New ISDB director foresees changes in deaf, blind education

By Joshua Palmer
Times-News writer

GOODING — Mary Dunne chooses her words carefully.

But who can blame her? As the newly appointed director of the Idaho School for the Deaf and the Blind, she will oversee the most divisive issues surrounding deaf and blind education in Idaho. Parents, students, educators, lawmakers and even her own staff will carefully follow—and scrutinize — every decision she makes.

And her position is not one that's coveted by many administrators.

Two previous directors resigned under circumstances that can best be described as unusual. State Board of Education officials refuse to talk about the resignations, saying they are a personnel matter.

But when the State Board asked Dunne to be the next director, she agreed regardless of the pressures surrounding it.

"You wouldn't take on this type of work if you didn't feel that you could make a difference," Dunne said. "It's stressful work, and we're constantly being assessed to make sure that we are keeping up with the needs in today's world."

To do that, the ISDB has been changing the way it provides services for deaf and blind students.

But it certainly has not been easy.

The Legislature's Joint Finance-Appropriations Committee and the State Board of Education approved recommendations last year to expand outreach programs throughout the state. The programs provide services to deaf and blind students in the communities where they live, rather than requiring them to live at the Gooding campus during the school week.

Elk rancher files claim against Idaho

The Associated Press

BOISE — A former elk rancher who had more than 100 domesticated elk escape from his Fremont County hunting preserve last fall has filed a $1.3 million tort claim against the state, alleging it was negligent and capricious in its handling of the incident.

Named in the claim are the Idaho Department of Fish and Game, the state Department of Agriculture, and the governor's office, whose actions the claim says were "negligent, unreasonable, arbitrary, capricious and malicious."

"Tort claims are generally a precursor to a lawsuit, unless a settlement is reached."

"It's pretty hard to continue to operate an elk ranch without elk."

— Rex Rammell of Rexusburg

The state has 90 days to respond to the claim, which was filed Tuesday with Idaho officials by Rex Rammell of Rexusburg.

Jon Hanlan, a spokesman for Gov. C.L. "Butch" Otter, said Wednesday the state would not comment because of the potential pending litigation.

Last August, about 160 elk fled Rammell's Chief Joseph hunting preserve, prompting then-Gov. Jim Risch to order an emergency hunt to reduce the chances they could spread inferior genes or disease to wild herds near Yellowstone National Park.

Hunters killed 36 of the elk and quarantined others for genetic testing. In court documents, Rammell contends far more died as a result of the hunt. He also claims that Risch's emergency hunt put him out of business and violated his property rights.

"It's pretty hard to continue to operate an elk ranch without elk," he said.

Idaho callers looking for lawmakers find Jesus instead

By John Miller
Associated Press writer

BOISE — Most people who call the Legislative Information Center at the Capitol in Boise are looking for their district's lawmakers, not advice on the afterlife.

But that's what they get if they dial the number for the center listed in the 2007 Legislative Directory.

The helpful 78-page booklet includes information on all 105 lawmakers in the Idaho House and Senate, contact information for legislative support staff, crib notes on legislative procedures — and, unfortunately, the wrong number for legislative information.

In a roughly 30-second message callers hear after dialing the bum number, a bubbly woman's voice says: "Hi there. If today were the last day of your life, would you be ready to meet God?"

She goes on to ask callers to consider what Jesus Christ has done on their behalf, "so that when your last day comes, you'll be ready."

A reverse directory from 2005-06 indicates the number, which differs from the correct one by a mere digit, is listed for someone named "D Shurtz," though messages left by a reporter after an answering machine kicked in weren't immediately returned.

Legislative Services, whose staff assembles the directories every year, said it was a simple typographical error. For anyone who wants their directories corrected, Legislative Services' Juanita Thompson said she'll glue in the correct number — (208) 332-1000 — atop the incorrect one.

"Actually, it's easier to read," Thompson said of the patch.

Of course, there may be days when lawmakers are unable to come up with solutions to address callers' pressing issues.

For instance, Gov. C.L. "Butch" Otter might need some divine assistance to get his grocery tax credit past a wary Legislature that's on the verge of passing an alternative plan.

Buzz kill Buhl Middle School bans energy drinks

By Blair Koch
Times-News correspondent

BUHL — Consuming even just one can of any energy drink and it can keep a kid squirming in his seat. After three, the results can be even more disruptive.

As of Monday, it doesn't matter if the drink of choice is a Red Bull, Full Throttle, Monster or Jolt soda.

They will no longer be allowed at Buhl Middle School.

BMS Principal Byron Stutzman said the move to ban energy drinks from campus is primarily a health concern with the additional goal of curbing some unruly behavior.

"These drinks are nothing but sugar and caffeine," Stutzman said. "They're horrible for you."

Students seem to have noticed the boost of energy a can provides and have taken to drinking multiple cans at a time, Stutzman said.

"You get that much caffeine and sugar in a kid and they aren't able to sit still or learn," Stutzman said.

"The middle school has long been without sodas in their vending machines and this step in eliminating students from bringing amped-up drinks to school will enhance Buhl High School Principal Mike Gemar called the ban a step in the right direction.

"It makes perfect sense to me," Gemar said. "Although we haven't experienced the same problem here and are not in a situation where we need to ban them at this school."

Consequences for bringing energy drinks onto the middle school campus include having the drink taken away and for repeat offenders, a chat with parents.

English only for Idaho, Senate says

BOISE (AP) — Saying it will bring the people of Idaho closer, senators voted 20-15 Wednesday for a bill that would make English the official language of Idaho.

Even though little would change if the bill passes, backers say there's a symbolic value in declaring that all state business would be conducted in English.

"If it's official, it's different. When you say it's the official language of Idaho, it has special meaning," said Sen. Mel Richards, R-Idaho Falls, who is sponsoring the bill. "We're going to draw all the people of Idaho together."

Currently, 27 states have passed some form of official English laws.

Sen. Edgar Maloney, D-Pocatello, who is of Samoan descent, and one of the Legislature's few minority members, said he thought the bill was unnecessary, and that the message it would send if passed was ominous.

"Is there any question in anybody's mind that English is not an official language? I don't think so," Maloney said. The bill, he said, "hurts the spirit" of those for whom English is not a first language.

The bill now heads to the House.

ISU, school districts strike concurrent enrollment deal

POCATELLO (AP) — More than a dozen school districts have signed an agreement with Idaho State University that officials say could boost the number of high school students who go on to attend college.

The agreement makes it easier for high school students to take college-level courses through Idaho State University's Concurrent Enrollment Program, said ISU Provost Robert Wharton. Under the program, high school students will pay $65 a credit to attend the college-level classes at their own high school.

Part-time college students normally pay $214 an hour. If they were able and willing, a student could complete two years of college before graduating from high school. That represents a substantial savings," Wharton said.

Although high school students have been able to take college classes at ISU for years, the agreement between ISU and 15 southeastern Idaho school districts streamlines the concurrent enrollment program, Wharton said.

"It sets common expectations for how this program is going to run," he said.

Within months, the ISDB began sending resources from the Gooding campus to its outreach programs in other regions of the state. Six months ago, seven positions were cut at the Gooding campus to hire more people for the outreach programs.

Dunne said that regardless of the changes in ISDB administration, the school will continue to expand the outreach programs. She said the changes will not be easy for some families, but she said the programs are more effective at serving deaf and blind students.

"The greatest amount of impact is going to be on the families of the students that attend school on this campus," Dunne said, referring to the Gooding campus. "In my mind, the rest of the families in the state will receive more services."

She said the school will continue to send resources and employees to areas such as Treasure Valley, where it can reach more students.

The program in the Boise area already is understaffed, she said.

Dunne said that the Gooding campus will change, but she believes the state will maintain some form of residential campus.

"I don't think that the (Gooding) facility in five or 10

Students alone to decide speakers at BSU

BOISE (AP) — Beginning next year, students at Boise State University will decide how to spend money designated for bringing speakers to the university.

The new proposal comes after members of the Conservative Students Coalition protested that the university was bringing in too many liberal speakers, amounting to ideological indoctrination.

Conservative students met with BSU President Bob Kustra about their complaint. The meeting spurred a proposal for a new student-only board that will choose speakers.

"We'll really make a difference on campus," said Brandon Stoker, a senior who leads the Conservative Student Coalition. "This board will influence students for decades."

Speakers visit the Boise State campus each year at the request of several different organizations; no central body invites them.

Recent guest speakers have included civil rights leader Jesse Jackson, who was a guest of the annual Martin Luther King/Human Rights Celebration, and former Vice President Al Gore, who was invited by the Frank Church Institute.

The conservative students said their study of several years of speakers at the university showed a bias toward inviting liberals to speak. They said the $60,000 or so collected each year in student fees — $2 paid by every student each semester — should not be used to pay for speakers selected by a panel that includes students, faculty and staff.

The Jackson speech used student fees, while Gore waived his usual speaking fee of $125,000. At a legislative presentation last month about Boise State, Kustra said he agreed with Stoker that students should have more say in how speakers are chosen.

The new board will likely be led by the student body president and vice president, and might include representatives from groups such as the Conservative Students Coalition, the College Democrats, the College Republicans, and "every student group that has some kind of opinion or perspective on how we should be bringing," said Rodney Curley, chairman of the human rights event.

Curley called the plan a good compromise, but said he wasn't sure he could find a more conservative speaker for the event he invited Jackson to this year.

"For something like (Martin Luther King Day) it's going to be more liberal; it has to be," he told the Idaho Statesman for a story Wednesday.

The new panel is expected to be established by September. It will be a student-funded and student-operated speaking series, university spokesman Frank Zhang said.

The 6-year-old Distinguished-Lecture Series also brings two or three high-profile speakers to Boise State each year. Student fees and corporate sponsors have traditionally been used to pay for those speakers. Under the agreement reached with Kustra, student fees will go to the new student-run board to pay for speakers, and the Distinguished Lecture Series will use donations.

Hammill said his Boise-based attorney, John Runft, came up with the $1.3 million figure, which includes about $290,000 in lost elk and business losses.

State law calls for domestic elk to be slaughtered if they've been on the lam for more than six days to prevent the potential for spreading disease and polluting the genetic purity of the wild elk herds that roam the region.

The incident led to a flurry of proposed regulation bills in the Idaho Legislature and renewed the debate over so-called "canned hunts."

Rammell has since sold his 168-acre elk operation, with elk to be slaughtered if they've been on the lam for more than six days to prevent the potential for spreading disease and polluting the genetic purity of the wild elk herds that roam the region.

a prized bull elk. He has tangled with state regulators related to his operation in the past, and at one time faced tens of thousands of dollars in fines. He also clashed with hunters and game officials over shooting his animals, and was cited for obstruction of justice Sept. 29.

He has pleaded not guilty. "All I did was sit on my own elk," he said. "It can't be that big of a crime. Our defense is that the governor's order is illegal. He has no right to kill or take my elk. Therefore, the Fish and Game operated without authority. We plan to prove the order was illegal."

Taliban: 4,000 fighters ready to battle NATO

KANDAHAR, Afghanistan — A top Taliban commander said Wednesday the group has 4,000 fighters bracing to rebuff NATO's largest-ever offensive in southern Afghanistan, now in its second day.

Suicide bombers are ready, land mines have been planted and helicopters will be targeted. Mullah Abdul Qassim, a top Taliban commander in Helmand province told The Associated Press.

NATO, meanwhile, announced the capture of a senior Taliban fighter who had eluded authorities by wearing a woman's burqa. Mullah Mahmood, who is accused of helping Taliban fighters rig suicide bomb attacks, was seized by Afghan soldiers at a checkpoint near Kandahar, the alliance said.

Speaking by satellite telephone from an undisclosed location, Qassim said the Taliban has 8,000 to 9,000 fighters in Helmand province, including some 4,000 in the north, where NATO launched its largest-ever offensive Tuesday. He said all the fighters were Afghan, denying reports of hundreds of foreign fighters in the region.

All of them are well-equipped and we have the weapons to target helicopters," Qassim said. "The Taliban are able to fight for 15 or 20 years against NATO and the Americans."

TURKEY

Court orders access to YouTube blocked

ISTANBUL, Turkey — A court ordered access to YouTube's Web site blocked Wednesday after a prosecutor recommended the ban because of videos allegedly insulting the founder of modern Turkey, Mustafa Kemal Ataturk.

Paul Doany, head of Turk Telekom, Turkey's largest telecommunications provider, said his company had immediately begun enforcing the ban. "We are not in the position of saying that what YouTube did was an insult, that it was right or wrong," Doany told the state-run Anatolia news agency. "A court decision was proposed to us, and we are doing what that court decision says."

Visitors to the YouTube site from Turkey were greeted with the message: "Access to this site has been blocked by a court decision."

A message in both Turkish and English at the bottom of the page said, "Access to www.youtube.com site has been suspended in accordance with decision no: 2007/394 dated 06.03.2007 of Istanbul First Criminal Peace Court."

The court — acting on a petition from Turk Telekom — ruled later Wednesday that it would revoke the ban as soon as it is ascertained that the offending videos had been removed from YouTube.

IRAQ

Suicide attacker kills 30; 90 dead throughout Iraq

BAGHDAD, Iraq — A suicide attacker blew himself up in a cafe northeast of the capital, Wednesday, killing 30 people as a wave of violence left 90 Iraqis dead throughout the country.

The bloodshed persisted as Iraqi security forces struggled to protect more than 1 million

Shiite pilgrims streaming toward the holy city of Karbala for annual religious rituals that begin Friday. The pilgrims are facing a string of attacks along the way that have claimed at least 174 lives in two days — among 284 killed across Iraq since Tuesday.

They included 22 people — 12 police commandos and 10 civilians — who died Wednesday in a car bombing at a checkpoint in southern Baghdad set up to protect pilgrims, the U.S. military said. An Iraqi TV cameraman working for a Shiite-owned station was among the civilian dead, his station said.

Just north of the capital, a powerful bomb killed three American soldiers trying to clear explosives from a major highway, the U.S. military said. One American soldier was wounded in the attack.

American troops have stepped up efforts to clear and secure major highways around the capital as part of the Baghdad security crackdown, which began last month.

But the operation, which will eventually see an additional 17,000 U.S. combat troops in the capital, has so far failed to intimidate Sunni insurgents who have retaliated with attacks outside the city — including those against Shiite pilgrims.

INDONESIA

More than 100 survive after jet crash-lands

YOGYAKARTA, Indonesia — Survivors of the fiery crash-landing of a Boeing 737-400 Wednesday said the plane appeared to be going too fast and shook violently before it touched down, lurched off the runway and exploded in flames, killing at least 21 people.

About 115 dazed and bloodied survivors staggered from the Indonesian jetliner after it broke through a fence and came to rest in a rice paddy.

Those killed were trapped in the wreckage of the Garuda Airlines plane after it suddenly caught fire, sending billowing clouds of black smoke and flames high into the air. The plane had been carrying 140 passengers and crew, officials said. Two people were missing.

It was the third plane crash in as many months in Indonesia, and raised questions about the safety of the country's booming airline sector.

Alessandro Bertellotti, a journalist with Italian broadcaster RAI, said the plane was going at a "crazy speed" as it approached Yogyakarta airport after a 50-minute flight from the capital, Jakarta.

"It was going into a dive and I was certain we would crash on the ground," he told the Italian news agency ANSA.

Quick turnaround: State House looking at water issues

Just days after high court decision, legislators address funding, management plans for state's aquifers

By Jared S. Hopkins
Times-News writer

BOISE — The water is moving back and forth and then back again.

Just days after the Idaho Supreme Court struck down a lower court ruling that water distribution should be based on seniority and not necessity, state lawmakers are preparing to address water issues after the current legislative session ends.

The state House passed two bills this week — and saw another introduced in committee — that address funding for water appropriations by the Idaho Department of Water Resources and management plans for Idaho aquifers.

• House Bill 241, which was passed Tuesday, allocates $557,000 to the IDWR for continued management of water between groundwater and surface water, users while a permanent aquifer management plan is put together.

• A resolution approved Wednesday recommends $850,000 be appropriated from the state's general fund to further study aquifer management. CDR Associates, a consulting firm, has been working with Idaho water users, including 250 stakeholders, in hopes of figuring out a plan for divvying up what comes from the Eastern Snake Plain Aquifer.

The money is intended to pay for an additional 16 months of work by CDR. The company recently recommended that the Legislature allocate $10 million to acquire water rights, a suggestion met with skepticism from lawmakers.

• Finally, legislation introduced Wednesday in the House State Affairs Committee expands the appropriation authority of the IDWR to include all aquifers in Idaho, not just the Eastern Snake Plain Aquifer.

The bill is not expected to be voted on this session but will receive a hearing and be referred to an interim committee on natural resources.

The Supreme Court decision released Monday reversed a

June 2006 ruling by 5th District Judge Barry Wood, who said the state's adjudication system — allocating water between senior and junior users — was arbitrary and unconstitutional. The decision was hailed as a victory for groundwater users and a symbolic one for development and growth in Idaho.

While lawmakers have said that the bills they're considering are unrelated to the Supreme Court case, they generally have agreed the high court decision provides for the immediate future.

State Rep. Bert Stevenson, R-Rupert, who has said the only part of Wood's decision he agreed with was the first-in-line, first-in-right doctrine, said the bill introduced Wednesday is essentially a formally and similar to House Bill 241.

"It is clear from this Supreme Court ruling that the (IDWR) has a responsibility to manage the water for the state," Stevenson told the House State Affairs Committee. "Now, whether we manage totally in the first-in-time, first-in-right, that will be debated again in the course of different times."

But the lawmaker who introduced the bill Wednesday, Rep. Tom Laertscher, R-Iona, was one of three dissenters to House Bill 241. His legislation asks that all aquifers in Idaho — not just the ESPA — be considered when looking at the fate of the state's water.

Idaho Power stocks reservoirs with trout, some may be worth cash prize

By Matt Christensen
Times-News writer

IAGERMAN — Eighty-thousand fish stories are waiting to be told after Idaho Power Co. this week stocked southern Idaho reservoirs with thousands of 10-inch trout.

Beginning Monday, the utility company released Iagerman-raised rainbow trout in C.J. Strike, Lower Salmon Falls and Upper Salmon Falls reservoirs, as well as downstream from Bliss Dam, as part of a federal licensing agreement that requires Idaho Power to provide recreational opportunities at these facilities.

A bonus for anglers: Some of the trout are fixed with jaw tags that make the lucky catcher eligible for cash prizes.

Idaho Power won't say how much the tags might be worth because it doesn't want to encourage overfishing, said company spokesman Dennis Lopez. The tags, he said, are a way for Idaho Power to gauge the success of the restocking program.

This is the first time trout are being stocked at the reservoirs — because of a new licensing agreement — but the company regularly stocks Milner Dam with cutfish and releases steelhead in various watersheds.

Fish with two tags are worth a guaranteed cash prize, and the angler is entered into a lottery drawing for $1,000. Fish with one tag aren't worth an instant prize, but one-tag catchers still qualify for the lottery.

The $1,000 drawing is scheduled for September, and another drawing will follow in February.

Anglers who catch a tagged fish should call the power company at (800) 388-6011.

"We'll then send them a check for the indicated amount," said Idaho Power Biologist Steve Brink.

An additional 62,000 trout will be released into the same reservoirs in October.

Halftime special

Student presents Filer graduate with check

By Blair Koch
Times-News correspondent

FILER — The opportunity was too good to pass up.

After raising $3,025, Jake Hurley, a senior at Filer High School, didn't want to wait until April's boxing smoker to pass the money along.

Instead, he expedited the process and decided to present Lindsay Heimkes with a check during Tuesday's FFA donkey basketball game in Filer.

The 20-year-old was paralyzed in a one-car rollover wreck in July and said she is continually surprised by the community's support offered to her after the accident that has left her with only minimal movement of her arms and upper body.

Heimkes is undergoing a grueling physical therapy regimen that includes spending two days a week in Salt Lake City as well as two additional days of therapy in the Magic Valley and she said she draws strength from knowing her community cares.

While the donkeys and FFA alumni and current members rested during halftime, Hurley told the crowd it was his honor to give Heimkes the money he raised from auctioning a steel pickup bumper he built for his senior project.

"This event is a real big deal for our school," Hurley said. "It is the first time in over 10 years that we've been able to have a donkey basketball tournament. The town is here and Lindsay was able to come and I wanted her to have the money."

Auction contributors included Cody Hurley, Dutch Brothers Enterprises, Digmound E. Twin Falls Livestock Commission, Holzen Farms and Bedke Feedlot. Matt Livestock also donated $400 to the total amount raised.

"I feel really good she has the check," Hurley said.

Heimkes, a Filer graduate, was amazed with the gift.

"I've only lived in Filer for five years and never expected anything like this," Heimkes said. "After the accident, I was scared to come home because I didn't know how people would react but everyone has been wonderful to me."

The Heimkes moved to Idaho from Minnesota during her sophomore year. Her athleticism and competitive drive quickly became valuable assets for Filer High School's volleyball, basketball and track and field teams. After graduating in 2006, she began playing basketball for Sheridan College in Wyoming.

The rollover accident happened in Wyoming.

Heimkes' spirit of determination is paying off.

"I'm getting stronger with what I do have," Heimkes said while lifting her left arm. "And it is helping me with my right arm."

Her father, Dave, looks at his daughter with pride.

"We take it day by day," he said. "All of the support has just been overwhelming. We didn't know (Jake) was even doing this for her until the other day and we just couldn't believe it."

Jake Hurley, a Filer High School senior, presents Lindsay Heimkes with a check during the FFA donkey basketball game Tuesday night in Filer.

State house votes unanimously to OK school consolidation plan

By Jared S. Hopkins
Times-News writer

BOISE — The Idaho House of Representatives voted 70-0 on Wednesday to approve a bill to offer school districts financial incentives if they consider merging with other districts.

The measure would offer districts $10,000 to research if consolidation would improve their teaching services, and also provides possible bond assistance and money for severance packages.

"It creates some incentives for people who may be thinking about (consolidating)," said the proposal's co-sponsor, Rep. Wendy Jaquet, D-Ketchum.

"We need to be trying to put more money in the classroom and that's what it does."

In Idaho, 14 school districts provide education for about 250,000 students. In the Magic Valley, school districts in Kimberly Hansen and Murtaugh have seen their areas oppose consolidation.

In 2001, the Center for Policy Research (CPR) at Syracuse University published a study of consolidated school districts that found most small rural school districts saved money if combined.

"That advantage of consolidation is it would increase efficiency," Senate Pro Tem Robert Geddes, R-Soda Springs, the bill's co-sponsor, told the Times-News last week. "But one significant question schools need to ask is if consolidation will provide a better education for students."

The bill, which has passed the Senate, now needs just the governor's signature to become law.

Committee approves energy tax credit

BOISE — The Idaho Senate Local Government and Taxation Committee narrowly approved Wednesday a tax credit for bio-fuel companies.

The 5-4 vote came just hours after one of the committee's members asked the Senate State Affairs Committee to form an interim committee to study tax exemptions.

Under the energy bill, which was passed unanimously by the House, retail fuel dealers who invest in bio-fuels would receive a 3 percent tax credit.

The plan lasts until 2011 and would cost the state $30,000

Mel Hine

TWIN FALLS — Melvin "Mel" R. Hine, 65, of Twin Falls, died suddenly on Monday, March 5, 2007, in Jerome, Calif.

Mel was born on May 6, 1941, in Twin Falls, Idaho, the son of Donald B. and Alice Mae Priest Hine.

He grew up and attended schools in Filer, graduating from Filer High School in 1959. He furthered his education at the Carbon College in Price, Utah, for two years while also playing college basketball. Mel returned to Filer, where he started farming on the canyon rim in Filer. On Nov. 29, 1964, he married Charlene Looney in Twin Falls; to this union, two daughters were born, Traci and Teri. They were later adopted.

Mel worked for many years in farming and as a fieldman for a fertilizer bean and seed company until he retired in 2000. On Aug. 3, 1991, Mel married Marge Busch in Elkton, Nev., and added to the family two more daughters, Jodi and Jenna. Together, Mel and Marge traveled through the western United States, where they worked together for R.V. Park Maps and had the idea of their life. Mel was a referee since he was 20 until the year of 2000. He refereed baseball, basketball and softball for most high school games and was honored to do junior college games at the Jerome County High School. Mel enjoyed being a young athlete that he coached and refereed. As a referee and coach, Mel was a man of fairness and integrity with a great sense of humor. Mel received the distinguished official award for the Northwest section of the NFHS officials' award for his many years of service to the kids and area schools as a referee. From 1992 to 2000, Mel was the golf coach for Jerome and Buhl schools, where he took them to state several times.

Mel's sly grin and twinkling blue eyes brought complete joy to both young and old. There was not one place he'd go without knowing someone from the past or making a new friend. Mel enjoyed golf, woodworking, camping and traveling. But above all, Mel loved his family. He loved guiding and influencing his girls and sons-in-law, teasing and loving his grandkids, and spending time with the love of his life — Marge. He completed her and taught her to live life by not only its depth but width as well.

Mel is survived by his wife, Marge Hine of Twin Falls; his four daughters, Traci, Teri, Jodi and Jenna; and his two sons, Jodi Climer of Twin Falls; Teri Climer (Archie) Wright of Boise; and Jenna (Kolby) Rovig also of Boise; and his sister, Lillmae Mart of Filer. Also surviving are his nine grandchildren: Brittanie, Matthew, Jordan, Nick, Trevor, Isaiah, Tucker, Emma and Teague; and his little buddy, Winnie. He was preceded in death by his parents; his brother, Joe Hine; his sister, Donna Hine; and a grandchild, Baby Shelby.

A celebration of Mel's life will be held at 11 a.m. Friday, March 9, at Reynolds Funeral Chapel, 2459 Hilland Ave. in Twin Falls, with Pastor Paul Burkett officiating. At Mel's request, there will be no public viewing. The celebration of Mel's life will continue immediately following the services at the Jerome County Club for buffet, refreshments and remembrance. The club suggests memorials be given in Mel's name to the Mel Hine Memorial Golf Scholarship Fund. Contributions may be given to funeral chapels or mailed to Reynolds Funeral Chapel, P.O. Box 1142, Twin Falls, ID 83303.

House panel jams up public transit bill

By John Miller Associated Press writer

BOISE — A House panel that failed virtually all attempts this year to raise new taxes for public services dumped another plan Wednesday, this one to let voters raise their own sales taxes to pay for expanded public transit.

The House Revenue and Taxation Committee voted it down 11-7. It had been pushed by Boise Mayor Dave Bleter and Caldwell Mayor Barrett Nambias as a way to bring legislation on Interstate 84 and reduce automobile air pollution.

The decision came after more than four hours of hearings over two days.

Rep. Ken Roberts, R-McCall, part of the all-GOP contingent that rejected the plan, argued it's unfair to make residents of outlying communities, such as his in Valley County who travel to Boise to shop, pay a public-transit sales tax from which they reap little benefit.

Opponents also argued Boise's existing Valley Ride buses are often empty because people want to drive their own cars.

"Quite frankly, we have an urban sprawl issue," Roberts said. "They (residents) want to spread out. Financially independent people want to own their own cars."

This session, the committee has also killed a bill to lower hurdles to creating community colleges and allow voters to raise their taxes to pay for prisons and economic development.

If Wednesday's bill hadn't died, it would have permitted residents to add a half-cent to the dollar local sales tax, if two-thirds of voters supported the plan.

Most of those who spoke focused on the Treasure Valley, the growing area that includes Boise, Nampa and Caldwell in southwestern Idaho where cars now snarl freeways and roads that just a decade ago were just two-lane county byways.

Many here look longingly at cities like Portland, Ore., and Salt Lake City, which have hosted their public transit in recent years with trains taking workers from the suburbs to centers of commerce.

Kelli Fairless, the director of Valley Ride, the transit authority in southwestern Idaho that serves between 900,000 and 1 million riders annually, was hoping for passage. She wanted to ask voters in Ada and Canyon counties in 2008 to support a $29 million, six-year plan to provide high-speed mass-transit buses, transit cars, now and secure right of way, and explore the possibility of commuter rail.

next year, but supporters said the demands and possibilities for alternative energy are bright right now.

Currently, there are plans for three ethanol plants in Idaho, including one in Burley.

Earlier in the day, Sen. Tim Corder, R-Mountain Home, a member of the tax committee, asked the State Affairs Committee to hold a hearing on a resolution that would create a 14-member inter-committee to study exemptions.

The committee voted 4-3 to hold a hearing on the resolution.

Lawmakers have expressed concern this session over tax exemptions and credits and said the decision-making process is often inconsistent.

"Each of those requests seems to be made on the basis of their own individual merits," Corder said.

He said the committee would decide recommendations to the Legislature for how to plan a consistent policy.

Committee OK's bill for injured workers

BOISE — The Senate State Affairs Committee approved Wednesday a bill to expand health benefits for permanently injured public safety employees, including firefighters and police officers.

Under the legislation, a fund for health benefits would be formed for state employees who are injured in the line of duty or in responding to emergency situations. Eligibility would extend to families as well.

"We're really not helping them if we are not providing them that additional safety net," Sen. Mike Jorgensen, R-Hayden Lake, told the committee.

The insurance eligibility would be retroactive to Dec. 1, 2004, which means 25-year-old Idaho State Police Trooper Chris Glenn of Kimberly, who is paralyzed after being shot in the neck in December, could qualify.

Bill to keep animal test results sealed OK'd

BOISE — Without the fiery debate it endured over the past month, a bill that would keep sealed certain animal health test results passed the state House 57-9 on Monday.

The bill, which was rewritten twice amid pressure from special interest groups, permits animal health test results submitted by livestock companies and veterinarians to remain sealed unless they show signs of a regulated disease or require disclosure from the law.

Otherwise, the director of the Idaho State Department of Agriculture decides disclosure.

The new animal bill is somewhat tighter, requiring disclosure when:

- Test results show either state- or federally-regulated diseases.
- State or federal laws mandate disclosure.
- The results show a threat to animal or human health or the livestock industry, as determined by the ISDA or federal Department of Health and Human Services.

The ISDA has said producers and veterinarians are traveling outside the state for product confidentiality.

The bill was originally coupled with test results submitted by seed producers. That measure the House passed unanimously.

House committee kills in-state tuition proposal

BOISE — The House Education Committee last week killed a bill that would have allowed undocumented students to pay in-state tuition at local colleges.

The measure sponsored by Rep. Donna Pence, D-Gooding, would have applied to immigrants who have lived in Idaho for at least three years and graduated from an Idaho high school. Current law mandates they pay the equivalent of out-of-state students.

The vote was 12-6. Committee Chairman Tom Trail, R-Moscow, was the only Republican to vote for it.

Opposition came from conservative lawmakers who questioned whether the state would be seen as aiding illegal immigrants.

Pence, a former teacher, said such criticism is inaccurate because immigrants contribute to the economy, attend schools and pay taxes, even if it is with false social security numbers.

"They don't get off scot-free; they have to pay," she said. "They have been paying everything residents do. They pay their taxes; they go to school."

At least 10 other states have enacted similar legislation.

At the University of Idaho, annual tuition is $11,284 for Idaho residents and $20,894 for non-residents, according to the college's Web site.

"It's pretty polarized in a lot of people's eyes," Pence said.

Ex-convict guilty in Florida girl's slaying

By Curt Anderson Associated Press writer

MIAMI — A sex offender was found guilty Wednesday of kidnapping and raping a 9-year-old girl and burying her alive in a case that led to a crackdown around the country on people convicted of sex crimes.

Lunsford

Just six delinquent about four hours before returning the verdict against Ivo Evaristo Couey in the slaying of Jessica Lunsford, who was snatched from her bedroom in February 2005 about 150 yards from the trailer where Couey had been living.

Couey, 48, was found guilty of first-degree murder, sexual battery on a child, kidnapping and burglary. The jury next must decide whether he should get death by injection or life in prison.

Couey stood staring straight ahead and swaying slightly as the verdicts were read. Jessica's father, Mark Lunsford, who has helped push efforts for tougher monitoring of sex offenders, showed no emotion.

Conservatives call for Libby pardon

"This trial provided a troubling picture of the inner workings of the Bush administration," said House Speaker Nancy Pelosi, D-Calif. "The testimony unmistakably revealed a cautious disregard in handling a national security information, a disposition to smear critics of the war in Iraq."

Hispanic Youth Symposium helps students seek bright futures

The Times-News

SUN VALLEY — Once again, Latino high school students from across the state will be invited to get motivated, stay motivated and stay in school. The annual Hispanic Youth Symposium is designed to encourage Hispanic teens to seek brighter futures for themselves and their families by staying in school, according to the symposium Web site. Using a bilingual format, the symposium's three main goals are mentoring/drop-out prevention, pride in Latino culture/history and encouraging students to pursue higher education.

2007 Hispanic Youth Symposium

April 27-29 in Sun Valley. If you're interested in participating, volunteering or presenting at the 2007 Idaho Hispanic Youth Symposium, call Toni Vandell, (208) 526-0085, or Roberta Jordan, (208) 526-4290, or go to <http://www.hnl.gov/hs/>.

About 300 students will listen to motivational speakers, engage in problem-solving skills, examine possible career paths, and compete in speech, talent, athletic and interactive contests for awards and scholarships. The symposium grew out of a 1988 brainstorming session that focused on ways to curb the 60-plus percent school dropout rate for Hispanic teens in Idaho, according to its Web site. In 1990, about 100 students attended and one $1,000 scholarship was awarded. Since then, more than 3,000 students have attended and scholarships and prizes valued at more than $1 million have been handed out. The dropout rate for Idaho Hispanic students has improved, but is still high at almost 29 percent, according to the symposium Web site. There are about 7,500 Hispanic high school students in Idaho, or 12 percent of the population. More than a dozen colleges and universities from the western states recruit students at the event. In addition to college scholarships, many businesses provide support attendance at a cost of $200 per student or make donations to the symposium scholarship fund of Gem State Diversity Initiatives, according to the symposium Web site. At Wendell High School, Latino students competed in an essay competition for a chance to attend the 2007 symposium. The prompt: How they plan to use their experience at the symposium to help achieve dreams and goals following high school graduation. Eleven students competed for six spots. The selection process was not easy, according to the judges, who were classroom teachers, advisers and Principal Jon Goss, said Leanne Orr, the English as second language teacher and school symposium coordinator. The interest and participation demonstrated by those involved shows a desire to learn more about the unique challenges and struggles confronted by the Latino population, Orr said. "Reading the essays provides a glimpse into the dreams and goals of our students. We can learn a great deal from our students when they speak from the heart to describe personal experiences, share family expectations, and voice their dreams of higher education and a better life for themselves and for their family. The Hispanic Youth Symposium is an event that truly lives on in the minds and hearts of all those that attend." The Hispanic Youth Symposium is an effort between the public employers, federal management contractors, private industry, state and private educational institutions and Hispanic organizations from throughout Idaho. Operational expenses for the symposium are approved by the U.S. Department of Energy — Idaho Operations Office part of annual budget allocation of the Idaho National Laboratory. The symposium has received national recognition from Fortune 500 corporations and has been replicated in youth initiatives in Arizona, California, Idaho and Washington, according to its Web site.

Cartoon adventures of 'El Tigre' debuts

Los Angeles Times

HOLLYWOOD — "El Tigre: The Adventures of Manny Rivera," which premieres Saturday on Nickelodeon, is a bright and energetic new cartoon set in a sort of Mexican Townsville called Miracle City, "a spicy cesspool of crime and villainy" located at the foot of a volcano. But it should be said that as bad as things can get in a town with its own Evil Store, things are worse in the mountain city of Calaveria, a place so bad its mascot is a broken leg. Ep on y to its schoolkid Manny who becomes the superhero El Tigre with a whirl of his belt buckle. He is the son of another superhero, the semi-retired White Panther, who gains power from his Bronze Boots of Truth, and the grandson of a supervillain, Puma Loco, who possesses a Sombrero of Chaos. Manny carries the genes of both: He's fundamentally good but easily tempted into trouble, sometimes by his best friend, Frida, who has blue hair and poor impulse control. Created by the husband-and-wife team of Jorge B. Gutierrez and Sandra Equihua, both born and raised in Mexico, this is the latest in what might be called a short line of Hispanic-themed cartoons, including "Dora the Explorer," "Maya & Miguel," "The Emperor's New School" and "Mucha Lucha," the 2004 Kids' WB series about junior Mexican wrestlers on which Gutierrez and Equihua both worked. "The Powerpuff Girls" is the godmother of "El Tigre," both conceptually and visually, the new show has its own look and feel owing to its design is rooted in Mexican folk art; the palette shows a more than usual attention to reds — and the fact that it's Flash-animated. Originally created for Web-based animations, Flash "Turned out to be a friend to the TV cartoon as well, a compromise between the economic experience of computer-based animation and the personal mark of old-school drawing." It has a special sort of fluidity and speed and other-worldliness and has been used beautifully here in a warty little cartoon with the physical lilt of a swig of Tequila.

Spanish language network goes on air

The Associated Press
NEW YORK — With a ceremonial pressing of a button Monday, the new Spanish-language network V-me hit the air. "V-me is fundamentally about encouraging and facilitating the emergence of the new American Latino culture," said Mario Baeza, the network's founder, shortly after the network signed on. "That most of all, it should be entertaining." A for-profit venture partnered with public television, V-me (pronounced "veh-meh," from the Spanish verb, for "see me") is a 24-hour digital broadcast network.

The Associated Press
MADRID, Spain — Spanish film stars Penelope Cruz and Javier Bardem will work together in Woody Allen's next movie, Bardem told reporters Monday. Bardem, who was in Barcelona to present the movie "Invisibles," which he produced, confirmed that he and Cruz would be filming with Allen in that city in July and August, the private news agency Europa Press said. The 38-year-old actor said he had talked with Allen by phone but had "yet read the script. Details of Allen's movie, including its title, have not been released. # Legislative votes cross fuzzy line on disclosure Comb through the various profiles of Idaho lawmakers, and you'll find a field rife with possible conflicts of interest.

There are doctors, nurses, lawyers, teachers, insurance agents, business owners, elk ranchers, fur trappers, and of course, farmers with water rights. All of them propose, shape and pass laws, some of which deal directly with their own professions. If that's a problem to citizens, don't blame it on legislators. Blame it on the founders who created Idaho's Legislature.

On the whole, Idaho legislators do a yeoman's job in preserving an efficient, part-time lawmaking body.

But when a part-time legislator also carries a full-time job away from the Statehouse, a balancing act must be acknowledged. In that regard, Idaho's Legislature needs to fine-tune how members are allowed to vote on issues that deal with their professional jobs.

Take the case of Sen. Jeff Siddaway, R-Terreton, an elk rancher now in his first term in the Legislature. Domestic elk legislation was already a political hot potato coming in this session. But last month, Siddaway voted against a bill that would have banned live bull hunts on elk ranches. He also voted for another bill, sponsored by elk breeders, that passed licensing standards, albeit it a lower level than other legislation had proposed.

Siddaway openly told committee members of his ties to the industry, and then excused himself from the full Senate vote, where it passed easily. But that's a half-hearted gesture, since it's in committees where a bill's fate is usually determined. He should recuse himself from the full vote, he should have done the same in the committee vote.

Then there's Sen. Tim Corder, R-Mountain Home, who owns a trucking company. Corder sponsored a bill to raise the highway speed limit for trucks while lowering it for cars. He even made a show-and-tell presentation for Transportation Committee members, by bringing a shiny new truck to the Capitol steps. The bill was appropriately shot down in committee.

Each of these cases present unique and varying degrees of debate on ethics. Just because lawmaking is affiliated with a bill that affects his professional career, doesn't mean he must abstain from all votes.

Legislators vote on education bills. Lawyers vote on tort reform. Irrigators vote on water bills. And in many ways, we elect legislators based upon their own professional background.

But questions arise when the bill's impact or the benefits is extended to only a select few, and not the greater good. Furthermore, when a legislator actually sponsors these bills, or defends them at the committee level, it doesn't pass the smell test.

Idaho does have its own Ethics in Government Act, which requires legislators to disclose when an official action could benefit a legislator or his or her family members. But legislative rules don't compel any restriction on requiring beyond that. The state also lacks any laws requiring financial disclosure statements, where lawmakers openly identify businesses, investments and real properties they own.

The attorney general could propose new laws to close those loopholes, but the best remedy may be in the Legislature itself. As part-time employees of the state, their credibility rests on proving that they work for the voters — not their own interests.

Our view:
Idaho's Legislature should tighten rules for votes linked to legislators' professions. What do you think? — We welcome viewpoints from our readers on this and other issues.

Washington spin cycle runs dry

In the end, even the jurors believed that L. Lewis "Scooter" Libby was a fall guy for his more savvy and connected colleagues in the White House, many of whom tried to use elite members of the media to cut the legs out from under an outspoken critic of the Bush administration's Iraq war policy. The problem for Libby, though, is that there is no recognized fall-guy defense under the law. No matter how important or powerful they are, no matter how many cobwebs get off scooters, the Joe Schmo left holding the bag is usually in trouble.

ANDREW COHEN

That's just one of the relevant takeaways from Tuesday's verdict in Libby's federal perjury and obstruction of justice trial in Washington. Another is that, no matter how dry, dense and technical the law may be, it still can come from time to time spelt cold even from the most flamboyant spin that bureaucrats, officials and politicians like to offer. Libby's lawyers were still spinning Tuesday after the verdict, but their words were as empty as their client's defense turned out to be.

There is no mystery to the result here. A jury of seven women and four men convicted Libby because Special Prosecutor Patrick J. Fitzgerald strongly presented a strong case. Government witnesses were focused and likable and most of all, appeared trustworthy — even the journalists who were dragged kicking and screaming to the witness stand. All of them helped convince the panel from many different angles that it was legally inconceivable that Libby simply could have made a mistake when asked under oath by federal agents, prosecutors and grand jurors what he knew about Valerie Plame and when he knew it.

Jurors also convicted Libby because the defense case that his lawyers offered was porous and weak. In all likelihood, the panel deemed him to be guilty partly because he didn't haul himself to the witness stand and explain to jurors how he reasonably could have forgotten the details of a special project — the political and perhaps personal destruction of Plame and her husband, Joseph C. Wilson IV — so soon after being so heavily involved in it. They said with their verdict that they wanted more from Libby's lawyers. More witnesses. More evidence. More compelling reasons to vote "no" on conviction. They got none of these things.

Some trials are hard to explain. This one wasn't. And it was never designed to be. Legally speaking, the case was a simple one. United States vs.

Libby was always more about politics (than law; more about how the witnesses and evidence would play in the court of public opinion than in the courtroom). That is what makes Tuesday's verdicts even more disheartening to White House officials and their supporters. Not only did Libby lose the legal case against Fitzgerald, the White House lost the political case on the talk shows and online blogs and everywhere else where people care about such things.

So now we move to the next phase. Even as they prepare a new trial and look for grounds for an appeal, Libby's lawyers also will begin preparing their client for his sentencing in June. Some legal observers believe that Libby somehow will avoid prison. I am not among them. U.S. District Judge Reggie Walton is likely to sentence Libby to a prison term that is at least twice as long as the prison sentence Martha Stewart received when she lost her federal perjury and obstruction of justice case in 2004. The domestic diva got five months in prison and five months' home detention. Don't be surprised if Libby gets two years or more in prison.

But Libby won't be doing his sorry walk anytime soon. Walton almost certainly will allow him to avoid prison pending the resolution of his appeal. That is likely to take a year or so, depending on a variety of factors, which puts us well into 2009 before this all comes back to a head. The smart money is on Libby losing his appeal and going to prison, and then we all wait to find out whether he is among those who President Bush pardons on his way out of office.

Tuesday was a day the spinning stopped in Washington. But it never stays stopped for long.

Andrew Cohen is CBS News' chief legal analyst and wrote this article for the Los Angeles Times.

Wounded vets: Don't ask, don't know, don't get

I haven't kept count, but it seems to me that the number of times I've seen President Bush and Vice President Dick Cheney give speeches about the Iraq war using smiling soldiers as their backdrops have been, well, countless. You'd think that an administration that has been so quick to exploit soldiers as props — whether it was to declare "Mission Accomplished" on a naval vessel or to silence critics by saying their words might endanger soldiers in battle — would have been equally quick to spare no expense in caring for those injured in the fight.

THOMAS L. FRIEDMAN

The squalid living conditions and red tape that have been inflicted on some recovering Iraq war veterans at Walter Reed hospital and elsewhere — which have been spotlighted by The Washington Post — are shocking in their detail, but not surprising. They are one more manifestation — like insufficient troops, post-war planning and armor — of a war that was really important to get right but really hard, which the Bush team thought was really important and would be really easy.

Bush summoned the country to D-Day and prepared the Iraq, the military health system, military industry and the American people for the invasion of Grenada.

From the start, the Bush team has tried to keep the Iraq war "off the books" both financially and emotionally. As Larry Diamond of Stanford's Hoover Institution said to me: "America is not at war. The U.S. Army is at war." The rest of us are just watching, or just ignoring, while the whole fight is carried on by 150,000 soldiers and their families.

In an interview last Jan. 16, Jim Lehrer asked Bush why, if the war on terrorism was so overwhelmingly important, he had never asked more Americans "to sacrifice something." Bush gave the most unbelievable answer: "Well, you know, I think a lot of people are in this fight, I mean, they sacrifice peace of mind when they see the terrible images of violence on TV every night."

Sacrifice peace of mind watching TV? What kind of crazy thing is that to say? Leadership is about enabling and inspiring people to contribute in time of war so the enemy has to fight all of us — not insulating the public so the enemy has to fight only a few of us.

If you want to compare Bush in this regard with Presidents Roosevelt or Wilson, pick up a copy of Robert Hornsatt's soon-to-be-published book "The Price of Liberty: Paying for America's Wars."

"In every major war that we have fought, with the exception of Vietnam, there was an effort prior to the war or just after the inception to re-evaluate tax and spending policies and to shift resources from less vital national pursuits to the strategic objective of fighting and winning the war," said Hornsatt, a vice chairman of Goldman Sachs (International). He quotes Roosevelt's 1942 State of the Union address, when FDR looked Americans in the eye and said: "War costs money. That means taxes and bonds and means cutting luxuries and other nonessentials. In a word, it means an all-out 'win' by individual effort and family effort in a united country."

Ever heard Pearl Harbor, Hornsatt noted, Roosevelt vowed to mobilize U.S. industry to produce enough for the war effort and family effort in a united country. "Ever heard Pearl Harbor, Hornsatt noted, Roosevelt vowed to mobilize U.S. industry to produce enough for the war effort and family effort in a united country."

As retired Army Maj. Gen. Paul Eaton pointed out last year, because of spending in Iraq, the Army had a $530 million budget shortfall for posts, so facilities got squeezed. If Americans had been asked to pay a small tax to fill that gap, they would have overwhelmingly checked that box. They would have also paid a "Patriot Tax" of 50 cents a gallon to raise the money and diminish our dependence on oil. But no one asked them to do anything other than "sacrifice peace of mind."

If you want to help and don't want to pay for the White House bugle, here are some places to start:

- (1) Coalition to Salute America's Heroes (www.saluteheroes.org)
  - (2) The Intrepid Fallen Heroes Fund (www.fallenheroesfund.org)
  - (3) The Fisher Houses (www.fisherhouses.org)
  - (4) The Walter Reed Society (www.walteredociety.org)
- And one I know personally from my hometown, Minnesota's Military Appreciation Fund (www.thankmtrmops.org).

We can get just about everything wrong in Iraq, and pretty much have, but we've got to give first-class care to those who've carried the burden of this war. It's that simple.

Charlotte Myers was a friend for a lifetime

Frank Charlotte Myers as Charlotte Cummins. She was a best friend of mine when we were in junior high here in Twin Falls.

Even though I won't be able to attend the celebration of her life, I wanted to express my eternal friendship for this wonderful person.

I have fond memories of our years in school together of her caring nature, laughter and deep concern for others, even at the age of 13. Even though we drifted apart in our adult lives, whenever we could connect, it was like we started where we left off. Charlotte never knew a stranger.

My prayers go out to all her family in this time of sorrow. She was a fine woman, mother and friend. Sleep in peace, sweet Charlotte.

Ideas for conservation, schools and politics

Canyon concerns. There are places (Walkiki, Miami Beach, Daytona Beach, etc.) where public view access to the reason for tourism is blocked by high-rise structures. There's a better way.

San Francisco's zoning regulations insist high-rise buildings are allowed only on the hills above. Twin Falls can save the canyon rim and bridge public view by disallowing any large buildings between Pole Line Road (for a View Drive) and the rim.

School concerns. No matter how much money and/or equipment is thrown at education, we'll only produce an outstanding generation when there are acceptable results.

The ability to read and count is more important than dance, volleyball and glee club. The concept of "leave no child behind" by lowering the standard to the lowest scorers is a cop-out.

As long as we graduate seniors who can't find the Pacific Ocean on a map, get the dates of the World Wars to within a hundred years, name the governor of their own state, how can we hope to remain among the world's leading nations?

Private enterprise won't keep sub-standard results. We must expect no less of our future, our education system.

Politics. When local, state and/or national leaders are guilty of check kiting, bribery, drug use, child abuse or pornography, power brokering, transferring secrets to foreign agents we can't respect in our own country, how can we expect it of others?

If a Democrat covers up the fellow Democrat (read Republican, Libertarian or independent), it's morally reprehensible and should itself be rewarded by immediate recall and/or impeachment. There's a better way.

Three strikes work in baseball. If your position affects the lives of others (police, school principal, child care worker, pilot, trucker, etc.), one strike would put you out.

Tax revenue fails to meet its intended goal

What I cannot understand is how the IRS believes taxpayers still owe it money when all taxpayers do is pay taxes after taxes for items that, in the end, do not seem to help the people at all.

Every year, taxes continue to increase and more money is putted out of the hard-working person's paycheck and supposedly sent to important areas such as relief for Hurricane Katrina, Social Security, Medicare, the war in Iraq and Afghanistan, and so forth. However, there still doesn't seem to be "enough" allocated to fund these critical areas.

Why is it the money disappears before ever reaching the spot it needs to be? Where do the millions, if not billions, of dollars of the taxpayers' money go?

It is not difficult to imagine why the working class has become so ignited over the years when the money that it works so hard to earn, and needs to survive, is taken away with no friendly results in return.

So is there something I am missing or not seeing here? Surely this cannot continue, because everyone who has a job just seems to work for free and free does not pay the bills or guarantee somebody's survival.

Letter writers' attacks on George Bush go too far

I just finished reading the letters in the opinion section of your paper. I think the time has come for your editorial staff to revisit the issue of free speech on the letters that you print in this section.

I know there are limits to all our freedoms, including free speech and freedom of the press. We don't allow vulgarity, sexually explicit words or pictures; we try to tell the truth and check our facts for accuracy, but I think we need a better job if we added one more restriction to what we should be allowed to print in our hometown newspaper, the Times-News, and that is no more personal attacks against anyone, including our current president, George Bush.

You may not like his views, his religion, his politics or his administration, but do we have to call him names or use words that take away the dignity that we should show every person we encounter, whether or not we like him or her? Have we all forgotten that we were all made in the image and likeness of God and need to show every person the same dignity and respect that we would like to be shown ourselves?

I don't want our paper to become like so many others that are being used to condone personal attacks of hate and anger toward other persons we don't agree with or like.

Thank you for your consideration and the many heartfelt stories that make the Magic Valley a wonderful place to work and live.

District consolidation not the solution for schools

First, your paper advocates closing down the Idaho School for the Deaf and Blind because of low enrollment. The research that I have done on the Internet tells me that Gooding doesn't qualify any longer as host community because we are not urban enough.

Now you are advocating consolidation of small school districts around the state to create more opportunities for students to get the education that No Child Left Behind mandates. Creating bigger school districts would only make kids from smaller communities travel to larger populated areas to receive their education.

Why has it become a bad situation for children to receive an appropriate education in the state of Idaho for the past 100 years that our state has been in existence? Let's change everything to reflect what a larger community can offer over a smaller one just so we can save some money locally or statewide.

Do you understand the concept of "in the best interest of the children" or just in "best interest of the community"?

Oh, by the way, would Boise school have to consolidate to make their school districts better managed just like the smaller ones? Let's have kids from Canyon County travel to Boise because they would have more opportunities in the mega school district.

Thanks for any response I can get from you.

NEW YORK — Kobe Bryant was suspended one game by the NBA on Wednesday for striking a player in the face, his second penalty for that action in a little more than a month. ... The play was similar to one that drew Bryant a suspension late in January, when he hit San Antonio's Manu Ginobili in the face after taking a shot.

TODAY'S NATIONAL MAP

GOLF

Mr. Woods goes to Washington

WASHINGTON (AP) — Tiger Woods joined elite company Wednesday as one of three players to host a PGA Tour event during their careers.
 But this wasn't about taking his place with Jack Nicklaus and Arnold Palmer. Woods was more interested in the dozen children seated to the side of a packed lounge in the National Press Club, where Woods and PGA Tour commissioner Tim Finchem announced plans for the AT&T National that marks the return of golf to the nation's capital.
 Still to be determined is where the tournament will be played and the size of the field.
 Woods made clear, however, that the tournament would pay tribute to the military over the Fourth of July, and pay for a new Tiger Woods Learning Center in the Washington area as he expands his foundation's goal to help children.
 "The last year or so, we've been looking up and down the Eastern seaboard for a new learning center," Woods said. "And then this thing fell into our lap. It's a great opportunity. I built it here, we just haven't had time to find a site yet."
 The first step is to build a tournament.
 The AT&T National replaces the International outdoor Denver, which shut down last month when tournament founder Jack Nicklaus couldn't find a sponsor, which he blamed in part on Woods not playing the event.
 It will be played July 5-8, and Woods isn't sure if he will be able to play this year because his wife is expecting their first child. But while Palmer bought the Bay Hill Club and Nicklaus built his own course in his hometown outside Columbus, Ohio, Woods is establishing his tournament roots in Washington.
 "That's our intent, to stay here and have this be our home event, hopefully for perpetuity," he said.
 The Tiger Woods Foundation will run the tournament, with charitable money going to the foundation toward building a learning center. Woods' first learning center, which cost $25 million, opened a year ago in Anaheim, Calif.

Tiger Woods smiles during a news conference at the National Press Club in Washington, D.C., Wednesday where he gave details of the new PGA Tour event in Washington in July.

Woods became the youngest player to host a tournament. Bobby Jones was 32 when he Augusta National invitation — which later became the Masters — was held in 1934. Nicklaus was 36 when the Memorial was played for the first time. Palmer was 44 when he took over at Bay Hill, and Byron Nelson had long retired when he gave his name to a tournament in Dallas.
 "Not too many people are fortunate to have an opportunity like this," Woods said. "What Bobby Jones did for golf and starting the Masters, that won't be touched. As far as what Jack has done at the Memorial, or Arnold at Bay Hill or Mr. Nelson in Dallas, those have been true legends of the game. They made a tremendous impact on our sport."
 "I want to build something along that level," he said. "Obviously, with my competitive nature, I want it to be better."
 First the tour has to secure a golf course.
 All signs point toward Congressional Country Club for 2007 and 2008. The club is to vote on the tour's request over the next few weeks, and Woods and Finchem openly lobbied members to approve it.
 "Right now, the energy at Congressional is very, very positive and very supportive," Finchem said. "And we hope that carries over to the response from the overall membership."

PODS Championship: Same tourney five months later, different course

PALM HARBOR, Fla. (AP) — If not for evidence found in PGA Tour records, Paul Goydos might have a hard time believing how much his career has grown since his last trip here to Q-school. He's now a regular at World Golf Championships, not opposite-field events. And he can think about a trip to the Masters, where he hasn't played since Ben Crenshaw was the defending champion.
 "That's a big turnaround as you can get it," Goydos said.
 Some of the statistics are slightly skewed. "It's green," former British Open champion Todd Hamilton said after a practice round Tuesday had him hitting longer clubs. "The ball doesn't roll very much. If the hole says 560 yards, then it's 550 yards — it's not 520 yards and 40 yards of roll. But that doesn't matter. I'll be hitting first, just like always."

 The Copperhead course at Innisbrook was slightly brown and very crisp when played in the fall, and the Bermuda grass was a menace. Now that spring is near and the Bermuda is dormant, Florida golf courses are overseeded with ryegrass to bring out the green color. How much that matters remains to be seen, but the change is hard to ignore.
 "I think you'll be able to figure out more what the ball will do," Dean Wilson said.

MLB: SPRING TRAINING

Sosa hits second home run

The Associated Press
 Sammy Sosa is finding a groove in his comeback with the Texas Rangers.
 Sosa homered for the second time in spring training, going 2-for-3 Wednesday in the Rangers' 9-3 victory over the Arizona Diamondbacks at Surprise, Ariz.
 The 38-year-old Sosa, who didn't play in the major leagues last season, hit a three-run homer that capped a six-run third off former World Series MVP Livan Hernandez.
 "The more games I play, the better I feel," Sosa said. "The confidence is here, and I know I can hit. I believe in myself, and I just keep working every day."
 The Rangers signed Sosa, who is fifth on the career list with 588 homers, to a minor league contract. Since going 0-for-3 with two strikeouts in a "B" game Friday, Sosa is 5-for-12 with two homers and four RBIs in four games.
 Hernandez gave up nine runs — seven earned — and 10 hits in 3 1-3 innings. He struck out one and walked none.
 "I never have a good spring," Hernandez said. "I'm just coming to get my work done and make sure I'm 100 percent for the season."
 At Peoria, Ariz., Barry Bonds made a rare spring training trip and was in a jolt mood.
 Bonds went 1-for-2 with a double and a strikeout in a San Francisco Giants split squad's 5-4 win over the Seattle Mariners.
 He made the 45-minute trek across metropolitan Phoenix after missing three games because of a bad cold. He blew a kiss in the direction of the Mariners dugout before his first at-bat, then blooped his second pitch from Felix Hernandez due to a left fielder.
 As the ball landed between third baseman Mike Morse and left fielder Baul Ibanez, the 42-year-old Bonds kept running to second base. His pop-up slide easily beat Ibanez's throw, and seemed to surprise the Mariners and even his teammates.
 "Yeah, that was a good looking run," Giants manager Bruce Bochy said. "He feels great. He's happy with the way his legs are feeling."
 It showed. After Bengie Molina lined out to end the first inning, Bonds exchanged a smile and a handshake with Hernandez when their paths crossed at the third-base line.
 "How are you?" Bonds asked Hernandez.
 "That's never happened to me before," the 20-year-old Hernandez said later, marveling.

Texas Rangers outfielder Sammy Sosa points to the sky before being congratulated by teammate Michael Young against the Arizona Diamondbacks in Surprise, Ariz., Wednesday.

Reclaiming her identity

Twin Falls woman finds it's not so easy

By Blair Koch
Times-News correspondent

TWIN FALLS — Linda Mortenson had heard the stories about identity theft, but the crime was never on her personal radar until last October when she was unable to pay her phone bill via the Internet.

Having her payment denied was a big red flag, said Mortenson, of Twin Falls, who then contacted her bank to see what was amiss.

"Someone had taken money out of my account and created a joint account in both of our names using my personal information that was stolen," Mortenson said.

After some investigating, the bank provided an essential clue.

"They asked if I knew someone named Starr," Mortenson said. "And I did, but at that point I didn't know her last name or anything much about her."

One thing Mortenson shared with Starr Uscola was a common residence — both had spent time living with Mortenson's son, J. Dee Mortenson, in Twin Falls.

"When I relocated to Idaho from California I lived with my son for a while," she said. "When I moved out I left some of my things there thinking they would be safe at his home than in a mini-storage. I guess they weren't."

In the meantime Uscola and her boyfriend, Michael Eames, moved into the residence.

When I found out about my bank I went back to my son's home to get my things and found a big file containing financial and personal information on a lot of people, as well as paperwork indicating that Starr had opened an account in our names," Mortenson said. "I grabbed it and took the information to the police."

According to an incident report taken by Detective David Heidemann of the Twin Falls Police Department, Uscola had more than just Mortenson's information.

On Oct. 25, Heidemann contacted Uscola who was in custody at the Twin Falls County Criminal Justice Facility on felony charges for possession of a controlled substance.

Uscola admitted that she had stolen the financial identity of Linda Mortenson, as well as the banking information of other individuals," the report said. "Ms. Uscola further advised that she had recorded the birthdates, driver's license information and checking and credit information of multiple people."

On Jan. 22, Uscola entered a guilty plea for misappropriation of personal identifying information and for the unauthorized use/access of a computer in default. On March 14, Uscola will be back in Fifth District Court for her sentencing hearing.

Twin Falls County Prosecutor Grant Loebis said the felony charges can carry a maximum 5-year prison sentence and hefty fine.

It's been a bumpy road getting life back to normal for Linda Mortenson, who had her identity stolen last year. Even an unswerving day at the office is a relief after the drama of regaining control of her finances.

What to do if you think your identity has been stolen

- Place a fraud alert on your credit reports and monitor your credit reports. A fraud alert can help prevent any more accounts in your name.
  - Close any and all accounts you suspect, or know, have been tampered with or opened fraudulently.
  - File a police report with your local police department or the department in the community where the theft took place.
  - File a complaint with the Federal Trade Commission.
- Source: Federal Trade Commission

"Victims of this crime have a lot of work to do in clearing things up," Loebis said. "It's a significant intrusion in their lives."

Luckily, Mortenson found out early on that someone had stolen her identity and was able to cut her losses. According to the Federal Trade Commission, most victims of identity theft go unaware of the problem for about a year.

Still, Mortenson said clearing her name and seeing Uscola brought to justice has drained her of many hours and even more money.

"I've spent about $500 on cell phone bills from calling accounts and keeping up on the police's investigation," she said. "Plus, I had to miss work for court and stuff and all that adds up. I hope that she is put behind bars for a long enough time to see that she can't just steal from people. I hope she gets her life straightened out."

"For now, Mortenson is trying to educate others not to stick their heads in the sand when it comes to identity theft. She no longer uses the computer to pay her bills and is more discreet about her finances."

"I still don't know how she was able to get so much information on so many people," Mortenson said. "But now I know that this crime can happen to anyone."

Where's the water?

Robin Bailey motions toward neighboring irrigation wells near a dried-up pond on her farm near Stockton, Kan., recently.

Some blame farm irrigation for water shortages in Kansas and other states

Irrigation causing headaches

By Maria Sodekum Fisher
Associated Press writer

STOCKTON, Kan. — When Robin Bailey wanted to escape the Denver suburbs, she bought a 160-acre alfalfa farm in northwest Kansas and fell in love with a pair of creeks that raced through the property. Two ponds she added later were just another bonus.

But nine years later, the creeks are dry, the ponds puddle up a bit but are mostly empty, and a nearby section of the Solomon river doesn't run much at all.

And it's not because of drought, Bailey says.

"It's because of irrigators. Once they turn that spigot on down the road, that's the minute you see the water move from the pond."

Irrigation, the cornerstone of modern agriculture that helped the United States become a world food supplier, has become a source of contention for farmers, environmental groups and governments.

Irrigation accounts for the largest demand on freshwater supplies in the United States, and is second only to thermoelectric power in its use of U.S. fresh and saltwater supplies combined, according to the Environmental Protection Agency.

The U.S. Department of Agriculture estimates that while about 16 percent of all cropland is irrigated, largely in the western states, that acreage generates about $60 billion — or about half the value of U.S. crops.

Some farm groups contend water is plentiful and irrigation is necessary to sustain crops and the livelihoods of the people and businesses that rely on a solid farm economy.

They also point to low rainfall and conservation measures that trap water on fields as contributing to water shortages.

But environmental groups are among those who claim irrigation — particularly west of the Mississippi — has helped dry up streams and lower reservoirs, and has threatened the land's long-term viability.

Sandra Postel, director of the Global Water Policy Project in Amherst, Mass., estimates that 10 percent of the food supply is produced by growers who overpump groundwater and calls irrigation a "hidden subsidy" for farmers.

"If you're pumping more water than is being recharged, you're in a deficit situation in regards to water," Postel says. "You're producing food today in a manner that's not sustainable, so you're using some of tomorrow's water to meet today's food demand."

Several states have taken steps to curtail irrigation. Colorado shut down about 400 wells last summer. Farm states such as Kansas and Nebraska have also been developing new plans to stem overpumping.

Kansas is paying farmers to stop irrigating and retire the water rights to wells that draw on underground sources like the massive Ogallala Aquifer, which has been showing signs of depletion in some sections for years.

But Gerry and Linda Franklin, who farm in western Kansas, irrigate one-third of their land with water from the Ogallala. Without it, they'd be out of business.

"The last seven years have been extremely dry. It's been a tough seven years. One year even with irrigating, the crops burned with the hot wind," Gerry Franklin said. "Being able to irrigate is what's kept us in business."

Franklin pointed out that farmers like he and his wife try to conserve water. He has taken a variety of measures, including shorter growing seasons that require less irrigation and replacing sparge irrigation systems with drip systems that are less wasteful.

"Everybody's concerned about the aquifer," he said. "It's our lifeblood, just like it's everybody else's."

Idaho specialty license plates not always popular

The Associated Press

BOISE — They seem like a good idea at the time, but these specialty license plates aren't always big winners in Idaho.

Just 96 school transportation safety plates have been sold, and even Lewiston residents haven't bought the Historic Lewiston plate that's been on sale since 2005. Just 131 plates are in circulation.

An even bigger loser: the science and technology plates that were offered beginning in 2005. They've brought the Idaho Office of Science and Technology less than $1,700, after spending $21,000 to promote them. Through January, just 67 tech plates have been sold, including those bought by workers at the state office.

By contrast, more than 50,000 bluebird, elk and cutthroat trout plates are now in circulation. The three plates have generated more than $900,000 a year for the Idaho Department of Fish and Game's nongame wildlife program.

"The wildlife plates were some of the very first specialty plates in Idaho," said Chuck Harris, Idaho Fish and Game's nongame program manager. "As our success grew, other people saw it as a good idea to raise money for their cause."

A new specialty plate costs an owner $35 on top of the $35 to $60 charged for ordinary vehicle registration.

The Transportation Department gets $10 for each plate. Organizations that sponsor the plate get the remaining $25. Renewing a specialty plate costs $25.

Hispanic network meeting Monday

TWIN FALLS — Farm labor contractor licenses will be the topic of discussion at a meeting of the Hispanic Business and Professionals Network at noon Monday at the Azlan restaurant on Blue Lakes Boulevard North. All are invited to the no-host lunch.

The guest speaker will be Linda Castaneda, a State Farm labor contractor coordinator with Idaho Commerce and Labor. Castaneda will provide guidance on Idaho wage payment laws in both English and Spanish.

For more information, call Pat Marcantonio or Leticia

Coronado at 733-0931.

Commerce and Labor adopts new fee schedule

TWIN FALLS — Idaho Commerce and Labor's Disability Determinations Service has adopted a new fee schedule for the services conducting health care professionals provide in determining whether applicants are eligible for Social Security disability benefits.

The new schedule, which went into effect March 1, reflects the average reimbursement the agency made for more than 130 medical and diagnostic procedures performed in assessing about 17,000 applications last year. The schedule is capped by reimbursement amounts used by other state agencies for similar procedures.

BUSINESS BRIEFS

About 275 physicians, psychiatrists, psychologists and hospital professionals perform these procedures under contract with the department when an applicant's medical records are insufficient to determine benefit eligibility. The new fee schedule replaces a state practice of reimbursing providers based on their "usual and customary" charges for various procedures but not to exceed specific dollar caps. The state was directed to adopt a fee schedule by the Social Security Administration after a recent audit showed the old reimbursement policy failed to comply with federal regulations.

The fee schedule generally follows similar schedules used for Idaho workers' compensation reimbursements and payments by other agencies but is not identical to any of them. While the schedule adopts the average payment for specific procedures, it will reduce the Disability Determinations Service's overall health care reimbursements by about 5 percent.

Avoid clash of wills, Capricorn

IF MARCH 8 IS YOUR BIRTHDAY: This year it is important to give yourself plenty of quiet time to contemplate. You will be chock-full of ideas and inspirations as long as you give yourself a little space to access them. Don't quibble with friends over their philosophies of life if they differ from yours. You are perfectly positioned this year to advance in your moneymaking pursuits. So much can be yours this year in many realms of your life, and you may attain one or more of your long-standing dreams.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): All that glitters is not gold—and it would be very wise to remember that today. Stick with the tried and true and don't take chances on unknown quantities until they have had a chance to prove themselves.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): It's still best to slow down and not make any new starts now on anything that could be important. Timing is everything, and knowing that is half the battle.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): You are internally very powerful now. Today is a turning point, and business affairs already in progress can move forward.

HOROSCOPE Jeraldine Saunders

However, you should delay new initiatives for the time being.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Today is a go-go day for you, and the most important caveat is not to push so hard that you burn yourself out. Stick to things you started earlier, though, as today and tomorrow are great days for new beginnings.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): The power of positive thinking will be a greatly today and tomorrow. If life looks a bit bleak, reassure yourself that this is just a temporary dip in your sunny optimism, and not a true run on anything.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Even if your mind is working overtime, hold off on actually moving ahead on something new until Saturday or later. You can charm almost anyone into anything now — your verbal skills and twinkle carry the day.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Don't succumb to pessimism today, as things are actually much better than they seem. You are the beneficiary of a subtle protection now as well, so cheer up and make the best of things.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Sharing ideas could be an excellent idea especially early today, as your mind will be operating clearly and you will be able to express yourself in a way that others can fully understand.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Forward motion is possible on existing projects, but new things should be delayed to insure success.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): A clash of wills should be avoided now as it is unlikely to be productive or constructive in any way. You can catch more flies with honey than vinegar, so trot out that charm today.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Postpone starting new things today and tomorrow. If you don't, you could find yourself in a situation that just can't attain success, and could drain your resources more than you might imagine.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Full speed ahead would be an error now. Biding your time for now will actually get you to the finish line faster.

Family's generosity is repaid when man pays it forward

DEAR ABBY: I was gratified to read the letter from "Grateful Woman" in the Midwest (Jan 13), who wondered how to honor the friends who had taken her in when she was in trouble, and given her support and shelter until she was able to move on.

Our family has also done this for young people in trouble, trying to help them turn their lives around. The greatest gift we ever received came from one young man I'll call Danny.

Danny was only 20. When he came to us, just before Christmas one year, he had a 4-year-old son, was estranged from his birth family and was in desperate need. We made their Christmas bright, helped Danny find a job, cared for his son until a shelter opened at Head Start, and ultimately helped find them an apartment. We even covered the utility deposits.

Never once did Danny default on his payments. He is now a model young man, owns his own business and home, and is an excellent parent. I ran into him at the supermarket the other day, and he said, "I want you to know my son and I adopted a family last Christmas." He went on to describe how they had selected and wrapped gifts, made a holiday food basket, even baked cookies for the family. The light in his eyes as he related the story spoke volumes. It was the most wonderful gift Danny could have given.

DEAR ABBY
Jeane Phillips

Please tell "Grateful" that turning around and helping others will make her angels sing with joy.

— STILL SINGING,
BATH, MAINE

DEAR STILL SINGING: Your uplifting letter made ME sing with joy, as I'm sure it will many of my readers. I'm pleased to report that there are many "guardian angels" on Earth because I heard from them. Read on for a sample:

DEAR ABBY: A thank-you note promising to "pay it forward" would be priceless. We have been helping people for years (anonymously when we can), but when pressed for a reason, we always talk about these individuals who helped us, and explain that this is our way of expressing our gratitude. Nothing in this world is more joy-filled for us, the original "givers" or the recipients. It's also a gift that can keep on giving for a lifetime.

— MICKI IN WEST PALM BEACH

DEAR ABBY: After my stepson died a number of years ago, my friend, "Tom," came and helped us tremendously. I thanked him at the time, but it wasn't until I was able to take on the same role for a different friend who had lost a loved one, and then wrote Tom about it, that his act of kindness was truly clear to him. He went openly at having been able to make such a positive difference in our time of need.

— GRATEFUL IN
BIDDEFORD, MAINE

DEAR ABBY: Twenty years ago, people helped me in ways I could never repay. One of them said, "When it's your turn, then you can help someone." Now that I'm in my 40s, I help college students with references, networking and food. And I always tell them that in 20 years, I want them to help someone when they are able to. More important than getting a "good feeling," I am continuing a cycle of grace and gratitude. I hope "Grateful" will consider this possibility.

— SEAN IN HUMBLE, TEXAS

DEAR ABBY: A few years ago, I had the chance to help a friend in crisis. My husband and I invited the man to come and live with us. It was the best decision we ever made. He is a new man now, and watching him live his new life gives us great joy.

Trust me: It's enough for "Grateful" to go out and live her life well. That is all her friends would ever want from her.

Ironclad warship does some damage

By The Associated Press

Today is Thursday, March 8, the 67th day of 2007. There are 298 days left in the year.

Today's Highlight in History:
On March 6, 1862, during the Civil War, the ironclad USS Virginia (formerly USS Merrimack) rammed and sank the USS Cumberland and inflicted heavy damage on the USS Congress, both frigates, off Newport News, Va.

On this date:

In 1702, England's Queen Anne ascended the throne upon the death of King William III.

In 1782, the Gnadenhütten massacre took place as some 90 Indians were slain by militiamen in Ohio in retaliation for raids carried out by other Indians.

In 1841, Supreme Court Justice Oliver Wendell Holmes Jr., the "Great Dissenter," was born in Boston.

In 1854, U.S. Commodore Matthew C. Perry made his second landing in Japan; within a month, he concluded a treaty with the Japanese.

In 1874, the 13th president of the United States, Millard Fillmore, died in Buffalo, N.Y.

In 1917, Russia's February Revolution, also called because of the Old Style calendar being used by Russians at the time) began with rioting and strikes in Petrograd.

In 1917, the U.S. Senate voted to limit filibusters by adopting the cloture rule.

In 1930, the 27th president of the United States, William Howard Taft, died in Washington at age 72.

In 1965, the United States landed its first combat troops in South Vietnam, about 3,500 Marines sent to defend the U.S. air base at Da Nang.

In 1999, New York Yankees baseball star Joe DiMaggio died in Hollywood, Fla., at age 84.

Ten years ago: President Clinton, in keeping with his push for private businesses and churches to hire off-welfare folks, ordered federal agencies to do the same.

Five years ago: Kmart Corp. announced the closing of 284 stores and elimination of 22,000 jobs. The U.S. Senate passed a bill cutting taxes and extending unemployment benefits.

One year ago: Iran threatened the United States with "harm and pain" if the U.S. tried to use the U.N. Security Council to punish Tehran for its suspect nuclear program.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Six months after Hurricane Katrina, President Bush got a close-up look at the remaining downtown homes at boarded-up businesses in New Orleans. The Hornets played their first game at the New Orleans Arena since Katrina; they lost to the Los Angeles Lakers, 113-107. Owners agreed to the players' union proposal, extending the collective bargaining agreement for six years.

VIDEO GAME REVIEW

Sonic travels through the world of 'Arabian Nights' in the new video game 'Sonic and the Secret Rings' for Wii.

Sonic and Ratchet come back strong

BY LOU KESTEN
The Associated Press

Back when games were regarded as kid stuff, there were plenty of furry mascots hopping around. But the heroes of today's biggest hits — "Halo," "Gears of War," "Grand Theft Auto" — are decidedly un-cute humans, and if they see any animals running around, they'll kill 'em.

Still, there are a few animal survivors. Take Sonic the Hedgehog. Since his debut in 1991, Sonic has been one of the most popular characters in industry history. Alas, most of the Sonic games since the turn of the century have been disappointing affairs, adding all sorts of extraneous gimmickry and downplaying Sonic's distinguishing feature: his speed.

Despite a string of misfires, however, there's still some life in the spiny speedster. Indeed, he may be at the vanguard of a renaissance for video-game critters.

"Sonic and the Secret Rings" (Sega, for Wii, $49.99): Sonic returns to his roots in this stripped-down adventure for Nintendo's new console. As he travels through the world of "The Arabian Nights," Sonic starts fast and doesn't slow down. You tilt the Wii remote to move left or right, shove it forward to attack enemies and push a button to jump. The controls are so simple and the action so speedy that, at first, "Secret Rings" is a little disorienting, but once you get the hang of it, you'll enjoy the headlong rush. As you make your way through the game's 100 levels, you'll discover wacky new uses for the remote and earn power-ups that let Sonic go even faster or slow down time. Sonic's Wii debut is marred by the addition of a slapdash collection of multiplayer minigames, most of which are pretty dull; if the whole family wants to join in, you should stick with the excellent single-player adventure and take turns with the controller.

"Ratchet & Clank Size Matters" (Sony, for the PlayStation Portable, $39.99): Ratchet and Clank started in three first-rate platform games for the PlayStation 2, but when Ratchet, the animal half of the team, went solo in 2005's "Ratchet: Deadlocked," it was a big disappointment for

'Oz' goes big-time

BY STEVE CRUMP
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — Lori Henson has directed both adults and children in "The Wizard of Oz," and she has definite opinions about which group is easier to handle.

"Kids," she said. "No question about it."

That said, Henson — who has directed many Junior Musical Playhouse and Magic Valley Little Theater productions — is having a ball with her 85-member cast in the Dilettante Group's staging of "Oz," scheduled to open March 15 in the College of Southern Idaho Fine Arts Center auditorium.

"It's a lot of work, but it's a fun bunch."

It's led by 17-year-old Buhl High School Junior Emily O'Connor, who plays Dorothy.

"She's been in several junior theater and community theater productions, and she sings "Somewhere Over the Rainbow" so well," Henson said.

Oz's big three — the Tin Man, the Scarecrow and the Cowardly Lion — are played by Billy Perry, Power Jensen and Craig Nebeker, respectively.

"Power is married to Staci Jensen, who played Maria in the Little Theater's production of "Sound of Music," which I directed last fall," Henson said. "He's Leonidas (Gerard Butler) and the Spartans stand ready to halt the advance of the Persian army in the action drama '300.'

Battle of Thermopylae was never like this

BY CHRISY LEMIRE
The Associated Press

The ultraviolent action extravaganza "300" is based on Frank Miller's graphic novel, but did it have to be so cartoonish?

Director/co-writer Zack Snyder (the "Dawn of the Dead" remake) painstakingly recreated the comic-book panels by placing actors in front of virtual back-grounds, similar to the technique used in the superior film version of Miller's "Sin City" in 2005. Clearly, he's not aiming to reflect reality on any level. But Snyder's depiction of the ancient Battle of Thermopylae, in which 300 Spartans fought off a much larger Persian army, is so over-the-top it's laughable — so self-serious, it's hard to take seriously.

The effects are extremely cool at first; with the help of cinematographer Larry Fong, visual effects supervisor Chris Watts and a team of many others, Snyder has very much created a unique world — dark, dramatic and visually gripping, with increasingly imaginative foes along the way: A giant rhinoceros, an armada of elephants — sure, why not? Bring 'em all on.) But the gimmick wears off quickly and ultimately becomes overbearing; Tyler Bates' pounding score and the profuse use of voiceover certainly don't help.

Gerard Butler, who's buffed up significantly since starring in the corny film version of "The Phantom of the Opera," comes off as a poor-man's Mel Gibson in "Braveheart." As King Leonidas, he leads his meager but muscular troops into battle with repeated roars of "This is where we fight. This is where we die!" and such, ad nauseam. (Kurt Johnston and Michael B. Gordon also worked on the script.)

Leonidas has trained his entire life for this fight, as we see in the film's beginning, where he's taken from his family as a boy and taught to survive in the wild in a pure, driven, almost animalistic manner. By the time we reach 480 B.C., he rules Sparta alongside the beautiful Queen Gorgo (Lena Headey) in a series of playing ensembles that manage to stay on her body although the film takes place centuries prior to the invention of double-stick tape).

Once the Persian army threatens to overtake Sparta, led by the megalomaniacal Xerxes (Rodrigo Santoro in eye liner, gold chains and piercings), Leonidas must assemble his men into action (but first, a good-bye romp with the wife that's straight out of late-night Skinnamax).

Despite their comparatively small numbers, the Spartans are a model of unity and organization. That stuff about duty and honor and lying a beautiful death — they buy into all of it. (This is not exactly "Flags of Our Fathers.") What they lack in size they make up for in solidarity, so when the sky turns dark with a storm of Persian arrows, they're ready for it, having turned their shields into a wall of unbroken metal.

The violence is inventive, almost balletic in the way it's dragged out and sped up to emphasize its rhythms. Spears pierce the thick, brownish-gray haze, blood splatters, an arm or a leg goes flying — all visceral, intense stuff. After a while, though, you can only see so many slo-mo beheadings.

Leonidas also faces an enemy from within: a deformed Spartan named Ephialtes (Andrew Tiernan) who begs to join the fight but is turned away because he isn't physically up for the challenge and reacts vengefully by giving away secrets to Xerxes. Think of him as the creepily fascinating Gollum figure in the film.

Meanwhile, back at home, he faces another threat from a council member (to sinister Dominic West) who's trying to sabotage him publicly and privately, even as the queen lobbies the council to send more even troops to aid in the protracted fight.

It might actually seem relevant if weren't so ridiculous.

Local/Movies

Movie nuggets

• "The Astronaut Farmer" / C- Billy Bob Thornton stars as a Texas farmer with rocket-man dreams and a humongous home-made spaceship in his barn. His family (including a wasted Virginia Madsen as his wife) is supportive, but the neighbors are skeptical, the media is in a frenzy and NASA is so unhappy Bruce Willis is dispatched to dissuade him. The movie feels fraudulent and synthetic. Your under-12 space cowboy may enjoy it, but he (or she) would do much better renting "October Sky." PG. 1 hour, 44 minutes.

• "Because I Said So" / C+ As a meddling mom fixated on her unmarried youngest daughter (Mandy Moore) Diane Keaton has been given plenty of room to cavort with her legendary comic skills. But the picture often puts less faith in its leading lady than it does in cake-in-the-face jokes. The other actors — Piper Perabo, Lauren Graham, Tom Everett Scott, Gabriel Macht, Stephen Collins — are appealing, but haven't much to do. That's OK, because the ever-amazing Keaton is the movie; she invents funny stuff out of thin air. PG-13. 1 hour, 42 minutes.

• "Bride to Termination" / D- Based on a young adult book about the friendship of two lonely, misfit preteens and their imag-

Renowned photographer Weber to discuss Ansel Adams

BY STEVE CRUMP
Times News writer

TWIN FALLS — One of America's leading photography writers and educators, Al Weber, will present several workshops today through Saturday and discuss his work with the late Ansel Adams, the great American landscape photographer.

Sponsored by the College of Southern Idaho and the Magic Valley Arts Council, Weber will talk about his distinguished career, including the seven years he worked with Adams.

"Remembering Ansel," scheduled for Thursday at 7 p.m. in the Rick Allen Community Room of the Herrett Center for Arts and Science, is a program that Weber was scheduled to give at New York City's Eastman House on Sept. 11, 2001 — the day of the terrorist attacks on New York City and Washington, D.C.

Weber draws from his teaching experiences at the Yosemite workshops from 1963 to 1981.

"No artist can reach every person out there," Weber has said. "It is common knowledge that the most successful artists are those who have a known audience and can communicate directly. Trying to please or talk to everyone would be the same as making postcards to look at while eating a TV dinner."

At 7 p.m. Friday, Weber will conduct a workshop especially for photographers called "The Next Step." This presentation will be based on Weber's new book, "Advice for Photographers: The Next Step." Topics will include the dilemma of influence, business tactics of the artist, overcoming obstacles and demons, and dealing with growth and change. Copies of his book will be available after the presentation. It's also scheduled for the Herrett's Rick Allen room.

At 1 p.m. Saturday, Weber and his friends Paul Christian and

New on DVD Synopses of films recently released for home viewing.

"Borat"
R

In U.S. and A., people can be bigoted. And homophobic and misogynistic, and just closed-minded in general. And that becomes glaringly uproariously clear through the innocent eyes of Borat Sagdiyev, a Kazakh TV journalist (and we use the term loosely) who travels to the United States to make a documentary and bring his findings back to his homeland.

"Borat: Cultural Learnings of America for Make Benefit Glorious Nation of Kazakhstan," is his surreal showcase of a menial, ingenious blending of fiction and reality, improv and lies, which pushes guerrilla filmmaking to exhilarating new heights (or depths, depending on your perspective).

The brash but strangely likable Borat is the creation of Sacha Baron Cohen, one of several personas the British comedian has crafted through "Da Ali G Show" and by far the roughest and most effective in exposing society's prejudices. There's also Bruno, the flamboyantly gay Austrian fashion correspondent, and Ali G himself, an ignorant Cockney hip-hop wannabe.

As Borat, Baron Cohen's targets can be a little obvious — old, white people and young, drunk frat boys, mostly from the South — and sometimes his ruse seems a bit cruel to those who appear to have shown the clueless character some genuine kindness. Among the many stops on his cross-country tour is a Dallas antique store (containing some items adorned with the Confederate flag) where the clunky Borat stumbles around causing hundreds of dollars in damage. His obese producer, Azamat (Ken Davitian), then pays the husband-and-wife owners a mere fraction of the amount owed.

Maybe they were in on the gag. Maybe they weren't. Not knowing is frequently part of the fun. At least it keeps you on your toes.

"Borat" is consistently double-over-laughing hilarious, never an easy feat when you're extending a comedy sketch into a full-length film.

Sacha Baron Cohen

Kazakh TV journalist Borat (played by British actor Sacha Baron Cohen) is having way too much fun in America in 'Borat: Cultural Learnings of America for Make Benefit Glorious Nation of Kazakhstan.'

'And Baron Cohen is a marvel of timing and dedication, never veering out of character despite the outlandishness of every situation. Whether he's dressed in his signature bland, cheap suit, his fluorescent green thong "mankini" or nothing at all (as he is in a wild wrestling sequence with the hairy Azamat that's so funny, it'll make you cry), he's fearlessly up for anything. His unpredictability is addictive.

The plot, such as it is in the film from director Larry Charles goes something like this: Borat arrives in New York, sees Pamela Anderson on a "Daywatch" rerun in his hotel room and becomes obsessed with her. He drags his producer across the country so that he can meet her and marry her and along the way, meets various people and conducts interviews to learn about American culture.

There's the dirty humor instructor, the exceedingly polite etiquette coach. He asks crazy questions in garbled English and receives answers that probably weren't meant to be funny.

"Fast Food Nation"
R

Richard Linklater is channeling Robert Altman — or at least it seems he's trying to channel Altman — with his meandering, intertwined plot lines about the horrors of the fast food industry in "Fast Food Nation."

Characters come and go, there's no great, driving momentum. It's as if the director is returning to his intentionally plodding, indie "Slacker" roots, not adapting a best-selling novel with some real teeth to it.

Fast Food Nation Pictures

Restaurant chain executive Greg Kinnear gets an awful from Kris Kristofferson about what goes into 'Fast Food Nation.'

Linklater has teamed up with "Fast Food Nation" writer Eric Schlosser to fictionalize Schlosser's 2001 nonfiction book. Stories involve a restaurant chain executive (Greg Kinnear) investigating high fetal levels in the burgers; a high school student (Ashley Johnson) who wants out of her minimum-wage cashier job; and a group of illegal immigrants (including Wilmer Valderrama and Catalina Sandino Moreno, with Luis Guzman as their mungy) who, come from Mexico to work at a dangerous meatpacking plant.

It has its moments. Kris Kristofferson stands out in one scene as a longtime rancher who's seen too much and is sick of it, as does Bruce Willis as a cynical retail supplier who's seen too much and just doesn't care. It only makes you want to see more of them.

And the thread about the perils the Mexicans face, both on the processing line and outside the workplace where drugs are rampant to dull the pain of the daily grind, could have stood as a film of its own. Of all the stories told in "Fast Food Nation," it's the most compelling, and it offers the strongest performances.

"Running with Scissors"
R

As movie genre do, the Quirky Family Comedy can be a particularly erratic one.

Some, like this summer's "Little Miss Sunshine," are brilliant. Others, like 2001's "The Royal Tenenbaums," are so-so with inspired moments.

And then there's "Running With Scissors," a blunt-edged, disappointing adaptation of Augusten Burroughs' best-selling memoir about growing up among mad people in the 1970s.

After his alcoholic dad, Norman (Alce Beldwind), leaves her, his unstable, delusional mother, Deirdre (Annette Bening), dumps their adolescent son, Augusten (Joseph Cross), in the care of her unorthodox shrink, Dr. Finch (Brian Cox), to be raised as part of his dysfunctional family.

Who are the doctor's wife, Agnes (Jill Clayburgh), who spends her day eating dog kibble while watching the soap opera "Dark Shadows," his two daughters, priggish, Bible-toting Hope (Gwyneth Paltrow) and rebellious party-girl Natalie (Evan Rachel Wood); and his adopted son, 35-year-old Neil (Joseph Flennes), who becomes Augusten's first lover.

They all live together in a Papp-to-Bismol pink Victorian house and do eccentric things that are supposed to be funny. Like, carrying a skylight in the ceiling of their garbage-bin at kitchen, where, apparently, no one's washed the dishes since the Kennedy assassination.

Unfortunately, their antics are more tiresome and annoying than original or amusing. And, as can happen in a movie where almost everyone gets to act a little klad, you have virtually no emotional investment in the characters. Poor Cross comes off as a veritable blank, frustratingly so in the background by a half-dozen more accomplished actors diligently chowing scenery in the absence of a coherent script.

"Diddy Kong Racing DS" is a translation of his first solo project, released in 1997 for the Nintendo 64, and it holds up fairly well. The core of the game is its "adventure" mode, in which you earn balloons whenever you win a race; the more balloons you collect, the more races you can enter.

Fresh ideas make the Chadwick's menu distinctive in Burley

BY STEVE CRUMP
Times-News writer

BURLEY — There are sports bars, and there are sports bars-and-grills. The Chadwick Grille falls firmly in the latter category.

What that means is that the Chadwick's first priority is food, not beverages. Pubs here is ubiquitous but not always memorable. But if there is at the Chadwick, which takes its name from the century-old Main Street building where the eatery is located.

On a recent visit, I sampled the Chadwick's version of a Reuben sandwich, called the Penalty Box.

Reubens are traditionally made of sauerkraut, Swiss cheese and corned beef on toasted rye bread with Russian or Thousand Island dressing, but quality varies widely. Mostly it depends on the corned beef —

About the Chadwick's Grille

130 W. Main St., Burley — Steak, seafood, and the Chadwick Grand Slam burger with ham and egg, served with choice of red potato salad or choice of fries, tots or cottage cheese, $5-$17.95. Beer and wine. Hours: Mondays through Thursdays, 11 a.m. to 10:30 p.m.; Fridays and Saturdays, 11 a.m. to 11 p.m. Closed Sundays. Bonnie Rieck, manager. 878-0380.

fatty corned beef just doesn't work on a Reuben sandwich — and the freshness of the sauerkraut; there's nothing worse than a soggy Reuben.

Chadwick's version gets the details right. The bread is lightly toasted, the cheese is flavorful without being overwhelming and the house dressing is subtle but distinctive.

The Chadwick's menu includes steak and seafood, but also a variety of sandwiches and salads.

Served with your choice of french fries or "Tater Tots," it's a pleasant lunch for $8.95. The Chadwick's menu includes steak and seafood, but also a variety of sandwiches and salads — a range of food that it's hard to find elsewhere in Burley, which is emphatically a meat-and-potatoes town.

In the case of the Penalty Box, the meat and potatoes are memorable.

St. Thomas Playhouse is throwing its first Opening Night Party. Guests attending the opening performance on Thursday will enjoy food, refreshments and wine catered by Planet Janet. Kids may KETCHUM — Maddie Miller wakes up every morning with one word on her tongue.

"Tomorrow, tomorrow . . ."

The 12-year-old sixth-grader at The Community School has always had a thing for the song from "Annie." But it has consumed her during the past several weeks as she prepares for the upcoming performances of Martin Charnin's and Charles Strouse's classical musical at the nextStage Theater.

"It's really fun," said Miller, who made her acting debut in St. Thomas Playhouse's production of "Our Town." "I like getting the chance to play someone who's spunky and confident about herself. And it's not too difficult to memorize all the lines — I already know the songs and the lines — they stick in your bones."

St. Thomas Playhouse will present the beloved children's musical Thursday through Sunday. And, for the first time, there will be a gala opening-night party to raise funds for scholarships.

The play, based on a comic strip titled "Little Orphan Annie," revolves around a Depression-era orphan who runs away from the New York City orphanage in which she lives in a quest to find her parents.

In one fun-filled adventure after another, she foils the evil plans of the embittered Miss Hannigan and her shifty brother Rooster, gets President Franklin D. Roosevelt to introduce the New Deal and befriends a millionaire industrialist named Oliver Warbucks.

The Broadway version won the 1977 Tony Awards for Best Musical, Best Book Based on a Musical, Best Actress, Best Original Score, Best Set Design, Best Costume and Best Choreography.

Director Anna Johnson says "Annie" was one of the plays that inspired her to get into theater as a child growing up in Richmond, Va.

"It's a wonderful story about hope and love. It makes me have their picture taken with Annie. And guests will receive a vintage "Annie" gift from Broadway's version of the musical.

Tickets for the event are $100 per adult and $25 per child. Proceeds will benefit the new H. Edward Bilkey Memorial Fund, established to underwrite scholarships for children attending St. Thomas Playhouse's Company B Summer Camp and help provide music for future St. Thomas Playhouse productions.

Bilkey was a member of St. Thomas Episcopal Church and a big fan of theater and music. He provided seed money to help start St. Thomas Playhouse a few years ago and was one of its biggest supporters.

Tickets may be purchased at Iconoclast Books in Ketchum and Halroy or by calling 726-5349, ext. 13.

laugh and I feel great afterwards," she said. "And the music is wonderful."

"Every five or six years we get a new bunch of orphans and the opportunity to give a new girl a chance to be Annie. Every girl is wonderful."

About 100 are involved in this production. That includes two sets of orphans who alternate shows. There's even a cadre of local politicians, including Ketchum Mayor Randy Hall and Sun Valley Mayor John Thorson, who will make up FDR's White House Cabinet.

"I've always wanted to sing in a glue club," Thorson said. "Now, 50 years later, I get the chance."

Maddie Miller and Megan Morrell will share the role of Annie, and Megan's mother, Cheryl Morrell, will play Grace. The play will also feature Tim Eagon as Daddy Warbucks, Cherle Kessler as Miss Hannigan, Scott Creighton as Hannigan, Mac Harbaugh as Drake and Page Klame as Louise Howe.

Bishop Craig Anderson, a history buff, was thrilled to get the chance to play FDR. Itadio DJ Lenny Joseph will play — well, radio DJ Bert Healy. And Michelle Jefferson, who has been working night and day on costumes, will portray Lily.

Jefferson is an Equity actress with stage experience in places such as Las Vegas, but she has made only a few stage appearances here, Johnson says.

Bilkey Brown is the musical director. Sherry Horton Booth, the choreographer, Michelle Jefferson, the costume designer and Joseph Lavigne the scenic designer.

"It's truly community theater, with a lot of people who don't normally see on the stage," Johnson said. "We've got some fabulous adults and equally fabulous children and some amazing actors and singers."

MV School of

Times-News

TWIN FALLS — Students at the Magic Valley School of Performing Arts will perform a Broadway classic this weekend.

"Les Miserables," Claude Michel-Schönberg, Alain Boublil and Herbert Kretzmer's 1987 musical based on Victor Hugo's novel, will be staged Thursday through Saturday nights at Homer Auditorium.

It's the second time in three years that MVSPA has produced "Les Miz" under the direction of Kim Koxk.

"Les Miz" is the story of a French peasant named Jean Valjean (played by Jordan Stanley) who is sent to prison for five years for stealing a loaf of bread for his starving family — and for 14 more years for trying to escape. After his release, Valjean becomes a wealthy industrialist and uses his money to help the poor, but he can't escape from his past because of Javert (Matt Hanchey), a policeman who will not let Valjean forget.

Other members of the cast are Sarah Bevan as Fantine, Karlee Hatfield as Epouline, Jon Sweet as Marius, Megan Johnson as

About Ansel Adams

Ansel Adams was one of the most important landscape photographers of the 20th century. The popularity of his photographs has only increased since his death in 1984 at age 82.

Adams' most important work was devoted to America's wilderness, especially in national parks and other protected areas of the West. He was a vigorous and outspoken leader of the conservation movement.

A native of San Francisco, Adams left school at 12 but taught himself music and photography as a teen. Throughout the 1920s, while the custodian of the Sierra Club's lodge in Yosemite National Park, Adams created impressive landscape photographs and formed a powerful attachment to Yosemite Valley and to the High Sierra.

In 1930, Adams met photographer Paul Strand and was impressed with the simplicity of Strand's pictures and their rich tonality. The experience confirmed his evolution toward a purer and more realistic style.

In 1932, Adams helped form Group f.64, a group of West Coast photographers (including Edward Weston and Imogen Cunningham) who favored sharp focus and the use of the entire photographic gray scale, from black to white, and who shunned any effects borrowed from traditional fine arts such as painting.

By 1935 Adams was famous in the photographic community, largely on the strength of a series of articles written for the popular photography press. Sturilo Publications commissioned Adams to create "Making a Photograph," a guide to photographic technique illustrated primarily with his own pictures. This book was a remarkable success.

By the time "Making a Photograph" was published, Adams had already established the subject matter — the natural environment of his beloved West Coast — and the pristine, technically perfect style that characterized his work. This attention to the specifics of the physical world was also the root of his appreciation of the landscape in microcosm, in which a detail of the forest floor could be as moving as a grand vista.

The importance of Adams' work was recognized in 1936 by pioneering photographer Alfred Stieglitz, who awarded him a one-artist show in his gallery, An American Place. But some of Adams' contemporaries thought photographers should be shooting pictures that related to the issues of the Great Depression. At the time, Dorothea Lange and Arthur Rothstein were photographing the Dust Bowl and the plight of migrants; Margaret Bourke-White was capturing Soviet Russia and great engineering projects; and Walker Evans was recording the face of America's culture. To some critics, these projects seemed more in the moment than did Adams' photographs of remote mountain peaks in the High Sierra. Not until a generation later did it come to be widely understood that a concern for the character and health of the natural landscape was a social priority.

Adams used his high profile to increase public acceptance of photography as a fine art. In 1940 he helped found the first curatorship department devoted to photography at the Museum of Modern Art in New York City. In 1946 he established at the California School of Fine Arts in San Francisco, the first academic department to teach photography as a profession.

BY ARIEL HANSEN
Times-News Staff

TWIN FALLS — He can't even enter a bar legally, but he's playing what some of the best jazz musicians in town play in Magic Valley.

As a music major at the College of Southern Idaho, 19-year-old Michael Frew has just about exhausted the opportunities to grow as an instrumentalist in Twin Falls.

"It's way better than this particular region," said Brent Jensen, an assistant professor of music at CSI and regular bandmate of Frew. "He just needs to get into an area where there are other players that are pushing him a little."

With a few months left as a complete novice, Frew's desire to play Magic Valley residents still have a chance to hear Frew before he goes out to make a name for himself in the world of instrumental jazz.

In three words

Improvisation, subtlety and interaction.

Michael Frew had a hard time describing his music, but after some hemming and hawing, he came up with these three words.

"What I really like to play is jazz, and improvisation is a huge part of it," he said, expounding on the mostly wordless communication between improv players.

"It's not your kind of music that's just for show," Frew said. "People have to listen to it to enjoy it."

With long thumb and plinky nails on his picking hand, it is easy at a glance to identify Frew as a guitarist, but he also uses those nails to play the guitar's deep-toned brother, the bass.

"I got into bass because there's a shortage of bass players around here," Frew said with a chuckle. He plays the low-pitched instrument in CSI's symphony, as well as in other instrumental groups, but prefers the guitar.

One note at a time

The first jazz record that Frew owned was Miles Davis' "Kind of Blue," widely considered one of the best albums put down, jazz or otherwise.

"By chance, that was the very first jazz record I got, which I think was fate," Frew said. It propelled him into a love for the improvisational art form. He remembered thinking, "If I could play along with what I hear in my head, that would be great."

At 12, he quit sports and devoted himself to music, practicing for hours a day without prodding from his parents. In those early years, he didn't sound great. "I see new people starting out now, and they sound awful, but that's probably how I sounded," Frew said, with a wry smile at those first sour notes. But he kept at it, performing for the first time at 14.

Jazz at Rudy's on Thursday

Michael Frew will play with internationally recognized jazz guitarist John Stowell at 7 p.m. Thursday at Rudy's — A Cook's Paradise, 147 Main Ave. W., Twin Falls. Also playing are Brent Jensen on saxophone and Tony Bowler on drums. Seating is limited, with general-admission tickets at $30. Students with identification pay $15. For reservations, call 733-5477.

When Jensen first heard him playing — in an eighth-grade combo — he stopped the young performer and asked about his influences.

"He started listing off these jazz guitar players, not Van Halen," Jensen said. "I turned to the rest of these kids and said, 'That's how you learn jazz music.' It was already coming through in his playing."

What the critics say

Frew doesn't have recordings for sale yet, but Jensen thinks it won't be long before the young instrumentalist will make a name for himself among musicians and critics alike.

"He could play professionally right now in Seattle, Portland, anywhere he chose to move," Jensen said.

"I've needed to kick him out of the nest."

Another professor at CSI, Jeff Fox, plays regularly with Frew, often during their weekly jam sessions at Java coffee shop.

"Twin Falls really has a great supply of good musicians, and Michael's one of the group," Fox said. "He's really one of those musicians who works hard at his craft, and it really shows."

Besides, Fox said, Frew is a nice young man.

"Some musicians are a little rough around the edges, but Michael's just a good guy," Fox said. "He's able to be disciplined and focused."
