Three people perished in Magic Valley waters in July. Someone had to get them back.

Recovering the lost

Twin Falls Search and Rescue diver, Paul Milner, 25, poses in Dierkes Lake. Milner was at the scene of all three fatal accidents in July: Justin Hernandez, 15, who drowned at one of Dierkes' hidden lakes after jumping from a cliff; Ashley Faulkner, 15, who drowned in a Hagerman section of the Snake River after jumping in to save her dog; and Juan Arreguez, 57, who drove his truck into a canal south of Kimberly after losing consciousness at the wheel.

Search-and-rescue diver talks about looking for lost people

By Cassidy Friedman

TWIN FALLS — Take a Polaroid of a Tahitian reef. Now flip it over to the back-side. For Magic Valley summer divers, that's what home looks like. In the sunnier heat, algae bloom gives them about three inches of visibility. For recreational divers, it's an inconvenience.

For the six divers of Twin Falls Search and Rescue, it makes their jobs tougher, slower, more dependent on touch than sight.

In July, team members handled three recoveries. In each situation, they faced three-inch visibility, strong currents and the horror of knowing what they were there to find.

The experience of three back-to-back water recoveries was perhaps most terrifying for the group's newest member, Paul Milner, 25, who joined the team less than two months earlier. "They disassociate," Milner said of search-and-rescue divers with more experience. "They're just doing their job. For me, it's the first bodies I've seen other than at a funeral."

Milner was at the scene of three fatal accidents in July: Justin Hernandez, 15, who drowned at one of Dierkes' hidden lakes after jumping from a cliff; Ashley Faulkner, 15, who drowned in a Hagerman section of the Snake River after jumping in to save her dog; and Juan Arreguez, 57, who drove his truck into a canal south of Kimberly after losing consciousness at the wheel.

Milner and diver Bob Gumble could not comment on what they found on specific dives but shared what it's like to work in the murky summer waters of the Magic Valley.

Hagerman

Milner's first search-and-rescue dive was the Hagerman accident. As much as he tried to control his air intake, he was sucking up oxygen at a far faster rate than usual. His jerky breathing could be attributed to the currents, which roared through the canyon and tugged his body downstream against the strain of the rope he was tethered to. The other reason was psychological.

"Part of me didn't want to find that girl," he said. "It had to be a 15-year-old girl with blond hair and I have a little sister; she is 15, blond and her name is Ashley."

He later learned that the victim's name was Ashley. "The divers work in pairs. One is in the water; the other stands on the shore and holds a rope tied to the diver, who

Dead man discovered at Shoshone Falls

TWIN FALLS — A visitor alerted authorities Saturday afternoon after discovering a body near the water below the main observation deck at Shoshone Falls.

"We have no idea who and we don't know how," Twin Falls Police Staff Sgt. Dan McAttee said.

"We have no idea who and we don't know how," Twin Falls Police Staff Sgt. Dan McAttee said of the victim. "We're not really sure who it is."

The body was recovered about 5 p.m. after two search and rescue boats utilized the boat ramp on the north side of the falls.

According to police, a visitor to the falls spotted the body about 1 p.m. and alerted a park ranger. The ranger notified police.

"The Twin Falls sheriff's office did the recovery and the investigation continues," McAttee said.

A search and rescue crew takes a boat across the Snake River, near the Idaho Power station just below Shoshone Falls, to recover the body of a man discovered Saturday afternoon at the base of one of the main observation areas at Shoshone Falls.

Beginning of an LDS temple

But this call wasn't from a client or fellow attorney. For Nielson, one of about 12.5 million worldwide members of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, this call was from a higher authority.

Agency turns airport contraband into eBay payday

The Associated Press

HARRISBURG, Pa. — A man-sized artificial palm tree and a sausage grinder have shared space in a state government warehouse with piles of Swiss Army knives and chain saws — just a few of the things travelers have had to give up at airport security checkpoints.

Pennsylvania turns a small profit by disposing of these contraband items, which it accepts from security contractors at 12 airports in five states, by selling them to the highest bidders at online auction site eBay.

Most of the contraband merchandise is knives, nail clippers and cuticle scissors that were forbidden as carry-on items following the terror attacks of Sept. 11, 2001. But there also are servers, hair bats, frosting-enriched wedding cakes, swimmer, sex toys and a couple of chain saws. There's even a box full of blenders.

"There must be folks who like to mix up their own pina-colodas when they get to Puerto Vallarta," said Ken Hiss, head of the Pennsylvania General Services Department's surplus property program.

The program has brought in more than $307,000 since it began in June 2004, and over-boosted a few students from a truck-driving school pick up the merchandise, and the sorted by state workers who can't do their normal duties because of injury or other reasons.

Ninety-eight percent of it will sell. Knives, auctioned by the lot, sell fastest. Ten pounds of assorted pocket knives, for example, recently attracted nine bids and sold for $42.

Some of the 24 tons of miscellany that arrives every month consists of weapons, potential weapons and squirt guns.

Temple

 voice on the other end said.
 That's Hinckley as in Gordon B. Hinckley, the LDS Church's 94-year-old president.
 "He just asked me if I had time to meet with him at the day," said Nielson, who at the time was the president of the West Twin Falls Stake. "He was flying into Twin Falls at 1 o'clock and wanted to look at the temple for a while."
 Temple? This was big. Very big.
 A few hours later, Nielson was meeting with the church's real estate agent, who had driven in from Salt Lake City, at one of the local LDS churches. The Realtor's job was to travel to places around the globe to look at land parcels that might someday become home to an LDS temple. It wasn't his first trip to the Magic Valley. He'd been to Twin Falls a number of times before, looking at land, studying populations, church membership numbers and other demographic factors. By the time Hinckley became involved, the church had already narrowed it down to eight possible sites.
 Just before 1 p.m., one of the "agents" — a man in a suit — landed on the tarmac at Joslin Field Magic Valley Airport. The Salt Lake City-based Fortune 500 chemical company often lent its jets to LDS leaders. Nielson and the Realtor drove the silver Suburban out on the tarmac to greet Hinckley, his personal secretary and a temple architect. Nielson had met the president before when Hinckley visited Twin Falls for stake conferences. On this day, Nielson would get to spend a few hours in the company of the LDS president.

 "He's just an amazing, wonderful person," Nielson said.
 A few hours later, the Realtor and Nielson delivered the LDS president, his personal secretary and the architect back to the private plane.
 "By the end of the day, we had narrowed it down to two sites," Nielson said.
 Before Hinckley boarded the plane, he asked Nielson a favor.
 "He asked me to keep his visit to myself until I heard him announce the temple in Twin Falls," Nielson said.
 Nielson kept mum for four months until Hinckley made the announcement during the church's general conference in October. It was a hard secret to keep, but Nielson kept his promise.

 "It was hard, especially when I heard people talk about it," Nielson said. "It was exciting news."
 On Oct. 2, 2004, during the church's general conference, Hinckley made the official announcement that two new temples would be going up — one in Draper, Utah, and one in Twin Falls.
 The church purchased the 36-acre Candleridge property from Ace Hansen, Dr. James Retmler and brothers Lowell and Dallas Ward. Hansen said the church came to them, but would not say how much the church paid for the property. The church kept 9.1 acres for the temple site, and sold the rest of the acreage to developer Ken Edmunds, who with partners Devoe and Dan Brown, is turning the property into a 49-home subdivision called Ensign Point.
 The LDS Church had approved building a new stake center in Twin Falls two months before Hinckley's visit. The church had outgrown its meeting houses — eight wards were using the Twin Falls Stake Center, and 11 wards were crowding into the Twin Falls West Stake Center, said Terry McCurdy, the public affairs representative for the LDS Church in South Central Idaho.

 On Oct. 6, 2005, inside the Candleridge Golf Course's Clubhouse, church officials unveiled a model of the white, two-story temple which will be adorned with a gold-leafed angel Moroni atop a spire rising 159 feet in the air.
 Last April ground was broken on the site for the new temple and stake center. A week later, Big D Construction Corp. of Salt Lake City set up a trailer on the site and started moving dirt. Last week, the church obtained the building permit for the $3.25 million dollar, 27,850-square-foot temple. Construction workers are now busy laying the foundation and the temple is expected to open its doors in the spring of 2008, McCurdy said.
 The groundbreaking, McCurdy said, was a monumental event.
 "A lot of people finally say that this is really going to happen," he said.

 searches the depths in a pivot around the line tender. Letting out more rope in precise measures helps divers ensure they don't miss anything.
 "It's the No. 1 rule: When you leave a spot you can't see without a shadow of a doubt a body could not be there," Milner said.
 Underwater along the canyon walls are tube-like recesses, some with water rushing through them. Large falls plunge off the cliffs into the water, turning the water below into a never-ending spin cycle.
 "I became a much better diver that day," said Milner. Even though the Twin Falls crew never found the body, Milner walked away feeling a new self-confidence that would prepare him for a different set of challenging conditions he would encounter a few days later at Dierkes Lake.

ing the pickup and helping divers recover the body. The farmer's account of the incident made instant sense to the victim's family. The victim suffered from a chronic blood condition and the family was nearly certain, as the coroner would later confirm, that he was dead by the time his pickup hit the canal.
 But the time, divers knew none of this. They only knew that to reach the pickup five feet under, to hook it and tow it out, they would have to swim through blinding, thick currents. Free-diving, the farmer had been sucked down the canal so fast he had to pull himself out, run upstream and try again seven to eight times. He found the truck but could not stay with it.
 Upstream along the shore Twin Falls divers — including Milner — suggested the Mini-Cassia divers with ropes as they dove, while the canal neared 1,000 cubic feet per second of pressure against them.
 "In a canal, it's more or less like diving in a tube," Milner said, "because there is no place for the water to slow down."
 Mini-Cassia divers hooked a line to the pickup and towed the truck out of the water.
 "Why be a search-and-rescue diver? I've asked myself that a lot in the past two weeks," said Milner. Each body recovery begs the question and at the same time provides the answer.
 "Someone's got to do it and I know how to do it," he said.
 Each time a diver gets paged, he expects somber news. But it reminds him why his participation is needed.
 "And each time Milner dives, he goes better."
 Gumble, a more experienced search-and-rescue diver, says more training is needed for the Twin Falls divers.

Paul Milner, 25, is the newest member of the dive team, joining just two months before the series of drownings this summer.

"The more you dive in an area the more you get used to it," he said. "And the more you will be able to pinpoint a body. We're going to get some practice times together, throw in a mannequin and do some mock rescues."
 Until now, Twin Falls volunteers have relied on help from other counties, especially the Mini-Cassia dive team, which includes paid personnel. "We're at the beginning stage of forming a dive team," said Staff Sgt. Darren Brown at the Twin Falls County Sheriff's Office. "We won't have to rely on other teams."
 The trade-off for getting a lot more training and better equipment is divers will be expected to make a more serious commitment to the dive team. And while Dive Magic scuba shop provides free equipment discount, fundraising will continue to play a crucial role in building the team.
 There's hard work ahead for local divers. For them it's not a choice. It's a responsibility.
 "It's tough. It's hard on you," Gumble said. "I got people that ask me all the time, 'How can you do that?'" he said. "It's not really a want. It's a have to."

Dierkes hidden lake

Tethered to his counterpart at the edge of the lake, Milner swung like a pendulum blindly through the water across the steep cliff that drops sharply into the lake.
 "In those hidden lakes, you've got absolutely zero visibility," Milner said.
 Adjusting his buoyancy so he could float just above the deep matted weeds, he sunk his arms into the lush underwater vegetation until it reached up to his shoulders.
 He was completely dependent on touch, unable even to see the gauge that measures how much air is left in his scuba tank.
 "Between zero and 40 feet the flashlight hinders visibility," he said. "It reflects off the algae bloom like high beams in the fog."
 During this dive, he was able to concentrate on the task at hand. He became so concentrated on details, however, that he lost context of what he was doing. To find a body, one must prompt his senses. He was running into the opposite problem he ran into in Hagerman. By concentrating on not missing a beat, he risked missing the body.
 "You've got to keep in mind it's a human," he said. "You're so busy thinking about all the things you have to get done."

Gender-bending proves popular in online video games

By Matt Siegle
Associated Press writer

By day, Freeman Williams manages a small dental practice in suburban Houston. But on any given night, he's prowling crime-ridden streets and hisding necro-do-wells in the video game "City of Heroes" as his virtual alter-ego: a female superhero named Robotrix.

"Get in character voice-wise as much as my male voice will allow," explains Williams, 48, who talks with other players through the game's voice chat feature. "This has become my catharsis, my escape from the work world."

While the idea of gender-bending is hardly new, the vast online worlds in video games such as "City of Heroes" and "World of Warcraft" have become the latest ways for people to forget about their real life and transform into someone — or even something — else.

These are role-playing games after all. For many, half the fun can be in the initial character creation process, where you decide the basic look and functions of your digital persona.

Among the crucial questions that need to be addressed: Do I want to heal or dish out damage? Do I prefer green-skinned orcs or pointy-eared elves? And of course, do I want to be male or female?

For a variety of reasons, Williams isn't the only guy with a preference for female characters, according to Kathryn Wright, a psychologist in Raleigh, N.C., who consults for WomenGamers.com.

In an informal survey she conducted with 64 males, more than half said choosing a female character gave them a distinct gameplay advantage. And while a quarter said they played women characters because it added to the role-playing experience, Wright said others had a simpler explanation: visual stimulation.

"They'd rather look at a character that looks like Lara Croft than a character that looks like Rambo," she said.

But the ensuing gender-bending can result in some unpredictable online behavior.

Williams admits his female choice has caused a bit of confusion among online fantasy pals — some of whom have developed into real-world acquaintances.

"One of the people that I met online who is a mom in Indiana was really intrigued by the fact that I was actually a guy and at the time I was playing a female character," he said. "I had to break the news to her that I'm actually a big hairy guy."

Erica Poole, a 31-year-old legal secretary in Austin, says she's picked up a few ways to spot a male disguised as a female in online games.

"The fact that they are scantily clad is a huge clue," she said. "And often the bigger the breasts, the more likely it's a guy."

Then there are the conversational cues picked up as players type messages to and fro.

"You can ask leading questions that get them to give it away," Poole said. "Also, most guys don't use a lot of emoticons, even when they're trying to be a girl, so this can tip off a 'real' girl."

About 38 percent of gaming consumers in the United States are female, according to the Entertainment Software Association. In an industry where few video games beyond "Tomb Raider" let you be the heroine, never-ending online games give players the power to craft lead characters as they see fit.

That's one of the reasons Poole said she prefers sticking with her gender.

"It's not something I necessarily decided on a conscious level," she said. "One issue is that I don't have the opportunity to play a strong female character in other games. It's a nice change."

For gal gamers, it's all about options and the ability to customize, says Mia Consalvo, an associate professor of telecommunications at Ohio University. Guys, meanwhile, often have more obvious explanations for their digital likenesses, or avatars.

"For the majority of women who play online games, at the very least they want the choice of being able to play female avatars," she said. "The guys want to look at an attractive character, and some of them swear that they get free stuff. Some players just like to experiment with all the different permutations and options in the game."

For some, however, it's more important to stay true to reality. Mike Jannity of Seattle, a software tester for Microsoft Corp., said he always plays a male character, doing otherwise would be disingenuous, he believes.

"I don't tend to role play so much as I tend to just be myself when I'm talking to other players, so I kind of feel like portraying somebody I'm not is not really a good thing," he said. "It's jarring enough to me when I see a male player in a female costume."

Texas with about 1,000 cell phones arrested

CARO — Three Texas men were arraigned Saturday on terrorism-related charges after police found about 1,000 cell phones in their minivan.

A magistrate set bond at $750,000 for each of the men, who are charged with collecting or providing materials for terrorist acts and surveillance of a vulnerable target for terrorist purposes.

Officials have declined to say how the case relates to terrorism. No pleas were entered at the arraignment at a District Court in Caro, about 80 miles north of Detroit.

Marwan Awad Muhareb and Loual Abdelhamid Othman, both of Mesquite, Texas, and Adham Abdelhamid Othman, of Dallas, were stopped before dawn Friday after they purchased 80 cell phones from a West Mart in Caro. Police said they found about 1,000 cell phones, "mostly prepaid T-Mobile," in their minivan.

The government had originally split that amount between the two former corporate titans, who were convicted in May of charges including fraud and conspiracy at the close of a four-month trial.

In late June, prosecutors asked U.S. District Judge Sim

Peace activist Cindy Sheehan hospitalized

WACO — Anti-war demonstrator Cindy Sheehan was hospitalized Friday evening for dehydration and exhaustion after fasting for more than a month and protesting earlier this week in 100-degree weather, friends and relatives said.

Sheehan was listed in stable condition at Providence Health Center in Waco. Brenda Mauk, a nursing supervisor, declined to release additional information.

Sheehan, 49, was hospitalized after friends picked her up Friday afternoon at the Dallas-Fort Worth International Airport, where she arrived after spending days in Seattle at the Veterans for Peace convention, said friend Tiffany Burns.

Sheehan, who has been on a liquid diet as part of the nationwide "Troops Home Fast" hunger strike, had been treated and released from a Seattle emergency room Thursday night. On doctors orders, she ate for the first time in about 37 days, Burns said. Sheehan also underwent additional tests for uterine bleeding, her sister DeDe Miller said.

Sheehan was to spend Friday night in the Waco hospital but planned to attend some war protest activities Saturday at the 5-acre lot she bought last month in Crawford, President Bush's adopted hometown, about 20 miles from Waco.

Sheehan kicked off her summer the one-year anniversary of her first anti-war demonstration in Crawford.

WASHINGTON — Thousands of people gathered across from the White House on Saturday, even though the president was out of town, to condemn U.S. and Israeli policies in the Middle East.

Speakers in Lafayette Park energized the most mostly Muslim crowd with chants and speeches condemning Israeli involvement in Lebanon and the Palestinian territories, U.S. support for Israel and U.S. involvement in Iraq.

"Occupation is a crime," the crowd chanted, equating the situation in the three areas. But they also called for peace and justice for all.

"We'll stand united against the violence and the killing in the holy land," said Esam Omesh, president of the Muslim American Society, a co-sponsor of the demonstration, along with the American-Arab Anti-Discrimination Committee and the National Council of Arab Americans.

"There is no difference between Muslim life, Christian life or Jewish life," said Omesh.

Years of 'chasing rainbows' may end soon in water law

The stage has been set for a defining moment of Idaho water law, thanks to a second ruling by 5th District Judge Barry Wood issued on Tuesday.

To paraphrase the judge on this game of a t e r M o n o p o l y : "Do not pass 'Go.' Do not collect $200. And if you don't like the senior-appropriation doctrine, go directly to the Idaho Supreme Court."

Wood refused on Tuesday to halt his 127-page decision from June. That ruling said the Idaho Department of Water Resources neglected to deliver senior water right holders their promised water. That ruling in effect gave senior surface water users suffering injury the ability to demand a shutdown of junior groundwater pumps. The case originated with senior surface users making a water call in January 2005. IDWR Director Karl Wood issued a response that fell short of delivering their full water injury by junior pumps. The surface users then filed suit in Wood's court in August 2005.

Wood's affirmation of his June ruling raises the stakes on this long-overdue conundrum. Some will win, many will lose (if they haven't lost already) but either way, Idaho must follow a set of rules for its most precious natural resource.

"Any way you cut the cards, there's going to be harm to somebody," Wood said Tuesday. "My preference is to follow the law as I understand it."

IDWR attorney Phillip Rasser said the agency will ask the Idaho Supreme Court to stay Wood's ruling, which is no surprise considering the issues at stake. Yet, while it's never wise to guess the direction of the state's high court, Wood's ruling has established a firm foundation that underlies Idaho's water appropriation doctrine in the favor of senior surface water users.

In his ruling, Wood pegs the flaws of conjunctive management in contrast to the historical standard of priority doctrine. Introduced decades ago as the legal integration of water rights administration for both groundwater and surface water rights, conjunctive management has boiled down to a shifting model of water rules. Wood went as far as to call the term a "rainbow" lacking in legal clarity.

Laced throughout Wood's ruling are numerous quotations from the 1889 Constitutional convention and its lengthy debate over water appropriation. Wood culled pertinent quotations made over 100 years ago, but could have been heard in water talks in the past year.

His conclusions hit loud and clear. Idaho's framers crafted a set of laws that set priority dates for water appropriation. Their intention was to create permanence, stability, a system of order in times of water scarcity. But that system has evaporated in time under the conjunctive management principle, which gives a liberal amount of discretion to the state water resources director.

By relying upon inconsistent administrative rules while water tables continue to decline, Idaho water users may feel they're in a sinking ship without a compass.

Wood is in essence forcing the question to be answered for good — will water law follow the precedent of law, or the policies of one man?

That appears to be a decision left for the Supreme Court to decide. Would a ruling from the court provide some finality to the uncertainty of Idaho water administration?

One can never guess how Idaho's high court will lean. Wood's ruling, however, may be too convincing to overturn.

How Simpson squeezed in CIEDRA

Rep. Mike Simpson's Web site implies that the Central Idaho Economic Development and Recreation Act recently passed the full House of Representatives unanimously. Not true!

JACK STEVENS

CIEDRA went to the House Resources Committee. This committee had a "48-hour" rule regarding being scheduled for a vote ("marked-up"). This required a minimum of 48 hours between scheduling a vote and the vote itself.

Immediately prior to the mark-up, Simpson made major changes in the grazing provisions of the bill. A deal was apparently worked out with Democrats. One of their bills was tied to CIEDRA and an agreement was reached that there would be no opposition to either bill. The bills were marked-up approximately 12 hours before the vote.

The 48-hour rule went down the tubes, and CIEDRA passed this committee on July 19, 2006.

Two days later, on Friday, July 21, CIEDRA was put on the Suspension Calendar of the House and scheduled for a vote on Monday, July 24. Obviously, there was no time for the House to even casually consider the bill.

It gets even worse. The Suspension Calendar is designed to handle only non-controversial legislation. In theory, this makes sense, but the reality in CIEDRA's case is that it is very controversial. Somehow (backroom deal) Simpson got it placed on this calendar, with zero business days between having it placed on the Suspension Calendar and the actual vote. Doesn't sound like he has a lot of confidence that the bill could stand the test of careful examination that would have occurred had the bill not been placed on the Suspension Calendar.

In reply to the outcry against these tactics, Simpson is quoted as saying, in effect, that "This bill has been around for years. We're not trying to surprise anybody and run it through without debate."

That's the best definition of hogwash (polite term) that I've ever seen. Simpson knows very well that many bills rattle around in the House for years — it's only when these bills come up for a vote that courts, Did Simpson make that comment with a straight face or with a big grin? Several weeks prior to the vote on CIEDRA, I personally e-mailed Simpson and requested, as a courtesy to his fellow Idahoans, that he give Idahoans reasonable public notice of any upcoming votes on CIEDRA. I never received a reply to that e-mail, but my computer tells me that it was received. The Idaho Statesman published my e-mail under the title "Keep us in the loop" approximately two to three weeks before Simpson rammed this vote through the Resources Committee and then used the Suspension Calendar to ram it through the full House of Representatives.

For the record, if Carolyn Munn (D-NJ) argued against the bill on the floor of the House, emphasizing its very controversial nature. 2) The vote was not unanimous. I watched the proceedings on TV and heard some "nay" voices. 3) Only about 30 to 40 people were in attendance when the bill was debated, not the whole 435 representatives, as could easily be read into Rep. Simpson's Web site's description. 4) "Butch" Otter, who is running for governor, has come out in opposition to CIEDRA. CIEDRA not controversial — gimme a break!

So, on to the Senate. Contact Sen. Craig Emmert immediately urge him to provide fair hearings and votes and a thorough examination of CIEDRA. Hopefully he will not allow a very controversial bill to be rammed through his subcommittee and the Senate as Simpson managed to do disgracefully ram it through the House.

In my opinion, Simpson's hardball tactics and broken promises (ask Stanley in Stanley) bring only shame and disgrace to Idaho and to Idahoans.

Jack Stevens is a resident of Stanley, a member of the Sierra Club.

Win the battle, lose the war with Dems

With the defeat of Joe Lieberman in the Democratic primary in Connecticut, anti-war forces are poised for a takeover of the Democratic Party. Tuesday's exhilarating victory, and the elan and electoral legitimacy gained, may carry the newly energized Democratic left to considerable success in November.

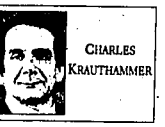

But for the Democratic Party it will be an expensive and short-lived indulgence. The Iraq War will engulf the Bush presidency. But the larger conflict that defines our times — war on Islamic radicalism, more poetically known as the war on terrorism — will continue, as the just-felled London airliner plot ominously reminds us. And the reflexive anti-war sentiments underlying Neil Lamont's victory in Connecticut will prove disastrous for the Democrats in the long run — the long run beginning as early as November '06.

Consider an analogy that the anti-war types hold dear: Iraq vs Vietnam. I reject the premise, but let's assume it for the purpose of following the political consequences of anti-war movements.

The anti-Vietnam War movement had its political successes. They were, as in Connecticut last Tuesday, mostly interim. One Democratic presidential was destroyed (Lyndon Johnson), as was the presidential candidacy of his would-be successor, Hubert Humphrey.

Like Iraq, Vietnam was but one theater in a larger global struggle. The anti-Vietnam War movement had its political successes. They were, as in Connecticut last Tuesday, mostly interim. One Democratic presidential was destroyed (Lyndon Johnson), as was the presidential candidacy of his would-be successor, Hubert Humphrey.

Political disaster. The anti-Vietnam sentiment left a residual pacifism, an aversion to intervention and an instinct for accommodation that proved very costly to the Democrats for years to come. The most notorious example was the liberal flight to the "nuclear freeze" — the most mindless strategic idea of our lifetime in opposition to Ronald Reagan's facing down the Soviet deployment of missiles in Eastern Europe.

Apart from the Carter success of 1976 — an ill-synchronic loss of the Soviet Union — the "blame America first" Democrats were not even competitive on foreign policy for the rest of the Cold War. It was not until the very disappearance of the Soviet Union that the American citizenry would once again elect a Democrat with the White House.

It took the Democrats years to dig themselves out of that hole, helped largely by such pro-defense, pro-Gulf War senators as Al Gore and Joe Lieberman. It is all now being undone by Iraq. The party's intent and fervor has resurfaced with a vengeance — in Connecticut, quite literally so.

In the short run, as in the Vietnam days, there will be "successes": a purging of hawkish Democrats like Joe Lieberman. There might even be larger victories. Enough

Ned Lamont might be elected in enough states to give one or both houses to the Democrats. But even that short-term gain is uncertain. Lamont might not even win his own state. He narrowly best Lieberman in a voter union confined to Democrats. In November, independents and Republicans will join the selection process.

But even assuming some short-term victories, where will the Democrats be when the war is over and Bush is gone?

Lamont said in his victory speech that the time had come to "Fix George Bush's failed foreign policy." Yet, as Martin Peretz pointed out in The Wall Street Journal, on Iraq, the looming long-term Islamist threat, Lamont's views are risible. Lamont's alternative to the Bush Iraq policy is to "bring in allies" and "use carrots as well as sticks."

Where has this man been? Negotiators with Iran have had carrots coming out of their ears in three years of fruitless negotiations. Allies? We let the British, French and Germans negotiate with Iran for those three years, only to have Iran abruptly begun accelerated uranium enrichment that continues to this day.

Lamont seems to think that we should just sit down with the Iranians and show them why going nuclear is not a good idea.

This recalls Idaho Sen. William Borah's immoral reaction in September 1939 upon hearing that Hitler had invaded Poland: "I wish I could have talked with Hitler, all this might have been avoided."

This naive in the service of endless accommodationism recalls also the flawed foreign policy of the post-Vietnam Democratic left. It lost the day — it lost the country — to Ronald Reagan and a muscular foreign policy that in the end won the Cold War.

Vietnam cost the Democrats 40 years in the foreign policy wilderness.

Anti-Iraq sentiment gave the anti-war Democrats a good night on Tuesday, and may yet give them a good year or two. But beyond that, it will be desolation.

Idaho has greater icons than a falcon

Great letter, Margaret! We are equally on the same page. A falcon on our state's new quarter? Is anyone as disappointed and disgusted as I am that such a possibility could happen? If a bird was to be put on the new Idaho quarter, why not the Mountain Bluebird or an eagle? Do we have to have a falcon (which looks like a pigeon to me) to promote jobs Boise? Everybody knows about Boise and that it is our capital. Aren't we supposed to be promoting significant items, features, scenic and recreational areas to invite visitors to our state? A falcon doesn't cut it in my opinion. What about the potato? Some of the state symbols are white pine, syring, cutthroat trout, appaloosa horse, Hagerman horse (fossil), the garnet, huckleberry and others. Did you know there are 25 parks in Idaho? Some of my suggestions are (besides those mentioned above) are farming, ranching, fishing, hunting, hiking, skiing, golfing, Idaho sheep, other wildlife, Sun Valley, McCall, Shoshone Falls, Snake River Canyon, Lewis and Clark trail, Redfish Lake, Lake Pend Oreille, Priest Lake, Salmon and Salmon River Basin, Hell's Canyon, Craters of the Moon, white river rafting, Niagara Springs, City of Rocks, Indian heritage locations and so many other, significant scenic, recreational or other features in our state of Idaho. If we are going to promote our state, the above and many other items would be more appropriate than a falcon! How many folks would travel here to see falcons when we have a diversity of wonderful things to see and do and remember? Let's show it off! We are so blessed to live in Idaho, so let's proudly promote the whole state instead of just one area — this is my opinion. What do you think, folks? ERMA LEE GOOCH Jerome

Are we ready for the next oil shock?

Could a mere 4 percent shortfall in daily oil supply propel the price of a barrel to more than $120 in a matter of days? That's what some oil market experts are saying, and if they're correct, we face the very real possibility of an oil shock wave that could send our economy reeling. Such a rapid rise in fuel costs would have profound effects that could severely threaten the foundation of America's economic prosperity.

The global oil trends now at work — rising consumption, reduced spare production capacity and high levels of instability in key oil-producing countries — all increase the likelihood of a supply shock. But unfortunately energy debates in this country often suggest a profound misunderstanding of these international economic dynamics. Calls for "energy independence" notwithstanding, oil is a fungible global commodity, which means that events affecting supply or demand elsewhere will affect oil consumers everywhere. A country's exposure to world price shocks is thus a function of the amount of oil it consumes and is not significantly affected by the ratio of domestic to imported petroleum.

FREDERICK W. SMITH AND P.X. KELLEY

The magnitude of our dependence on oil puts stress on our military, strengthens our strategic adversaries and undermines our efforts to support democratic allies. Each year the United States expends enormous military resources protecting the chronically vulnerable oil production and distribution network while also preparing to guarantee international access to key oil-producing regions. The erosion of forces and dollars diminishes the military's capability for dealing with the war on terrorism and other defense priorities.

Considering the potentially devastating impact of an oil crisis, the time has come for new voices, especially those of business leaders and retired national security officials, to join the call for meaningful government action to reduce projected U.S. oil consumption. Our respective personal experiences — running a global transportation and logistics company and spearheading the establishment of an independent U.S. Central Command in the Middle East — convince us that America's extreme dependence on oil is an unacceptable threat to national security and prosperity.

During the coming months, we will be co-chairing the Energy Security Leadership Council, a new and intensive effort by business executives and retired military officers to advance a national energy strategy for reducing U.S. oil dependence.

Although drawn from very different backgrounds, the members of the council are united in the belief that a fundamental shift in energy policy can prevent an unprecedented economic and national security calamity.

FUNGAL TOE NAILS

Question: My husband's toenails have gotten very yellow and thick. He's tried all sorts of over-the-counter treatments, but nothing is working. I'm worried about catching something from him. What should I do?

Answer: Fungal nail infections are very common. They can be contagious, but transfer from person to person is rare. They can cause nail discoloration, thickening, pain or even nail deformities like ingrown nails. They can also cause more severe problems when combined with other health problems like diabetes.

Treatments include doing nothing, aggressive trimming, applying medicine to the nails, or taking prescription pills. Contact your foot specialist if you have additional questions or need help. If you'd like to write to me with questions, please send correspondence to PO Box 2925, Twin Falls, ID 83303.

The morning after the morning after

Whenever war there are two days to keep in mind when the guns fall silent: the morning after and the morning after the morning after. America, Israel and all those who want to see Lebanon's democracy revived need to keep their eyes focused on the morning after the morning after.

THOMAS FRIEDMAN

Here's why. The only way that the fighting in south Lebanon will be brought to a close is if all the parties accept a cease-fire and the composition of a redeployed international peacekeeping force, led by France, along the Israel-Lebanon border — supplanting Hezbollah.

The morning after that cease-fire goes into effect, everyone knows what will happen: Hezbollah's leader, Hassan Nasrallah — no matter how battered his forces and how much damage his reckless war has visited on Lebanon — will crawl out of his bunker and declare a "great victory." Hezbollah, he will say, fought the Israeli army to a standstill inside Lebanon and raised rockets on northern Israel. Meanwhile, military analysts everywhere will write that Israel has "lost its deterrence" vis-a-vis Arab forces, and blah, blah, blah.

Sory, been there, and that's not the way it matters in war, alas, is the balance of destruction on the ground and the political weight it exerts over time. On the morning after the morning after, Lebanese war refugees, who had real jobs and homes, will start streaming back by the hundreds of thousands, many of them Shiites. Tragically, they will find their homes or businesses badly damaged or obliterated. Yes, they will curse Israel. But they and other Arabs will also start asking Nasrallah publicly what many are already asking privately.

"What was this war all about? What did we get from this and at what price?" Israel has some roots to repair and some dead to bury. But it will be fully intact, and it will recover quickly. We Lebanese have been set back by a decade. Our economy and our democracy in ruins, like our homes. For what? For a one-week boost in Arab honor? So that Iran could distract the world's attention from its nuclear program? You did all this for us for another country?

As Michael Young, opinion editor of The Beirut Daily Star, put it in an article in Slate: "Hezbollah's test will be to rapidly alleviate the suffering in its own command and, therefore, avoid losing its base. The party still has substantial backing among its coreligionists, and it is not about to see this disappear. But soon the fate of the hundreds of thousands of Shiites now living in schools, tent cities, and even public parks will be an overriding concern for Nasrallah. Many have fled areas partly or wholly destroyed, to which they might not return for months or years. Hezbollah will have to provide funding for reconstruction and rehabilitation that is likely to run into the billions of dollars. The party will have a monumental task to revive not only Shiite morale but confidence that Hezbollah can take care of its own. Even the party's most optimistic interpretation of the current war — that it is a heroic achievement — will not spare it having to uptoe very carefully through Shiite trauma.

Moreover, if and when a French-led international force is placed along the Israel-Lebanon border, it will be a big loss for Hezboallah. The Shiite militia will no longer be able to directly touch Israel and start a war for Iran or Syria whenever it chooses. And, if Hezbollah tried to lob missiles over the peacekeeping zone, or penetrate it, it would clash with forces from France, Italy and Turkey, the likely peacekeepers. That means Hezboallah, Iran and Syria would not be able to hurt Israel without also hurting their own relations with the European Union.

Israel needs to keep its eyes on the prize. It's already inflicted enormous damage on Hezboallah and its community, but Nasrallah will only have to pay the full price for inviting all that destruction once the guns fall silent on the morning after the morning after.

So let's get there as soon as possible. That will deter him. What would deter him even more, though, would be if the U.N. would go ahead and impose sanctions on Iran for its illicit nuclear bomb program. After all, it was Iran, Nasrallah's master, that ordered up this war to distract the U.N. from doing just that. It would be nice to say to Iran: You ravaged Hezboallah for nothing.

Beyond those two limited objectives, there's no storybook ending for Israel in Lebanon, and it shouldn't throw more good lives after some elusive knockout blow. It's just not that kind of neighborhood. As they say in the movies, "Forget it, Jake. It's Chinatown."

Children's Feet

HEEL PAIN

Sever's Disease or Calcaneal Apophysitis is a heel condition that affects children. The heel is an area that is subject to stress from activity during periods of growth. Children are at risk between ages 8 to 18. Calcaneal Apophysitis appears commonly as a child starts a new sports season. The child may walk with a limp, and the child's heel may hurt if you squeeze both sides toward the back of the heel. The Achilles tendon may be tight and exercise aggravates the problem.

Treatment consists of reducing activity, using a heel lift, heel cups, or arch supports, applying an ice bath, avoiding going barefoot and wearing sandals, and taking Tylenol or Ibuprofen.

If the problem persists, contact your doctor for an appointment.

AROUND THE WORLD

TERROR PLOT

Explosive investigation focuses on two brothers

LONDON — The investigation into a plot to blow up jetliners over the Atlantic zeroed in Saturday on brothers arrested in Pakistan and Britain, one named as a key al-Qaida suspect who left the family's home in England years ago and the other described as gentle and polite.

British authorities, meanwhile, warned against complacency, saying the detention of several suspects had not eliminated the danger.

The terror threat level in Britain remained "critical" — its highest designation — and delays, flight cancellations and intense security continued to greet travelers at London airports.

"No one should be under any illusion that the threat ended with the recent arrests. It didn't," Home Secretary John Reid told police chiefs at a breakfast meeting. "All of us know that this investigation hasn't ended."

CUBA

Communist paper says Castro walking, talking

HAVANA — Fidel Castro is strutting up, walking and even working a bit on the eve of his 80th birthday, Cuba's official Communist Party newspaper said Saturday. It was the most optimistic report yet since intestinal surgery forced the Cuban leader to step aside as president.

The article in the Granma newspaper, though brief and cryptic — was the most detailed statement Cuba's government has issued since Castro announced July 31 that he was temporarily ceding his powers to his younger brother Raul, No. 2 in the government.

Fidel Castro said his condition during his recovery would be treated as a "state secret," so as not to give any advantage to his enemies in the United States.

"Firm Like a Caguairan," the Granma headline read, comparing Castro to a hardwood tropical tree native to eastern Cuba. "A friend tells us that just a few hours ago, upon visiting the Comandante who was briefly dispatching some business, he witnessed some good news that he enthusiastically summed up in one sentence: 'The Caguairan has risen,'" the paper said in a three-paragraph report.

IRAQ

Two U.S. soldiers among nearly 50 deaths in Iraq

BAGHDAD, Iraq — Police found a dozen bodies trapped in a grate in the Tigris River, and a roadside bomb killed two U.S. soldiers on a foot patrol south of Baghdad Saturday as nearly 50 violent deaths were reported across Iraq.

Prime Minister Nouri al-Maliki — banned — a Kurdish extremist party from operating in Baghdad in a move seen largely as a gesture to Turkey, which had threatened to send troops across the border to destroy the group's bases in northern Iraq.

Also Saturday, a state commission said nearly 30 top officials of the past two governments have been ordered to appear in court to answer allegations of corruption. They include former ministers of defense, labor and electricity, the commission said.

The 12 bodies were found in Suwayrah, 25 miles south of Baghdad, at one of a series of metal grates fixed in the river to block debris, Mamoun al-Rubaiie of the Kut city morgue said.

ISRAEL

Israelis in fierce fight despite cease-fire vote

BEIRUT, Lebanon — More Israeli tanks and soldiers surged into southern Lebanon on Saturday, reaching the Litani River and engaging in some of the heaviest ground combat of the monthlong war just hours after the U.N. Security Council adopted a cease-fire plan.

The leader of the Islamic militant group Hezbollah grudgingly joined Lebanon's government in accepting the U.N. resolution but vowed to keep fighting until Israeli troops leave and hand over territory to a muscular U.N. peacekeeping force intended to separate the antagonists.

Israel also signaled its intention to approve the plan, at a Cabinet meeting Sunday, and a senior official predicted fighting would stop Monday morning, but there was no slowing in the bloodshed.

Boise State looks to bounce back from rare four-loss season and grab a fifth straight WAC title in the process

The Associated Press

A 9-4 record, a share of a fourth straight Western Athletic Conference title and a sixth bowl game in seven years.

Those are accomplishments usually considered a success. That 2005 season for Boise State was viewed with frustration, a clear sign of how far the Broncos progressed under former coach Dan Hawkins.

"When you lose three games in the past three years and then lose more than that in one season, people don't like what's going on," new coach Chris Petersen said. "What we had done in the previous three years was very rare. You need a lot of things to go the right way. People got used to that and thought that was the norm. That's not the norm. That's extremely abnormal."

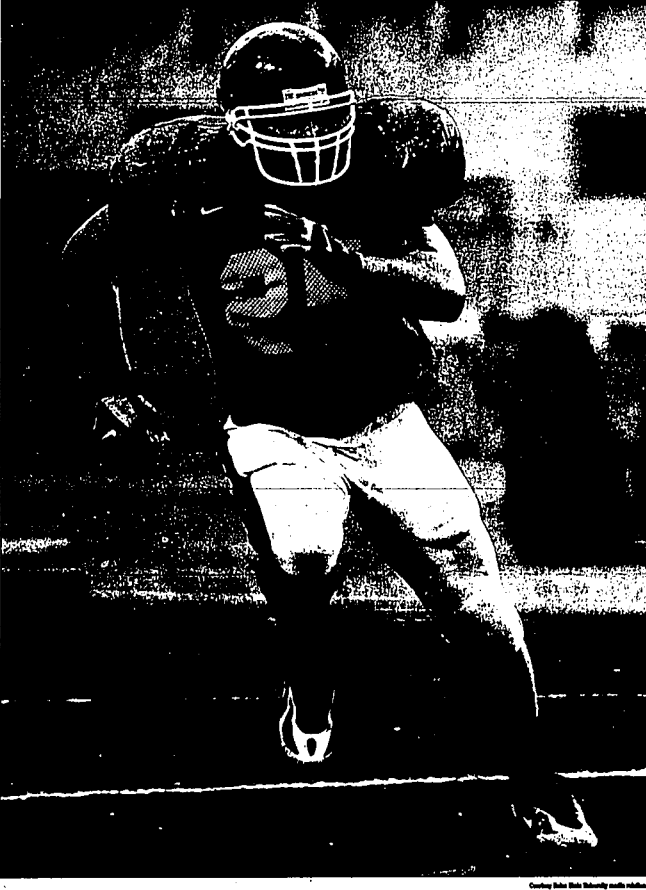

But those are the expectations that greet Petersen, who is a head coach for the first time since leading the freshman team at UC Davis in the 1980s. He replaced Hawkins, who left for Colorado after last season, having built the Broncos into a WAC powerhouse.

With a schedule that doesn't include a game as difficult as last year's season opener at Georgia and new rules making it easier for teams like Boise State to play in a Bowl Championship Series game, expectations are high in the land of blue.

"For us to do something like that, we would have to go undefeated," linebacker Corey Hall said. "That's one of our goals this year. We have tough teams on our schedule, but no Georgia. There are no huge dragons to slay. This is the year we might have the chance to go undefeated."

There are plenty of contenders in the WAC who want to make sure that doesn't happen. Fresno State finally beat the Broncos last season, only to lose its last four games and miss out on a share of the conference title.

Nevada, which shared last year's title with Boise State, has star quarterback Jeff Rowe back and Hawaii also returns a big-play quarterback in Colt Brennan. There is even optimism at Idaho, which brought Dennis Erickson and the two championship rings he Glenns Ferry High School graduate Corey Hall, now a senior linebacker at Boise State University, will look to lead the Broncos to an undefeated season and a berth in a Bowl Championship Series game this fall.

Pittsburgh Steelers quarterback Ben Roethlisberger applauds during the Steelers' preseason NFL football game against the Arizona Cardinals at Cardinals Stadium Saturday in Glendale, Ariz.

Big Ben returns

The Associated Press

GLENDALE, Ariz. — Ben Roethlisberger didn't mind that his appearance at the grand opening of the extravagant new home of the Arizona Cardinals was as brief as it was fruitless.

After what the Pittsburgh Steelers quarterback has been through, simply taking the field at all was enough.

"I kind of hit me right before the kickoff," Roethlisberger said. "To sit here and say thank you that I'm able to be out here, to put on the jersey, to be in front of people and playing again two months to the day after a pretty bad accident."

Roethlisberger played one series that ended in a missed field goal.

Then his Arizona counterpart Kurt Warner took over, mistiming the play with a touchdown in the Cardinals' first drive, following it with another in a 21-13 preseason victory over the Super Bowl champs on Saturday.

A capacity crowd of 63,400 attended the unveiling of the $455 million stadium in western suburb Phoenix.

"It's an awesome stadium," Roethlisberger said.

College hall enshrines 20

The Associated Press

SOUTH BEND, Ind. — College seems like a blur to Jerry Rice. "It went by so fast. You're so focused," Rice said Saturday. "I wish I could go back and do it all over again."

That was a common feeling among the 20 men being enshrined Saturday into the College Football Hall of Fame. Former Alabama linebacker Cornelius Bennett, former Pittsburgh offensive tackle Mark May and Oklahoma running back Eric Decker among others said they would love to live those days again.

Even fullback Roosevelt Leaks, who faced some obstacles in becoming the first black All-America football player at Texas, said he would gladly do it again, even if it might have been a little more difficult for him.

"We all travel different roads. Whether it was a tougher road or not, there are always obstacles on the road. You keep moving forward," he said. "The things that deter you, they usually make you better."

May, now a college football analyst for ESPN, said the thing he remembers best from college is the friendships.

The camaraderie you build with your teammates was special. The relationships you build then stick with you the rest of your life," he said.

Others being inducted into the hall Saturday included Southern California tailback Danny Davis, Heisman Trophy-winning quarterback John Huarte of Notre Dame, Stanford defensive tackle Paul Virginia and Michigan defensive back Tom Curtis, along with former Auburn coach Pat Dye and former West Virginia coach Don Nehler.

WAC capsules: Broncos picked first once again

A capsule look at the teams in predicted order of finish:

BOISE STATE Broncos

Broncos are counting on steady play from QB Jared Zabransky, who threw 16 INTs last season. ... RB Ian Johnson (5.6 ypc) and a line anchored by Ryan Clady and Ted Miller should ease the burden on Zabransky. ... Ed Hall and Colt Brennan anchor the defense. ... Schedule is easier this season, with tougher nonconference games coming at home against Oregon State and at Utah. Fresno State and Hawaii come to Boise.

FRESNO STATE Bulldogs

Need to replace four-year starting QB Paul Pirmajer and the team's top two rushers — Vondell Mattis and Bryson Sumlin. ... Tom Brandstater and Sean Norton will battle for the QB role. They will have a talented pair of WRs in Paul Williams and Joe Fernandez to ease the transition. ... A difficult schedule as always, with a season opener against Nevada followed by a home game with Oregon and a trip to Washington. Bulldogs also travel to LSU on Oct. 21 and Boise State on Nov. 1.

HAWAII Warriors

Bennett (4,301 yards, 35 TDs) returns to lead the dangerous run-and-shoot offense that averaged 30.7 ppg last season. ... WRs Ryan Grice-Mullen and Davone Bess combined for 26 TDs as freshmen. ... Defensive coordinator Jerry Garvin looks for more success in his second season with the Warriors. ... Hawaii has eight home games, including Purvis and Oregon State and the season, but must travel to Alabama, Boise State and Fresno State.

LA. TECH Bulldogs

Coach Jack Chickell got a two-year contract extension after leading the Bulldogs to a seven-win season.

capped with a 40-28 victory at Fresno State. ... QB situation is unsettled. Zac Champion, who has thrown eight passes in two years, will compete with redshirt freshman Michael Mosley and JC transfer Joe Danne for the starting job. ... Defensive coordinator Randy Bates left last month for a job at Northwestern. ... Nonconference schedule features road games at Nebraska, Texas A&M and Clemson, and the Bulldogs also must travel to Boise State.

SAN JOSE ST. Spartans

I-HWAC RB Yonius Davis (6.7 ypc) leads an offense that returns four starters from the offensive line. ... QB Adam Tatealis struggled last season with 10 INTs and will compete with JC transfer Sean Flynn for the starting job. ... Only two starters return on defense. ... After opening the season at Washington, the Spartans have four straight home games, including one against Stanford.

IDAHO Vandals

Erickson will bring the wide-open passing game he used with success at Miami, giving QB Steven Wichman (2,746 yards, 15 TDs) plenty of chances to throw. ... RB Jason Elrod returned after missing most of last season with a broken collarbone to boost a running game that averaged 2.5 ypc. ... Schedule is brutal with road games at Michigan State, Washington State, Oregon State in the nonconference season.

NEW MEXICO ST. Aggies

QB Chase Holbrook is eligible after sitting out a year when he followed JC alum from Southeastern Louisiana to New Mexico State. ... Holbrook's top target could be Miami transfer Aikeem Jolia. ... Lots of improvement needed for team that didn't win a game last year.

UTAH STATE Aggies

JC transfer RB Marcus Cross will try to spark an offense that averaged just 18.9 ppg. ... QB Leon Jackson threw for 2,547 yards and ran for 328 in his first season as a starter but needs to show more consistency this year. ... After losing six of seven to end last season, the Aggies open the year with three out of four on the road, including trips to Arkansas and BYU.

Culpepper's Dolphin debut brief

MIAMI (AP) — The only his Daunte Culpepper took a brief Miami Dolphins debut were slaps on the back when he came out of the game.

Culpepper settled for the 2-yard completion, while the Jacksonville Jaguars completed four touchdown passes of 50 yards or more to beat Miami 31-26 in the exhibition opener for both teams Saturday night.

Backup David Garrard connected on scores of 62 and 55 yards for the Jaguars, whose three quarterbacks totaled 321 yards passing.

Culpepper tested his surgically repaired right arm during the series, throwing two passes and directing his new team to a field goal. Miami's other new quarterback, Joey Harrington, completed his first pass to Randy McMichael for an 18-yard touchdown.

Harrington later fumbled twice, following a snap that the Jaguars' Tony Williams recovered to set up a field goal.

"We did some good things, and we did some first-game things," Harrington said.

Jacksonville's first-team offense sputtered until Miami began substituting on defense. The Jaguars' Leftwich, playing for the first time since a broken ankle sidelined him for the final five games last season, threw a 50-yard touchdown pass to Matt Jones. Chad Owens, battling for a roster spot with the Jaguars, beat the Dolphins deep to catch a 62-yard touchdown pass. Second-round draft pick James Drew caught a short pass from Garrard and weaved through the secondary to complete a 55-yard TD.

Jacksonville's final score came on a 51-yard pass from Quinn Gray to George Weighster.

Miami's first-round pick, safety Jason Allen, was on the field for Jacksonville's first three touchdown completions. He played 45 minutes after ending a 10-day holdout.

Miami Dolphins tight end Randy McMichael celebrates his touchdown catch during the first quarter against the Jacksonville Jaguars on Saturday at Dolphin Stadium in Miami.

Saints 19, Titans 16

NASHVILLE, Tenn. — Reggie Bush looked every bit as good in the NFL as he did at Southern California.

Vince Young is a fan favorite, but Bush needs to learn when to throw the ball away.

Bush needed all of two carries to show why New Orleans took him with the second pick overall. Stopped behind the line while going to his left, the Heisman trophy winner hoisted out, turned right and zoomed past two Titans up the sideline for 44 yards to the Tennessee 24. He finished with 59 yards on six carries.

Young, the No. 3 pick overall, showed off his strong arm by throwing a pass 50 yards in the air into the hands of Roydell Williams — who couldn't hold on. He was 4-of-11 for 55 yards and ran four times for 28 yards.

The star out of Texas also failed to throw away the ball as he scrambled right looking for a receiver and ran out of bounds for a 6-yard loss in the fourth quarter for one of two sacks. He then scared the fans still left after Saints end Javon Norton yanked him down from behind.

Young walked gingerly to the bench and was examined by a team doctor. He watched the rest of the game from the bench.

Texans 24, Chiefs 14

HOUSTON — Mario Williams' NFL career got off to a quiet start.

The Houston Texans No. 1 draft pick assisted on one tackle in a quarter of play in Houston's win over the Kansas City Chiefs.

Williams was shuffled around the defensive line, starting at left end and playing both right end and left tackle. But he didn't manage to get much done in very limited action, and was stood up on a couple of plays, looking tentative at times.

Late in the first, he joined second-round pick DeFeco Ryans to stop Larry Johnson for a 3-yard gain.

In his 11 plays, Williams mostly lined up against Chiefs left tackle Kyle Turley, who was playing in first game since 2003 because of back problems. Turley was thrust into the starting lineup when 11-time Pro Bowler Willie Holt unexpectedly retired the night before training camp.

Larry Johnson had seven carries for 30 yards with no scores for Kansas City in its first game under coach Herm Edwards. Dee Brown added 23 yards on five carries and had a 12-yard touchdown run in the second quarter.

Trent Green was 5-of-6 for 34 yards before leaving after the first quarter.

Panthers 14, Bills 13

CHARLOTTE, N.C. — Keshawn Johnson showed little time showing the Carolina Panthers what life will be like with more receiving options than Steve Smith.

Johnson, in his first game with Carolina, caught an 18-yard pass from Jake Delhomme on the first play from scrimmage, the beginning of a game-opening touchdown drive on the way to a victory over Buffalo.

Delhomme hit Johnson twice for 27 yards on the opening series, then threw a 14-yard touchdown pass to Drew Carter as Smith watched from the sideline with a strained left hamstring.

Delhomme, who completed 5 of 6 passes for 64 yards before giving way to Chris Weinke, showed the Panthers could move the ball without Smith.

Last season that wasn't the case.

Riders come out of the shade on a relatively flat section of the climb up Mt. Harrison during Saturday's Mt. Harrison Hill Climb. Thirty-four riders tackled the 17-mile course, which begins in Albion and climbs about 4,500 feet in elevation to the lookout tower atop the 9,265-foot mountain.

No mercy Twin Falls man wins brutal Mt. Harrison Hill Climb

By Chip Thompson
For The Times-News

ALBION — A lot of things were said as riders crossed the finish line of the fifth Annual Mt. Harrison Hill Climb Saturday.

"Oh man."

"Wow."

"I can't believe it."

But the one phrase that rang out across the parking lot atop the nearly 10,000-foot mountain, and the one that said the most, was when second-place finisher Bill Nurge, of Ketchum, called out to first-time winner, Rick Greenwald of Twin Falls.

"You're one tough $**%&!, Nurge yelled, gasping for air.

Nurge and Greenwald rode together, and a good distance in front of the remaining 32 riders, most of the 17-mile race from Albion to the lookout tower atop Mt. Harrison. With a few kilometers to go to the top, on what most riders said was the toughest part of the course, Greenwald made a move and Nurge said he just couldn't hold on.

This was Greenwald's second Mt. Harrison Hill Climb — he took first in the Men's B (non-pro) division last year. He finished in 1 hour 17 minutes, about 4 minutes off the 2005 winning time of mountain bike pro Cody Peterson, who did not enter the race this year.

"It feels good," Greenwald said after he caught his breath.

"My lungs are burning a little but my legs are still strong."

The way the race unfolded could have played a part in the strong showing made by Greenwald and Nurge.

"Last year the group broke up on the highway (Idaho 77)." The way the race unfolded could have played a part in the strong showing made by Greenwald and Nurge.

The Mt. Harrison race is the first, and toughest, of a three-part series that includes hill climbs at Old Horseshoe Bend in Boise Aug. 20, and Bogus Basin Sept. 9.

Greenwald, who turns 41 in two weeks, said he plans to compete in the Bogus Basin race but has a conflict for the Boise race.

Josh Lloyd, 18, of Heyburn finished in 1 hour 32 minutes. No other Magic Valley riders were identified.

Johnson grabs third-round lead at International; Lehman looming

CASTLE ROCK, Colo. (AP) — Zach Johnson kept his head up and waited for things to get better, as he knew they would.

Even though he missed four makeable birdie putts and bogeyed one of the five holes he had to play at dawn Saturday to complete his rain-delayed second round, Johnson had an inkling this was going to be his day at the International.

Sure enough, he birdied five holes and eagled another for a 15-point third round and the 54-hole lead at golf's most important event, one which features two cuts and uses the modified Stableford scoring system.

"I had a makeable birdie putt on 5, 6, 7 and 8 and then I actually had a bogey on 9," Johnson said. "It was unfortunate, I hit one in the water on 9, but at the same time, I made a pretty good save."

And the optimistic 30-year-old player went to the clubhouse at Castle Pines feeling good about his game instead of lamenting his lost opportunities.

"That positive attitude paid off for Johnson, whose 27 points heading into Sunday are one more than Steve Flesch and two more than Stewart Cink and Ian Leggatt. Tom Lehman is three points behind in fifth place.

But this isn't like stroke play. Big changes are in the norm at the International, the only stop by the PGA Tour that uses the special scoring system that awards five points for eagles; two for birdies, nothing for pars and deducts one for bogeys and three for double-bogeys or worse.

So, mathematically, just about all of the 33 remaining golfers have a shot at the $390,000 winner's check.

"The point system kind of keeps real going into the last day," said Flesch, who has yet to eagle and is kicking himself for not playing more aggressively before Round 3 on the lush 7,619-yard layout.

Johnson, 30, who won the 2004 BellSouth Classic in his first year on the tour, was among half the field of 140 golfers who had to return to Castle Pines at dawn to complete the second round. Play was delayed more than 3 1/2 hours by a thunderstorm Friday afternoon that dumped more than a half inch of rain on the majestic mountain course.

Defending champion Meena Lee was second after a 66, the best round of the day in warm, calm conditions on the tree-lined course. Lee Young Lee (71) was another stroke back at 8 under, and Pat Hurst (67) followed at 6 under.

Sorenstam, Ochoa share lead at Scandinavian TPC STOCKHOLM, Sweden — Annika Sorenstam and Lorena Ochoa shot 4-under par 69s to share the third-round lead.

They were at 13-under 206 heading into the final round at the Bro-Balsu course, where Sorenstam began playing golf at age 12. Sorenstam eagled the first hole, a long par-5, and led for most of the day. She had five birdies and three bogeys.

Ochoa had four birdies in her bogey-free round. Suzann Pettersson, who shot a 68 with five birdies and no bogeys, trailed the leaders by two strokes.

carried at Miami back to Moscow to try to turn around the Vandals.

"The bottom line is they brought me in to win football games," Erickson said. "If I don't, I'll probably be in Coeur d'Alene on the lake with my wife."

The WAC has become a league rich in coaching pedigree, headed by Erickson.

Hawaii's June Jones coached in the NFL with Atlanta and San Diego, Hall of Famer Chris Ault is in his third stint at Nevada, San Jose State's Dick Tomney is the winningest coach at Hawaii and Arizona, and New Mexico State's Hal Mumme took SEC also-ran Kentucky to two bowl games.

"This league is as well coached as any league in the country," Fresno State's Pat Hill, who has 72 wins in nine years, worked under Bill Belichick in the NFL and interviewed for the Oakland Raiders' head coaching job.

"You have Chris Ault who's a college Hall of Fame coach. You have Dennis Erickson, June Jones. You've got Dick Tomney who is the winningest coach at two schools. Just those four right off the bat are highly competitive coaches who have been in a lot of games at a lot of different levels."

Dodgers' Penny first to 13 wins

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Brad Penny became the NL's first 13-game winner. Wilson Betemit hit a tiebreaking two-run homer, and the streaking Los Angeles Dodgers beat the San Francisco Giants 6-5 Saturday.

Rookie James Loney tripled and scored twice for the NL West-leading Dodgers, who have won 14 of 15 after a 1-13 slide coming out of the All-Star break.

Moises Alou and Omar Vizquel each had two runs for San Francisco, which has lost four straight. The last-place Giants are 6½ games behind Los Angeles.

Penny (13-5) won his third straight start, allowing two runs, three earned and seven hits over six innings. The right-hander struck out seven and did not walk a batter for the second consecutive outing.

BoSox best Baltimore in extra innings

BOSTON (AP) — Manny Ramirez singled in the 10th inning and left fielder Brandon Fahey run past it for an error that allowed the winning run to score, giving the Boston Red Sox a victory over the Baltimore Orioles on Saturday.

Ramirez lined one between short and third to extend his hitting streak to 27 games — the longest active streak in the majors.

High-lander Gabe Kapler held up at third until Fahey, who also got thrown out at third trying to stretch a double in the ninth, slubbed it for his second error of the game; Kapler scored easily.

Jonathan Papelbon (4-2) allowed one hit in two innings for the win. Bruce Chen (0-7) started the 10th and walked Mark Loreta and David Ortiz before Ramirez, his hitting streak in jeopardy, ended it.

White Sox 4, Tigers 3

CHICAGO — Shortstop Carlos Guillen and third baseman Brandon Inge committed costly errors, and the White Sox rallied past the Tigers 4-3 to move within 6½ games of the AL Central leaders.

The Tigers, who have the best record in the majors, allowed four unearned runs and six season highs with their fourth straight loss. Chicago has won four of five and will try to complete a sweep Sunday when Freddy Garcia opposes Zach Miner.

After tying with three unearned runs in the fifth, the White Sox went ahead 4-3 in the seventh, thanks to Inge's throwing error and Sandy Alomar's sacrifice fly.

Yankees 5, Angels 2

NEW YORK — Jaret Wright won his third straight start, riding second-inning home runs by Robinson Cano and Johnny Damon in the New York Yankees' win over the Los Angeles Angels.

Boston Red Sox batter Manny Ramirez follows through on his single during the 10th inning of Boston's 8-7 win over the Baltimore Orioles Saturday at Fenway Park.

of the season as the Blue Jays' pitchers continued to stifle the Twins' offense. In the first three games of the four-game series, Toronto has held Minnesota to one run and 16 hits.

The Twins grounded into five double plays to tie a club record.

CLEVELAND — Travis Hafner doubled home the go-ahead run in the eighth inning, giving him 100 RBIs this season and lifting the Cleveland Indians over the Kansas City Royals for a sweep of their day-night doubleheader.

by second baseman Mark Grudzielanek. Hafner's hit gave him 100 RBIs for the third straight year.

Rangers 5, Mariners 4
ARLINGTON, Texas — Edinson Volquez pitched seven shutout innings to earn his first career win, Gary Matthews Jr. and Gerald Laird homered and the Rangers held off the Mariners Saturday night to win their fourth straight game.

Volquez (1-1) allowed four hits and struck out three in his second start of the season and the fifth of his career. He capped his 104-pitch outing by striking out Adam Jones and Ichiro Suzuki to end the seventh inning before Joaquin Benoit relieved him to start the eighth.

The Rangers led 5-0 at that point before the Mariners rallied.

Prior back on DL

Cubs hurler could be done for the year

DENVER (AP) — The Chicago Cubs placed Mark Prior on the 15-day disabled list with a strained right shoulder tendonitis, a move that could mean an end to the right-hander's season.

Prior has been on the DL eight times in his four-year career in the majors, including three this season. The latest trip comes after he allowed five earned runs in three innings in an 8-6 loss to Milwaukee on Thursday.

Prior didn't feel anything wrong with the shoulder, but a loss in velocity in the third inning led the team to send him back to Chicago for an MRI on Friday, which showed rotator cuff tendonitis.

The Cubs want Prior to rest for three weeks before returning again, which could mean the end of his season if he doesn't have time to make enough rehab starts before rejoining the Cubs.

the end of the three weeks, hopefully, we're going to (start) throwing and we'll go from there — I haven't really looked at the calendar. Then it would take 10 days of bullpen to get going again. The likelihood of him returning this year is questionable."

Prior began the season on the DL with a sore shoulder and went back on it in July with a strained oblique muscle. He's made nine starts, going 1-6 with a 7.21 ERA, his only win coming against Pittsburgh on Aug. 5, when he allowed five hits and two runs in 5-2-3 innings.

"I'm more disappointed for him," Cubs manager Dusty Baker said. "It's been a tough couple of years here, on and off the DL. He's not very happy about it."

The Cubs started the season with what was supposed to be a strong pitching staff with a rotation that included Prior, Kerry Wood, Greg Maddux and Carlos Zambrano. But Prior has had trouble staying healthy all season, Wood has been on the DL since June with a partially torn rotator cuff — he opted against surgery last week — and Maddux was traded to the Dodgers.

Zambrano is 12-5, though he's lost his last two starts after going 9-0 in June and July.

Sharapova falls

CARSON, Calif. (AP) — Maria Sharapova's eight-match winning streak came to a crashing halt in the JPMorgan Chase Open on Saturday, felled by her own listless play and 46 errors in a 7-5, 6-2 loss to Elena Dementieva in an all-Russian semifinal.
 Sharapova hadn't lost so much as a set during her streak, which included the Acua Classic title last week in Carlsbad. But she did little right against Dementieva, the No. 3 seed who reached the final here for the first time in five tries.
 "I've played nine matches in the last 13 days. That pretty much sums it up," Sharapova said.
 Serena Williams, unseeded and currently ranked 110th in the world, lost to 16th-seeded Jelena Jankovic of Serbia and Montenegro 6-4, 6-3 in an evening semifinal at Home Depot Center.

 Gasquet defeated Andy Murray 6-2, 7-5 to become the first unseeded finalist at the tournament in three years. He will attempt to become the first Frenchman to win the tournament that began in 1881.
 The 20-year-old Gasquet beat Federer in their first clash last year in Monte Carlo, but he has lost to the Swiss star four times since, including this year at Indian Wells.

Looking for a retirement loop hole

Where do you wear your belt, stranger? Among 77 million baby boomers — 37 million of them, like me, male — it's a pertinent question. Craig Ferguson, host of CBS' "Late, Late Show," pointed out recently that most of us will have to choose sooner or later between becoming a California belt-wearer or a Florida belt-wearer.

DON'T ASK ME
Steve Crump

Florida belt-wearers, of course, are gentlemen of a certain age who pull their trousers up under their armpits and complain about the government full time. But the britches on a Texas belt-wearer ride considerably lower, both because they're weighed down by a 12-pound belt buckle and because that belt has to wrap itself about a belly that's 50 inches around. We Idahoans, of course, are a lot closer to Texas than to Florida — largely because barbecue is more plentiful hereabouts than mangos, I suppose. But what happens when a Texas belt-wearer loses weight?

Suspenders, of course — and we all know that's not a happy prospect. Worse, how does a skinny fella pull off wearing a heavy belt buckle? They're kind of front-heavy, and you're always sort of waiting for the wearer to topple over whenever he lets go of the door handle of his F-150.

We don't see enough Florida belt-wearers in these parts to really understand what happens when they get weight, but something's gotta give. These are probably the guys who end up wearing sweat pants to their granddaughters' weddings.

There was a time when you could make a strong case for Idaho belt-wearers, but we've — alas — gone out of fashion. Idaho belt-wearers, of course, weren't belt-wearers at all because their belts don't have belts. If your pants began to sag, you just cinched up your shoulder straps a mile.

My dad's friend Mack kept tugging on his straps until the top of the overalls rubbed against his chin.

And since bill overalls aren't exactly tailored, that meant that the cuffs of his pants were up over his calves. No matter: They were functional, and nobody laughed when he waddled into the Chat 'n Chew Cafe in Malad.

But there were occasions, of course, when even an Idaho belt-wearer had to gussy up — you wouldn't wear overalls to your own funeral — and that was always a problem.

We all thought we had it solved back in the 1960s when talk show host Johnny Carson popularized Sans-a-Belt slacks — bell-less polyester trousers with a broad elastic band on the inside of the waistband that, theoretically, kept your pants from falling down.

Did wonders for Johnny and his size 34 waist. But for guys like Mack who were four feet in circumference, it wasn't so good. Sans-a-Belt made him look like a half-stuffed sausage.

Good thing there's a low-tech solution to every problem. A good pair of men's Red Kap® initial cotton twill overalls — will set you back only about 50 bucks. And you can get them in 200 sizes.

Crossing into history

A crowd watches Saturday morning as a party reenacting the pioneer crossing at Glens Ferry wades through water after making it smoothly to the other side of the Snake River at Three Island Crossing State Park.

Pioneer spirit alive and well at Three Islands State Park

By Will Siles
Times-News writer

GLENS FERRY — For many it began at 10:37 a.m. Saturday, when the silhouette of a horse and rider suddenly appeared high along a ridge on the south bank of the Snake River.

The lone horseman, making a slow trek westward along the historic Oregon Trail, represented many things to the 2,000 or so who made their own pilgrimage to this annual reenactment of 1800s pioneers who crossed wagons and horses at Three Island Crossing.

As fingers and modern-day optics pointed towards the growing train of horses inching towards the Snake River, the crowd realized why they came to this historic state park. It was the second Saturday in August, the day that many come here to remember the pioneer spirit of the Old West and the American Indians that guided them along the way.

It's all about history and how we teach it to future generations. And it's about getting it right today. Thanks to a man named Marv Wootan, Saturday's crossing was like stepping back in time — correctly, no pretending, no make-believe.

"This began to develop in the late 1970s," said Jean Mullen, treasurer of the Three Island Crossing Organization. "And Marv Wootan was definitely a big part of what's here today."

Saturday's crossing was in memory of Wootan, along with his son Wayne Wootan, who also had a big part in the annual Elmore County event. Both father and son died in accidents since last year's crossing. Although many of the young set may not know the event's past, watching local history come alive was well worth a wait in the sun.

Just ask Heather, Betty and Sarah. Not content with reading about it at Mountain View

Junior High, they like seeing history come right at them. And as close to the action as they were Saturday morning, it certainly did. "It's really cool because we get to see what they did," said Heather Chevalier, 14, noting that watching the crossing has a lot more impact than reading about it.

Her sister, Betty, 12, said: "It isn't like anything we learn in books." Their friend and classmate Sarah Smith, 14, was attending the crossing for the first time. When asked if she thought it was dangerous (two horses drowned several years ago), she quickly dismissed any notion of peril. "I ride horses and I think they'll be fine." But trouble can occur, depending on many things.

With many risks prevalent throughout the crossing, the majority of those involved Saturday morning seemed especially grateful for the pioneers and the Shoshone-Plaintes who led them safely across.

And Idaho Power. That's because the safety of crossing the Snake River on horseback and wagon is directly linked to the skill of the rider, a little luck, and the depth and swiftness of the water. Idaho Power has helped us quite a bit," said John Frank, manager of Three Island Crossing State Park. According to Frank, water levels were reduced at Bliss Dam. "It takes 10 to 12 hours to get the water to a safe level, which means we have about a one to one-and-a-half hour window of time to get the crossing completed." Water level is one thing; safety is everything.

The pioneers didn't have Idaho Power, trained rescuers on personal watercraft or hours upon hours of training and safety briefings. Thankfully, Saturday's riders did.

Please see CROSSING, Page C3

People reenacting the historical pioneer crossing at Glens Ferry make their way across the Snake River Saturday during the 21st anniversary of the popular memorial event. The crossing was dedicated to Marv Wootan and his son, Wayne Wootan. Both men died last year.

Castleford resident wants barking stopped

Woman is ready to fight issue on the county level

By Blair Koch
Times-News correspondent

CASTLEFORD — Charlene Reynolds has had it with the dogs next door.

During Wednesday's Castleford City Council meeting she addressed her concerns with barking. And Reynolds said she is ready to fight if the city doesn't do anything about it.

"The noise from across the fence from those six dogs is all day and all night," Reynolds said. "All that I am after is a little peace and quiet."

An attorney has already been contacted on the issue, Reynolds said. "He said I have to go to the meeting and let the public know about the problem," she said. "And if nothing is done then I can go to the county and try and get the dogs removed."

The dogs belong to Councilman Oscar Flores, who said there are only four dogs — three Pomernians and a Chihuahua.

"I am in the process of contacting an attorney myself," Flores said. "After she mentioned poisoning or shooting my dogs I guess I felt a little threatened. I have children at home."

Flores said that his dogs comply with all city ordinances. "The city doesn't have a barking-dog ordinance. They are kept in the fenced yard during the day and never gotten out. We bring them in at night," Flores said.

"Plus all of (Reynolds) neighbors have dogs — the barking could be any of them." Mayor Rita Ruffing said that the city is looking into the exact ordinance and if it can enforce it. "It is not to enforce any of our ordinances without an officer to do it," Ruffing said.

"We are looking into what we can do as a council and city to enforce them without an officer."

Murtaugh faces upgrade on sewer facility

By Julie Pence
Times-News correspondent

MURTAUGH — Twin Falls resident Shannon Shirley figures the 25-minute commute to Jobe in Twin Falls will make sense if the end his wife can buy cheap land in Murtaugh. But when they proposed buying an acre within the city limits, they were given a thumbs down by the Murtaugh

City Council. Before the city can accept any more hook-ups to its sewer, it will have to upgrade its waste-treatment system, Mayor Dee Hunsaker said.

Hunsaker learned last week from Idaho Department of Environmental Quality engineer Greg Misbach that Murtaugh has been exceeding the amount of nitrates allowed to seep into the ground for the past three years. The state allows no more than 100 parts per million at test sites, but because of the emergency situation the DEQ had put the city on probation and elevated temporarily that number to 450 parts per million.

Hunsaker, who has just taken over as mayor, said he is only learning about the seriousness of the problem. But Misbach has drawn the line. If Murtaugh doesn't begin plans to upgrade its waste ponds, its 150 residents will pay a fine. And also, no new homes or businesses can be hooked up to the system until the upgrade is completed, he said.

A preliminary engineering study to upgrade what kind of cost $20,000 to $30,000, said Tracy Ahrens of J-U-B Engineers Inc. in Twin Falls.

Hunsaker said a 50/50 match with state funds could be available in early 2007 if the city sets up a study before the end of this year.

"Otherwise, we're just going to have to get a short-term loan," Hunsaker said.

OBITUARIES

BURLEY — Elizabeth Bunn, an 85-year-old resident of Burley, died Friday, Aug. 11, 2006, at Highland Estates.

Beth was born March 20, 1921, in Burley, Idaho, the daughter of George Henry and Lotie Teresa Grover Haycock. She was the third child of a family which would eventually number nine living children. She was born at home in a small farmhouse which sat beside the Unity road. She grew up there hoeing beans, picking potatoes, milking cows and helping her mother care for her younger brothers and sisters.

She graduated from Burley High School in 1939, and that summer married Reed Shaw of Malta, Idaho, went to work for the Union Pacific Railroad, and Beth moved with him many times as he was transferred from place to place. Their first child, Ronald, was born in Burley, Dianne in Battie Mountain, Nev., Penny in Salt Lake City, Utah, and Bonnie in Elko, Nev. In 1952, Beth made the decision to move with her children back to Burley. Once settled, she soon went to work at Thornberg's Veterinary Hospital. She met George Bunn there when he brought a sick cow in for treatment. George was a bachelor who waited until he was 40 to meet the right woman. Beth and George were married in 1955, and she returned to the farm life she had known as a child.

Beth and George had three sons, George, Bruce and Bill. Beth worked as her husband to keep the farm operating, often taking on a big share of the chores when he was working at the potato plants to bring in a little extra income. Their three boys grew up and were able to take on much of the responsibility for the farm, especially after George's health failed. George passed away in 1988, and Beth continued to put on barn clothes and lend a hand with the milking.

Beth was active in the LDS Church, teaching Primary when her boys were young, and in later years serving as a visiting teacher for the Relief Society.

She valued her family's long relationship with the LDS Church and was a proud member of the Sarah Yeaman Camp of the Daughters of Utah Pioneers.

Beth is survived by six of her children, Dianne (Robert) Anderson of Boise, Penny Shaw of Eugene, Ore., Bonnie (Richard) Wright of Alaska, George (Teresa) Bunn of Burley, Bruce (Becky) Bunn of Rupert and William Bunn of Burley. Her surviving siblings are Art Haycock, Margaret Koyle, Dorothy Kidd, Shirley Johnston and Harry Haycock. She leaves behind 14 grandchildren and 15 great-grandchildren. She was preceded by her parents; her husband, one son, Ronald Shaw; her brothers, George and Ross Haycock; and her sister, Ruth Koyle Moncur.

Beth's family was foremost in her life. She was proud of her children and grandchildren. She loved her siblings and, in particular, she always held her sisters close to her heart. She will be missed by all those who loved her.

The funeral will be at 11 a.m. Tuesday, Aug. 15 at the View LDS 1st and 2nd Ward Church, 550 S. 500 E. of Burley, with Bishop LaVell D. Stoker officiating. Burial will be in Pleasant View Cemetery.

Friends may call from 6 until 8 p.m. Monday at Rasmussen Funeral Home, 1350 E. 16th St. in Burley, and from 10 until 10:45 a.m. Tuesday at the church.

Eva Jean Matsen Lord

RUPERT — Eva Jean Matsen Lord of Rupert, Idaho, died peacefully in her Rupert home on Aug. 10, 2006, after a long struggle with cancer.

Eva was born April 10, 1927, in Burley, Idaho, to Magnus and Goldie Clark Matsen. She grew up on the family farm, where her father was a tenant farmer, and attended school in Burley with three brothers and three sisters.

Following her graduation from Burley High School in 1945, Eva and a girlfriend moved to Logan, Utah, where they both worked at Hill Air Force Base Arsenal during and in support of the war.

After her roommate left, financial hardship forced Eva to return to Burley, where she met her future husband on a blind date, though he was her girlfriend's date, not her own.

Eva married Hal Lord on Aug. 26, 1948, in Burley.

Their first home was a cleaned-up chicken coop, but they grew more prosperous in the following years as Hal started and managed his own pulp and post business, cutting lumber in Island Park then milling it at his own sawmill on his property.

Their log home, for which he cut the logs himself and then built with his own hands, still stands in Heyburn, Idaho. In 1956, they moved with their four children to land they homesteaded north of Burley.

Eva partnered with Hal, enjoying and working the farm. In later years, they enjoyed traveling throughout the West, especially enjoying photographing courthouses.

They also collected rocks from various western states, which, when they returned home, Eva helped polish and make into earrings, necklaces and brooches.

Eva loved to garden and continued to garden until her death. She loved to grow and dry gards that she then turned and managed dried flower arrangements and birdhouses, Eva and Hal sold the farm in 1988 and continued to travel until Hal's death from cancer in 1993.

Eva was a strong supporter of education. She routinely gave blood to the Red Cross to help others throughout her life and was awarded a 15-gallon pin.

She was a warm and caring individual who treated everyone with respect and dignity.

Eva is survived by her four children, Harry (Sherrie) Lord

Separated twins breathing on their own

By Jennifer Dobner
Associated Press writer

SALT LAKE CITY — Conjoined twins separated during a 26-hour surgery were breathing on their own Saturday, a milestone just days after the operation.

Kendra and Malyiah Herrin, 4, were removed from ventilators about 3:45 p.m., said Primary Children's Medical Center spokeswoman Laura Winder, who called it "wonderful progress."

"It's a little sooner than perhaps we expected, but (doctors) said all along we would listen to how they were responding and follow their lead," she said.

Doctors also reported no evidence of post-surgery infections, Winder said.

The twins, who were born joined at the mid-torso, remain in critical but stable condition. They were separated during surgery that ended Tuesday.

Their father, Jack Herrin, said Malyiah's ventilator was removed about 10 minutes before Kendra's "but we'll call it a tie."

"They are doing great," he said on the family's Web site. "They have woken up but are still really drugged, so they really don't know what's going on."

On Friday, it seemed Kendra might be the first to come off the ventilator. But, as with each step in their recovery, when one twin shows improvement or change, the other seems to keep pace.

"They are probably trying to have a little race between them," Herrin wrote at the time.

Fluctuations in the twins' vital signs have also remained remarkably similar. Since birth, the blonde, blue-eyed girls from North Salt Lake have shared a liver, kidney, bladders and a single pelvis. They had only two legs, each one controlled by one girl.

A team of six surgeons separated their torsos, liver, bladders and pelvis, leaving each girl with one leg.

Kendra kept the kidney, and Malyiah has been placed on dialysis.

In the months ahead, she is expected to get a kidney transplanted from their mother, Erin Herrin.

Coeur d'Alene cat causes power outage, dies after

COEUR D'ALENE — A cat that wandered into the high-voltage confines of an electricity substation here caused an outage that left the elite dead and about 6,500 customers of Avista Corp. without power for about two hours.

"Animals cause a number of outages — squirrels, birds — it just points out how dangerous those substations are," said Avista spokeswoman Debbie Simock following the accident that occurred just before 3 a.m. Friday at the Spokane-based utility's 15th Street substation.

The incident was a reminder to parents to tell their children never to enter these facilities, she said.

The utility restored power just before 5 a.m. Friday.

"We have four Indian guides out front leading the (two Belgian) horses hitched to the wagon and 10 riders on horseback helping to keep the wagon stable when it begins to float," said Brian Chevalier, an EMT with Northwest Paramedics stationed in Glens Ferry. "And every one of them has had a lot of training; they know what to do if something goes wrong."

And if they don't know, two U.S. Coast Guard Auxiliary and two Idaho Parks and Recreation watercraft are nearby. And the horses?

have a safety catch where they can release the harness," said Tim Franklin, also an EMT with Northwest Paramedics.

But none of that was needed Saturday.

As the Shoshone — Platte guides led the way across the infamous waters of the Snake, the crowd began to realize why they had traveled near and far on this second Saturday of August.

It was an appreciation of the pioneering spirit of the Old West and those who guided them. And about getting it right.

Gooding Envirothon team earns award at international event

GOODING — Gooding High School's Idaho state champion Envirothon team competed at the International Canon Envirothon, July 23-29 in Winnipeg, Manitoba, Canada, bringing home the Extra Mile Award.

Voted on by advisers, Canon staff, personnel and teams, the award encompasses attributes of team work, cultural diversity, sportsmanship, concern for others, congeniality, activity participation and friendly smiles, while performing in grueling 16-hour days of activity, said Colleen Lockwood of Gooding.

Team members competed with teams from 44 U.S. states and eight Canadian provinces. During the opening ceremony, Idaho team captain Melissa Lockwood, carried the Idaho state flag for the parade of flags. Under the supervision of scientific professionals, team members tested their knowledge of forestry, soil/land use, aquatics, wildlife and natural resources. The theme was "Water Stewardship in a Changing Climate," focusing on the role water plays in lives now and in the future, including aspects such as water quality, supply, use and allocation and conservation and management.

Evaluated on teamwork, problem solving and presentation skills by a panel of judges, teams gave oral recommendations for a challenge, which was to develop a plan for the Prime Minister of Water Resources that would alleviate problems with the Lake Winnipeg Watershed.

According to advisers Becky and David Freiberg, the Idaho team showed outstanding leadership and presentation skills and their weeks of summer studies enhanced their learning, cooperation, work ethic and team spirit. "They went into the competition as a very strong, well prepared team and we were very proud of their accomplishments," Freiberg said.

Team participants said their favorite part of the week was meeting students from other parts of the country and realizing they were all dedicated to the purpose of helping preserve North America's resources for future generations.

Connie Axtell saw work to be done and did it

By Trina Logan
For the Times-News

RUPERT — Connie Hawkins Ruddle Axtell was giving of her time and talents to anyone and everyone, but she treasure family and friends above all. She passed away July 29 at the age of 83.

Connie Axtell was born May 7, 1923, in Tetonla. Her parents, Willard and Norma Hawkins, rancher and farmer.

Her father passed away when she was 6 years old, and the family moved to Hagerman. She attended schools there and soon made the acquaintance of Robert "Bob" Ruddle. While Connie was still in high school the two were married and moved to Oakley and then to Burley. After settling in Burley Connie returned to school to finish her senior year and graduated from Burley High School.

Bob loved the outdoors and he and Connie took many hunting and fishing trips together. The couple had three children, Caron, Carme and Bob. Connie was very dedicated to her children and made every effort to make a good home for them and to be there whenever they needed her.

"She was the light of my life," son Bob said.

Connie was an excellent seamstress and sewed most of her children's clothing. In her later years she continued sewing and but also developed a talent for crocheting. She crocheted afghans for many family members and sewed napkins and pillow cases as well.

Her cooking and baking skills were well known as well, as she would frequently donate baked goods to various events and fundraisers.

Connie and Bob moved to Rupert in 1953. When her younger son Bob started school Connie decided it was time for her to start something new as well. She went to work for Brownie Colwell, an accountant, and soon learned bookkeeping skills that she would continue to use throughout her life.

Connie Axtell and two of her grandchildren exchange gifts. Christmas was a favorite time for Connie Axtell. She would decorate her home top to bottom and spend many hours selecting just the right gifts for her loved ones.

She was appointed Rupert City treasurer for a number of years and then took a job with the Rupert Credit Bureau. When Bob became ill, she struggled to continue working and caring for him at the same time, but never seemed to tire and never complained.

Bob passed away in 1987.

Connie and Bob had previously been friends with a couple by the name of Axtell. Clyde Axtell had also lost a spouse and the old friends soon became close.

They were married in 1991 and spent several years traveling. Connie had not had the opportunity to see much outside Idaho and enjoyed seeing the sights of the western states, and especially the Grand Canyon.

As much as she loved travel she really loved coming home. Her children and grandchildren were where her heart was.

She also loved being around the friends and neighbors she had in Mini-Cassia. George and Joan Falkner were special friends and the two couples never missed their weekly dinners out and pinchele games together. They would also spend holidays together quite often invited one another to join their respective family festivities.

She and Clyde were a perfect fit for the Rupert Lions and Lionsess Clubs. They enjoyed being around people and more than that, they loved helping people.

Construction of church building will help fuel Twin Falls economy

By Sandy Miller
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — Like many others, Terry McCurdy had heard the rumor that Twin Falls was online to be the future site of an LDS temple. In fact, he remembers the exact day he began to suspect something was up. It was June 16, 2004, his son's 30th birthday, the day he got the phone call.

"I got a phone call from the main office wanting to know where Brad Hobbs was," McCurdy remembered. At the time, Dr. Brad Hobbs, then the president of the Twin Falls Stake Center and now the mission president in Charlotte, N.C., was out of town taking his son to a missionary training center.

McCurdy later heard whispers that LDS President Gordon B. Hinckley paid a visit to Twin Falls that day.

The following October, McCurdy was sitting in his living room watching the LDS general conference on TV when he saw Hinckley make the official announcement that two temples would be going up soon — one in Draper, Utah, and the other in Twin Falls, Idaho.

"I was so elated," McCurdy said. "I just couldn't believe it." The LDS church has 135 temples around the world, including those under construction and those recently announced.

Last week, construction workers with the Salt Lake City-based Big D Construction Corporation began laying the foundation for the $3.25 million, 27,850-square-foot temple that will sit on 9.1 acres of the former 36-acre Candleridge property, located west of Eastland Drive between Candleridge Drive and what will soon be an extended Cheney Drive. A new, one-story stake center will go up next door. The property will have more than 300 parking spaces, and tree-lined boulevards and gardens will be weaved through the property.

Only the best materials will be used for the two-story temple. "They use only the finest materials because they want it to last a long time," McCurdy said. "It will follow the geographical look of the canyon." The white stone exterior will sparkle with speckles of gold glitter, and a gold-leafed angel Moroni will keep watch from a steeple stretching 159 feet up into the air.

LDS Church officials approached Candleridge property owners Ace Hansen, Dr. James Retmier and brothers Lowell and Dallas Ward about selling the property. They agreed. Hansen would not say what the church paid for the 36 acres.

Not everyone was happy about the sale. More than 300 nearby residents protested losing the Candleridge Golf Course to a temple, saying a busy church would have a negative effect on their home investments. But the church promised to hear their concerns and work with them regarding traffic and parking in the area. In the end, the city approved the project with little protest.

The church decided to keep just 9.1 acres of the Candleridge property and put the remaining 27 acres out for bid. Five companies — inside and outside of Twin Falls — bid on the property, and local developer Ken Edmunds got the nod. Edmunds said the fact that he's a member of the LDS Church had nothing to do with it. He said what the church was looking for was someone who would build a development that would have staying power.

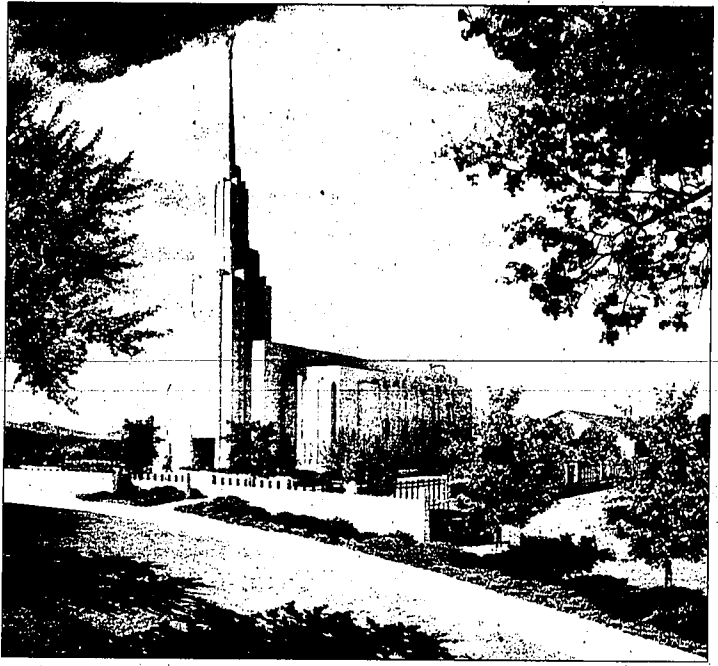

"Their concern was that the subdivision look as good in the one-hundredth year as it did in the first year," Edmunds said. Edmunds brought in brothers Devoe and Dan Brown as partners to build the Ensign Point Subdivision, a single-family home development of 49 lots that average 4/10ths of an acre each.

"The lots are substantially larger than lots in most subdivisions," Edmunds said.

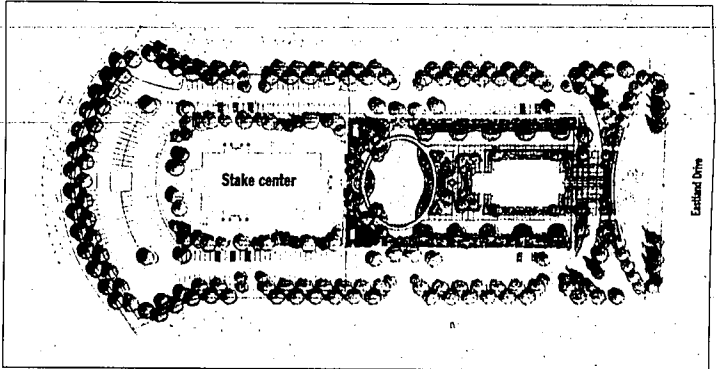

He said the infrastructure will extend to the 9.1-acre LDS property.

Fueling the local economy

Even though Big D Construction is based in Salt Lake City, the construction of the temple and stake center will still feed the local economy.

The 27,850-square-foot, two-story Twin Falls LDS Temple's white stone exterior will sparkle with speckles of gold glitter, and a gold-leafed angel Moroni will keep watch from a steeple stretching 159 feet up into the air.

The temple will sit on 9.1 acres west of Eastland Drive between Candleridge Drive and the soon to be extended Cheney Drive. A new one-story stake center will also go up on the property which will feature tree-lined boulevards and gardens.

my, McCurdy said. They plan on using local contractors when it's appropriate," McCurdy said.

For instance, the concrete now being poured for the foundation comes from a local company. Local laborers will do most of the work during the project, and if construction workers run out of materials, they'll most likely purchase them locally, McCurdy said. And when it comes time to put the Angel Moroni atop the steeple, they'll use a local crane company, he said.

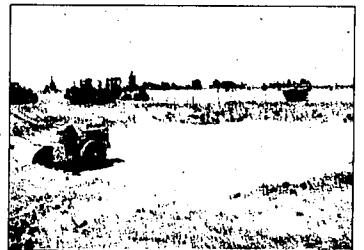

McCurdy said temple projects usually take about two years to complete, so he figures the Twin Falls temple should open its doors in the spring of 2009. He said the temple will be mostly staffed by volunteers, but the church will probably hire someone locally to take care of the landscaping.

When completed, the temple will serve some 50,000 LDS members. But there will also be those who travel to the temple from afar, and they'll bring their wallets with them which will benefit local businesses.

"There's no cafeteria there," McCurdy said. "People are going to eat in the restaurants and sleep in the hotels."

The public will have a

Not just paper anymore

CD-ROM inserts may bridge newspapers' gap to the digital age

Los Angeles Times

Many newspapers have built their long-term growth strategies around the Internet. But a Santa Monica, Calif., company is betting that an old piece of new technology, the CD-ROM, will help papers bridge the gap to the digital age.

In recent months, iMedia International Inc. has reached agreement with two of the United States' largest newspapers to distribute within their Sunday editions CDs chock full of movie previews, music samples, video games, comics, celebrity interviews and advertisements. "This brings sight, sound and motion to the newspaper," said iMedia Chief Executive David MacEachern.

It could also bring additional advertising dollars — and perhaps hard-to-reach younger readers — to newspapers at a time of declining readership. iMedia and its partners — The Dallas Morning News and The New York Daily News, so far — hope that newspaper readers will pull the discs from their Sunday papers and insert them in their computers to enjoy the freebies. That would allow the partners to sell up to 700 video and "banner" advertisements on each edition of the CD.

MacEachern hopes to distribute the monthly CD, entitled "Hollywood Preview," to 10 million homes by the end of 2007. That is up from about 1.4 million CDs that will be distributed once both newspaper partners are active. The New York Daily News recently agreed to begin in October to deliver the CDs, which have glossy, magazine-style covers.

Executives at The Dallas Morning News said they are pleased with iMedia's offer.

New indexes aim to beat the old benchmarks

It's possible to build a better index than the old ones, fund managers are trying.

With bond indexes usually beating actively managed mutual funds, investors have turned to exchange traded funds, or ETFs, which generally charge low fees and seek to mirror the return of a particular index, as a cheap way to get winning returns. A few of the ETFs have become benchmarks. For instance, SPYs, which mimic the Standard & Poor's 500, had a market capitalization of roughly $57.4 billion at the close of trading Tuesday.

The market for ETFs has boomed in the last 10 years, growing from $1.05 billion in 1995 to $296 billion in 2005, according to the Investment Company Institute, the mutual fund industry's trade group.

Who wouldn't want a piece of this business? Hopefuls are crowding in with the new indexes they've built. They range in size from Capital Markets Index, which bills itself as "the first and only measure of the total value of U.S. capital markets" including "all investment grade U.S. stocks, bonds and money market investments, which includes asset allocation among them." The index, which does not yet traded as an ETF was launched in May on the American Stock Exchange and includes approximately 2,500 securities.

Then there are the fundamental indexes, where two companies are making the biggest push. In capitalization-weighted indexes, like the Standard & Poor's 500, the greater the company's market capitalization, the greater its weight in the index. In fundamental indexing, the indexes' creators come up with another formula, which gives more weight to a company's financial performance than its stock price.

The emphasis on stock price in most indexes is "how a stock like Google can become the 20th largest position in the S&P 500 even though its current revenue, earnings and book value wouldn't even place it among America's top 200 companies," the chief executive of "The No-Load Fund Investor" explained.

In fundamental indexing, the indexes' creators came up with another formula. Wisdom Tree Investments, which introduced 20 fundamentally weighted ETFs in June, weights its indexes on stocks' dividends paid. Its aim is to passively outperform traditional benchmarks, said Bruce Lavine, the company's president and chief operating officer.

The company's ETFs, which trade on the New York Stock Exchange, have attracted more than $400 million in assets in their first seven weeks of trading, according to the company. Part of the attraction may be its bond, which includes Professor Jeremy Siegel of the University of Pennsylvania's Wharton School, and billionaire former hedge fund manager Michael Steinhardt, who is now retired. Another part of the ETFs' attraction may be their costs, which are low, ranging from 0.28 percent to 0.33 percent on its domestic funds.

The other big player in fundamental indexing is Research Affiliates LLC. Its indexes weight companies according to earnings, revenue, dividends and book value. Book value is a company's assets minus its liabilities. "If stocks differ from their

The No-Load Fund Investor newsletter agreed, saying the PowerShares FTSE RAFI US 1,000 Portfolio (ticker PFI), which uses Research Affiliates' methodology, is "the most attractive fundamental indexing product available to investors today," partly because it gives value stocks a greater weight than growth stocks, giving investors more exposure to the value stocks' stronger returns. The newsletter did, however, criticize the fund for its 0.60 percent expense ratio, which Arnott said will fall if the ETF becomes larger.

Sounds great. Why might investors hesitate? One thing that might give you pause is just how new the indexes are. While ETFs from both Wisdom Tree and Research Affiliates point to back-tested data to say what investors' returns would have been if they had used the companies' methodology in the past, that may not be as reassuring as actual history.

This historic data is starting to trickle in. Last Luciano Sraucanu, the director of research at Wisdom Tree, have a return drag," Rob Arnott, chairman of Research Affiliates wrote in e-mail.

"Such indexes will structurally and unavoidably overweight the overall market and underweight the undervalued," he said.

MILESTONES T'S BEVERAGE BARN OPENS

A ribbon cutting was held for T's Beverage Barn at 2634 Addison Ave. E. in Twin Falls. The Twin Falls Area Chamber of Commerce Ambassadors helped cut the ribbon along with the owners and employees of T's Beverage Barn. "Stay in your car and let us bring it to you," is the service concept of T's Beverage Barn. Drive into the barn and they will come out and take your order and bring it back to you. Bad hair days, car full of kids, bad weather — now you don't have to worry about these things. Owner LeRoy Atwood first saw this type of store in Texas. He felt that Idaho was an ideal place to bring the concept. It is his goal to eventually open barns all over the state of Idaho. Twin Falls was chosen for the pilot store because of the terrific people and location. The barn can be reached at 733-9227. JACKSON, Miss. — When frontsack Bill Tyler went to Hurricane Katrina did it hit his cottage in Bay St. Louis, he sends them a link to the online video sharing site YouTube.

There, for anyone to see, he's posted a slideshow with images of his storm-stained house, and other scenes from the Mississippi Gulf Coast devastated by the Aug. 29 storm. The soundtrack is Angolan musician Waldemar Basto's haunting song "Sofrimento."

Nearly a year after Hurricane Katrina devastated the small beach town of Long Beach, Miss., and plastic bags remain wrapped around old oak trees, gutted homes are abandoned and native shrubs are taking over labs where manicured lawns used to be.

Days before Tyler posted the movie items into the home Hurricane Katrina hit.

About 10 days after the strike, Tyler and his wife were able to survey the damage to the 1,100-square-foot cottage. A self-employed graphic designer, he captured images with a digital camera.

"I knew that I needed to do something to show people," he said.

Days later, Tyler put together the video on his computer, sending snippets of the footage to friends to show the damage to his home and elsewhere on the coast. In May, he discovered YouTube.

"If you look at what individuals are showing and posting on YouTube, it's just astounding. You get a much better sense, I think, of the scale of the disaster and of the personal nature of it. You really get a strong sense of how YouTube has been impacted," said Steven Jones, professor of communications at the University of Illinois at Chicago.

Richard Richardson, 33, of Covington, La., took on a film project for a night school college course and turned it into a way to "get the message out to the audience caused by Katrina. A south Louisiana native, Richardson felt some news outlets focused too much on the negative effects of the storm.

"It is not a question of motives or bias, it is a question of living through this kind of potential situation every year and having it to this magnitude," Richardson says.

His video instead showcases the images of destruction offset with photos of events significant to Louisiana. The uplifting photos include fans at a New Orleans Saints game and revelers at Mardi Gras, while Randy Newman's "Louisiana 1927" plays in the background.

Jones said a standard broadcast news story about Hurricane Katrina with a run-time of several minutes, can't express the same level of personal experience that a person who has been through the disaster can.

The Web site also has become a way for people to encourage relief efforts.

Trevor Munson, 19, wanted to help with Hurricane relief but felt he was "too far away" in his hometown of Littleton, Colo. So he decided to make a video encouraging people to donate money to the Salvation Army and American Red Cross. Munson used a search engine to find images of the disaster. The closing minutes of the film give information on how to donate to relief efforts.

"I felt this was the best thing I could do using my available resources," Munson said.

YouTube's home page presents a collection of featured videos, including clips that are most-viewed and best-reviewed.

"That's probably the first thing I do when I get on YouTube. I look at featured videos," said Nathan Rucker of Olive Branch, Miss. "If my video like that is featured, it's going to hit almost 20,000 people within a couple of hours. I think it's a good way to get any kind of information out there."

Rucker, 20, a student at the University of Mississippi, rounded up his friends to make the video, including one of his own group traveling to the Gulf Coast to help with relief efforts.

Sailing to success in a male-dominated industry

By Kevin Klett
Anchorage Daily News

SEWARD, Alaska — The small-boat harbor is cool and quiet at 6:30 a.m. on a Monday as Capt. Meredith Liebner prepares the 34-foot twin-engine Jillian Dawn for a day of deep-sea fishing in the Gulf of Alaska.

Still straggling to get a solid foothold in the charter business, the 26-year-old Boise State University graduate from Soldotna regularly finds herself still doing the chores of deckhands — cleaning windows with a squeegee, wiping down countertops and hauling fresh bait from the freezer.

Fumdhoe, her black 6-year-old Australian heeler, keeps her company. He licks a puddle of dew off the stern while the daily weather report crackles loudly on the VHF marine radio.

"Sounds like it's going to be nice," she says. "It's my busy time of day," she said. "I need to think about where we're going fishing."

Though often mistaken for a deckhand in this community dominated by male captains, Liebner said she finds only motivation in being among the small minority of female skippers. She says it pushes her to work harder.

Her arms are toned and tanned from working outdoors 14 hours a day, seven days a week since May. "It's not easy work."

The tiny-framed Liebner

Meredith Liebner is seen on her boat the Jillian Dawn, in Seward, Alaska, last month. Still struggling to get a solid foothold in the charter business, the 26-year-old Boise State University graduate regularly finds herself still doing the chores of deckhands — cleaning windows with a squeegee, wiping down countertops and hauling fresh bait from the freezer.

gaffs halibut that can weigh up to 200 pounds, reels in a heavy anchor that's sometimes lodged 300 feet deep in the Gulf of Alaska seabed, and keeps busy either running the boat or tending to clients.

She is used to working alone, although she has a deckhand who helps out two or three days a week.

Gulf of Alaska bound

Around 7:30 a.m., the clients show up. Bob Marley is playing on the CD in the boat's cabin.

Curt Wiesenbutter, his younger brother Craig, Craig's son Eric, and family friend Ben Christen have only one thing on their minds, big halibut.

"OK, you have two choices," Liebner tells the anglers from Couer d'Alene. "We can go east (of Resurrection Bay) for lingcod and silvers, or west for lingcod and rockfish."

Curt has other ideas. The 62-year-old is a world record holder for yellowfin tuna (388 pounds) near San-Benedicto Island in Mexico.

"I bet you're the best halibut guide around," he says. "We want big halibut ... I've never caught a 100-pound halibut."

"I catch whatever," Liebner answers. "Whatever you guys want to catch, we'll catch that."

From Seward, it's a two-hour run along the coast of Kenal Fjords National Park to Liebner's favorite halibut hole. Eric, 20, and Ben, 22, sleep through most of it. Sleeping, they say, eases their stomachs. The day before, fishing for Cook Inlet halibut off the coast of Ninilchik, both anglers spent most of the day port side, feeling nauseous.

"It was a halibut puking fest," Craig says, during a break from reading. "They came prepared this time."

The night before, the two stuck Scopolumarine patches behind their ears.

Today the ocean is calm as Liebner finds her spot. She lowers the anchor about 300 feet onto an invisibly undrained pinnacle of sand. Eric and Ben are almost instantly to their feet, ready to jig herring for halibut.

It takes only 15 minutes for Eric to find success. His line jolts toward the water.

"Fish on!" he yells.

"OK, now a lot of people like doing the pump and reel with

"I found my own method. I learned the right way to do things and the wrong way. There's never just one way."

— Capt. Meredith Liebner

halibut," Liebner says, coaching. "The steady reel better." Eric puts the end of the rod on his hip, bracing himself to battle what appears to be an enormous fish thrashing underwater.

He keeps reeling and reeling and reeling. Liebner grabs the harpoon, ready to spear the fish.

A dark, flat shadow passes below the boat. Eric can see nothing but black rockfish.

Liebner spears the halibut in the gills. It swims away, tied to a rope attached to the starboard side of the boat. A cloud of blood swirls in the water. The fish fatigues. Liebner gaffs it, and pulls it aboard.

She can see now that it will go over 100 pounds, and she knows that it is a female — as nearly all of these 100-plus pounders are.

"That was 100 pounds of pure muscle pulling," Liebner says. "Everyone wants the big papa, but you got the big mama."

Fish and run

Kodiak-born, Liebner started working boats as a deckhand — cleaning fish, baiting lines and scrubbing fish-bled floors — when she was 16.

She earned her U.S. Coast Guard license four years ago at the age of 22.

"To do that, she spent at least four hours a day for 360 days with an experienced captain."

All told, she worked as a deckhand for 15 captains and learned from every one, she said.

"I found my own method," she said. "I learned the right way to do things and the wrong way."

"There's never just one way." One captain she worked for had at least 10 clients a day for 48 straight days. Sometimes there wasn't a seat for Liebner inside the cabin, even if it was raining.

Often she fumbled around the boat, baiting lines, gaffing fish, spraying fish blood off the boat, keeping the clients happy. It's demanding work, but she's never had second thoughts.

Still, she confesses there are times she would rather be running than fishing.

She grew up running cross-country and track in Soldotna, and she currently spends part of her offseason as a track coach at Eagle River High School. She computed at the college level for four years at Boise State while earning a degree in construction management.

On Monday — while cleaning the four halibut, one lingcod and a black rockfish, her clients caught — she recalled her first halibut charter.

"I was 13 years old and my dad woke me up at 3 a.m., she said, rolling her eyes.

She remembers the deckhand's fingers looking frail and cold as he filled halibut. She wondered why he would want such a demanding job.

"She's a very nice person, waking up early, making breakfast, and cleaning them at days end. This is what I do all summer," she said. "I love it."

Back to school: For some kids, A's really pay

By Ben Fuller
Associated Press writer

WASHINGTON — Sure, learning is its own reward. But some kids respond, best to cash.

Andrew Waller's grades soared when his parents started offering $5 for A's and $4 for B's. Now he pockets about $25 each report card, saving it for video games and summer camp.

"I think I would still be getting good grades, but this does help. I mean, it helps a lot," said Andrew, a 12-year-old from Mobile, Ala. "I think it's a good way to motivate me."

So you want an A, eh? Are you willing to pay?

As children return to school, many parents are deciding what size — if any — is appropriate to offer when kids get good grades. The stakes can get pretty high.

Reagan Hawkins, a high school teacher in Nederland, Texas, has had students tell him they will get a new car for A's. Their parents downgrade the deal to a used car if they get B's.

It disappoints me, honestly," Hawkins said. "I try to instill a sense of intrinsic reward in the students. I'd rather see a student want to learn for the sake of learning than learn for the sake of a car."

Adults who promise money, gifts or privileges say their children study harder when incentives are on the table. The lesson they hope to teach is that rewards require work.

The trick is making sure that students develop a natural love of learning along the way. When the gift cards and iPods go away, students had better be able to motivate themselves.

"It may be a little bit of bribery, but in my view I would my little one with M&Ms when we were doing potty training," said Dawn Waller, Andrew's mom and a former teacher.

"I think everyone ought to be rewarded. If they're doing something well," she said. "For us, five dollars (for A's) was just the amount we could afford."

She and her husband, David, say their system is working.

Andrew proudly shares his math homework. Kathryn, his 8-year-old sister, talks of becoming a scientist. Even their 4-year-old brother, John Martin, behaves better when he knows he'll end up with a toy from the dollar store.

Nationwide, parents reward A's all kinds of ways.

Children earn trips to the bookstore, the bowling alley or the ice rink. They get to stay up later, take a day off from chores, or move a TV into their room. Some get "bringing rights," like having their report card displayed front and center on the fridge.

In Snellville, Ga., Marilyn Tillman refused to give her two sons cash for A's. That was over the line. Instead she gave them stickers at young ages, then trips out for ice cream.

By high school, she said, "We have no rewards. You're shaping your own future at that point, and that absolutely is its own reward. It's your job and you're expected to do it."

Bill, incentives come into play at home. For every half hour her 13-year-old wants to spend playing video games, he must spend an hour reading — and prove it with a book report.

In some homes, the perks fade when the grades do.

Some of Jessica Tucker's students have had iPods taken away or been told they can't send "instant messages" to their friends online. It happened because they brought home C's or D's.

"Tucker, who teaches middle school in Ramsey, N.J., likes to work with parents on ways to help their kids improve. Ultimately, though, parents set the rewards and punishments.

"It is a real-world practice," she said of awarding bonuses for excellent work. "But if you start it at a young age, it can take away from the value of learning — learning to become a more cultured person, someone who adds value to the world. It's a tough issue."

Newspapers

ial results since they began in April to pack iMedia's discs into the Sunday paper once a month.

"It was a gamble for us to do this," said Bernie Heller, vice president of advertising at The Dallas Morning News.

"I'm not ready to say it will be a big pay off in the long run or that my advertisers will embrace it. But so far it looks really good."

After covering the roughly 35 cents to produce each disc and its jacket, the newspapers and iMedia will take the next dollar of advertising revenue — evenly, said MacEachern. Additional ad revenues, which eventually could reach $2 per disc, will be split 80 percent-20 percent, with the greater share going to the newspapers, he said.

That $2 could translate into an additional $32 million a year in advertising, a paper such as The Dallas Morning News, based on its monthly roll-out to 625,000 home subscribers and newsstand buyers.

It's not the only upside. Users can navigate from the disc to other Web sites, including the newspaper's online edition and advertisers' home pages.

"The disc does not download 'cookbooks' or other information to computer hard drives. iMedia has devised a mechanism that helps track usage by customers with broadband computer hookups. The company uses a complex formula to estimate overall disc usage.

That information showed that readers inserted the first disc a total of 302,000 times. The Dallas Morning News and iMedia said. The following month, a second disc got 321,000 viewings and the third disc is on track to get 285,000 or more, according to the newspaper. Users spent an average of 18 minutes using the first CD and averaged 22 minutes of usage on the second and third CDs, iMedia reported.

"We have gone up and down a little bit but, overall, the audience looks like it is sustaining more than 285,000 sessions, which is very, very good," said The News' Heller.

From 11,500 to 21,000 users per month have clicked through from the CD to other Internet sites, iMedia said.

The discs will get a wider distribution beginning in October, when the New York Daily News, the nation's fifth largest daily paper, packages the CDs in its Sunday paper, circulation 781,000.

Joe Stella, vice president of entertainment and travel advertising at the Daily News, said the paper has high hopes for the video insert and plans to promote it heavily.

"It's attractive," Stella said. "It's something free for our readers that is of value."

iMedia produces the "Howland Reviews" content in house, largely using free video from studios, which are happy to have another platform to promote their films.

An introductory segment on the CDs is meant to give viewers the impression they are flying into Los Angeles, before walking down the red carpet for a Hollywood premiere. A menu then opens, offering the variety of choices from games to a link for the newspaper's Web site.

As they click through the selections, viewers must enter their name and e-mail address at a web site of video and banner advertising. The Dallas Morning News' Lillier conceded that too many ad stops can become "cumbersome" and that the newspaper and iMedia "are still working to figure out the best user experience we can get."

MacEachern, 50, co-founded the company with Scott Karp, 45, his former partner in a Los Angeles advertising agency. The duo first utilized CDs to help suppliers market their products to buyers at Wal-Mart.

The company produced a CD that helped Las Vegas Mayor Oscar Goodman promote his policies. Another disc, delivered by mail, targeted Las Vegas hotel.

"I said, 'This is a media that no one has really capitalized on,'" MacEachern said.

Further inspiration came from England, where video discs turn up in newspapers routinely. Many British publishers have taken a different tack — distributing movie DVDs as a sweetener to get readers to pick up their papers.

Founded in 1999, iMedia went public three years ago. The market capitalization of the 43-employee company, traded over the counter, has fluctuated broadly and stood at about $13.2 million on Wednesday.

The company reported a net loss of $572,000 in 2005 on sales of $1.4 million, an improvement over the prior year, when sales reached just $146,000 and the company lost more than $4.2 million.

Two extra years of work may be enough to tip retirement balance

By Eileen Ambrose
The Baltimore Sun

When workers hear they will have to stay on the job longer than today's retirees, many imagine populating a cubicle into their 80s or 90s.

But some retirement specialists say workers may only need to put in an extra couple of years, not an extra couple of decades.

Today, the typical retirement age is 63 for men and 62 for women. Continuing to work until 65 can make a big difference in the standard of living of future retirees, said Alicia H. Munnell, director for the Center for Retirement Research at Boston College.

"You have to work longer," Munnell says. "The important point here is we're talking a few years, not until your 90s."

Social Security is the reason that the early 60s became the standard retirement age, experts say. Retirees become eligible earlier — but reduced — monthly benefits at 62. Thus, a retirement trend was born.

By staying on the job two or so years longer, workers delay cranking open new eggs. They can continue sticking more money into a 401(k) and receiving an employer match. They won't have to tap Social Security benefits early. They will have fewer years of retirement to finance.

Additionally, they can remain on an employer's insurance plan instead of having to pay this large expense out of pocket until Medicare kicks in at 65. And it gives them more time to pay down debt that can be a substantial drag in retirement.

Financial planners say they often encourage clients to work longer. But clients sometimes are convinced of that wisdom only when they see on paper what an extra year or so at work can mean to their lifestyle in retirement.

If you're unsure what difference a couple of years can make, here are the numbers.

Social Security today replaces about 34 percent of the typical 63-year-old's pre-retirement income, Munnell said. By 2030, that's projected to shrink to around 25 percent under current law. That's without any tinkering by politicians to shore up the system's long-term finances.

Several factors are to blame. Medicare premiums, which are deducted from Social Security checks before retirees receive them, are expected to climb significantly. More retirees will be taxed on benefits in the future.

And the biggest factor is the gradual rise from age 65 to 67 to qualify for full benefits.

Those who take early benefits get a reduced monthly benefit for life. As the age to get full benefits goes up, the monthly check for those taking early benefits will go down. Munnell said.

To make up this reduction in benefits, Munnell calculated, workers with a 401(k) or other retirement assets would need to work about an additional two years — or until 65.

This calculation is based on a worker earning $40,000 a year with $100,000 in retirement assets. It also assumes retirement assets are left alone to continue to grow and there are fewer years of retirement to finance.

Workers with no money set aside in retirement accounts will need to work an extra 1 1/2 years to make up the reduction in Social Security benefits, Munnell said.

It's common to hear younger workers say Social Security won't be there for them. While the system might be changed, Social Security won't disappear and will still be an important safety net for future retirees, experts predict.

1 Rowe Price Associates also has calculated the impact of working longer on savings.

To lower the chances of out-living a nest egg during a 30-year retirement, Price recommends that retirees withdraw 4 percent of savings in the first year, and thereafter increase the dollar amount of withdrawals by 3 percent a year to keep up with inflation.

This amount is often far less than workers had been counting on, and many end up working longer to build up savings, said Stuart Tiltner, a Price financial planner.

"It's not that you have to work forever," Tiltner added.

By postponing retirement by one year and letting savings grow, you can increase the dollar amount of your withdrawal by 13 percent, according to Price's calculations. So, instead of withdrawing, say, $20,000 the first year from savings, you would be able to take out $22,600.

Work an extra two years, and the initial annual withdrawal rises by 28 percent to $25,600. Work six years longer, and the figure more than doubles to $41,800.

Among the assumptions here is that you continue to save 15 percent of pay each year, earn an annual return of 8 percent while working and 6 percent while retired for 30 years.

Some financial planners say another motivation for staying in the work force is to eliminate debt, including the mortgage, car loan and credit cards. Not having to shell out $1,000, or more each month can make a big difference on a retiree's lifestyle.

"There is nothing in this world that feels more comfortable than having no debt," said Jim Kline, a financial planner in Columbia, Md.

He makes it a rule with clients that they can't retire until their debt is retired. Most of their reach that goal, he said.

Of course, even if workers intend to stay on the job until 65, plans can go awry. Poor health can sideline workers. Older employees who are laid off might not be able to land another position. Or workers hate their job or the boss and don't want to stick it out any longer.

chance to tour the temple when it's first opened. But following the dedication, only certain members will be allowed through its doors.

"They have to be worthy members of the church," McCurdy said. "They have to receive a recommend from their local bishop and the stake presidency."

And even though Edmunds' church membership had nothing to do with his being awarded the bid on the temple property's surrounding land, he still feels a sense of pride about it all.

"For me, as a member of the LDS church, it's a great thing," Edmunds said. "It's going to create a great landmark for the community."

Risch: Tax-relief proposal could benefit Idaho utility customers

By John Miller
Associated Press writer

BOISE — Gov. Jim Risch says customers of Idaho's publicly regulated utilities could eventually benefit from lower electricity, water and natural gas rates if lawmakers pass his $260 million property-tax-relief proposal during a special legislative session Aug. 25.

Risch's plan to eliminate property taxes that now cover public school maintenance and operations would cut $9.1 million from the annual tax payments of regulated utilities such as Idaho Power Co., PacifiCorp, Avista Corp., Intermountain Gas Co. and United Water.

When those companies apply for future adjustments to their rates with the Idaho Public Utilities Commission — the next such filings could come around 2009, commission officials said last week — any reduction in their taxes would be factored into prices that customers must pay.

"They can't take advantage of it and put it into their pockets," the Republican governor told The Associated Press. "If the rates go down, that's one industry that must pass it along to customers."

Democrats, who oppose Risch's plan, contend it raises sales taxes that weigh most heavily on the poor, helps wealthy business and second-home owners and puts school funding at risk. They say advantages for utility customers would be minimal at best. Regulators set rates based on arcane formulas few people understand or have faith in, said Sen. D. Ketchum, a minority leader. Risch, Clint Stennett, D-Ketchum.

Risch

"There are more than 20 ways of delivering rate reductions," Stennett said.

"I wouldn't bet on it being reflected in the rate structure." Under Risch's relief plan, money for school maintenance would come from increasing Idaho's sales tax to 6 percent from 5 percent, and by taking $50 million from Idaho's $203 million budget surplus.

Democrats have proposed an alternative that cuts $105 million from taxes of only residential homeowners, but Risch has refused to discuss his special session agenda.

The utilities commission allows regulated utilities a set rate of return on the money they invest to operate their businesses.

"One would assume that if their (the companies') tax bills go down appreciably, their expenses go down," said Gene Enyes, a commission spokesman. While tax expenses are just one component of the rate equation, cuts could result in lower rates, or rates that rise more slowly, he said.

Idaho Power spokesman

"There are more effective ways of delivering rate reductions. I wouldn't bet on it being reflected in the rate structure."

— Senate Minority Leader Clint Stennett, D-Ketchum

Dennis Lopez said his company is still analyzing how Risch's proposal to simultaneously cut property taxes and raise the sales tax would affect its tax liabilities.

Spokane, Wash.-based Avista said it would be forced to return net reductions in operating costs, including the $300,000 in property-tax savings it expects under Risch's plan, to its 105,000 northern Idaho customers the next time it files a general rate case. The company last filed a case for new base rates in September 2004, and has no immediate plans for a new case.

"The biggest fear (ratepayers) would be there, it's just a matter of timing," said Avista spokesman Katherine Markson.

Sen. Brad Little, R-Emmett, was among 20 senators who opposed a property-tax-relief bill in April because it would have boosted the sales state tax by 1.25 cents on the dollar — too much in his estimation. With Risch's new proposal for an increase of just a penny on the dollar, he's reversed course. "The potential for lower utility rates underpins his change of heart, he said. "That's going to flow right to the bottom line of your Idaho power bill," Little said.

AROUND THE STATE

State historian becomes history

POCAHELLO — Idaho's state historian is, well, history. Larry Jones retired late last month after 35 years with the Idaho State Historical Society.

Troy Reeves, a graduate of Idaho State University in Pocatello and Blackfoot native, has been named to replace him in the role, to research and interpret Idaho history for both academic and popular audiences.

Jones is best known for his work in identifying and preserving historic trails throughout the state.

Reeves, meanwhile, has served as an oral historian for the historical society for seven years, and is compiling an oral history of Idaho's Statehouse to mark the 1905 beginning of construction of the sandstone building.

Other oral history projects completed under his guidance include compilations of material on "Women in World War II" and "Smokejumping and Forest Fire Fighting."

Hispanic Cultural Center needs leader

NAMPA — The Hispanic Cultural Center of Idaho is looking for a new leader for the fourth time in just three years.

Its latest executive director departed amid concern the center hasn't done enough to raise the profile of one of Idaho's fastest-growing minority populations.

The non-profit organization, which opened in Nampa in September 2003 and has an annual budget of $230,000, is in the heart of Canyon County, where Hispanic people now make up about a fifth of the population.

Tribe identifies sites for wind farms

FOIT HALL — Idaho's Shoshone-Bannock Indian Tribe is eager to develop alternative energy sources on its 544,000-acre Fort Hall Indian Reservation, and leaders say they've identified five sites for possible wind farms.

Experts have concluded that Idaho, including the gusty eastern plain where the reservation is located, has significant wind-power potential, ranking the state 13th nationally.

Idaho fires continue to burn, keeping tanker planes flying

By John Miller
Associated Press writer

BOISE — Heavy four-engine military tankers and smaller single-engine planes ferried fire repellent from the Boise Airport on Saturday to blazes across the region, including a collection of four fires totaling 12.5 square miles near the unincorporated ranching hamlet of Ola.

The so-called Ola Complex started with lightning strikes late last week and is burning on state and federal land. "It was reaching the timber line," said Jessica Gardetto, a Bureau of Land Management spokeswoman in Boise, just as a C-130 tanker from the California Air National Guard — one of two temporarily stationed in Idaho for the next month — could high fire danger — flew north for another run.

One of the four fires was showing little activity and was close to being contained, Boise National Forest spokesman Dave Olson said. Three others had at most moderate to high fire activity as winds pushed them eastward through grass, sage and some timber.

Containment estimates were not available for those Saturday. A type 2 incident management team trained to manage moderately complex fires arrived Saturday morning, bringing total federal and state crews to about 320 firefighters. Locals have also pitched in, said Ellen Hampton, manager of the Ola Inn, the town's only operating business, and a source of soda pop, candy and hamburgers for crews camping nearby.

"Every hot-blooded body is out there fighting the fire," said Hampton. "It's almost the feeling in the community that if you're able to fight the fire, it's a sin to be asleep."

An evacuation warning for residences north of Ola was lifted Friday and firefighters opted not to close the State-Ola Highway, which leads about 30 miles into the hills from State Highway 52.

Concerns, however, persisted that if the fires spread, they'll burn homes, ranches and cabins that dot the remote countryside. Homeowners are calling me, Killeen launches internal probe

BOISE (AP) — Vaughn Killeen, the new director of the state Department of Correction, has launched an internal investigation of the 1,350-employee agency, saying he has seen evidence of retaliation against workers there. The probe began after two correctional officers, including the department's 2005 employee of the year, quit their jobs, alleging they had been harassed for advocating for inmates. From 2002 to 2006, 35 employees filed grievances against the department, according to the state Division of Human Resources. "I am not going to tolerate any wrongdoing by any employee that engages in retaliation," Killeen told the Idaho Statesman through a spokeswoman as the investigation was announced.

Killeen took over the department a month ago after Gov. Jim Risch criticized his predecessor, Tom Beauchamp, for not doing enough to address overcrowding. The state system now holds nearly 7,000 inmates, leaving it 1,000 beds short.

Counties across Idaho are asking Killeen to move state prisoners now housed in local jails. More than 450 inmates have been shipped to private correctional facilities in Texas and Minnesota. Some prisoners are to be released are still behind bars because programs required before their release haven't been available.

and saying, "I can see this big glow," Gardetto said. Thirteen large fires were burning in Idaho, the most of any state in the West, according to the National Interagency Fire Center. About 44 large active fires were burning in the region, including seven in Montana and eight in Oregon.

Seven separate Idaho fires started in the last two days, according to the Boise-based firefighting agency. It coordinates some 15,000 firefighters nationwide — and several teams of international firefighters from Australia and New Zealand that arrived this week to shore up fire lines stretched thin. The Potato Fire on the Salmon-Challis National Forest in Custer County was nearly 22 square miles by Saturday, with 728 people fighting the blaze. The latest estimates showed the fire was less than a third contained and was costing about $7.2 million to fight.

Get out in Twin Falls

Part three of our summer adventure series

Steve's picks

A columnist for a Boise newspaper once described a dull football game as being like any weekend in Twin Falls. That's not only uncharitable, it's untrue. Sure, Twin Falls is certifiably Anytown, USA, but it's not without its diversions. The most interesting exist some distance from the bright lights and strip malls of Blue Lakes Boulevard North, but not all that great a distance. Centennial Park, for example — the epicenter of water sports on the Snake River locally — is no more than a full-throated holler from the Perrine Bridge. Five thousand people a day drive right past Rock Creek Park on Twin Falls' western margin, and nearly as many go by the nearby Twin Falls County Historical Museum. So stop and smell the roses. But whatever you do this summer, stop. We'll help you. Our "Get Out" series will run every Sunday until Labor Day, highlighting our feature reporters' favorite attractions in different areas of Magic Valley. Next Sunday, watch for Matt Christensen's tour of the Wood River Valley.

1 Centennial Park

This is the community's sexiest and most-used access to the Snake River. Located in the shadow of the Perrine Bridge in the Snake River Canyon north of town, 12-acre Centennial Park is not yet a decade old. But it's a grand place to picnic and the starting point for some spectacular riverside hikes. Thousands of private boat owners, as well as commercial boat-tour operators, launch watercraft from the park. The best route is to head east toward the bridge; in fewer than two hours you can be at the otherworldly midstream landscape called Pillar Falls. When the river is running low — as it does in late summer — you can carry your canoe 150 yards and continue upstream to Shoshone Falls. On Sept. 8 and 22, the Twin Falls Department of Parks and Recreation and the Idaho Guide Service will continue their summer-long series of pontoon boat rides from Shoshone Falls upstream to Pillar Falls. Leave all the work to the guides and enjoy a sunset on a Friday evening. The trip is recommended especially for senior citizens and families with small children. Cost is $15 per person, and it starts at 6 p.m.; call 736-2265 to register. Idaho Guide Service (734-4998) also offers paddle and motor boat trips from Centennial Park and rents rafts, canoes and kayaks.

Get there: Turn west off Blue Lakes Boulevard North just south of the Perrine Bridge onto Canyon Springs Road. The entrance to Centennial Park is about a mile down Canyon Springs Road in the Snake River Canyon. Hours: Dawn to dusk; technically, Centennial Park is open year-round, although the Twin Falls (County) Department of Parks and Waterways closes the park whenever the access road becomes icy. Cost: Free. Don't forget: Sunscreen and drinking water.

2 Twin Falls Park

In case you just got off the bus, let me explain that the city of Twin Falls is named after a waterfall — and, sadly, it's just one waterfall now — located in the Snake River Canyon five miles northeast of town. Chances are, though, that you're not thinking of the right waterfall: Shoshone Falls, and its surrounding Dierkes Lakes park complex, is flashier, much more frequently visited and two miles closer to the city. But the good citizens of any other town in America would be thrilled to have Twin Falls as their signature municipal attraction. It's gorgeous, and we locals are unforgettably spoiled for ignoring it as much as we do. A little more than a century ago, you could stand on the escarpment overlooking the falls and actually get wet. But Milner Dam, built upstream of Twin Falls in 1905, diminished the flow, and when Idaho Power built a dam at Twin Falls in 1935 the utility blocked the right channel with a power plant. So now Twin Falls is a single, better-behaved cascade. But shoot — it's still a 13-story-tall waterfall. As a condition of its power-generating license with the federal government, Idaho Power built a wooded 10-acre park. The place is spotless. It's day-use-only, but there are excellent picnicking and sightseeing facilities, and a ramp provides access for anglers and water-skiers to the reservoir behind the dam where there's a separate swimming area. This area is also the takeout point for the Murtaugh Reach, the popular whitewater stretch of the Snake River. A viewpoint with interpretive panels is located near the falls. The Twin Falls-based Idaho Guide Service (734-4998) offers summer-season whitewater trips from Twin Falls Park up the Murtaugh and Milner reaches. Get there: From Blue Lakes Boulevard North, drive five miles east on Falls Avenue to 3500 East Road. Turn left (north) on 3500 East and drive another mile into the Snake River Canyon. Hours: 8 a.m. until dusk, year-round. Cost: Free. Don't forget: Your fishing pole, swimming suit and picnic basket.

3 Rock Creek Park

It's tough to find Rock Creek Park unless you look hard, and that's just fine with users who relish this 75-acre greensward of trees, waterfalls, deer, beaver, otter, pheasant, quail, ducks, rabbits and rockchucks. Before 1968, the eight-acre core of the park just west of what's now St. Luke's Magic Valley Regional Medical Center was a junkyard, bisected by a polluted — and often smelly — stream. Twin Falls County bought the land, and volunteers from the community — led by the Twentieth Century Club — rolled up their sleeves and removed hundreds of junked cars. Now it's a favored recreation spot for trekkers, picnickers, fisherman and tubers. There's a walking trail, picnic shelters, playground, horseshoe pits, volleyball, rest rooms, covered pavilion and RV park. Rock Creek Park is part of an ambitious citywide walking-trail master plan. Its crown jewel is a paved section of trail that meanders along the creek just north of Addison Avenue. Shaded by trees and rock, it's blissfully quiet except for the dozens of species of birds who chatter overhead. The place still has the feel of an untold secret. Come share it. Get there: Turn north off Addison Avenue West just west of St. Luke's Magic Valley Regional Medical Center, and follow the road down into Rock Creek Canyon. Hours: Dawn to dusk; technically, Rock Creek Park is open year-round, although the Twin Falls (County) Department of Parks and Waterways closes the park whenever the access road becomes icy. Cost: Admission is free. Spaces at the RV Park are $10 per night for seven nights; $20 a night for eight to 14 days and $30 per night from 15 to 21 nights. Don't forget: A blanket and a picnic basket.

FAMILY LIFE

Get out in Twin Falls

4 Twin Falls County Historical Museum

Everybody loves an attic. Twin Falls County's is just a little more crowded than most.

Three miles west of the hospital on U.S. Highway 30, in a reformed 90-year-old schoolhouse, volunteers have painstakingly assembled the most important relics of this community's relatively short but fascinating history.

The photographs of Clarence Bisbee are there, as is a recreation of a pioneer classroom and important pieces of Twin Falls Tractor founder I.B. Perrine's legacy. Organizers are assembling a collection of military uniforms worn by Twin Falls County residents in their country's service, and out back there's a sprawl of the trappings of agriculture — grain drills, hoes, plows, tractors, venerable license plates, even a well-rusted gasoline pump that's unmistakable evidence of a time when petrol was too cheap to meter.

There's even a well-used potbellied stove that bears the distinctive scorch marks of once having to burn sage-brush because there was no firewood.

Victoriana suffices the place — lots of lace, plenty of filigree, abundant bric-a-brac. The folks who once owned this stuff were nine-tenths straight-laced pragmatist and one-tenth untethered romantic. And it all got here — most of it, at least — the hard way, rolling across America's badlands in the back of wagons and in railroad freight cars.

The museum is full of the cherished keepsakes of pioneers who hearkened to a happier past and wished at least as much for their — and their children's — futures.

Get there: Three miles west of St. Luke's Magic Valley Regional Medical Center on U.S. Highway 30, near Curry Crossing.

Hours: 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. Tuesdays through Saturdays. Cost: Free, but the museum accepts donations. Don't forget: Your camera.

5 Faulkner Planetarium

Nearly 20 years ago, College of Southern Idaho professor Jim Woods and Jerry Meyerhoeffer, then the school's president, pitched a curious notion to retired Twin Falls retailer Earl Faulkner: How about funding a high-tech facility on the CSI campus in which multimedia presentations of astronomy, science and technology could be made to students in a room around south-central Idaho?

More than $1 million and 350,000 visitors later, the Faulkner Planetarium — equipped with 144 seats under a 50-foot dome and featuring a DigiStar II digital graphics projection system — continues to enthrall spectators with the sights and sounds of science, writ large and at high volume.

An observatory, equipped with a 24-inch telescope, was added to the Herrett Center for Arts and Science, which houses the planetarium, in 2004.

The purpose is learning, but the technique is fun. Planetarium manager Rick Greenwald and his staff are fond of seasoning science with rock 'n' roll and pop culture, with titles such as "Pink Floyd: The Dark Side of the Moon" and "Star Signs," an exploration of the origins of astronomy and astrology.

"Pink Floyd" is shown at 8:15 p.m. Tuesdays through Saturdays. "Star Signs" is shown at 2 p.m. Saturdays.

Other current shows are "Journey to the Edge of Space and Time" at 7 p.m. Tuesdays through Saturdays and "Mysteries from the Depths of Space" at 4 p.m. Tuesdays through Saturdays.

Debating later this year will be "Far Out Space Places," a travelogue of amazing locations from here to Pluto.

Faulkner shows are a great family experience, but not for kids under 4.

The noise and digitized images can frighten infants and toddlers.

Get there: The Faulkner Planetarium (732-6655) is in the Herrett Center for Arts and Science on the north side of the CSI campus, off North College Road.

Hours: Planetarium shows are at 4, 7 and 8:15 p.m. Tuesdays through Fridays and 2, 4, 7 and 8:15 p.m. Saturdays.

Cost: Show tickets are $4 for adults, $3 for senior citizens, $2 for students with activity cards and $9 for families. Admission to the Herrett is free. Don't forget: Your imagination.

6 Frederickson's

Summer is not high season for candy sales, but who cares? There's always a good excuse to visit Frederickson's, a downtown Twin Falls confectioner in business since 1936.

The late Jack Frederickson, who opened an ice cream store in downtown Twin Falls at the height of the Great Depression, and his family have become local legends in hand dipping no-preservative sweets. Chocolate-covered jurtles, English toffees and chocolate-covered cherries are my personal favorites, but there's a whole world of sugary wonders available in light or dark chocolates in the display cases at Frederickson's. Get there: 309 Hansen St. E., downtown.

Hours: 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. Mondays through Fridays. Cost: $11.40 for a pound of assorted chocolates.

Don't forget: A napkin.

A growing movement helps families heal after suicide

By Patricia Ascholt
Detroit Free Press

After her mother's suicide four years ago, at age 53, Shella Tranzow put away her mother's picture on the nightstand next to the bed. And she couldn't bear wearing her mother's diamond ring, which her father gave her after her mother's death.

Stepping into her old house brought back a tide of pain.

The memories of rushing home to share tales of the school day were replaced with devastation each time she entered the childhood home where her mother shot herself with her father's rifle.

She is angry her mother won't be around to enjoy Tranzow's three young children. Her mother had watched the youngest child's birth just five months before. She's disappointed her father can't share the retirement the couple planned.

Her mother had a long history of depression, largely hidden from the family.

"Suicide literally destroys families," says Tranzow, 35, of Macomb Township, Mich., who returned her mother's picture to her bedside and resumed wearing her ring. "Those who take their lives may think they are ending their own pain, but it causes so much pain to everyone who loves them."

Voices like Tranzow's are part of a new landscape of help and education about suicide, as mental health agencies make a concerted effort to address the onerous loss.

The hope is to save lives by educating students about prevention strategies, providing grieving families options to isolation and offering professional training to spot potentially suicidal people.

Their suffering is just beginning, when their loved one's has just ended," says Jenn Larch, coauthor of "Dying to Be Free: A Healing Guide for Families after a Suicide" (Hafzelden; $12.95).

Larch is a suicide intervention counselor with the Macomb County (Mich.) Crisis Center, a 24-hour suicide and stress management and protective services hot line and referral service.

The 10th-leading cause of death in the United States, suicide took the lives of 30,622 Americans in 2001.

Among young people ages 15-25 in the nation, suicide ranks third as a cause of death.

Too often, survivors blame themselves for having missed the signs a loved one was considering suicide, but they aren't always clear, Larch says.

Unfortunately, "nobody sees it coming," she says.

After a suicide

- Allow survivors to talk and cry as much as they need to.
- Don't avoid talking about the person, if you knew him or her.
- Simple acts of kindness, from running errands to offering to do household chores, may be appreciated.
- Survivors may never fully heal, but with time, they may learn to tolerate a loss.
- Write yourself a letter about your anger, fear, blame or hurt. From "Dying to Be Free: A Healing Guide for Families after a Suicide."

Preventing suicide

If you or someone you know is contemplating suicide, call the National Suicide Prevention Lifeline at 800-273-8255 or go to www.suicidepreventionlifeline.org
The Yellow Ribbon Program, www.yellowribbon.org
American Association of Suicidology, www.suicidology.org

Some might be quiet and depressed then seem to get over it, Larch says.

"That can be a sign that they've made the decision, and they're relieved by it."

The stories from suicide survivors reinforce the reality that suicide remains a stigma. It's poorly understood and still not addressed frequently.

A survivor of two parent suicides who once considered taking her own life, Selene Wadhawan, 33, has lived with suicide's aftermath almost her entire life.

Even though she found her father dead in their home from a gunshot wound when she was 3, Selene blotted out the memory for years.

Her mother and family hid the truth by telling her that her father, an out-of-work architect despondent about a turn in his career and finances, was killed in an auto accident. "I definitely bought into the myth and secrecy about suicide," says Wadhawan. "Everyone cooperated. And when you see a trauma, your body and mind does a lot to protect you."

She describes her mother as a survivor — fun-loving, beautiful, intelligent, "the kind of person others are drawn to, even in a grocery store line." An only child, Wadhawan says her mother, a registered nurse, "spoiled me to death. We never talked about my father."

Her parents were born in India, "a country with high suicide rates that doesn't discuss suicide," Wadhawan says.

A serious back injury followed by panic attacks quickly transformed her mother into a dependent, fearful woman.

The mother and daughter reversed their roles.

At 13, "I was the mother and she was the child," Wadhawan says. Near the 10th anniversary of her father's death, her mother killed herself in their home with a knife. Wadhawan found her in the upstairs bathroom after school.

The night before, her mother seemed happy and told her, in Hindi, that she was feeling good.

Wadhawan's story is a triumph, given several years of alcohol abuse, anorexia, depression and suicidal thoughts that followed her mother's death.

At Oakland University, she straightened out her life and supported herself through college.

She trained with Larch to lead a Macomb County suicide survivors group. "We want others to understand the stigma of suicide, so it won't happen again," she says.

"Real Estate Corner" PICKING A GOOD LOCATION

by Laura Fitzgerald
Re/Max American Dream Realty

Few decisions are as important as location in choosing a home. It ranks alongside the price and size of the house. So if you're buying a house, first check the community. Determine how the new location could affect the lives of you and your family.

Questions to ask when choosing a location include:

Is it convenient for your personal needs, close to schools, shopping, transportation routes?

What are the plans of the community, such as parks, highway construction, shopping areas, etc? Are properties in the neighborhood increasing or declining in value, relative to the rate of inflation? ☺

The greatest gift

Arithmetic flashcards at the age of 3 won't unleash the next Einstein. Nor will choosing a precise combination of educational toys guarantee a future good job and happy life. It's attention and play with aging adults that stimulates brain development — not just in individual infants, but in the United States' future workforce. In an online publication of the Proceedings of the National Academy of Sciences, researchers representing fields of neurobiology, psychiatry, sociology and economics laid out a case that top-braining decisions are minuscule concerns. The kind of attention that kids get from parents, grandparents and others who love them builds the ground floor of the brain's architecture that will later accommodate a second language or calculus. "It's not necessarily anything you can buy," says Eric

One study cited found that when poor kids were given year-round, all-day attention from the age of 4 months through 8 years; they had higher IQs, reached higher levels of education, earned more money and were more likely to own a home. "When it comes to brain development, it's more efficient to get it right the first time than to try to fix it later," says Jack Shonkoff, professor of social policy at Brandeis University.

FAMILY LIFE

The great Pop-Tart rescue

I had finished up painting the bathroom, using the tip of a little finger to catch a tricky little corner over the tub, in an uncommonly rich gesture, the little girl was off looking for some old clothes so she could help. Meanwhile, I stood at the end of the driveway watching the clouds roll from right to left. I have a farmer's feel for the weather. My toes swell and my joints quiver. And when clouds roll from right to left, I know they're smuggling in some monsoonal moisture.

"If I wanted monsoonal moisture," I told my wife, "I would've moved to Guam."

"Go ahead," she said. "I'm just saying..."

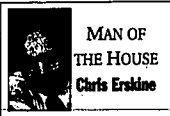

"I know what you're saying," she said, and turned back to re-watching a Pop-Tart from the DVD player.

If you think all this sounds like a bad sitcom, you're wrong. Because there is hope here. There is character, compassion and an almost noble sense of stick-with-it-ness. That's my term, stick-with-it-ness. You can use it if you want.

"Hey!" my wife yelps.

"What?"

"The Pop-Tart," she said. "And a pair of $5 bill."

MAN OF THE HOUSE
Chris Erskine

"I wondered where that went," I said.

"Yeah, Mommy" said the toddler.

See, these aren't just columns. They are almost novelistic examinations of American life. We've got environmental gloom, a shaky economy and the faint whiff of World War III.

Anybody got any good news?

"I do, Daddy," says the little girl one night at dinner.

We do these mandatory Sunday dinners now, compromise attempts to gather the increasingly busy kids in one place — to catch up, educate, mock, enlighten, tease, challenge, entertain and look each other squarely in the eye. In other words, a family dinner. They're not perfect. Which, to me, makes them perfect. I'm sort of a connoisseur of failed good intentions.

On this night, all four kids sit round the table, and you can see the little bones in their jaws working on the chewy griddle beef.

"They are like Indians trying to soften fresh leather into shoes, turning the meat over in their mouths, looking for weak spots in the sinew. Could've gone with a better cut of sirloin, I suppose. Next time."

"You have good news?" I ask the little girl.

She mumbles something about going to church camp for a week.

"That is good news," I tell the little girl, though I will miss her every day. Considering her bloodlines, she is strangely courageous in the way she marches off to summer camp, chin up and hugging her favorite pillow. It's an uncanny amount of poise and verve. At least for us.

"Anybody else got any good news?" I ask.

My wife reminds us that we're going away to the beach soon, where the waves always seem to massage away care and worry, and rinse life down to its barest components. Sun. Sand. Lime. Tequila. Aspirin. Coffee.

But there's more to rejoice over. Turns out someone hosed down the front porch without me even asking — a first.

Then one day the toddler, invigorated by the cooler weather, locked himself in my closet. We found him quickly. That's good news, I guess. When captured, he was sitting on my dress shoes and sucking on my favorite yellow necktie. Probably tasted like soap.

"We got more ties," I told him after the rescue.

"You know, I'm kinda full," he said.

"Look, this one tastes like vermouth," I said.

"Catch me later," he answered.

At dinner, my wife tells us how she got the DVD player to work again, good news indeed.

Later that evening, I notice that the clouds are again moving in the proper direction — left to right, left to right — meaning that nature's air conditioning is fixed and we can all venture outdoors again.

Even in tough times, small pleasures seem to endure. Anybody got a Pop-Tart?

Boyfriend who can't remember names skips the introductions

DEAR ABBY: My boyfriend, "Zack," has been a bartender for many years. He has a terrible time remembering the names of his many customers who consider him a friend.

When we're out and about, we often encounter these people. Because Zack cannot remember their names, he simply does not introduce me to them. I feel very left out. Of course, they stare at me and wonder who I am, and it's a very awkward situation.

Zack refuses to admit to people that he can't remember their names. He says they would be offended, especially since he has known them for many years. Is there any way to deal with this?

DEAR ABBY
Jeanne Phillips

REDFACED: Absolutely! As soon as the person glances over at you, smile and say, "Hi! I'm 'Melissa.' What's your name?" It works every time.

RS: When your boyfriend sees these people, he probably thinks, "There's rum and cola," or "gin and tonic." His problem is not uncommon among people in his profession.

DEAR ABBY: Could you please resolve a question concerning proper table manners?

When you are at a restaurant that has cloth napkins, is it proper to place your napkin on your lap as soon as you are seated or after the server takes your order?

JULIA IN FAIRBORN, OHIO

DEAR JULIA: Your napkin should be unfolded and placed in your lap as soon as you are seated.

DEAR ABBY: Five years ago, my 25-year-old son was killed in a boating accident. It was a very difficult time, as you can imagine. He was engaged to be married. His fiancée has since moved on with her life, and I have come to terms with my son's death.

My problem is that the mother of one of my son's close friends continues to remind me of this. She calls me every year near the anniversary of his death and wants to take me out to dinner. She always talks about what a "wonderful young man" my son was, how tragic his death was, etc.

Abby, I really can't stand this type of behavior. This year, she presented me with a photograph of my son that her son had taken about a year before his accident. When I saw the picture, it was like a knife in my heart. All of the horrible memories came flooding back.

I think that in some sick way, this woman thinks she is doing a good deed. I didn't want to hurt her feelings by telling her this, but I see that I can't stand another year of her morbid behavior. Someone who has lost a child doesn't need reminders. We all grieve in our own way.

M.A.R., MARLTON, N.J.

DEAR M.A.R.: The last line of your letter says it all. Some parents welcome the opportunity to talk about the child they lost, but I see that you feel isolated in their grief by friends and family who are afraid to raise the subject for fear of hurting them, which leaves them with bottled-up pain they can't express.

I am certain that the woman who is reaching out to you has no idea how unwelcome her gestures are. You would be doing you both a favor if the next time she calls, you explain to her that "we all grieve in our own way," and your way of dealing with your loss has been to move forward and put it behind you.

Therefore, there will be no more dinners, no more reminders of the loss you feel so deeply, and no more souvenirs. Thanks, anyway.

Fish out of water at the pet store

Already the fish from the fair are dead, so we are out of the pet store buying replacements, a yellow guppy and a Dalmatian puppy. The kid working the fish department, who has impressed us with his fish knowledge, puts the instantly named "Gups" in one bag of water and "Lauren" (we already have a toy duck named "Molly") in a second. He hands them to my girls. My 11-year-old nephew, Matthew, who is in my charge for the week, thinks we better hurry home and get the fish in the aquarium.

PERSONAL FILE
Jeanne Marie Laskas

"It'll be fine." He sighs, grows silent. He thinks I'm the Crazy Aunt, I can just tell.

Fish don't belong in movie theaters. This seems to be his main concern. Life has categories, and these two don't intersect. He's looking at Gups. "Hey, the instructions on the bag say you're supposed to take the fish immediately home," he says. "It says it right here."

Oh, dear home. Now I'm sunk. (And a rule is 30 minutes away, and the movie starts in 10.) Where Matthew comes from — my sister Claire's house — people obey the rules. Here is a little ship, whereas mine is, but only by comparison, loose. Claire and I were just talking about this when she dropped Matthew off. "How is it that you just keep getting more relaxed and I keep getting more structured?" Claire said. She was remarking on the messiness of my home, not criticizing it, but rather wondering how she might embrace a life of having kid drawings taped all over the walls, of no designated flip-flops basket by the back door, of a broken hose reel that has not been replaced, and so the hose is snaking in and around the garden which is, however, blooming, thanks to the water religiously applied. "See, I would have to roll the hose up each time," Claire said. "And I don't have time to roll the hose up each time, so mostly I don't bother with the flowers in the first place."

She said she feared that she was missing out on a lot of life, because of all her rules of living, and I was getting a headache, trying to decide which of us was superior. I copy her organizational systems and commitment to order. She has dinner ready every night at 6; has Laundry Day, during which she folds immediately; she manages all of this, and her three kids, while working as a pediatrician. Her life is a grid pattern, whereas mine is... sorry. The older we get, the more we seem to polarize, even as we keep reaching across the divide for a touch of each other's ways.

So, how would Matthew survive in the Crazy Aunt's life? One night we didn't have dinner until 9:30 because we were all out playing and having too much fun to come in. "But... it's 9:30!" Matthew was saying. "And we're eating dinner."

He was beaming, tasting life on the wild side. I felt the responsibility keenly. People survive living outside the box, I wanted to show him, as ridiculous as it seemed to be the harbinger of that message. I am hardly an example of any kind of life. I have a job, I pay taxes, I don't take illegal drugs, I exercise on an elliptical machine for 32 minutes per day.

So, the fish. The movie. And now a rule. I ask the kid with the fish knowledge how much time we have for Gups and Lauren with the water provided.

"About an hour," he says, with a shrug. Oh, brother. I explain about the movie. The kid says he'll give us an extra bag of water, and midway through the movie we can pour it in the old water from a high distance, refreshing the oxygen content.

Matthew looks at his watch. "We've already used up 10 minutes, and the movie is a two-hour movie, plus then we have the ride home."

He continues his calculations, all of them proving that Gups and Lauren are goners. "This is no time for math," I tell him. "The fish will be fine. I promise."

It's stupid to promise that a fish won't die. Stupid to trust hope and feeling and convenience over mathematics. There is so much riding on this.

We get the large bucket of popcorn, eat the whole thing. Midway through the movie I go to the bathroom and do the water exchange, hoping I don't get caught, wondering how it is that now I feel like a criminal.

Miraculously, both Lauren and Gups survive. At home we put them in the aquarium and the exhale goes on for hours. "I can't believe we took fish to a movie," Matthew says, adding, "Next time can we take a hamster?"

Watch your tail feathers, Sagittarius, and don't strut too much

IF AUG. 13 IS YOUR BIRTHDAY: Don't make decisions or changes of importance in January and March when your judgment might be off center. Next spring and summer, romantic yearnings may become the motivating factor in much that you do. You could be more sensitive to your surroundings and able to play like a child in the realm of imagination, so may feel younger than your years. Because you seek glamour and escape, you might not see others clearly, so ask trusted friends for their opinions before becoming involved with a new romantic partner. dance in all areas of your life by this time this year.

ARIES (June 21-April 19): Escape from the trendy. The most elegant, classic design will better suit your sense of style and bring lasting contentment. Social mores might not be exciting, but will please others.

TAUROS (April 20-May 20): Do unto others, etc. A little extra generosity is in the air, so it is easy to smooth out differences and achieve a spirit of teamwork in the week ahead. Ask for favors or extra leave.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): You can't keep a good man down. Maybe those you mingle with are overly optimistic, but at least they are easy to get along with. Be grateful for smooth sailing in relationships.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Shine with a purpose. Attain whatever heights you desire by voicing your intentions. Solid values make a good foundation upon which to build your life. Share your wisdom with others.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): There is wisdom in humility. The only errors encountered will come from conceit. Themes for the week ahead include forming lasting relationships and good business judgment.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Finish your nest. Spend both time and money wisely. A sense of values means you needn't be extravagant to own the best quality item. Solve a dispute by simply calling a truce.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): It pays to send the very best. People may expect big things of you or your dreams could grow by leaps and bounds. If you make a point of being cooperative, others will be kind.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Play nice and play fair. Make the most of pleasant celestial conditions to entertain loved ones and enjoy the good things. It is too nice a day to play carelessly with cutthroat intentions.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): The rooster who struts too proudly could end up as Sunday dinner. Relationships become figure through displays of enthusiasm and generosity, but optimism can't replace facts.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Your favorite hookup might have very good ideas. Friends and lovers make your life a bit less absurd against a tendency to be extravagant with the piggy bank this week.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): The rebel without a cause is a being who is out of date. Let negotiations disperse and make pretty apologies if you were out of line. Accept gracefully the things that can't be changed.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Forgive and forget. If there has been a confrontation, it is best to kiss and make up as soon as possible. If one of your favorite toys has broken, replace it and move on.

Relax. It's Done.

FAMILY LIFE

Parents can ease transition for college-bound

By Phil H. Shoel
For The Associated Press

After problems getting to class on time and difficulties with a roommate, Bobby Gwizdz told his parents he had enough. The freshman at Michigan State University wanted to quit college and come home. Life at a big university just wasn't for him.

Psychologists call this the "dump call," a normal reaction to college life for some freshmen. Bobby's mother, Judy Putnam, who works near the campus and calls herself a "swoop in and save mom," admits she may have contributed to her son's difficulties in his first weeks at college. She drove him to class occasionally and intervened in the roommate crisis.

When a counselor told her she was giving her son a signal that he couldn't handle the situation on his own, Putnam pulled back. But it was difficult.

"He has always been a little fragile, and I have a special attachment to him," she says. Today, her son, who has cerebral palsy, is a senior at Michigan State, a regular on the dean's list, and on his way to receiving a social studies degree and teaching certificate.

The trials the family endured are common, says Laura S. Kastner, a psychologist at the University of Washington and co-author of "The Launching Years: Strategies for Parenting from Senior Year to College Life" (Three Rivers Press, 2002).

For freshmen entering college this fall, everything is

Tips for parents of college-bound freshmen

1. Remember, it's a myth that personal control ends when kids turn 18. Young people between 15 and 25 are emerging adults who often need support from their parents and can benefit from a close relationship with them.
2. Parents should do their own developmental work, preparing for the changes in their own lives when a child goes off to college. When parents are indecisive or unsure about the change, it sends the wrong signal to their children.
3. Parents should convey their faith that the same competence that got the young person into college will see them through it well.
4. Come up with a plan for handling spending allowances, and tailor it to the particular freshman. Some might be able to handle their own credit cards responsibly; others will need more parental oversight.
5. How often should parents contact their college freshman? If your kid is begging you not to call so many times, or is waiting three days to respond to e-mail, that's a signal to make an adjustment. The kid will let you know.

about to change, and that's also difficult for parents, Kastner says. But by dealing thoughtfully with the anxieties that come with leaving home, parents can make the transition much smoother.

They must recognize teens' anxiety — often expressed in "funny behavior" — in the weeks before college begins. For some teenagers, that means spending almost every waking moment with high school friends, to the almost total exclusion of parents. Students sense the impending loss of longtime friends and know parents will always be there, Kastner explains.

Anne Reeks of Houston noted a different behavior from her son, Sam Tassenfoss, who enters the University of Missouri this fall.

"This summer, Sam seemed to rediscover an appreciation for family activities.

"We eat together, and we played Monopoly on Sunday night, and it has probably been a year since he willingly sat down to do that with us," his mother says.

Parents with their own anxieties and feelings of loss are advised to filter what they say to college-bound children. Avoid sitting down and having everyone stew, Kastner says.

She recalls hearing one parent tell a child that going off to college meant they had spent their last Mothers Day and Fathers Day together.

"Stop talking to me like I am dying," the kid responded.

Instead, parents should flip the conversation from loss to appreciation for the child's achievement, Kastner says.

A particular challenge for Darval McDaniel of Katy, Texas, helps his daughter, Darby, then a freshman, move into the Oxford campus of the University of Mississippi in this August 2004 file photo. For freshmen entering college this fall, everything is about to change, and that's difficult for students and parents.

parents may be devising a plan to stay connected with their freshman, without intruding. The Internet and e-mail provide an effective link, but even that can require strategic planning. Predictably, parents are more likely to hit the response button immediately when they got a message from their kids, while students are more likely to wait three days before responding to a parent's e-mail.

"E-mailing is really helpful," says Susan Boyd of Birmingham, Ala., whose daughter, Amanda, is attending Pitzer College in Claremont, Calif. "The problem with phone conversations is there is this two-hour time difference and it seemed like whenever I called, it was not the time to talk."

In the stressful days leading up to departure, an occasional dose of reality is a good antidote to the romanticizing of the college experience, Kastner says.

"Despite the buildup, colleges are a mixed bag of experiences," she notes.

Entering freshmen are emerging adults and should be treated that way, but they bring a mixed repertoire of skills to college life.

"Messes should be expected," Kastner says.

And what if parents get the dreaded "dump call"? Be responsive but don't overreact, the experts say.

College students making these calls are trying to reconnect emotionally to their parents, and may make extreme statements.

"Nine times out of 10, young people hang up the phone feeling better, while parents feel worse," says Kastner.

Pluto: Is it a planet or not?

Last summer, astronomer Michael Brown announced that he had discovered a body larger than Pluto, orbiting the sun well beyond the ninth planet.

Ever since then, considering that both it and Pluto have far more in common with one another than with the other eight planets, there's been an uncomfortable question hanging in the air: Should Pluto be considered a planet?

There are arguments to be made both ways. Most astronomers agree that if Pluto had been discovered today, it wouldn't be considered a planet.

Rather, as a small, icy body in a large, elliptical orbit, it would fall squarely into the class of the Kuiper Belt objects, of which over 1,000 have been discovered since 1992.

On the other hand, argues Brown, the term "planet" is a nebulous one which carries considerable weight of tradition. He compares it to the way geologists use the word "continent." Europe's designation as a continent is not based on geology, but no one seems to mind, nor is anyone arguing to strip Europe of its continental status.

Resolution of this thorny issue may be close at hand. This week the official organization in charge of astronomical nomenclature, the International Astronomical Union, is holding its 26th General Assembly in Prague, Czech Republic. On the agenda are two items of particular relevance to Pluto.

One is consideration of Brown's proposed name for his discovery, a closely guarded secret which, pre-

Still, as Brown notes on his Web site, Pluto's status may remain in limbo a bit longer. The latest rumors are that the IAU committee in charge of defining a planet may only use this week's meeting to decide on how to make a final decision!

Hawaii on the cheap

By Tara Godwin
Associated Press writer

LANIKAI BEACH, Hawaii — Not a millionaire? You can pretend you're among the monied in Hawaii by soaking up the sun and sifting your fingers through the sugary sands outside a celebrity's obscenely priced home — without having to pay the rent. That's because Hawaii is one of those lovely places where the beaches, including the somewhat restrained luxury of Lanikai on Oahu, are by law the domain of the public. Not even the most highly placed movie star or menacing hotel worker can (legally at least) chase you off your strip of sand.

Though Hawaii is notoriously expensive, impecunious but crafty travelers can easily revel in much of what the state has to offer while holding tight to their pennies.

Sticking to the most populous island, Oahu, is a good idea for those on a tight budget because of two very valuable advantages: more low-fare, direct flights and cheap public transportation to just about anywhere on the island. Once you're here, take in a show. A favorite among free-loaders — there's no shame here — are the free nightly Hawaiian music and hula shows beside Kuhio Beach in Waikiki. As a bonus they're followed by fireworks on Fridays. And on Saturdays and Sundays be sure to catch the free second-run films shown at Sunset on the Beach.

Should you feel the urge to get in on the act, check out the Royal Hawaiian Shopping Center, which offers free hula and ukulele lessons as well as instruction in Hawaiian quilting and lei making.

Otherwise, get your gear on and get outdoors. If you've opted to take the full cheap route and go carless, the bus is $2 a trip, or buy a four-day tourist pass for $20 at a local convenience store. Better yet, get the $40 monthly pass used by the island's commuter crowd.

Print out maps for free from the bus system's Web site. And have patience — the buses cover a lot of ground, including a scenic circle-island route, but are generally the slowboat to wherever you're going.

One tactic to extend your mobility is to rent a bike. Both the North Shore and Lanikai have pleasant bike paths paralleling their main drags. The bikes cost about $20 per day and you can put them on the racks of any city bus. The limit per rack is two bikes.

Aside from lounging on the beautiful beaches, hiking is one of the best ways to experience the island atmosphere. The state provides directions and free topographical maps of Hawaii's trails on the Internet. Hawaiian Trail & Mountain Club and the local chapter of the Sierra Club both regularly run guided hikes for a requested donation of $2 to $5.

On your own, the hike to the Manoa Valley Falls is a safe, old favorite. But on the other side of the island is the slightly less traveled Maunawili Falls. After a hot morning hike through the forest — keep your eyes peeled for egg-shaped passionfruits — a plunge in the pool below the falling water is priceless.

Some intrepid sightseers also clamber up and jump off the picturesque falls ... but that doesn't mean you should.

Another scary-looking leap popular among 15-year-old daredevils lands jumpers in the ocean just below the late heiress Doris Duke's posh, Islamic-style mansion, Shangri-La.

To get there, walk down to the beach at Kulamann Place in Duke's tony Black Point neighborhood, where you'll find a lagoon for swimming and beaches optimal for napping. A precipitous climb along the ledge to the left brings you to a rectangular sea water-filled tank from which local teens launch into the blue below. And above you'll catch a glimpse of Duke's 1930s splendor without having to pay $25 for a tour.

If watching professionals risk life and limb is your pleasure and it's wintertime, then the North Shore is your destination. If the waves are at all good, they will be crawling with surfers pulling jaw-dropping tricks. And if a surf contest is on, you'll be treated to a performance by the world's top surfers for nothing more than the cost of the sunscreen.

On the way up, you can stop at the massive swap meet at Aloha Stadium early on the weekends to buy bargain souvenirs and gifts for people back home. Twenty dollars for 10 T-shirts is not an uncommon find.

Among the more relaxed activities on Oahu is the Saturday farmer's market at Kapiolani Community College near Diamond Head, featuring local honey, produce and tropical flowers.

"You can just wander around, smell and sit," said Helen Griffin of Honolulu, as she headed to a tai chi class at the campus's nearby chapel. Beaches, hikes and Honolulu's smaller restaurants are also a good bet for budget-minded travelers, she said.

Going local and searching the Internet for free and cheap entertainment is another trick, to enjoying the island and keeping things affordable, said

Jon Zhou, of Philadelphia, as he recently left the market. "Ask the locals where to go," he said.

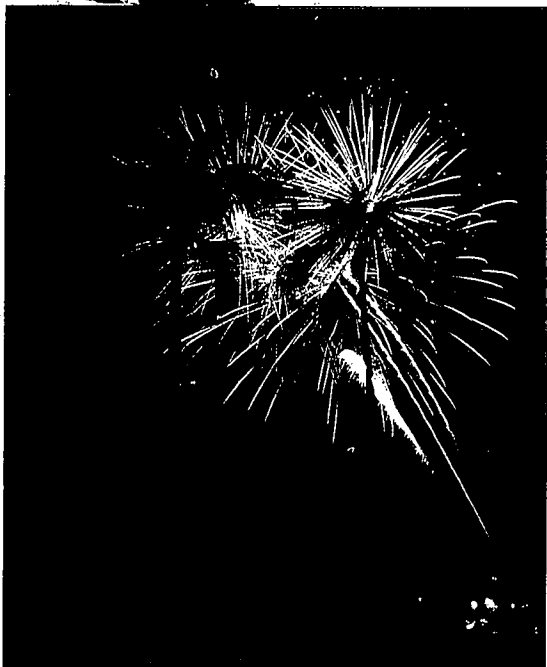

To get a sense of the strong military history of the islands, visit the National Memorial Cemetery of the Pacific. Located in the crater of an extinct volcano, the cemetery also commands excellent views of the city below.

The USS Arizona Memorial is another must-see for remembering the 2,390 lost in the 1941 attack on Pearl Harbor. Admission is free for a full guided tour, including a movie with footage of the attack and a ferry ride to the memorial.

The numerous Buddhist and Shinto temples around the island provide an opportunity to see a variety of architecture and religious practices not often seen on the mainland. The imposing but serene Muryang-Sa Buddhist Temple of Hawaii at the back of Palolo Valley also offers beautiful views of the city in the distance.

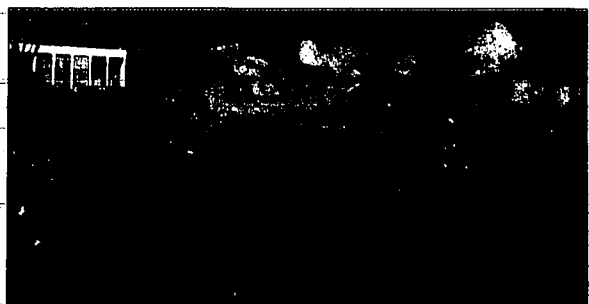

For a taste of pre-statehood Hawaii, take a stroll through the grounds of Iolani Palace where the Royal Hawaiian Band delivers a free performance at noon most Fridays.

A few blocks west you'll find a warren of shops offering inexpensive lunches to downtown office workers. Ninji Sushii, for one, offers quality California rolls at under $4, practically a freebie by Hawaii standards.

ABOVE: Standing under a pair of palm trees, people watch the weekly Waikiki fireworks show put on by the Hilton Hawaiian Village Resort July 14 in Honolulu.

TOP: A hula dancer performs a traditional Hawaiian dance at the nightly torch-lighting and tula show held at sunset on Kuhio Beach in Waikiki.

Why Do Other Realtors Want Us To Keep Quiet?

Maybe it's because we would tell you how we became the third largest real estate company in Southern Idaho in less than 10 years.

Or maybe we would tell you how we're connected to a nationwide buyers network, check full of people who want to buy Magic Valley real estate.

Or maybe we would tell you that you will never be tied to a long, lengthy contract...EVER!

Or maybe we would tell you about our highly motivated sales team of over 30 agents who really know real estate!

Or maybe we would tell you about our exclusive Home Advantage Discount Card, giving you discounts from local stores to help make your property ready to sell.

This list can go on and on, but it doesn't have to. We would like to tell you more in person.

So call us today!

Fill in the grid so that every row, every column, and every 3x3 box contains the digits 1 through 9. That's all there is to it. There's no math involved. The grid has numbers, but nothing has to add up to anything else. You solve the puzzle with reasoning and logic. Find the answers for today's puzzle on page F-16.

THE ACES ON BRIDGE Bobby Wolff

Dear Mr. Wolff: A few weeks ago you showed the responder to a two-club opening bid making a negative bid of two diamonds when his partner bid two hearts. Please explain to me what system of bidding is involved in this jump to four diamonds on a singleton, with heart support. It seems unusual to me!

ANSWER: I suggested that a jump to four diamonds would show a raise in hearts and short diamonds, a splinter bid, to describe your hand at one go. Since three diamonds at your second turn would be natural and show diamonds, there is no need for the jump also to be natural. The splinter jump will facilitate partner's valuation of his hand for slam purposes.

Dear Mr. Wolff: Is it a good idea to play an artificial defense to your opponents' strong one-club opening bid? If so, what would you recommend?

ANSWER: Lew Mathe devised a simple defense: double shows the majors, one-trump is the minors, and jumps are weak. This also applies after the negative response of one diamond to one club. Defenses such as Suction or Crash are more complex and show either one-suiter or two-suiters. They can confuse the opponents, but often prevent you from bidding as high as you should in defense.

Dear Mr. Wolff: When partner opens one spade and the next hand bids two clubs, should you bid with a weak hand and a long suit, such as ♠ 7-4, ♥ K-10-7-6-5-2, ♦ 10-2, ♣ K-4-3? If so, what action should you take?

ANSWER: With a slightly better hand (replace the heart two with the jack), I can make a weak-jump response of three hearts, or make a negative double and then bid three hearts at my next turn. That shows a hand with a long suit not good enough for a direct two-heart bid, which would be forcing. Either route would be OK. With your actual hand I'd advocate passing; partner is not necessarily done yet.

Dear Mr. Wolff: What happens when declarer tells his partner to play any card from dummy? Can an illogical card be mandated by one of the defenders?

ANSWER: Strangely enough, that is indeed the rule. If declarer asks his partner to play anything, the assumption must be that there are no illogical cards to play! After all, if dummy has an ace declarer wants to keep, he will not ask his partner to play "anything," will he?

Dear Mr. Wolff: When my partner opened one diamond in third seat, I responded one spade, and my partner passed. My hand was ♠ K-10-9-6-4, ♥ 5-2, ♦ A-Q-10-2, ♣ 4-3, and four spades would have been easy. My partner said that I should have bid two spades to show a maximum pass. Is that right?

ANSWER: I've never seen a right answer so wrong! Yes, two spades might be right — but not to show a maximum pass. A jump to two spades is not weak, but it cannot be strong either since it is made by a passed hand. Instead, it shows five spades and a diamond fit. As a passed hand you won't just have a weak hand with a long suit that is worth a response, or you would have opened initially.
