellers and Michael Fossum will use the extra spacewalk Wednesday to practice making repairs to the carbon material that protects the shuttle's nose cone and the leading edge of the wings from extreme heat, said John Shannon, deputy shuttle program manager.

The pair also may take the opportunity to remove a protruding "gap filler" — a small strip of ceramic-coated fabric wedged between the shuttle's delicate heat-resistant tiles — that is sticking out slightly more than an inch beyond the craft's skin.

Discovery, which is docked with the International Space Station, is scheduled to land at Kennedy Space Center in Florida on July 17 after 13 days in orbit.

The shuttle astronauts spent part of Friday continuing their inspection of Discovery for possible damage.

Using a camera attached to the end of the shuttle's 50-foot robotic arm, the astronauts scanned the shuttle's surface, focusing on six areas of possible damage.

Three of the areas were analyzed by National Aeronautics and Administration engineers and found to pose no safety threat to Discovery. The other three are expected to be cleared over the weekend, Shannon said.

The "systems gotten by being analyzed better," said Steve Poulos, manager of the orbiter project office. "Our whiteboard in the mission evaluation room is relatively clean."

Sellers and Fossum are scheduled to conduct their first spacewalk Saturday. The highlight of the six-hour excursion will be a test of whether the astronauts can perch themselves on the end of the shuttle's robotic arm to make repairs to hard-to-reach areas of the craft's heat shield.

In this image made from NASA TV, the Space Shuttle Discovery has the Earth in the background as the robot arm inspects the craft for damage Friday.

The pair will simulate various repair-related movements with the boom in at least three different positions.

The shuttle crew spent Friday transferring a supply module from Discovery's cargo bay to the space station and beginning the weeklong process of unloading more than 7,000 pounds of food, clothing and equipment.

Among the provisions are a second oxygen generator that will allow the space station to accommodate a crew of six.

Environmental groups, Navy settle sonar suit

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Four days after a judge halted the Navy's use of high-intensity sonar in Pacific warfare exercises because of concerns that marine mammals may be harmed, the Navy and environmental groups agreed to terms under which the sonar may be used, lawyers for both sides said Friday.

The settlement prevents the Navy from using the sonar within 25 miles of the newly established Northwestern National Monument during its fleet of the Pacific 2006 exercises, and also imposes a variety of methods to watch for and report the presence of marine mammals.

The environmental groups, led by the Natural Resources Defense Council, had obtained a court order Monday temporarily barring the use of the "mid-frequency active sonar."

"After the settlement" was reached, U.S. District Court Judge Florence-Marie Cooper signed an order dismissing the environmentalists' lawsuit.

Sugar company still wants changes

By Niall Poppio
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — Just a little influence.

That's all Amalgamated Sugar Co. is asking for when Twin Falls County assesses its property every year.

About one month after losing a property assessment case last year, the Idaho Supreme Court, the sugar producer was one of nine property owners — one other didn't show up and one withdraw — who appeared in front of the Board of Equalization this week to appeal their property values. The company didn't want to appeal so much as have more of a chance to participate in the process, said Wayne Neeley, vice president and controller.

The company wants to be able to help pick an outside appraiser for its property and have an independent consultant look at the interest rate that is factored into the property.

However, Neeley stressed that the company is not contesting the Supreme Court decision, which upheld a district court's ruling that Twin Falls, Minidoka and Canyon counties property appraised the company's property.

"I don't think they considered it very long," Neeley said. "We just kind of got shot down in that regard."

The appeal was also triggered by events in the other two counties. The company is still clarifying some parts of the case and wanted to keep its foot in the door, Neeley said.

"Because Twin Falls was involved in the overall case, we felt we had to file a protective claim at this point," he said. "We're not doing battle again. We're not anticipating having to do that."

Commissioner Tom Mikesell said the board, made up of the three commissioners, denied Amalgamated's appeal for fear it would bring a landslide of requests.

"They were trying to be involved in the process of evaluating property in this county," he said. "I don't think that's appropriate. I believe it would set a precedent that would allow anyone to question the assessor and who hires and wouldn't allow him to get any work done."

The commissioners are awaiting information from County Assessor Gerry Bowden and will finish ruling on the request Monday, the due date to mail the appeals.

Ready to ride

By Larrie Welch
For the Times-News

BUHLEY — About 30 Wake boarders will converge on the Snake River today to vie for points in the annual Wake in the Snake wakeboard competition sponsored by Idaho Water Sports.

"We have some real good hot riders coming in," said Carol Warr, business manager for Idaho Water Sports.

Tup riders, such as Aberdeen's Andrew Wallace of Team IWS, will dig into their bag of tricks for the judges and spectators.

at Burley's Golf Course Marina. Food will be available from Farmer's Corner and the marina and boat ramp will close from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m.

The people who come here to ride say this is the best venue. With the waterfront park it is a really great place for the spectators. Burley is really fortunate to have it," Warr said.

The event is expected to bring competitors from around Idaho, as well as Utah and Nevada.

Idaho Water Sports now has its own team on the circuit and three of its four riders are rated in the top 10.

"People should come out to watch. It is really exciting. These kids are awesome riders and the tricks are great," Warr said.

Andrew Wallace of Team IWS practices near the Burley Golf Course before last year's Wake in the Snake. Wallace, rated ninth in points in the Intermountain Wakeboard Association this year, will compete again today.

Civil liberties symposium ends as pilgrimage begins

By Joshua Palmer
Times-News writer

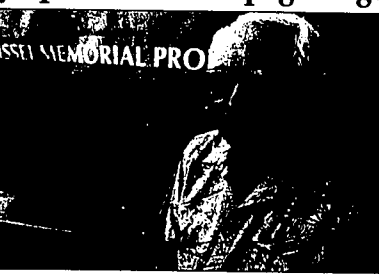

TWIN FALLS — "This is not a story that belongs to any one group; this is a part of history that belongs to all of America."

Those were the words from Yosh Nakagawa, who was interned in the Minidoka Relocation Center and that was the sentiment of this year's symposium on Civil Liberties in Wartime.

The symposium, which was a coordinated effort by the Friends of Minidoka, College of Southern Idaho and Boise State University, wrapped up two days of discussion Friday about the freedoms taken from thousands of Japanese-Americans during World War II.

But many said the symposium was not just about lost liberties in 1942, but also about the importance of protecting liberties today.

"The price of freedom lies in the hands of the young," Nakagawa said. "And if our legacy as Japanese-Americans is correct, then youth can learn from this

Yosh Nakagawa, 75, a former internee in the Minidoka Internment Camp from 9 to 14 years old, poses Friday in front of a banner inscribed with the names of Japanese-Americans incarcerated in 1942 by government executive order because of World War II.

Experience the pilgrimage. Coming Sunday important part of history." And learning is what they did.

This was the first year that CSI and BSU allowed students to earn credit by attending the symposium. But Jim Azumano, president of the board of directors for Friends of Minidoka, said it was a perfect match because the focus of both the symposium and the Minidoka memorial was to educate the public.

Although the symposium concluded yesterday, many former internees and members of the public will be making an annual pilgrimage to the Minidoka Internment National Monument today.

Friends of Minidoka has been working since 1972 to reclaim most of the original internment site.

And for more than a decade, a growing crowd of people have returned each year to remember the past and celebrate the future.

"None of my people wanted to be incarcerated in Idaho, and really, a lot of the people here didn't want us here either," Nakagawa said.

"But more than 60 years later we are being welcomed back by these communities. You can interpret that any way you want, but I think it's a good story — one that needs to be told."

Twin Falls native loved singing and education

By Niall Poppio
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — If there's one thing about Howard Ronk that his children remember, it is his voice, a deep, pleasant bass.

"He sang everywhere, even in the shower," said Cyndy Paulos of Jerome, Ronk's daughter.

Howard Ronk, who died Thursday from complications with pneumonia, is remembered as a supportive, funny father who loved the town in which he spent most of his life. Born to a Twin Falls minister, he only left to attend Kansas State University for three and a half years. He returned with a veterinary degree and his wife, Nelda Shipper.

"As far as I knew, that was what he always wanted to do," Jay Ronk, of Postville said of his father.

Besides his successful veterinary work, Howard served on the Twin Falls School Board for 10 years — as chair of the board for six of those — as president of the Idaho Veterinary Medical Association for two years, on the board of the Idaho Veterinary Medical Examiners for three years and on almost every committee and board at the Twin Falls Methodist Church.

"He used to joke that he'd served on every committee in the church, except for maybe the ladies' groups," Jay Ronk said.

Along with the Methodist choir, Howard was part of the Society for the Preservation and Encouragement of Barbershop Quartet Singing in America from 1978 on. He was president of the Twin Falls chapter for two years and took pride in singing as part of the "Valley Edition" quartet.

He had an infectious sense of humor. Jay Ronk remembers waking up to the sound of his father shouting Bill Cosby lines.

"He woke me up with 'Hey hey, Fat Albert,'" he said.

Howard loved the outdoors and floated the Middle Fork of the Salmon River with Jay when the latter was a Boy Scout.

He loved to hunt and fish in the Selway-Bitterroot Wilderness, Paulos said.

He deeply loved his family, according to his children.

One sign of that was the lady bug-spotted Volkswagen Bug he bought his wife in 2000.

"He was just always supportive and told me he loved me and played with me," Cyndy Paulos said.

"He was funny and he sang and told jokes. He was a great dad."

Barbara C. Parr

home and endured the sprinkler system that was obviously designed by a farmer. But her only grandchild, Jordan, was in Boise and, in late 1995, she moved there to be an active participant in his life. She could be seen tending her muscles and gritting her teeth to provide that important moral support of Jordan's next move on the west coast. She would bundle up and cheer wildly at all the football games and revel in his "championship season." She became "that character" to his friends and she often asked, "What did Barb do this week?" Barbara was preceded in death by her husband, Melvin; her parents; her brother, Dea Campbell; in-laws and many friends. She felt each loss and worried that she would be the last one left. She will be greatly missed by her son, Wesley (Joan) of Rupert; daughter, Joanna (Dan) Charboneau of Boise; grandson, Jordan Charboneau of Boise; and sister-in-law, Gerry Campbell of Palm Springs, Calif. She is also survived by several nieces, a nephew and their families.

Barbara will be fondly remembered for many things: her gracious hospitality, her quiet support of the family farm, her needlework, her interest in birds, her love of dogs and cats, and her tiny little drawings when playing Pictionary. All her life, Barbara was a devoted journal-keeper and today the family enjoys sharing the trials and joys faithfully recorded.

A private family service and inurnment will be held today at the Rupert cemetery. An informal celebration of Barbara's life will be held after the morning church service at the Rupert Methodist Church on Sunday, July 9, at 12:15 p.m. in the church fellowship hall. Funeral arrangements are under the direction of Hansen Mortuary in Rupert, Idaho.

Smithsonian scientific illustrator dies at age 69

The Washington Post
Elnaie R.S. Hodges, who combined art with science in her meticulous drawings of insects and other organisms as a scientific illustrator at the National Museum of Natural History, died June 27 of breast cancer at her home in Eugene, Ore. She retired to Oregon 10 years ago after 31 years at the Smithsonian museum, where she became one of the country's leading figures in her exacting field. She was 69.
Hodges' illustrations of bees, moths, mosquitoes, fleas and other invertebrate animals were seldom seen by the vast numbers of visitors at the Smithsonian's museums on the Mall. Instead, they appeared primarily in scientific papers and books as part of the research of Smithsonian scientists.

She was a founder of a professional group, the Guild of Natural Science Illustrators, and was a member of the country's leading figures in her exacting field. She was 69.
Hodges' illustrations of bees,

1989 and revised in 2003.
"Elnaie was one of the absolute masters in the field," said Pamela Henson, director of Institutional History at the Smithsonian Institution Archives.

"She wrote the textbook on natural history illustration," said Robert Robbins, an entomologist at the Natural History Museum and Hodges' former supervisor. "In that sense, she was a world leader."
Hodges followed an artistic tradition that dates back to ancient Greece.

Veterans medical services to stay in Walla Walla

WALLA WALLA, Wash. (AP)—A new outpatient clinic will replace an aging hospital here, providing medical care for veterans in the region; Veterans Affairs Secretary James Nicholson said Friday.

The Jonathan M. Watnright Memorial Veterans Affairs Medical Center, which serves some 69,000 veterans in southeastern Washington and neighboring states, had been threatened with closure for several years.

The new facility will provide state-of-the-art outpatient services, including primary care and mental health care, Nicholson said in a statement.

"Walla Walla veterans will get a modern outpatient facility that continues the high quality of care they receive from VA," Nicholson said.

Nicholson said the new facility will be located on the 84-acre Walla Walla hospital campus. The VA will use the rest of the campus for housing and other services for veterans.

The hospital in Walla Walla, a city of 30,000, serves veterans in Eastern Washington, northern Idaho and northeastern Oregon. Saving the hospital because a bipartisan effort for lawmakers from Washington and Idaho, with Sen. Patty Murray, D-Wash.; Sen. Larry Craig, R-Idaho; and U.S. Rep. Cathy McMorris, R-Wash., taking up the cause.

Details about the cost and timetable for building the new facility, and the fate of the existing Watnright hospital, were not immediately disclosed.

The VA statement came ahead of a 2 p.m. announcement Nicholson was scheduled to make at a news conference in Walla Walla. He was to be joined by McMorris, whose district includes the medical center, and Max Lewis, director of the VA regional office responsible for Walla Walla. "This announcement marks the end of a long process that has focused on keeping care in Walla Walla," McMorris said in the VA's statement.

The VA said it will include nursing home care, residential rehabilitation, inpatient hospital care and inpatient mental health services in Walla Walla, although not necessarily on the VA campus.

Nicholson said the Walla Walla complex first opened in 1929, and normal improvements had been made on the campus in 50 years. The VA since 2004 has been evaluating services at 17 facilities across the country. In late April, officials from the Walla Walla area went to Washington, D.C. to offer a proposal that would allow the VA to continue offering health care to veterans, while reducing the costs of maintaining the sprawling hospital complex.

The medical center has 350 jobs and an annual payroll of $18 million to $20 million. Other VA medical centers in the region are in Spokane, Wash., Seattle and Portland, Ore. The district also has clinics in Richland and Yakima, Wash., and Lewiston, Idaho.

N. Idaho wants to draw line in sand for public, private beach

COEUR D'ALENE, Idaho (AP)—For beach users, it will be a line in the sand.

City officials, though, hope the string of markers they want to install at 100-foot intervals on a three-block strip of sand will end confrontations between lakefront property owners and public beach users at Sanders Beach, a popular cooling-off place at Lake Coeur d'Alene.

But some area property owners say they own the land, and people using the beach are trespassing. In September, retired 1st District Judge James Judd ruled the public owns the beach from below the 2,130-foot elevation line—the ordinary high water mark. Above that is private property.

Property owners have appealed that ruling. The Idaho Supreme Court is scheduled to hold a hearing on Aug. 29 in Coeur d'Alene to consider the appeal.

In the meantime, the city last week filed for an encroachment permit with the Idaho Department of Land to get permission to install permanent markers on the beach at the 2,130-foot line. The permit is needed anytime a permanent structure is placed in a public water body.

Mike Haman, an attorney representing the city, said the city hopes to have the markers installed by July 21. "We intend to survey the exact location of 2,130 and establish markers," Haman told the Coeur d'Alene Press.

"The markers we hope to use will go in every 100 feet or so. They will be flush with the ground and will say 2,130 on it. Of course, this is if the state approves."

Summer water levels average about 2,120 feet.

It's the city's intent to treat Sanders Beach from 2,130 south as a public beach and regulate it the same and treat the private property as any other private property in the city," Haman said.

At city beaches, alcohol is not allowed and there is no closing time.

John Magnuson, an attorney who represents lakefront property owners, said the public has used the beach with property owner's permission for a long time. But times have changed.

"With the increase in population and decrease in civility, it really becomes a societal problem," Magnuson told The Associated Press on Friday.

"What used to be bottle caps and Pepsi sticks is now broken beer bottles and condoms."

Group sues over proposed logging in bear country

SPOKANE, Wash. (AP)—A proposed timber sale in the Idaho Panhandle National Forests will damage key habitat for endangered grizzly bears, a conservation group contended in a lawsuit against the federal government. The lawsuit by the Alliance for the Wild Rockies seeks to block the sale of 15 million board feet of timber on 1,242 acres in the Selkirk Mountains of northeastern Washington and northern Idaho.

A tiny population of an estimated 40 grizzly bears lives in the Selkirs.

"Grizzly bears are dying each year, as this small population struggles for survival," said Michael Garity, director of the alliance. "The federal government needs to stop these money-losing timber sales in critical grizzly bear secure habitat."

The lawsuit was filed in U.S. District Court in Spokane, and named the U.S. Forest Service, Department of Agriculture, Department of the Interior and Fish and Wildlife Service as defendants.

Rupert bans, then allows city vehicles to be driven home

By Renee Wells For The Times-News

RUPERT—City officials here have reversed what they called their knee-jerk reaction to citizens' cries of foul.

The city council voted during a recent special session to prohibit city employees from taking work vehicles home—a decision that has been reversed for some employees.

Police Chief Randy White recently told the city council his officers who live in Rupert need to have their police cars at their homes.

Officers living in the city limits are essentially on-call and are often called upon to answer emergency calls, he said.

Aside from public safety, White said, the decision to not allow officers to take their cars home could hurt morale.

If the city starts taking away what officers view as a fringe benefit, he said, they are less willing to stay on the department.

Having the cars parked at various homes around the city is also a crime deterrent, White said.

"We will likely make some curtail all the city vehicles while we looked over the issue. We didn't really take into consideration what the effect would be."

—Councilman Todd McChle

was a "knee-jerk" decision spawned by Rupert resident John Dockett's claim that too many city vehicles were being driven to private homes by employees.

"Our decision came from the understanding that we had a problem and we needed to get our arms around it," said Councilman Todd McChle.

"We will likely make some changes, but we felt we had to curtail all the city vehicles while we looked over the issue. We didn't really take into consideration what the effect would be."

When residents called upon the council to give vehicles back to other department employees, council members said on-call employees in other departments are exempt from the ban on taking home city vehicles, as are administrators, including White, who lives a short distance outside city limits.

"He is exempt because he is on-call 24-7," City Administrator Roger Bagley said.

Council members said other changes may come as the council gets the opportunity to study the issue more closely.

"The roof is pretty well gone, most of the southeast corner is gone. This is kind of an economic blow to the community."

— Rick Ohnsman, state police spokesman

Lava locals not so sure they want to be state park

LAVA HOT SPRINGS (AP) — Bannock County Commissioner Jim Guthrie has recommended Lava Hot Springs as a site-for-Idaho's newest state park. But some private campground owners in the area say the park could hurt their income.

Kim Baton, who owns Cottonwood Campground, said she's worried about having to compete with state camping facilities. She said her business is limited by its size and electrical capacity.

"We can't handle some of the big outfits so I refer them to another campground," she said. "We all kind of cooperate and work together."

She also said a state park could change the atmosphere of the area.

"Part of Lava's beauty is its hometown feel," Baton told the Idaho State Journal.

The Legislature allocated $1 million for a new park in eastern Idaho, part of former Gov. Dirk Kempthorne's "Experience Idaho" parks initiative. The plan calls for major improvements at six existing parks, repairs at all 30 parks and a new state park within 60 miles of Idaho Falls.

Kempthorne also created a committee to pick a site for a new state park in eastern Idaho. Guthrie, who is a member of that committee, said the park is still in the discussion stage.

"If it doesn't fit, it doesn't fit," Guthrie said. "It doesn't hurt to discuss it."

He said a state park could improve the area's appeal and improve opportunities for growth — if area residents wanted it.

"There would never be a situation where something would be forced on an area," he said. "I think it would complement certain areas in the county. I'm proud of our county and I think we have a lot to offer."

Jennifer Wornex, a spokeswoman for Idaho Department of Parks and Recreation, said a site for the new park has not been chosen but that a decision could be made by early October.

"It'll be up to the committee as a whole to determine what's best for the area and what the recommendation will be," she told The Associated Press on Friday.

Mark Lowe, Lava State Foundation executive director, said the town has a lot of free camping areas that could be affected by a state park. The north side of the Fournut River running through town is a free-use area.

Nathan Rife, president of the Lava Hot Springs Chamber of Commerce, said a state park would bring more tourists to the area.

"A state park is going to attract campers and families, the same kind of people that already come to Lava," she said.

That could also increase commercial development in the area.

Firefighters work the scene of where an explosion and fire swept through Blue Sky Biodiesel in New Plymouth, Idaho, Friday. A Meridian man was killed in an explosion at a New Plymouth Biodiesel plant on Friday, Idaho State Police said.

Explosion, fire at biodiesel plant kills one

By Rebecca Boone Associated Press writer

BOISE — An explosion and fire at a New Plymouth building being converted into a biodiesel plant killed one man Friday and injured two others, Idaho State Police said.

Dense black smoke rose from the fire, which destroyed the building housing the Blue Sky Biodiesel facility, state police spokesman Rick Ohnsman said.

Blue Sky Biodiesel had been expected to open sometime in the coming weeks, and the employees there were trying to get the plant ready for the grand opening, he said.

New Plymouth is about 50 miles northwest of Boise on the border with Oregon.

Blue Sky employee Blaise Black, 25, of Meridian, was killed. He had been welding on top of a biodiesel storage tank when the blast happened, Ohnsman said. The tank contained an unknown amount of the fuel, and the explosion touched off another, smaller explosion and a fire that quickly engulfed the entire building, the spokesman said.

Black's father, Rob Black, suffered second-degree burns and smoke inhalation trying to rescue his son, said another employee, Ohnsman said. Both men were treated at the scene.

The Argus Observer of Ontario, Ore. has reported that Rob Black is a managing partner at the facility. He was not immediately reachable late Friday for comment.

"Other employees attempted to go in as well, but they were driven back by the heat and the smoke," Ohnsman said.

Ten area fire departments and local law enforcement agencies responded and nearby residents were temporarily evacuated, Ohnsman said. By Friday afternoon, the blaze had been extinguished, the residents were allowed to return home and crews were able to recover Black's body from the debris.

"The roof is pretty well gone, most of the southeast corner is gone," said Ohnsman, who added "This is kind of an economic blow to the community."

Blue Sky had been converting an old fruit warehouse into the biodiesel facility. The plant was set up to convert raw soy oil to the alternative fuel.

Staffers with the Idaho Department of Environmental Quality and the federal Environmental Protection Agency were on scene to see if the fire caused any hazards to the environment, Ohnsman said.

The smoke was not believed to be dangerous, he said.

The Occupational Safety and Health Administration was expected to investigate, Ohnsman said.

OPINION Coach puts a squeeze play on mischief

CHEERS to Twin Falls American Legion baseball coach Tim Stadelmeier, for taking the tough approach to misbehaving players.

Stadelmeier, coach of the Twin Falls Cowboys AA team, pulled his squad out of its own 2006 Cowboy Classic tournament last week after players committed unspecified team violations on a trip to South Dakota. Stadelmeier gave no details other than to classify it as "a violation of team policies."

But the coach didn't hesitate to take his team to the proverbial woodshed. Stadelmeier took disciplinary action against the players, which in turn forced the Cowboys to forfeit an additional six league games through July 10. The team is expected to resume play with at least nine players in uniform next week.

Stadelmeier said his players have done some "soul searching" in that period. And it's quite possible that Stadelmeier has taken some heat for suspending a promising team that was 18-3 before the probation.

But the coach has earned our applause for teaching his players something about dedication, accountability and responsibility — all themes much bigger than baseball all them much bigger than baseball.

JEERS to Butch Otter and Jerry Brady, two gubernatorial candidates who don't recognize bad policy when they see it.

Otter and Brady both agree the November ballot initiative to increase the state's sales tax from 5 to 6 cents on the dollar is a valid way to help schools. They both have pledged their support for the initiative, which would raise $200 million for public schools, although in what specific amounts who wants to lead the state, who wants to be a gubernatorial candidate — but who isn't? Hearing a candidate say he's against it is like hearing him say he's against crime.

What's galling is to hear two candidates who want to lead the state, who approve of budgeting by initiative, who people power at the polls is justified in multiple regards, but when you spend the public's money it's an unsound approach that ties the hands of budget writers — some of whom have needed years of stonewall and experience to balance for the state.

CHEERS & JEERS

You have to wonder about two candidates who have such low regard for the state and its proven system of budgeting.

CHEERS to South Central District Health for taking on one of its biggest health crisis drills to date.

District officials staged a public health emergency exercise last week to see how officials would react to a widespread health threat, in this case an anthrax threat. The drill was part of a state-wide, week long exercise among all health districts. Agencies were to find how they could coordinate with local, state and national agencies.

Re-creating the atmosphere of an anthrax outbreak pales in comparison to the real thing when you have white talcum powder and Skittles for an antidote. But there's plenty for the district can learn in what it lacks for such a situation should it really happen.

Last year, the National Association of County and City Health Officials recognized Idaho and its seven district health agencies as the only state to achieve "Public Health Ready" status. The drill explains further why Idaho deserved the well-earned accolade.

JEERS to Twin Falls and Idaho Transportation Department, for closing one lane of traffic on the Perrine Bridge — for a BASE jumping record.

It's a sensitive issue, because the BASE jumping scene is a good one. Air National Guard Capt. Dan Schilling, a Special Forces veteran, will try to make 200 BASE jumps in 24 hours from Friday to Saturday night, for the Special Operations Warrior Foundation. The group pays college costs for kids of special operation forces killed in action or in training.

The lane closure, which involves the right lane of northbound traffic, will make room for floodlights and a 60-foot crane to pull Schilling out after each jump.

A legitimate cause and a heroic deed, for sure. But the approach is problematic. What happens when some yahoo comes along and says he wants to break that record? Is the city obligated to roll out the welcome mat again?

We thought the Perrine Bridge was primarily a structure for transportation. But it's now Idaho's biggest stunt stage, with accompanying traffic out-lets.

CHEERS to Wayne Childers and the On-On-Way 4-H Club of Jerome, for sprucing up a historic cemetery in Jerome.

Childers, the cemetery sexton, has reason to take some extra care of graves in the Jerome landmark. Some of the headstones and burial plots go back over a century. Graves include several Civil War vets, both from the Union and the Confederacy. To help clean up those historic spots, he enlisted the help of the 4-H club of Jerome to uncover graves that had sunk beneath the ground and clean up other headstones.

Twinking the boy crisis

America's "boy crisis" has been cancer.

It was all hype, we're now told by Education Sector, a nonpartisan education research group.

In a new study titled "The Truth About Boys and Girls," researcher Sara Mead concludes that the falling-boys mantra was politically motivated fervor advanced by anti-feminist pundits and others who cherry-pick data to advance their own ideological agendas.

Boys aren't so much in crisis, says Mead, who analyzed data from the National Assessment of Educational Progress. They're just not doing very well. That is, middleclass upper-class white boys generally are doing fine, while Hispanics, blacks and the poor (some of whom aren't white) are doing badly to terrible. We have a class and race problem, in other words, not a boy problem, maybe.

Mead seems most concerned that education funds might be misdirected in response to recent noises that school programs are unfriendly to males and that teaching styles should be adjusted to accommodate brain differences and, hence, learning styles—in males and females.

The study, though filled with intriguing information—much of which undermines the case of male-doing-badly—seems mostly aimed at halting trends away from policies that were put in place to advance girls. Mead makes clear that any disagreement with her conclusions constitutes Neanderthal "hysteria."

"While most of society has finally embraced the idea of equality for women," she writes, "the idea that women might actually surpass men in some areas (even as they remain behind in others) seems hard for many people to swallow."

Fine. Let's call a truce for the moment on who is or isn't politically motivated, and take a look at the data. It is apparently true that boys do pretty well in elementary and middle school but tend to go wobbly in high school and college.

We may need to give social scientists a few more decades to pin down possible reasons for that, but I'm willing to bet my two cents on a combination of testosterone and a lack of disciplined guidance from fathers, a subject worthy of research not addressed. This study might be the correlation between poor academic performance among these same black, Hispanic and impoverished boys and the absence of fathers in the home.

Meanwhile, here are some of the statistics that say "not a crisis," just "not that great."

Only 65 percent of boys who start high school graduate four years later, compared with 72 percent of girls; 42 percent of boys are suspended from school at least once before age 17, compared with 24 percent of girls. (This is the most alarming statistic in the Mead study and deserves a closer look.)

Elementary-school boys are more likely than girls to be held back a year, while high school boys' achievement is declining in most subjects (although it may be improving in math).

"A substantial" percentage of boys diagnosed with disabilities, while boys comprise two-thirds of special education students, as well as 80 percent of those diagnosed with emotional disturbances or autism. Boys also are two and a half times as likely as girls to be diagnosed with Attention Deficit Hyperactivity Disorder.

Mead notes that while these are troubling statistics, they don't tell the whole story. With what seems like relief, she adds that the number of girls with disabilities is growing, so it's not just a "boy issue."

She finds further consolation in the fact that although boys are not doing as well as girls in many categories, overall academic achievement and attainment for boys is higher than it's ever been. And, "while academic performance for minority boys is often shockingly low, it's not getting worse." Phew.

In fairness, Mead may be right that the "crisis" rhetoric has served its useful purpose. Nevertheless, defining "crisis" down doesn't alter the fact that girls are doing better, while boys (except for the luckiest white boys) are lagging. However you cut it, there are degrees of bad that still bad.

Moreover, the declining status of boys—or the ascent of girls, if you prefer—is at least in part the product of political pressure that led to policy changes and cultural adjustments that have benefited girls. No one wishes to take away those accomplishments or to turn back the clock on them.

That we might wish to exercise the same political clout in the interest of our sons and our nation's future fathers isn't a matter of political opportunism, but a necessary search for balance.

No matter how much we tweak the data, one reliable truth is that successful women will always want to meet and mate with successful men. At this rate, they will be hard-pressed to find them.

LETTERS Clean the pool water at the Y

It is hot! And bacteria seems grow faster in the water. Especially when the level of chlorine has been zero for a week at the "Y" pool.

Why is it that there is a nice set of furniture in the lobby at the "Y" when not very many people gather to visit there, but gather at the pool and the gym? The water at the "Y" needs to be treated and filtered every day. There are many children and grownups that are using the pool. For the past week, the water in the swimming pool has been murky, and it is very disgusting to even look at it. This is a public pool! The public has a right to have treated water!

Several attempts had been made by leaving suggestions and making phone calls to address this issue.

Get on with the act! Treat the swimming pool at the "Y" and remember that bacteria grow in the showers and bathrooms also! The filthy water at the "Y" is the reason I am quitting water aerobics!

The buffalo and wolves will roam freely without disturbance on public lands. When buffalo and wolves go on private property, they will either be removed in a timely fashion or destroyed.

The cattle and sheep will roam freely without disturbance on private lands. When the cattle or sheep go on public lands, they will either be removed in a timely fashion or destroyed.

Older antidepressant can still help

I read your article about a depression study on a third new drug with minimal results.

I have had the depression disease since I was 12 but not diagnosed until I was 18. I have tried several of the SSRIs which affect only one specific chemical in the brain. None worked, and so last year my doctor put me on the oldest type of antidepressant which affects all of the chemicals in the brain that deal with depression. The medication is called Nardil, an MAOI (mono amine oxidase inhibitor), and all antidepressant effects are compared against MAOIs because they are the most effective in treating depression.

The reason they are rarely used anymore is because of all the possible interactions with medications and food. However, I feel that in order to feel better, sometimes it is worth giving something up. As research continues, I hope scientists will somehow find a way to use the positive effects of MAOIs with another, safer medication.

Welcome to our Disunited States of America

On Independence Day, would we all be happier or with even more independence? What if government of the people meant that the Blue people in the South and the Blue people in the North had a border between them?

JOHN TIERNEY

This question used to be of interest mainly to Southerners mourning their Lost Cause, but nowadays Northerners have reason to lament, too. The South is gaining seats in Congress at their expense, and four of five presidents have come from the South.

If the South were a separate country, Northern liberals wouldn't be ranting at George W. Bush and Pat Robertson. They wouldn't be frantically trying to find a candidate who appealed to the Bible Belt and pretended to enjoy NASCAR races. They might never hear a Garth Brooks song or have to stop at a Cracker Barrel Old Country Store.

Southern conservatives wouldn't have to fight for moral values against goddess Yankes. They wouldn't have to watch Jack Kenny go hunting to find a candidate who was an obscure foreign filmmaker. Talk-show hosts wouldn't be rallying their audiences against Hillary Clinton because she'd never had been elected to their Senate. Politics in both countries might be less partisan, even civil.

I realize this prospect sounds farfetched, but it's not crazy to imagine that the South could have become independent. It's a "counterfactual" possibility that has been seriously debated by historians.

The pessimists include Roger Ransom, who lays out a detailed scenario in his recent book "The Confederate States of America." Ransom, an economic historian at the University of California at Riverside, imagines the Confederate armies in the West and at Gettysburg making a few different moves that stymie the Union, leaving the war stalemated in 1864.

As a result, Lincoln loses the election. His successor, under pressure from disunionist voters as well as Britain and France, signs a peace treaty allowing the South to secede. This Confederacy stretches from Virginia down to Florida and out to the western edge of Arizona (with the international border running along the upper edges of Kentucky, Arkansas, Oklahoma, and New Mexico).

Slavery remains legal, in Ransom's alternate history, but when world demand for enslaving free men," He believes slavery would have collapsed quickly if the South had been allowed to peacefully secede and the North had simply stopped returning runaway slaves.

It still stops slaves from escaping, Hummel argues, the South would have been forced to abandon the system, and freed blacks could ultimately have been better off than they were during the Jim Crow era.

Hummel imagines that both the South and the North could have done well economically as independent nations — Canada, after all, is not exactly a Third World country. In fact, he thinks people in both countries could have been richer, because competing for trade with Europe would have prevented them from imposing the high tariffs that the United States maintained in the late 19th century (in part to pay off the Civil War debt).

In addition with Hummel's optimism, although it's possible that something could have gone very wrong between the North and the South — like another war, as Ransom envisions would have occurred in the early 20th century. I don't buy that scenario, but if you do, then the current Red-Blue divide doesn't seem so bad after all.

Roadside assistance was a big relief

While driving home from Boise on April 28, my car started to wobble near Mountain Home. I pulled to the side of the road. It felt like I had a flat tire. I got out and checked my tires. They were all up. So I turned on my emergency lights and raised my hood.

In a few minutes, a state cop pulled up behind me. Boy, was I glad to see him. I didn't get his name, but he noticed I only had one lug nut on my wheel.

Kimberly bond keeps district ahead

We would like to thank the patrons of Kimberly School District #14 for their unwavering and continued support of our schools.

On Tuesday, May 16, a continuation of last year's $1 million supplemental levy was renewed. This levy will generate $200,000 per year for the next two years. This money will allow our district to continue the high quality music, library and counseling programs we currently offer at each school. This levy also will allow us to hire several new teachers at the elementary school as we try to stay one step ahead of the new growth in our community and keep our class sizes low.

Filmmaker sues Rumsfeld over Iraq detention

By Henry Holshausen
LOS ANGELES Times

LOS ANGELES — A Los Angeles filmmaker sued Secretary of Defense Donald H. Rumsfeld and other military officials on Friday, alleging they violated his civil rights, International Law and the Geneva Conventions by imprisoning him for 55 days in Iraq last year.

Cyrus Kar, 45, was freed a year ago just days after the American Civil Liberties Union sued seeking his release. His lawsuit, filed in federal court here, says his imprisonment violated principles of due process of law.

"The abuses experienced by Mr. Kar — prolonged arbitrary detention without charge, the systematic denial of access to counsel, and the absence of any court in which to challenge the legality of his detention — are the norm for thousands of persons held in U.S. military detention in Iraq," the suit asserts.

In addition, the suit cites a 2004 report of the International Committee of the Red Cross, which said military intelligence officers of coalition forces admitted that "between 70 percent and 90 percent of the persons detained by their military in Iraq had been arrested by mistake."

Mark D. Rosenbaum, legal director of the ACLU of Southern California, said the suit was the first civil action challenging the constitutionality of the detention and hearing policies of the U.S. government.

Kar, a U.S. citizen and Navy veteran, went to Iraq 14 months ago to make a documentary film about Cyrus the Great, the Persian king who issued the world's first human-rights charter.

On May 17, 2005, he was riding in a taxi and stopped at a Baghdad checkpoint. Authorities found a common component for explosive devices in the trunk. The driver told military authorities that Kar and his cameraman were passengers and knew nothing about the devices.

Kar submitted to a polygraph examination and agreed to allow the FBI to search his house. They found nothing incriminating, but he was held for weeks in various prisons around Iraq, including the notorious facility at Abu Ghraib.

Even after he was cleared by a military court at Camp Cropper, Kar was held for another week. Eventually, the camp commander gave him a letter stating that military judges found him to be an "innocent civilian" under the Geneva Conventions.

While in confinement, the suit states, Kar was hooded, restrained "in painful handcuffs," and "repeatedly threatened, taunted and insulted" by U.S. soldiers. At one point, according to the suit, a soldier at Abu Ghraib slammed Kar's head into a concrete wall.

"Mr. Kar was and remains traumatized by his indefinite, and virtually incommunicado, detention, in solitary confinement, by the U.S. military without charge," the suit states.

The military said Kar was detained as "an imperative security threat" under the authority of a U.N. Security Council resolution, noting that the washing machine timers found in the taxicab trunk are a "common component" in the construction of improvised explosive devices.

What happened to him in Iraq was a "life-altering experience," Kar said. He emphasized, "I am not a left-wing liberal. I agree with many of George Bush's policies." But he added, "I don't think the Constitution has to be gutted to achieve our objectives" in the war on terrorism. "I felt it was my duty as an American to take a stand for the constitutional rights guaranteed to all Americans."

Kar said he felt lucky to be freed. If his family had not contacted the ACLU, "I'd still be there."

The suit — filed by Rosenbaum and Rajana Natarajan of the ACLU, and volunteer attorney Dan Marmalefsky of Morrison, Foerster — has a broader agenda than winning a damage award for Kar.

"This action is brought to end the policies and practices of the United States government toward detainees in Iraq to which Cyrus Kar, a United States citizen and Navy veteran, was subjected ... in clear violation" of "fundamental principles of due process of law."

The suit asserts that the U.S. military and other government agencies have a policy, pattern and practice of:

— deliberately failing to provide attorneys to detainees in Iraq;

— subjecting these persons to lengthy and indefinite detention without bringing charges;

— deliberately failing to provide detainees access to a court and to their family members;

— holding hearings for the detainees that do not conform to the requirements of the U.S. Constitution or the Geneva Conventions provisions governing the treatment of prisoners of war and civilians.

In addition to Rumsfeld, the defendants "includes" Gen. George W. Casey Jr., the commanding general of the multinational forces in Iraq; Maj. Gen. William H. Brandenburg, commanding general of the task force in charge of detainee operations in Iraq at the time of Kar's detention; Lt. Col. Carol Haas, commandant of Camp Cropper when Kar was held in solitary confinement; and Lt. Col. John Dunlap, president of the military's Detainee Status Board in Iraq.

When Kar was released last July, military officials said the matter had been handled and resolved appropriately.

"This case highlights the effectiveness of our detainee review process," Brig. Gen. Don Alston said in a prepared statement.

GUANTANAMO

Signs of plot emerge in detainee suicides

By Josh White
The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — Three suicides at the U.S. detention facility at Guantanamo Bay, Cuba, may have been part of a broader plot by detainees who were using confidential lawyer-client privilege envelopes to pass handwritten notes their guards could not intercept, according to documents that government lawyers filed Friday in federal court.

Detainees could apparently hide documents in their cells — including instructions on how to tie knots and a classified U.S. military memo regarding cell locations of detainees and camp operational matters at Guantanamo — by keeping the materials in envelopes labeled as lawyer-client communications. Notes that investigators found after the suicides on June 10 were apparently written on the back of notepaper stamped "Attorney Client Privilege," which allowed detainees to communicate secretly without interference, according to government officials.

The alleged discoveries have led military commanders to suspend allowing detainees to have paper provided by defense lawyers. Government lawyers have also asked a judge on the U.S. District Court for the District of Columbia to allow them to assemble "filter teams" to scour more than 1,100 pounds of documents seized by investigators, some of which is protected by lawyer-client privilege and would usually be off-limits to authorities.

Defense lawyers for Guantanamo detainees said that their clients are closely monitored and should have no way to pass such notes, and that the filing Friday is designed to complicate their efforts.

In an affidavit filed with the court, Rear Adm. Harry B. Harris Jr., the facility's commander, said the Naval Criminal Investigative Service has information that suggests the suicides "may have been part of a larger plan or pact for more suicides that day or in the immediate future."

He also said that on June 22, he asked NCIS to investigate whether the suicides were "otherwise encouraged, ordered, or assisted by other detainees or third persons" — implying that the probe could extend to lawyers for the men — and whether their private communications could have included improper materials.

Lawyers are permitted to share with detainees legal communications or publicly filed documents, but they are not allowed to pass classified or "protected" information with clients.

Barbara Olshansky of the Center for Constitutional Rights, which represents most of the Guantanamo detainees, said the allegations that lawyers could have played a role in the suicides is "patently offensive" and "outrageous." She said the government is again trying to make it difficult for lawyers to represent the 450 detainees held there.

"I can't imagine what they think they've found," Olshansky said Friday. "All I can see is this as an elaborate ruse to take away whatever these people have so they have absolutely nothing, and to make these lawyers fight for yet another thing."

Investigators impounded detainees' written materials on June 14, taking them from plastic bins the detainees use to store personal items and papers, according to the court filing and an affidavit by Carol Kisthardt, an NCIS special agent in charge of the agency's Southeast field office. Four days later, investigators focused on materials related to 11 detainees, though government lawyers did not detail why they picked those men.

"The materials uncovered in these initial searches comprising a very small amount of detainee materials demonstrated, however, that detainees had developed practices for misusing the existence of a privileged attorney-client communication system," the government lawyers wrote, "presumably to shield the communications from the suspicion or scrutiny of TIF-Guantanamo guards, who have not been permitted to inspect or review attorney-client communications."

The court papers say that investigators found suicide notes written in Arabic on the bodies of the detainees, and that they found notes hidden in the wire mesh of their cells and neighboring cells.

The discovery of the papers "indicated the passing of materials and messages between detainees and that some level of planning or coordination of the suicides had taken place" because two of the men had never been visited by attorneys, Friday's filing says.

CSI softball: 2007 inaugural season at a glance

TWIN FALLS — Nick Baumert's squad is nearly complete.

Baumert and his College of Southern Idaho Golden Eagles softball program officially announced the signing of five more players for the program's inaugural 2007 season.

The recent signings include Times-News All-Area Team members Jamie Stone, a Wood River High School graduate, and Brent Montgomery, a four-year varsity player at Class 3A powerhouse Buhl. Joining them is fellow Idaho prospect Jenna Volgmore of Meridian's Mountain View High School, along with Rachel Evans and Candice Benedict of Bountiful, Utah's Viewmont High School.

Stone capped off a standout senior season with a .552 batting average, five home runs and a .927 slugging percentage as the Wolverines' team captain. Stone lettered three years in volleyball, basketball and softball and was named the Great Basin Conference West Player of the Year as a senior.

"We are excited to have Jamie join us," Baumert said in Friday's press release. "She is a very athletic kid that will be able to play several different positions."

Montgomery capped off her high school career with a .489 average and five home runs as Buhl's starting third baseman. She helped the Indians to win the Class 3A state championship as a freshman and a fourth-place finish as a junior. She will bring a hard-nosed attitude on defense along with her proficiency at the plate.

"Brent is a tough kid who isn't afraid to get dirty," Baumert said. "She brings a lot of power to the plate and a desire to learn. A player with a ton of potential. I'm excited to see her grow over the next couple of years."

Volgmore helped Mountain View to the Class 5A state tournament the last two years as its starting catcher. She threw out six of base runners as a senior and finished with a .273 batting average and 12 RBIs. She was named to the All-Southern Idaho Conference team as a senior and garnered National East-Pitch Coaches Association All-American Scholar Athlete honors for both her junior and senior years.

"Jenna brings an energy to the game that every team needs," Baumert said. "She is a hard worker who just loves to play. Her enthusiasm is contagious, which is important at the catcher position."

Evans and Benedict capped off their high school careers by helping Viewmont to a third-place finish at state this spring. Benedict earned All-State First Team honors from the Salt Lake Tribune after finishing her senior campaign with a .438 batting average, 22 RBIs and 10 stolen bases.

Evans hit .447 with two home runs and 20 stolen bases as Viewmont's starting shortstop, earning All-State Second Team honors.

"Rachel and Candice are great athletes with speed," Baumert said. "They come from a winning program and know how to compete. Both can swing it as well as play great defense. They definitely will be key to our success this coming season."

The signings bring Baumert's player total up to 15 as the fall season approaches. Baumert and pitching coach Courtney Dale will look to round out the CSI pitching staff and outfield with a few more signings in the coming months.

Major star, minor leagues

Notre Dame receiver begins pro baseball career with Boise Hawks

By Destin Lapray
Times-News Correspondent

BOISE — From South Bend to Boise, baseball doesn't truly really change. It's still nine innings, six outs per. For Notre Dame star receiver Jeff Samardzija, it's a slice of a similar pie.

"The 'All-America' football player and Irish ace pitcher made his first minor-league start Thursday for the Boise Hawks, a short-season Class A affiliate of the Chicago Cubs.

The Cubs drafted Samardzija in the third round of the 2006 draft and moved him to Boise in June to prepare for the season.

"It's exciting," Samardzija said. "It's cool to come out; it's my first time in the Northwest, living. They have a great fan base out here for every game. It's nice to make my first start here. It actually felt good."

The Hawks play their ball at Hawks Memorial Stadium, a mere 100 yards over the centerfield wall from the Boise River. Fittingly, the stadium is host to a nesting pair of Hatter Hawks, living in a set of lights on the first-base side.

"Although Boise is quite different, geographically, from South Bend, Ind., Samardzija has found similarities and says he feels quite comfortable in his new surroundings.

"(South Bend and Boise) are probably a lot alike," Samardzija said. "They're both a kind of smaller cities. There's a lot of people, but it's not like a Chicago or an Indianapolis or Minneapolis or something like that, which are pretty common in my area. So it's a little bit different. But again, it's the same. Like South Bend, there's a lot of people, but it still has that small-town mentality."

As far as baseball goes, Samardzija still has a lot to learn. That's why he's in Boise, to learn, to improve his craft. Samardzija relied heavily on his fastball Thursday night, leaving little question to opposing hitters what was coming their way. "It's still early here, with the Cubs and everything, so obviously I'm going to throw a lot of fastballs and work the off-speed in where I can," Samardzija said. "The more it starts coming, the more it will be used. Right now, we're just trying to get my feet wet and throw a lot of fastballs, which

No. 1 Federer, No. 2 Nadal reach final at Wimbledon

The Associated Press

WIMBLEDON, England — Now Roger Federer gets Rafael Nadal on his turf.

With a performance he deemed flawless, three-time Wimbledon champion Federer won the most lopsided mens semifinal in tournament history, defeating Jonas Bjorkman 6-2, 6-0, 6-2 on Friday.

Top-ranked Federer's reward? A championship match Sunday against No. 2 Nadal, who got past No. 10 Marcos Baghdatis 6-1, 7-5, 6-3 to extend his surprising run at the All England Club.

Federer is 0-4 against Nadal in 2006, 55-0 against everyone else. But three of the losses came on clay, including in last month's French Open final, and they've never met on grass — where Federer has won a record 47 consecutive matches, including 27 at Wimbledon.

"He is the best on all surfaces," Nadal said, "but here more."

That's for sure. Federer will try to join Bjorn Borg and Pete Sampras as the only men since World War I to win four straight Wimbledon titles.

Nadal stands in the way, "I know I can beat him," said Federer, who's won seven major titles. "I don't need to think of playing against him. I need to focus on the playing on grass; my style, playing aggressive. It's going to be easier on grass to do that than on clay."

Clay is slower, grass is slicker, and each make different demands on footwork and shotmaking. That's why it's so rare for players to succeed on both: No man has won the French Open and Wimbledon back-to-back since Borg did it in 1978-80.

And it's been 54 years since the same two men met in the finals of these two Grand Slam tournaments.

This is how big-time rivalries are born.

"They're very close. They're the two best players in the world at the moment," said Baghdatis, who lost to Federer in the Australian Open final. "You cannot say one is the best — you have to take both of them."

There will be a Grand Slam final rematch in the women's championship match Saturday, too, when No. 1 Amelie Mauresmo plays No. 3 Justine Henin-Hardenne. Mauresmo's first major title came at the Australian Open, when Henin-Hardenne quit in the second set, citing an upset stomach.

Neither woman has won Wimbledon, and Henin-Hardenne will be aiming to complete a career Grand Slam.

Federer bid to do that but fell short at Roland Garros, when Nadal beat him for a second French Open title. Federer wanted another crack at his nemesis, saying before Nadal-Baghdatis was finalized: "Obviously, I would like to play Rafael, because of the matches we've had in the last couple of months."

Both men were brilliant Friday. Nadal saved all nine break points he faced against Baghdatis and compiled a 43-16 ratio of winners to unforced errors.

Woods rebounds, Lefty struggles

Chopra takes lead at Western Open

The Associated Press

LEMONT, Ill. — Tiger Woods rebounded from a rough opening round at the Western Open, but Phil Mickelson stumbled badly. And Stewart Cink jumped into contention with one of the best rounds ever at the tournament.

Woods shot a 4-under 67 during the second round Friday, a day after struggling for a 1 over. Still, he was seven shots behind leader Daniel Chopra, who carded a 5-under 66 to hold a two-stroke lead over Vijay Singh at Cog Hill.

Chopra, who began the day in a four-way tie for the lead, is at 10 under. Singh shot 67 to stand at 10 under. Mickelson, who went into the second round one stroke back, shot a 3-over 74 and was 1 under for the tournament.

But it was Cink who impressed after a 6-under 29 on the front nine tied the tournament's nine-hole record. His 64 for the round was one off the mark for 18 holes. That put him at 7-under 135 and in a tie for third with Trevor Immelman and Joe Ogilvie.

"I can't remember playing nine holes any better than that," Cink said. "I don't think I missed a shot, and I didn't miss many putts either." After shooting 71 in the first round, Cink birdied six of the first nine holes and finished with nine in all. His only blemishes were bogys on 13 and 16.

Mickelson seemed to answer any questions about his psyche Thursday when he shot a 4 under in his first tournament following his collapse on the final hole of the U.S. Open.

But things came apart early Friday. "I just didn't play the way I wanted to, but again, we've got two more rounds," Mickelson said. Mickelson bogeyed the second, third, fourth and fifth holes and was at 4-over 39 through the first nine. The fact that he was in Cink's group only magnified his struggles.

"I'm happy to see him playing well because we need Stewart Cink on our Ryder Cup team," Mickelson said. "He's one of our best players. He needs to have a good week for not just himself but for the team, because we really want him on that team."

While Mickelson faltered, Woods seemed to benefit from a long practice session following the opening round.

After failing to make the cut at the U.S. Open, Woods was in danger again. He spent several hours on the range after his round Thursday working on various elements — as he called it, "a combo platter."

"I didn't do a couple things right. I couldn't get my next couple," said Woods, a three-time winner at Cog Hill.

On Thursday, his "distance control" was off. On Friday, his putting game faltered a bit.

He started on the 10th tee and birdied No. 11, 13, 14, 15, and 17 but was even the rest of the way. He missed short birdie putts on his final two holes. And he bogeyed No. 16.

"I'm pleased with the way I was able to make the changes from yesterday to today and adapt, and hopefully ... (I) get it turned around for tomorrow."

Singh had four birdies and no bogys. His tee shots were a little off on his first nine holes, but he turned that around.

Padres earn third straight win Wie, Sorenstam win again at Match Play

WASHINGTON (AP) — Adrian Gonzalez had three hits, including a home run, and San Diego won its third straight game, a 3-2 victory over Washington on Friday night.

San Diego Padres' Adrian Gonzalez, left, smiles after he came home to score on his solo home run as teammate Vinny Castilla looks on against the Washington Nationals Friday in Washington.

being acquired from the Los Angeles Dodgers in a trade last week. Seo was 2-4 with the Dodgers.

Wright (5-3) retired the last nine batters he faced, walked none and departed after 91 pitches. The Yankees' bullpen took up where he left off, with Scott Procter pitching a perfect seventh and Kyle Farnsworth posting a 1-2-3 eighth.

Indians 9, Orioles 0

CLEVELAND — Travis Hafner became the first player in major league history to hit five grand slams before the All-Star break, knocking C.C. Sabathia's fourth career shutout and sending Cleveland to an easy victory over Baltimore.

Hafner's second-inning shot off Kris Benson (9-7) padded the gaudy stats of Cleveland's hard-hitting designated hitter, who despite being ranked in the top five in the AL in four offensive categories, was left off the All-Star team.

Royals 13, Blue Jays 3

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Luke Hudson allowed one run in five innings in his first start of the season and John Buck and Matt Stairs homered to lead Kansas City past Toronto for its fourth straight victory.

David DeFusse and Doug Mientkiewicz each had three hits and drove in three runs for Kansas City. The Royals, who lost 47 of their first 63 games, are 14-6 over the past 20, and the winning streak matches their longest of the season. The Blue Jays have lost five of six.

Red Sox 7, White Sox 2

CHICAGO — David Ortiz became the first player in Red Sox history to hit 30 homers before the All-Star break and rookie left fielder Jon Lester made his fourth straight decision as Boston beat Chicago.

It was the first meeting between the teams since the White Sox swept the Red Sox in the AL division series last season. It also was a matchup of the last two World Series champions, franchises that both ended long title droughts in consecutive years.

Rangers 9, Twins 4

ARLINGTON, Texas — Michael Young and Gary Matthews Jr. homered, sending Texas to a victory over Minnesota.

Hank Blalock added three hits and three RBIs for the Rangers, who built a big lead for spot starter John Washin (2-1).

Woody Williams (4-1) pitched 5 1/3 innings for the win, but the Nationals' third bullpen was perhaps a bigger factor following two high-scoring nights at RFK Stadium. With few fresh arms available, Washington manager Frank Robinson allowed laboring starter Ramon Ortiz to bat — and strike out — with the bases loaded in the fifth inning.

Gonzalez's 13th home run — a solo shot to deep right-center in the fourth — made it 1-0 and the Padres added two more runs in the fifth.

Ortiz (6-7) went 6-2-3 in innings, allowing nine hits and two runs. Washington's bullpen had worked 17 1/3 innings in 18-9 and 8-7 games the previous two nights.

Pirates 3, Phillies 2

PHILADELPHIA — Ian Snell allowed three hits over seven innings and Pittsburgh snapped a three-game losing streak.

Jason Bay and Freddy Sanchez, Pittsburgh's selections for next week's All-Star game, each drove a run in the first inning. The Pirates, who have lost seven straight series, improved to 10-34 away from Pittsburgh, the worst record in the major leagues.

Marlins 7, Mets 3

NEW YORK — Dontrelle Willis hit a grand slam and pitched effectively into the eighth inning for Florida.

Willis' fourth career homer, and first this season, highlighted Florida's six-run fourth. It also was the first grand slam pitched by the Marlins this season. Florida, which has scored 32 runs in the past three games, won for the second time in seven tries and snapped the Mets' three-game winning streak.

New York's All-Star shortstop, Jose Reyes, left in the seventh inning with a cut on his left pinky. He appeared to get splashed on a headfirst slide into first base.

Reds 10, Braves 5

ATLANTA — Cincinnati put a decisive end to its six-game losing streak, scoring eight runs in the second inning.

The 10 hits in an inning were the most in 17 years for the Reds, and the eight runs were their most this season. They opened the inning with straight hits to knock Braves starter Horacio Ramirez.

Cubs 7, Brewers 2

MILWAUKEE — Chicago's Carlos Zambrano allowed one run over six innings to win his fifth straight decision.

Zambrano (8-3) struck out six to increase his National League-leading total to 124. The right-hander gave up five hits and walked three.

Aramis Ramirez gave the Cubs a 1-0 lead in the first when his single drove in Juan Pierre, who had doubled for the first of his three hits. It was Ramirez's team-leading 50th RBI this season and the 600th of his career.

Cardinals 8, Astros 2

HOUSTON — Jason Marquis earned his 11th win to tie for the National League lead as pinch-hitter John Rodriguez homered for St. Louis.

Gary Bennett added three hits and an RBI for the Cardinals. Marquis (11-6) allowed two runs and six hits in 7-2-3 innings, striking out four and walking two. Jason Istringhausen got four outs for his league-leading 26th save.

American League

Yankees 1, Devil Rays 0

ST. PETERSBURG, Fla. — Jaret Wright matched a career-high 10 strikeouts and allowed four hits in four sharp innings Friday night, leading the New York Yankees to a victory over Tampa Bay.

Bernie Williams drove in the only run with a fourth-inning single off Jae Seo (0-2), who was nearly as good as Wright in his second start for Tampa Bay since discipline, winning nine of the 14 time trials of 10 miles or longer.

Of the four people who beat Armstrong in long time trials, only two are racing: American David Zabriskie of Team CSC and Saunter Duval's David Millar. A Briton back from a two-year doping ban.

The only other riders to beat Armstrong at the Tour time trials were German Jan Ullrich and Colombian Santiago Botero, and they aren't riding this limo because of allegations they were linked to a doping ring in Spain.

Zabriskie, Millar and world time trial champion Michael Rogers could all make their mark today over the 32-mile course that cuts a loop northwest of the British city of Rennes.

Tour gets serious: Favorite can hide no more

VITRE, France (AP) — Tour de France favorites, it's time to step up.

The race to become Lance Armstrong's successor begins in earnest Saturday with the first long time trial on a Tour marked by crashes and a doping investigation that has stripped the event of elite riders.

After an opening week when top riders took few risks and the glory belonged to sprinters like Robbie McEwen, the true contenders in a depleted field.

McEwen's win in Friday's sixth stage was his third this year and 11th in nine Tours.

The Australian won in characteristic fashion, muscling past other sprinters. Among them was Tom Brackley, another overall race leader who clung to the prized yellow jersey but is frustrated not to be another stage victor to go with the four he has from previous Tours.

McEwen was effusive in thanking teammate Gert Steegmans, likening his sprint lead-in man to a French high-speed train. The Belgian acts like a booster rocket for McEwen in sprint finishes, pulling him along and padding him for the final solo dash to the line.

"It's like sitting on my own personal TV. I'm the only one who gets off at my station," McEwen said. "When he started, I really had to jump to go with him, and if I really have to jump to go with somebody in the wheel, it means that nobody can probably follow."

Stars of the fast and relatively flat first week and, eventually, will cede the limelight. And Boonen will almost certainly cede the yellow jersey as well. That will now belong to all-arounders and mountain climbing specialists once the Tour heads south into the Pyrenees next week.

In fact, Boonen's fourth consecutive win in the race leader's yellow shirt on Saturday could be his last. The Belgian is not among those expected to shine in the time trial, which favors racers able to ride quickly and steadily over long distances.

Perhaps not since 1999, when Armstrong first took the Tour by a slim margin, has the outcome of a time trial seemed so uncertain. The seven-time Tour champion excelled in the TWIN FALLS — The Fourth of July may be past, but the Twin Falls Cowboys A program is still in full swing.

Friday, blasting Burley 18-8 and 13-1 in an American Legion double-header.

In Game 1, which counted in the A-C standings, the Cowboys pounded out 29 hits, including six doubles. The game lasted six innings.

Jay Barrow led the way, going 4-for-4 with six RBIs. His two-run double came as part of a 10-run fourth inning. Nick Jergensen pitched a complete game.

Also went 2-for-3 with a double, Lane Reeves (3-for-4). Kevin Victor (2-for-3), Robert Rutz (2-for-4) and Braden Box (3-for-5) also added doubles.

Olyer Owens, Kase Redder and Stephen Beck had doubles for Burley. The nightcap went just five innings as Twin Falls jumped to a 7-1 cushion in the first inning. Box was 3-for-4, while Connor Bennett had a triple. David Lish was hit by five pitches on the way to three which came in Game 2.

Conner Watkins and Chase Bragg went both 2-for-3.

Hamilton's homers help Bulld hammer Highland

POCATELLO — Friday was simply Perry Hamilton's day.

The 2005 Bull High School graduate and Blue Mountain Community College player powered the Bull Tribe past host Highland in a 15-9 and 15-4 American Legion Class A road sweep.

Hamilton hammered a homer out of the park in Game 1 and tallied three RBIs before finishing Game 2 3-for-3 with three home runs, six RBIs and a walk in Game 2. And oh, by the way, he also pitched a complete game.

Hamilton hammered a homer out of the park in Game 1 and tallied three RBIs before finishing Game 2 3-for-3 with three home runs, six RBIs and a walk in Game 2. And oh, by the way, he also pitched a complete game.

"It was just Perry's day today," Tribe head coach Allan Reynolds said. "For some guys, it would be a career."

The high-powered Tribe offense clubbed 10 extra-base hits in the double-header, as Remington Daniels added a pair of doubles and a triple.

Galve Owen picked up the Game 1 win, throwing five solid innings before being pitched in the sixth.

"Galve pitched a heck of a ball game," Reynolds said. "He got in trouble late, but that's probably on the coaching staff's head. He was up over 100 pitches and we usually put a guy then. But we just took care of business, got up and kept them down."

The 18-3 (14-2 Area C) Tribe plays Upper Valley today, starting at 11 a.m.

Houston's Oswalt, Detroit's Ordonez added to All-Star squads

PITTSBURGH (AP) — Houston pitcher Roy Oswalt and Detroit outfielder Miguel Ordonez were added to the All-Star rosters Friday, taking the place of injured Pedro Martinez and Manny Ramirez.

Oswalt will join Detroit teammates Ivan Rodriguez and Kenny Rogers at Thursday night's game at PNC Park. The surprising Tigers have the best record in the majors.

Ramirez, picked in fan voting to start in the AL outfield, is a sore right knee. Minus the Boston slugger, AL manager Ozzie Guillen gets to choose another starter.

Oswalt, on the All-Star team for the fifth time, is batting .307 with 15 home runs and 59 RBIs. Ramirez was hitting .310 with 24 homers and 65 RBIs.

Oswalt will make his second consecutive All-Star appearance and joins Derek Jeter as the only Astros on the NL squad. Oswalt pitched one inning in last year's game in Berkman.

Martinez missed his start Monday because of a sore right hip and the New York Mets placed him on the 15-day disabled list.

Houston's Phil Garner, the NL manager, asked Oswalt to join the team after learning of Martinez's injury Thursday.

Oswalt (6-5) ranks sixth in the NL with a 3.10 ERA. He's thrown complete games in his last two starts and lost both, the first Astros pitcher to pull off the dubious double since J.R. Richard did it in 1976.

Oswalt is the only pitcher who's won 20 games

Detroit Tiger's Miguel Ordonez, left, celebrates his three-run home run with Ivan Rodriguez as he leads his team to the dugout past Boston Red Sox catcher Doug Mientkowiak, right, on June 3 in Detroit. Houston pitcher Roy Oswalt and Ordonez were added to the All-Star rosters Friday taking the place of injured Pedro Martinez and Manny Ramirez.

UPS announced Friday that it will leave the Yates team at the end of this season, moving with Jarrett to Michael Waltrip's startup Nextel Cup team for 2007.

It's a major boost for Waltrip, who is starting a team nearly from scratch but now finds himself in the enviable position of having three fully sponsored cars next year when he only expected to have two.

He'll also have significant financial backing from Toyota.

"Is it a coup? For our team, I guess it's fair to say it is," Waltrip said.

Job growth disappoints in June, but wages shot up

By Jeanine Averis
Associated Press writer

WASHINGTON — U.S. employers added a disappointing 121,000 jobs last month, wary of bulking up payrolls with the economy slowing and energy prices rising. Wages rose sharply, fanning inflation worries.

Wall Street groaned and stocks tumbled. The Dow Jones industrials lost 134.53 points to close at 11,090.67.

The latest employment snapshot, released by the Labor Department on Friday, also showed that the nation's civilian unemployment rate held steady at 4.6 percent.

In some ways, the report crystallized the conflicting economic forces that Federal Reserve Chairman Ben Bernanke and his colleagues must weigh as they decide what to do next with interest rates.

On one hand, slowing economic growth might justify the Fed taking a break in its two-year credit-tightening campaign. On the other hand, rising prices and wages might warrant another rate increase to prevent inflation from taking off.

The count of new jobs added to the economy in June did mark an improvement from the 92,000 new positions logged in May — the fewest in seven months. But it still fell short of economists' forecasts for an increase of around 175,000.

For "Economic growth is moderating so nobody is on a hiring spree," said Richard Yamarone, economist at Argus Research.

Job cuts by department stores and other retailers, home builders, telecommunications companies and other firms tempered overall job growth. Health care firms, factories, accountants and bookkeepers, computer designers, bars and restaurants, and state and local governments were among those boosting payrolls.

For the April-to-June quarter, employers added an average of 118,000 jobs a month. That's down from the average of 176,000 a month for the January-to-March period.

That moderation in job growth comes as companies cope with rising energy prices and interest rates and try to determine how much of a slowdown in overall economic activity the country is likely to encounter in the months ahead.

"Business owners are trying to get a good handle on whether it is the right time to spend that extra money" in terms of boosting hiring as well as other investment, said John Challenger, chief of Challenger, Gray & Christmas, an employment research firm.

Workers' average hourly earnings, meanwhile, jumped to $16.70 in June, a sharp 0.5 percent increase from May. Economists were expecting a more modest rise of 0.3 percent.

Over the last 12 months, wages have gone up 3.9 percent, the largest annual increase since June 2001. Nonetheless, economists said those wage gains are still trailing inflation.

With the overall health of the labor market still solid, some economists thought the wage growth meant some workers are gaining a bit of bargaining power in negotiating bigger paychecks. Others, however, thought the wage growth might be more related to last month's mix of jobs — the loss of lower-paying retail positions and the gain of higher-paying factory jobs.

Wage improvement is good for workers but a rapid and sustained acceleration can ignite inflation.

FRIEDMAN MEMORIAL AIRPORT

Sun Valley area mayors want move delayed

The Associated Press

KETCHUM — The mayors of Ketchum and Sun Valley have asked the Federal Aviation Administration to temporarily delay a proposal to move the Friedman Memorial Airport farther away from the resort area of Sun Valley.

A letter the mayors sent the FAA asks for up to a 90-day delay on any work the federal agency is doing on the airport move so that a consultant can strengthen arguments for keeping the airport where it is in Halley.

Sun Valley Mayor Jon Thorsen and Ketchum Mayor Randy Hall sent the letter on June 30 to J. Wade Bryant, FAA Northwest Mountain Region manager.

Other city leaders told the Idaho Mountain Express they had not been notified of the letter. Thorsen said they did not need to be informed as the letter was "not an official position" of the city.

The process of selecting a new airport site started more than 10 years ago when it was determined that Friedman Memorial Airport in Halley — about 12 miles south of Ketchum — would not be able to serve the growing demands of the area. The airport is surrounded by homes and mountains.

The Friedman Memorial Airport Authority tried to select possible sites that balanced convenience, safety and cost. In October, the authority chose a site 14 miles south of the existing airport that has enough room for an 8,500-foot runway, long enough for a jetliner.

That area is just north of the Lincoln-Blaine County line and south of Timmerman Hill. It consists mostly of federal Bureau of Land Management property, but includes a small portion of state land. An environmental and economic impact study is scheduled to begin next year to examine the site.

But some residents in the north part of Blaine County argued against the site because it was too far away from the resort area.

Thorsen said he wants a countywide vote to find out if Blaine County residents want the airport to remain in Halley. He said local residents hadn't been given accurate information about the costs of expanding the existing airport.

"We believe the site selection study neither fairly evaluated the existing site nor thoroughly evaluated feasible alternate sites that meet the air carriers' convenience criteria, and failed to adequately address the funding mechanisms for the significant subsidies that would be required at the proposed site," the mayors' letter said.

Rick Baird, manager of Friedman Memorial Airport, said both SkyWest Airlines and Horizon Air, Friedman's two carriers, had members on the site selection committee.

Those two mayors around the airport or safety or socioeconomic impact, why don't they say it?"

Sun Valley Councilman Nils Ribbi said the letter "will create more antagonism between north and south county and stifle regional efforts we've been working so hard on."

Susan McBryant, the Halley mayor, called Thorsen and Hall's letter "an abdication of official responsibility." Thorsen and Hall did not immediately return calls from the AP on Friday.

Publisher of Idaho's largest daily resigns

The Associated Press

BOISE — The publisher of Idaho's largest daily newspaper resigned Friday, saying his departure was a mutual decision with McClatchy Co., which completed its purchase of the Idaho Statesman and other former Knight-Ridder properties less than two weeks ago.

Mike Petrak had been the president and publisher of the Boise newspaper since August, when Knight-Ridder took over the newspaper from Gannett Co. in an exchange involving cash and other newspapers. The Statesman has a circulation of 64,815 daily, and 85,552 Sunday.

Prior to becoming publisher of the Idaho paper, Petrak had been a Knight-Ridder marketing vice president since 2001. The Statesman reported his resignation on its Web site.

"I have decided to go in a different direction," Petrak told employees. "This is a decision hard to come by."

Women's rate of participation in the workforce is falling

The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — The trend was clear and consistent. Since the end of World War II and stretching to the start of the current millennium, the percentage of American women entering the labor force rose steadily at a rate so fast that it offset the steady decline in participation by men.

The influx of fresh workers buoyed economic growth. As companies expanded and demand rose, there were plenty of hands to get the job done. But women's rush to employment stopped in 2000 and started to decline, as they began to join their male counterparts in retirement, go out on disability and delay paid employment to get more education. Some economists think the high-water mark of female participation in the labor force was in 2000, when it hit 69.3 percent.

"The enormous rise in (the) women's labor force participation rate was destined to run its course," wrote demographer Cheryl Russell in a recent analysis. "Most women who want or need to work are now in the labor force."

This flattening of the women's rate, combined with a continuing decline in the men's rate, has helped tighten the job market and could slow U.S. economic growth in coming years, economists say.

A paper by four Federal Reserve economists to be published this month by the Brookings Institution puts it this way: The decisions recently of so many Americans to opt out of the workforce are "probably unprecedented in the postwar economic experience" and "seems large and unusually

Gender Differences

The share of women holding a job or seeking one nearly doubled in the decades after World War II but has plateaued since 2000. The portion of men who are in the labor force has steadily declined.

protected by historical standards.

Contrary to popular theory, Labor Department data do not show a rising proportion of women dropping out of the workforce to spend time with their families. Indeed, the participation rate has fallen since 2000 for both women with children and women without children.

While nonworking women are so much more likely than men to cite "home responsibilities" as their reason for not holding or seeking a job, that's actually less true now than it was in the past. The share of women aged 25 to 54, considered to be in their "prime" working years, who gave that reason for not seeking employment has shrunk for more than a decade. The share of men citing that reason has edged up over the same period, according to a Labor Department analysis of census survey figures from 1990 to 2003.

Brother Dracula found his niche

Dick wasn't really a vampire. He just played one on the telephone. But when it came to collecting blood, he made Count Dracula look absolutely toothless.

Of course, he didn't start out as a vampire (few of them do, you know). He was actually a house painter by profession. But he had to put his brushes and buckets away when a two-word phrase that he had never even heard before entered his life: Parkinson's disease.

The illness affected his body in a variety of ways, most notably causing him to tremble uncontrollably. He was embarrassed by the shaking, and the physical limitations imposed upon him by the disease were frustrating and painful. But instead of allowing himself to become embittered by the tough hand life had dealt to him, he chose to play it out openly — and with characteristic good humor.

JOSEPH WALKER

"The good thing about having Parkinson's," he said the first time I talked to him, "is that I can hold your hand and shake your hand at the same time!"

That's the way Dick was. He didn't defy Parkinson's, but he didn't take it all that seriously, either. Although he allowed some accommodation in his life for the devastating effects of the disease — for example, since he had to spend most of his time in bed, his bedroom walls were lined with video copies of his favorite films — he resisted any attempt by well-meaning friends and neighbors to give him excuses for not doing the things that he knew he could still do.

"Disability is not inability," he used to tell me. "Parkinson's has already taken a lot from me, so I'm going to be pretty protective of what little is left for me."

Most of what was left for Dick came straight from his heart. He was kind and generous to a fault. When you visited him, you usually came away with a smile on your face and a pack of gum in your pocket. His greatest desire was to serve others, and when it became too difficult for him to do it physically, he tried to do it through his limited financial resources.

As the leader of his church congregation, I tried to warn him about frittering away his fixed income on treats for everyone who came to call. But he would hear none of it from me.

"Everyone is so good to me. I need to give something back," he said. "I need to give."

So we tried to find something he could do within the congregation to fulfill his need. It wasn't easy. His limitations were very real; most of the service options we could come up with required that he be physically able to do. About the most interesting thing he could do for any length of time was talk on the telephone.

Which, it turned out, was exactly what was needed to lead our annual blood drive. When we asked him to be in charge of the project, he accepted with eagerness. He called every member of our congregation and got more commitments to give blood than we had ever received. Then he called every one again the night before the drive to remind them of their appointments.

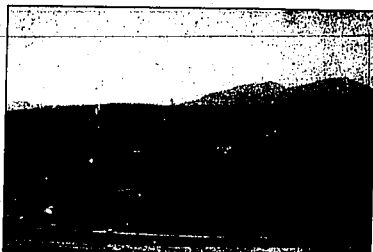

And if anyone didn't show up at the appointed time he would call them again to find out why. Every time he called, his salutation was the same: "This is Brother Dracula. I want your blood!"

And he got it. In record amounts. A few days after the blood drive, someone from the local blood bank called to thank me and to ask what he had done to attract so many participants. "It's easy to get blood," I told him. "When you have a vampire in the congregation."

Dick continued to preside over our congregational blood-lettings for several years. When we moved out of the area, I found myself missing his regular inquiries as to the condition of my corpuscles. Even now, whenever I have blood drawn I think about Brother Dracula and how he refused to allow disability to limit his ability to give — and to get others to give.

Even if he wasn't really a vampire.

Jerome-based group rolls up its sleeves for the poor of Tijuana

By Steve Crump
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — Tomas has cancer.

He can rarely get out of bed, and until May he spent his days in a tiny, airless, windowless bedroom in a barren hillside in Tijuana, Mexico.

Now, he has a window to the world.

That's one result of a four-day construction project by a group of Idahoans — mostly Catholic — who make the trip to Mexico's westernmost city regularly to help however they can. Capstone Missions is a nine-year-old, Jerome-based organization that developed a relationship with two Mexican nuns which turned into a long-term service project to help Tijuana's poorest residents.

"It's a very moving experience," said Deb Micciak of Twin Falls, who organized the May trip by 16 Idahoans — seven from the Magic Valley — its "bumbling and gratifying."

Capstone chooses projects that can be completed in a week.

"The May trip was different than most because of the size of house," Micciak said.

The team all, but rebuilt Tomas' house, adding a bedroom, bathroom, ramp, a new roof and a porch. During construction, the water was turned off — right in the middle of the visitors mixing cement.

"We've learned through experience that things work out," Micciak said. "God always finds a way."

The team formed a bucket brigade and drew water from a nearby well, loaded it in a 55-gallon drum, drove it back to the project and finished the job.

"On a previous project, the power was turned off right in the middle because the lady hadn't paid the bill," Micciak said. "You learn to make do with what you have."

That's only fair, she adds, because that's how the poor of Tijuana have learned to live.

"Martina (Tomas' wife) said 'God will provide,'" Micciak said. "I think you'd have to have faith in her situation, or you'd go jump off a bridge."

Marvin Makay, a Twin Falls remodeling contractor, gathered the materials and provided the technical expertise for a group that collectively didn't have much construction experience.

"It's amazing to see how things come together," Micciak said. "The job gets finished on time."

Tomas is still ill, but in much better spirits, she says. And the family's quality of life is much improved.

"We're making another trip (to work on a different project) in October," Micciak said. "You should come along."

About Tijuana

Tijuana, Mexico's fourth-largest city, is an enigma. Because of foreign-owned manufacturing plants established after the North American Free Trade Agreement of 1993, unemployment averages 1 percent. And yet 28 percent of Tijuana live below Mexico's official poverty line, and that's just counting the population that the government acknowledges.

In addition, there are tens of thousands living in shantytowns surrounding the city that the government doesn't count.

Because of Tijuana's proximity to the United States and its cheap labor, it's an attractive city for companies to establish extensive industrial parks comprised of maquiladoras — factories situated near the border to produce for export. Foreign and domestic companies employ thousands in these plants, usually in assembly-related labor. Such jobs are demanding and ill-paid by First World standards (the per capita income is $9,800, compared to $33,000 in neighboring Salt Lake City).

Despite the modest Tijuana Prosperity Club, the city's migrant workers from other parts of Mexico, as well as other countries in the south.

About Capstone Missions

In 1997, some parishioners at St. Jerome's Catholic Church in Jerome became aware of a small orphanage in Tijuana, Mexico, that needed its house repaired. A friendship developed between the two Sisters of Divine Love (María Elena and Monserrat) who ran the home and the people participating in the work from Idaho.

After the original June 1997 trip, there was second, bigger project in November 1997 that brought thousands of dollars of materials, supplies and appliances to St. Joseph's. The work was originally named "The Tijuana Orphanage Project." Regular financial support began in 1998, primarily through folks who had been to Tijuana and knew the children. Four hundred dollars were committed to St. Joseph's on a monthly basis — then the only regular financial support St. Joseph's received. In March 1998, there was another large group in Tijuana from Idaho working to transform St. Joseph's house and grounds.

The week-long trip did much of the house's work. But now reaches to other programs in Tijuana and the homeless and poor. More than 20 workers from Tijuana have been trained and placed.

As St. Joseph's Home was remodeled and improved, other needs in the Tijuana area became evident to mission trip organizers.

Primarily through Sister María Elena, relationships with Sr. Doris, Carmine Martin and the Missionaries of Charity have been formed, broadening the onsite construction mission to include other Catholic ministries in Tijuana. Monthly support levels have moved upward as the need has increased. With changes in the economy in Tijuana that followed the Sept. 11, 2001 terrorist attacks on the United States, donations sharply and St. Joseph's began to experience a serious shortfall each month.

October 2002, the Sisters decided to close the home because of the debt they had incurred. Capstone Missions was organized and an agreement to partner the Sisters and St. Joseph's Home for Children was reached.

With that partnership in place, St. Joseph's can now open for the foreseeable future. Capstone Missions is trying to link people who are willing to offer their talents and treasure with people in need. The week-long trip did much of the house's work. But now reaches to other programs in Tijuana and the homeless and poor. More than 20 workers from Tijuana have been trained and placed.

Have it your way, Scorpio

IF JULY 8 IS YOUR BIRTHDAY: It could be that your ambitions are ignited or that you find you are capable of concentrated self-discipline in the next several months. Through the beginning of October it will be easier to maintain a diet or earn the credentials necessary for future success. Look for the opportunity to advance yourself or a chance to make important improvements in late September. Next spring, especially in March and April, you can make key changes and enjoy heightened popularity.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): With Mars and Uranus at opposition in the heavens, it isn't a good time for activities that require peace and quiet. Constant interruptions could plague projects started now.

Taurus (April 20-May 20): Yin and yang entwined, True Love can surmount any obstacle. Show that special someone you care by being sympathetic and understanding. Don't ask for a promise or a pledge.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Your mesmerizing way with words can win someone around your little finger. Pay attention to the small inspintions and beauties of the world. Indulge whimsical fantasies.

HOROSCOPE
Jeraldine Saunders

CANCER (June 21-July 22): You could be in the right place at the wrong time, so go along with the crowd and try not to make waves. Your attempts to enliven an amorous tango for two could prove awkward.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Protect your nest egg, ignore the urge to throw rotten eggs as it is possible to accidentally grab the "wrong" ones. Keep tempers under control. Someone may silently worship the ground you walk upon.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Whisper sweet nothings. This is an evening to make love, not war. Don't get caught up in arguments. Real romance flows without effort and doesn't require a confrontation.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Love is a four-letter word. Too. Although this might not be the time to make a serious proposal or enter into a romantic commitment, it could be a superior time for ecstatic expressions of love.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Have it your way. Be the traffic cop of the conversation and keep things on track. Affectionate stars are shining overhead and you can win the heart of a loved one by avoiding debatable issues.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Hearts can beat as one. Fight off the urge to make declarations or push for commitment. Plan a magical evening for lovers, but don't try to turn a pumpkin into a gold Cadillac.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Look for lasting love. The real thing remains a classic under any circumstances. Keep this thought in mind when offering your heart.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Difficult choices. Authentic soul mates won't need to exert extra effort to scale the Mount Everest of love. Choose compassion and sympathetic understanding over agitation and aggravation.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Let love prop you up rather than sweep you off your feet. Real love doesn't need to be a case of either/or. Romantic fantasies can be realized, but don't force choices or deliver ultimata.

Woman fights compulsion to shop when she is down

DEAR ABBY: Jeanie Phillips

I have no job and no place to stay. We have a child together, so I have to provide for him, too. Do you think I have grounds to leave or should I try to work things out?

— BEATEN DOWN IN COLUMBUS, OHIO

DEAR ABBY: I'm a shopaholic. I'm constantly shopping the department stores and the thrift shops. It's my "fix" when I'm feeling down or bored. It never used to be this bad. I purchase things and keep it secret from my husband. I don't just buy for me. I also buy for others. I am out of control. It has reached the point where I'm in the hole $4,800.

I never had nice things when I was young, and I tell myself I deserve them. It's like being on a diet and cheating. I feel guilty every time I do it. The idea of cutting up my credit cards is threatening. I'm sad, but I'd be really depressed if I had to do it every night to stop this cycle, but my prayers go unanswered because I'm not sincere.

I'm a lonely person with few friends. I'm scared and don't know where to turn. Please help me. I can't afford a therapist.

DEAR ABBY: My husband doesn't support anything I do anymore. He thinks I am always wrong, no matter what the situation is. He never takes my part in any circumstance. He took the neighbors part after an argument that led to me calling the police. He told the neighbors that I was wrong to do it. He has made me look like a fool to the whole neighborhood.

He is always telling me what to do. I never get my way — it is always his way or no way. I am thinking about leaving him, but I have nowhere to go.

And by the way, your husband is required by law to support his child. An attorney can advise you about whether you have "grounds" to end the marriage.

DEAR ABBY: A friend asked me today if dancing with someone other than your partner is considered "cheating." What do you think?

— C.M. IN SCARBOROUGH, CANADA

DEAR C.M.: Dancing with someone other than your partner is not cheating. However, it is considered rude if your partner is left sitting alone.

Whale harassment can be costly

The maximum federal fine for whale harassment is $10,000.

This day in history: On July 8, 1835, the Liberty Bell cracked. This happened while being rung during the funeral of John Marshall, chief justice of the United States.

Does the eighth day of the month give you the heebie-jeebies? You may be suffering from cephalopobia.

Here's another health theory that didn't survive its real-life trials: In 1743, Dr. John Cochrane wrote a book called Hemipus Redivivus in which he claimed you can live to 115 years of age by regularly inhaling the exhaled breath of little girls.

Like all good Catholics of the time, early Portuguese settlers in Africa were allowed to eat fish during Lent, but were not allowed to eat meat. So it's

According to the Harvard Eating Disorders Center, about 3 percent of adolescent girls and young women have eating disorders.

Humans once believed they were the only animals to copulate face to face. They were wrong — their closest chimpanzee relatives, the bonobos, also do so about a third of the time, starting soulfully into each other's eyes.

Woman impressed by field proposal

LUXEMBURG, Wis. — Stacy Martin needed a bird's eye view to see her boyfriend's marriage proposal.

Brian Rueckl's proposal came as a 40,000-square-foot message. "Stacy will you marry me?" tiled in a cornfield near the Manitowoc and Kewaunee county line.

"At first I was in shock and forgot to say yes," Martin said.

Rueckl, an employee of the U.S. Department of Agriculture's Farm Service Agency, persuaded Martin to take an alpine ride with him to take pictures of the land.

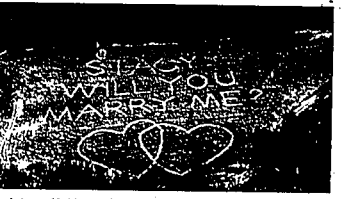

The proposal came after a year of planning and 40 hours of work Rueckl, 23, tiled the message on a farm owned by his boss.

He used geographical software to plot the coordinates, the letters and Global Positioning System data to manually till his message.

"We got bit up by mosquitoes and sunburned, but it was worth it," he said. "It was definitely a good reaction."

Martin, a 22-year-old University of Wisconsin-Green Bay student, said she didn't see the message right away.

"And all this time I was thinking, 'Gosh, I'll never get married,'" she said. "Behind the scenes, he was working on it."

This photo provided by Brian Rueckl shows the corn field he used to propose to his girlfriend, Stacy Martin on Monday in Wisconsin. Rueckl had completed his proposal for a year, selecting the right cornfield and using a computer mapping program to plot his message.

After working up quite a sweat mowing his own lawn this summer, Darrell Nelson thought that he could get a good workout by mowing lawns for other people as well.

So he placed an ad on the Web site Craigslist.org offering to mow lawns for free.

He figures if he eats better and mows a lawn per day every day of the week, he will be able to keep an exercise program going. He said he has a hard time keeping commitments to himself, but he will stick to commitments he makes to others.

"This is no joke or gimmick," he wrote on the Web site. "I need to lose weight. I have struggled on sticking to exercise programs, including just walking, for quite a while now."

Nelson is a former power lifter who's about 5-foot-9 and 250 pounds. Since news of his ad spread, he has fielded calls from the media, strangers — even some women who have asked him out on dates. "My life has been turned upside down, man. Unbelievable," he said.

Gorilla gives birth while on exhibit at Atlanta Zoo

ATLANTA — An Atlanta Zoo gorilla gave birth to the fifth western lowland gorilla born at the zoo in the past eight months.

The baby was born Thursday while the mother, Sukari, was on exhibit around 3 p.m., and a few zoo visitors who witnessed the birth alerted zoo staff, spokeswoman Susan Elliott said.

Gorilla mothers keep babies close to their body, so officials probably won't know the sex for three to five weeks. The baby will remain unnamed until they do.

Sukari and baby are expected to be on public exhibit this weekend, Elliott said.

President warns of Islamic 'explosion' over Gaza

TEHRAN — Iran's hard-line president warned Friday that Israel's "offensive" in the Gaza Strip could set off an "explosion" in the Islamic world against Israel and its supporters.

Mahmoud Ahmadinejad told thousands of demonstrators gathered in the capital, Tehran, to condemn the strikes in the Gaza Strip that Israel's backers could be the target of revenge by Muslims.

"They should not let things reach a point where an explosion occurs in the Islamic world," he said. "If an explosion occurs, then it won't be limited to geographical boundaries. It will also burn all those who created (Israel) over the past 60 years."

ISRAEL

Palestinians: Israeli tanks move into eastern Gaza

GAZA CITY, Gaza Strip — Israeli tanks and troops clashed with militants in eastern Gaza early Saturday, Palestinian security officials said, as Israeli moved to broaden an incursion to force the release of a captured soldier.

The Israeli forces, including some 15 tanks, entered eastern Gaza near the Karni commercial crossing, moving along the border just a quarter mile from the densely populated Shajaiyeh neighborhood, according to the Palestinian witnesses.

A short while later, the Israeli air force fired missiles at a group of militants gathered at the outskirts of Shajaiyeh, injuring at least two people, Palestinian security and hospital officials said.

U.N.

Stronger resolution offered on N. Korea

UNITED NATIONS — Japan presented the Security Council on Friday with a tough revised draft resolution that would condemn North Korea's missile tests and ban states from supplying or buying goods or technology — that could help Pyongyang upgrade its ballistic missile program or advance its nuclear weapons program. The resolution is backed by the United States and European allies, over Chinese and Russian concerns that it will exacerbate tensions in the region, according to U.N. diplomats.

The draft resolution demands that North Korea immediately recommit itself to a 1998 moratorium on ballistic missile tests and return to station talks aimed at persuading Pyongyang to abandon its nuclear weapons program.

HAITI

U.N. troops find 16 bodies in Haitian capital

PORT-AU-PRINCE, Haiti — U.N. peacekeepers on Friday found the bodies of 16 people believed killed in a surge of gang violence, the latest sign the Caribbean nation's capital may be slipping back into disorder after months of relative calm.

The troops from Sri Lanka the bodies in the southern Port-au-Prince slum of Marissant, a U.N. statement said. The slum was the site of a recent spate of gunbattles between warring gangs.

The victims apparently were shot to death in an hours-long gunfight among Haitian gang members fighting for control of the area, said Pierre Esperance, a local human rights activist.

The dead were civilians, not gang members, said Esperance, whose National Coalition for Haitian Rights has monitored gang activity in slums.

AFGHANISTAN

Coalition soldier, 8 Taliban fighters killed

KANDAHAR, Afghanistan — President Hamid Karzai urged neighboring Pakistan to prevent militants from training on its soil as fighting Friday in southern Afghanistan killed a U.S.-led coalition soldier and at least eight suspected Taliban militants.

The violence came amid a surge in attacks by Taliban insurgents trying to reassert control over their former southern homeland.

The escalation has prompted Britain to consider sending more forces. Hundreds of people, mostly militants, have died in fighting in recent weeks.

Paris couture shows reflect uncertain times

PARIS — While many designers tapped into today's times of uncertainty with armor-like clothing fit for an urban warrior, Jean Paul Gaultier, escaped to a fantasy world peopled with princesses, witches and animals in his haute couture show on Friday.

It was a fitting finale to the fight-or-flight battle that played out in Paris this season, as designers responded to the world's climate of unease in two ways: tough battle-ready outfits versus a starry-eyed status quo.

MEXICO

President-elect attacks U.S. border wall

MEXICO CITY — Less than 24 hours after being named president-elect in a disputed official count, Felipe Calderon took a firm stance against building a wall along the United States-Mexico border to stem illegal immigration.

Echoing his campaign theme, Calderon said the best solution to the immigration crisis was creating jobs in Mexico, "not walls or troops," a reference to President Bush's decision to send National Guard troops to support the U.S. Border Patrol.

Calderon's remarks, delivered during his first post-election briefing for the international news media, angered a leading Capitol Hill proponent of increased border security. Rep. Tom Tancredo, R-Colo., said in a phone interview that he was "injured" by Calderon's statement, "just as Mexico would be rightly offended if we were to not only condemn their immigration policies but actively work to aid and abet illegal immigration."

SPAIN

Spain confirms first case of H5N1 bird flu

MADRID — Spain has recorded its first case of H5N1 bird flu, discovered in a wild fowl in a marshland area near a northern city, the government said Friday.

Officials are working to determine where the sick bird came from and if the virus is similar to the strain that has proven lethal to humans in Asia and elsewhere. Agriculture Minister Elena Espinosa told a news conference.

A bird flu spread to several European countries late last year, officials said. It was only a matter of time before the disease made it to Spain, which is on the route of birds migrating north from Africa.

Bird flu has killed at least 131 people worldwide since it started ravaging Asian poultry in late 2003, according to the World Health Organization.

The keeper of the gate

By Linda Brittan
Times-News correspondent

TWIN FALLS — Ask for Warren Hinton one night up at the Magic Valley Speedway and you're probably not many people would be able to show you who he was. However, if you had asked for "Shory" immediately you'd be pointed over to the man guarding the gate by Turn 1 between the grandstands and the pits.

Nearly everyone knows Shory. After all, he has been one of the few fixtures that has withstood the many changes at the speedway ever since the track opened for racing in 1986.

Hinton began his work at MVS as one of the track maintenance crew members, but in recent years he has been assigned to the security position of pit gatekeeper and given the task of making sure that no one who is not allowed in the pits gets by him.

Only those who have signed a waiver at the front pit gate and been tagged with a wristband are allowed in the pits during pre-race practice and scheduled racing events. Someone must be stationed at the gate to make sure those who have not filled out the proper paperwork or had alcohol do not travel into the pit area, and Hinton is just the man for the job.

Turning people away from entering the pits can have its moments however, especially to those not familiar with the rules at the track.

"Sometimes people can get a little belligerent, but usually I don't have any problems," Hinton said. "Mostly we all joke around and everyone gets along really well."

Lee Schmidt, who is the corner flag man at MVS often picks up Hinton and gives him a ride out to the track on race nights. Schmidt says that Hinton is always ready and waiting to go.

"Sometimes he's out there an hour ahead of time. In case I come early," Schmidt said. "Then when we get out to the track he gets right to work. He gets the hand blower and gets all the stuff from along the barriers so I can pick it up with the sweeper truck. He takes care of the trash cans and then gets ready to take his post at the gate."

And if you don't recognize Hinton at the Magic Valley Speedway, chances are you've noticed him as he has been in the town, or perhaps at Harmon Park where he frequently can be seen in the stands cheering on the local baseball and softball players. Hinton also frequents the bowling dome, where he keeps up with his many friends and acquaintances he has made through the years at the fall and spring bowling leagues. Hinton also likes to attend the summer band concerts at Twin Falls City Park.

Warren 'Shory' Hinton has been with the Magic Valley Speedway since its inception in 1986. Hinton is currently in charge of the gate between the grandstands and the pits, although he previously worked for several years with the speedway maintenance crew.

Born in Wendell, Hinton lived in Jerome for the first few years of his life but moved to Nevada where he attended school. Hinton enlisted in the Marine Corps by the time he was 20 and was stationed at bases mainly in southern California, attaining the rank of corporal at the time he ended his service with the military.

"I was in the Corps for four years, nine months and 22 days," he explains. "I worked on aircraft jets and helicopters with the maintenance crew. That was back in the Vietnam days."

Hinton returned to the Magic Valley approximately 20 years ago and began working at the Twin Falls Livestock yard, where he obtained the 'Shory' nickname. These days the 61-year-old's newest activity is to volunteer his time at the Twin Falls Senior Citizen Center five days a week.

"I go and help set up lunch for them. Set out the silverware and stuff," he said. "I usually get there around 7 or 8 (a.m.) and work until about 1 (p.m.)," Hinton explains. Hinton's main passion remains with the Magic Valley Speedway however, and promoter Steve York, who has worked with Hinton for more than 20 years now, knows first-hand of Hinton's dedication to the Twin Falls track.

"We've had nearly 500 events at the Magic Valley Speedway in 21 seasons," York explained. "And to my knowledge, Shory has only missed one of those events."

"I look forward to going out there every Saturday," Hinton said. "I love it. Whatever Steve wants me to do I'll do. I'm going to work at the track until I can't make it anymore. It's the best job I've ever had."

The wheels keep turning at MVS tonight

By Linda Brittan
Times-News correspondent

TWIN FALLS — With only two races left in each division until the Chase for the Championship begins July 29 at the Magic Valley Speedway, the drivers continue to vie for position to get on top in the standings before the points are reset for the final five events of the season.

In order to tighten up the battle for the championship, the top 10 driver's points are re-confirmed and set in stone for three weeks with just five races to go in the season. While a 30-point lead may be narrowed down to a three-point lead at the end of this month, any point advantage, however slight, will be sought by the drivers throughout the next couple of races.

Steve Jones is the points leader in the Pepsi Premier division going into tonight's race after a win by Jones — combined with Bobby Latham's ninth-place finish after experiencing the woes during the final laps in last Saturday night's main event — gave Jones a 20-point advantage in the standings.

As the season nears its end, each driver would like to be able to claim to have made at least one trip to winner's circle this season, although Jones — who has the most wins of any driver at the track this year with four — is still in the hunt for more.

"I'm interested in the total wins for the NASCAR region too," Jones explains. "I don't want to go into the NASCAR
