AIR TRAVEL
Ticket taxes, fees giving private jets a free ride

By Bob Porterfield
Associated Press writer

SAN FRANCISCO — The federal government has taken billions of dollars from the taxes and fees paid by airline passengers every time they fly and awarded it to small airports used mainly by private pilots and globe-trotting corporate executives.

Some of these "general aviation" facilities used the federal dollars — more than $7 billion over the past decade — for enhancements such as longer runways and passenger terminals aimed at luring traffic, an Associated Press review has found. And the money comes with little oversight, and at the expense of an increasingly beleaguered air transportation system.

"They're making out like bandits," said Bob Poole, director of transportation studies at Southern California's Research Foundation and author of several studies on air transportation costs. "It's not only that airline passengers are paying more than their fair share, but they're being overtaxed to give private jets a free ride."

Passengers pay as many as six separate taxes and fees on a single flight ticket, adding up to more than $104 billion since 1997, the AP found. Yet these assessments often are overlooked by the millions who use the "buy" button to purchase tickets online, even though they can exceed 25 percent of the total airfare.

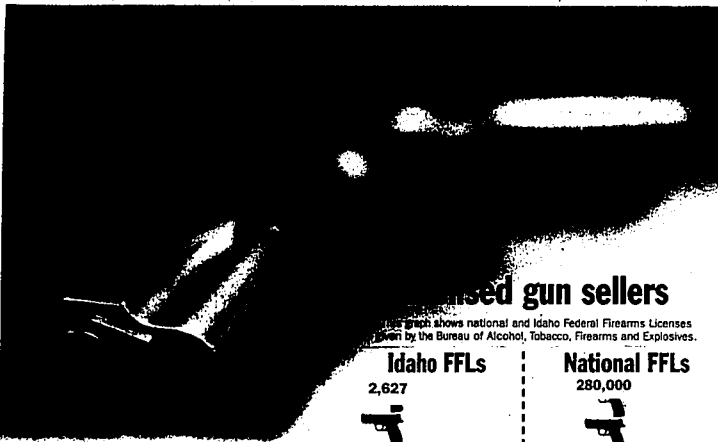

Meanwhile, travelers deal with more hassles than ever. In 2006, more passengers were bumped, their flights delayed or their bags lost than in 2005, according to the annual Airline Quality Rating report released earlier this month.

"What are people getting for their money?" said Jeff Burton, a professor of transportation at George Mason University's School of Public Policy and an expert on air travel taxation. "Delays are increasing. How can consumers make a sensible assessment on how the money is being spent? You need an abacus to figure out all the costs."

Congress will decide later this year whether to curtail the huge public subsidy for small airports, while pilots' associations, airport managers and other interested groups are fighting to keep it.

Renewed federal scrutiny putting pressure on local weapons dealers

By Cassidy Friedman

TWIN FALLS — Open a store or stop selling guns. That's the message that Congress sent in 1993 to Bryan Pierce of Twin Falls and about 250,000 licensed gun sellers nationwide.

After the Brady Handgun Violence Prevention Act went into effect in 1994, Pierce bitterly gave up his license. In 25 years, he had sold about 150 firearms to friends from his home — each time adding a small mark-up to support his hobby.

"A gun dealer friend of mine said we were running them out of business," Pierce said. "I told him one of these days they're coming after you. They cut their own throats."

Thirteen years later, Pierce is chuckling at the irony of a federal government crackdown on gun dealers in Twin Falls and elsewhere. Only about 70,000 licensed dealers are left nationwide.

Once many gun dealers backed the Sixth-graders in Jerome compete to invent a tool

By Joshua Palmer
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — They have been charged with a lofty task — to invent the next tool that makes life easier for humanity.

Their undertaking is no small endeavor but neither is the prize. More than 230 sixth-grade students from the Jerome School District will compete for up to $5,000 in college savings bonds in a contest to create the most useful tool. The competition was kicked off last week with a description of what a tool is, as well as the rules of the game.

"Basically what we're trying to do is get the kids to play a different role in life," said Fred Goerlich, the science teacher at Central Elementary School who organized the competition. "The goal is to have them start looking around the community and find something they can contribute to — after all, that's kind of the way life works."

Besides learning about the physics of the way a tool works, students will learn how to communicate with business owners and develop people-management skills.

"They will build an active support system of adults to help them plan for and create a prototype for their tool," Goerlich said. "The students will carry around a notebook to record their observations, and then they will have to work with their parents or an adult to create it."

Goerlich partnered with the Jerome Chamber of Commerce and member businesses to sponsor up to $5,000 in college savings bonds for the winning student.

The top four students from each of the sixth-grade classes in the Jerome School District will be awarded plaques and savings bonds for college. The awards ceremony will be held May 23 at Central Elementary School.

Students will work in and out of the school to develop their tools — they will learn the knowledge they need in the classroom and then work with their parents to build a prototype for the tool.

But first thing is first: Goerlich had to tell the sixth-grade students Wednesday afternoon about the purpose of a tool.

"A tool has to do something useful," he said. "Remember when we talked about the idea of an electronic whoopee cushion? Well that's probably not going to be very useful."

He briefly explained the seven types of simple tools that contribute to the physics of almost every tool on Earth. Then he said the students' next lesson will be about the physics of work — how tools function to achieve their purpose.

Thin ice, too little snow

From Canada's north, a ground-level view of global warming

By Beth Duff-Brown
Associated Press writer

IQUALUIT, Nunavut — Inuit hunters are falling through thinning ice and dying. Dolphins are being spotted for the first time. There's not enough snow to build igloos for shelter during hunts.

As scientists work to establish the impact of global warming, explorers and hunters slogging across northern Canada and the Arctic ice cap on sled and foot are describing the realities they see on the ground.

"This is really ground zero for global warming," said Will Steger, a 62-year-old Minnesota man who has been traveling the region for 43 years and has witnessed the impact of warming on the 155,000 indigenous people of the Arctic.

"This is where a culture has lived for 5,000 years, relying on a very delicate, interconnected ecosystem, and one by one, small pegs of that ecosystem are being pulled out," Steger said by satellite phone from a small village outside Iqualuit, about 200 miles south of the Arctic Circle. Iqualuit is the provincial capital of the Canadian territory of Nunavut.

Inuit hunter Miska drives across the Arctic horizon in search of a polar bear on Frubber Bay near Tugtoit, Nunavut, in February 2003.

Steger, who made the first journey to the North Pole by dogged without resupply in 1986, is leading with Inuit guides for three months across Baffin Island, the northeastern corner of Nunavut, with two teams of huskies and a cameraman.

Waldron, executive director of the Bellevue, Wash.-based Citizens Committee for the Right to Keep and Bear Arms. The number of agents remained about the same, and the ATF's budget continued rising. Only now, because of the lousy law, 73 percent of former licensees have lost their licenses.

"If other agents, the same number of agents were given more money to monitor 73 percent of the original dealers. I think a lot of us saw what was happening and a lot of us didn't stand up," said Ryan Horsley, manager of Red's Trading Post, who did not support the National Association of Stocking Gun Dealers' action. "It's unfortunate and a lot of people regret that."

All dealers became more likely to get audited than ever before, Waldron said.

Local crackdown

The ATF stripped Blue Lakes Sporting Goods of its license in early 2004 after its second audit turned up violations. Then, after auditing Red's Trading Post, at 215 Shoshone St. S., for the second time and finding recurring violations, the agency revoked Red's license March 5. Mountain Man Custom Jewelry Gun and Pawn Inc., at 103 Addison Ave. W., allowed its license to lapse in January. Soon, there was an agent knocking at the business' door for the first time in more than 20 years. A three-day audit earned its owner, Gary Painter, his first warning.

"If everybody followed the rules, we would not have these problems," said Christy Newlin, manager of Main Street Pawn and Collectibles. Although in five years Newlin has never been audited, she's getting out of the gun-sales business this summer.

Rebecca Hazen of Blue Lakes Sporting Goods wrote in a statement about her first audit: "When I went through the books I found 90 percent of the blanks were the result of lazy employees."

Of her second audit: "All of the errors were clerical errors on the part of the salesperson rather than someone answering yes to the important questions or anything criminal."

Fewer dealers

The number of gun shops in Twin Falls is declining. "There are people that would argue the ATF is using this to intimidate gun dealers," Waldron said in a telephone interview. "If the ATF goes after a dealer, I am going to assume those gun dealers are doing something they shouldn't be." Horsley contacted the offices of Sen. Larry Craig and Sen. Mike Crapo, both Idaho Republicans, claiming the ATF was overstepping its legal authority. Horsley argued that Red's violations amounted to clerical errors, not serious violations.

"Larry would come from a macro perspective," said Dan Whiting, Craig's spokesman. "The ideal is to get people to comply with the law. You've got to strike a balance. You've got to get a certain number of bad actors out of business. But you don't want to go so far that you are using technicalities to force dealers out of business."

A spokesperson in Crapo's office declined comment. The National Association of Stocking Gun Dealers no longer exists. "Their reason for existence went away with the '94 law," Waldron said.

Small margins

Unlike selling gun accessories, which can be lucrative, selling firearms has never been especially profitable, according to local dealers. But not for Pierce, who sold guns to finance his hobby of collecting firearms. Since the 1994 law was passed, the markup almost always tops out at 5 percent, he said. But people without licenses can legally buy, sell and trade their guns at gun shows or privately as long as they are not seeking profit. A vast majority of gun-show sellers are licensed, but Pierce guesses about 30 percent are not.

Also, purchasing a gun from a retailer for a friend — called a "straw-man sale" — is a felony under federal law. The ATF reports revoking a single license in Idaho in the past five years. The agency does not keep track of how many warnings it gives.

The recent audit of Mountain Man found numerous violations, and charges the ATF with writing specific rules licensed dealers must abide by. "Red's was shut down because of numerous paperwork violations," Waldron said. "But there have been a few cases like this. When a lot of dealers transpose the information from the 44 73 form required for all licensed gun sales and purchases) to their log book, they get it wrong."

Guns and crime

In 2001, the Department of Justice published a study that found the vast majority of firearms used in crimes came from straw-man sales and from family, friends or acquaintances. Second to that were stolen guns and illegal street sales.

About 12 percent of firearms used to commit crimes had been bought directly from gun shops or pawn shops.

Given that data, what will this decline in gun shops mean for Idaho?

"You have to ask yourself: is the ATF out headhunting, or maybe the guy (Red's) has some issues?" Waldron said. "It's a serious business and you have got to ensure you and your employees are keeping up with laws."

The ATF did not return calls for this story.

He is charting his 1,200-mile adventure on his Web site, and making a documentary about how Inuit hunters are being forced to adapt to a warming Arctic. Ocean and melting polar ice cap. In June he will testify before a U.S. Senate committee on climate change.

When he was interviewed in early March, he and his American and Inuit colleagues were heading for the Clyde River, through the highest polar bear population in the world. It was still the height of winter in the Arctic, but the temperature, 11 Fahrenheit, was more typical of spring.

He said Horsley he meets on Baffin Island are describing to him creatures they have no words for in their language. Muskoxen — robins, foxes and dolphins. He said they all tell him the same thing: Hunting on the thinning sea ice has become too dangerous.

"All of these villages have lost people on the ice," Steger said. "When you have a small village of 300 or 400 people, losing three or four of their senior hunters, it's a big loss." Millennia of learning to read the winds, clouds and stars and find the best hunting area being lost, he said. "A lot of the elders will no longer go out on the sea ice because their knowledge will not work anymore. What they've learned and passed on for 5,000 years is no longer functional," Steger said. "They can't build igloos anymore; everything is just up and down up here."

Meeks Mike says the thinning of the ice became noticeable about 10 years ago, forcing Arctic hunters to migrate farther north. Now Inuit hunters like herself are finding stranded wal-

"It takes longer now to get out to our hunting areas because we can't access it by ice," Mike says in her cedar house in Iqaluit, sitting on the floor with friends as they sew a pair of caribou hunting pants. She'll wear when she next ferries supplies by snowmobile and wooden sled to Steger's expedition.

Ed Bolen, president of the National Business Aviation Association, which represents 8,000 operators of private jets and other aircraft, said all Americans benefit from the proliferation of small airports throughout the country. They aid emergency preparedness and critical services such as medical evacuations and mail delivery, he noted.

Without help from the federal government in the form of passenger taxes, many would be unable to survive, Bolen said.

"Not all aircraft are the same nor do they impose the same costs on the system," he said. "If we were grounded tomorrow, the system would cost the same."

Mark Cooper of the Washington-based Consumer Federation of America said the key question is whether passengers are paying for something and getting nothing in return.

"It costs me more to park my car at National Airport than it costs to park a corporate jet," he said.

The taxes and fees finance the Federal Aviation Administration and its air traffic control operations, as well as passenger and baggage screening, federal air marshals and police presence at the nation's commercial hubs.

But hundreds of smaller airports also are among the beneficiaries. They run the gamut from remote rural airstrips serving crop-dusters and hobbyists, to "executive" airports serving corporate jets and exclusive resort destinations.

Defiant Wolfowitz says he won't quit World Bank

Paul D. Wolfowitz said Sunday that he would not resign as president of the World Bank in the face of controversy over his role in securing a U.S. State Department job and large raise for his friend, a former communications official at the bank.

"This is important work, and I intend to continue it," Wolfowitz said when asked if he would step down after the spring meetings of the bank and the International Monetary Fund.

Questions about Wolfowitz's future dominated the meetings' concluding news conference, in which the policy-setting committee of the two groups formally endorsed a "clean" by the bank's multinational board of directors to look into the controversy.

"We have to ensure that the bank can effectively carry out its mandate and maintain its credibility and reputation as well as the motivation of its staff. The current situation is of great concern to all of us," the committee said in a four-page communiqué. "We expect the bank to adhere to a high standard of internal governance."

Wolfowitz, who as deputy defense secretary was one of the chief architects of the Bush administration's Iraq war policy, has been under fire over the matter from both World Bank staffers and foreign development officials, some of whom have chafed at his management style and policy agenda since taking over as bank president in 2005.

more than 3 years as an enemy combatant, and co-defendants Adham Amin Hassoun, 45, and 44-year-old Kifah Wael Janyouf face charges of conspiracy to "murder, kidnap and maim" people overseas and of providing support to terror groups. All three pleaded not guilty. They could face life in prison if convicted.

Man charged with murder in fire that killed 5

QUINCY, Ill. — A man was charged with setting a house on fire in western Illinois early Sunday and killing five children, police said.

Four other people, including a fire fighter burned on his face, were injured in the blaze. The bodies of four boys and a girl — ages 8 months to 10 years — were found on the second story and were likely family members, officials said.

Authorities said they arrested Zachary Q. Meeks, 27, after he was questioned about the fire that began around 3 a.m. in this community along the Mississippi River and about 90 miles west of Springfield. Authorities did not release a motive.

Meeks was charged with five counts of first-degree murder, one count of aggravated arson, and one count of arson, police said.

Rescuers arrived to find the two-story brick home engulfed in flames, which were shooting through the windows, authorities and neighbors said. The five bodies were found later.

The surviving victims' identities and details on how they were injured were not released.

fluid that had collected outside his left lung. The procedures, which lasted less than 15 minutes, is common for patients who sustain a number of rib fractures and doctors said it was successful, said the Corzine's spokesman Anthony Coley.

Corzine was injured Thursday when his SUV crashed on the Golden State Parkway after his vehicle was hit by another vehicle that swerved to avoid a pickup truck, sending the governor's SUV into a guard rail.

The 60-year-old governor, who was apparently not wearing his seat belt in the front passenger's seat, broke his leg, 12 ribs, his breastbone and suffered a broken collarbone. He also had a head laceration and a minor fracture on a lower vertebra.

Nor'easter soaks East and floods West Virginia

A powerful nor'easter pounded the East with wind and pouring rain Sunday, grounding airlines and threatening to create some of the worst coastal flooding some areas had seen in more than a decade.

The storm flooded people out of their homes in the middle of the night in West Virginia and trapped others. Other inland states faced a threat of heavy snow.

One person was killed, as dozens of mobile homes were destroyed or damaged by wind in South Carolina. The storm system already had been blamed for five deaths on Friday in Kansas and Texas.

The Coast Guard had warned mariners to head for port because wind up to 55 mph was expected to generate seas up to 20 feet high. Petty Officer Eita Smith said Sunday in Boston.

Airlines canceled more than 400 flights at the New York area's three major airports, said Steve Coleman, a spokesman for the Port Authority of New York and New Jersey, Kennedy Airport.

on the wind-exposed south side of Long Island, had sustained wind of 30 to 35 mph with gusts to 48 mph, said weather service meteorologist Gary Conte.

The storm forced the cancellation of five major league baseball games Sunday and gave runners in Monday's Boston Marathon something to worry about besides Heartbreak Hill. The race-day forecast called for 3 to 5 inches of rain, start temperatures in the 30s and wind gusts of up to 25 mph.

Trial begins for Padilla, called 'dirty bomber'

MIAMI — It's been nearly five years since then-Attorney General John Ashcroft declared the United States had thwarted an al-Qaida plot to detonate a radioactive "dirty bomb" in a major city and had arrested a "known terrorist," Jose Padilla.

Ashcroft darkly suggested the plot could have caused "mass death and injury" and said President Bush had designated Padilla, a U.S. citizen, as an enemy combatant who would be held in indefinite military custody rather than face civilian charges.

"He was involved in planning future terrorist attacks on American civilians in the United States," Ashcroft said in June 2002, while the jittery notion still reeled from the Sept. 11 and anthrax attacks in 2001.

However, as jury selection begins Monday, the case against Padilla has no mention of the "dirty bomb" allegations or purported plots inside the United States.

Open house tonight on Wal-Mart proposals

By Jared S. Hopkins
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — Wal-Mart, the latest neighbor to move to the Twin Falls business community, will hold an open house tonight from 6:30 to 8 p.m. at the Red Lion Canyon Springs Hotel at 1357 Blue Lakes Blvd. N.

Discussion will include policy changes the company wants to implement on its box store that will be located at the intersection of Washington Street North and Pole Line Road.

Wal-Mart is still seeking City Council permission for its signs, a drive-through and lube service shop, as well as permission to be open 24 hours a day.

Company representatives will show site plans, storefront renderings and area maps at the meeting.

The project's changes were recommended by the Twin Falls Planning and Zoning Commission last month by a 5-4 vote before a packed house — and after hours of public testimony.

Wal-Mart requested modifications to the North Haven PUD agreement, which was created to protect homeowners from commercial disturbances such as noise, light and traffic.

"We're not against Wal-Mart," said Rex Leforge, representing the Los Lagos subdivision, last month. "We just want the PUD agreement to remain in place and unchanged."

"The recommendation goes before the City Council April 23."

Although the city of Twin Falls will not be at the meeting, it applauded Wal-Mart for engaging the community.

"I think that's good for our part, and we always encourage the applicant to talk to the neighbors," said Twin Falls Planning and Zoning Administrator Renee Caraway.

BOISE — Studded snow tires must be removed from vehicles traveling Idaho roads by April 30, the Idaho Transportation Department announced late last week.

Studded snow tires are those with small metal cleats embedded in the tread. They can cause wear on snowless roads.

Surrounding states also have rules about studded tires. They must be removed from vehicles in Nevada by April 30 and Montana vehicles by May 31. They should already be removed from vehicles traveling in Utah, Oregon and Washington. They are legal all year in Wyoming.

TWIN FALLS — If movies and media are to be believed, all Girl Scouts would be 8-year-old cookie sellers.

But ask 18-year-old Haley Balsch her favorite thing about Girl Scouts. "Firefighter camp."

Balsch and her friends Erin Nunnally, Amanda Thieman and Chandra Crum have been in Girl Scouts for 13 years, since they were in kindergarten.

This year, they wrap up their Girl Scout careers and head into the next phase of their lives — boosted, they say, by an organization that has taught them to think and act far beyond the cookie box.

"It's given me the confidence to get things done. The drive. It teaches you to set goals for yourself," Crum said.

Crum, Nunnally and Balsch are 18-year-old seniors at Twin Falls High School.

Thieman is 17 and a junior there. They started as Daisy Scouts in 1994 as kindergartners at Valley Christian School.

Since then, they've certainly sold their share of the famed cookies, but on top of that they've earned so many badges, they can't tell how many they have. The badges range from sewing to finance and cooking and camping to firefighting.

But the girls say their accomplishments are often considered "nerdy" by classmates and overlooked by a general public much more familiar with the Boy Scouts. The cookies tend to overshadow everything.

After a day of digging fire lines and learning the ins and outs of fighting flames a few summers ago, the girls walked into the fire crew offices only to be asked for Girl Scout cookies.

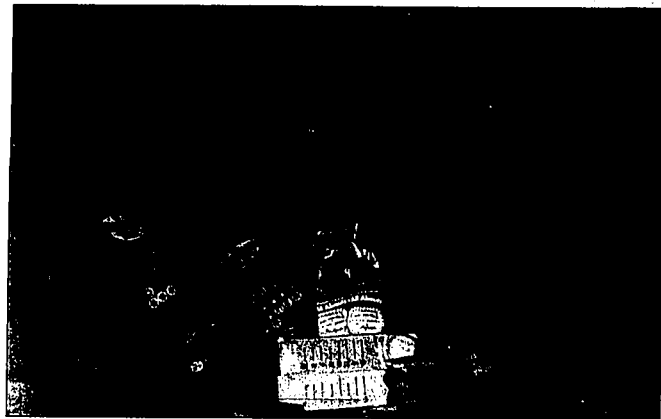

That sort of reaction, while normal, is a bit disappointing.

"They get older, sometimes they've been afraid to tell people they're Girl Scouts because it's not looked on as honorable," she said. "They get teased."

Thieman and Crum say they used to try to hide their Girl Scout life from peers. But no more.

Once they got old enough to realize how much work they've put into their troop and its projects, they wanted people to know about their accomplishments.

"We've done so much," Crum said. "When you are helping others and you see that your helping has made a change — when you see what you've done for people — you want to let them know about it. I helped reprint those giant Christmas cards in the city park. Every time we drove I could say, 'I helped you on those."

Nunnally said she's been told that it's not cool to be in Girl Scouts. But criticisms are quickly overcome when she tells peers about what she has done and the people she has met.

"We've gone to hospice and planted flowers. We worked with the American Legion Auxiliary to make 200 wallets for them to sell so they could raise money to refurbish veterans' housing units," Nunnally said.

The girls have earned awards too numerous to list, but three of the four have earned their Gold Award — the equivalent to the Boy Scouts' Eagle Scout award.

Nunnally has chosen not to work on a Gold Award, but she earned a Silver Award — the step just before the Gold — by helping a troop of younger girls earn their badges. Balsch put together a Kid Safety fair, held at a local home-supply store last fall. Crum rebuilt a fire circle at the Girl Scout camp in the South Hills. Neman is still finishing her project: an awareness campaign to teach other young women about pregnancy, sexually transmitted diseases and abstinence.

As Girl Scouts of the USA celebrates its 95th anniversary this year, the girls hope the future is marked by young Girl Scouts getting the recognition they deserve.

"We should promote more of the older Girl Scouts. If you look at the cookie boxes all you ever see is the young girls, you never see an older

Locals praise benefits of Girl Scouts

This year marks the Girl Scouts' 95th anniversary. Since its founding in 1912, the organization has grown into a global community. Fifty million girls have been through the program, and according to the Girl Scouts of the USA Web site, 70 percent of the women in Congress were Girl Scouts, and over half of women business owners in this country were women who were Girl Scouts.

Locally, former Girl Scouts say the organization formed an important part of their childhood and gave them skills needed to succeed as adults.

"What helped me the most was being involved with the community," said Nola Tolk, now a public accountant. "I love being a Girl Scout. I learned about my goals and accomplishing them."

Local Girl Scout leader Ruth Pierce said she learned many skills during her Girl Scout years.

"I never think you can be one and still be in high school."

"It's coming. We're making a bigger impression in the community," Crum said.

Beyond the badges and cookie boxes, the girls say they've forged lifelong friendships. Girl Scouts has prepared them for college and a career and provided them with a support network of leaders and fellow scouts. It has taught them the also remembers community service as an important part of her Girl Scout experience.

"I just remember having a lot of fun," she said.

Former Girl Scout Jennifer Brice now an attorney, is the mother of a Junior Girl Scout. She said she watched the girls in her troop evolve into young women.

More importantly, she said, she watched the girls blossom from shy little girls into strong public speakers, performers and creative spirits.

"It's a far cry from when I was a Girl Scout," she said. "I probably learned those things, but I wasn't more about camping, hiking, badges and arts and crafts."

"I've learned a lot about being a leader of a house outdoors and camping — things she wouldn't have been exposed to otherwise."

"Girls have an opportunity to be part of a group that encourages good decisions, good choices, good role models and good friends."

"Something not every woman would have without Girl Scouts."

Skills they'll need to thrive as they move beyond Girl Scouts. "Leadership. That's huge. Trust and honesty. Everything. There's not just one thing. Being a Girl Scout is a package deal," Thieman said.

City pushes survey, youth council

By Jared S. Hopkins
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — City officials are proposing two ways for residents to get input on planning the future of Twin Falls — one for the kids and one for their parents.

Starting today, 5,000 residents will receive in the mail voluntary surveys about the city, and the city will continue to take applications for a youth council of students interested in government.

The bi-annual survey is typically mailed to 3,000 residents, but the city is updating its comprehensive plan and wants more input. Comprehensive plans are planning guides for counties and cities, typically changed every 10 years.

The survey asks questions about changes people want in the city, including new parks and recreational opportunities.

City planner Amber Westenskow said the survey typically yields a 25 percent to 30 percent response rate, which is good for the kind of survey.

Copies of the survey in Spanish can be picked up at the City Hall. In unrelated news, the city is also forming a Youth Council for area high school students that want to be involved with the elected members of government.

More than 20 children from private and public schools have already applied for the opportunity to work with the City Council and Planning-and-Zoning Commission to learn about policy and laws.

"I look at it as kind of a mini-government," said Twin Falls Mayor Lance Clow Thursday.

Earlier this month, Clow finished meeting with area students in middle school, high school and private schools. The youth council — common across the state — would have meetings and elect officers.

Students must have at least 2.5 grade-point average and be in good standing at their schools. Applications will be accepted through April 23.

Times-News government reporter Jared S. Hopkins welcomes comments at 735-3204, and at jhopkins@magicvalley.com.

Officials kill grizzly bear that attacked E. Idaho man

BOISE (AP) — A grizzly bear that mauled an eastern Idaho man last week has been killed, authorities said.

The 15-year-old male grizzly that weighed 350 to 400 pounds was caught in a snare — a cable loop trap that holds the bear's leg — and then shot by officials on Saturday.

Game wardens and Teton County sheriff's deputies had been trying to capture the bear since the Tuesday attack on 33-year-old Timothy Henderson, who spent three days in a hospital before being released Friday with multiple claw and bite wounds.

"I think this whole situation was unfortunate for Mr. Henderson and the bear," Doug Peterson, a conservation officer with the Idaho Department of Fish and Game, told the Idaho Statesman.

Henderson was attacked at dusk when he went out to look for his dog Ladybug, who came running back with the bear in pursuit. Ladybug got away but Henderson didn't. Officials and Henderson said the bear was likely guarding a winter-killed moose carcass — normal grizzly bear behavior — about 50 yards from Henderson's cabin.

The cabin is in grizzly bear habitat near the Wyoming border northeast of Teton.

Officials said the bear had an ear tag indicating it had been caught before in Grand Teton National Park.

The U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service had given the state permission to remove the bear from the wild to protect public safety.

An estimated 600 grizzlies live in and around the park, which includes portions of Idaho, Montana and Wyoming. Last month, the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service said it intended to remove grizzly bears from the endangered species list.

The attack on Henderson was the first reported in Idaho since a female grizzly attacked a hiker on the western border of the park on July 3, 2006.

OBITUARIES/WEST

Jerry V. Jensen

BUIL — Jerry V. Jensen died at his home southwest of Burley April 7, 2007. Jerry was born June 14, 1952, to Gerald and Janice Jensen. He grew up on his grandfather's farm and attended Burley schools, graduating from high school in 1970. He went to college at College of Idaho (now Albertus College), graduating in 1974 with a degree in biology. The spring semester of his junior year he was part of science expedition to the Barrier Reef in Australia, an experience that changed his perspective on his plans for his future. While in college, he was active in band and music ensembles, playing the trumpet. He married Christine Hagerman of Wendell in 1974, and they had two girls, Erica and Amy. Christine died suddenly in 1987. After some postgraduate study at Idaho State University, Jerry entered law school, graduating with a Juris Doctor degree from Lewis and Clark School of Law in Portland, Ore. He was admitted to the Oregon Bar in 1980 and the Idaho Bar in 1984. Jerry joined the John Rosholt law firm, practicing in the Boise and Twin Falls offices. He left the firm in 2001 to continue practicing at his home in Burley. In 2004, he married Mary Wasko Sasa, and together they cooked and gardened and raised orchids and tropical plants in their solarium. Jerry pursued his lifelong interest in science and world affairs in books and on the Internet. Part of his butterfly collection is on display at the Herrett Museum. Jerry is survived by his wife, Mary; his two daughters, Erica Zimmerman (Luke) and Dr. Amy Jensen of Pittsburgh, Pa.; and nephews, Gerald and Janice Jensen of Burley. Jerry raised his two daughters essentially by himself and was very proud of their successes and accomplishments. At his request, no public services will be held. Farmer Funeral Chapel, Burley.

Evan Sparks

HEBYURN — Evan Lester Ward Sparks, a 71-year-old resident of Hebyurn, died Monday, April 14, 2007, at his home. He was born Sept. 2, 1935, in Hebyurn City, the son of Lester Ward and Almyra. He married a woman in a band and played the saxophone for the rest of his life. He was a member of the American Legion, No. 18, 1982, in Tacoma, Wash. While living in Washington, Evan was a salesman at Boeing, working in metal layout. Upon his retirement, he returned to the Hebyurn-Cassia area, settling in Hebyurn. He continued his career at Idaho Equipment and Sheet Metal. Evan loved the outdoors and enjoyed fishing, hunting and boating. He could often be found at his favorite fishing spot at the Minidoka Dam and enjoying what he liked best. He was a wonderful husband, father and grandfather and had a remarkable relationship with his daughter, Christal Bossert, and her son, William, and his granddaughter, Jodi Tharp. He is survived by his wife, Susan, of Hebyurn; four children, Leah and Spence, Timothy Sparks, Vernona Cook and Hitt McDonald; his son-in-law, Dennis Bossert, of Rupert; one sister, Clovone (Bob) LaDue, of Colony, Texas; one brother, Tharp, of The Dalles, Wash.; and many grandchildren and great-grandchildren. He was preceded in death by his parents; his daughter, Christal Bossert; one sister, Mae Moore; and one brother, John Sparks. A memorial service will be held at 11 a.m. Wednesday, April 18, at Rasmussen Funeral Home, 359 E. 16th St., Burley, with Bishop Blaker Crocker officiating. Urn placement will follow at the View Cemetery.

Court rulings on environment go against Bush administration

By Jeff Barnard Associated Press writer

GRANTS PASS, Ore. — A string of federal court rulings in recent weeks has gone against Bush administration environmental policies, and critics say they are proof that the White House regularly circumvents laws designed to protect the nation's air, water, forests and endangered species. "These courts are finding in case after case after case that the Bush administration is violating the law," said Trip Van Noppen, vice president of litigation for Earthjustice, a public interest law firm that represents environmental groups suing the government. Not so, say administration officials, who are claiming their own share of court victories and say they prefer negotiation to litigation.

Toppling the list of administration setbacks was the U.S. Supreme Court ruling on April 2 telling the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency it could not opt out of enforcing carbon dioxide emissions a major compo-ment of the greenhouse gases blamed for global warming — under the Clean Air Act.

Here are other court rulings against Bush administration environmental policies in recent weeks: • The 9th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals rejected the administration's 2004 plan for, balancing endangered salmon runs against federally owned hydroelectric dams in the Columbia Basin. The ruling characterized NOAA Fisheries' plan as a "sleight of hand" that counted dead fish as if they were alive. The court added that the plan ignored a provision of the Endangered Species Act that requires the agency to consider whether salmon can be expected to thrive, not just survive, under dam operations. • A federal judge in San Francisco tossed out new Bush administration rules that gave states a chance to seek logging and other commercial permits in roadless areas of national forests previously off-limits to most development. • On the same day, a U.S. judge in Seattle ruled that the Bush administration illegally suppressed and misrepresented the views of dissenting scientists when it eased logging restrictions designed to protect salmon under the Northwest Forest Plan. • Other rulings have struck down mountaintop coal mining in West Virginia, efforts to avoid listing new threatened and endangered species, and EPA emissions standards for brick and ceramics kilns.

In what some are calling a major milestone, the Supreme Court told federal officials — and by extension the states — that the Clean Air Act gave them the power to control carbon emissions. The Bush EPA had maintained it had no authority under the Clean Air Act to regulate carbon dioxide. Kieran Suckling, policy director for the Center for Biological Diversity in Tucson, Ariz., said that case and others demonstrated that the administration has gone from trying to "twink" environmental laws to ignoring them altogether. "It's really an imperial administration that fundamentally believes that whoever is in power gets to make all the rules," Suckling told The Associated Press. But James Conaway, head of the White House Council on Environmental Quality, dismissed the Supreme Court ruling as "somehow moot," because President Bush is already committed to regulatory changes increasing automobile fuel efficiency and renewable fuels to cut carbon dioxide emissions. "There is an example of a decision that appears negative on the face but is relatively inconsequential in that the president is already committed to regulatory action," Conaway told The AP in a phone interview. He noted that the Supreme Court upheld the administration's position when it ruled that Duke Energy had to follow EPA directives to install pollution control equipment on aging coal-fired power plants. "We negotiated a clean air rule in 2004 with the environmental groups and the industry to virtually eliminate sulfur diesel fuel," he said. "Because we got everyone to agree, there was no lawsuit."

POCATELLO
Jury sees video made by suspects in murder trial

Jurors in an eastern Idaho murder trial watched a 30-minute videotape in which two suspects talk about planning to kill a high school classmate, and then listen to them talk after they allegedly carried out the attack.

"We just killed Cassie. We just left her house," Urian Draper is heard saying on the video. "This is not a joke. It's like it wasn't real. It was so fast."

Draper, 17, is on trial in 4th District Court here for first-degree murder and conspiracy to commit first-degree murder in the slaying of Cassie Jo Stoddard. Prosecutors say Draper and Torey Adamecik, 16, stabbed Stoddard while she was house-sitting for relatives near Chubbuck on Sept. 22.

At the time, all three were 16-year-old juniors at Pocatello High School; Adamecik's trial on the same charges is scheduled to begin next month.

The video jurors saw on Saturday includes footage of Stoddard on the morning of Sept. 22 at the high school. In the video, Draper approaches Stoddard and asks her if she knows where Adamecik is, and complains Adamecik was supposed to meet him an hour earlier.

The video tape ends and starts again just after noon with Draper and Adamecik talking.

"We are making our plan for tonight," Adamecik said. "It's going happen tonight," Draper said.

ST. ANTHONY
St. Anthony aiming for ATV parade record

IDAHO FALLS — City officials in the eastern Idaho town of St. Anthony want to set a new ATV parade record by drawing at least 2,276 participants to the St. Anthony ATV and Sand Trail Parade in June.

If that many riders show up, it would double the record set last summer in Kentucky when 1,130 riders took part.

City officials also hope to put the town on the map as an ATV riding area for tourists by setting the parade route.

"That would give St. Anthony some pretty good bragging rights," said City Councilman David Loomis, who's promoting the event through his company, Bent River Productions.

SANDPOINT
North Idaho highway bypass plan under fire

The Idaho Transportation Department and the Federal Highway Administration have not properly analyzed the environmental impacts of a massive highway project to route U.S. 95 traffic away from the downtown core of Sandpoint, according to documents filed in U.S. District Court.

The North Idaho Community Action Network, on Thursday filed the operative brief in its lawsuit to halt the Sand Creek Bypass, arguing the project violates National Environmental Policy Act requirements.

"Congress enacted NEPA procedures in order to ensure that the environmental impacts of proposed actions are considered during the decision-making process," Linda Tauber, a member of NIGAN's board of directors, told the Bonner County Daily Bee.

Officials with the Idaho Transportation Department declined to comment about the litigation.

The community action network contends the bypass analysis is faulty because it doesn't consider changes made to the plan since 2000. The group also said the analysis doesn't consider the effect on downtown merchants, or considered alternatives with lesser impacts.

The Sand Creek Bypass project would dredge and fill portions of the creek to funnel high-speed traffic away from the resort town.

The transportation department has rejected two alternatives that the community action network said would avoid environmental impacts to Sand Creek.

However, the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers has questioned the department's analysis of those alternatives.

COEUR D'ALENE
Kroc Center receives money as deadline looms

A $300,000 donation toward building a planned Kroc Community Center in northern Idaho has been made with just six weeks left on a money-raising deadline.

The latest donation brings the total to $5.4 million, but still short of the $6 million needed before the Salvation Army can begin construction on the center.

This northern Idaho city was one of six in the West selected by the Salvation Army last year for a $65 million (part and Joan Kroc Corps Community Center).

The two-story design proposed for Coeur d'Alene would be built with some of the $1.5 billion that Joan Kroc, widow of McDonald's founder Ray Kroc, left to the Salvation Army when she died in 2003. The biggest is to be used to build 30 community centers across the country.

But the community also has to raise some of the money to build the 109,000-square-foot center that is expected to employ about 150 full-time workers and to serve nearly 700 people a day.

The latest donation came from Victory Homes and Neighborhood Inc., operated by managing partners Tom Johnson, Cliff Mort and Joe Enus.

"We're trying to challenge the building community and the rest of the community to support this cause," Johnson told the Coeur d'Alene Press. "We believe, as individuals, we have been blessed by God, our families and our employees and as a group are giving back."

COLORADO
Ski resorts hope for good season numbers

DENVER — Another Colorado ski season is nearing an end, and resorts are hoping to at least match if not exceed last year's record of 12.53 million skier visits. "It really has been a good year. April looks good. Even though the snow in Denver kept some skiers at home we are still seeing great numbers," said Molly Cuffe of Colorado Ski Country USA.

In its mid-March report, Cuffe's organization said resorts logged 9.5 million skier visits from Oct. 13 through Feb. 28, an increase of 119,271, or 1.4 percent, from the same time last season. The trade group represents Colorado's 26 ski resorts.

More talk won't stop water table's decline

Magic Valley Ag Weekly

One of the few certainties in the emotional battle over the relationship between surface and groundwater is that good water lawyers won't run out of work anytime soon.

We're sure it wasn't done to benefit attorneys, but the Idaho Department of Water Resources has surely raised interest with its recent plan to host a series of public meetings on the "conjunctive management" of surface and groundwater within the Snake River Plain.

Public meetings sound like progress, but it could also allow Water Resources to delay making a decision on an issue that threatens water supplies in the Magic Valley by several months and maybe a couple years. Don't forget, it took a lawsuit last year by Twin Falls and North Side canal companies to get Water Resources to even acknowledge that conjunctive management is needed.

The issue is over groundwater that show declining water levels in the Magic Valley are directly related to pumping of the Snake River Aquifer by eastern Idaho irrigators. Senior water rights issued in the Magic Valley are believed to be harmed by more recent permits allowing pumping from the aquifer along the upper Snake.

So Water Resources now wants to talk about the issue. But further delays won't solve the problem and could even further damage water rights in the Magic Valley.

If junior water right holders suffer, they would almost certainly take legal action against Water Resources, just as senior water right holders are poised to sue if a favorable decision isn't soon forthcoming.

The issue is controversial and politically loaded. It's an issue that pits farmer against farmer, eastern Idaho against the Magic Valley. We don't blame Water Resources for not pushing forward with more enthusiasm.

However, the department should be obligated to protect the "first in time, first in right" principle that guides water development in Idaho.

Water Resources should be a leader in the effort to protect senior water rights, whether the move is popular or not.

Right now, the department could expand the existing moratorium on groundwater development and close loopholes enough to slow the decline of the aquifer. When that's done, then Water Resources can pursue more talk and more studies.

If a moratorium on future development doesn't stop the aquifer's decline, the department may have to reclaim some rights to water in the Snake River Aquifer. We hope the department will make the tough decisions before it's too late for Magic Valley water users.

How is religion more believable than science?

Greg Hegman wrote that he has trouble believing in evolution because it is "pseudoscience," and then, perhaps under duress, recounts his several reasons why (apparently, unlike his religion, evolution doesn't offer him believable answers to questions about human origins).

Who also wrote that, instead, he believes in and puts his faith in the "God of creation, the author of all science." How nice, but exactly which "God of creation" is he talking about? Because he doesn't tell us, I'll assume (at my peril) that he is talking about the usual God of no body, parts and passions; the God that supposedly has always existed, but formed itself formless, of theopians (stuff we earthlings can't understand, but, as we have been told by religion's professionals, stuff our external senses are made to see). We can verify easily hypostatize.

This ubiquitous yet omnibenevolent God, omniscient and omnipotent that, without the need for an incompact sexual act (and hence, without the need for physical love passionless, but yet-somehow loving), together with a female earthling fathered an eternal son that was/is another form of himself (super-magical cloning?). That female earthling, without ever losing her essential and blessed virginity, and who may or may not have given birth (eventually) to other, non-supernatural children, did or did not die, but instead, perhaps and maybe, was magically "taken up" into the realm of the entity (the bodyless-partless-passionless-one) that first impregnated her.

And that son, because his omniscient father (who was/is, remember, another form of himself), couldn't or wouldn't come up with an easier, better, or more humane plan to "return" all of us earthlings to his presence, was tortured and crucified.

Oh yeah! Forgive me! I somehow forgot just how believable all that is. JOHN WALSH Burley

Only creationism can teach children morality

Addressing the concern for our youth: Why is teenage suicide up? Why is teenage meth use up? Why are teenage pregnancies up? I think we are teaching this stuff in our schools. (1) By teaching the religion of evolution, we are telling our children that you are an accident and have little or no value. (2) There is no purpose to life except to have fun and pass on your genes. (3) There is no absolute right or wrong. In fact, there are no absolutes. (4) Your presence here is a burden on the planet since you are one of the polluters and it would be better for the world if you died. When we teach the religion of evolution in our schools, this is what we are telling our children because there is no real future. Since there is no way to tell right from wrong, survival of the fittest becomes a way of life. It is unthinkable that we would dare teach intelligent design and give eternal value to our children.

Maybe they (educators) will come up with a new program for morality like they did for fatherless children in the '50s, during the '60s, HIV in the '80s, all of which was a miserable failure. Only creationism teaches morality. Good Luck, Mr. and Mrs. AMERICA! BULL WANDERPOL Castleford

Making al Qaeda losses their own

By the day, the debate at home about Iraq becomes increasingly disconnected from the realities of the actual war on the ground.

The Democrats in Congress are so consumed with negotiating among their factions the clever linguistic device to legislatively end the failure of the administration's current military strategy — while not appearing to do so — that they speak almost not at all about the first visible results of that strategy.

And preliminary results are visible. The landscape is shifting in the two fronts of the current troops: Anbar province and Baghdad.

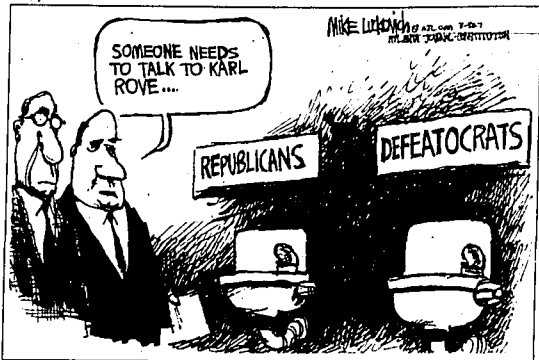

CHARLES KRAUTHAMMER

The news from Anbar is the most promising. Only last fall, the Marines' leading intelligence officer there concluded that the United States had essentially lost the fight to al-Qaida. Yet, just last week, the Marine commandant, Gen. James Conway, returned from a four-day visit to the province and reported that we "have turned the corner."

Why? Because, as Lt. Col. David Kilcullen, the Australian counterinsurgency adviser to Gen. David Petraeus, has written, 14 of the 18 tribal leaders in Anbar have turned against al-Qaida. As a result, thousands of Sunni recruits are turning up at police stations where they could be seen before. For the first time, former insurgent strongholds such as Ramadi have a Sunni police force fighting essentially on our side.

Retired Gen. Barry McCaffrey, a major critic of the Bush war policy, now reports that in Anbar, al-Qaida is facing "real and growing" groundswell of Sunni tribal opposition. "And that 'this is a crucial struggle and it is going our way — for now.'"

The situation in Baghdad is more mixed. Thursday's bridge and Green Zone attacks show the insurgents' ability to bomb sensitive sites. On the other hand, pacification is proceeding. "Nowhere is safe for Westerners to linger," reported ABC's Terry McCarthy on April 3, "but over the past week we visited five different neighborhoods where the locals told us life is slowly coming back to normal." He reported from Iddiyah, Karmada, Zayouna, Zayun Park and the notorious Halfa Street, previously known as "sniper alley." He found that "children have come out to play again. Shoppers are back in markets," and concluded that "nobody knows if this small safe zone will expand or get swallowed up again by violence. For the time being, though, people here are happy to enjoy a life that looks almost normal."

Fouad Ajami, just returned from his seventh trip to Iraq, is similarly guardedly optimistic and explains the change this way: Fundamentally, the Sunnis have lost the battle of Baghdad. They initiated it with their indiscriminate terror campaign that they assumed would cow the Shiites, whom they view with contempt as congenitally quiescent, lower-class former subjects. They learned otherwise after the Samarra bombing (February 2006) kindled Shiite fury — savage militia campaigns of kidnapping, indiscriminate murder and ethnic cleansing that has made Baghdad a largely Shiite city.

Petraeus is trying now to complete the defeat of the Sunni insurgents in Baghdad — without the barbarism of the Shiite militias, whom his forces are simultaneously pursuing and suppressing.

How at this point — with only about half of the additional surge troops yet deployed — can Democrats be trying to force the United States to give up? The Democrats say they are carrying out their electoral mandate from the November election. But winning a single-vote Senate majority as a result of razor-thin victories in Montana and Virginia is hardly a landslide.

Second, if the electorate was sending an unconflicted message about withdrawal, how did the most uncompromising supporter of the war, Sen. Joe Lieberman, win handily in one of the most liberal states in the country?

And third, where was the mandate for withdrawal? Almost no Democratic candidates campaigned on that. They campaigned for changing the course the administration was on last November.

What the president has done. He changed the civilian leadership at the Department of Defense, replaced the head of Central Command and, most critically, replaced the Iraq commander with Petraeus — unanimously approved by the Democratic Senate — to implement a new counterinsurgency strategy.

John McCain has no illusions about the difficulty of this war. In his bold and courageous speech at the Virginia Military Institute defending the war, he described the improvements on the ground while acknowledging the enormous difficulties ahead.

Insisting that success in Iraq is both possible and necessary, McCain made clear that he is willing to stake his presidential ambitions, indeed his entire political career, on a war policy that is unpopular but that he believes is in the best interest of the sake of the country. How many other presidential candidates are acting in the same spirit?

Iraq spurs a need to redefine our identity

So who is an American? What's the key to American identity? The answer can be hard, even brutal. But it's ours — we earned it with our own blood.

Whenever America travels around the world in a military adventure — or misadventure — the question needs to be answered again, even more emphatically.

The classic exposition of American identity came from a Frenchman-turned-American named Hector St. John De Crevecoeur. He moved here in 1754, and three decades later, in "Letters From an American Farmer," he asked, "What then is the American, this new man?"

And Crevecoeur answered, "He is an American who, leaving behind him all his ancient prejudices and manners, receives new ones from the new mode of life he has embraced, the new government he obeys, and the new rank he holds." Crevecoeur concluded, using language anticipating the melting pot image of a later century, "Here individuals of all races are melted into a new race of man. Yes, Americans can treasure their ancestry. But they must treasure even more their citizenship.

Americans gained a poignant reminder of their American-ness on 9/11, when the entire nation was under attack. We still cherish the unifying memory of that public service announcement immediately thereafter, in which Americans of all ethnicities looked at the camera and spoke the same words, in the same language, "I am an American. It's a beautiful sentiment, beautifully realized. And while it can be found on the Web at adcoinc.org, it should still be on TV.

Meanwhile, we are constantly reminded that American identity has been forged in fighting. A new movie with a James Fenimore Cooper-ish title, "Pathfinder," hits on these themes with the force of a broadsword — literally. Specifically, in its Hollywood way, the film reinforces Crevecoeur's point: When you become an American, you have a new identity and a new loyalty. And if necessary, you must fight against your old country, in defense of your new country.

That's what happens in this film, set in America many centuries before the Columbus "Pathfinder" splines the yarn of a Viking orphan boy, saved from death by Indians, who raise him as one of their own. Then comes the test, when another Viking merchant man arrives, bent on conquest. The boy, now a man, must fight with his new people against his old people.

The movie is not for everyone. It's bloody — although, of course, American history has often been bloody. And yet, we have often been the crucible of nationhood. German-Americans, for example, felt twinges in two world wars, when America's enemy was their former homeland. Yet German-American warriors, notably Gen. John Pershing and Supreme Commander Dwight Eisenhower, oversaw Uncle Sam's victory over the Kaiser and Hitler. So the American vision — molding Crevecoeurian "new men" — was once again resoundingly vindicated.

Not all our wars, however, have been a tonic for the American soul. Iraq, for example, has been a heartbreaker, because our leaders made the foolish presumption that the people there were waiting for the chance to be like us.

And then the Bush administration compounded its error by pretending — until the pretense became completely absurd — that the Iraqi sectarian violence was just like the squabbles of our infant republic in the 18th century. It was a sick joke to claim that the likes of Muqtada al-Sadr had any interest in replicating American constitutionalism.

So now America must regroup. We must get out of Iraq with our honor intact, and we must resolve, once again, to defend our homeland against both murderous terrorists and foolish border-opening politicians — those who would transform America in the name of woeful globalism. This country is all we have. Fortunately, it's all we need.

Conflict at the Smithsonian

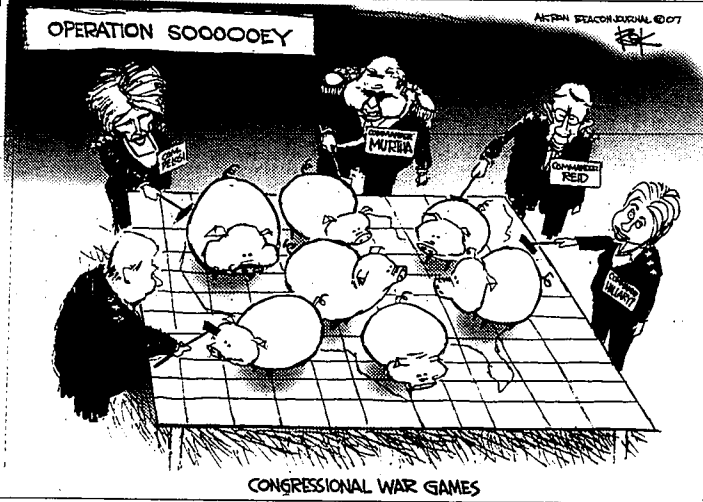

The Washington Post

The top two Smithsonian officials who were paid big bucks for serving on the corporate board of a firm doing business with the institution didn't break any rules. But that doesn't make the practice right or their judgment correct.

The questionable arrangement involved now-departed Smithsonian Secretary Lawrence M. Small and his deputy, Sheila P. Burke, who still serves. As reported by The Washington Post, the two served on the board of the Chubb Group, which has a $548.341 annual contract for insurance with the Smithsonian. Small, whose Smithsonian salary was $915,696, got $169,675 of Chubb cash and stock last year. Burke, with a $400,000 Smithsonian salary, received cash and stock valued at $194,676 for the same period.

Neither official was involved in awarding the contract to Chubb. But, as A. Sprightly Ryan, inspector general for the Smithsonian, told Congress, "There certainly is an appearance of a conflict of interest." That Small and Burke were allowed to serve on this board without any serious vetting is the latest example of the utter lack of oversight by the Board of Regents. It's troubling that no one thought it necessary for the Smithsonian's general counsel to review and approve the arrangement.

Pay-as-you-go returns to Congress budget

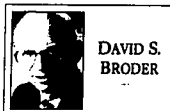

On this tax-filing weekend, there is a bit of consolation coming from an unexpected quarter in Washington. Instead of promising more unaffordable tax cuts that go mainly to the richest Americans, as their Republican counterparts have done for the past six years, some Democrats are imposing some real spending discipline on themselves.

That is the underreported story in the budget resolutions passed by the House and Senate just before the Easter recess and now headed for tweeking in a conference between the chambers and final approval in the next few weeks.

The resolutions differ in detail but have an important common feature: a pay-as-you-go rule, short-handled as pay-go, which requires Congress to offset every increase in an entitlement program or new tax cut with an equivalent saving somewhere else in order to prevent any further additions to the budget deficit.

The return to pay-go, which was jettisoned by Republicans in 2001 in order to make it easier to pass their tax cuts, is a triumph for two stubborn men in particular — the Democratic chairmen of the Senate and House budget committees, Sen. Kent Conrad of North Dakota and Rep. John Spratt of South Carolina.

The committee for a Responsible Federal Budget, a nonpartisan watchdog group committed to the battle against deficits, said in a statement on April 6 that it "strongly applauds both the House and the Senate budget committees for reinstating and adhering to pay-as-you-go. It took a tremendous amount of resolve to comply with the pay-go principle... In the face of pressures to pay for popular programs like SCHIP (the children's health insurance program) and the farm bill through deficit spending."

The same statement cautioned that "the heavy lifting on pay-go... still lies ahead" when offsets must be found for proposed increases in spending for programs like SCHIP or for extending some popular middle-class tax cuts, now scheduled to expire in 2010. Both parties in Congress and President Bush have also promised to protect millions of people from automatic tax hikes through the Alternative Minimum Tax.

In an interview last week, Spratt said he agrees that tough tests of the pay-go principle will come up in the months ahead and he is prepared for the inevitable fights. "I have three people on the Budget Committee staff spending their full time monitoring legislation to see that every bill meets the pay-go standard," he said.

Some Republicans have complained that Democrats have given themselves an easy "out" by writing a pay-go rule that allows the required offsets to take effect, not in the same year as the increased spending, but within the budgetary "window" of six to 11 years.

Spratt said this is not a dodge but a simple concession to the reality that changes in entitlements and taxes are delayed in their effects. "No one is trying to game the system," he said. "The discipline (of pay-go) is strongly supported by Speaker (Nancy) Pelosi and by our members."

That is certainly true of the Blue Dogs, the 43-member caucus of conservative House Democrats, but I told Spratt that I wondered if it was really the case for the more liberal members like Pelosi.

Spratt responded that the Democrats have been changed by the events of the past 14 years, starting with Bill Clinton's first election. "Democrats take pride in the budget we passed in 1993," Spratt said. "You remember it passed by one vote in both the House and Senate, with no support from Republicans. Despite the opposition saying it would lead to a recession, it produced eight years of economic growth, and every year the budget picture got better until finally we were running a surplus and paying down debt."

It changed the country's perception of Democrats. "Then George Bush came in with his deep tax cuts and the deficits returned. So he changed the country's perception of Republicans in a negative way. The contrast has worked to our advantage — and that's why Pelosi made pay-go one of the priorities for the first 100 hours."

As Spratt readily concedes, pay-go is no more than a first step toward fiscal responsibility in Washington. By itself, it does not deal with the long-term and massive problems of financing Social Security and Medicare benefits for the retiring baby-boom generation. But it can be, if enforced, an effective way of preventing the current budget deficit from getting worse.

By the standards of Washington, that is real progress.

Sheriff not to blame for problems in Jerome

In regard to your editorial on April 8, "Jerome sheriff fails to mix a trend of legal problems?"

You state that "The state investigated allegations of possible assault in a bar, alleged sexual battery of a female associate, alleged falsifying of search warrants and allegations of theft." In each instance, the state investigators either found insufficient evidence to prosecute the suspects or faced a statute of limitations." In order to arrest and/or prosecute a person or persons for breaking the law, you have to have concrete evidence of same. Evidently, the state investigators did not have the concrete evidence to arrest, had "insufficient evidence" or "faced a statute of limitations." And you still point the finger at Sheriff Weaver?

Why did the sheriff hire these men in the first place? I have known Sheriff Weaver for 17 years, and he is a very honest person. He goes by the rules and does a background check on all potential employees. Background checks do not predict what a person is going to do in the future. If they turn out to be dishonest in some way, how can you blame him? Sheriff Weaver is not God! Give it a rest! If you conducted a survey of other law enforcement agencies, you would find that they, too, do background checks and sometimes, as time goes on, they find that the officer is not honest.

As you stated, "County residents should demand more from the top." Every time something illegal happens in this county, too many people seem to blame Sheriff Weaver, just as they are still blaming him for the 2001 incident in Eden. That, too, was thoroughly investigated. Give it a rest! PAT SLAGEL, Jerome

IRAQ
Shiite Muslims threaten to quit government

BAGHDAD — A key Shiite Muslim bloc in Iraq's government vowed Sunday to quit Prime Minister Nouri al-Maliki's refusal to set a timetable for the withdrawal of U.S. troops, a move that could further weaken the country's leadership at a time of rising sectarian violence. The threat came on the heels of another bloody day in the capital, where at least 37 people died in bombings that worsened the challenges of Iraq's third month. The victims included 17 Iraqis killed in a market in a Shiite-dominated neighborhood, where two car bombs exploded nearly simultaneously. As people fled the chaos, mortar rounds rained down. Fifty people were wounded.

Nine people were killed as they stood surveying the damage from a roadside bomb that had exploded in Baghdad's central Karada district. The bomb caused no casualties, but another one went off shortly afterward, leveling a smoothie shop, near the crowd had gathered, causing the deaths and 17 injuries.

Five people were killed in Karada when a minivan exploded, and six Iraqis were killed in a Shiite neighborhood in a southwest Baghdad when a suicide bomber blew himself up in a taxi.

The incidents all bore the hallmarks of the car bombings and suicide attacks blamed on Sunni Arab insurgents.

Political parties loyal to radical Shiite cleric Muqtada al-Sadr blame the U.S. presence for the ongoing bloodshed, and al-Maliki faces a major blow if he loses their backing. The bloc holds six Cabinet positions and 28 seats in the parliament, where it has greatly bolstered the prime minister's Shiite-led alliance.

RUSSIA
Police beat protesters in St. Petersburg

ST. PETERSBURG — Riot police beat and detained dozens of anti-Kremlin demonstrators Sunday on a second day of protests that tested the weak opposition's ability to challenge widely popular President Vladimir Putin.

As in Moscow a day earlier, only a few thousand people turned out in St. Petersburg to criticize the government. Opposition leaders called that a heartening response in the face of the huge police forces massed against both rallies.

Putin's foes said the harsh handling of demonstrators, who included many elderly people, would fuel a growing sense that the leader is strangling democracy ahead of parliamentary elections in December and a presidential vote next spring.

But the opposition is in severe straits. Opinion polls rate Putin as Russia's most popular political figure by far, thanks to newfound political stability and rapid economic growth fueled by high world oil prices. That popularity has crowded mainstream politicians in parliament and allowed Putin to strengthen the Kremlin's powers.

ISRAEL
Vatican envoy to attend Holocaust memorial

JERUSALEM — The Vatican's ambassador to Israel will attend a Holocaust memorial service at the Yad Vashem museum, reversing an earlier decision to boycott the event, officials said Sunday.

Vatican officials had said they would skip the Sunday event because of a caption at the Holocaust museum describing the wartime conduct of Pope Pius XII. Officials from Yad Vashem, the Vatican's Embassy and the Israel Foreign Ministry confirmed Sunday that the ambassador, Monsignor Antonio Franco, would attend.

The caption next to the picture of Pius reads, "even when reports about the murder of Jews reached the Vatican, the pope did not protest." Pius "maintained his neutral position" with two exceptions, the caption says, criticizing "his silence and absence of guidelines." The exceptions were appeals to the rulers of Hungary and Slovakia toward the end of the war.

The boycott had threatened to upset fragile relations between Israel and the Vatican. The memorial service is traditionally attended by all foreign ambassadors to Israel or their representatives. Yad Vashem had said this would mark the first case in which a foreign embassy deliberately skipped the ceremony.

first appeared in 2005, when Yad Vashem opened its new museum. Shortly after, the previous Vatican ambassador asked that the caption be changed.

Yad Vashem has not done so, insisting its research on the pope's role was accurate. Yad Vashem said it would be ready to re-examine Pius XII's conduct during the Holocaust if the Vatican opened its World War II-era archives to the museum's research staff and new material emerged. Despite frequent requests from Holocaust researchers, the Vatican has denied access to its wartime papers.

MAGIC VALLEY SPEEDWAY

Steve Jones brings home the gold

By Linda Brittan
Times-News correspondent

TWIN FALLS — The first race of the 2007 season got off to a great start for two champions of the 2006 season. For Pepsi Premier series driver Steve Jones, an opening night win gave the driver of the No. 3 car hope for a championship which faded away on the final night of competition last year.

Jones took the feature division main event win Saturday night at Magic Valley Speedway in a car with a complete new look, removing the familiar red and hoping the new paint would be a good omen for this season. With the win, Jones was optimistic the change was for the best.

"Yeah, it can stay gold for a couple more weeks," he said. When the green flag fell for the main event race in the Premier Series, Jones took the lead in the No. 27 and finished, but 15 laps into the race Jones was able to take advantage of several re-starts after cautions and powered his way into first position. Jones was able to maintain the lead for the remainder of the event and pulled into victory lane, taking the first main event win of the season in the feature division series.

Jones also captured the win in the first main event of 2006 and was in the points lead going into the final race of the season but was sidelined with emergency surgery and could not make the event.

"It was disappointing," Jones said. "This year I'd just like to finish and not under the knife. I really want an Idaho State Champion's jacket."

Jones admitted the cautions played into his favor throughout the race. "Rob Vest is always one of the harder guys to pass, he said. "I kind of got lucky on some of the yellow flags and kind of got a nose ahead."

Mike Greco had an excellent run in the No. 70 late model car, finishing third after JJ Woodhall was able to make the pass on Greco with about 10 laps remaining in the race.

"I replaced the whole front of the car," Greco said. "It's the best handling car I've had since my pony stock car — with about five times the horse power."

"I did do really well tonight — he's a good driver," Jones said of Greco. "He got his car over to Eddy's (McKean) shop and got it all fixed up over the winter. He's got my set up on it now."

The NAPA Pony Stocks main event race was won by Jason Whited, one of the two 2006 track champions who started off with an opening night win. Whited was on the pole for the start of the race and even though Billie Miles gave it her best to catch Whited after making her way through the field, it was Whited who took the checkered flag. Jonathon Gomez placed third in his inaugural Pony Stocks race, holding off Josh Pitz and Randy Grubbs for the position.

The Intermountain Pro Trucks main event saw former Premier and Grand Nationals driver Dan Doan in Victory Lane once again, this time climbing out of a race truck. Doan has not raced at MVS for a couple of seasons but was offered a ride in the No. 9 truck owned by competitor Alan Larson.

"I miss racing — period," Doan said. "It was fun to be out here, especially with the Larson crew. They're a bunch of goofballs. They're fun to be around. It was really nice of Alan (Larson) to give me the truck to drive. He told me earlier that if I was in the lead I had to pull over and let him by. But I didn't know where he was so I left it at that. But it was a blast. He (Larson) gave me a thumbs up after the race."

The Budweiser Grand Nationals race was won by another 2006 champion, Louis Lopez. One race truck driven by Kenny Hatke, competed in the event and finished second.

Final Results:
Pepsi Premier Series: Steve Jones, 1; Jason Whited, 2; Mike Greco, 3; Dan Doan, 4; Josh Pitz, 5; Jonathon Gomez, 6; Alan Larson, 7; Billie Miles, 8; Rob Vest, 9; Eddy McKean, 10; Alan Larson, 11; Mike Greco, 12; Alan Larson, 13; Alan Larson, 14; Alan Larson, 15; Alan Larson, 16; Alan Larson, 17; Alan Larson, 18; Alan Larson, 19; Alan Larson, 20.

Back-to-back for Burton

Becomes first repeat winner at Texas

By Stephen Hawkins
Associated Press writer

FORT WORTH, Texas — Finally a Texas two-step. Jeff Burton passed Matt Kenseth on the final lap Sunday to become the first repeat winner at Texas, winning 10 years after he won the inaugural race.

Burton never led until he overtook Kenseth on the backstretch coming out of Turn 2 after more than 10 laps of trying to get past him. It was Burton's 19th career victory.

That denied Kenseth, who won the Busch race Saturday, a weekend sweep. It also ended a four-race winning streak by Hendrick Motorsports.

There had been 11 different winners in the 11 races since Burton won the first race at the 1 1/2-mile, high-banked Texas track.

Jeff Gordon led 173 of 334 laps and finished fourth, the fifth top-five finish in the seven races this season for the Hendrick driver. But he is 0-for-13 at Texas, joining Phoenix and Homestead as the only active tracks where the four-time Nextel Cup champion hasn't won.

Kenseth and Mark Martin, who finished third after sitting out two races, are former Texas winners.

Burton won with an average speed of 143.359 mph and was the last in-line leader. Gordon, the points leader who started on the pole after qualifying was canceled because of storms, led four times and Dale Earnhardt Jr. had three leads for 36 laps.

Jimmie Johnson, the Hendrick driver who won three of the last four races, was knocked out of contention on lap 249 when he ran into Tony Stewart's sliding car coming onto the frontstretch. Johnson finished 38th.

Stewart, who won at Texas last fall, was sent into a spin when he was bumped while running side-by-side with rookie Juan Pablo Montoya.

When making a run on Busch only 13 laps later trying to get back on the lead lap, Stewart lost control. Earnhardt slowed down to try to avoid Stewart but was rammed hard from behind by Kyle Busch, who had the other win in Hendrick's streak.

Texas had gone longer than any other track without a repeat winner. When Richmond opened in 1953, there were eight races before inaugural winner Lee Petty won again in 1960.

Jamie McMurray finished, followed Greg Biffle, Martin

Truex Jr., Montoya, Denny Hamlin and David Stremme. Earnhardt was trying to repeat at Texas, where he got his first Cup victory seven years ago, a year after his first Busch victory came at the track. He has gone 33 races since winning at Richmond last May.

Gordon ran in front for the most of the first half of the race before Earnhardt passed him on lap 154, pulling his No. 8 Chevrolet under Gordon entering the backstretch.

Earnhardt still was in front of Gordon with 100 laps to go, but everything started to change after Johnson bashed up his front right end when he ran into Stewart.

During the pit stop at that caution, Gordon dropped six spots to eighth after one of his tire changers had problems.

"We were faster, but he held me off for 15 laps," Burton said of his former teammate.

Gordon has gone 25 races since his last victory. His 75 victories are one short of the late Dale Earnhardt for sixth place on NASCAR's career list.

There was a first-lap crash at Texas for the first time since 1997, when there was a 13-car accident on the first turn of the first lap on the then-new track.

This time, rookie David Ragan slid up into JJ. Yeley coming out of Turn 4. Casey Means, the other Hendrick driver, then made contact with Ricky Rudd, who wound up in the infield rolled over the top of Ragan's car.

Kurt Busch got past Earnhardt on lap 248 and was in the lead when he plied under green. Right after Busch got back on the track on lap 294, the seventh caution flag came out and his chance at winning was gone.

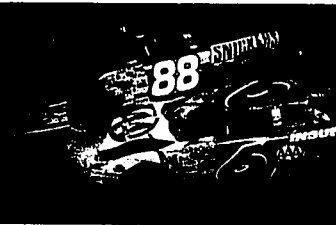

That put Gordon back in front, and he stayed there until Kenseth passed him with 17 laps to go. Lap after lap, Burton tried to catch up, and finally did — just in time.

"We were faster, but he held me off for 15 laps," Burton said of his former teammate.

Baseball celebrates 60th anniversary of Jackie Robinson's professional debut

By John Nadel
Associated Press writer

LOS ANGELES — The Dodgers solemnly lined up along the third-base line, each and every one wearing No. 42.

Jackie Robinson broke major league baseball's color barrier on April 15, 1947, with the Brooklyn Dodgers, and the sport celebrated the 60th anniversary of his debut throughout the country Sunday, when more than 200 players, managers and coaches were his number.

"I've often said that baseball's most powerful moment in its really terrific history was Jackie Robinson coming into baseball," commissioner Bud Selig said during an on-field ceremony before the Dodgers played the San Diego Padres.

"It's an incredible story — not just for baseball, but for society. Jackie was an American hero and the ultimate barrier-breaker. Threats to his life were commonplace. Yet Jackie took everything hate-mongers had to offer him. Not only is he a Hall of Famer for all-time,"

Hank Aaron and Frank Robinson threw out ceremonial first pitches, and follow Hall of Famers Joe Morgan and Dave Winfield were on hand, joined by actors Courtney B. Vance and Marion Wajants, Academy Award winner Jennifer Hudson sang "The Star-Spangled Banner."

Adding a personal touch were Robinson's widow, Rachel, and two Dodgers who knew him. Broadcaster Vin Scully paid tribute to Rachel Robinson.

"Don Newcombe, Robinson's former teammate and a longtime Dodgers executive, looked on. "At the 50th anniversary ceremony, at New York's Shea Stadium in 1997, then-President Clinton spoke and Selig announced Robinson's No. 42 was being retired by all major league teams. The only player wearing No. 42 then who remains active is New York Yankees reliever Mariano

Wadsworth wins big in Filer

By Diane Phillips
Times-News writer

FILER — There must be something in the dirt in Filer that brings success for Cody Wadsworth of Kimberly. After four Top-10 finishes Friday night, he was a three-time winner Saturday afternoon. Wadsworth and Megan Crist of Twin Falls didn't improve on their winning Friday time of 11.96 seconds in team roping with a 16.73 run but their time was four seconds better than the time registered by Cassie Viersta and Andrew Taylor of (20.90). Wadsworth improved Friday's time of 11.78 in calf roping with 11.23 for win number two. And after finishing fourth Friday night in bull riding, he earned a score of 73 points to defeat Colton Bedke of Oakley (63) and Skylar Nelson of Declo (50). Bedke was asked about the high number of riders that have been making successful 8-seconds rides this season and answered that having another year of experience under their belts makes them (the cowboys) better. He said for the beginning of the year, the quality of bulls now are just all right

Sabathia shuts down White Sox

CLEVELAND — C.C. Sabathia pitched eight overpowering innings and the Cleveland Indians got only one hit — a leadoff double in the first — in a 2-1 win over the Chicago White Sox on Sunday.

Cleveland Indians starting pitcher C.C. Sabathia, wearing Jackie Robinson's number, throws against the Chicago White Sox Sunday at Jacobs Field in Cleveland. Major League Baseball celebrated the 60th anniversary of Robinson's major league debut, with several baseball players wearing Robinson's retired No. 42. Sabathia went on to pitch eight innings, beating the White Sox 2-1.

The Indians' only hit was Grady Sizemore's double in the first off Jose Contreras (1-2).

Cleveland took advantage of three errors and some walks to take two of three in the series.

Contreras did a remarkable job of keeping the game close, considering the White Sox made three errors in the game and he walked five in the first four innings.

The last time the Indians won while getting just one hit was April 12, 1992, a 2-1 victory over Boston.

Blue Jays 2, Tigers 1

TORONTO — John McDonald drove in the go-ahead run with a seventh-inning single and Josh Towers recovered from a shaky outing with seven-plus strong innings in Toronto.

McDonald broke a 1-1 tie with a two-out single that brought in Royce Clayton, who ran through three base coach Brian Butterfield's stop sign and scored without a play at the plate.

Towers (1-1) scattered three hits over 7-2/3 innings to win a start for the first time since last May 14 at Tampa Bay. He retired 12 straight batters between the second and seventh innings.

Devil Rays 6, Twins 4

MINNEAPOLIS — Dioner Navarro hit a breaking double off Joe Nathan in the ninth inning and Tampa Bay earned a 6-4 win over the Twins.

Navarro's second hit of the game snapped a 4-all tie and sent Nathan (1-1) to his first loss since September 6, 2005.

First baseman Jwanna greeted Nathan with a double and scored on Navarro's double. Carlos Pena's RBI single made it 6-4.

Mariners 14, Rangers 6

SEATTLE — Jose Vidro homered in his first two at-bats, and Ichiro Suzuki had four hits for Seattle, which scored a season high in runs.

Suzuki led off with his 21st career home run and one out later, Vidro connected for a solo shot, quickly erasing a 2-0 deficit. Vidro added a three-run homer in the second inning.

Horacio Ramirez (1-0) allowed a run in six innings for the win. Texas starter Brandon McCarthy (1-2) lasted two innings, giving up six runs and six hits.

Athletics 5, Yankees 4

OAKLAND, Calif. — Marco Scutaro hit a three-run homer with two outs in the ninth inning of Mariano Rivera to give Oakland its first series victory of the season.

Scutaro's shot spoiled a strong start by Andy Pettitte, who threw five hits and two runs — one earned — in seven innings.

Rivera (1-1) blew his first save chance of the season, despite retiring the first two batters in the ninth. Todd Walker singled for Oakland's first hit since the third inning and Jason Kendall then walked, bringing up Scutaro.

Oakland right-hander Rich Harden struck-out seven during six innings, then left with tightness in his pitching shoulder. Jay Marshall (1-0) pitched 1-1/3 scoreless innings for his first major league win.

National League

Cardinals 10, Brewers 2

ST. LOUIS — Albert Pujols broke out of an April drought with two home runs and five RBIs, and Chris Duncan was 4-for-5 with a homer to help the St. Louis Cardinals beat the Milwaukee Brewers 10-2 on Sunday.

Converted reliever Braden Looper was effective in his third straight start for the Cardinals, who scored four runs during an 0-4 start at Busch Stadium. Their first home victory since beating the Tigers in Game 5 of the World Series came against Brewers Ben Sheets, who fell to 4-14 in 22 career starts against St. Louis.

Braves 8, Marlins 4

ATLANTA — Chipper Jones

hit a three-run homer and Andruw Jones added a two-run shot to back Tim Hudson's strong pitching in Atlanta's victory over Florida.

It was the third home run in four games for Chipper Jones, who has seven RBIs during that stretch. His drive in the third inning off Scott Olsen (2-1) capped a five-inning inning. Andruw Jones hit his third of season in the fifth off Rick Vander Hudson.

Hudson (2-0), who is 102-17 when his team scores at least four runs, allowed one run and six hits in seven innings. The right-hander, who is 5-0 against the Marlins, was helped by three double plays.

Reds 1, Cubs 0

CHICAGO — Kyle Lohse struck out a career-high 12 in eight innings and Jeff Conine hit an RBI single, leading Cincinnati past Chicago.

Lohse (1-0) allowed four hits and one walk, outpitching Ted Lilly. Ryan Theriot had three hits for the Cubs, but they couldn't muster much else.

Conine singled home the lone run in the fourth. Chicago wasted another solid outing by Lilly (1-1), who allowed only hits while striking out 10 and walked only six in six innings. It was his ninth game in 10 or more strikeouts and his first since June 10 with Toronto.

Diamondbacks 6, Rockies 4

PHOENIX — Tony Clark homered twice and tipped in three runs, leading Arizona over Colorado.

It was the 22nd multihomer game for the 34-year-old Clark, one of many major leaguers who have celebrated the 60th anniversary of Jackie Robinson's major league debut.

Orlando Hudson, another player who wore No. 42, went 2-for-3 for Arizona for his eighth multihit game this season. He pushed his average to .412.

Mavs top Spurs; Duncan ejected

DALLAS — There's no such thing as a meaningless game when the Dallas Mavericks and San Antonio Spurs play.

Although their meeting Sunday had little bearing on the playoff picture, the Western Conference powers played a tense, emotional game that saw bodies flying, emotions overheating, Tim Duncan ejected and the Mavericks beating the Spurs 91-86 Sunday to end San Antonio's six-game winning streak.

The loss — only the second in the Spurs' past 14 games — locks them into the No. 3 seed in the Western Conference. They have only themselves to blame, going without a field goal the last 6:32, missing nine straight shots, and not scoring any points over the last 4:17.

Dirk Nowitzki and Devin Harris each scored 21 points in a game the Mavericks may have used as their dress rehearsal for the playoffs. They won for the 66th time this season, tying the 1970-71 Milwaukee Bucks for ninth-best in league history, and finished 36-1 at home.

had 12 points, 10 assists and eight rebounds for the Nets. Jermaine O'Neal led the Pacers with 20 points and Troy Murphy and Danny Granger each scored 17.

Indiana entered the game trailing the Orlando Magic by two games for the eighth spot in the Eastern Conference with three games to play. Any combination of a win by Orlando or a loss by the Pacers the rest of the way will eliminate the Pacers.

Bulls 101, Wizards 68

WASHINGTON — Gilbert Arenas limped into the locker room for a pregame visit, catching up with other Wizards in his first appearance at the team's arena since he had season-ending knee surgery.

Arenas left the premises before tipoff, which might have been for the better. He didn't have to watch the Chicago Bulls' typically stifling defense limit Washington to a season-low point total.

The Gordon scored 30 points. Chicago held Washington to 34 percent shooting, and the Bulls beat the depleted Wizards for their third consecutive victory.

Magic 88, Celtics 86

ORLANDO, Fla. — Redo Turkoglu helped Detroit West's driving layout at the buzzer to help Orlando clinch its first playoff berth in four years with a win.

Orlando's 111-107 loss against New Jersey combined to clinch the final spot in the Eastern Conference playoffs for Orlando. The Magic nearly blew a 17-point lead in the final 6:41 before Turkoglu clinched the win. Turkoglu led the Magic with 20 points. Grant Hill and Grant Nelson had 16 points each, and Dwight Howard added 10 points and 14 rebounds.

Raptors 107, Knicks 105

TORONTO — Chris Bosh scored 23 points and the Toronto Raptors earned home-court advantage in the first round of the playoffs with a victory over New York.

A victory Parker and Joey Graham each added 19 points for the Raptors, who won their season-high sixth straight game and will be the third seed in the Eastern Conference.

Toronto matched its franchise record of 47 wins, accomplished in 2000-01.

7ers 102, Pistons 91

AUBURN HILLS, Mich. — Willie Gary pulled out 26 points to lead Philadelphia.

The game was meaningless for both teams — Detroit has clinched the Eastern Conference's top seed while Philadelphia was eliminated from playoff contention on Saturday — and it showed.

— The Associated Press

NBA

Warriors 121, Timberwolves 108

OAKLAND, Calif. — Jason Richardson had 32 points and 12 rebounds, and singing Golden State took sole possession of eighth place in the Western Conference standings with a victory.

The Warriors (40-40) did it with one eye on the out-of-town scoreboard, where they watched the Clippers (39-41) fall out of their eighth-place spot. The Magic nearly blew a 105-100 loss to Sacramento.

The Warriors, who got back to .500 for the first time since mid-January, briefly moved back seventh place with the Lakers, who played later Sunday.

Kings 105, Clippers 100

LOS ANGELES — Reserve swingman Francisco Garcia scored 16 points, including a pair of 3-pointers down the stretch, and Ron Artest had a career-high 10 assists to lead Sacramento.

Mike Bibby, one of six Sacramento players in double digits, scored 13 of his 15 points in the first half as the Kings dealt a severe blow to the Clippers' playoff hopes. Artest had 15 points, including an 18-footer jumper with 36 seconds remaining, but the Clippers had closed to 96-92 with a pair of 3-pointers by Tim Thomas 26 seconds apart.

Nets 111, Pacers 107

INDIANAPOLIS — Vince Carter scored 35 points to help New Jersey and put Indiana on the brink of elimination from the Eastern Conference playoff picture.

Bostjan Nachbar scored 25 points and shot 6-for-6 from 3-point range and Jason Kidd

Merritt wins at Buhl Amateur golf tourney

BUHL — Troy Merritt came back to win the championship golf Sunday at the 2007 Buhl Amateur golf tournament.

Merritt shot rounds of 70 and 72 to beat runner up Eric Peterson by two shots. Merritt finished with a combined score of 142 to Peterson's 144. Bret Rupert finished third with a score of 145.

Doug Mackay led wire to wire to win the first flight with a score of 154. Mike Eckert took second with a score of 157 while Brian Atkinson and Greg Tholen tied for third with scores of 159.

There was a video tribute with Morgan and Aaron among those participating. And several current players expressed their thanks to Robinson.

Selig presented Mrs.

Robinson with the Commissioner's Historic Achievement Award for her work with the Jackie Robinson Foundation, formed in 1973 to raise scholarship money for qualified minorities.

Robinson died in October 1972 at age 53.

"She's made an enormous impact on our sport," Selig said. "We are an institution with enormous social responsibilities. She keeps us focused on that."

Then, speaking to Mrs. Robinson, Selig said: "You not only made baseball better, more important you made society better."

"Whites inside only" and "Coloreds entrance" were signs of the time when Robinson played his first game at Ebbets Field. He was subjected to racist remarks from players and fans alike.

Los Angeles executive Branch Rickey made Robinson his choice to break the color barrier because he believed he was mature enough and tough enough to survive and thrive.

Robinson retired following the 1956 season — after Dodgers traded him to the rival Giants — and was elected to the Hall of Fame in 1962.

"That first day, we were so anxious in the morning with our acknowledging last 84-year-old Rachel Robinson said, "I think what we felt at the end of the day was a general relief. He performed even though he didn't do very well."

Robinson went hitless, but reached base on an error and scored the go-ahead run in the Dodgers' 5-3 victory over the Boston Braves.

His impact has been lasting. Mrs. Robinson said 1,100 scholarship students have graduated from college and are presently in school since the foundation was formed.

"We needed to find a way to hold onto him," Mrs. Robinson said of her late husband. "Jack's legacy is all over the place."

"We know if our youngsters don't get educated, they won't have a chance to achieve their highest potential. We indoctrinate with the notion of giving back. We have a 97 percent graduation rate."

Ceremonies were held at 10 of the 15 big league ballparks during games were scheduled Sunday — rain washed out games at the five other sites.

The St. Louis Cardinals and Milwaukee Brewers honored Robinson by having all their players outfitted in No. 42.

"I think more than anything I just want people to be able to learn and understand Jackie Robinson's life and what he had to endure, and the impact he had on American society, not just baseball," said outfielder Preston Wilson, the only black player on the Cardinals.

"What you're celebrating what this guy has done," Griffey said. "Without him, who knows when the next African-American athlete is going to be able to play. The things that he went through and what he stands for, you have to celebrate his life and legacy. Today is just, for me, my way of saying thanks."

Latest spring storm plays havoc with sports Sunday

A nor'easter pounded much of the East Coast, wiping out six baseball games and postponing the 60th anniversary of Jackie Robinson's major league debut in five cities on Sunday.

In New York, the Washington Nationals' three-game finale with the Mets was rained out, along with a doubleheader in Pittsburgh featuring the San Francisco Giants against the Pirates. In Baltimore, rain washed away the Orioles' bid to complete their first four-game sweep of the Kansas City Royals since 2002.

In Boston, the Los Angeles Angels' game against the Red Sox was postponed, along with the Houston Astros' game in Philadelphia against the Phillies.

It was the most postponements in one day in the Major Leagues since April 12, 1997, when eight games were postponed, according to the Elias Sports Bureau.

In Pittsburgh, the teams planned to play two games because Saturday night games also were washed out — the first time since PNC Park opened in 2001 that the Pirates called off consecutive home games because of weather.

Pro Bowl guard Shields announces retirement from Chiefs

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Kansas City guard Will Shields is retiring after 14 NFL seasons, during which he made a record 12 Pro Bowl appearances and anchored one of the top offensive lines in the league.

The 35-year-old announced his decision on his Web site — www.willshields.com — Sunday. He said the physical requirements of football had become more difficult with each passing day.

The decision to hang up his cleats has not been an easy one to make for me, but one I knew I would eventually have to make," Shields wrote.

V. EASY # 49

Fill in the grid so that every row, every column, and every 3x3 box contains the digits 1 through 9. That's all there is to it. There's no math involved. The grid has numbers, but nothing has to add up to anything else. You solve the puzzle with reasoning and logic. Find the answers for todays puzzle on page C-10.

Health tips for men — and the women who love them

"What's really funny about men is that if a man's car makes a strange noise, he's under the hood in a snap," says Dr. Jean Bohannon from the Men's Health Network. "If we can get men to take care of their bodies the way they take care of their cars, they would live a lot longer."

ALIVE AND WELL
Jan Mittelieder

Men are more likely to die at every point in life from the womb to old age, compared with women. By age 65, only

Goodbye for now
80 men are left for every 100 women; by age 85, only 40 men to every 100 women.

Yet, less than half of men ages 45-64 have had a physical exam for preventive care during the past year, according to the Center for Science in the Public Interest.

Frankly, the typical male is as likely to schedule a routine checkup as he is to stop and ask for directions.

Here's a quick-step checklist to help men spot several major health threats. These things spell trouble:

- 1. Waist circumference
Men: more than 40 inches
Women: more than 35 inches
- 2. Triglycerides
150 or higher
- 3. HDL cholesterol
Men: under 40
Women: under 50
- 4. Blood pressure
Systolic: 130 or higher or Diastolic: 85 or higher
- 5. Fasting blood sugar
110 or higher

Source: National Heart, Lung and Blood Institute

When you measure your waist circumference, you're indirectly measuring the worst kind of fat to have — visceral fat buried deep in the abdomen. Men who measure more than 40 inches around the middle have a greater risk of heart disease, diabetes and dementia.

High triglycerides and low HDL "good" cholesterol are key risk factors that can lead to clogged arteries, which cause not only heart attacks and stroke, but dementia and impotence as well.

Systolic pressure is the force that blood exerts on the artery walls when the heart beats, while the diastolic pressure is the force between heartbeats. As people age, high blood pressure can damage blood vessels, which can lead to heart disease, stroke, dementia and impotence.

If your body's insulin isn't efficient at getting blood sugar into your body's cells, you could have insulin resistance or metabolic syndrome. If your fasting blood sugar levels hit 100 milligrams per deciliter, you may have pre-diabetes. If your fasting blood sugar rises above 125, you have type 2 diabetes.

The disease damages blood vessels throughout the body. Damage to large arteries may lead to heart disease; if they're small ones, it could be blindness or dementia. And if they're in a certain area, it could affect your love life.

"Diabetes is one of the leading causes of impotency," says Robert Rizza, research specialist at the Mayo Clinic. "This is a big deal for our country's healthy male. Fifty to 60 percent of men who don't take care of their diabetes could be at risk for impotency."

The risk of impotency might motivate a man to have his blood sugar checked regularly, and that's a good thing.

"Diabetes is one of the major causes of heart attacks in men," explains Rizza. "Fifty to 75 percent of people who have a heart attack have diabetes or pre-diabetes. Some of them know it; some of them don't."

The bottom line: Losing weight, staying physically active and making healthy dietary choices can deflate each of these risk factors.

Twin Falls School District's 'Biggest Loser' competition wraps up

By Blair Koch
Times-News correspondent

TWIN FALLS — Since last fall, when we first met Amy Lent, a first-grade teacher at Harrison Elementary School in Twin Falls, she has wanted to lose weight to be a better role model for her own children, in and out of the classroom.

There have been weeks where Amy simply maintained her weight or didn't lose as much as she'd hoped for, but she persevered and continued to walk each weekday at 5 a.m. for a rigorous treadmill routine. She also tried to eat more balanced, nutritious meals.

The hard work is showing. A much more slender Lent is the clear front-runner in the school's "Biggest Loser" competition; she has shed more than 25 pounds since September.

Each Friday morning the participants come to the office and throw $2 into a pot. Whoever lost the most weight that week wins the pot. Lent has taken it home a few times and has earned about $90, she said.

On the outside, evidence of Lent's transformation shows in the sparkle of her eyes and her glowing face. She said she can feel the change emotionally, physically and spiritually.

"I have so much more energy; losing the weight helps all over," Lent said. "I think I am a better teacher, a better person. I just feel so much better."

Her ultimate goal is to lose 30 pounds by the school year's end. With more than a month of Friday morning weigh-ins remaining, Lent is confident that her goal will become reality.

Lent's crux point came during a seemingly normal home weigh-in — except the scale toppled out at 260 pounds and her own weight was frighteningly close.

"I started this quest two years ago and lost 48 pounds before the school started this little competition," Lent said. "I am walking faster and further. I can do this."

Two tons lost

In total, participants at Harrison Elementary have so far lost 73.4 pounds. It may not sound like much, but each pound gone is a

Amy Lent is glad she doesn't fit into these red smocks anymore. She is the front-runner to win Harrison Elementary School's Biggest Loser competition. So far Lent has lost more than 25 pounds. By the end of May she hopes to have shed 30 pounds.

Creative insomniacs

To sleep, perchance to lose your edge?

By Dennis Drabiele
Special to The Washington Post

The insomniac as hero — that's how I think of W.C. Fields. When chronic lack of sleep wore the comedian down during a film shoot, he would repair to his trailer for a few winks (supplemented, no doubt, by a few swigs from the bottle). For Fields, who wrote his own scripts, sleep was the Great Enemy, and his struggles to catch up with it inspired an unforgettable scene in his best movie, "It's a Gift" (1934).

One night, Harold Blasonette (Fields) sneaks out on his nagging wife and beds down on the porch swing outside their apartment. In the next dozen minutes, he becomes a nocturnal job, beleaguered by animate and inanimate forces: The swing collapses; the grocer's boy delivers clinking bottles of milk; a coconut bounces down the stairs; a salesman comes looking for a Carl La Fong, whose name he spells out repeatedly and loudly. The cacophony goes on, and poor Blasonette never does get to sleep.

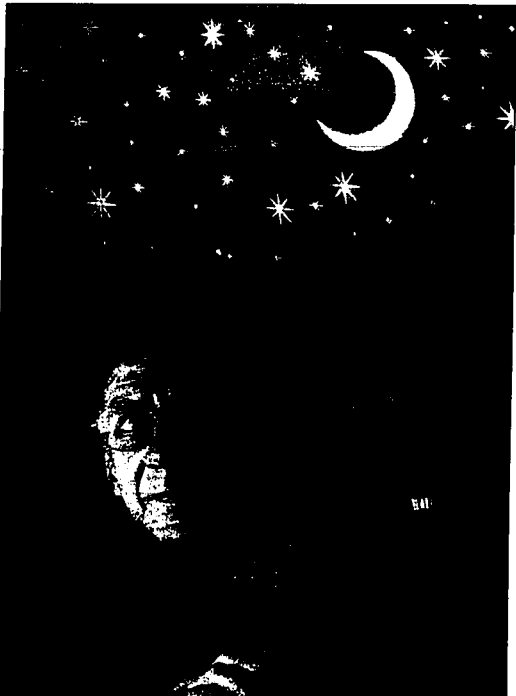

The film's title can be puzzling unless taken ironically, as a comment on Blasonette's ability to slough off irritations by the mere all contributing to the scourge of sleeplessness — without losing his temper.

Yet there's another possible reading. Whether a habitually snoring, sleep could have thought up that series of anti-sleep roadblocks is dubious. Working as a creative artist, Fields might be hinting that a condition most of us would regard as a curse can actually be a help.

Studies show that as many as 20 percent of Americans suffer from insomnia or other sleep disorders, and I use the term "suffer" advisedly. Virtually nobody rejoices in sleeplessness, and it can be a sign of more serious problems, such as depression. But could it be that for some people, with W.C. Fields heading the list, insomnia is something to fight for rather than to fight and suppress?

Fields wasn't the only creative person who regularly had trouble sleeping. A Web site lists 10 famous insomniacs: Fields, Marlene Dietrich, Amy Lowell, Alexandre Dumas, Judy Garland, Tallulah Bankhead, Franz Kafka, Theodore Roosevelt, Groucho Marx and Mark Twain — and could have stretched to many more.

Groucho once tried to beat insomnia by taking a hot bath in water scented with pine needles; he nodded off in the tub and woke up with a mouthful of water. Vladimir Nabokov admitted to being "a poor go-to-sleeper" but construed his baldness as a kind of war on sleep, which he resented for taking him away from conscious life. Garland Virtually nobody rejoices in sleeplessness, and it can be a sign of more serious problems, such as depression. But could it be that for some people, with W.C. Fields heading the list, insomnia is something to fight for rather than to fight and suppress? For insomniac Dennis Drabiele, shown here, more sleep may mean less inspiration.

and Marilyn Monroe popped pills to combat their insomnia, while — in combination with other pills — fatal results.

As an insomniac myself (though neither a creative genius nor a glamorous puss), I often go to bed with drooping eyelids, only to find a few minutes later that my brain is on the boil with ideas for articles I might pitch to editors or directions in which I might take the one I'm currently writing. (Sometimes the boil churns up other subjects, such as the perfect reply to the salesclerk who was rude to me that day, or the outcome of the St. Louis Cardinals baseball game I've just watched on ESPN, but for purposes of this article we can put those aside.)

Like several other writers I know, I keep a pad and pencil on my night

table; when a promising notion hits, I switch the lamp on and scribble down a phrase or two for later retrieval. Sometimes this urge is more in the nature of nuts and bolts, as described so well by Evelyn Waugh in his novel "The Order of Gilbert Pinfold": "There were periods of literary composition when (Pinfold) would find the sentences he had written during the day running in his head, the words shifting and changing color kaleidoscopically, so that he would again and again climb out of bed, pad down to the library, make a minute correction, return to his room. He in the dark dazed by the pattern of vocables until obliged once more to descend to the manuscript."

Pinfold took a prescribed sedative, and I take over-the-counter melatonin, but lately I've been wondering if I should bother taking anything at all — if a W.C. Fields, my insomnia might not be a gift.

The notion that insomnia might have a use is counterintuitive. Conventional wisdom insists that to perform at your best — as a student facing a test, an athlete preparing for a game, a lawyer scheduled to argue in court, etc. — you need a good night's sleep.

As an insomniac, however, I might point out that all this harping on the efficacy of sleep only compounds the problem: How in blazes can you get a good night's sleep when you're worried about getting a good night's sleep and doing your best in that exam or soccer tournament or hearing? For

Return to maiden name will help mom move on

DEAR ABBY: Jeanne Phillips

DEAR ABBY: I am separated from my husband of three years and have a beautiful 2-year-old son. Initially, I thought I'd retain my married name, but the more I've been thinking about it, what harm would it do if I changed it? Is it really going to be that confusing or upsetting to explain to my son? After all, I will always be "Mom" to him, and nothing will change that.

I would love to take my maiden name back and put my husband and the chapter of my life with him behind me. However, we have a son who will always carry his father's name. Is it selfish of me to consider reverting back to my maiden name?

— MRS. SCORED IN ILLINOIS
DEAR MRS. SCORED: Not in my opinion. Thirty years ago, thinking on the subject was different. However, today, with so many women retaining their maiden names after marriage, what you have in mind is not unusual, I say, go for it.

DEAR ABBY: My 26-year-old son, "Luke," has been engaged for a year and is being married in October. My 24-year-old son, "Elijah," has just announced that he will ask his girlfriend to marry him, and he would like to be married in August.

Would it be improper for

THE ACES ON BRIDGE® Bobby Wolff

"The rose is an extra. Its smell and its color are an embellishment of life, not a condition of it. It is only goodness which gives extras."

— Sir Arthur Conan Doyle

Frequently, you encounter a position where you have four or more cards opposite a doubleton honor. It is a blind spot among some players that the best chance of developing tricks may be to lead low toward the doubleton holding, as David Bird points out in his book "Another 52 Great Bridge Tips." Today's example is a straightforward deal. West leads the heart queen against your small slam in no-trump. You have 11 tricks on top, and an excellent chance of a fifth trick in diamonds. How will you play the contract?

There is no need to rely exclusively on a favorable diamond position. Win the heart lead with the ace and lead a low spade toward dummy's jack. (By contrast, running the jack can accomplish nothing.) When West leads the spade queen, you will make a third spade trick and can claim 12 tricks before you even look at the diamond position.

There is another possible benefit from playing on spades: Suppose East has four fourths of spades and four diamonds to the jack. He wins the spade jack with his queen, much to your disappointment, but you will still make the contract on any return. When you ask your winners in hearts and clubs, East will have to throw a spade or a diamond. Your 12th trick will come from the suit that he discards.

ANSWER: A trump lead stands out here. Because declarer will surely be hoping to ruff one of the majors in dummy, leading trumps should prevent him from doing that. Your values in diamonds tell you declarer may not easily be able to set up that suit, so cut down on the ruffs as soon as you can.

milestone for the 15 faculty members trying to be more healthy.

Camaladerie has acted as a catalyst for everyone to stay on track. "When we do well, its great, everyone is happy for you, cheering you on," said Linda Lindsay, extended resource teacher at Harrison. "When you don't do great they are still cheering for you, that you can do it and I have drawn strength from that support. It has been awesome."

Lindsay has also lost a considerable amount of weight — 15 pounds.

"I had a pretty big goal of 55 pounds. I had lost 21 pounds but then life happens and you get stressed out," she said. "Having the support and accountability of everyone doing this has helped me get back on the right track."

The school is also participating in a district-wide "Biggest Loser" competition. The facility that loses the most weight wins.

With the district's competition over, results are yet to be tabulated and finalized by March.

Results through March reported that 11 teams with 144 participants lost 4,400 pounds, said District Office Wellness Coordinator Donna Newbury.

"One hundred and forty-four people isn't bad but we are hoping to make a few modifications to the program next year so more people participate," Newbury said. "Those that did participate lost an average of two percent of their body weight each month."

The winning team, to be announced later this month, will be treated to an overnight stay in Boise.

Cocaine and amphetamines may increase the risk of stroke

By Janet Crowley
Los Angeles Times

Reason No. 495 to flush the uppers: Cocaine and amphetamines may increase the risk of stroke.

Crunching numbers from a database of more than 3 million hospital patients, researchers at UT Southwestern Medical Center in Dallas found that amphetamine abuse was associated with a nearly five-fold increase in hemorrhagic stroke — bleeding within the brain.

Cocaine abuse, they report, doubled the risk of both hemorrhagic and ischemic stroke, caused by blocked blood flow to the brain.

The study, which appears in Archives of General Psychiatry, looked at patients ages 18 to 44 discharged from Texas hospitals in 2000-03.

"I talked to some friends about my study and they said, 'Wow, big shock, drugs are bad for your brain,'" says lead author Dr. Arthur Westover, a psychiatrist. "But I think there's a bigger message here about methamphetamine abuse."

Knowing that amphetamines can cause a stroke is a more compelling reason to quit than the message "meth is bad" per se, he says, or "will make your teeth rot out," he says.

Insomniacs

the hard-of-sleeping, it's sometimes a tossup as to which is heavier, the pressure to sleep well or the pressure to do well in the activity being slept for.

One recent study suggests that insomnia and originality might go hand in hand. In keeping with the study's lean-or-clastic thrust, the title presents the hypothesis as a question: "Could Creativity Be Associated With Insomnia?"

Its authors, Dione Healey of the University of Canterbury and Mark A. Runco of California State University at Fullerton, worked with 60 New Zealand children between the ages of 10 and 12, half of whom scored in the 90th percentile or better on a standard creativity test, while the other half fell short of that mark. The researchers had the kids fill out questionnaires designed to elicit their sleeping habits. "Seventeen of the 30 highly creative children showed signs of sleep disturbance," Healey and Runco reported last year in the Creativity Research Journal. "Whereas only eight of the control children showed signs of sleep disturbance."

This is a tantalizing result, but as the authors themselves note, it leaves certain key questions unanswered. Is insomnia the price some creative people must pay to activate their muse — no insomnia, no brainstorms? Or does insomnia keep them from being even more creative by depriving them of sleep's full refreshment — no insomnia, more and better brainstorms? And in real life, as opposed to the psych lab, is insomnia perhaps more often neither a cause nor a penalty for the onset of creativity but simply a side effect of getting too wrapped up in the process once it has started — being, like Virginia's Flintheart, unable to turn off the mental valves you flipped on earlier in the day?

The answers to such questions could make a big difference, for insomnia tends to feed on itself. The more you worry about it, that is, the more power it can exert over you. But if insomnia is an outlet for connections not made during our upright hours, a dredging-up process for ideas we didn't realize we had in us, then we probably shouldn't fight it, or at least not so vehemently. Insomnia may be not only what we make of it, but also what we tell ourselves about it.

SIGNATURES

QUESTION: Can a person with a physical disability that prevents him from being able to sign his name have a validly executed will?

Yes. The law recognizes that not all are able to give a signature. A legal procedure has been devised that allows for valid execution of a will without the actual signature of the person making the will. (A male person making a will is called a testator.) The law provides that some other person may sign a will in the testator's name, if so directed by the testator. This must be done in the testator's presence.

The law further provides that all of this must occur in the presence of two other persons who must personally witness the execution (signing) and subsequently sign their own names to the will as witnesses. Interestingly, although the person making the will must be at least 18 years of age, the witnesses can be children so long as they are able to perceive, remember, and later testify to what they saw.

With other legal documents a signature is accomplished by a person merely making a "mark" or impression on paper if someone else writes the disabled person's name near the mark. The other person must then write his own name on the document as a witness.

The law follows necessity. More so than ever before, persons with disabilities are given the benefit of rights most of us take for granted.
