When lawmakers from eastern Idaho proposed to a create community college programin-Idaho Falls that would be funded partially with money from the state general fund and rely less on property taxes, other lawmakers said the state simply couldn't afford it. The response set off the first simply couldn't afford it. The response set off the first of several arguments about how the committee was focus-how the committee was focus-how the committee was focus-first mather than the better good of the state.

"I know and you know that the state can't afford it," said Sen. Bart Davis, R-Idaho Falls. "That's when we start to get into all these petty differences about how these things affect our hometowns. What we need to do is stop thinking about our own hometown, and start-thinking about our state." But the committee was not willing to use state money to fund additional community colleges, so several proposed fund additional community colleges, so several proposed commendations were reject-ed including the proposal to create a technical college in Idato Falis.

But even among the argu-ments, which at times bor-dered on the absurd, the com-mittee did agree on several commendations that will go to the Legislature.

Other recommendations

Other recommendations included: Lowering terms for trustees from six years to four, changing the election of trustees to the dates of major elections, and increasing the availability of student aid to non-traditional students.

Also at issue was how the state could equalize the cost of professional-technical courses in Idaho. For example, students at Boise State University pay about $150 more per credit hour than students at CSI pay for the same class.

One recommendation proposed a three-year grace periosed a

One recommendation proposed a three-year grace peri-od where the state would com-pensate schools that lower their tuition costs, but law-makers argued that it would climinate the competition between colleges in Idaho so the recommendation was rejucted.

"The question about inequitable fees is why were they inequitable to begin with? said Jerry Beck, president of CSI. If the state has to come in and find a way to make those fees equitable, I think a good question would be why were they inequitable and where is the money scine?"

and where is the money going?

The committee will send drafts of the recommendations to the Legislature, which will either approve or reject them.

But it was clear Friday eventing when the sixth and final meeting was adjourned that the debate was not resolved. The debate over colleges and universities providing services in other service areas was not resolved, and there was no agreement as to how the state can help provide affordable education in Treasure Valley where more than 800 students are being turned away annually by Boise State University. And that may be why some of the college and universities have taken matters into their own hands by working with each other, as well as other private groups, to expand their services.

Sen. Dean Cameron, RRupert, mentioned during the committee discussion that "certain institutions" are working with private groups to offer services where they are needed.

When asked if CSI was worting with a private foundation, Beck said he could not comment on it at the time. However, he did say that CSI would not seek to offer lower division courses in the Treasure Valley unless Boist State University or the State Board of Education requestits services. its services.

The third wave of American migra-ion to these small town agarbs, which another American economist has called the "exuthan movement," fol-lows centralization in cities from rural argas to cities (1880-WWII), then from cutes to the subarbs (Post-WWII to the Late 1990s).

transportation technologies, deregu-lation of industries and desire for a better quality of life.

Schultz- pointed out that Il ko is already taking advantage of improved communications technology, deregu-lation and quality-of-life factors to grow and diversify its economy.

Evidence that agurbs have increas-ing socio-economic impact are shown in many statistics, he said.

For example, one in three U.S. jobs is found in agurbs, and they have a job growth rate 2 to 2 1/2 times greater than suburbs and cities. On average they are 25 to 50 miles from urban centers but, in towns like Elko, they can be farther.

Schultz, offered "7 1/2 keys to success," with specific examples directly applicable to Elko. According to Schultz, these keys include:

- Have a can-do attitude.

- Shape your vision.

- Leverage your own resources.
- Baise up strong leaders.

- pproach. Maintain local control. Build your brand.

• The seventh-and-one-half key is what Schultz called the "teeter-totter factor." To Illustrate this point, be described the towns of Rockingham, N.C., and Mooresville, Ga. Rockingham, which has lost two MASCAR races in recent years, is now on the teeter-totter. On the other hand, Mooresville created a mutto of "Race City USA" and developed an entrepreneurial cluster to attract 49 racing teams after the textle sector started dying out.

Another town that tipped the teeter-totter in its favor is Montpelier. Vt. Realizing that property taxes produced far more benefits for re-sidential services.

Getting its chips into all three game consoles galvanized IBM

Associated Press writer

BOSTION — No matter whether Nintendo Co. Microsoft Corp. or Sony Corp. with the video game console war, there already is one huge victor: IBM Corp. which designed and makes the microprocessors for all drue units. Not very long ago, some analysts were suggesting that IBM—edi. its-microelectronics division, which produces processors for IBM servers and a wide range of other devices, including automotive and telecommunications goar.

As recently as 2004, IBM was struggling to attract enough outside chip-making work to cover the enormous cost of manufacturing. Sales of chips to other companies remained flat that year and chip profitability was marginal at best. Now, because of the video game deals, IBM is expected to see about $3.7 billion in sales of chips and associated design services this year, up from $2.9 billion in 2004. Analysts estimate the unit is profitable.

But even those gains dont capture how much game chips have galvanized IBM.

Using the engineering consulting work it did for Microsoft, Nitnendo and Sony as a model, IBM has formed a new technology collaboration solutions' unit that's expected to post $4 billion in revenue this year. Internal projections call for that division to hit $10 billion by 2010 and $20 billion by 2015.

Even more importantly, executives say, the company's efforts to design chips for the very high demands of video games have given IBM a portfolio of chip technologies it can apply to many other systems, including computers for medical imaging, defense and complex simulations.

"From a technological perspective, we still have a tremendous amount of upside," said bernic Meyerson, chief technologist for IBM's systems group, "Weve only gone down this road one turn."

The Indians defense stepped up and stepped all over Shelley, effectively shuring the Russers out of the half. After allowing over 200 nushing yards in the first half, the Indians only gave up 77 in the second. There was also heavy pressure on Higham when he attempted the pass. During the third, Sirucek recorded a pick, and senior lineman Tanner Leckenby broke through the Shelley line to get in Higham's face and slap the ball out of the air.

NEW YORK — Gary Sheffield was traded from the New York Yankees to the Detroit Tigers on Friday for three pitching prospects.
Sheffield, played for Tigers manager Jim. Leyland and team president Dave Dombrowski in 1997, when Leyland managed the Marlins to the World Series title and Dombrowski was Florida's general manager.
T'm more than happy to be reunited with guys that I'm familiar with. Sheffield said.
Detroit and New York reached agreement on the deal on Tuesday, and the Tigers had a three-day window to agree to a contract extension. Sheffield and the AL Champlons agreed Thursday night to a two-year extension through 2009, and Sheffield. Itad a physical Firday.

extension through 2009, and Scheffield Jud. a physical Friday.

"This is one of the ultimate bats in baseball and one of the ultimate people in baseball." Leyland said. "I have the ultimate people in baseball." Leyland said. "I have the ultimate repose for him."

Detroit's current starding outfield has Craig Monroe in left. Curtis Granderson in center and Maggilo Ordonez in right. Sheffield will be primarily a designated hitter but will see some time in the outfield, Leyland said. "We have said all along that we wanted to add a big bat." Dombrowski said.

Sheffield said becoming a DH could prolong his career, and he's happy to rejoin Leyland and Dombrowski.

They treat you like men." Sheffield said. "To reunite with them after 10 years is a blessing."

The Yankees exercised Sheffield's S13 million option last weekend to prevent him from becoming a free agent, and Sheffield said wednesday the Yankees had asked him to provide a list of teams he wouldn't mind being traded to At the time. Sheffield said "middle men" on the Yankees blocked him from speaking with George Steinbrenner and said that if the owner's health wasn't an issue, he was confident he'd stay with the Yankees for 2007.

"The only thing I'm disappointed about is I did-n't bring them a world championship," Sheffield said. "I went for the big stage to win a ring."

"Tim pragmatically coming everyusing my purya-cians recommend, and I'm working my way through it."

Walsh said the cancer first was diagnosed in 2004, but he feels better since a series of blood dransfusions in the past month.

"The worst phase was three or four weeks ago. I've come back dramatically since, and I'm bet-ter." he said.

He said he was going public now, because word had begun to circulate.

Walsh was 47 when he first became an NFL head coach, and he spent just 10 seasons on the sideline. But he left an indelible mark, winning three Super Bowls and turning the 45ers into the sideline side in the left an indelible mark, winning three super Bowls and turning the 45ers into the sideline study of the side of the side of the native crossful team of the 1960s with his inno-native measurements and turning the 45ers into the riques.

The Broncos boast the league's best rush defense, allowing a market best rush defense a bare of the WAC with two more games to claim at least a share of the WAC title. The game was moved from 8 p.m. to 4 p.m. MST. ESPN had picked up the game, but then dropped it because it was going to conflict with other big games Saturday. The teams were understandably perturbed by the run-around hey got from the network. BSU is 3-0 this season on ESPN and 19-4 all-time. The Spartans were more concerned because the game is in San Jose, but the Broncos don't really seem to care; when or where they play, just of the season of the sea

The Bengals hope that last week's loss to Sacramento State was the lowest point they'll descend to this season. The Hornets were among the worst offensive clubs in Division i-AA football yet mcked up 376 yards of total offense. They had five plays in the game that netted 25 yards or more.

ISU now faces a two-fold problem. One is that the Bengal defense, which was a question mark heading into the season, hasn't gotten any better, in fact in some ways its grown worse. The Bengal pass defense is now second to last mattonally in 17AA football.

Compounding coach Larry Lewis wees its fact that the offense has been crippled the past few weeks by injuries to the wide receiver corps, forting untested freshmen into the lineup and resulting in miscommunication with quarrerback Matt Gutlerrez.

The past two weeks have seen ISU score only 24 points total, yet there isn't a lot Lewis can do about it at this stage of the game. "We are going to do the things that give us the best chance to win, and if we can the things that give us the best chance to win, and if we can continue to get our younget guys on the field we will, "said Lewis. "With as banged up as we are, some key positions like the receiver and the defensive secondary spots."

Simmering behind the scenes is what appears to be the start of some discontent among the fans. Towards the end of last year's 5-6 maik some fans were asking for changes in the program. Action on the aquifer?

Board may fund more recharge sites

BOISE — The Idaho Water RESOURCE Board will consider Tuesday whether to fund stud-les for three recharge projects on the Eastern Snake Platn Aquiffer, one of which may be built near lerome. If approved, the recharge sites would feed water — owned by the state or extra water from spring runoil — back to the depleted aquifer that supplies water to everyone from Ashton to King Hill.

That bill failed, but during the same legislative session, Congress directed the Idaho Water Resource Board to Water Resource Board to develop a plan for managing the aquifer. The Wendell site is a pilot project for a system of recharge sites the board will consider funding art its next meeting on Tuesday in Boise. Currently, excess water and leaking canals account for the bulk of water that returns to the aquifer. When the Wendell project becomes operational, it will recharge the same amount of water as 40 miles of canals, Blew said. If the project is successful, Blew said it will likely expand to 100 cfs. And that's when people may see the project's success firsthand.

The really big winner here

"The really big winner here is the Thousand Springs area," Blew said, Model simulations predict most of the Wendell project water will feed springs from the aquifer south of Hagerman. "If we were to expand (the, project to 100 cfs) and find a constant enough water source, you may be able to see a difference at the springs." First, though, more studies have to be completed at the site.

In a week or two, scientists will bore a hole 250 feet deep will bore a hole 250 feet deep at the project site and drop in a camera to see just how clear a path awaits percolating water.

to get the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service to accept a plan for managing wolves. Park County filed the motion to intervene Thursday. County Attorney Bryan Skoric sald the county would want to be able to participate in any settlement negotiations.

The state sued last month in U.S. District Court in Cheyenne.
It's Wyoming's second lawsuit since the U.S. Pish and Wildlife Service rejected the state's plan in 2004.
The Pish and Wildlife Service has required Montana, idaho and Wyoming to submit state wolf-management plans it deems acceptable before it will remove wolves from Endangered Species Act protection.

Wyoming's plan would allow wolves to be shot with little oversight outside of northwestern Wyoming. But the federal government wants wolves to be more protected than that.

Wyoming's first lawsult failed after a federal judge said the state should have first petitioned to have wolves delisted under the delisted under the Endangered Species Act. The state did that last summer and the petition's rejection cleared the way for the second lawsuit Oct. 10.

Haggard sex scandal raises questions pastors help or hurt faith communities?

Pastor Ted's influence was felt everywhere in New Life Church: in the videos shown at worship: in the New Life books to the videos shown at worship: in the New Life books he recommended. And In the story of the church itself. He started New Life in his basement, building it into a 14,000-member nationally known megachurch. As the Rev. Ted Haggard's fortunes rose, so did the church's megachurch. As the nex, nex largards fortunes rose, so did the church's. So when Haggard fell spectacularly from grace in a scandal involving drugs and allegations of gay sex, many wondered if New Life, so the to his public persona, would crash with him.

The answer has significance far beyond the Haggard tragedy. As coangelical megachurches have sprung up around the country, concerns have grown over whether superstar pastors help or hur faith communities. faith communities fails communities.

"When you get to these top said Scott Thumma, a professor at Hartford Semianry in said Scott Thumma, a profes-sor at Hartford Seminary in Connecticut, who specializes in studying megachurches. "It's just like a business where the name of the f vander is, in fact, a trademark." America has always had big-pame preachers — from Billy name preachers — from Billy Sunday, the pro baseball player turned evangelist, to Billy Graham. But the two were not closely tied to a single church.

The Rev. Ted Haggard speaks at the World Prayer Center on the New Life co NOW AUVA: DETERMINENT HE INFORMATION AND ASSOCIATED OF FREE PROPERTY OF SAME HE STATE OF SAME HE SAME

"When you get to these top 25 or 50 of the largest or most influential churches, these pastors are clearly celebrities. They were the founders, they created much of the growth and they are, in some sense, a brand in and of themselves."

With such high pro-files, word of any wrongdoing will spread quickly, intensify-ing the damage to them and their congregations. . . Haggard felt the impact first-hand last week. On Nov. 2. Mike Jones of Denver came forward saying he had drug-fueled homosexual trysts regu-larly with Haggard over the last few years.

The claims spread through The claims spread unrough the internet, where they were placed side-by-side with video and past news articles in which Haggard had condemned gay marriage and had presented his family life, with wife Gayle and their five children, as a model.

writing is angrier than I am,' says atheist Sam Harris, who has written books in which he says reliefon fosters divisiveness.

In his bully pulpit, atheist devoutly believes

NEW YORK — There are really just two possibilities for Sam Harris. Either he is right and millions of Christians, Muslims and Jews are wrong. Or Sam Harris is wrong and he is so going to hell. This seems obvious when-

This seems obvious whenther there is the seems of the s

"There is this multicultur-"There is this multicultural, apologetic machinery that keeps telling us that we can't attack people's religious sensibility." Harris says in an interview. "That is so wrong and so suicidal."
This is Harris at full throtte, you listen to him and think, "Well, that is going to land him in the hospital."

Instead, it has landed him on the best-seller list, 'The End of Faith' won. the 2005 PEN/Martha Albrand Award for First Nonfietion and sold more than 270,000 copies. 'Letter' to a Christian Nation,' now No. 11 on the New York Times best-seller list, was inspired by reaction to his first book, which as his grow new first book and is also among the first to indict religious liberals.

The un-gospel according to Sam has found a huge audience, but every bit as striking is the counter-reaction to Harris among religious scholars. Mention his name to academics of just about every religious persuasion and you can alu ost see their eyes roll, Oh, th-1 guy.

dangers of fanaticism find his argument ham-handed.
"I think this country needs a sophisticated attack on religion." says Van Harvey, a retired professor of religious studies at Stanford University. "But pushing moderates into the same camp as fanalies, that seems like a very crude mistake."

Chaplain controversy continues to afflict military

WASHINGTON — The U.S. military is being buffeted by dueling legal claims over religion, with one set of plaintiffs contending that the Pentagon is suppressing evangelical Christianity and another set arguing just the opposite—that the brass gives the most aggressive evangelicals free rein to proselytize in uniform. Although Congress Intervened this fall, directing the Air Force and Navy to rescind conference and Navy to rescind controversial new policies on religion, chaplains on both sides of the issue said the congressional action only muddled the waters. "Congress took action, but who won? I'm not sure. The only thing I can safely predict is, get ready for new controveries ower the place of evangelism in the armed forces," said retired Navy captain Gary-Pollitt, executive director of the Military Chaplains Association, a private, non-profit group representing chaplains in all the services.

In the latest lawsuit, an evangelical Christian chaplain is charging the Navy with violating his First Amendment rights by forbidding him to pray "in the name of Jesus" at public ceremonies.

Chaplain Gordon

Chaplain Gordon Klingenschmitt filed the law-suit Oct. 25 in U.S. District Court in Washington with assistance from the Rutherford Institute, a Charlottesville, Va-based public interest law firm that previously sued the Pentagon over its policy of Chaplain Gordon requiring U.S. servizewomen stationed in Saudi Arabia to wear a Muslim headcovering. Klingenschmitts suit alleges that the Navy has effectively established a civic religion and is suppressing this Christian faulth by requiring hardware when speaking the control of the companion of the co

THE ACES ON BRIDGE⁸

Bobby Wolff

"Once, in finesse of fiddles found I ecstasy."

— Thomas Ernest Hulme

The intrafinesse sometimes

The intrafinesse sometimes sounds more complicated than it actually is. It involves first finessing against a particular card, and then dropping that card.

Mark Feldman of New York found an entertaining variant on this theme. Feldman was sitting south at an Internet session and had an awkward hand to describe after the inverted-miner sehad an awkward hand to describe after the inverted-minor sequence. (His partner's two-club bid was forcing, showing at least limit raise in clubs.) Feldman described his shape fairly accurate, but North construed the three-diamond bid as a slam try and moved on over the sign-off.

The good news was that East's second double attracted a spade lead, rather than the diamond lead that would have beaten six clubs out of hand.

lead, rather than the diamond lead that would have beaten six clubs out of hand.

Knowing from East's first double that he would have most of the cards, plus major-suit length, Feldman took dummy's ace of spades; drew a round of trumps, then led a heart to dummy's eight. After ruffing the spade return, he could cross to dummy with a second round of trumps and run the jack of hearts, eventually picking up the nine of hearts for his vital second discard. One might even follow this line: without the informative auction. I suppose.

If there is any West player who would put in the nine of hearts initially to, give declarer the losing would put in the links of hearts, it ally to give declarer the losing option of playing him for 10-9-third of hearts, I do not want to play against him, ever!

ANSWER: Although I am a firm ANSWER: Although I am a firm believer in supporting with sup-port, if ever there was a hand to bid one heart with, temporarily concealing your support, this is it. Your plan is to raise diamonds on the next round, suggesting extras plus secondary support.
