Robber on the loose, police say

By Cassidy Friedman
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — Police on Friday were on the lookout for an armed robbery suspect who allegedly stole cash from State Farm Insurance at 330 Blue Lakes Blvd. N. at about 12:53 p.m. Friday.

A visibly shaken employee told police a man entered the business, demanded cash, pointed a small black handgun at her and told her to stay in the bathroom with the door closed until he was gone, according to a Twin Falls Police Department press release.

Description

- White man
- About 6 feet tall
- Heavy build
- Tattoo on the right side of his neck
- He was wearing a black bandanna around his head above his eyebrows, a blue hooded sweat shirt, dark blue jeans, and black gloves with the fingers missing.

The suspect left with an undisclosed amount of cash — in the form of $50, $20, $5 and $1 bills. The suspect is described as a white man, about 6 feet tall with a heavy build. He was wearing a black bandanna around his head above his eyebrows, a blue hooded sweat shirt, dark blue jeans, black gloves with the fingers missing and a tattoo on the right side of his neck. He was last seen carrying a black gun in his left hand — apparently a small semiautomatic weapon, police said Friday afternoon.

Twin Falls County victims' assistance coordinator Nancy Howell consoled the employee, who was crying at her desk. At 2:30 p.m. State Farm Insurance representatives said they planned to close the office for the rest of the day.

The Twin Falls Police Department asks anyone with information about the suspect to call 735-4357 — or 311, if calling from inside Twin Falls' city limits.

Idaho State Police reported 20 robberies in Twin Falls city in 2006. Seven of them led to nine arrests or were solved in another way.

Record electricity demand had Idaho Power pondering rolling blackouts

By Matt Christensen

SHOSHONE — Much of Idaho's electricity last Friday afternoon when a brush fire near Shoshone damaged one of the largest substations on the Idaho Power Co. grid. The company announced about 6 p.m. it was close to rolling blackouts — intentionally engineered power outages — because smoke and debris had damaged the Midpoint Substation near Shoshone, and the company was experiencing record demand for electricity.

"We cannot predict if conditions will require us to implement rotating outages. Still, we must ask for customers' immediate assistance in order to help avoid such operations."

Milk prices are good news for area producers

By Chris Steinbach
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — Dairy producers in the Magic Valley could soon receive record prices for Class III milk, an industry analyst said Friday. The Class III milk price on the Chicago Mercantile Exchange closed Thursday at $20.17 a hundredweight.

That trails by 41 cents the record high set in May 2004, said Alan Levitt, a dairy market analyst and president of Levitt Communications in Crystal Lake, Ill. "In July, we will break that record," he said. That is good news for the more than 300 dairy farms the U.S. Department of Agriculture says are in the Magic Valley. Those farms help create about 5,000 jobs, according to Idaho Commerce and Labor. Idaho dairy farmers produced 987 million pounds of milk in May, the last month for which figures were available from USDA. That represented an increase of 5.1 percent from the same month of 2006.

"I'm grateful for the neighbors and the volunteer firefighters that were there for us," said Susanne Cooper, who was one of many home owners threatened by the fire near the subdivision.

JEROME — Structures burned and homes were evacuated Friday as fires roared through south-central Idaho. Calls swamped dispatchers at the Southern Idaho Regional Communications Center (SIR-COMM) for most of the afternoon and into the night. Brock Estell, BLM's southern Idaho spokesman, said crews were too busy battling flames to give an estimated number of acres or even fires in the area. "It's a bad day," he said. Estell said BLM was still determining causes of the fires, but early indications pointed to some man-made SHOSHONE — Firefighting crews for the Bureau of Land Management and Lincoln County officials evacuated parts of Shoshone Friday as a fire moved into parts of the town from the south.

The brush fire that originated in Jerome County took a mean northward turn around 8 p.m. Friday. Crews were battling flames late into the evening before it turned southwest after 11 p.m.

The fire pushed quickly into Shoshone, according to locals near the scene, burning at least one structure — a storage

String of accidents follow storm

By Cassidy Friedman

TWIN FALLS — Twin Falls County Sheriff's deputies and Idaho State Police responded to three serious accidents during Friday afternoon's windstorm. "A nine-car wreck near the Filer area rest stop on U.S. Highway 30.

"Several people were sent to the hospital," said Idaho State Trooper Miles Dahl, who is investigating the crash.

An accident at Windmill Heights south of Twin Falls. The Twin Falls County Sheriff's Office handled the crash, according to Nancy Howell, spokeswoman for the Twin Falls County Sheriff's Office. Other information was limited as of 8 p.m.

A three-car wreck trapped a family and power lines came down near 4000 N 3500 East, north of Kimberly, Howell said. At least four people were transported away by ambulance.

fire started at Woody's bar about 4:45 p.m. when what blew an awning onto an electrical box in an alley behind the building.

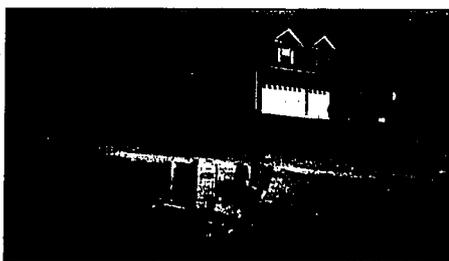

The bar's owner, Dave Woodhead, said there were several customers inside when the blaze started but no one was injured.

Dick Capps, battalion chief for the Twin Falls Fire Department, said wind gusts downed power lines throughout Twin Falls.

Meanwhile, south of Jerome, access to Big Little Ranch and Sawtooth Acres were cut off by police — parts of Interstate 84 and U.S. Highway 93 were also temporarily closed.

Jed Powell, 18, whose parents live in the Big Little Ranch, said the fire reached within 8 feet of his parent's house.

Powell raced to the house from Jerome when one of his brothers called saying the fire jumped U.S. Highway 93. He said police threatened to arrest him if he tried to get into the subdivision.

An officer at another location led him in. He and two friends moved Powell's family out and then turned on the sprinklers. They took up garden hoses and shovels to defend the property. Powell and his friends moved fast to protect the home before firefighters arrived.

"If they (his friends) hadn't been helping things wouldn't have ended up like they did," Powell said.

Susan and Aaron Cooper, who live in the southern portion of Big Little Ranch, said they took their pets and children and abandoned the house when they saw firefighters arrive on scene. They said flames crawled within 30 feet of their home.

"It was hell. I thought we were going to lose the house," Aaron Cooper said. "(Now) there's just a big black area in our backyard and the area around it."

He said he thanked God for changing the wind to blow south — away from his home and the subdivision. But it wasn't over yet.

During a phone interview at about 7:30 p.m., Susan Cooper yelled to her daughter: "Go get your dad! A fire started up again!"

Estell confirmed another fire that broke north of Jackpot, Nev., then moved across the state line into Nevada.

Nevada fire crews took the lead on controlling the blaze with fire crews from the BLM of Idaho assisting, he said.

cities and hospitals, warning them that blackouts were possible. As part of the alert, the company asked its customers to cut energy consumption by lowering air conditioners and not running major appliances.

About an hour later, Idaho Power secured energy from outside the state, ending the emergency, said Anne Anderson, a spokeswoman for Idaho Power.

Alenkins said it's impossible to tell how close the company was to rolling blackouts, but it would have been inevitable had energy demand continued to escalate and grid operators not been able to redistribute electricity. "We cannot predict if conditions will require us to implement rotating outages," said Tess Park, a grid operations manager for Idaho Power, in a statement released during the alert. "Still, we must ask for customers' immediate assistance in order to help avoid such operations."

Customers would have been without power for about an hour during rotating cycles of outages.

The company said high temperatures and low stream flows that feed its hydropower facilities contributed to the emergency. "When the loss of our substation is combined with these conditions, we are approaching circumstances when there just isn't enough electricity available for customers."

In other power news, Friday's storm downed electric lines across Magic Valley, cutting electricity to nearly 5,000 in Magic Valley. Crews worked throughout the night to restore power.

Fire crews responded to numerous downed lines, particularly in a half-hour period between 4:45 p.m. and 5:15 p.m., said Dick Capps, battalion chief for the Twin Falls Fire Dept.

Milk

About 70 percent of the state's dairy cows are in the Magic Valley, according to USDA's census for 2002, the last year for which numbers are available. And those cows generally produce Class III milk, which is used to make cheese.

The Chicago Mercantile listed the price of 40-pound blocks of cheddar at the highest level for other cheeses — at $1.97 per pound, for the week that ended Friday.

"I have three words for you: Supply and demand," said Chris Galen, a spokesman for the National Milk Producers Federation in Arlington, Va.

The feed prices dairy farmers are paying for corn and soybeans have increased by 50 percent to 100 percent in some places, he said.

High feed prices coupled with increased energy prices have put some dairy farmers out of business and caused others to scale back, Galen said.

And fewer cows being milked has resulted in a mere 1 percent increase in milk production nationwide through May when compared to the first five months of last year, he said.

"It's increased, but it's not keeping up with demand," he said.

Growing international demand for whey — a protein by-product of cheese production — has spurred milk prices, he said, adding the increases are being passed on to consumers at the supermarket.

"We're (also) buying more cheese and more is being made," he said. He said about 45 percent of the nation's milk is used for cheese, up from 29 percent in 1980.

Levit said the increased price for cheese and milk is at least partly the result of over-activation. Supplies have been tight globally, he said, so cheese buyers in the food industry started buying ahead and stocking up.

"So much of what drives the market is perception and anticipation," he said.

Bomb plot suspects looked into U.S. jobs

By Thomas Wagner
Associated Press writer

LONDON — The FBI said Friday that two suspects in the failed car bombings in Britain had made inquiries about working in the United States, and an Iraqi doctor arrested at the attack on Glasgow airport became the first person charged in the terror plot.

Prime Minister Gordon Brown warned Britons to expect increased security measures to guard against more attacks, but he expressed confidence investigators were unraveling the group behind the bombing attempts in London and Glasgow.

"From what I know, we are getting to the bottom of this cell that has been responsible for what is happening," Brown told British Broadcasting Corp.

Police were being stretched to the limit over the weekend with the Wimbledon tennis tournament, the Tour de France in London and a Live Earth concert starring Madonna. Several ceremonies also were planned Saturday to mark the second anniversary of suicide bombings that killed 52 people and wounded more than 700 in London on July 7, 2005.

"We have got to avoid the possibility — and it is very, very difficult — that people can use crowded places for explosions," Brown said.

On June 23, police defused two car bombs left to blow up near packed nightclubs and pubs in central London. The following day, two men rammed a Jeep loaded with gasoline canisters into the main terminal at Glasgow's airport, failing to set off an explosion but seriously burning one of its suspects.

In all, eight people are now in custody — all thought to be Muslim foreigners who worked for Britain's National Health Service. Seven are being held in Britain and one in Australia.

An FBI spokeswoman said Friday that two of the suspects — Mohammed Asha, 26, and another man whose name she didn't give — contacted the Philadelphia-based Educational Commission for Foreign Medical Graduates, confirming a story first reported by The Philadelphia Inquirer.

A Jordanian physician of Palestinian heritage, contacted the agency within the last year, but apparently did not take the test for foreign medical school graduates, said the spokeswoman, Nancy O'Dowd.

"He was applying. We don't believe he took the test," she said.

Stephen Seeling, the commission's vice president of operations, said FBI agents visited the office in West Philadelphia this week, but said he could not discuss details about what they were looking for because of privacy rules.

The nonprofit commission verifies the credentials of foreign medical school graduates, evaluates individuals' medical knowledge and administers exams. It represents just one step in a process foreigners must go through to obtain training as a medical resident in the U.S.

"We're a vetting organization that reviews applicants at the early stages," Seeling said. "There is no guarantee an applicant certified by the commission will ever practice medicine in the U.S. Seeling noted decisions about whether to issue visas to foreign doctors lies with federal immigration officials.

In London, meanwhile, Iraqi-born doctor Bilal Abdullah, 27, was charged Friday with conspiring to cause explosions, a police spokeswoman said, speaking on condition of anonymity in line with police force policy.

Abdullah was arrested at Glasgow Airport, where he allegedly was a passenger in the Jeep Cherokee that crashed into the terminal entrance.

Foreign doctors wary after terror plot

By Matt Apuzzo
Associated Press writer

WASHINGTON — Evidence that doctors are at the heart of a British terrorist plot has foreign-born physicians in the U.S. on edge and wondering whether already stringent immigration security will get even tougher.

Six physicians are among eight suspects in the failed terror attacks, including one from Iraq, one from Jordan, two from India and a man identified by hospital staff as being from Lebanon.

"We're hoping and praying these physicians are cleared and that they've done no harm," said Dr. Subramaniam Balasubramaniam, past president of the American Association of Physicians of Indian Origin.

The attacks led British Prime Minister Gordon Brown to order a review of Britain's medical recruiting policies, which for years had been crafted to help fill a doctor shortage.

"Officials have not called for such a review in the U.S., where foreign doctors face not only difficult licensing requirements but lengthy background checks and security interviews.

Still, doctors and immigration lawyers are bracing for possible fallout. "This is going to complicate matters," said Balasubramaniam. "I'm sure Homeland Security will have a microscopic examination of physicians coming from abroad. I expect them to do that."

Medical practitioners normally are licensed at the state level. The federal government does not track how many foreign-born doctors are in the U.S. at any given time, but George Washington University researcher Fitzhugh Mullan estimates there are more than 130,000 currently practicing in the U.S.

India has the most, with more than 40,000 doctors, followed by the Philippines with nearly 16,000 and Pakistan with nearly 10,000, according to Mullan's research.

Foreign doctors usually come to the United States on temporary visas enabling them to complete their residency and take U.S. medical tests.

Before they arrive, their names are checked against FBI and intelligence databases. They are interviewed by State Department officials. They are interviewed again by customs agents in the United States and, under a pilot program being expanded in all airports, all foreign visitors are fingerprinted and photographed.

"These recent events in many respects validate the intense scrutiny we've placed on foreign nationals coming into the United States," said Homeland Security spokesman Russ Knocks.

Appeals court orders dismissal of domestic spying lawsuit

CINCINNATI (AP) — A divided federal appeals court rejected a lawsuit Friday challenging President Bush's domestic spying program without ruling on the issue of whether warrantless wiretapping is legal.

In a 2-1 decision with Republican-appointed judges in the majority, a three-judge panel of the 6th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals said the plaintiffs had no standing to sue because they couldn't prove their communications had been monitored by the government.

The decision underscored the difficulty of challenging the anti-terrorism program in court because its secret nature prevents plaintiffs from obtaining surveillance information. The National Security Agency had refused to turn over information about the warrantless wiretapping that would have bolstered the court case.

"This is a Catch-22," said Steven H. Shapiro, legal director of the American Civil Liberties Union, which filed the lawsuit. "I think what in effect they're saying is that we can't tell you whether you have been wiretapped because that's a secret. And unless you know you've been wiretapped, you can't challenge that program."

GOP senators' breaks with Bush on Iraq raise question of who'll be next

By Anne Flaherty
Associated Press writer

WASHINGTON — After the recent defection of prominent Republicans on the Iraq war, the big question in Washington is who might be next.

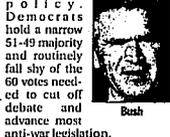

More than a dozen Republican senators who are running for re-election next year head the list of lawmakers to watch. But others, too, have expressed concerns that the GOP has grown increasingly vulnerable on the issue. As the clock ticks toward Election Day, voter pessimism is building against any lawmaker still standing with President Bush on the war.

Potential wildcards include members up for re-election who have broken with the president on other issues such as immigration or who face growing anti-war sentiment in their home states. Those include Sen. Saxby Chambliss of Georgia, Ted Stevens of Alaska, Pat Roberts of Kansas, Michael Enzi of Wyoming, James Inhofe of Oklahoma and Jeff Sessions of Alabama.

Norm Coleman of Minnesota already has expressed grave doubts about the president's Iraq policies, but he hasn't signed any legislation calling for a change in strategy.

Support among Republican senators is considered crucial to Bush's Iraq policy.

Bush

Democrats hold a narrow 51-49 majority and routinely fall shy of the 60 votes needed to cut off debate and advance most anti-war legislation. But new cracks in Bush's support base have begun to show. In the past two weeks, three Republicans — Sens. Richard Lugar of Indiana, George Voinovich of Ohio and Pete Domenici of New Mexico — have announced they can no longer support Bush's Iraq strategy and have called on the president to start reducing the military's role there.

Their announcements took many by surprise because most Republicans have said they are willing to hold out until September to see if Bush's troop buildup is working.

"I have carefully studied the Iraq situation and believe we cannot continue asking our troops to sacrifice indefinitely while the Iraqi government is not making measurable progress to move its country forward," Domenici told reporters from New Mexico this week. Instead, Domenici embraced a bipartisan bill by Colorado Democrat Ken Salazar that would put U.S.

troops on track to leave by the end of March 2008.

A spokesman for the White House, Tony Fratto, said that position amounts to the same approach sought by the Democrats, "which is, in fact, a precipitous withdrawal."

"We think that's absolutely the wrong way to go," Fratto said Friday. "It would be dangerous."

Domenici's remarks were a switch for the 34-year Senate veteran and GOP stalwart. Just three months earlier, he scolded Democrats for a proposal to fund the troops but order them home this fall. While he is still likely to oppose such legislation, Domenici's rhetoric has changed substantially, since April when he said he was committed to giving the military the "time" and resources to try to calm Baghdad.

Domenici's term in Congress expires next year, alongside 20 other GOP senators. Of those, a dozen or more are expected to run for re-election. Four have signed on to Salazar's legislation: Domenici, Susan Collins of Maine, John Sununu of New Hampshire and Lamar Alexander of Tennessee.

Sen. Gordon Smith of Oregon, also running for re-election, came out earlier this year in support of separate Democratic legislation ordering troops home this fall.

Bomber kills 26 in Iraq

BAGHDAD (AP) — A suicide car bomber struck outside a cafe in a tiny Kurdish village near the Iranian border on Friday, killing 26 people in a remote part of a province where U.S. forces are waging an offensive against Sunni insurgents, police said.

The blast ripped through the coffee shop near a market of Iranian goods in the village of Ahmad Maref, 87 miles northeast of Baghdad, said an official at the joint security coordination committee of Diyala province. At least 33 people were wounded, said the official, who spoke on condition of anonymity because he was not authorized to speak to the media.

The village is home to about 30 Kurdish families who had been expelled under Saddam Hussein's rule and returned after his fall. Many Kurds in the area are Shiite Muslim.

The village lies in the remote east of Diyala. Although violence appears to have eased somewhat in Baghdad in past months as U.S. forces stepped up security operations, Diyala has continued to see heavy attacks.

An alleged al-Qaida militant, meanwhile, was executed for his role in one of Iraq's first major bombings, an August 2003 blast that killed a Shiite leader and 84 other people and foreshadowed the four-year insurgency that followed, a Justice Ministry official said on Friday.

Oras Mohammed Abdul-Aziz was hanged Tuesday in Baghdad after being sentenced to death in October, U.S. Undersecretary of State Ibrahim told The Associated Press.

The execution announcement was the first word that a suspect had been tried in a case that had been the shrine of Ali in Najaf, site of Shiite Islam's holiest sites, and killed al-Hakim.

Al-Hakim was the leader of the Supreme Council for the Islamic Revolution in Iraq and was poised to become a major figure in Iraqi politics following Saddam's fall. His brother, Abdul Aziz al-Hakim, now heads the group, the largest Shiite party in parliament.

Will pumpers' near-death experience lead to a solution?

CHEERS: To the Idaho Ground Water Appropriators and the Idaho Dairymen's Association for finding enough water to stave off curtailment of about 600 Magic Valley groundwater users.

Their last-possible-moment action probably saved dozens — perhaps hundreds — of farms, and it headed off what very well could have become a regional recession in south-central Idaho.

Much remains to be done to solve the ever-escalating crisis over the Snake River Plain Aquifer, but this week's events demonstrated that a settlement — even under the most difficult circumstances — is possible.

Idaho Department of Water Resources Director Dave Tutthill deserves kudos as well. He did everything legally possible to head off curtailment, and made it clear from the outset that a settlement was his priority.

But let's not mistake a reprieve for a solution. Groundwater pumpers, surface-water users and IDWR have a six- or seven-month window to prevent a much more serious water crisis in 2008.

If they don't, no 11th-hour negotiations are going to rescue us next summer.

JEERS: To the Fort Hall Business Council for an eye-popping exercise in overkill.

The council last month fired the superintendent of the Shoshone-Bannock School District, the principal of Shoshone-Bannock High School and all nine members of the School Board, including its five elected members.

The council, which has jurisdiction over a schools under the Tribal Controlled Schools Act of 1998, is unhappy with education on the 815-square-mile Fort Hall Indian Reservation, which is located north and west of Pocatello. Among other problems, Shoshone-Bannock High has a 33 percent daily absence rate.

Cashiered principal John Hussman told the Idaho State Journal that the council and the autonomous Shoshone-Bannock Tribal Court won't back up administrators' attempts at discipline.

He claims that there have been 16 administrators at the school in the past 18 years; the most recent lasted two years.

The Shoshone-Bannock schools face many challenges — especially chronically low test scores and substance-abuse issues among students. But politicians are notoriously lousy educators.

For the good of the 153 students in the district, the business council should leave that job to those who actually know how to teach.

CHEERS: To the College of Southern Idaho Foundation, for creating a new scholarship aimed at students who are the first members of their families to go to college.

The New Hope Scholarship will be available this fall. It will provide up to $750 per semester to full-time students or $375 per semester for part-time students — enough money to buy books each semester. Full-time tuition and fees at the school are $1,050 a semester.

The scholarship will be available to high school graduates with a 2.75 grade-point average, unlike other scholarships that require a 3.0 GPA.

"The thing about being a first-generation student is that the family might not be able to help them be successful as a college student," Curtis Eaton, executive director of the CSI Foundation, told the Times-News. "Their experience is different from those students whose families have completed college."

CSI educates many first-generation college students because it's affordable and offers programs that translate directly into well-paying jobs.

It's another example of CSI's innovative philosophy aimed at keeping education affordable and accessible to the widest possible range of south-central Idaho's residents.

JEERS: To customers of Idaho Power, for gobbling up a record 3,120 megawatts of power on Thursday.

Sure it's hot out there, but during a summer when the Snake River — source of most of Idaho Power's electricity — is running at near-record lows, it's time for some common-sense conservation.

Close the blinds during the daytime. Turn off lights in unoccupied rooms. If your electrical appliances are plugged in but you're not using them, pull the plugs — many electronic devices use power even when they're turned off.

We learned Thursday that the Idaho Department of Water Resources may have to curtail water rights if Snake River flows at Murphy dip below 3,900 feet per second, as stipulated in the 1984 Swan Falls Agreement.

Simply put, some irrigator or fish farmer stands to lose part of his or her livelihood so you can air-condition rooms that you're not using.

Bogarting sanity in the marijuana

News that Al Gore's 24-year-old son, Al Gore III, was busted for pot and assorted prescription pills has unleashed a torrent of mirth in certain quarters.

Gore-phobes on the Internet apparently view the son's arrest and incarceration as comeuppance for the father's shortcomings. Especially rich was the fact that young Al was driving a luxury sports car when he was pulled over for going 100 mph — just as Papa Gore was set to preside over concerts during a 24-hour, seven-continent Live Earth celebration to raise awareness about global warming.

Whatever one may feel about the former vice president's environmental obsessions, his son's problems are no one's cause for celebration. The younger Gore's high-profile arrest does, however, offer Americans an opportunity to get real about drug prohibition, and especially about marijuana laws.

For the record, I have no interest in marijuana except as a public policy matter. My personal drag of choice is a heavenly elixir made from crushed grapes. But it is, alas, a drug.

Tasty, attractive and highly nutritious in our culture, wine and other alcoholic beverages are approved for responsible use despite the fact that alcoholism and attendant problems are a plague, while responsible use of a weed that, at worst, makes people boring and hungry, is criminal.

Pot smokers might revolt if their weren't so mellow.

Efforts over the past few decades to relax marijuana laws have been moderately successful. Twelve states have decriminalized marijuana, which usually means no prison or criminal record for first-time possession of small amounts for personal consumption. (Those states are: Arizona, California, Colorado, Maine, Minnesota, Mississippi, Nebraska, Nevada, New York, North Carolina, Ohio and Oregon.)

Yet even now, federal drug enforcement agents raid the homes of terminally ill patients who use marijuana for relief from suffering in states where medical marijuana use is permitted. These federal raids have become an issue in the 2008 presidential race as candidates have been asked to take a position. A summary is available on the Marijuana Policy Project Web site (mpp.org).

Beyond the medical issue is the practical question of criminalizing otherwise good citizens for consuming a nontoxic substance — described by the British Medical Journal Lancet as less harmful to health than alcohol or tobacco — at great economic and social cost. Each year, more than 700,000 people are arrested for marijuana-related offenses at a cost of more than $7 billion, according to the Marijuana Policy Project.

Here's a Blago thought for people concerned about the federal deficit. America's 4.5 million uninsured children or our soon-to-be bankrupt Social Security system:

... If marijuana were legalized, regulated and taxed at the rates applied to alcohol and tobacco, revenues would reach about $6.2 billion annually, according to an open letter signed by 500 economists who urged President Bush and other public officials to debate marijuana prohibition. Among those economists were three Nobel Prize winners, including the late Milton Friedman of Stanford's Hoover Institution.

Friedman and others were acting in response to a 2005 report on the budgetary implications of marijuana prohibition by Jeffrey Miron, visiting professor of economics at Harvard. By Miron's estimate, regulating marijuana would save about $7.7 billion annually in government prohibition enforcement — $2.4 billion at the federal level and $5.3 billion at the state and local levels.

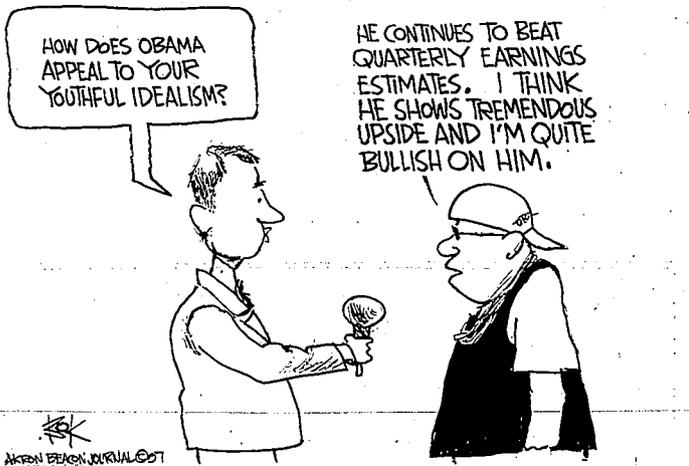

English tutors and health care for indigents. Add to that amount income taxes that would have to be paid by marijuana producers. Drug dealers don't pay taxes, after all. Nor do they concern themselves much with rules of the workplace and worker welfare.

Miron argues that legalizing marijuana would not increase use because decriminalization hasn't increased use. But, he says, legalization would reduce crime by neutralizing dealers and eliminating the violent black market.

Legalizing marijuana isn't an endorsement of underage or irresponsible use. Best would be that everyone deal with life unmedicated, but adults arguably have a right to assume themselves in ways that don't harm others.

While some may balk at the idea of legalized pot, it seems clear that some remedy is in order. At the very least, a fresh, free-wheeling debate over policies and bureaucratic self-interests is overdue. Maybe Al Gore could moderate.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Is the city doing its part to conserve water?

As I drive around the city, I notice all of our lawns aren't as green and lush as they used to be. This tells me that a lot of the good citizens of Twin Falls are serious about doing their part for water conservation. Of course, there are those lawns that are green and golf course beautiful. These are the people that are either not watering only on their assigned days or watering twice as much on their days to make up for the restrictions.

I have a question for the city managers: Why have the sprinklers been on every single day at Thomsen Park for the last two weeks? Yes, every day, I live near the park and am a witness to the fact, along with several of my neighbors. But my real question is why every day? I am assuming they are not using city water. And there were spots that were yellow that they seem to want to green up.

But what message is this sending to the people of Twin Falls? Conserving is conserving of all water isn't it? Irrigation water is also in short demand this hot summer, and using it every day is simply waste. You want us to do our part, but what part of conserving are you doing? If you drive anywhere in the city on a weekend, you will see abundant watering of lawns. Lawns watered on off days, lawns being watered all day long, water running down gutters like rivers. Do the water enforcers take weekends off?

I know I am being asked to do my part in calling if I see offenders, so here is by contribution. I am reporting the city of Twin Falls.

Choosing official language the right thing to do

"English, the language of unfunded mandates." This headline from the editorial published Wednesday, June 27, makes it sound like the Idaho Legislature is requiring the taxpayers of Idaho to provide English language classes for all non-English-speaking residents. What ever happened to Individual Responsibility? Are we becoming a socialist society where everything must be provided? Almost all of us have ancestors who came here speaking a wide variety of languages, yet they adapted, learned and found a productive place in society without someone providing a free handout. History proves that the things we work for and earn are those we value. Without a law declaring what is our official language, we are open to providing translations to any language requested, to limit it to a select few could be called discrimination. Go to another country and demand that they provide you with everything in English, including free language lessons. Try to move to our southern neighbor with-

Public comment on Sawtooth plan important

The environmental assessment for the Sawtooth National Forest Travel Plan will soon be presented to the public. The travel plan will govern vehicle use in the South Hills and the rest of the Sawtooth Forest.

I have heard that Lane Kollmeyer, Sawtooth National Forest supervisor, does not intend to observe a comment period after the assessment is issued. This concerns me very much because the Bush administration has always maintained that local interests should influence national forest policies. In addition, it is very unusual for national forest administrators not to provide for public comment at such a point in policy planning.

Supervisor Kollmeyer: I urge you to reconsider your decision on this extremely important policy dealing with vehicle use in our national forests.

Heat wave expected to linger

Farmers worry about crop damage

By Matt Gouras
Associated Press writer

HELENA, Mont. — If a record-breaking heat wave doesn't lift soon, cattle rancher Sharon McDonald may see her hay crop turn to dust. Oppressive temperatures eased a bit in some parts of the West, but McDonald's central Montana ranch baked under triple-digit heat. Forecasters repeated little relief in the days ahead, saying the weather system that brought the high temperatures could last well into next week.

In Montana, where cattle outnumber residents by more than 2 to 1, livestock and people sought shade and drought-weary farmers watched for damage to grain. "We are trying to get our hay up before it disintegrates," said McDonald, a rancher near Melville. "It just gets crispy and just falls apart." Warnings of excessive heat were posted Friday for much of Idaho, Nevada, Utah, Oregon and Washington state. Air conditioners — and even swamp coolers — were predicted hot sellers at the hardware store.

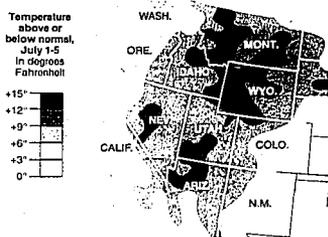

"I'm telling you, it has been nuts," said Dennis VanDyke, a manager at Power Township in Helena. "The only thing I am getting calls for is air conditioners."

VanDyke said some people prefer swamp coolers, which use a fan and the condensation of water to cool the air, over the more power-hungry air conditioning units. "They are being bought faster than we can put them on the shelves," he said.

In Utah, the temperature was expected to bubble to 100 degrees or higher across the state, including Logan at 100, Provo at 103, Zion National Park at 106 and St. George at

Above-normal temperatures in West

Several Western states have experienced temperatures far higher than normal for this time of year. Heat records were set in at least 15 states Friday.

110.

As a landscaper at the University of Utah in Salt Lake City, Cathy Hiseman, 49, comes to work with damp hair, wears a straw hat and sunglasses and carries two large jugs of water in her cart. She works in the shade during the hottest part of the day.

"I look for any way I can to get out of the glare of the lovely, burning sun." Hiseman said. "I love my job, but in this heat it's hard. You can find ways to get warm in the winter, but it's hard to get cool."

In Montana, temperatures above 100 are usually not seen until August. The normal July high in Helena is 83 degrees — not the 105 expected Friday. By midday, records were already set or tied in the Montana cities of Cut Bank, Great Falls, Havre, and Bozeman.

The Montana Department of Transportation said it was putting maintenance crews to work early in the morning so they could finish by midday. In Boise, where it was headed well above 100 degrees Friday, some found it was too hot to play at a public water fountain.

"We'll probably leave soon. Two or three o'clock is about my limit before I want to get in some air conditioning," mother Monica Player said as children ran through jets of water.

Temperatures were expected to ease slightly in Southern California. Phoenix saw a modest drop, a relatively brief 115 degrees compared to 115 Thursday. With the approach of Arizona's summer rainy season, humidity levels have started climbing along with power demand.

Heat remained an issue along the border. The bodies of six suspected illegal immigrants have been found since Monday in southern Arizona deserts, all likely victims of heat illness while trying to walk into the U.S. from Mexico. The toll, while high, is not unusual during hot spells in the region.

In central Oregon, population growth and a burgeoning demand for air conditioning meant a rise in electricity demand. The Bonneville Power Administration said it was worried fires could damage transmission lines and cause outages.

Officials said the fire season could turn fearsome following the dry heat.

"It's an early start and a hot start," said National Weather Service meteorologist Chris Velder in Great Falls.

The National Forest Service reported at least 16 fires over 500 acres in size burning throughout the West, including three new ones that sparked Thursday.

The agency said fire danger was most extreme in Arizona, California, Oregon and Utah — although a "red flag" warning was posted for much of the West.

Velder said temperatures in Montana could start to fall a bit by Saturday. In eastern Oregon, which set 15 record highs on Thursday, temperatures were expected to fall off to between 94 and 100 degrees.

But the heat will hover over most of the far West through at least the end of next week, said Kelly Redmond, a regional climatologist for the National Weather Service. The said it could migrate further inland and cover more of the West, including Colorado, as the week goes on.

"It looks like it is going to stay place for a good long while," he said.

People walk past the New York-New York Hotel-Casino Friday in Las Vegas. A man on a walkway over casino floor opened fire on the gamblers before early Friday, wounding five people before he was tackled by a group of off-duty military personnel, police said.

Five injured in Vegas casino after man opens fire on gamblers

LAS VEGAS (AP) — A man on a balcony over the New York-New York casino floor opened fire on the gamblers before early Friday, wounding four people before he was tackled by off-duty military reservists, police said. A fifth person was hurt in a crush of people fleeing the casino.

"It was crazy, pandemonium," said Jade Jacobson, 28, a tourist from Deland, Fla., whose cousin, a dance teacher from Pennsylvania, was wounded in the leg.

"People were running and jumping over slot machines and knocking over chairs," Jacobson said. "All I was thinking was that I could die right now."

Police said 16 shots were fired, and again revised the number of injured in the 12:45 a.m. shooting. All the injuries were described as minor, and none of the victims emerged hospitalized Friday morning, authorities said.

Las Vegas police Capt. James Dillon said a woman and a teenage boy were wounded; a man was grazed by a bullet; a woman was hit by a bullet fragment or shrapnel; and a woman was bruised and scraped when she fell amid the crowd of people exiting the casino.

Steven Zegrean, 51, of Las Vegas, was arrested on felony charges including attempted murder, battery with a deadly weapon and discharging a firearm in an occupied structure, Dillon said.

"All we know so far is that he was emotionally distraught," Dillon said. "I can say with absolute certainty that this has nothing whatever to do with terrorism."

Zegrean emptied a semiautomatic handgun toward the casino floor before he was tackled by a U.S. Army reservist and others who held him for police, Dillon said. He said he did not know the names of the people who intervened.

Dillon said police have a casino surveillance video that shows the shooting.

Melody Zegrean, 43, a Las Vegas resident who identified herself as Steven Zegrean's cousin, said he had been divorced for several years and estranged from most of his family since his ex-wife remarried.

"I love my cousin and everything," she said, "but his temper and not being able to relate has really gotten worse recently. He's been threatening the family for some time now. He's been pushing everyone away."

 unit at the county fairgrounds. Brock Estell, a spokesman for the BLM office in Shoshone, said the blaze came as close as the agency's own property.

Deputy Kevin Ellis with the Lincoln County Sheriff's Office, said as of 10 p.m. the fire had a 20-mile front from the western side of Shoshone to the east side of Dietrich at the Star Lake area.

Barb Bassler, a BLM spokeswoman, said the fire scorched 15,000 total acres and required more than 200 firefighters on the ground.

The city remained on standby with evacuation notice late Friday as the wind's directions shifted out of the north. But residents were evacuated south of town on Millar Road.

Whitney Beem, the south central district director for the American Red Cross of Greater Idaho, said the organization was setting up a relief station near LDS church in Shoshone. Beem said as many as 50 and possibly as many as 300 town residents had gathered by 9 p.m.

U.S. Highway 93 was closed 10 miles south of Shoshone earlier Friday evening, forcing town residents to go back to the west from Wendell and Gooding.

YMCA members: We're not happy

Recent survey ranks facility below national average

By Jared S. Hopkins
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — Member satisfaction at the Twin Falls YMCA — recently thrust into public exposure amid alleged problems in management — is significantly below the national average, according to a recent survey of members.

According to a copy of the survey obtained by the Times-News, just 16 percent described their overall experience at the YMCA as "excellent" — compared with the 40 percent national average. Twenty-five percent of Twin Falls members said the experience was "fair," while the national average was just 7 percent. The puritans of respondents who reported "good" were nearly equal.

NewsTracker

Last we knew: The Twin Falls City Pool Advisory Board met to discuss turnover at and management of the city pool.

The latest: A new survey shows public approval for the local YMCA much lower than the national average. What's next: City officials will review the survey before a meeting with Y officials next week.

"This does not appear to be a happy Y," a statement in the survey said. It found that local members are not loyal and are unlikely to recommend the facility to friends. A Florida-based consulting firm received more than 120 completed surveys of 600. About half of respondents had children, and most were between the ages of 35 and 49. More than 75 percent were married.

The local YMCA has come under increased public exposure after four senior staff members resigned because of what they said was aggressive managing by Executive Director Karen Juchnowski. She has said she was surprised at the turnover and unaware of any conflicts.

On Friday, she gave limited comment to questions regarding the survey, citing plans for a national consultant to visit Thursday. She said the survey is not finished.

"The full results are not in," she said. "Until I have the national YMCA here to finish the results I'm not going to comment."

MV couples prepare for today's busy wedding day

By Nate Poppino
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — It's Tuesday night, and Joel Johnston has to meet with his pastor.

Wednesday means a barbecue to celebrate the Fourth of July holiday. Thursday is the wedding rehearsal, and Friday night is his bachelorette party in Jackpot, Nev.

It'll all be worth it — today, July 7 — when he walks down the aisle at The White House with his bride, Chantil Dobbs.

Johnston and Dobbs are one of many Magic Valley couples drawn to 7/7/07 as a wedding date. Some associate the numbers with luck, while others connect them to appearances of the number seven in the Bible and other religious texts. Still others just see the unique date as easy to remember. The future Mr. and Mrs. Johnston picked the date for the first reason.

"Her family's originally from Vegas, so it's a little bit of lucky sevens," Johnston says. "It's just a neat day to pick."

It wasn't without its problems, though. "The couple booked the location in January, early enough to get a spot, but almost lost the DJ, who had other commitments on the same date. Even with the major work done, Johnston's week definitely won't be quiet."

"It's especially hectic with the Fourth right in the middle of the week."

Wednesdays

Mark Jones had no idea how busy his wedding day would be. All he knew was that when his fiancée, Julie Lux, called the Meditation Chapel in Stanley, she easily made a reservation for July 7.

"That's all the more impressive considering Jones proposed to her four months before the date."

The Twin Falls couple originally planned the wedding for July 6 to take advantage of farm-fresh in town for the Fourth of July. But Lux moved it back once she learned about the hype.

Organizing a wedding in four Chantil Dobbs and Joel Johnston quickly go over their wedding vows in a short rehearsal Thursday. The couple will be married today, 7/7/07. Like many couples, Dobbs and Johnston chose their special day for its unique date. Her family's originally from Vegas, so it's a little bit of lucky sevens, Johnston says. "It's just a neat day to pick."

months can be hard. But on this day, most of the work for the weekend is finished, and the biggest event other than the holiday is relatives arriving in town.

"We're pretty much ready," Lux says. "(Thursday) will be a crazy day, just picking up last-minute things to take up there."

Lux's three children, ages 17, 16 and 5, will be best man, maid of honor and flower girl, bringing the whole family into the occasion. It's just another touch to a wedding Lux says seems like it was destined to happen.

"To Mark and I, I think (the date) more special, because we didn't even know about it, and it seems like it's fate now," Lux says. "God does have his purpose in life. It just seems like Mark was supposed to be here at this time."

Thursday:

There are two days to go until T.D. Riddle stands with his bride, Mandi Wooten, under the sun at the Heron Island Vineyard in Hagerman, and the couple is just down to "the piddly stuff." Specifically, he says, no one has vans to rent.

"Where the parking is and where the place is going to be, we've got to shuttle people," he says.

The Twin Falls couple has been engaged since summer 2006 and started planning early — a good move, as they sent out 600 invitations. At least 200 have responded.

Wooten wasn't aware of how popular the day would be when she picked it, Riddle says. And rather than selecting it as a lucky day, she picked it to need a Riddle.

"She picked it for me as kind of a joke, so I could remember it," he says. "It's a cool number."

The two have managed to find everything they need for the wedding — which will feature a platform built over Billingsley Creek — by crisscrossing the valley, but it's getting hard to find the vans and other last-minute items. Still, Riddle isn't worried, thanks to the early start they had.

"We're starting to get to where we can't find things," he says. "It's just the little stuff."

Today:

Besides Johnston and Dobbs, The White House in

Twin Falls will host five other couples today. That's probably about average for the time of year, manager Lara Miller says, but 7/7/07 couples have been different than others.

Other couples change their dates if something comes up. But not those marrying today.

"If they picked this date, they are not changing their mind," she says.

The attraction to numbers could continue next year with 8/8/08. Miller says the company's evening slot for that day is already reserved. But both that date and today may not be different than any day of the summer.

"I think there's a lot more hype about it," Miller says. "Every weekend in summer is busy with weddings."

OHFONO (AP) — A woman whose 15-month-old step-grandson died after being locked for hours inside a parked car with its windows up has told police she forgot about the youngster after going inside a male friend's house and falling asleep. Rita Johnston, 33, has been arrested for investigation of involuntary manslaughter and felony injury to a child.

The child, who had been in the parked car for more than five hours with the temperature topping 95 degrees, was pronounced dead at the scene, according to court records. The boy's name wasn't released.

Johnston told Orofino police officers she parked the car between 1 p.m. and 2 p.m. Wednesday and went inside a residence to visit a friend, according to documents filed in 2nd District Court.

"Johnston said she had forgotten about the infant in her vehicle and at some point fell asleep inside the residence," Johnston said in a probable cause affidavit. "Johnston said when she woke up she still did not remember that there was a child in her vehicle."

The child, who had been dead, Johnston became distraught and was unable to communicate further with authorities, police said. A male at the residence told police Johnston said nothing about the child when she arrived and that she had fallen asleep, police Officer Jeremy Adams wrote in his report.

control of the fire within 30 minutes.

"We really appreciate all the help and cooperation from all the departments that responded to the help," said Capt. Steve Jones of the Burley Fire Department said Thursday.

"Our biggest concern when we got there was to protect the house and the other structures that were there."

"I don't even believe there was any smoke damage to the house," Jones said.

Jones said trash burning in a barrel was believed to be the cause of the fire.

"It had probably smoldered a day or two and it got out by a spark," he said.

Fourteen cars and trucks were also destroyed.

Jones said he believes reports from witnesses that animals were trapped and killed by the fire were erroneous.

"There were animals that were down there that were trapped, but (firemen) got down there and got the fire contained, and as far as I know, we didn't even have to let them out of their pen," he said.

Witnesses reported hearing explosions that were likely caused when safety vents on propane and diesel tanks opened in the heat. Others explosions could be heard as flames engulfed cars and burst their tires.

Jones said Burley Fire has not yet estimated the monetary damage. He declined to name the property owners.

Troy teen charged with murder was upset over football razzing

MOSCOW (AP) — A teenager who attempted suicide following the killing of a fellow partygoer who razzed him over his brother's football skills has been charged with first-degree murder.

Zachary A. Fredrickson, 17, of Troy, was arrested and charged Thursday after being released from Kootenai Medical Center and was held without bail at the Kootenai County Jail in Coeur d'Alene, Latah County Prosecutor William W. Thompson Jr. said.

Thompson said he would not seek the death penalty, so Fredrickson faces up to life in prison and a $50,000 fine if convicted.

According to a probable cause affidavit signed by Latah County Sheriff's Cpl. Tim Beest, a witness told investigators Fredrickson shot Jeremiah Johnson, 23, with a .22-caliber rifle, then placed the barrel of the rifle under his own chin and pulled the trigger during a hot tub party early last Saturday in Troy.

Fredrickson got so upset at being taunted by Johnson about his older brother supposedly being a poor football player, Beest wrote, that he then punched and tried to throw a punch at the older man, who was standing near by.

"Investigators at the scene indicated there was damage to the hot tub and there were parts from the hot tub scattered about in the yard," he added wrote.

Homeowners get sidewalk repair bills

COEUR D'ALENE — Officials in this northern Idaho city are using a century-old law to force property owners to repair cracked and tilted sidewalks in order to comply with the federal Americans with Disabilities Act.

"Block by block, street by street, we're going to put a dent in getting better maintenance to business owners and residents telling them to fix the sidewalks next to their properties. The city can place a lien on the properties of those who don't comply with the code, and then attach the cost to next year's property taxes.

The city estimates the cost to repair a 100-foot sidewalk will be about $2,000. To begin repairs, property owners will first have to get the work approved by an inspector and buy a $50 permit.

If tree roots are causing sidewalks to buckle, property owners might also have to consult with the city's urban forester.

That's what Brad Sawyer, owner of Hoolligan Empire Tattoo on North Third Street, faces with three maple trees in front of his shop.

"If it's my sidewalk, maybe I should put a fence around it and not let anybody walk on it," he said.

Others were less concerned. "It's no biggie to us," said Janet Buvell, who received a letter about the sidewalks along her East Lakeside Avenue home. "It's our responsibility, same as shoveling."

The city plans to help reduce the costs to property owners by paying for pedestrian ramps at street corners. The city has also increased from 60 days to one year the amount of time allowed for sidewalk repairs to be made.

City officials realized in 2005 that they didn't meet accessibility requirements in federal law. Earlier this year, the City Council approved new enforcement and repair guidelines intended to bring the city's sidewalks up to code over the next two decades.

This year, the city plans to inspect sidewalks along 5 1/2 miles of streets.

YMCA

The YMCA is one of the largest organizations in Twin Falls with nearly 3,000 members and 250 volunteers. Since 2002, the city has paid the YMCA $50,000 annually to manage the city pool.

The survey included users of both the city pool and the YMCA facility on Elizabeth Boulevard.

The organization acquired the Canyon Rim Y, formerly the Twin Falls Fitness Club on Pole Line Road, this spring.

A comment portion of the survey revealed concerns about city pool scheduling, pool cleanliness and problems with showers and locker rooms.

Will Kezele, who chairs the city's pool advisory board, said the board asked for the survey over a month ago. The city of Twin Falls asked to see the survey Tuesday.

"We're anxious to see it," Kezele said.

It is my understanding the YMCA does want to provide a quality service."

The board offers advice and recommendations to the Twin Falls City Council. At an emergency meeting Thursday called over concerns on turnover, Kezele took issue with Jachimiowski when she criticized a YMCA employee who corrected her.

"Your confrontational approach is why we're here today," he told her.

A meeting among city official and YMCA directors is being organized for next week, said city management assistant Gretchen Scott.

Idaho Falls official vows to sue city over police dustup

IDAHO FALLS (AP) — A councilman in this eastern Idaho city says he plans to sue the city for $50,000 over a confrontation he had with police.

Larry Lyon filed a tort claim Tuesday, alleging he suffered emotional distress when police cited him in January after his dogs got loose.

A tort claim is a precursor to a lawsuit against a government entity. Plaintiffs can file a lawsuit if the government declines the claim or takes no action within 90 days.

During the Jan. 5 incident, Lyon said, he declined to sign the citations, and alleges that

Sgt. Dave Frei and Officer Erik Lahnhart threatened him.

In a portion of the conversation that Lyon recorded with his cell phone, one of the officers can be heard shouting, "Do you want to go to the ground?"

The tort claim filed by Lyon's attorney, Lance Nalder, says that the action of the police "caused Mr. Lyon to suffer emotional distress and harm from being repeatedly, illegally threatened and intimidated by Officer Frei."

"We have an officer who was way out of line in the way that he acted and a police chief that in my opinion refuses to deal with this kind of behavior in his officers," said Lyon, who is up for re-election in November. "I'm very concerned about the way citizens of Idaho Falls may be treated by our local police."

Idaho Falls Police Chief J. Kent Losey said Lyon's claim is "pretty silly."

Dale Storer, the city's attorney, said the claim has been sent to the city's liability insurance carrier, Idaho Counties Risk Management Program, and they will decide how to handle it.

Mayor Jared Fuhrman declined to comment about the claim.

Police kill man who took 2 hostages

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — An armed man who dashed into a house Friday was fatally shot by an officer while holding a hostage around the neck, police said.

The man refused to drop his gun and shouted that he wanted to die rather than return to prison, said Detective Jeff Bedard, a Salt Lake City police spokesman.

No one else was hurt.

Cowboys top Senators

Folkinga homers again

By John Derr
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — Efficient. That is how one would describe the Class AA Twin Falls Cowboys' performance.

Solid pitching and defense along with a few timely hits gave the Cowboys another victory as they defeated the Boise Senators 4-0 in the first game on an American Legion Baseball doubleheader on Friday night.

The Game 2 score was not available by Times-News press time.

Mitchell Dame did his job very well, scattering six hits and never allowing a runner past second as he collected the victory.

"We had solid defense. I knew if I threw strikes they would make the plays behind me," said Dame, who tallied six strikeouts along with a pair of pickoffs.

After a quick three up and three down of Senators batters during the first inning, Twin Falls got the offense going early. Tyler Anderson walked while Bo Folkinga reached on an error. Designated hitter Chance Blam and Nick Yergensen both smacked RBI singles for the early 2-0 advantage.

Twin Falls added a run in the third as Folkinga reached on a bloop single that found the ground between a pair of Senators. Yergensen's double brought him home.

"My swing is on right now and it is easy to get hits," said Yergensen, who went 2-for-3 with a pair of RBIs. "We are up right now as a team and having fun. Hopefully we all stay on."

Boise's Riley Bowill doubled in the fourth, but Dame made the nice pick-off move to get him easily. Another double, this time by Scott Hastings, led to a run down while Dame also collected a strikeoff at first to keep the Senators off guard throughout the game.

Folkinga opened the fifth with his second home run in as many days. He sent one to right and got an assist from the wind as it sailed over the fence.

"It all starts on the bump. Mitchell kept up in the game, and we got a few big hits."

"He didn't think I could hit low and away. I threw my hands at it, and the wind did the rest," said Folkinga, who went 2-for-3 and scored three of the four Cowboy runs.

Twin Falls coach Tim Stadelmeier credited Dame for his performance.

"It all starts on the bump. Mitchell kept up in the game, and we got a few big hits. Overall it was a good solid effort," said Stadelmeier.

There is no rest for the Cowboys (26-6, 12-1) who travel to Pocatello on Monday and Madison on Tuesday.

WIMBLEDON

Roddick blows big lead just 2 points from Federer rematch

The Associated Press

WIMBLEDON, England — Two points. That's how close Andy Roddick was to getting another crack at Roger Federer at Wimbledon.

Two points. Up two sets and a break against a kid making his Grand Slam quarterfinal debut, and later just that far from winning, the No. 3-seeded Roddick unraveled Friday, losing 4-6, 4-6, 7-6 (3), 6-6 to No. 12 Richard Gasquet of France.

A white baseball cap tugged over his eyes, the usually gregarious Roddick discussed the defeat deliberately and in a monotone, as if he couldn't quite believe what happened.

"Well, it's another lost opportunity at Wimbledon," the American said. "I'd love to make you try to understand what it feels like in the pit of (my) stomach right now, but I don't know if I can do that. I don't know if I'm articulate enough."

He lost to four-time defending champion Federer at the All England Club in the 2003 semifinals and the next two finals. Another slowdown loomed because they were in the same half of the draw, and Federer beat 2003 French Open champion Juan Carlos Ferrero 7-6 (2), 3-6, 6-1, 6-3 in an earlier quarterfinal Friday.

Might Roddick have been thinking ahead, even a tad, once he built his big lead against Gasquet?

"No," was Roddick's reply. So instead of having the four top-seeded men in the Wimbledon semifinals for the first time since 1995, Gasquet will be the interloper facing No. 1 Federer on Saturday, while No. 2 Rafael Nadal meets No. 4 Novak Djokovic.

Saturday also features Venus Williams against Marion Bartoli in the women's final, right on schedule, despite all of the rain over the past 1½ weeks. The No. 31 Williams is bidding for a fourth Wimbledon title, and the No. 19 Bartoli — never before past the fourth round at a major — are the two lowest-ranked women to reach the final at the All England Club.

Not only does the top-ranked Federer take a 52-match winning streak on grass into his semifinal, but he also had the advantage of having played a little more than 1½ hours and walking off his rain-suspended match against Ferrero and Friday in his club before 3:30 p.m.

Andy Roddick of the United States reacts as he plays Richard Gasquet of France in a Men's Singles quarter final tennis match at the Wimbledon Tennis Championships Friday.

Gasquet's struggle against Roddick, in contrast, lasted more than 3½ hours and finished after 8 p.m.

"I am tired," said Gasquet, who hit more aces than Roddick, 23-22, and far more winners, 93-60. "I played a lot of time, with a lot of pressure."

His wasn't even close to the longest workday, though. Djokovic played for hours — 5 minutes shy of the longest one-day singles match in the tournament's 130-year history — before pulling out a 7-6 (4), 7-6 (9), 6-7 (3), 4-6, 7-5 victory over No. 10 Marcos Baghdatis on Court 1.

"Somebody had to win today," Baghdatis said, "so it was him." Before the third set, he was treated by a trainer for some fatigue in his right shoulder, weary from hitting shot after shot. Before the fifth, Djokovic dropped to the ground, so a trainer could massage his lower back.

"How did I manage to hold on?" Djokovic asked afterward. "Now I'm really trying to recover and get ready for the next one."

Both he and Nadal were faced with a sixth consecutive day on court Saturday, but the three-time French Open champion, like Federer, should be able to count on an edge in the freshness department.

Venus Williams reaches sixth Wimbledon final, where she'll face Bartoli

Ignore the rankings. Ignore a recent form. Remember this: You never can count a Williams out.

That's the lesson Venus Williams is providing at Wimbledon, precisely the way her younger sister Serena did at the Australian Open six months ago.

Out of the top 30, never so much as a semifinalist at any Grand Slam over the past two years, Venus Williams moved a victory away from her fourth title at the All England Club by outlasting No. 6 Ana

The more we know, the more we miss

This is one of those weeks made for sports fans: Roger Federer and Venus Williams are chasing titles at Wimbledon; Tiger's back; the Tour de France gets rolling; and, in just a few days, it's Barry's big house party — aka, the All-Star game.

NANCY ARMOUR

There should be all kinds of excitement and buzz. Yet the only event generating any chatter is Tony Parker's weekend wedding festivities. Will he and Eva say "Oui" or "I do"? How many different dresses will she wear? Will Tim Duncan give a toast? Did they really have their cake flown in from the United States?

We're living in one of the greatest ages of sports, watching some of the best ever play their games. But the more access and information we get, the more detached we become.

Maybe it's really more sports fans as a whole taking for granted the greatness that's in front of their right now. Matthew Lallin, the executive vice president of Steiner Sports Marketing, said Friday.

Or maybe it's that sports fans can't take anything for granted these days. That same information overload that gives Derek Jeter's up-to-the-minute batting average also chided us in to cycling's dirty little doping secrets and made us think twice about how Barry Bonds is able to hit all those home runs.

We know too much, and we see too much. As a result, we barely see what we're watching.

Technology has been a boon for the sports fan. Thanks to DVDs and VCRs, a night out no longer means missing out. We can watch what we want when we want how we want. Same goes for mobile phones and PDAs, which give us access to scores and more from just anywhere.

Gone are the days when the Chicago Cubs were the only team seen by the entire country. With satellite TV, cable and the Internet, every team — and every event — is local. You can see the Milwaukee Brewers every night if you're so inclined, regardless of where you live. A few bucks — and a computer screen, and you're practically at Wimbledon — and you don't even have to carry an umbrella.

But that flexibility has made us downright blasé, even for the biggest events.

"They're not what they once were, which would have been tens of millions of people watching the same event at the same time," said Marc Ganis, president of Sportscorp Ltd, a Chicago-based sports consulting firm.

"That's not what we are any longer as a society."

Sure, the Super Bowl is still must-see TV, but it's also a de facto national holiday. Even people who don't know who Peyton Manning is — yes, there are a few — tune in because it's an excuse to get together with friends, eat junk food and watch funny commercials.

The rest though? Not so much. Ratings for the World Series are dropping lower and lower. The Spurs have won four titles in nine years, and the only time they show up is when Eva Longoria gets up. The St. Louis Cardinals were little more than a rumor. When Barry Bonds bowed out of the

Predicting the winner at wide-open Tour de France is anyone's guess

LONDON (AP) — Trying to pick the winner of this summer's Tour de France is anyone's guess, especially since many of cycling's biggest stars are sidelined because of doping scandals.

When seven-time champion Lance Armstrong was racing, it was easy to predict the favorite. On the eve of Saturday's 4.9-mile prologue, it was hard to predict who will be wearing the yellow jersey in Paris on July 29.

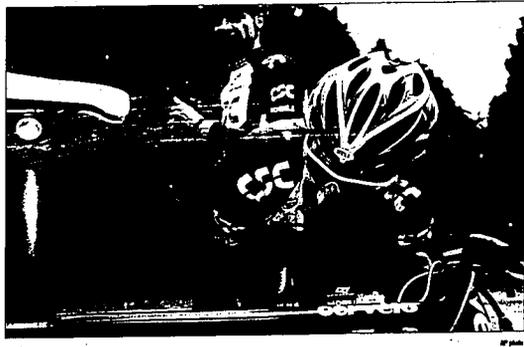

As soon as we start the race we will know more about who is good," Team CSC rider Carlos Sastre said. "At this moment, I don't know."

Sastre, Alexandre Vinokourov, 2004 runner-up and Andreas Kloeckner, Levi Leipheimer, Alejandro Valverde, Oscar Pereiro, Cadel Evans, Denis Menchov, Vladimir Karpetis and Christophe Moreau are all among the contenders. The 33-year-old Vinokourov finished third in 2003 and fifth in 2004. Pereiro was second last year, and will become the 2006 winner if Floyd Landis is stripped of his title.

Landis, 1997 champion Jan Ullrich and 2005 runner-up Ivan Basso have been scratched off the list of contenders.

Landis is appealing a positive test for synthetic testosterone during last year's race. Ullrich and Basso were tied to a Spanish doping investigation called Operation Puerto that implicated more than 50 cyclists. Basso has been suspended for two years and admitted "attempted doping." Ullrich retired, but has denied wrongdoing.

Also missing will be sprint ace Alessandro Petacchi, who failed a doping test at the Giro d'Italia. The 33-year-old Italian, who won four sprint stages at the 2004 Tour, returned a "non negative" test for the asthma drug salbutamol.

Cycling enthusiasts hope the 2007 winner will be elusive, but know there will be doubts about any rider who survives a three-week ordeal of 2,120 miles that includes six mountain hikes, three summit finishes and two individual time trials.

"It is obviously essential for that the rider who will be in the yellow jersey and who will lift his arms in triumph will be the winner of the tour de France," Tour director Christian Prudhomme said Friday. "And that he won't be caught (cheating) after."

One of this year's riders is David Millar, who was banned for two years in 2004 and stripped of his 2003 world time-trial title for admitting to using EPO. He says cycling has no excuses left.

"I think we're learning in the last month or so that we can't move into the future without dealing with the past," he said Friday. "We have a pretty serious past that we're going to have to face up to."

The race starts on the second anniversary of the terrorist attacks on London's public transportation network that killed 52 people. The prologue begins in Whitehall and passes the Houses of Parliament and Buckingham Palace, looping through Hyde Park and doubling back to finish on The Mall.

On Sunday, the first stage of the tour starts on The Mall and crosses the River Thames three times before heading east and then southeast, ending in Canterbury. Then riders head to the more familiar roads of France.

Protocol normally would have the defending champion on start lists. But with Landis out, Trempo will be last down the

Armstrong won't attend Tour, but 'I still love what it represents'

Neither Lance Armstrong nor the No. 1 jersey traditionally worn by the defending champion will be seen at this year's Tour de France. Those two things aren't linked, but the absence of both hint at just how tough a hill cycling must climb in a bid to restore its credibility.

Two years after Armstrong's retirement, the sport has yet to find someone who even looks capable of replacing the popular and controversial seven-time champion. More troubling, the 2,200-mile, 23-day race launches Saturday in London without 2006 winner Floyd Landis. His nearly year-long fight to retain that title in the wake of doping charges has been the most visible of hardly cycling's only scandal.

And talk about bad timing: There's a good chance Landis' appeal will be decided by an arbitration panel in place of time to steel some thunder from the race.

"I'm not making a statement, not by any means. I have sponsor and charity commitments, and I've got kids. There's nothing more to it," Armstrong said about his planned absence during an interview Thursday with The Associated Press.

The Discovery team he once commanded and still owns a piece of will be led this time around by Levi Leipheimer, a 33-year-old regarded as America's best hope. Asked to pick a favorite, Armstrong named Alexandre Vinokourov of Kazakhstan and Andreas Kloeckner of Germany, both members of the Astana team.

Armstrong, though, said he wouldn't offer any help or so much as meddle in Discovery director John Braverman's business. He warned against reading anything into that, either.

"I'm not one of those guys who say the sport has no credibility, that it's like pro wrestling... or any of that garbage. I don't believe the organizers are truly organized," he said. "But the Tour is not a force, and it's not a product. It's hard. I believe it's still a great event, and I'll watch every day. I still love what it represents."

Yet Armstrong knows the number of sponsors and fans who share that view is falling precipitously. Too many see cycling's showcase event, and the sport itself, as riddled from top to bottom with corruption, performance-enhancing cheats.

Armstrong was hounded by doping allegations throughout his reign. Only two weeks ago, he defended himself from accusations against a new book that he said contained "a demonstrably false over of sensational, untrue and fabricated allegations" recycled to cash in on cycling's tumultuous state and timed in conjunction with the Tour's start.

No other prominent cyclist has matched Armstrong's unbeaten streak in real courts and the court of public opinion, and a few haven't bothered to try. Landis' defense against a positive test for synthetic testosterone stumbled coming out of the gate — when he altered his doping regimen to include medication, cortisone shots and/or lack Daniels was responsible — and has taken several strange detours since.

Over the course of his career, span 1996 Tour winner Bjorne Riis and a half-dozen riders from a German team acknowledged using the blood-injectants, and so did kids. "There's nothing more to it," Armstrong said about his planned absence during an interview Thursday with The Associated Press.

Recent bomb attempts in London won't put off Tour fans.

LONDON (AP) — Cycling enthusiast Iuh Sokolowski intends to join at least half a million others to watch the opening stages of the Tour de France starting Friday in London — just around the corner from where terrorists tried to detonate a car bomb less than a week ago.

"That caused the American and his wife some concern. She had been inside the World Trade Center when it was bombed in Sept. 11, 2001, and lost a number of friends in the attack."

"We talked about it and thought that it would be much safer with the heightened security although we are anticipating some extra travel headaches," said Sokolowski, of Long Branch, New Jersey.

"I do not think we can live in fear, because then we lose," he said in an e-mail interview.

Experts acknowledge there is little that police can do to guarantee the security of everyone attending world's premier cycling event — the biggest sporting event in terms of spectators — and that the event could be a target.

Even then that the potential for causing mass civilian casualties at such an event is so great, clearly it would be an ideal target for the type of terrorism we are currently facing," said Charles Shoebright, a security analyst and former counterterrorism intelligence officer for London's Metropolitan Police.

With a race route of more than 125 miles over two days, police will struggle to keep the area secure, and it will be impossible for them to search everyone attending, he said.

"This event is a classic example of the impossibility of ensuring security unless completely reliable intelligence as to terrorist intentions is available. Recent events have shown once again that this is unlikely to ever be the case," Shoebright added.

The event begins with an opening ceremony on Friday evening in Trafalgar Square — just meters from where one of the car bombs was discovered a week ago.

The following day — two years to the date since a suicide bomber killed 52 people on London's public transport network — the Tour gets under way with a prologue in Whitehall, passing the Houses of Parliament and Buckingham Palace, looping through Hyde Park and doubling back to finish on The Mall.

On Sunday, the first full day's racing sees the Tour start on The Mall and cross the River Thames three times before heading east and then southeast, to end in Canterbury before riders head to the more familiar roads of France.

The first time the Tour came to Britain, in 1934, an estimated 2 million people crisscrossed the route to watch it.

On Sunday, at least 1,500 officers from London's Metropolitan Police will provide security along with officers from other forces and a small contingent from the Gendarmes, the unit of the French gendarmerie that handles ceremonial security duties in France and abroad.

"The Tour is not the only major event testing police resources this weekend — it coincides with the finals of the Wimbledon tennis tournament and the Live Earth concert at Wembley Stadium.

"We have thoroughly reviewed the policing plans for all the events that are coming up, including the Tour de France. At the moment we are happy that what we have in place is the right one," a police statement said.

"We are attentive, but not worried. The Tour has never been targeted," said Pierre-Vives Thoumit, director of security for the Tour de France. "We have confidence in British police."

The security coordinator for France's gendarmes, Lt. Col. Sylvain Duret, said the tense security situation in Britain "is only going to increase the security at the Tour de France," but British police "tell us they're not all that worried."

Poker pros, celebs, wannabes chase pot worth millions in Las Vegas

LAS VEGAS (AP) — Baseball caps and dark sunglasses are back in fashion, and talk around casino hallways revolves around "bad nights" and "walks." On game tables and in hotel rooms, thousands of dollars are changing hands on whimsical proposition bets, and obscure card games are being played for high stakes on a sea of green felt.

It must be that time of year again — it's the World Series of Poker.

Thousands of the best players around the world have gathered in Las Vegas, hoping to win the $10,000 buy-in main event, which last year paid $12 million to the winner.

Killed practitioners of no-limit Texas Hold'em such as Doyle "Texas Dolly" Brunson and 11-time bracelet winner Phil Hellmuth Jr. will sit elbow to elbow with sports stars, Hollywood celebrities and relative novices in the world's best-known poker tournament, which was to get under way Friday.

It's come a long way since money players played for cash and voted for a winner at the inaugural tournament at Binion's Horseshoe in downtown Las Vegas in 1970.

Organizers have set aside enormous space and staggered starting days to accommodate up to 12,000 players — far more than the 8,773 who participated last year. Those who survive the mathematically daunting prospect of reaching the final table of nine players on July 17 are guaranteed to have had luck on their side.

And the odds of an unknown winning it all are probably not as long as might be imagined. Except for Joe Hachem, who won in 2005, none of the last four winners made a living playing poker before upsetting the field. Chris Moneymaker, who set off the poker craze in 2003, was an accountant. Greg Raymer was a patent lawyer before winning in 2004. Last year's winner, Jamie Gold, is a Hollywood agent and producer.

"Who knows?" said tournament spokesman Gary Thompson. "The next one might be a dentist, a plumber or maybe a poker pro."

Gambling writer Avery Cardoza estimated there's a 10-to-1 chance that an "unknown Internet player" will emerge from the field to win the big one, but pros such as Hellmuth, Daniel Negreanu, Phil Ivey and Johnny Chan would have long-shot odds of 250-to-1.

"There are perhaps 100 to 200 name players versus thousands of no-names," he wrote in Poker magazine. "Advantage: unknowns, by a landslide."

Also unknown is what effect legal changes will have on the World Series of Poker. The tournament is being played after the Unlawful Internet Gambling Enforcement Act was signed into law by President Bush last October.

Many expect the law, which prohibits banks and other payment processors from handling cash transactions from U.S.-based players to end from the online poker sites, will thin the field of entrants who qualify for seats online.

"My prediction is somewhere between 5,500 and 6,500 (entrants)," said Eric Marbo, publisher of Bluff Media, which publishes a poker magazine. Sites such as FullTiltPoker.com and UltimateBet.com were still holding qualifying satellite competitions in which winning players could earn their entry fee into the main event, but many other sites have left the arena out of fear of prosecution by U.S. authorities.

"They just don't have the player base that they once did," Morris said.

Politicians are taking advantage of the hype surrounding this year's event to make a statement against the new U.S. law.

Rep. Robert Wexler, D-Miss., plans to show up Monday for a fundraiser and to raise support for a bill he introduced in June that would carve out a legal exception for "skill games" played online, such as poker, bridge, mahjong and backgammon.

"We should legalize poker and other skill games online, regulate it so it is safe, and reinvest the taxable income it generates into positive areas of our society," Wexler said. Celebrities also will grab some attention. Comedian Jay Romano, actor Brad Garrett, talk show host Montel Williams and actresses Shannon

Elizabeth and Jennifer Tilly are among those expected to ante up.

Action seekers have found plenty to occupy themselves, whether in the tournament's 51 other events that began June 1 or in nearby tables. Poker pro Erik Ludgren made more than $300,000 in a multi-way bet for shooting under 100 on four back-to-back rounds of golf in late June, according to Forbes magazine, which said it.

Card player Eli Elezra said he has more than doubled his $198,984 win in one of the early events with side bets worth $310,000 with other players who wagered he would not win his first bracelet.

"Everybody heard about me, so I became a bookie," Elezra said.

Almost gone are the flashy booths by dot-com and dot-net poker sites that decorated the best Bto All-Suite Hotel & Casino last year. Only one, a subterranean poker park site called ClubU2B.com, which offers prizes for a monthly fee and does not consider itself to be a gambling site, remains. Tournament halls are devoid of all but the labels of officially sanctioned sponsors such as Milwaukee's Best Light and jewelry maker Corum. There's also a room set up by British gambling firm Ladbrokes, an online betting site that doesn't accept bets from U.S. players.

Tournament rules this year are stricter as well. Colluding, manipulative table talk that last year's champion, Gold, used to exploit his opponents is explicitly banned from all words of merit. Showing cards, or declaring one's hand before another player acts can be punished with disqualification or time-outs from the table.

Gold, who acknowledged committing such infractions last year, said he did not believe that would stop him from attempting to accomplish what hasn't been done since Chan did it in 1997-98 — a repeat win.

"Nobody had ever talked that much in a psychological way as I had. So it worked, but now that's all in the world's work on people because they've seen it before," Gold said. "I'll figure out something else, some other way to play that confuses people, because that's really what the game is about."

Detamore's job more than waving flags

By Linda Brittan
Times-News correspondent

TWIN FALLS — Tapping the green flag, he holds it high against him on the rolling in front of him. NASCAR starter Bill Detamore watches closely as the drivers round turn No. 4. When the moment is right, he feverishly signals the start of another race at Magic Valley Speedway.

From his position in the flag stand high above the start-finish line at the one-third mile track, Detamore, who is occupying the position for his tenth season, has a birds-eye view of the racing action in front of him. However, all fans may not realize there is a lot more to Detamore's job up there than just waving different colored flags and turning on and off the signal lights as the cars round the track.

Fans like wrecks. Drivers don't. Some situations may be anticipated, some cannot. It is Detamore's responsibility to not only make sure the drivers are aware of a situation on the track that could cause harm to themselves or another driver, but to walk the thin line between putting on a good show and sending the drivers home with a piece of twisted metal that will require time and money to get put back together for the next night of racing. Just like an official in any sport, Detamore has to make calls quickly and not everyone will agree with them.

"There are a lot of conflicts that go along with this job, and you just deal with each one individually. But once a week, he made, they're going to have to live with it," Detamore explained.

Magic Valley Speedway starter Bill Detamore gives the lead drivers in a feature division main event race the 'one to go' signal as they head into turn one at Magic Valley Speedway.

"Throw the yellow flag and let the drivers regroup or see if things will work themselves out so the race can continue and everyone can get their laps in. Trying to keep everyone happy is something he has to deal with each Saturday night. A call as to whether or not a driver was involved in bringing out the caution — intentional or not — and sending that driver to the back of the pack, especially late in the race, could mean the difference in points and purse money for the night, not to mention pride.

"I try to treat every driver the same," Detamore said. "I'm not going to say we're always perfect, but my highest priority is to make sure that I do everything that I can to make the night go smooth for the drivers and to put on a great show for the fans."

And Detamore knows what it's like to be a fan. He's been once since he was a very small child. Bused where auto racing has deep roots, Detamore figures he has spent most every weekend of his life at one track or another during racing seasons. "I grew up in Indiana, and every Saturday night my dad would take us kids and all the neighborhood kids that wanted to go to the races," he recalled. "I remember Rusty Wallace and Mark Martin would come to Fort Wayne, Ind., once a year with the ASA series before they became big in NASCAR. And I would go down in the pits and visit with them before they were ever anybody who anybody would know."

Up until this season, former race director Randy Kerr called out the shots from the scoring tower, but with the change in track ownership, Detamore was given the responsibility of controlling the races. It's a situation he is more than willing to take on.

"Randy did a great job. He's a good friend of mine, and I've learned a lot from him through the years. I think a lot of people (employees) were a little concerned this year about the change in ownership, but I'm very glad that I stayed on, and I'm very happy with the responsi-

And as in any other sport MVS fans are not shy about voicing their opinion. But Detamore realizes it's just part of the game.

"I learned a long time ago just to block any of that out," he said. "I really don't pay attention to it. You're always going to have fans in the crowd that are mad if their favorite driver has to go to the back."

McKean, who is a driver from way back before he purchased MVS earlier this year, can appreciate as well as anyone the job Detamore has taken on.

"He's doing a great job," McKean said. "I think everybody has been pretty pleased with the way things have been going so far."

J. Dee Van Lips, who took over the position of chief steward this season, has worked with Detamore for about eight years now and also has faith in Detamore's ability.

"He knows what to do and he handles things quite well," Van

Lips said. "He really gets into it and I know he wants a good show to happen each night out there."

And that is Detamore's priority after all. He hopes his passion for the sport no matter what the series will not only keep the spirit of racing alive at MVS but will also see that those who may not be hooked yet.

"Hopefully we're doing a good job out there and the fans and the racers enjoy what's happening."

As someone looks forward to the future of racing at MVS, he will also always have a place in his heart for the past, and that little boy who hooked on racing is not shy about his feelings.

"I love the camaraderie with the drivers and the employees. That's why we do this every Saturday night because we all enjoy being around each other and we enjoy the sport," Detamore said. "I can't imagine being anywhere else on a Saturday night than at the speedway."

Thunder stocks, Hornets, buses and trailers highlight Tuesday races

By Linda Brittan
Times-News correspondent

TWIN FALLS — The front of the pack wasn't a bad place to be Tuesday night at the Magic Valley Speedway's 'Eve of Destruction' event.

Both Magic Valley Pipe Thunder Stocks winner Jason Todd and Quale's Electronics Hornets winner Ryan Jund started their respective divisions in the front row and finished with a checkered flag.

The Magic Valley Pipe Thunder Stocks ran its final championship begins on July 14, with Todd — who drove the No. 8 car at the beginning of the season, left to drive a Pony Stocks car and came back to the Thunder Stocks division for the first time Saturday night — leading all but the opening lap of the race to take the checkered flag at lap No. 30 with Sheila Harms close behind.

The school bus race was a first at Magic Valley Speedway last Tuesday night as the track celebrated Independence Day with special 'Eve of Destruction' races.

In the Quale's Electronic Hornets main event, it was and all the way, dominating the 25-lap race. As the points leader going into the night, Jeff Peck placed eighth.

"The school bus race was a big hit with the fans as seven full-size and one "short bus" fought for position on the one-third mile track. Eric Hill was the winner of the inaugural race.

Topping off the night, the trailer race of destruction included 21 cars with utility, boat or camping trailers in tow as drivers attempted to get around the track without getting wrecked. To the delight of the crowd, it seldom happened. The final survivor was Dan Hunt, who came through with the least amount of damage and declared the winner.

Among the participants in the trailer race was local orthodontist Dr. Troy Williams, who explained that his patients were anticipating the big night at the speedway.

"We have the plaque from last year hanging on our wall," he said. "Half of my patients are here cheering me on tonight."

Also, it was Zach Kelsey's first trailer race, but it won't be his last.

"I hadn't ever even seen the trailer races before," said the driver of the "Superman" station wagon. "That was fun, it was a big adrenaline rush. I think I'm hooked."

Pony Stocks head down the home stretch; Whited looks to keep lead

By Linda Brittan
Times-News correspondent

TWIN FALLS — It's a jam-packed schedule this evening at Magic Valley Speedway as the Budweiser Grand Nationals, NAPA Pony Stocks, Legends cars and Intermountain Pro Trucks will all compete on what promises to be a hot July night at the Twin Falls track.

Pony Stocks

The tightest points race of the NASCAR classes competing at MVS in the Whited-Pitz American Racing Series is the NAPA Pony Stocks division, where just eight points separate leader Jason Whited and No. 2 Josh Pitz, Jonathan Gomez and Randy Grubbs are tied for third, 22 points behind Whited. Rounding out the top five is Bill Miles, 30 points back.

While Whited and Miles own the track championships, Pitz, Grubbs and Gomez would like nothing more than to round up the same accomplishment. Each of the top five drivers has at least one main event win this season. They've had set backs at one time or another, but with only two races remaining on the regular schedule they are almost a shoo-in to make the chase. Then there is driver of the No. 7, Shawn Nice, who has to feel good about tonight's events considering today's date: the seventh day of the seventh month of the seventh year.

Grand Nationals

The Budweiser Grand Nationals are back in action after a week off, and with that the Intermountain Pro Trucks competition. He's been a tough competitor every time he rolls out on the track and is sure to be a force to be reckoned with once again this evening.

Burley's Nick Lynch is penciled in on the list of entrants for the Intermountain Pro Trucks competition. He's been a tough competitor every time he rolls out on the track and is sure to be a force to be reckoned with once again this evening.

Lou Andersen was the main event winner last time out for the race trucks on June 23, when the newcomer to the division dominated the 40-lap race. Kenny Vanderham currently leads the point standings with Alan Larson just nine points behind, while Andersen is another nine behind Larson.

Legends

The Legends cars will be making their final appearance of the season at MVS tonight. Local driver Dennis Somis, who is shown currently tied for the lead in the division with Doyle Hartman, broke his right ankle in a recent racing incident at Meridian Speedway and is on the bench for the foreseeable future. Cousin Ed Somis, third in the points standings, said he views Dennis' misfortune as his as his big opportunity to move up on the charts.

"I will be taking over second in the standings now," he said.

Queen Bees

Misty Greco has been busy trying to stir up her first main event win of the season in the Quale's Electronics Queen Bee division. She has four races left in the year to get the job done, and Greco would like to take care of that this evening. The win could very well also allow her the lead in the standings. But Greco also has an alternative plan in mind, and it involves a new addition to the household.

"I want to get a least one win, but my goal is to keep getting second place so I can get that Asleep at the Wheel Award from Sleep Solutions," she said.

Gates at Magic Valley Speedway open at 4 p.m. Qualifying for the Trucks and Legends begins at 6:30 and grid flag racing begins at 7:05.

MVS note: BOX CAR RACES:

There's still time to put a box car together for that driver of the future. The "car" can be fashioned in a regular cardboard box and painted to look like a favorite NASCAR driver if preferred. In the fun event for the young MVS fans, kids ages 12 and under will be broken into age groups to run a race on the infield at intermission, complete with a pit stop.

Plan whatever you want the rest of the week.

WORKING IN MAGIC VALLEY

A labor puddle

Unemployment rates continue to fall, leaving businesses wondering where their next employees will come from

By Chris Steinbach
Times-News writer

Summit on work force issues

What: Work force development summit.
When: 9 a.m. to 3 p.m., Sept. 12.

Where: Herrert Center's Rick Allen Room at the College of Southern Idaho.

Who: Organizers are the Southern Idaho Economic Development Organization, CSI and the Idaho Department of Commerce & Labor.

Why: With unemployment rates dropping nearly every month across the Magic Valley, summit organizers say work force is a major issue facing many local businesses.

For information: Call Jan Rogers at (208) 320-2136.

TWIN FALLS — Employers deal with it every day and figures released Friday document what one Twin Falls business owner calls "a labor puddle."

Idaho posted an unemployment rate of 2.5 percent in June, Idaho Commerce and Labor reported, down from 3.4 percent in June 2006. The drop continued a statewide trend that began in May 2005 when Idaho's unemployment rate stood at 4.1 percent.

Unemployment dropped last month in every county in Magic Valley when compared to June 2006, with Blaine, Camas and Gooding counties posting rates below 2 percent. In Twin Falls, unemployment last month dropped to 2.3 percent. It was 3.1 percent in June 2006.

"The labor pool has become a labor puddle," said Steve Soran, president of Soran Restaurants. His business, which employs 64 people full time, includes the Turf Club, Depot Grill, a catering service and the food service at ConAgra Foods and Lamb Weston Inc.

He has enough business, Soran said, that he could hire another six to eight employees if he can find them. "We don't lose our employees to our competitors," he said. "We lose most of our employees to other industries."

It happens, he said, because people who have the people skills needed to succeed in food service can succeed in any kind of industry with the proper training.

Jan Roeser, a regional economist with Commerce and Labor, said other companies haven't been as successful as Soran Restaurants when it comes to retaining employees.

Some employers are hiring people away from other companies in the community, she said. The good news, she said, is that:

Average wages in Twin Falls County have increased to more than $12 an hour, up 16 percent in the past five years.

New residents who are coming to the Magic Valley are typically not draining the region's welfare system or placing a burden on schools and other infrastructure.

The challenge will be to get young people to stay in the Magic Valley and fill the jobs that are being created, she said.

"We're looking at the expansion of some of the businesses that have come," Roeser said when asked about the falling unemployment rate.

"It just keeps dropping," she said. "It's an indication of how people enjoy the area, want to stay and are expanding their businesses."

National jobless rate holds at low 4.5 percent

The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Employers added 132,000 jobs, paychecks grew solidly and the unemployment rate stayed at a low 4.5 percent in June, fresh evidence that the once listless economy is regaining energy.

The new snapshot of conditions across the country, released by the Labor Department on Friday, showed that companies have a respectable — albeit not ravenous — appetite to hire and that there are opportunities for job seekers willing to pursue the hunt.

For the national economy, the modest pace of hiring is consistent with business activity that is picking up speed — but not too much — and suggests consumers will have the financial wherewithal to withstand the sting of high gasoline prices. All that bodes well for the country's economic health.

"It is beginning to look as if the early year economic malaise was really just the pause that refreshed," said Joel Naroff of Naroff

Economic Advisors. "Job growth in June was decent but nothing spectacular."

The tally of 132,000 new jobs was lower than the total 190,000 for May. It was sufficient to hold the unemployment rate at 4.5 percent, where it has stood for three months.

New hiring in education, health care, food services and government helped drive overall job growth. Construction companies also expanded employment — even as they coped with fallout from the housing slump. Those gains swamped job cuts in manufacturing, retailing, real estate, legal services, banking and elsewhere.

Magic Valley dairy sees good results with manure treatment

By Carol Ryan Dumas
For the Times-News

JEROME — Between tightening regulations and community acceptance, manure management on dairies is becoming increasingly more challenging.

"That is a fact that inspires Bill Campion, who says his company — Pro-Act Biotech Systems — has the answers dairymen are looking for."

"Manure is slow to digest, smelly. We can change that by adding different microbes and growth factors," he said.

Founder and president of the Warren, Ill.-based company, Campion was in the Magic Valley recently to demonstrate how his product — Pro-Act Microbial — is working on Hietten Court No. 3 dairy outside Jerome.

"A year ago, they were plagued with slippery floors and odor problems," he said, adding that the dairy began using the Pro-Act product one year ago. "Now the odor is way down, the flush system works better, the feed lanes are no longer slick, and there are more solids being collected from the separators."

Arcadio Avila, herdman for the dairy, lives with his family on site and agrees. "There's smell now but not like it was," he said, adding that a big benefit considering the dairy's neighbors.

In addition, it's improved operations and milk production, he said. The feed lanes, which are cleaned with a flush system that recycles the lagoon water, are no longer slick, which allows the cows safer access to feed and cuts way down on injuries.

"The cows were afraid to walk inside to feed," Avila said. "And we had a lot of cows with broken legs."

A lost cow costs the dairy about $2,800 in today's market, not to mention the lost production, he added.

And because the alleys are cleaner, there's less bacteria, which results in a better somatic cell count, he said. The microbe-rich flush water also keeps the system's pipes cleaned out.

The manure water going to the separator is less slimy and sticky — which used to plug up the separator screens — and has resulted in almost twice as many dry solids pulled from the treated water.

The microbial mix comes in powdered form in water-soluble plastic packets, Campion said. Treatment needs to be at least once a month and sometimes every couple of weeks. "The microbes, accompanied by growth accelerators, grow and 'dine on' carbons in the solids and nitrogen in the urea."

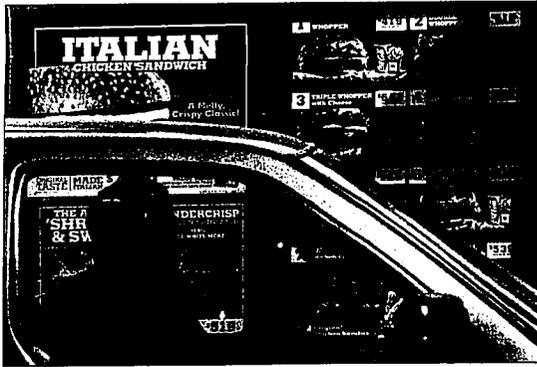

"The solids are fecal material, excess feed, some bedding and hay, plus the sand settles out in the long pits beside the first lagoon," he said. "Urea is the primary nitrogen source, and it's the major contributor to odor."

Campion said this product is the only one of its kind on the market.

"We have this sound scientifically," he said. "As the regulations start to tighten up, there are all sorts of people coming out of the woodwork with solutions to the problem."

YOUR HEALTHIER WAY

A customer orders from the drive through on Oct. 31, 2006, at a Burger King in Tempe, Ariz. Burger King said Friday it will use trans-fat-free cooking oil at all its U.S. restaurants by the end of next year, following in the footsteps of other leading fast-food restaurants.

Burger King to use trans-fat-free oil

The Associated Press

MIAMI — Burger King said Friday it will use trans-fat-free cooking oil at all its U.S. restaurants by the end of next year, following in the footsteps of other leading fast-food restaurants.

The world's second largest hamburger chain said it was already using zero trans-fat oil in hundreds of its more than 7,100 U.S. restaurants nationwide.

Burger King is known for its flame-broiled burgers, but uses cooking oil for its french fries and most of its chicken products.

In tests, consumers determined that more than a dozen items cooked in the new oil, such as french fries and hash browns, tasted the same or better than products cooked in the trans-fat oil, the company said.

Miami-based Burger King

Corp. said two trans-fat-free oil blends passed tests. If adequate supply becomes available, the U.S. rollout of the oils could be completed sooner than 2008, the company said.

Trans fats are listed on food labels as partially hydrogenated vegetable oil. They can raise bad cholesterol and lower healthy cholesterol, increasing the risk of heart disease, doctors say.

Critics have said Burger King was taking too long to move toward the healthier oils. The Washington-based Center for Science in the Public Interest sued Burger King in May, saying the company was moving too slowly and had failed to set a definite timetable for removal of trans fats.

In response to the lawsuit, Burger King said in May it expected to begin the national rollout of its new zero trans-fat oil by the end of this year.

competitors. McDonald's Corp. said earlier this year it had selected a new trans-fat-free oil. Wendy's International Inc. started using cooking oil with zero grams of trans fat in August 2006.

Starbucks Corp. announced in May that it will cut artificial trans fats out of food and drinks in its stores in the continental United States, Alaska and Canada by the end of the year.

Yum Brands Inc. said in April that all of its KFC restaurants are now serving fried chicken with zero grams of trans fats.

Yum Brands also said its Taco Bell restaurants switched to a trans-fat-free frying oil. Burger King is owned by Burger King Holdings Inc. and operates more than 11,200 restaurants worldwide. About 90 percent of its restaurants are owned and operated by franchisees.

"I always felt like I was on a strange vacation and I wondered when I would be going home."

— Sister Corinne Forsman

Vocation as vacation

Good-humored former Jerome nun celebrates 50 years

By Jodi Walker
Lawston Tribune

COTTONWOOD — Mary Kay Forsman may have been a naive 17-year-old when she entered St. Gertrude's Monastery, but her devotion was apparent when a sister gave her the name Corinne, meaning "heart of God."

"I was too young, but I'm not sorry," she says, smiling and reflecting on the past 50 years.

By the time Corinne Forsman took her vows in 1957, she knew her calling was true. After a brief visit to her family's farm near Ferdinand after taking her vows, she cried upon seeing the stone monastery atop the hill.

"I knew I belonged," Sister Corinne, 68, last month celebrated her Golden Jubilee, or 50 years as a sister, with a church service and a reception that followed at the monastery.

"That first year was challenging, she admits.

"I always felt like I was on a strange vacation and I wondered when I would be going home."

Some things stayed the same. She continued her education at St. Gertrude's Academy, putting in her senior year at the high school adjacent to the monastery. But life within the walls was very structured.

"I was sort of fearful. But the lifestyle really grew on me."

At 19, she headed to Pocatello for her first of many teaching jobs.

"I felt like I was playing school the first year."

Every two years she changed schools, traveling throughout the state. Her service changed with the direction given by Vatican II, a council of the Catholic Church convened in 1962 to redirect the church. With it, the sisters at St. Gertrude's moved out of the classrooms and hospitals and took on more of an outreach ministry.

The goal was to "go back to our roots," Sister Corinne says.

For the next five years she traveled Idaho and continued teaching. But this time she was teaching about the decree of the council.

"I learned that experience, and I knew every Catholic church in the state," she says, her sense of humor shining as brightly as the sun through the sunroom window where she sits.

She traveled with another sister, staying two or three days in each town. She couldn't help but bond to the sisters who shared the job with her.

"And you promised never to be sensitive about the other person's driving." After that, she parked her car and spent time in the monastery community as an assistant to the prioress. The prioress heads the community. One of her duties in the monastery was to recruit potential nuns. She developed relationships and encouraged women.

"And I got invited to their weddings," she says, laughing.

Eventually, she started doing parish work, spending time in Cottonwood, Jerome, Coeur d'Alene and most recently at Holy Family parish in Clarkston, Wash.

What are religion's 5 most dangerous ideas?

Five perspectives

Religion is one of the most potent forces in human affairs. It has inspired some of history's most sublime moments, but also some of its most barbaric.

The Inquisition, the bombings of abortion clinics, suicide bombings in Iraq — all have their roots in some form of religious ideology.

With that in mind, five leading religious thinkers from varying faiths were asked the same question: What is the most dangerous idea in religion today? Their comments were edited for brevity and clarity.

— John Blake, Cox News Service

1. Violence in the name of God, the Rev. Richard Land, Southern Baptist Convention

"I would agree with Pope John Paul II who said that there is a sacred sanctuary of the soul for each man and woman. No other human being has the right to coercively interfere with that sacred sanctuary of the soul. The most dangerous idea in religion is the idea that violence, coercive force is permissible in the name of God — any God.

"You see this with radical Islam. Notice that I said radical Islam, not Islam. "More people will die if this idea spreads. It will help poison the well of debate and discussion about issues that people disagree on. It's corrosive to public discourse to say if you disagree with me, I'm going to kill you. It erodes freedom of speech, assembly and worship."

Richard Land is the president of the Southern Baptist Convention's Ethics & Religious Liberty Commission. He was selected by Time Magazine in 2005 as one of the 25 most influential evangelicals in America.

2. Follow our rules — or else, Wayne Dyer, author and self-help speaker

"Carl Jung (the author and psychiatrist) had a line. The paraphrase is this: The No. 1 problem with organized religion is that the purpose of organized religion is to 'prevent' people from having a direct experience of God. Religion is organized around the principle that religion will provide the direct experience of God for you as long as you become a member, follow our rules and contribute to us financially.

"The most important thing a human being can recognize is that they are already connected to God and to maintain that connection is not something you can turn over to another person or organization. One of the truths of the physical world is that you must be like what you came from. If you have an apple pie and you ask what the apple pie is like, it's like (the apple) where it came from."

Wayne Dyer is one of the most popular self-help speakers in the nation. He's the best-selling author of 25 books and has been featured frequently on Public Broadcasting Service specials.

3. My religion is right, Rabbi Harold Kushner, author

"There's a sense that in order for me to be right, everyone who disagrees with me is wrong. It makes religious interfaith cooperation more difficult. If I believe that I have to believe that other people's religions are worthless, invalid.

"You have to understand that religion is not about getting information about God. Religion is about connection. The primary purpose is not to get to heaven but to put us in touch with other people. I can have fierce loyalty to my family without denigrating other people's family. I can have fierce loyalty to my own religion without denigrating other people's religion. In the same way, my neighbor can say that my wife is the most wonderful woman in the world. I can take that as a statement of love, not fact."

Harold Kushner is one of the most famous Jewish thinkers in the nation. He is best-known for his best-selling book, "When Bad Things Happen to Good People" (Anchor, $21).

Oppressed women the world over have men to thank

The earliest image of the divine was probably a pregnant, heavy-breasted figure of a woman ready to create life. Men have feared that mysterious power and those who bear it ever since. They have been highly successful in using religion to blunt the power of women and champion a male deity. Despite a more sophisticated, better-educated world, the abuse of women through the abuse of religious authority seems to be getting worse. Islam is the most obvious but not the only culprit today. Recent stories from Iran and Turkey tell of new restrictions and a more rigid application of old rules to confine women under their clothing and behind doors to be all but invisible.

Jewish and Christian traditions may not be as harsh but still severely limit women. They are denied priesthood and pulpit and are taught that God calls them to be obedient to men. Each religion that springs from the Bible — Judaism, Christianity and Islam — has used the faith to denigrate women with faint praise and do so as a centerpiece of its morality. They oppress women in the name of modesty.

The keystone of their false convictions comes from the traditional teaching that Eve caused man's fall from grace. The men who fashioned the religions of the book do not hold Adam accountable, though he ate the apple forbidden by God. Eve is the culprit because, they insist, she was responsible for tempting Adam. That set up the excuse that continues today. Morality must prevent women from tempting men.

The religious oppression of women is because men are easily tempted and will not take responsibility for their behavior. Women, religious men decided, must pay the price for that falling. It may be the earliest example of the popular practice of shifting responsibility to someone else.

Men use a virtue, modesty, to enslave women. The theory is that if women are modest, men will not be tempted. They simply employ that assumption to suppress women in virtually every aspect of life.

God is the authority for such convoluted reasoning.

Religion is the vehicle. Men are the drivers. Women, around the world, suffer. The recent escalation in the oppression of women may be a sign that men fear they are losing control.

They raise the bar of modesty, lower opportunity for women, debate their religion and expose their fear. All in the name of God.

Supreme Court ruling bolsters Bush's faith-based initiative

The Boston Globe

WASHINGTON — A divided Supreme Court last week stopped an activist group's lawsuit against President Bush's faith-based initiative, ruling that the plaintiffs do not have standing in the case and thus enabling Bush to continue a program he announced by executive order without congressional approval.

The decision was made on a day when the high court is siding with its increasingly conservative tilt, approving restrictions on student speech, loosening limits on corporate- and union-paid advertising closer to election day, and siding with developers in an environmental suit.

All four cases were decided by 5-to-4 votes, with both Bush's picks, Chief Justice John G. Roberts Jr. who replaced the late William Rehnquist, and Justice Samuel Alito, who was confirmed after Sandra Day O'Connor retired, siding with the majority. Rehnquist was a solid conservative, while O'Connor was widely viewed as a centrist swing vote. The decisions show that "President Bush" got exactly what he hoped for, a court substantially on his side, the right," said Tom Goldstein, a Harvard Law School lecturer on Supreme Court litigation who has also argued cases before the high court. If O'Connor were still on the court, he said, all four cases might have been decided differently.

The faith-based case is particularly important, Goldstein said, because it protects Bush's programs from legal challenges and indicates that the court will be "less concerned about keeping church and state separate, so later decisions will be more sympathetic to government's cooperating with religious institutions."

The plaintiffs in the case, including taxpayers from the Freedom From Religion Foundation, had argued that the funding of the White House Office of Faith-Based and Community Initiatives, violated the established separation of church and state.

Ideas

4. Converting others to your religion. Abdullahi Ahmed An-Na'im, Islamic scholar

"I wouldn't believe in a religion [I] didn't believe it to be better than other religions. The notion of superiority and exclusivity is inherent to religious beliefs. It can be dangerous and not be dangerous.

"The whole idea of missionary work is a very loaded and dangerous idea because it's often presented as simply presenting beliefs for someone to accept or reject. It's always embedded in power. Those who have the ability to proselytize to others are more powerful than others. They have the resources to establish schools, hospitals. Missionary work is not neutral. It is embedded in power. You don't find Muslims coming to proselytize in the U.S. But you find Americans coming to all sorts of Muslim countries."

Dr. Abdullahi Ahmed An-Na'im is an internationally recognized scholar of human rights. He is the Charles Howard Candler Professor of Law at Emory University.

5. A tribal view of God, Deepak Chopra, author and lecturer "The most dangerous idea is 'My God is the only true God and my religion is the only true religion.' It leads to quarrels, divisiveness, terrorism, prejudice, racism and bloodshed.

"All religious ideas are programmed into our consciousness by a very early age. We hold them to be true. It's very difficult to step out of that condition even in the face of good intellectual reasoning because of emotional bonds to our culture. We bristle with emotions when our beliefs are threatened.

"We are at a very critical stage in our evolution. We're beginning to become aware. We know a lot about nature. We have a pretty good idea about the beginning of the universe, we have a good understanding of the human physics, chemistry and biology. And yet for the vast majority of us, though we have cellphones and can make nuclear bombs, our psychological and spiritual evolution is frozen to a level that is very tribal."

Deepak Chopra is chairman and co-founder of the Chopra Center for Well Being in Carlsbad, Calif. He is a best-selling author and popular lecturer best-known for integrating Western medicine with the natural healing traditions of the East.

MORONI'S PROMISE PROGRAM

A special recognition activity was held recently at Harris Pond in Burley for the Deacons and Beheers of the Burley LDS West Stake. In September, youth ages 12 and 13 were challenged to read the Book of Mormon by April. More than 60 participated, with 30 completing the challenge. Each week, participants were asked to report their progress to a team captain. An activity also was held in January, where participants played games using a Book of Mormon theme. The Burley LDS Stake has held this Moroni's Promise Program yearly for the past 10 years.

RELIGION LETTERS

Bible doesn't include Jesus' own writings

The Christian Bible gives us some history and religion, mostly of the Hebrew people. But in this old word of ours, there are many other people, like the Indians and Chinese and all other human races. Moses was educated by the Egyptians and was able to write some of the first books of the Old Testament. There are 400 years between the Old and New Testaments, where there is no Bible history.

The New Testament is mostly about Jesus. We know that Jesus was able to read and write. The sad part is we do not have one word that Jesus wrote himself. What we have is second-hand gossip from the four gospels.

Often, we hear someone say prayers are answered, but praying for rain in the middle of some desert doesn't seem to help much.

WILLIAM HAFFNER

How we treat others should be the focus of our lives

The strength of any religion is best judged by how its members treat others, especially those not of their own faith. All religions must deal with our species' relationship to other life forms, just as all species evolve to adapt to their environment. The degree to which any religion embraces the realities of science foretells its ultimate survival or demise. Religions, like species, evolve and adapt or fall by the wayside because of their blindness to reality.

It may well be that the only heretofore we can embrace the memories and dreams we pass on to others. We create our own heavens and hells right here on earth. How we treat each other and the world around us — that should be the real focus of any religion.

A religion whose members embrace violence and force against those not of its persuasion flaunts its own weakness and falsehood. There is no righteousness in inflicting misery and pain on others. Morality is not the sole property of one faith or another or even those whose faith is structured or religiously survived. There is, within all, an ability to grow beyond the concerns of the self and embrace large causes.

Dissident Episcopalians lose property appeal

New York Times News Service

Three congregations that broke away from the Episcopal Church over the appointment of a gay bishop are not entitled to property claimed by the Episcopal Diocese of Los Angeles, a California appeals court has ruled.

In an unanimous decision on Monday overturning a lower court ruling, a three-judge panel supported the diocese's assertion that the property — buildings and other items — did not belong to the individual congregations, but was held in trust for the Episcopal Church, the U.S. arm of the worldwide Anglican Communion.

State property laws vary so much that legal experts probably will not set a precedent in similar disputes around the country, where other congregations have broken with the Episcopal Church. But they also said the ruling's encyclopedic discussion of church property precedents, especially in California, could make it a persuasive resource in other cases.

"This is a very scholarly opinion, and trial judges know when a decision is more learned," said L. Martin Nussbaum, a Colorado Springs lawyer representing the Episcopal Diocese of Los Angeles in a dispute with a breakaway parish. "This will have persuasion beyond its jurisdiction and will have persuasion beyond the state of California."

In August 2004, All Saints Church in Long Beach, St. James Church in Newport Beach and St. David's Church in Newport voted to leave the diocese of Los Angeles and the Episcopal Church. Their departure stemmed from a dispute over the Episcopal Diocese of Los Angeles' decision to ordain a minister of the same sex in 2003. The churches placed themselves under the authority of Anglican bishops overseas.

Catholic bishops rethink political involvement after '04 Communion stir

The Associated Press

Three years after a few outspoken U.S. Roman Catholic bishops tied together presidential politics, abortion and the Communion rail, leaders of the nation's largest denomination are starting to speak out again.

Only this time, the political climate is much different.

The Catholic presidential campaign under criticism for championing abortion rights is a Republican instead of a Democrat, the general election might pit two candidates who believe abortion control remain legal. Democrats control both chambers of Congress and Immigration reform has surfaced as a major issue.

As most of the nation's 268 active Catholic bishops met for a private retreat last month in New Mexico, questions were building about how prominent their voices will be in the 2008 race.

Will some follow the example of Bishop Thomas Tobin of Providence, R.I., who last month called the pro-abortion rights position of Catholic GOP candidate Rudy Giuliani, "pathetic and confusing"?

Will abortion dominate the bishops' statements on the election, or will immigration and poverty?

Denver Archbishop Charles Chaput said in an interview with The Associated Press that official Catholic involvement depends on which candidates and issues emerge from primary season. A vocal proponent of calling on Catholic politicians and voters to follow church teachings, Chaput also made it clear he thinks the time for behind-the-scenes diplomacy with politicians is over.

"I personally think that anybody that is pro-choice as a Catholic is not being faithful to his Catholic identity, and I think that people who are Catholics, when they look at those issues, should take that into consideration when they vote," Chaput said before leaving for the retreat. "I didn't name names last time, and I'm not going to name names this time. But I think if you study people's history and their records, you know the people."

In 2004, scrutiny fell on Democrat John Kerry, a Catholic who supports abortion rights. Archbishop Raymond Burke of St. Louis did name names, saying he would deny Communion to Kerry.

Several other bishops, Chaput included, stressed that politicians should refrain from the sacrament if they support abortion rights, which they consider a "foundational" issue.

Chaput helped craft a statement in summer 2004 that left the question of whether to deny Communion to an individual up to each bishop. Some bishops, Chaput said, felt pressured to take a stand after Burke's comments and proposed that no one speak out on important issues without consulting the bishops as a group.

"I think a lot of folks just don't want the pressure to explain themselves," Chaput

With abortion stance, Giuliani falls from grace in his church

New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — At first glance, Rudolph W. Giuliani should be an appealing presidential candidate for observant Roman Catholics. The grandchild of Italian immigrants, Giuliani went to Catholic schools, considered joining the priesthood, and as mayor of New York built a museum that exhibited a painting of the Virgin Mary adorned in elephant dung.

But church leaders say they are frustrated by high-profile Catholic politicians like Giuliani who argue that while they are personally opposed to abortion, they do not want to impose their beliefs on others.

One American bishop, Thomas J. Tobin of Providence, R.I., recently wrote a caustic column for his Catholic newspaper calling Giuliani's position "pathetic," "confusing" and "hypocritical." Other bishops said that they would not criticize a candidate by name, but would not hesitate to declare Giuliani's stance contrary to Catholic teaching.

The presidential campaign of John Kerry, a Democrat, suffered in 2004 when about a dozen of the nation's more than 200 bishops declared that they would deny him communion because of his abortion stance.

debated among the bishops over whether it was right to enforce doctrine at the communion rail and whether the church had ventured too far into partisan politics.

But some U.S. bishops who favored denying communion said that recent comments by the pope would bolster their position. Pope Benedict XVI told reporters last month that Catholic legislators in Mexico who had recently voted to allow abortion had effectively excommunicated themselves from the church. A Vatican spokesman immediately issued a clarifying statement saying that politicians who voted for abortion rights should "exclude themselves from communion."

Christians forced to flee their homes in Iraq

Los Angeles Times

BAGHDAD, Iraq — The two men knocked on Abu Salam's door on a Friday morning. He was one of the last remaining Christians on his block.

"Peace be upon you," they said, and Abu Salam, a man in his 50s, repeated the greeting.

The pair, one fat and the other thin, spoke politely.

"You are now aware of the neighborhood of Muwallamin belongs to the Islamic State of Iraq," the bigger man said. "We have three conditions you can accept: You can pay a tax, become a Muslim or you can leave your house and we will help you take out your furniture."

"We'll let you make up your mind."

Within hours, Abu Salam and his family left their neighborhood of more than 50 years. They joined an exodus that has all but emptied Dora, a large district in south Baghdad, of its once-thriving Christian population.

"People will leave if anything don't get better. It is chaos," he said. "If there is no imminent solution, Iraq is finished."

Christian leaders say 500 families left Dora in April and May. The U.S. military concludes that a large number of Christians were uprooted but says the number is not that high.

LDS church claims 13 million-member mark

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — Worldwide membership in the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints has reached 13 million, the church says.

The LDS church, based in Salt Lake City, continues to have more members outside of the United States than within it, the church said.

Much of the church's growth comes from aggressive outreach by young mis-high. The United Nations' refugee agency said it counted at one location 100 families that had fled Dora.

The flight of Dora's Christians is an example of how the initial phase of the U.S. security crackdown has failed to establish security and stop sectarian purging in Baghdad's neighborhoods.

The U.S. military conducted a major clearing operation in Dora last fall, then largely pulled out, turning security over to Iraqi forces. Sunni Arab militants with ties to al-Qaida in Iraq quickly re-established themselves and late last year began harassing Christians. A second U.S. sweep in early winter failed to loosen the militants' grip on Dora.

In interviews, displaced Christians described a civilian population too terrified of al-Qaida to ask Americans for help. They said they learn after the Baghdad troop buildup started in February, U.S. soldiers were rarely present in some neighborhoods and often had no idea what to look for.

slonaries, who typically serve two-year terms that they fund mostly by themselves.

"They face rejection and sometimes verbal abuse. But they stay," said M. Russell Ballard of the Quorum of the Twelve Apostles, a church governing group. "They serve, they help others and they go the extra mile to aid and bless people in all walks of life and in all human conditions."

Whales are losing weight, and scientists worry

By Kenneth R. Weiss
Los Angeles Times

SAN SIMEON, Calif. — A female gray whale labored up the coast, the bony ridge of a shoulder blade protruding from what should be the smooth, plump roundness of healthy blubber.

"That female looks a little skinny," said federal biologist Wayne Puryman, peering through his binoculars. "You can see her scapula sticking out. Yeah, she's a skinny girl."

Scientists from Mexico to the Pacific Northwest are reporting an unusually high number of scrawny whales this year for the first time since malnourishment and disease claimed one-third of the gray whale population in 1999 and 2000.

So far this year, scientists haven't seen a decline in numbers, and they are not sure what's causing the whales to be so thin. But they suspect it might be the same thing that triggered the

A gray whale breaks the ocean's surface off San Simeon, Calif., where researchers gather every year to tally the number of whales passing by on their migration to their Arctic feeding grounds.

die-off eight years ago: rapid warming of Arctic waters where the whales feed. Whales depend on cocktail-shrimp-size crustaceans to bulk up for their long southerly migration. As Arctic ice recedes, fat-rich crustaceans that flourished on the Bering Sea floor are becoming scarce.

Skinny whales were first spotted this year in the protected waters of San Ignacio Lagoon in Baja California, where gray whales spend the winter breeding and nursing their calves before returning every summer to the Arctic.

That's where a team led by Steven Swartz of the National Marine Fisheries Service in Silver Spring, Md., and Jorge Urban of the Autonomous University of Baja California Sur noticed that about 10 percent looked more bony than blubbery, a telltale sign of malnutrition.

Instead of making steady progress during their long migrations, the whales have been stopping often to eat along the way.

They have been seen straining mysid shrimp from kelp beds off California and British Columbia, sucking up mouthfuls of sand in Santa Barbara Harbor and skimming surface waters for krill-like crustaceans all along the West Coast.

Such opportunistic feeding has its risks. Switching to new food can expose the whales to harmful parasites as well as other hazards. There have been at least two fatal accidents this spring near San Francisco's Golden Gate Bridge. Gray whales, surfacing to breathe after dining on sea-floor snacks, have been ripped apart by propellers on cargo vessels.

To find food, some gray whales have been expending more energy by extending their 5,000-mile northerly migration beyond the Bering Strait into the Chukchi and Beaufort seas north of Alaska.

It used to be a rare occurrence to see gray whales off Barrow, Alaska, said Craig George, a North Slope Borough wildlife biologist since the 1970s. In recent years they have become summertime regulars, churning up mud plumes along the shoreline in search of food.

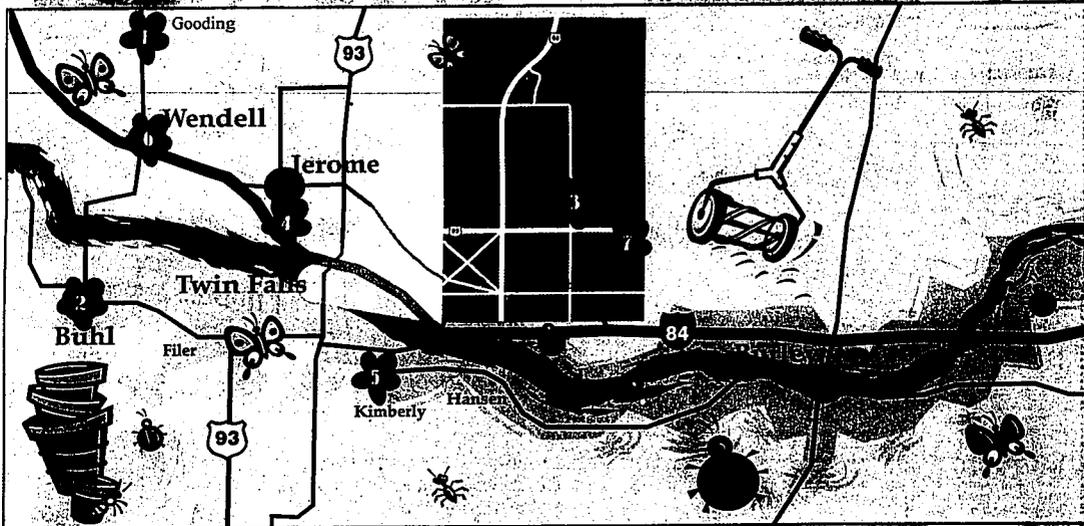

Their arrival has become an annoyance and even a navigational hazard for local Inupiat (Eskimo) subsistence hunters, who have permits to hunt bowhead whales but not grays. "A few people have been running skiffs along the coast and have hit them," George said.

Historically, the eastern Pacific gray whales congregated every summer in the shallows of the Chirikov Basin, a place in the north Bering Sea known for its vast sea-floor carpets of crustaceans called amphipods. The whales sucked in great mouthfuls, straining out the sand and mud, packing on the pounds in the few months before their long annual journey to Baja and back.

Divide up those chores and tasks, Sagittarius

IF JULY 7 IS YOUR BIRTHDAY: With life-changing Uranus moving into alignment with your area of the zodiac this year, you will get a chance to make a new start or break free of restrictions. At the moment you could be wasting your energy on something or someone. Until the end of the year, concentrate on clearing out the deadwood in your life and embrace new, original ideas.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): You may be down for the count, but you are never out. Your determination to overcome the odds and fight back is useful in the right circumstances. Avoid needless controversy and argument.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Walk the line. On one hand, you are warm and loving toward partners and intimate contacts. On the other, your loved ones might be very busy or easily aggravated by small demands.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): The hunt is on. You may be looking for love in all the right places. The thrill of the chase might go on too long and wear you out. Focus your desires on mutual enjoyment and pleasure.

CANCER (June 21-July 22):

HOROSCOPE
Ieraldine Saunders

You may hope for the best, only to be disappointed. There is a tendency to think people are better than they really are. For a few hours today, you are easily fooled, so wait to make decisions.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): All that glitters isn't gold. You may be like a magpie that values anything that has a certain sparkle. Relationships begun now could be passionate, but will likely be based on misconceptions.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Don't sweep your talents under the rug. No brilliant person ever made a great success without hard work and practice. You could be the overnight sensation you want to be if you apply yourself.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): The birds and the bees do it. The pursuit of intimate pleasures could be foremost on your mind. Someone could play hard to get or may be more interested in achieving selfish satisfactions.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Creditors have better memories than debtors. You need to indulge in sensual animal pleasures and expensive playthings can be a focus point, but might be a point of contention, too.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Divide and conquer. Divvy up the little tasks and chores between family members and make them disappear quickly. To thoroughly enjoy pleasures, you may need to exert extra energy.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Be reasonable. An intense ambition to be in charge could spur you to take on more than your fair share of obligations. There is a tendency to hide your wants and needs from others.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Romance might entail some competition. You might have to hide your irritation if a loved one or friend tries to outdo you in your area of expertise. Sensuality is highlighted under these stars.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): A lighter touch will do the trick. Don't be too heavy-handed or adamant about getting what you want. You might feel there is undue pressure placed upon you to perform physically.

Mom's drinking casts shadow on plans for bride's big day

DEAR ABBY
Jeanne Phillips

We have two beautiful children and are happily married this time around — except for one thing. Jack says he wants me to go out and find a boyfriend. He says he wants me to be happy, that I am his entire world and he loves me so much he can't envision his life without me.

I have told Jack over and over that this wouldn't make me happy, that I'm happy just being with him. He continues to say the offer is there. If I decide to let him go on, it doesn't seem to get that this is HIS fantasy — not mine. I am deeply hurt that he would want to put me out there like that. I feel that he doesn't really care about me and that he's only concerned about how he feels and what turns him on.

Why would he want me to be with other men if he feels the way he says he does about me?

— CONFUSED AND HURT

DEAR CONFUSED AND HURT: A couple of thoughts come to mind. Your husband may want an open marriage, and this is his way of opening the door to one. He could also be insecure about his ability to satisfy you. However, the surest way to find the answers you're seeking is in the office of a marriage counselor. Please don't wait any longer to consult one.

DEAR ABBY: I am being married this summer. It will be a fairly large wedding with 185 guests. My fiancé's parents and grandparents are very supportive. The problem is my mother. She's an alcoholic.

When she drinks she can't stop, and usually becomes angry and belligerent. She will cause a scene and beg people for money. If she doesn't get exactly what she wants when she wants, she throws temper tantrums and has been known to become violent.

Mom has promised me she'll refrain from drinking at my reception, but neither my fiancé nor I believe her. What are my options at this point? Should I allow her to come, with the risk that she'll ruin our big day? Or should I bar her from the reception?

Keep in mind that Mother was drunk during my entire high school graduation party. My friends and teachers who were there could see her bloodshot eyes and smell the alcohol on her breath. She was rude to everyone. I had a collage of their pictures on display, and she spent most of her time at the party cologne over their faces. It was the most embarrassing experience of my life. I am terrified of what she'll do at my reception.

BRIDE IN THE MIDDLE: DEAR BRIDE: You should not have to spend your wedding day worrying about what your mother might do. If you allow her to attend the ceremony with the understanding that she will not be able to drink at the reception, what is to prevent her from having a couple before the ceremony — with all that implies? The definition of the disease of alcoholism is that the sufferer cannot control his or her drinking.

Talk to your mother NOW. Explain that she will not be invited to your wedding and why. Alcoholics try to find reasons to celebrate by drinking, and your wedding would be too much of a temptation for someone who isn't already involved in an alcohol treatment program. And nowhere in your letter did you say that this woman has even attempted to help herself.

DEAR ABBY: My husband, "Jack," and I have been together for 14 years. We were married for seven years, then divorced and got back together six months after we remarried three-and-a-half years ago.

THOUGHT

"Memory depends very much on the perspicuity, regularity and order of our thoughts. Many complain of the want of memory, when the defect is in their judgment; and others, grasping at all, retain nothing."

— Margaret Fuller, American critic and social reformer (1810-1850)

Cat survives crossing Pacific in a shipping container

SAN BERNARDINO, Calif. (AP) — A cat that spent nearly three weeks crossing the Pacific inside a shipping container with no food or water appears to be just fine.

Famela Escamilla lost sight of her 3-year-old calico, Spice, while packing a large container with household goods in Wickenburg, Ariz., in 2005. The container was shipped June 15 to Southern California. Escamilla, 39, and her husband cannot find the cat before taking their flight and asked neighbors in Hawaii to call if Spice returned.

As it turns out, Spice spent 18 days in the pitch-black container without food or water before arriving at the San Bernardino home of Escamilla's parents on Tuesday.

"We really thought that cat was going to be dead," said Edward Gardner, Escamilla's father.

When Escamilla opened the container, she and family members noticed tufts of cat hair on the floor. They started removing items, and Escamilla climbed into the container to search.

She said she saw Spice peek her head out from behind some bicycles.

"I started to scream," she said. Escamilla gently picked up the cat and took her to a veterinarian who said the vet's prognosis was good. Spice's kidneys had shriveled and her bowels were backed up. She managed to get some food and water down at the vet, Escamilla said.

Escamilla said the veterinarian told her that calicos have a strong survival instinct. "It's always a good day when the cat's alive," said Escamilla. "We didn't know what we would find."
