Blaze battle continues

A helicopter drops fire retardant near the Fox Creek Trail Friday afternoon north of Ketchum. The 18,000-acre Castle Rock fire is 11 percent contained and the number of firefighters combating the blaze is now 1,250.

Today's weather will determine how fire goes

KETCHUM — As an army of firefighters continued to battle the Castle Rock Fire east of here Friday, managers of the 18,000-acre blaze said today's wind, heat and humidity will determine the fate of the nation's highest-priority wildfire.

Forecasts for today call for 20-25 mph winds, with gusts up to 35 mph.

Fire officials said they are concerned about the potential shift in weather and are still conducting burnout operations to rid areas of fuels. They also are working hard to install dozer lines.

Dozer and hand lines between Bald Mountain and the Red Warrior area were still not complete Friday night.

Another area of concern is Fox Creek, where crews were trying to complete burnout

KETCHUM — You live and you learn.

The economy is rolling ahead at a steady pace in Ketchum and Sun Valley as winds blow smoke from the Castle Rock Fire down into the Wood River Valley. Meanwhile, the Red Bluff fire cuts off access to recreational activities in the Middle Fork of the Salmon River — the most popular stretch in the area for week-long river rafting trips.

But local hotels and lodges are not hemorrhaging business as feared. And Steve Lentz, an owner of Far And Away Adventures, coughs at night — he even notices the smoke affecting his

Rate of U.S. women dying in childbirth on the rise

C-sections, obesity may play role

By Nina Stobbe
Associated Press writer

ATLANTA — U.S. women are dying from childbirth at the highest rate in decades, new government figures show. Though the rate of death is very small, experts believe increasing maternal obesity and a jump in Caesarean sections are partly to blame.

Some numbers crunchers

note that a change in how such deaths are reported also may be a factor.

"Those of us who look at this a lot say it's probably a little bit of both," said Dr. Jeffrey King, an obstetrician who led a recent New York state review of maternal deaths.

This week by the National Center for Health Statistics.

The rate was 12 per 100,000 live births in 2003 — the first time the maternal death rate rose above 10 since 1977.

To be sure, death from childbirth remains fairly rare in the United States. The death of infants is much more common — the nation's infant mortality rate was 679 per 100,000 live births in 2004.

Maternal deaths were a much more common tragedy long ago. Nearly one in every 100 live births resulted in a mother's death as recently as 90 years ago.

But the fact that maternal deaths are rising at all these days is shocking, said Tim Davis, a Virginia man whose wife Elizabeth died after childbirth in 2000.

"The hardest thing to understand is how in this day and age, in a modern hospital with doctors and nurses, that someone body can just die like that," he said.

Some health statisticians note the total number of maternal deaths — still fewer than 600 each year — is small. It's so small that 50 to 100 extra deaths

Economy

“We closed down the season,” Lentz said. This year, the smoke is all around him, including the smell of it hanging inside his office. But he doesn't miss a beat. His season will run as planned through October. Only a few clients with reservations demanded refunds. One party agreed to transfer their credit to float the Roger River this week. Another party will roll its reservation in the Middle Fork to next year. The company's damage control effort is largely working, and Lentz is just one of many businesses adapting to the fires and smoke that have blanketed the town mainly by morning for nearly one week.

Damage control requires not freaking out under pressure, Lentz said. “We learned something,” he said about the 2000 firestorm. “The fire burns everybody.” In the evening, I'm like a first-time smoker. I notice it also with my kids. The lesson in any emergency is adaptability. That's a lot to ask for many valley residents who fear, without hearing definitely otherwise, that the fire center will go through their expensive homes.

Residents especially in west Ketchum and north of Sun

Two-year-old Luca Martineo, whose father is a firefighter in Halley, spends time with his mother, Anna, Friday at the Joint Information Center at City Hall in Ketchum.

Valley have called the joint information center located at City Hall demanding concrete answers, which don't exist.

Some second-home residents have cut their summers in Sun Valley short, said Carol Waller, executive director of the Sun Valley and Ketchum Chamber and Visitors Bureau. “They usually stay into September,” Waller said. “That's having a pretty significant local impact.” Tourists with imminent hotel reservations are still shocking hotel clerks with their phone calls of confirmation: many haven't heard about the fire.

“Of course, we have an ethical duty to tell them,” Waller said. The Ketchum downtown looks like it's hardly taken a hit. The Kneadery restaurant in downtown still had a 15-minute wait Friday morning. Some tourists are cancelling their reservations, which leaves a fair amount of empty bed space, Waller said. Nor Marian Hertz, of Brooklyn, N.Y., who serenely rides her bike west along Warm Springs Road. Only a burrito at Gates Road blocks her from piercing deep or into the origins of the smoke, which condenses deeper as one travels west along this road.

“This is nothing — I'm from New York,” she said, half-jokingly. Her float down the Middle Fork, which she reserved several months in advance, was canceled. So instead, the 50-year-old spent five days rafting the lower Salmon stretch. That didn't bother her much. “Nor did it bother her bike-riding from Bellevue to Ketchum Thursday morning with visibility so obscured she could not see the mountains that flank the valley. An Air National Guardsman blocking her at the gate agreed the smoke's no big deal. Then he compared it to Iraq, which he left four weeks ago, definitely one-upping Hertz's New York comparison.

“If you directed to put on your (gas mask) that we do it,” said Master Sgt. Mark Klautz, who has been a smoker since he was 12 years old. “The sandstorms were a lot worse over there than the smoke over here. All of a sudden, these walls of sand are coming at you. It's real nasty.”

His comparison might not make the Wood River Valley sound like a great late-summer destination. But his attitude, an echo of the rest of the town's adaptability may explain the hold-out here of this smoke-stricken place. “The town is not closed,” Waller said. “Other than the smoke in the air you wouldn't know anything's going on.” But rather than run from the smoke and the 1,250 firefighters the Castle Rock-Fire has brought with it, the city is throwing a party for them. The Coors Light BaseCamp Music Experience — a three-night concert series that will bring big names to downtown the possibility of a mandatory evacuation Sunday. Until then, they are reshaping their vacation around the fire — taking fewer hikes — but staying in Ketchum. By morning, they keep their windows closed.

On Friday evening, they sit outside Tully's Coffee sipping leisurely in what feels and smells like clean air. Whether there's smoke next weekend or not will not likely bother the guests of honor, who can be identified by what they're wearing: either Castle Rock Fire 2007 t-shirts — supplied free by the concert producer — or smoky faces and tarnished firefighting gear.

Fire

Continued from page A1 operations by 1 a.m. today. “The fire acreage is increasing primarily due to the burnouts, said incident commander Jeanne Pincha-Tulley.

Acreage burned Friday was 18,005, with only 11 percent containment. About 1,250 firefighters were battling the blaze, along with 72 engines and a number of helicopters and fixed-wing tankers.

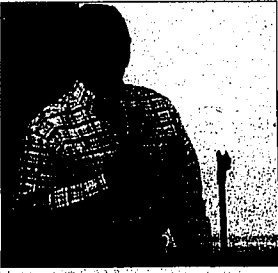

Burnouts in the Warm Springs/Upper Board Hatch Friday afternoon showed operations moving as planned. Griffin Butte, behind Helen Meadows, showed several plumes of smoke and an occasional tongue of fire from torched trees, visible Friday at riders from a viewpoint on Eagle Creek Road. While crews battled the blazes, Gov. C.L. “Butch” Otter received a standing ovation for an apology he made at a public meeting at Hemingway Elementary School. More than 300 Wood River Valley residents attended the meeting.

“I want to give an apology from my office. We did not realize the urgency until some time on Tuesday and until I received the seven plus calls from Sen. Clit Stennet that morning,” Otter said.

“Again, I apologize for not knowing the necessity of needing deployment of fire crews.”

Tray Spaulding and Kathleen Turner from the Wood River Journal contributed to this report.

Gov. C.L. “Butch” Otter received a standing ovation at a public meeting in Ketchum after apologizing for the state's slow response to the Castle Rock Fire.

Birth

Continued from page A1 could raise the rate, said Donna Hoyer, a health scientist with the National Center for Health Statistics. The rate is the number of deaths per 100,000 live births.

In 2003, there was a change in death certificate questions in the nation's most populous state, California, as well as Montana and Idaho. That may have resulted in more deaths being linked to childbirth enough to push up the 2003 rate, Hoyer said.

Some researchers point to the rising C-section rate, now 29 percent of all births — far higher than what public health experts say is appropriate. Like other surgeries, Caesareans come with risks related to anesthesia, infections and blood clots. “There's an inherent risk to C-sections,” said Dr. Elliott Man, who co-chairs a panel reviewing obstetrics care in California. “As you do obstetrics, you are increasing the risk of them, there's going to be a price.” Excessive bleeding is one of the leading causes of pregnancy-related death, and women with several previous C-sections are at especially high risk, according to a review of maternal deaths in New York. Blood vessel blockages and infections are among the other leading causes.

Experts also say obesity may be a factor. Heavier women are more prone to diabetes and other complications, and they may have excess tissue and larger babies that make a vaginal delivery more problematic. That can lead to more C-sections. “It becomes this sort of snowball effect,” said King, who is now medical director of maternal-fetal medicine at Riverside Methodist Hospital in Columbus, Ohio.

Judge refuses to halt Noriega's extradition to France on money laundering accusations

MIAMI (AP) — A judge refused Friday to block the extradition of former Panamanian dictator Manuel Noriega to France, where he is accused of laundering millions of dollars in drug proceeds through French banks.

Senior U.S. District Judge William Hoeweler rejected arguments by Noriega's lawyers that his status as a U.S. prisoner of war negated the Geneva Conventions and required his return home to Panama.

The decision, which could be appealed, means a hearing before another judge will go forward Tuesday on the extradition request.

Hoeweler, in a 12-page decision, said his designation of Noriega, 72, as a prisoner of war following his 1992 conviction was meant to ensure that he was treated as one while incarcerated.

"This court never meant for the proclamation of defendant as a POW to shield him from all future prosecutions for serious crimes he is alleged to have committed," Hoeweler wrote. "It appears that the extradition proceedings should proceed uninterrupted."

Noriega, 72, is to be released from a U.S. prison Sept. 9 after serving 15 years for drug trafficking and racketeering. He faces up to 10 more years in prison in France. His lawyer, Frank Rubino, said Friday that his client was "very disappointed, very displeased" by the ruling but had made no decisions about an appeal.

"It was hoping the judge would have done the right thing and sent him back to his home country," Rubino said.

Rubino said Noriega would likely remain in custody after his prison sentence ends, while the extradition process goes forward. "The process could take as long as a year," Rubino said, adding that he might appeal for United Nations intervention, using the POW issue as a basis.

A French Justice Ministry spokesman, speaking on condition of anonymity according to agency rules, said it was too early to say what would happen if Noriega is again convicted — whether he would serve his term in France or be sent back to Panama.

Man who abducted, raped 9-year-old girl, then buried her alive, sentenced to die in Florida

By Mitch Stacy
Associated Press Writer

INVENESS, Fla. — A convicted sex offender was sentenced Friday to death for kidnapping 9-year-old Jessica Lunsford, raping her and burying her alive in his yard.

John Evander Couey looked straight ahead as Circuit Judge Ric Howard told him he should be executed for the 2005 crimes that led to new laws in many states cracking down on convicted sex offenders. Sheriff's deputies hustled the handcuffed inmate out of the crowded courtroom.

The girl's father, Mark Lunsford, stood up as he listened to the judge read a detailed history of the case for nearly an hour. He hugged relatives after the sentence was read.

Outside court, Lunsford had a message for Couey: "Skip all these appeals. Take your punishment. Stand up and be a man."

The jury that convicted Couey in March recommended 10-2 that he die for his crimes, but the decision was left to Howard.

An attorney for Couey, 49, had argued that he couldn't legally be executed because he is mentally retarded, but Howard brushed aside that claim in a strongly worded ruling earlier this month. Mentally retarded people cannot be executed under a 2002 U.S. Supreme Court decision.

The jury convicted Couey of taking the girl in February 2005 from her bedroom to his nearby trailer, sparking a massive search. The third-grader's body was found about three weeks after she disappeared in a grave in Couey's yard, about 150 yards from her own home.

Couey, already a convicted sex offender when he committed the crime, was arrested in Georgia and confessed to the killing. That confession was thrown out as evidence because Couey did not have a lawyer present.

Despite the confession being tossed, Couey incriminated himself other times. Jail guards and investigators testified that he repeatedly admitted details of the slaying after his arrest.

Ex-astronaut Nowak apologizes to love triangle rival, former astronaut flame after tense day

By Travis Reed
Associated Press writer

ORLANDO, Fla. — Lisa Nowak faced her romantic rival in court Friday during a tense day in the NASA love triangle case that was capped with the ex-astronaut apologizing to the other woman for "frightening her in any way."

It was their first exchange of words and looks since Nowak was arrested and charged with trying to pepper spray and kidnap Colleen Shipman after a frantic 1,000-mile drive to confront her over their shared feelings for another astronaut.

"The past six months have been very difficult for me, my family and others close to me," a hailing Nowak said after a five-hour hearing in which her lawyers sought to remove the ankle bracelet that tracks her movements and block some of the evidence collected during her arrest.

"I know that it must have also been very hard for Colleen Shipman, and I would like her to know how very sorry I am about having frightened her in any way and about the subsequent public harassment that has besetged all of us."

Shipman had her attorney read a statement during the hearing and hadn't planned to speak, but Nowak's lawyers persuaded Circuit Judge Marc L. Lubet to make her testify.

Speaking firmly and tersely, Shipman, an Air Force captain, said she is still afraid of Nowak and that the incident is one of the only things that makes her feel safe.

Under questioning from Nowak attorney Donald Lytkabak, Shipman acknowledged that she had visited her boyfriend in Nowak's hometown of Houston several times since Nowak's arrest. She didn't say if that boyfriend was space shuttle pilot Bill Oefelein, who had a romantic relationship with both women.

Nowak, a 44-year-old mother of three who has been dismissed by NASA, has pleaded not guilty to charges of attempted kidnapping, battery and burglary with assault.

Reputed Klansman sentenced for 1964 kidnapping deaths

An unidentified Madison County Sheriff's Department deputy escorts reputed Ku Klux Klansman James Ford Seale to the federal courthouse, Friday in Jackson, Miss., for sentencing in the deadly abductions of two black teenagers in 1964.

By Emily Wagner Pettus
Associated Press writer

JACKSON, Miss. — Reputed Ku Klux Klansman James Ford Seale showed no emotion Friday as he was sentenced to three life terms in prison for his role in the segregation-era abduction and killing of two black teenagers.

Seale, 72, was convicted June 14 on federal charges of kidnapping and conspiracy in the deaths of Charles Eddie Moore and Henry Hefezkiah Dee, two 19-year-olds who disappeared May 2, 1964. Seale and other Klansman beat them, then dumped them into the Mississippi River still alive, according to testimony.

The young men's decomposing bodies, mostly just skeletal remains, were found more than two months later in a river backwater. No one was ever convicted in the case — until now.

U.S. District Judge Henry T. Wingate told Seale the crimes for which he was convicted were "horrific" and "unspeakable." Though the crimes occurred 43 years ago, "justice itself is ageless," Wingate said. The judge denied Seale's request to allow Seale go free on bond while his case is appealed; federal public defender Kathy Nester filed a notice of appeal.

"Mr. Seale maintains his innocence to this crime," Nester said.

During the hearing, one of Deke's sisters and Moore's brother talked about how the violent deaths affected them and their families.

"I don't have no hate in my heart, but I'm happy for justice," said Deke's sister Thelma Collins of Springfield, La.

Thomas Moore of Colorado Springs, Colo., read from a prepared statement directed at Seale.

"I hope you perhaps spend the rest of your natural life in prison thinking of what you did to Charles Moore and Henry Dee and how you ran for a long time but you got caught," he said. "I hope the spirit of Charles and Henry come to your cell every night and visit with you to teach you what is meant by love of your fellow man."

Both of the relatives stood about 10 feet from Seale, but he never made eye contact with them.

Asked by Wingate whether he had anything to say, Seale — who wore an orange jail jumpsuit and was shackled at his wrists, ankles and hands — stood, shook his head and said, "No."

Wingate agreed to assign Seale to a prison where his health needs can be met. He has cancer, bone spurs and other health problems.

The jury of eight whites and four blacks took two hours in June to reach the unanimous verdicts to convict Seale.

The prosecution's star witness was Charles Marcus Edwards, a confessed Klansman who received immunity from prosecution for his admitted role in the abductions and his testimony.

Northern Illinois tries to hold off flood waters

PROSPECT HEIGHTS, Ill. (AP) — More rain pushed flood waters higher in northern Illinois on Friday, threatening further havoc in a region where days of torrential thunderstorms have swamped thousands of homes and left hundreds of thousands of people without electricity.

In this Chicago suburb, about 300 people piled sandbags against 4-foot-high concrete barriers, aided by backhoes and bulldozers, but they didn't know whether it would be enough to hold back the rising Des Plaines River.

"It's just getting worse," Fire Chief Don Gould said. "All these people will be flooded out if we don't move quick."

A storm carrying heavy rain and high winds Thursday knocked down thousands of trees and tree limbs around metropolitan Chicago and left more than half a million utility customers without power. About 173,000 remained without electricity Friday night, said ComEd spokeswoman Anne Prammangott.

In Dyer, Ind., southeast of Chicago, authorities began evacuating St. Margaret Mercy Hospital as water from a creek behind the building began seeping in. About 70 patients were being moved to other hospitals, spokeswoman Maria Ramos said. Authorities cut power to the hospital as a precaution, and police and firefighters went door to door in Dyer telling people to leave.

Parts of Ohio, Wisconsin and Minnesota, meanwhile, continued cleaning up after earlier flooding. Nearly a week of storms, rain and flooding across the Upper Midwest has been blamed for at least 17 deaths.

CSI's in the catbird seat among Idaho colleges

CHEERS: To the College of Southern Idaho, for a great report, card.

CSI President Jerry Beck's "State of the College" presentation earlier this week showed that the school is in a weakened position compared to Idaho's other institutions of higher learning.

- CSI has the lowest tuition and fees in the state.
- The school has a smaller backlog of deferred maintenance than the state's other colleges.
- This year's accreditation report from Northwest Association on Colleges and Universities commended CSI on six items, ranging from fiscal responsibility to the campus climate, and had no recommendations for change.
- Dual-enrollment and online learning programs are thriving, and online classes are CSI fastest-growing area.
- A student-engagement survey held last spring listed 12 items that CSI students rated above average and none that students ranked lower.

It's a great way to go, but arguably the Magic Valley's most important asset.

JEERS: To Gov. Hatch Otter, for being slow on the uptake in responding to the seriousness of the Castle Rock Fire north and west of Ketchum.

It took five calls to the governor's cell phone on Tuesday to state Sen. Clint Stennett, D-Ketchum, get Otter's attention. Earlier, Stennett had been told by firefighters that they needed more equipment to control the blaze, and he tried to reach Otter and Sens. Larry Craig, Mike Crapo, and John Kerry in an effort to get it.

Otter told the Wood River Journal on Wednesday that it wasn't until mid-afternoon the day before that he learned of the fire. He then tried to request more assistance for firefighters. At that point, Castle Rock had burned 14,000 acres.

What's more, the governor had declined mandatory evacuation orders near Ketchum last Sunday. If that wasn't a red flag, we can't imagine what would be.

Otter said Wednesday that the Blaine County fire was the nation's top firefighting priority. About time.

CHEERS: To Democratic U.S. Senate candidate Larry LaRooco, for becoming the Mike Rowe of Idaho.

Rowe, of course, is the host of "Dirty Jobs" on cable television's Discovery Channel. He scours the landscape for America's messiest occupations and spends a day doing each of them.

LaRooco hasn't cleaned any sewer drains — but he spent a morning last week balling hay and moving pipe on Tom Holsch farm near Idaho Falls. Previously, he had made cheese at Granby Foods' Twin Falls plant and hauled garbage in Orofino.

All of that is part of LaRooco's Working for the Senate Campaign, which he hopes will propel him into contention with Sen. Larry Craig, R-Idaho, if Craig fails to re-election next year. If not, LaRooco may face Republican Lt. Gov. Jim Risch for the second time in two years (LaRooco unsuccessfully challenged Risch in 2006). Risch is considering a Senate bid.

The former congressman's tour of blue-collar jobs in Idaho is a gimmick of course, but it's a honest one. Still, is he committed enough to tackle a day in a sugar factory or a morning denning out snails at a dairy? Guess we'll see how much he wants to get elected.

JEERS: To Idaho Falls Mayor Jared Fuhrman for not cleaning out his closet.

Fuhrman's 19-year-old son,

Peyton, was arrested on Aug. 12 and charged with possession of drug paraphernalia with intent to use a misdemeanor in Idaho.

One of Peyton's co-defendants, Aaron Bader, told detectives that the bong allegedly in their possession came from the mayor's house.

The elder Fuhrman, an ex-cop, explained that he kept boxes of marijuana pipes and other drug gear in a storage room at his home. They're left over, the mayor explained, from his previous job as coordinator of drug abuse education and prevention programs for the Idaho Falls Police Department.

"Frankly, I was sick about it," the mayor told the Post-Register.

Bonneville County Prosecutor Dave Watkins declined to prosecute Bader, explaining that he couldn't prove the mayor intended to use the paraphernalia to smoke dope.

We're guessing that anyone else caught with 15 marijuana pipes in his closet wouldn't get the same consideration.

U.S. troop surge in Iraq must continue

After months of surreality, the Iraq debate has quite recently acquired a relationship to reality. Following the Democratic victory last November, panicked public commentators began riffling the thesaurus to find exactly the right phrase to express exactly the right nuance to establish exactly the right distance from the president's Iraq policy, while Murtha Democrats searched for exactly the right legislative rise to force a retreat from Iraq without appearing to do so.

There will, of course, be the Harry Reid's and those out there who will deny inconvenient reality. They will continue to call the surge a failure, as he has since even before it began. And the left will continue to portray Gen. David Petraeus as an unscrupulous commander quite prepared to send his troops into a hopeless battle in order to advance his political ambitions (although exactly how that works is not clear).

But the serious voices will prevail. When Democratic presidential front-runner concedes that the surge "is working" (albeit very late) against the insurgency, and when Petraeus himself concedes that the surge cannot continue indefinitely, making inevitable a drawdown of troops some time in the middle of next year, the terms of the Iraq debate become narrow and the policy question simple: What do we do right now — continue the surge or cut it short and begin withdrawal?

Serious people like Levin argue that with a nonfenceable military presence in Baghdad government, we can never achieve national reconciliation.

Thus the current military success will prove ephemeral.

The problem with this argument is that it confuses long term and short term. It is the longer run success that will be a national unity government. But in the shorter term, our assumption that a national unity government is required to paralyze the Iraqi insurgency turned out to be false. The Sunnis have turned against al-Qaida and are gradually switching sides in the absence of any oil, federalism or de-Baathification deal coming out of Baghdad.

In the interim, the surge is advancing our two immediate objectives in Iraq: (a) to defeat al-Qaida in Iraq and prevent the emergence of an al-Qaida mini-state, and (b) to pacify the Sunni insurgency, which began the post-liberation downward spiral of sectarian bloodshed, economic stagnation, and aborted reconstruction.

Repeating the Malik government will take time and because there is no guarantee of ultimate political success.

Nevertheless, continuing the surge while finally trying to change the central government is the most rational choice because the only alternative is defeat — a defeat that is not at all inevitable and would be both catastrophic and self-inflicted.

Bush's next invasion: Vietnam?

Re-invade Vietnam! Oh yes. You thought the Bush administration was fresh out of ideas? You thought that with Karl Rove leaving, the administration that brought us the war in Iraq and "Mission Accomplished" had no more tricks up its sleeve? Think again.

On Wednesday, speaking before a Veterans of Foreign Wars audience, President Bush did something he had previously avoided: He announced the Iraq war with the Vietnam War, agreeing that Vietnam does hold lessons for U.S. policy in Iraq.

ROSA BROOKS

Can't argue with that. For most Americans, the lessons of Vietnam were reasonably clear before we invaded Iraq and have been painfully reinforced by the ongoing disaster there.

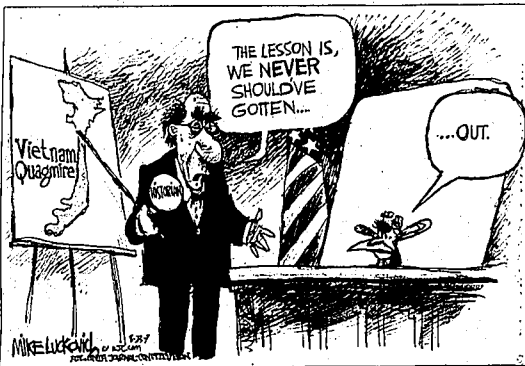

Don't fight needless wars; don't go blundering around in countries where you don't know the language, history or culture; don't underestimate the power of nationalism, ethnicity and religion to bind together — or tear apart — people whose interests otherwise diverge; and, most of all, don't imagine that military force can solve fundamentally political problems.

But as president, who has his own very special set of history books, drew the public's attention to some entirely different lessons from Vietnam.

But there are two other lessons of Vietnam that is the price of America's withdrawal was paid by millions of innocent civilians.

The first is Bush, the tragedy of the Vietnam War is that we did not let it drag on for another decade or so.

Some people might quibble with Bush's understanding of historical causation. Yes, many innocent civilians suffered in the aftermath of the U.S. withdrawal from Vietnam — but it's more accurate to attribute that suffering to the prolongation of the war itself, rather than to the U.S. withdrawal as such.

It's hard to be precise as is the case in Iraq today, no one knows how many of the Vietnamese civilian casualties, and all sides in the conflict had an incentive to fudge the true figures), but somewhere between 1 million and 4 million civilians died as the war needlessly dragged on, many killed by U.S. weapons. Millions more were displaced. But these are details.

Bush went on to assert that "another price to our withdrawal from Vietnam (was the rise of) the enemy we face in today's struggle, those who came to our soil and killed thousands of our citizens" on Sept. 11.

Put it — It's so obvious! The U.S. withdrawal from Vietnam caused the rise of al-Qaida — and, by extension, "our withdrawal from Vietnam" ultimately turned Iraq into "the central front (in) the war on terror."

Once you're in the right frame of mind — the right frame of mind, I should say — the logic becomes blindingly clear.

Step 1: In 1975, the Vietnam War ended and young Osama Bin Laden, 18, saw that the mighty U.S. could be brought low and that an unhappy citizenry could push a democratically elected government to end an unpopular war.

Step 2: Hmmm. This step is a little tougher. Al-Qaida attacked the U.S. on Sept. 11. Then B in Laden, bearing the U.S. withdrawal from Vietnam constantly in mind, um... somehow tickled us into going to war in Iraq... where al-Qaida had no presence before the U.S. invasion... because he knew we'd make a mess of things... and that al-Qaida could move in while we were bogged down fighting insurgents... and bog us down even more?

Something like that.

And from there, we easily reach Step 3: We are stuck in a quagmire in Iraq, just as in Vietnam! Millions of civilians are paying the price for U.S. over-reaction — just as in Vietnam! Our credibility is suffering — just as in Vietnam! The American public has lost faith in the war — just as in Vietnam! Bin Laden is happy to see us brought low — just as in Vietnam! If we leave, more bad things may happen, and B in Laden will also be happy — just as in Vietnam!

Step 4: Therefore, as the president explained Wednesday, we must stay in Iraq forever, until every last terrorist or every last Iraqi civilian is dead, wherever comes first.

But Bush forgot to mention Step 5, which follows logically from Steps 1 to 4.

How can we show the innocent civilians of Southeast Asia that we haven't forgotten them and simultaneously send a message of resolve to the Iraqi people? How can we show al-Qaida once and for all that the U.S. is not to be trifled with?

It's time for Step 5: Re-invade Vietnam.

Because no matter what they say — it's never too late to repeat the mistakes of the past.

CHARLES KRAUTHAMMER

In the last month, however, as a consensus has emerged about realities on the ground in Iraq, a reasoned debate has begun. A number of fair-minded observers, both critics and supporters of the war, agree that the surge has yielded considerable military progress, while at the national political level the Maliki government remains a disaster.

The latest report from the battlefield is from Carl Levin, Democratic chairman of the Senate Armed Services Committee and a strong Iraq War critic. He summed saying essentially what we have heard from Michael O'Hanlon and Kenneth Pollack of the Brookings Institution and various liberal congressmen, the latest being Brian Baird, D-Wash.: al-Qaida has been seriously set back as Sunni tribal leaders in Anbar, Diyala and other provinces switched from the insurgency to our side.

As critics acknowledge military improvement, the administration is finally beginning to concede the political reality that the Maliki government is hopeless. Bush's own national security adviser has said as much in a leaked memo back in November. I and others have been arguing that for months. And when Levin returned and openly called for the Iraq Parliament to vote out the Maliki government, the president pointedly refused to comment.

This convergence about the actual situation in Baghdad will take some of the drama out of the highly anticipated Petraeus moment next month. We know what the general and Ambassador Ryan Crocker are going to say when they testify before Congress because multiple sources have already told us what is happening on the ground.

Wendell Elementary benefits from sponsors

Students from our classroom at Wendell Elementary School are being given an opportunity to compete for prizes in a summer reading contest through the help of some generous sponsors. The contest is an effort to encourage our fourth-graders to continue to read and learn during the summer vacation.

We wish to thank Magic Valley Mall and The Arcade, Bowladrome, Interstate Amusement, Faulkner Planetarium, Skateland, and Barnes and Noble, all of Twin Falls; Cedar Lanes in Filer; Short's Riding School, the Wendell Snack Bar and the Wendell Swimming Pool in Wendell; and Jerome Bowl. Without them, it would be difficult to offer tangible incentives to make the contest fun and intriguing for students.

The support of these sponsors, participating students will likely maintain their reading skills and not be among those children who lose ground educationally during the summer months.

Dealership stands behind its word

I recently purchased a new 2007 Toyota Tundra from Wills Toyota. I received the vehicle and went home very happy with the dealership and sales people.

Upon closer inspection, I found a special-order item that was not as I ordered and no help dealing with Toyota's Company. I took my complaint to my local dealership.

I received a call from the owners of Wills Toyota and they advised that Toyota USA would not correct my problem or request, but that they "Wills" would pay for the correction. I was requesting.

Did Wills have to spend hundreds of dollars after the sales was done? Maybe not, but the company stands behind its word that it does not have a no huck dealing with Toyota's sale. It indeed has a commitment to the customer after the sale.

U.S. fighter jet kills 3 British soldiers, wounds 2 in Afghanistan

By Chris Brummitt
Associated Press writer

KABUL, Afghanistan — A U.S. warplane mistakenly dropped a 500-pound bomb on British troops after they called for air support in Afghanistan, killing three soldiers and seriously wounding two others in an accident that could re-ignite debate about America's heavy use of air power.

Friendly fire involving U.S. troops has led to the deaths of three British servicemen in the current Iraq war, but the incident Thursday night was the first confirmed case between the two forces in Afghanistan. British officials said they were investigating the error, which comes amid growing concerns about civilian deaths from U.S. airstrikes.

The troops were patrolling northwest of Kajaki, a militant hotspot in southern Helmand province, when they were attacked by Taliban fighters. Britain's Ministry of Defense said in a statement.

"During the intense engagement that ensued, close air support was called in from two U.S. F15 aircraft to repel the enemy. One bomb was dropped and it is believed the explosion killed the three soldiers," it said.

In Washington, a Pentagon official said initial reports were that the airstrike was called in by a British forward air controller. The forward controller is usually the person on the ground, who has the target area in sight and directs an aircraft to attack, giving target coordinates and ensuring that friendly forces are not in the way.

U.S. troops battle gunmen in Baghdad, killing 18

By Carol J. Williams
Los Angeles Times

BAGHDAD, Iraq — U.S. forces firing from helicopters pursued armed militants loyal to a radical anti-American Shiite cleric into a western Baghdad slum Friday, killing at least 18 people, reportedly including some civilians.

Meanwhile, as a counterinsurgency campaign continues to target suspected sanctuaries of gunmen and bomb-builders, a senior U.S. commander in Iraq dismissed calls to reduce the number of troops, saying it would be a "glide step backwards." Maj. Gen. Rick Lynch, who commands more than a third of the 30,000 additional troops deployed to Iraq in recent months, contradicted a call from a prominent Republican senator for Bush to begin reducing troops.

U.S.-led forces said the precision raid Friday on the capital's Shula district was in response to an insurgent attack on a U.S. patrol in the area. But residents said the U.S. helicopter attack caught many in the Shiite community controlled by Muqtada al-Sadr's Al Mahdi Army asleep on their roofs, where they go to escape the stifling heat of apartments that get only an hour or two of electricity each day.

Hospital officials reported two women's bodies among those brought to two area morgues, and an al-Sadr spokesman said four women were among the dead. Angry relatives and neighbors of the killed and injured vowed retribution as they carried the victims' coffins through the teeming streets.

Al-Sadr, whom U.S. military leaders accuse of directing death squads and a campaign of harassment against U.S. troops in Iraq, denounced the air attacks and called on supporters to stage protests across the country.

The U.S. assault "resulted in killing 20 civilians including women, children and elderly and injuring tens more, some in critical condition," charged Nassar Rubeil, head of the al-Sadr parliamentary bloc.

The incident has to be carefully investigated to try to learn where the problem arose, the official said on condition of anonymity because he was not authorized to speak on the record. That is, officials have to try to determine whether the human error, either by the troops calling in the coordinates for the airstrike or by pilots dropping the bomb, was behind the accident. They will also need to examine whether equipment failure, either in the ground or in the air, was a factor.

"There are a handful of different reasons why this tragic incident has happened and we are not in a position at the moment and I don't think we will be for some time to find out exactly what has happened," said a spokesman for British troops in Helmand, Lt.

Col. Charlie Mayo. British Defense Secretary Des Browne declined to speculate on the cause of the friendly fire, which took place about 6:30 p.m. But he said he did not want "to get into a situation where we are blaming each other."

"As a matter of fact, U.S. air support has saved our people's lives on many, many occasions, particularly over the last four months in that very theater," he told Sky News. "The nature of this war-fighting is such that there are comparatively small margins of error involved."

The British soldiers were traveling through typical Afghan terrain — semi-agricultural, with many ditches and walled compounds where insurgents can hide — when they came under attack, the British army said. It was unclear whether the soldiers were on foot or traveling in a vehicle.

Kurt Volker, principal deputy assistant secretary of state for European and Eurasian affairs, said the United States was deeply saddened by the deaths.

"We offer our heartfelt condolences to the families and loved ones of the soldiers who died, and we wish those who were injured a speedy recovery," he said in a statement.

E. Idaho teen killers earn life sentences

Draper convicted by Twin Falls jury

POCATELLO (AP) — Two teenagers convicted of killing a high school classmate in eastern Idaho have been sentenced to life in prison without parole.

Brian Draper and Torey Adamcik were sentenced Friday by 6th District Court Judge Peter D. McDermott. Each received life sentences for first-degree murder and 30 years-to-life for conspiracy to commit first-degree murder.

Draper

Adamcik

Draper and Adamcik were convicted in separate trials earlier this year in the slaying of 16-year-old Cassidy Jo Stoddard. Draper was convicted by a jury drawn from Twin Falls County. The trial was moved from Pocatello when defense attorneys argued Draper would not get a fair trial in Bannock County.

They were arrested last Sept. 27, five days after investigators say Stoddard was stabbed as many as 30 times while hapless, existing for relatives in north-east Bannock County.

All three were 16-year-old juniors at Pocatello High School at the time. Draper and Adamcik are now 17.

Mark Hiedeman, Bannock County prosecuting attorney, said the motive for the killing was that Draper and Adamcik wanted to be famous.

"They wanted to be famous like other serial killers and kill as many people as they could before they were caught," Hiedeman told The Associated Press on Friday. "And they wanted to both know how it felt to actually kill someone."

Mum's the word on health summit — for now

By Neta Poppino
Times-News writer

JEROME — Idaho Gov. C.L. "Butch" Otter's health care summit may be over, but those who participated aren't letting much slip out.

That's fine with state Rep. Machine Bell, R-Jerome, who said he's content to let Otter announce the highlights of the summit after he's had time to review them.

Otter won't likely get to the notes from the two-day gathering of more than 40 health professionals, legislators, small-business owners and others until at least Tuesday, spokesman Jon Hmlinar said.

Any discussion before that could drag the public conversation off-course, said Bell, who co-chairs the Joint Finance-Appropriations Committee.

"If some of us kind of pop out with this point and this point, they might not even be the ones he chooses," Bell said from her home.

Topics at the summit — which was largely closed to the public and media — ranged from access to health

DECORATING BUHL

Trout sculpture begins to take shape

By Blair Koch
Times-News correspondent

BUHL — Traveling into the center of Buhl, a person familiar with the city can't help but see that something is different.

The first pieces of the city's long-awaited trout sculpture were hung Thursday on the north face of the West End Senior Center building. The art work completes the city's Legacy Corner — the intersection of Broadway Avenue and Main Street — which has already been adorned with a masonry wall and clock.

The sculptors epitomize the labor behind the project that began years ago.

"This is the Centennial Committee's legacy project," said Holly Langdon, committee co-chair. "It's very exciting to see what started as a concept taking form for Buhl. This captures our architectural heritage and, hopefully, it will be appreciated by the community for years to come."

The city, which celebrated its centennial last year, had wanted to hang the trout art for the festivities then, but the project was larger than anticipated.

"What people don't get is how big this thing is," Langdon said. "It stands 45 feet tall. The process was, and still is, a huge undertaking."

Crews at Langdon's Inc. have been busy cutting aluminum and fabricating the sculpture — complete with a river's sand bar, cattails and rainbow trout.

"It's fun knowing that not a lot of people get to work on something like this," said welder Ricardo Chavez of Gooding. "When family or friends come to Buhl I can tell them that I worked on it, and that's neat."

Please see BUHL, Page B2

Ricardo Chavez, a Langdon's Inc. employee, works on coloring part of the sculpture, going off University of Idaho art student Cindy Darnell's winning design, shown in the upper right.

A crew began this week the tedious job of hanging the first part of Buhl's legacy trout sculpture, 45 foot tall cattails. The entire sculpture — a river sand bar, cattails and rainbow trout — will be hung by Sept. 15.

Fire causes wagon train to reroute

By Amy Ballard
Times-News correspondent

FAIRFIELD — While other members of the wagon train gathered to rest in the shade Friday at Fairfield City Park, wagon master Jim Super pondered his map.

This is the 10th year the group of wagon drivers and their mules have come together to trek the mountainous road to Ketchum as part of Wagon Days. Something is different this year, however — the road from Dolineh Ridge is closed due to the Castle Rock Fire.

There's no safe way to get the wagon train from here to Ketchum, Super said.

Instead of following the Warm Springs Road to Ketchum, the train will travel to Weir Summit and Warwick Hot Springs, and return to Fairfield on Thursday. The train will then trailer up and take the highway to Ketchum in time for Wagon Days.

For now, Super is keeping in contact with the U.S. Forest Service about updates on the fire and suggestions for travel.

During the group's stop Friday in Fairfield, members enjoyed a dinner and Church oven delights sponsored by the Fairfield Chamber of Commerce and musical entertainment in the park.

Some of the drivers, such as Joe Adams and his wife Glenda, began their journey Aug. 12 at Kellon, Utah, where in the 19th century supplies were sent by wagon to mining camps as far north as Ketchum. Adams has joined the wagon train every year but one.

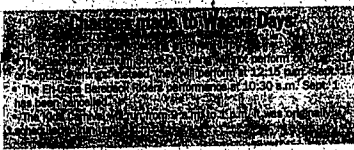

Adams' brother, Joe Adams, came all the way from Dillon, Mont. Others joined the train in Paul.

The travelers kicked back Friday night and swapped jokes, not thinking too hard about the next day's arduous drive. It is this camaraderie that brings them back year after year.

Driver Lloyd Warr summed up his motive for joining the wagon train: "Visiting with the people, meeting old friends, and meeting new friends," he said.

Heyburn may trash courtesy dumpster because of abuse

By Sven Berg
For the Times-News

HEYBURN — It always seems to happen to a good idea — it works for a while, most people appreciate the good it's doing, then someone has to abuse it and soon the good idea ends up costing everyone.

About a year ago, Heyburn officials stationed a special trash receptacle plant hoping residents would use it to clean up some of the tree limbs, wood and other large garbage items that were clogging the city's alleys.

The bin was free and open to the public. All that was asked was that certain items, such as tires, batteries, cement and appliances, not be dumped there.

A complaint would crush the garbage until the container was full, then Public Works Director Ralph Martini would call the county landfill to have the bin hauled away and replaced with an empty one.

For a while, it worked. People were using the container to clean up the alleys.

"It does eliminate a lot of the trash in the alleys, and that's all we were looking for," City Superintendent

Scott Spenak said.

But this month, when the city received its bill from the landfill, there were some additional charges on it — to the tune of about $500. It seems someone decided using the bin to dispose of tires, cement, batteries — basically all the things people were asked not to throw in it — would be a good idea.

And so the receptacle was taken away — a victim of irresponsibility.

At the city council meeting Wednesday, officials agreed to bring back the container one more time. Spenak said having the waste bin available has served its purpose, but it is unfair for city residents to subsidize the few who dump prohibited items in it.

"The biggest problem we have is policing it, and the police are helping us," he said. "It may not be Heyburn residents that are doing it. (Martini) has caught people from Bunley and Rupert."

Martini may end up restricting access to the trash bin, so that it can only be used when he or another city employee is on site.

"It's been handy for the citizens, but like I say people have been abusing it," he said.

9th Circuit rejects police search prompted by noise complaint

By Rebecca Boone Associated Press writer

BOISE — A federal appeals court panel has thrown out the conviction of a Nanpana man who was searched by police after a neighbor complained that he was playing his music too loudly.

The ruling, handed down in the 9th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals earlier this week, vacates Justin Wells Grigg's conviction on possession of an unregistered firearm. Grigg was indicted with the crime in U.S. District Court because Nanpana police found an SKS automatic rifle in his car during a so-called investigation to meet nearly three years ago.

The stop happened Sept. 21, 2004, after Grigg's neighbor, Jeffrey Harmel, called police to complain that Grigg had driven by his house with the car stereo turned up too loud.

When Nanpana police officer Orin McLeod and Mike Roeder went to Harmel's house, Harmel couldn't name the "kids" who had been "harassing" him with the loud music, according to the ruling. But Harmel did point out Grigg as the source of the loud music.

At the time, Grigg did not have his music turned up and neither police officer verified Grigg's identity by calling in the license number of his vehicle to get fees for previous complaints or by talking to other people in the neighborhood. Instead, according to the ruling, the officers decided to pull Grigg over and ask him a few questions.

When Grigg pulled over, he started to get out of the car but Roeder told him to stay inside the vehicle. That's when Grigg told the officer that he had a "hunting rifle" inside the car that he was taking to get fixed, according to the court documents.

Roeder then parted down Grigg, arresting him after finding a loaded SKS automatic rifle. Grigg was ultimately indicted by a federal grand jury for possession of an unregistered firearm for the SKS automatic rifle. But shortly after the indictment, Grigg asked the court to find that the police stop and search were unconstitutional.

U.S. District Court Judge B. Lynn Winnill acknowledged that the case was "a very, very close call," but ruled in favor of the government that the police stop was a reasonable method of resolving the noise complaint. A three-judge panel in the 9th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals unanimously disagreed.

The officers should have made some effort to determine if Grigg was even that person they needed to talk to before pulling him over, the court found. Though some situations can justify an "investigatory stop" by police, the court found, stopping a person they assumed was Grigg over a noise complaint was a violation of his privacy rights.

Community rallies around miners' families, proposing independent rescue effort

By Jennifer DeBoer and Jessica Gresko Associated Press writers

HUNTINGTON, Utah — Relatives of six men trapped in the depths of a mountain coal mine were once content to let their mine boss search for them.

But after Bob Murray offended them at several meetings, and now that he has said the rescue efforts will grow more comfortable giving public with their outrage.

Now their community is coming to their aid, putting aside differences and putting up signs in front windows and on sandwich boards outside restaurants, begging the mine owner not to give up.

One group has even floated the long-shot idea of digging a rescue hole of its own.

The federal government, which would have to give approval, has said it isn't going to happen.

But it captures the frustration of a community holding out hope that they can save the miners — or at least recover their bodies — despite appearances that those in power may have given up.

As for an independently dug rescue hole, "I don't think we could entertain that sort of thing," said Allyn Davis, who oversees Western operations for the federal Mine Safety and Health Administration. "It's a safety issue, and I just don't see that as a possibility."

The six men have been missing since the Aug. 8 cave-in at Murray, the Crandall

Canyon Mine co-owner, insists was caused by an earthquake. Seismologists say the mountain is crumbling upon itself, bursting support pillars as it shifts in a phenomenon known as a mountain bump — something that killed three rescuers last week. No one has been allowed into the mine underground since then.

Officials have continued drilling narrow holes into the mountain to lower cameras to look for the men and test for breathable air.

The sixth and final hole should be finished Saturday. If there's no sign of life, the search will likely be called off — the men sealed in the coal mine more than 1,500 feet beneath the surface.

But family and friends of the men have raised their voices, accusing Murray of abandoning a promise to find the men, dead or alive.

Some critics say the use of a hole dug to accommodate a person-size capsule that has been used in other mine rescues to pull people to the surface. But officials say the men are too far down, the mountain too unstable.

So messages of hope blanket store windows. And hardly a night passes without a fundraising event for the families. Late this week, fliers appeared under car windshield wipers, stuffed in mail slots and hung in windows; "Leave No Man Behind," they declared.

It's not clear who is leading the efforts, but the flier called for area residents to come support the rescue and families of our 6 trapped miners' at a gathering Friday night in the nearby town of Helper.

"Community Support is desperately needed drilling the 'Hole' for a Capsule to Continue the Search and Rescue of our miners," it read.

An attorney for the mine company did not immediately comment on the push for a community-led rescue effort.

"It's 'leave no man behind' because people know it could have been them," said Kristen Pottor, a Huntington resident, after she learned of the flier.

The drive is typical of area communities in times of need, she said, adding that she recently attended an auction to raise money for one of the miners' families.

Every time a quilt was won, the person would turn it back in so it could be auctioned again. Some $17,000 was raised.

John Jones, a Helper City Council member, is one of many people in the area wrestling with the balance between continuing the search for the men and guarding the safety of mine rescues.

"Do we take somebody else's father, uncle or grandfather and send them down in that hole and take the chance? If there's a positive ray of hope at all, I would personally go down that hole, and I'm not a coal miner," said Jones, whose center Utah city was losing a benefit auction Friday night. "Everybody on both sides needs peace. It's just how do you give it to them?"

The state panel, Murray does not appear to be able to deliver that comfort.

Board backs off on science test requirement

BOISE (AP) — The Idaho State Board of Education has told school districts to hold off on implementing a requirement that students entering 10th grade this year pass a science test next spring to be able to graduate.

The board on Thursday said it wants school districts to delay any action for two months while Schools Superintendent Tom Luna meets with educators to figure out the best timing for beginning the science test requirement.

Luna, one of the board's members, said requiring this year's 10th-graders to pass the exam wouldn't be fair. The board could make a decision this fall.

Luna said he didn't want to make the test a graduation requirement until teachers and students become better acquainted with the science standards at issue.

"I am heartened they have slowed the process down a little bit," Meridith Schroy, District Superintendent Linda Clark told the Idaho Statesman.

Some school districts had been concerned about preparing students for the exam, which would be based on three years of science education.

Luna said graduation requirements should be available to students in ninth grade. He said he would accept telling the year's ninth-graders they will need to pass the science test to graduate, with their first shot being when they become sophomores.

Idaho uses tests to make sure students have learned enough math, reading and language skills to meet statewide graduation requirements.

The tests begin in 10th grade so that students who are struggling have time to improve and take the tests again later during their high school careers if they fall on the first attempt.

Golden Eagles go 4-0 on first day of season

By Eric Larsen
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — That's how you make a first impression. It's much too early to punch a ticket back to the NCAA National Tournament, but the 2007 College of Southern Idaho volleyball season is off to a roaring start. The sense of urgency, the intimidation factor, and the winning — all things that make Golden Eagles volleyball — were back Friday as CSI swept its quartet of matches at the 2007 CSI Outback Invitational in Twin Falls. The Golden Eagles didn't lose a single game Friday and topped the day off with a convincing 30-24, 30-19 victory over Institute Rural North Idaho College. A balanced attack that was more consistent than that of the Cardinals led CSI past an NIC team that figures on being the Golden Eagles' biggest roadblock in making this season's national tournament. Seven CSI players recorded kills, led by freshman Alyssa Wistrick's eight, and sophomore middle blocker Gabriela Bolawczyk's seven-kill, three-block performance. After struggling to set up a block by the day's first three wins, CSI came up with two solo blocks and 14 block assists against the Cardinals. "We played good tonight," Bolawczyk said. "I think we knew that they were good, had sometimes against a team like that, it makes you concentrate more."

Freshman Santia Sanders added five kills, four aces and six digs, while fellow freshman Nathy Neres dug up seven balls. After spending the bulk of August molding her 14 players into a solitary unit, second-year CSI head coach Heidi Cartisser was generally pleased with what she saw Friday, especially in how her team responded to the handful of tight situations they were placed in. "All together, just the character blew me away," Cartisser said. "Just how they responded. They responded and listened and learned."

Overall, 12 of CSI's 14 players saw action on Friday, including nine of 10 freshmen. Cartisser is hoping the early success has helped with some of the uncertainty a young team faces. Please see CSI, Page C4

Lights out: Minico knocks out Indians

By Ryan How
Times-News correspondent

RUPERT — In Friday's bout of Class 4A heavyweight, Minico threw the knockout punch, upsetting Pocatello 35-34.

Defending state champion Pocatello took its first lead of the game, 34-27, with 7:18 remaining in the fourth quarter, giving quarterback Dane Broadhead and the Minico Spartans plenty of time for a comeback.

"(Broadhead) made the biggest step of his career tonight — and that's winning games late," said Minico coach Tim Perrigo. "It doesn't matter how many yards you throw for or how many records you break if you don't win football games. He stepped up and won a football game for us tonight."

The Spartans started their game-winning drive on their own 20-yard line and rode junior tailback Skyler Morgan into Indians territory. But a pair of sacks on Broadhead appeared to stall the drive.

Faced with fourth-and-19 from the 20 with 1:52 left, Broadhead stepped up in the pocket and drilled Morgan over the middle for the touchdown.

"Poke (Morgan) made a good play. He made a move on their linebackers and he just threw it right down the middle and hard. I have to thank (baseball) coach (Ben) Frank for all those pitching lessons — right down the middle." Offensive coordinator Steve Barnes elected to go for the two-point conversion and the win — a decision that paid off. Broadhead rolled left and found Morgan again to give Minico the one-point lead.

"We didn't want to take the game into overtime. When we scored on fourth down, we had the momentum, so we took a chance," said Broadhead, who went 18-for-25 for 225 yards and two touchdowns. He also ran in a 5-yard touchdown.

"We had a great opportunity to win the football game and we've got a guy (Broadhead) who can pull the trigger," Perrigo said.

Morgan finished with 78 yards rushing on 19 carries and went along with 65 receiving yards on five catches.

"(Morgan) knows now that he's one of the leaders on this team," Broadhead said. "He worked harder than anyone in the offense and he's going to be a stud for us the rest of the year."

Pocatello had a stud of its own in running back Zac McCain. The junior rushed for 115 yards and a touchdown.

The Spartans and Indians traded jabs early as each team tried to get its footing. Broadhead relied on his first four pass attempts, but found a rhythm in Minico's third drive, completing four straight passes to three different receivers. Morgan capped the drive with a 3-yard drive to put Minico up 7-0.

Tigers pass the test

New offense lifts Jerome to 30-0 halftime cushion

By John Derr
Times-News writer

JEROME — New offense. No problem. Eighteen new starters. No problem. Beating Century for the first time ever. Done.

Jerome blitzed through the Diamondback defense for 23 first-quarter points on the way to an impressive 33-7 victory over Century as the football season got off to a great start in J-Town.

"I told them before the game I wasn't sure they were ready. I told them to prove it to me and they did," said Jerome coach Gary Krumm.

The new offense, which features a no-huddle shotgun formation with three or four receivers on every play, was run to near perfection by junior Jake Lammer in his first varsity start.

"The offense is great. We just need to get prepared and be comfortable, game tough tempo 24/7," said Lammer, who was 22-for-29 for 297 yards unofficially. Lammer hit Jason Stokes for 10, Zach Ingraham for 22, and Stokes again for 11 as the Tigers quickly moved the ball down the field to start the game. Stokes ran for 16 yards including the final two as Jerome was on the board less than three minutes into the game.

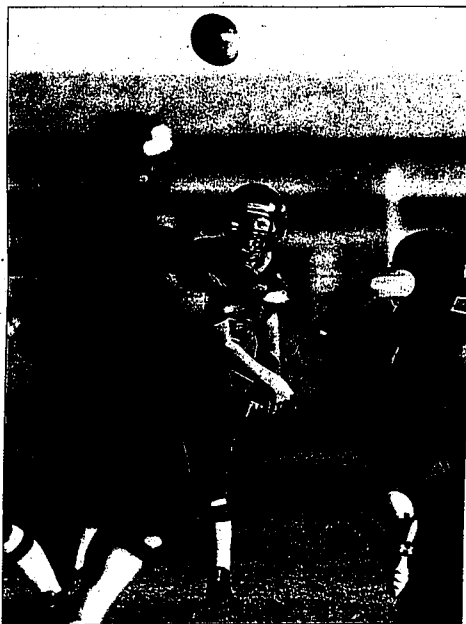

The defense was just as dominating, forcing a three-and-out. The snap went over the punter's head for a safety and the Tigers got the ball right back.

On the first play the Diamondbacks blitzed and Jerome ran the middle screen. Stokes took the ball and rambled 70 yards putting the Tigers up 16-0 just five minutes into the game.

"I only had to break one tackle and it was wide open. Everyone did what they were supposed to do," said Stokes, who finished with 43 yards rushing and 106 receiving. "The offense is easy for us, but hard for the defenses."

As efficient as the offense was, the Jerome defense was simply dominant. They didn't allow a first down until midway through the second quarter and gave up just 48 yards in the first half.

"We didn't want to lose on our home field. We have been practicing what they were going to run for two weeks and we knew we had to step it up," said defensive lineman Casey Stone, who tallied three sacks and forced a fumble.

After Jerome was forced by penalties to punt for the third time, a bad snap punt Century at the Tiger 10. The Diamondbacks didn't gain a yard on the first three tries while a sack by Dany Lasike kept them off the board. The Tigers drove to the goal line in its next possession, but were stopped just short. After a Brett Willigmoit interception, one of three on the night, Jerome wouldn't be stopped again as Justin

Tharp named as BSU starting QB

The Associated Press

BOISE — Boise State coach Chris Petersen announced late Friday that Taylor Tharp will be the starting quarterback in the Broncos' season opener against Weber State on Thursday.

The senior beat out junior Bush Hamdan and sophomore Nick Lomax to get the job.

In two seasons as a backup, Tharp — a typical drop-back passer — completed 32 of 47 passes for 253 yards and two touchdowns.

Last year, backing up Jared Zabransky, he saw limited action in a mop-up role. That season the Broncos went 13-0, won the Fiesta Bowl and finished No. 5 in the final Associated Press poll.

The Broncos enter this season ranked No. 24. Tharp was listed as the starting quarterback when the school released its chart for the Weber State game at Bronco Stadium.

Bruins battle, but fall short against Bulldogs

By Bradley Gaine
Times-News writer

NAMPA — The Twin Falls Bruins were a breath away from just another blowout during the fourth quarter.

"The Nampa Bulldogs had a three-score lead, yet Twin Falls didn't throw in the towel. In fact, they rallied with two scores to threaten the Bulldogs.

It didn't matter. Nampa overpowered to win 34-20 anyway.

Or did it?

Nampa's dominance through much of the third seemed to ignite the Bruins like an independent. Dry sparkler during the fourth quarter, quarterback Bryant Ward connected with Braden Box for a 21-yard touchdown, and linebacker Remington Pullin intercepted Nampa QB Quaid Morris and hauled it back to the Twin Falls

20. From there penalties gave Twin Falls even more ground as it eventually scored on a Ward scramble from 9 yards out.

"It just never felt consistent," Bruins wide receiver Connor Smith said. "But those few drives, it felt awesome. Box ran some great routes."

Box scored twice for Twin Falls and carried 12 times for 89 yards.

It wasn't the only time Ward (15-26-2-167, 2 TDs) scrambled out of the pocket, but it was one of the few times that there was a positive result for the Bruins.

"This still thinking," Bruins head coach Allyn Reynolds said of Ward. "He needs some more experience (with the new system) and to uncover a lot of stuff."

Despite the failed PAT, the Bruins found themselves only a score and a two-point conversion away from tying the game. With three minutes on the clock, it seemed plausible enough for the onside kick.

Unfortunately for the Bruins, Nampa recovered, ate up the clock, and tailback Cole Rivera blasted off for a 35-yard touchdown. It was one of two of Rivera's scores for the game. He rushed 20 times for 183 yards.

"There were some big plays that Cole just blew up on, but it was a total team effort," Nampa's Morris said.

The Bruins had less than 40 ticks on the scoreboard, which weren't enough. Ward tried for the deep pass, but was intercepted on the goal line by R.J. Cole.

What could have turned into a 27-point lead didn't, and

Declo escapes Trojans' upset bid with Bowcut field goal

By David Bashore Times-News writer

WENDELL — Declo place-kicker Blake Whitby had over a hundred of them. The same went for holder Andrew Wheeler. They just hadn't experienced it with the game on the line.

"Some kicker, some holder, some snapper. Some of those naturally are bad snappers." Wheeler and Bowcut put that prediction to rest at the first time of asking this season, to hand their team a hard-fought win.

Wendell recovered three of Declo's five fumbles, while the Hornets picked quarterback Jason Chandler off twice. Declo had the better of the opportunities to score, but continued to shoot themselves in the foot. Twice they fumbled the ball in Trojan territory, including once on second-and-goal from the 1-yard line.

Declo quarterback Tanner Field runs for positive yardage Friday.

Declo finished 10-for-11 for 68 yards. "We had some plays down the middle, every time our tight end got his fingers on it," Chandler said, before wisely adding, "so does."

The Trojans will host Buhl next Friday at 7 p.m. Declo will travel to Aberdeen.

Trailers trashed: M.V. Speedway will be a big hit tonight

By Linda Brittan
Times-News correspondent

TWIN FALLS — The hits just keep on coming at Magic Valley Speedway and this evening there will be more than usual as it always is during the Trailer Race of Destruction makes its final appearance of the year.

Twin Falls resident Dan Hunt and three of his sons — Josh, age 18, Ben, 17 and Ethan, 16 — all take part in the trailer races twice during the season. Dan Hunt has driven in the event since his infancy and has had no problems involving his kids. As soon as each of the boys turned 16 and knew they were eligible to participate, they start working on a car to join their dad in the big event.

"It's a lot more intense than I thought it would be when I was watching in the stands," Ethan said. "It's pretty cool."

Josh adds that it's not easy to finish the race no matter how much you want it.

"You'll be driving along and

The July 3 trailer race at MVS involved 21 cars and trailers and plenty of cleanup time when it all was over.

Meanwhile, as the Whelen

All-American Racing Series rounds turn 4 toward the completion of the 2007 season, the drivers reflect on where they're at in the standings at this point in time and re-evaluate what they need to do to improve their situation.

Jerry McKean has taken over the lead on the Budweiser

Grand Nationals chart, but with just a slim one-point advantage over two-time track champion in the division Louis Lopez. Lopez however, has played the role of underdog previously, coming from behind and capturing the title last season in the final event.

Jonathan Gomez, who captured a main event on Aug. 11, had major mechanical issues last weekend in the qualifying race and despite the pitching in of many hands to get him back on the track for the main event, Gomez did not complete the race.

"The differential locked up and busted all the gears — then it twisted the drive line," Gomez reported. "I really wanted for it to work in the main for everybody who worked so hard to get it back out there, but there was too much damage."

Fortunately Gomez has another ally as former driver Jeff Polhamm stepped up and loaned the No. 12 car to Gomez for the remaining two races.

Also, look for driver of the No. 3 car, Kris McKean, to put together a good event after placing in the runner-up position in the main-event race last time out. McKean has not yet given up on getting a trip to the winner's circle in his rookie year in the series.

NAPA Pony Stocks driver Jason Whited gained two points on Bill Miles as he was first to the checkered flag in the main-event race last weekend, but Miles finished just behind Whited keeping the points loss to a minimum.

"My strategy is to keep Bill (Miles) behind me for the rest of the races," Whited explained from Victory Lane last Saturday.

There is just one race remaining on the schedule after tonight's event, and even though third in the standings Josh Plitz had some ground lost time to the two drivers in the points race ahead of him. Plitz is not out of the loop quite yet certainly with a good finish tonight paired with a suitable by either Whited or Miles.

Not running under the Chase format, Qual's Electronics Queen Bees driver Misty Greco has all but locked up the 2007 title in the division — buzzing right along with a 22-point lead over Alecia Dalton and a 24-point lead over Darcy Harcourt and Charly Hammond who are tied for the third spot. Championship night for the Queen Bees will take place on the last race night of the season, Sept. 15.

The Idaho Six Cylinder Racing League cars will roll into Twin Falls for their final appearance of the year with Bob Bachman, defending main-event winner at MVS, leading the point standings.

Gates open at 4 p.m., qualifying for the Idaho Six Cylinder begins at 6:20 and green flag racing begins at 7:05.

Making a right turn

Go-karts making a splash at MVS

By Linda Brittan
Times-News correspondent

TWIN FALLS — With the addition of a few yards of asphalt to the infield at Magic Valley Speedway, a road course track was born, bringing with it a new venue of racing to the Twin Falls facility.

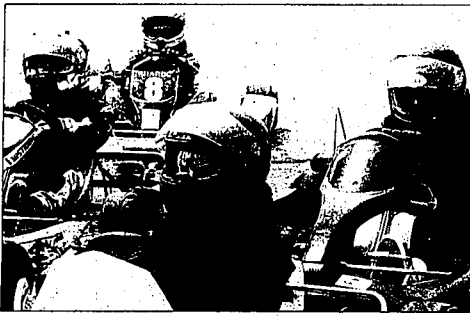

While go-karts have raced in the past at MVS, it has been several years since the vehicles that speed along just inches above the track surface have made an appearance at the local track. In addition, this is the first season a road-course type layout has been available to the drivers, giving them the challenge of negotiating both right and left-hand turns.

John Newhouse has turned many laps at MVS over the years and is currently driving in the Rocky Mountain Challenge series. He helps coordinate the event open to both kids and adults ages 5 and up. The divisions range from the introductory class Kid-Karts for ages 5-8 to the Shifter 125s and are capable of reaching various speeds that match the driver's ability.

"The kid-karts will go anywhere from 30 to 60 mph," Newhouse explained. "But the Shifter karts are capable of speeds of more than 100."

Newhouse said the cost of the kart will vary with the type and newness of the vehicle. "The cost will range from $800 to $5,000, depending on whether it is new or used," he said. "It's available at any kart shop, or you can find them online."

Newhouse, who began his racing career at an early age piloting a go-kart, the idea of creating an interest in racing to the young racing fans was an idea that was very much appealed to him. Additionally, being able to offer the venue year-round between the outdoor track at MVS and the indoor facilities at NAZZKART in Twin Falls also sparked Newhouse's enthusiasm to open up the sport to anyone interested in getting involved.

Go-karts are one of the newest events at Magic Valley Speedway this season, offering racing on the NASCAR sanctioned track to the youngest of drivers.

"For us its more about keeping the racing going. It's something that they can do all year long — you don't have to put it away for the winter," he said. "Also, people can get their kids into racing at MVS at a much younger age, and it's a great facility to race at."

During the 2007 season the go-karts have been featured on Sunday mornings and afterwards, however, on Aug. 31 the drivers will be able to experience the new type of racing under the lights with a special Friday event beginning at 7 p.m.

One of the participants will be 10-year-old Hannah Newhouse and while she may have obvious reasons for getting into racing, John Newhouse's daughter says she wants to continue her involvement in the sport that she's come to love.

"My dad started me in this. He wanted me to get out there and race and I'm glad he talked me into it," Hannah said. "My favorite thing is the feeling you get when you're going fast — and winning a race."

Beginning in the Junior 1 division, which includes drivers ages 8-12, medallions are awarded to the first through third-place finishers, while everyone who participates in the Kid-Karts class receives an award.

As for Newhouse's theory of starting kids young and keeping them in the sport, his best evidence may be in the words of 13-year-old Brennan Vandermeer of Twin Falls during a recent race day at MVS.

"I got started in NAZZKART and wanted to keep going with it and I'm planning on racing in cars one day," said Vandermeer.

New track surface makes Bristol an unknown

Kahne wins pole, Montoya second

BRISTOL, Tenn. (AP) — Kurt Busch certainly knows his way around Bristol Motor Speedway, cruising to five victories since 2002.

None of that previous experience is expected to be much of a value on a repaved track that's a mystery heading into Saturday night's race.

"It's a brand new race track and you can't take anything for granted," Busch said Friday. "It's a first time for everybody. It's going to be an interesting weekend, to say the least."

Work began on the .533-mile track immediately after the March race here, as track officials smoothed out the surface with new concrete. A variable banking was added, and an additional three feet of track surface was put in the inner turn. The transition in and out of turns 2 and 4 was also smoothed.

The results were overwhelmingly embraced by the drivers, who typically are slow to adjust to change.

"The track's awesome," Tony Stewart said. "I don't think you can ever get used to it. It's a better job to use the race track. To be able to pour concrete and make it as smooth as they did, that's pretty remarkable."

Many drivers kept a close eye on Wednesday night's Truck Series race, the first event here since the repaving. They were surprised to see multiple racing lines, a high groove, and side-by-side passing for the first time in recent memory.

"I looked to me like people are going to be able to hang on on the outside and maybe even make some passes on the outside," Carl Edwards said. "In the past, if you were running along in line and someone moved you out of the way or you'd slip up, you would fall back. Now, it looks like there will be truly two or three grooves of racing."

This event hardly needed any help in producing excitement — the Bristol night race is one of the toughest tickets in NASCAR, and has a stellar reputation for producing thrilling races — and the new surface is expected to enhance it even more.

"I'm telling you, I'm driving around here thinking this is the first time I've ever been here," five-time Bristol winner Jeff Gordon said. "I didn't think you could make Bristol any cooler or more fun, but they have. They've basically made this track have more room to race on."

Kasey Kahne, mired in a miserable, winless season, starts from the pole in the Sharpie 500, while fellow Dodge driver Juan Pablo Montoya has the outside spot. Rough Fenway Racing teammates Jamie McMurray and David Riggen hold down the second row.

Matt Kenseth, the two-time defending race winner, starts 12th and was admitted "crabby" by the 95-degree heat. As brutal as it was to sit inside a steaming hot race car for two long Friday practice sessions, Kenseth was looking forward to Saturday night's race.

"I think in general, everybody is going to see pretty a better race," he said. "There's a lot more possibilities to run side-by-side. I caught a slower car in traffic and instead of sitting there and being behind him and keep trying to get under him, I just drove outside of him and went around him. We've never been able to do that before."

But look for many of the top drivers to lean toward the conservative side on Saturday night. Those already locked into the chase for the championship might go for the win — and the 10 bonus points that come with each victory. But those fighting for a berth must play it safe.

Small cars gain market share

By Dee-Ann Durbin
Associated Press writer

DETROIT — Robynne Raye has a two-mile commute, a tiny garage and a tight budget, so when she was looking to buy her first new car she's ever owned, she wanted the smallest she could find. After test-driving eight cars, the Seattle resident settled on a Honda Fit.

Raye is one of a growing number of buyers hopping into small cars. U.S. sales of subcompacts such as the Fit and compacts such as the Honda Civic reached a record 2.7 million in 2006, according to George Pipas, Ford Motor Co.'s top sales analyst. Small car sales are expected to set a new record this year despite an overall weakening in the U.S. auto market.

"The things that have fueled the growth of these (small) cars are really not going away: Gas prices, the housing market, the fashion aspect of these cars," said Jesse Toprak, senior analyst for the Edmunds.com automotive Web site. "The segment is really hitting at the right time."

The boom has left some automakers scrambling. Foreign automakers control 76 percent of the U.S. small car market. Pipas said a sobering statistic for Detroit since small cars help capture young buyers and keep them for life.

The Toyota Yaris was the best-selling subcompact in the first seven months of this year, while the Toyota Corolla was the most popular compact car, according to Autodata Corp. The Chevrolet Aveo is the only domestic subcompact in the U.S. market right now.

Gas company proposes 8 percent rate reduction

Times-News

TWIN FALLS — Intermountain Gas is proposing to reduce rates, reflecting lower than anticipated costs for purchasing gas supply.

The company is proposing an average 8.1 percent decrease to residential bills. The Idaho Public Utilities Commission is taking comment through Sept. 18 on the company's proposal.

The adjustment does not change the base rates paid by customers, but does impact the size of a surcharge that is adjusted annually to adapt to the varying costs of buying gas from suppliers and related transportation and storage expenses.

Aiming for accuracy

By Joshua Palmer
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — Gun store managers know that selling firearms is a serious business that requires extensive knowledge of increasingly rigid federal firearms regulations.

The number of Federal Firearms Licenses, which are required to sell firearms in the U.S., has fallen 79 percent since 1994, according to the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco, Firearms and Explosives.

The decline is due to more stringent federal regulations regarding the sale of firearms, increased policing of firearms dealers by the ATF as well as hefty fines and penalties for even the smallest error in the detailed process of recording gun sales.

That's why companies such as Sportsman's Warehouse, based in Salt Lake City, are creating their own systems to process the acquisition and sale of firearms to consumers. The Sportsman's Warehouse chain — the second largest retailer of firearms in the U.S. — implemented its own system in 2005, helping ensure that each store follows procedures mandated by the ATF for the sale of firearms.

"We looked around at the software that was available for recording (firearms) transactions, but in the end we decided to create our own in-store system," said Matt French, vice president of hunting operations with Sportsman's Warehouse. "The company spent around $1 million to create this system and the software that was needed."

Although company officials would not release details of the system, they did offer insight as to how the new recording system works.

Each firearm that comes into the store has a bar code that is immediately scanned — logging the firearm's information into the store's system.

The scanning process helps the store record accurate information about the firearm, and it takes less than half the time to register the firearm compared with the previous handwritten system, French said.

When the store sells the firearm, it goes through a myriad of scans, checks and reviews before leaving the store.

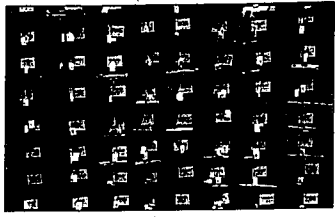

"We have a triple-check system where three people including the store manager have to review the 4472 to form that a gun buyer must complete before purchasing a firearm," said John Howard, manager of the Sportsman's Warehouse store in Twin Falls. "I'm the last one to check everything off because I'm responsible as the store manager, but it always has to go through those checks before the gun can leave the store."

Besides the in-store system for checking firearms sales, the company has its own group of auditors whose sole purpose is to review each store's sales records at least once per year.

Subsequently, the ATF has never cited the Sportsman's Warehouse in Twin Falls for any clerical errors, say corporate officials.

There are more than 20 versions of software systems approved by the ATF to record sales of firearms in the U.S.; however, many of those systems are too expensive for small firearms retailers.

Red's Trading Post in Twin Falls has been under increasing scrutiny from the ATF because of clerical errors in its recording system. However, the gun store, which sells only about 2,000 firearms each year, cannot afford a million-dollar system for recording gun sales.

"There were five different systems that we looked into and some of them charged over $9,000 just for the software," said Ryan Horsley, manager of Red's Trading Post. "We decided on a system in January that we would have had to pay $12,000 to use, but fortunately they just started allowing stores to lease it."

But even systems approved by the ATF do not guarantee complete adherence to federal requirements. Though the ATF had approved the software being used by Red's, the agency told a federal judge that the system was inadequate when it cited the gun store for errors in its recording of gun sales.

What makes Sportsman's Warehouse unique is that it created its own system to record the acquisition and sales of firearms, and recently other large retailers have expressed interest in purchasing rights to use the system.

New Jersey teenager untethers iPhone from AT&T network

By Peter Severson
Associated Press writer

NEW YORK — A 17-year-old hacker has broken the lock that ties Apple's iPhone to AT&T's wireless network, freeing the most hyped cell phone ever for use on the networks of other carriers, including overseas ones.

George Hotz of Glen Rock, N.J., confirmed Friday that he had unlocked an iPhone and was using it on T-Mobile's network, the only major U.S. carrier apart from AT&T that is compatible with the iPhone's cellular technology. In a video posted to his blog, he holds an iPhone that displays "T-Mobile" as the carrier.

While the possibility of switching from AT&T to T-Mobile may not be a major development for U.S. consumers, it opens up the iPhone for use on the networks of overseas carriers.

"That's the big thing," said Hotz in a phone interview from his home.

The phone, which combines an innovative touch-screen interface with the media-playing abilities of the

"I don't want people making money off this."

— George Hotz, teenage hacker

iPod, is sold only in the U.S.

AT&T Inc. spokesman Mark Siegel said the company had no comment, and referred questions to Apple. A call to Apple was not immediately returned. Hotz said the companies had not been in touch with him.

The hack, which Hotz posted Thursday to his blog, is complicated and requires skill with both soldering and software. It takes him about two hours to perform. Since the details are public, it seems likely that a small industry may spring up to buy U.S. iPhones, unlock them and send them overseas.

"That's exactly, like, what I don't want," Hotz said. "I don't want people making money off this."

He said he wished he could make the instructions simpler, so users could modify the phones themselves.

"But that's the simplest I could make them," Hotz said. The next step, he said, would be for someone to develop a way to unlock the phone using only software.

The iPhone has already been made to work on overseas networks using another method, which involves copying information from the Subscriber Identity Module, a small card with a chip that identifies a subscriber to the cell-phone network.

GOLF ROUNDUP

Choi in the lead, more evidence of his strong season

HARRISON, N.Y. — Tiger Woods looks like he might lose his No. 1 seed by skipping The Barclays, thanks to some stellar golf at Westchester from one of the top players chasing him in the PGA Tour playoffs. The surprise is that it's K.J. Choi, not Vijay Singh.

On a course that has given him fits, Choi holed out from 94 yards for eagle on the seventh hole and marched along to a 5-under 66, giving him a two-shot lead over Rich Beem going into the weekend at the first of four playoff events for the FedEx Cup.

And on a course where Singh has won three times, the defending champion cleaned out his locker Friday after missing the cut for the first time at Westchester in five years. He wasted a brilliant start to shoot 71 and miss by four shots.

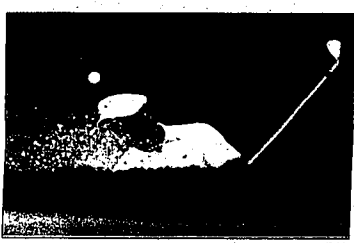

"In one way, I'm disappointed," said Singh, who has missed consecutive cuts for the first time since 2005. "But in another, I'd rather be out there working on my game than just trying to play here and playing poorly."

Geoff Ogilvy, who won the U.S. Open down the road at Winged Foot last summer, had a 66 in the swirling breezes of late afternoon and joined Steve Stricker (68) and Rory Sabbatini (71) at 8-under 134.

No one else was within six shots of Choi at 12-under 130.

"It's going to get firmer, and as it gets firmer, it will get tougher," Ogilvy said.

But while The Barclays still has 36 holes remaining, the FedEx Cup season ended Friday for 13 players who were below No. 120 and either missed the cut or withdrew. That makes it impossible for South Korea's K.J. Choi chips out of a bunker on the eighth hole during the second round of the The Barclays golf tournament in Harrison, N.Y., Friday.

Golf scores

them to be among the 120-man field in round two at the Deutsche Bank Championship. Among them was Billy Andrade, who grew up near the TTC at Boston.

For Choi, it was another reminder that this has been his best year in golf.

He already has two PGA Tour victories against strong fields this year. He is No. 5 in the FedEx Cup standings. He is on the verge of cracking the top 10 in the world ranking. And his confidence is growing with a controlled fade off the tee that has spurred his success.

His name atop the leaderboard at The Barclays was more evidence.

In 10 previous rounds at this tournament, Choi had never shot better than 67 and had broken par only three times.

"My scores are better than what I expected," Choi said. "I've always played not so well here in the past years, and this course ... it's very hard to score under par."

Beem celebrated his 37th birthday with a 68, then sang "Happy Birthday" to himself. The best gift for Beem would be his first victory since the 2002 PGA Championship, but even a top-10 finish would at least qualify him for the second playoff event next week outside Boston. Beem is No. 134 in the standings.

"Playing good any time of the year is always fun," he said. "But obviously now, where I kind of have to get into the next event up the road, I know that unless I play well, I'm going home. And I don't want to go home. No offense to my wife or kids or anything, but when you're playing well, you want to stay on the road."

Another player giving himself new life was Bill Haas, who had a 68 and was in the group at 8-under 136 that included Sergio Garcia (67), Ernie Els (71), Rolf Goosen (68) and Adam Scott (69).

Phil Mickelson had a 70 and was at 137.

Ochoa one back at Safeway Classic

PORTLAND, Ore. — Top-ranked Lorena Ochoa was a shot back behind Sophie Gustafson and rookie Li-Yang Oh after the first round of the Safeway Classic.

Ochoa, who has won the past two tournaments, threw up her arms after making a long birdie putt on the par-4 18th hole to finish the day with a 5-under 67.

Oh and Gustafson each had 66s on the course at Columbia Edgewater Country Club.

Ochoa won the Canadian Women's Open in Edmonton, Alberta, last week. It was her second straight victory and fifth of the season. Her previous victory at the Women's British Open was her first major title.

"I'm going to try very hard to get three in a row," said Ochoa, who is from Mexico. "That would be very special."

Ochoa finished the day with six birdies and a bogey. She made a 25-foot putt from the fringe on the 18th.

Pate first at Boeing

SNOQUALMIE, Wash. — Jerry Pate thought his card looked mighty good — four birdies, no bogeys and most important, no three-putts.

"If you're putting for birdie 10 times you're supposed to make something, even me," Pate said. "They've talked so bad about me on television about my putting, I'm starting to putt better."

Pate made three birdies on the back nine, part of a 4-under round of 68 that put him in a group two shots back in the first round of the Champions-Tour Boeing Classic.

Carter leads Dutch Open

ZAA'NDVOORT, Netherlands — David Carter of England shot a second straight 5-under 65 to claim a two-shot lead after the second round of the Dutch Open, putting him closer to his first European Tour title in nearly a decade.

Carter's 10-under 130 put him two shots ahead of New Zealand's Steve Alker, Sweden's Alexander Noren and Joost Luiten of the Netherlands, who tied the course record with a 64.

The allure of getting things 'right now'

A few years ago I tried an experiment with a group of 10-year-olds I was teaching.

"You have a choice," I announced as I laid out a bowl of M&M's. "You can either have a handful of M&M's right now, or you can each have an entire bag of M&M's tomorrow."

"Why don't we try it the other way around?" Brady suggested. "Give us a bag of M&M's now, or a handful tomorrow?"

The rest of the class loved Brady's idea. But I didn't. "Nope," I said. "A handful now or the bag tomorrow. That's the way it's going to be."

"How about just a few now and the rest later?" Megan asked.

"Sorry," I said. "No compromise. You have to make a choice."

"What if some of us want our M&M's now, and some of us want to wait?" Adam asked.

"Good idea," I said. "But no. Whatever you're going to do, you're going to do it as a group. You guys figure it out. I'm going to get a drink."

With that I stepped into the hall and wandered down to the drinking fountain. The line was a jumble and stretch and meander. I wanted to give them plenty of time to hash this out. We were after all, talking about chocolate — even if it's the one thing 26 years of marriage has taught me it's that you have to be very careful about decisions that involve chocolate — even if it's the kind that melts in your mouth, not in your hands.

When I finally poked my head back into the room, the decision had been made: the bowl of M&M's was empty, and there were chocolate-induced smiles all around.

The next day it was pretty much a no-brainer," Nancy said of the decision. "The hardest part was figuring out how to divide them up. The boys wanted to go first, but we didn't want to take a chance on the boys actually touching the M&M's before we got them. You never know when boys' hands have been — you know."

Nancy, I should mention, has brothers.

"So one of the boys — out of respect for delicate feelings I won't say who — arm-wrestled Nancy for the right to go first. I didn't see the actual event, but I'm confident the cake came surely and swiftly."

"Think 'Harry Potter Meets Xena, Warrior Princess.' A battle of wits would have been competitive, but this wasn't about brain power. This was about brute strength.

Advantage Nancy. The next day when I came home from work several of the kids from my class were hanging out around my front lawn.

"We were just sort of thinking that ... you know ... maybe we should have waited to get a whole bag of M&M's today," Brady said. "And we were sort of wondering ... you know ... if it is, like, too late to change our minds?"

I smiled. "Yeah, it is," I said. "Sorry."

"But the girls ate most of the M&M's in the bowl," Colton said. "We hardly got any."

September to remember

Los Angeles Times

Depending upon which version of history you believe, the terrible events of Sept. 11 — the wholesale massacre of innocent victims — can be explained as either an act of war or the result of religious fanaticism taken to a horrible extreme.

But some might call it the "other" 9/11. On that day in 1857, in a remote quadrant of southeastern Utah territory, a wagon train consisting of 140 homesteaders — men, women, and children striking west for California from Arkansas — were gunned down, bludgeoned and stabbed to death in an attack attributed to local Mormon militia.

Approaching the 150th anniversary of the Mountain Meadows Massacre, as this marginalized chapter of U.S. history has come to be known, modern Mormons in the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints continue to struggle with its legacy. But "September Dawn," an independently financed historical drama that arrives in 1,000 theaters Friday, takes a critical view of the religious fundamentalism it presents as having precipitated the attack — most controversially, the alleged influence of the Mormon leader referred to as the "American Moses," Brigham Young.

The movie, originally set for release in May, has reportedly prompted hand-wringing in the Mormon community, where some worry it will perpetuate outdated notions about the homegrown American religion, arriving as former Massachusetts Gov. Mitt Romney, who is Mormon, strenuously campaigns to win the Republican Party's presidential nomination. (A spokeswoman for the church declined to comment about the movie.)

Co-writer-director of "September Dawn" Christopher Cain dismisses the idea the movie puts a dark light on Mormonism, correlating the religious zealotry of the time with the clash of cultures that has led to America's "war on terror" and twin wars in Iraq and Afghanistan.

"I don't have an agenda with the Mormon Church," Cain said. "What I do have is a theoretical view of how we can look at what's happening today."

"We live in a time where the news is dominated by the religious, fanatical world — a time where a 20-year-old kid with his whole life ahead of him can walk onto a bus and blow himself up and war is being waged by a bunch of nut-cases 'over

"September Dawn" is being screened daily at 7:15 p.m. and 9:45 p.m. at the Odyssey Theater in Twin Falls. There are also Saturdays and Sundays matinee showings at 2:45 p.m. and 5:45 p.m. Movie in Twin Falls there." Well, it happened here 150 years ago. I just saw this (movie) — as an opportunity to look at how this happened in our own backyard — and not that long ago."

Pioneers in peril

"September Dawn" opens with former Arkansas militia Capt. Alexander Fancker (played by Shaun Johnston) leading a wagon train through rural Utah toward the gold-rich West Coast. They make camp, intending to rest for a few days but are met with deep suspicion by locals.

Terence Stamp portrays Young as a territorial governor who declares martial law and warns church members to turn away any "Gentiles" who stray into Mormon territory. "If any miserable scoundrels come here, cut their throats," Young is recorded as having said in a sermon, his siege mentality a holdover from earlier persecution and the murder of Mormon prophet Joseph Smith in 1844.

Sept. 7 — Brigham Young refers in a sermon to "rumors" that the U.S. is sending 1,000,000 troops into Utah Territory, and "warns them that if people enter the territory and don't believe themselves, they will be subject to a 'Vigilance Committee.'"

Sept. 11 — Buchanan appoints Alfred Cumming as governor of Utah, and directs him to accompany the military forces into Utah.

Sept. 12 — Two Mormons, Porter Rockwell and Abraham Oenwick, learn of Buchanan's plans while in Kansas City, Mo., on a rail run. The same day, Alexander and troops begin the journey to Utah.

Sept. 23 — Rockwell and Smoot arrive in Salt Lake City and inform Brigham Young of the government's plans.

Sept. 24 — Brigham Young publicly discusses secession of the Mormon theocracy from the United States and establishment as an independent kingdom. Heber C. Kimball issues a curse upon Buchanan and predicts his untimely death.

Sept. 25 — Brigham Young declares martial law.

Sept. 26 — Brigham Young discusses possible secession of the Mormon "Kingdom of God" from the United States, and announces: "We must have the kingdom of God, or nothing. We are not to be overthrown."

Sept. 31 — A group of Mormons in Southern Utah, led by John D. Lee, attack and kill a group of traveling civilians in the Mountain Meadows massacre.

Sept. 18 — Brigham Young asks the Nauvoo Legion to fight federal troops if they enter Utah Territory.

Sept. 18 — U.S. troops leave Fort Leavenworth, headed for Utah.

JOINING A CRUSADE

Evangelicals a part of environmental movement

The Washington Post

LONGWOOD, Fla. — At 8 on a Saturday morning, just as the heat was permeating this sprawling Orlando suburb, Denise Kiroso donned a white plastic moon suit and began sorting through the trash produced by Northland Church.

She and several fellow parishioners picked apart the garbage to analyze exactly how much and what kind of waste their megachurch produces, looking for ways to reduce it and the congregation's contribution to global warming.

"I prayed about it, and God really revealed to me that I had passion about creation," said Kiroso, who has since traded in her family's sport-utility vehicle for a hybrid Toyota Prius to help cut her greenhouse-gas emissions.

"Anything that draws me closer to God — and this does — increases my faith and helps my work for God."

Her conversion to environmentalism is the result of a year-long international campaign by British bishops and leaders of major U.S. environmental groups to bridge a religious divide between global-warming activists and American evangelicals.

The emerging rapprochement is regarded by some as a sign of how dramatically U.S. public opinion has shifted on global warming in recent years. It also has begun, in modest ways, to transform how the two groups define themselves.

"I did sense this is one of these issues where the church could take leadership, like with civil rights," said Northland's senior pastor, Joel C. Hunter. "It's a matter of who speaks for evangelicals: Is it a broad range of voices on a broad range of issues, or a narrow range of voices?"

Hunter has emerged among evangelicals as a pivotal advocate for cutting greenhouse-gas emissions that scientists say are warming Earth's climate. A self-declared 59-year-old minister who can quote the "Baby Jesus" speech that Will Farrell delivered in the 2005 movie "Talladega Nights" as readily as he can the Bible, Hunter regularly preaches about climate change to Pastor Joel Hunter, center, oversees volunteers studying Northland Church trash to assess environmental impact. While he remains in a distinct minority, and a number of others on the Christian right disparage his efforts, Hunter and others like him have begun to reshape the politics around climate change.

7,000 congregants in five Central Florida sites and to 3,000 more worshippers via the Internet. He even has met with lawmakers on Capitol Hill to talk about environmental issues.

While he remains in a distinct minority, and a number of others on the Christian right disparage his efforts, Hunter and others like him have begun to reshape the politics around climate change.

Hunter came to the cause not on his own but rather through a six-year effort by British religious leaders to mobilize their U.S. counterparts on the issue.

"The United States is absolutely key to the question of climate change," said Sir John T. Houghton, a British atmospheric scientist and an evangelist. For nearly a decade, Houghton — who said he has long sought to "put my science alongside my faith" — worked to convince Hunter and other American evangelical leaders that their shared beliefs should compel them to focus on global warming.

In 2001, Houghton, a 75-year-old Welshman who has been honored twice by Queen Elizabeth II for his scientific work, walked the grounds of Windsor Castle with Calvin DeWitt, a professor of environmental studies at the University of Wisconsin. The two, later joined by the Bishop James Jones of Liverpool, England, started organizing conferences on both sides of the Atlantic to convince U.S. evangelicals that human-generated warming poses a threat to God's creation.

Not long after that, several prominent American environmental leaders and scientists decided that they, too, needed to win over that same group. Peter Sellmann, chief executive of Conservation

International, an Arlington, Va.-based think-tank group that seeks to preserve terrestrial and marine biodiversity worldwide, asked himself what sector of society was best positioned to shift U.S. climate policy.

"What bloc of people has enormous influence, especially on the Republican Party? That group of people is right-winging Christian evangelicals" who made up 24 percent of the U.S. electorate in the 2004 and 2008 elections.

So Sellmann set about wooing church leaders. At the suggestion of former NBC anchor Tom Brokaw and his wife, Meredith, who serves on his organization's board, Sellmann flew to Colorado Springs to discuss global warming with Ted Haggard, then president of the National Association of Evangelicals (NAE). Haggard proved to be a willing partner until a scandal involving drugs and homosexual activity ended his public career. "I bet on the wrong horse," Sellmann observed wryly.

But Sellmann also made savvy choices, such as hiring Ben Campbell — an evangelist who had worked on agricultural policy for Conservation International in the past — to reach out to the religious right.

RELIGION LETTERS

God made the world, so he makes the rules

This letter is in response to the letter written by Mr. Walsh concerning homosexual behavior which was published in the Religion section. He calls homosexual behavior a complex question and goes on to use the technique of burying the issue to confuse the reader.

God made this world, so he gets to make the rules. The Bible is God's word, in which he gives us his rules. In the Old Testament, Leviticus 18:22 calls homosexual behavior detestable. In the New Testament, Romans 2:27 calls homosexual behavior a perversion. So, it is quite simple. It is wrong, so it is a sin.

Jesus didn't teach one sin was worse than another

I would like to thank John Walsh for his recent letter to the Times-News regarding homosexuality and judgment day.

Although Mr. Walsh's reasoning seems logical to him, his subsequent conclusions are completely faulty and without basis. Jesus taught that "all have sinned and come short of the glory of God."

In a nutshell, this means that we are all sinners in need of his grace. Jesus never taught that one sin was worse than another. Rather, his purpose was to show how all sins are equal in God's sight, and that all sins create problems. While the Bible states that men should not be sexually involved with other men, it also tells us to avoid all sin, including lying, stealing, adultery, judging, etc.

Jesus came to earth because he loves us. This love was demonstrated by his death and resurrection. Anyone who calls upon Jesus can have eternal life; it is a free gift to all mankind.

Reflection of Christ is the only sin that will not be forgiven; all others can be put under the blood of Christ.

Jesus is relevant to your life. God's word is still truth. And forgiveness is available to all.

Louisiana College to create a Christian law school

BAYON HOUGE, La. (AP) — Louisiana College plans to establish a law school with a "biblical worldview" that aims to train defenders of conservative Christian values.

Louisiana College, a 1,000-student school in Pineville, expects to hire a law dean next year and enroll up to 40 students in 2009, eventually building enough capacity to enroll 300 students. The school will seek accreditation from the American Bar Association.

Other conservative Christian law schools include Liberty University School of Law, founded by the late Rev. Jerry Falwell, and Regent University School of Law, founded by televangelist Pat Robertson. Both those schools are in Virginia.

The Louisiana College law school will be named for Judge Paul Pressler, a leader in the conservative takeover of the Southern Baptist Convention over the last few decades. He served in Texas as the state's district court and appeals court.

Louisiana College, founded in 1862, is run by trustees chosen by the Louisiana Baptist Convention and requires faculty members accept Christ as their savior.

Joe Agallard, college president, announced the plans in an Aug. 18 news conference. Creating the school could cost more than $15 million.

Falwell's insurance policies pay off Liberty University debt

LYNCHBURG, Va. (AP) — The Rev. Jerry Falwell had life insurance policies worth $34 million and the money has been used to erase the debt of Liberty University, the school he founded.

The televangelist's son, Liberty Chancellor Jerry Falwell Jr., said his father had named the university and the Thomas Road Baptist Church as beneficiaries to protect their future.

The policies left $29 million to Liberty; its debt had reached $82 million in 1992, but the school had succeeded in paying off a significant amount before the elder Falwell's death.

Another $5 million went to the 22,000-member Thomas Road congregation, which Falwell led, according to the News & Advance of Lynchburg.

Falwell Jr. said his father used to joke that when he "kicked the bucket" the school would get a windfall.

Falwell, a founder and leader of the Moral Majority, died last May.

It also offers ice cream socials, campfires and budget rate lodging at just $15 to $40 a night.

Mediums, clairvoyants and healers are housed in the camp known to the locals as "Spirit Hill" — either for all or part of the season. There are workshops and classes, not on typical summer camp fare like basket weaving and swimming, but rather on life, religion and how to see auras in 60 seconds.

The 36 cabins, dining hall and chapel were mostly built in the 1920s. And it shows. Many are sinking. Doors creak and don't open fully, a porch light that camp goers said burned different colors for more than 30 years on the same bulb finally went out this summer, and the original chapel is boarded up after a tree fell on it.

50-YEAR FIGHT School prayer protester still at it

MEDFORD, Mass. (AP) — His protest began a half-century ago, when Ellery Schemp opened the Quran during his high school's mandatory Bible reading time and silently scanned passages he was too nervous to actually read.

That minor rebellion led to a landmark U.S. Supreme Court case that outlawed school-sponsored prayer.

Schemp's civil disobedience in 1956 is back in the public eye with a new book "Ellery's Protest" by New York University law professor Stephen Solomon, which examines the effect of his case amid continuing controversy over the separation of church and state.

Schemp, a genial 67-year-old, clearly relishes the renewed activism as he's become a sought-after speaker for humanist groups and church and state separatists.

For most of his life, Schemp gave little thought to the school prayer case, even as its impact raged through the courts and culture.

A physicist, Schemp had a busy career, two marriages and saw both the North and South Poles during extensive travel in which his legal legacy was an afterthought.

But his views have remained as controversial as they were when he was a teenager.

"I'm really dismayed that 50 years later, this is still a bit of an issue," Schemp, an atheist, said in a recent interview at his home in Medford, just outside Boston. "There's enough problems in the world. Does anyone seriously think that more prayer and more Bible reading is the answer to global problems, to political problems, to wars in Iraq?"

Clearly many people do believe in prayer. The courts remain busy with cases brought by those who claim the state is either suppressing — or promoting — a faith.

In Delaware, for example, a Jewish family is suing a school district if claims is promoting Christianity with prayers at events such as school potlucks and graduation. Last year, a valedictorian from Nevada sued after school officials turned off the microphone while she spoke about Christ's Crucifixion during graduation.

John Whitehead of the Washington Institute, a legal group that often takes on religious cases and is representing the valedictorian, agrees public schools should not be promoting prayer and Bible reading. But he said the Schemp ruling has been abused by interest groups who are trying to stamp religion out of public life.

In the Schemp case, the court said prayer and Bible reading in his school were religious exercises, and it was unconstitutional for a public school to require them.

The justices wrote: "The breach of neutrality that is today a trickling stream may at too soon become a raging torrent and, in the words of Madison, "It is proper to take alarm at the first experiment on our liberties."

Whitehead compared the Schemp decision "to throwing a big brick in a small pond."

"The rippling effect is still happening," he said.

Schemp was trying to make a point, not legal history, when he brought the Muslim scriptures to the Abington (Pa.) High School on Nov. 26, 1956.

It was raised in the Unitarian church, with its lack of dogma, and objected to the school's "morning devotionals," in which a Bible passage was read and the Lord's Prayer recited, because he viewed the practice as promoting beliefs he and others didn't hold.

Schemp opened the Quran to show that there were other holy books. After he refused to stand for the Lord's Prayer, his teacher called him aside and he was sent out of the classroom.

Idaho bishop undergoes successful back surgery

BOISE (AP) — Roman Catholic Bishop Michael Driscoll's back surgery has been deemed a success.

Driscoll, 68, underwent a two-hour surgical procedure Tuesday called a laminectomy to alleviate long-term back pain.

The procedure is designed to offset a condition called stenosis, brought on by arthritis in the spine that leads to the exposure of spinal nerve roots.

Michael Brown said a full recovery is expected. Driscoll will remain at St. Alphonsus Regional Medical Center in Boise for several days before returning home to recover.

Brown said Driscoll is not expected to return to work until October.

Driscoll was installed as Boise bishop in 1990 after serving as bishop in Orange County, Calif. He is the leader of more than 166,000 Roman Catholics, of 42 parishes and 51 parishes across the state.

Wovonew is one of 13 spiritualism camps across the country. It first opened in 1893 and is in its 106th summer season. For years visitors arrived by train and climbed the hill to the wooded bluff overlooking the small town, with a population now of just over 800.

The 37-acre camp is run by followers of Spiritualism, a religion that started in the mid-1800s and reached the height of its popularity at the end of that century, but that still maintains an estimated 250,000 followers.

Some tenets of Spiritualism are that people live on after death and they can be communicated with using a medium like Ueli or Hilka. First, First claims messages from a spirit named Fairchild who speaks to her in Shakespearean English.

The Wovonew camp fell on hard times in recent years during a legal fight over ownership. Ueli and Hilka and other owners are focused on raising the camp's profile to attract more visitors.

Readings cost $40 for half an hour, while 15-minute mini-readings are available on Mondays for $20. Seniors can

Massacre

...According to Tom Kimball, a sixth-generation Mormon who is book review editor for the Mormon History Assn., the fact has been put on a "do watch" list by LDS Church officials.

"...It's blacklisted already," he said.

Disputed history

"Nonetheless, Kimball said the Mountain Meadows Massacre has been the subject of intensive discussions this year. In May, the association held a conference hosting more than 800 Mormon scholars at which the massacre was discussed.

"Here's what's not in dispute: There was a siege, on the 11th the Fanchers were offered a negotiation, and when they accepted it, they were walked off and shot," Kimball said. "What's in dispute is why and who ordered it. Some people are pointing the finger at the Fanchers and the Indians."

Most church-sanctioned histories portray the Mountain Meadows Massacre as a war crime — an overreaction to what they perceived as a threat to Mormon sovereignty. Others say the motive was economic: a chance to loot the wagons.

In the September issue of Ensign, an official magazine of the LDS Church, historian Richard E. Turley Jr. writes of "disagreements, miscommunication, prejudices and political wrangling" that had created a divide between the Mormon territory and the federal government leading to the Utah War in 1850. He sets the scene for the attack on the Fancher party as coming during a time of high tension amid the government's decision to send "an army to put down perceived treason in Utah" and the Saints' fears that soldiers would be arriving at any time to "to oppress, drive, or even destroy them."

The motive, however, puts the blame squarely on Young. He is heard in voice-over by Stamp, cursing Gentiles, encouraging vengeance, "blood onment" and "washing the blood of the prophet" among other exhortations.

"All Brigham Young's dialogue was taken directly from the Utah War... documents," said Cain. "You heard words like 'blood onment.' These are religious terms, not self-preservation terms. Religious connotation and terminology were being used to fire their people up."

Husband's dream carries grieving widow to warden service ministry

LINCOLNVILLE, Maine (AP) — Personal tragedy set Kate Braestrup on her path to ministry.

Her husband, Maine State Police Trooper Drew Griffith, was killed in 1996 when a truck slammed into his cruiser about a mile from home, leaving Braestrup to raise their four young children by herself.

Although he was 15 years from retirement, Griffith's long-term plan was to attend seminary and pursue a second career as a minister. Braestrup took on that dream and went on to become chaplain of the Maine Warden Service, helping people who find themselves in the midst of sudden tragedy not unlike her own.

The 45-year-old Braestrup shows up at the scene of drownings, snowmobile crashes and search-and-rescue efforts for hunters and hikers lost in the woods, comforting survivors and sometimes the wardens themselves.

She calls what she does "a ministry of presence." Or as she writes in her new memoir, "Here If You Need Me" (Little Brown, $23.99), the job "requires me mostly to just show up, shut my mouth and be."

A trim, vivacious woman with curly brown hair and gray-green eyes, Braestrup said her entry into the clergy and law enforcement was an outgrowth of her husband's death.

"I didn't ask for the experience and I wouldn't wish it on anyone, but it happened and it became something you could turn into a blessing," she said.

Religion had played little part in Braestrup's life while growing up in Washington, D.C. Her father, a journalist, was nominally Lutheran but didn't attend church; her mother was, at most, agnostic. When she and Griffith were married by a Methodist minister in the Roman Catholic chapel at Georgetown University, her alma mater, "it was the first overtly religious service I actually participated in."

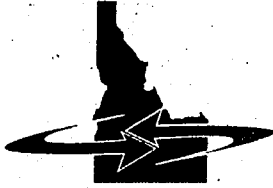

Two years after her husband's death, Braestrup entered Bangor Theological Seminary and went on to be ordained as a Unitarian Universalist minister.

During her studies, she gravitated to law enforcement, riding on patrol with members of various police agencies as part of an independent study of the spiritual dimensions of police work.

Your month of worry is ending, Leo

IF AUG. 25 IS YOUR BIRTHDAY: A few paperwork worries could give you cause for some stress in September, but business is brisk for most of your birthday year. A sizeable sum of money will come your way in October and November. Business may be slow during April to June, when you'd best stick to the conventional. Your love life is rekindled through the joys of physical togetherness until your next birthday. If single, you will get the opportunity for pleasant encounters, but beware of scandals and remain discreet.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Peace around you are so serious today. The atmosphere will get better as the days go by if you let friends group your own evening. Say yes to an unexpected dinner invitation.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Work brings financial rewards. All you need is to stay away from lofty ideas and avoid ironic comments. The evening should be creative if you took work home.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Start a beauty program and be nifty about choosing the nail clippers, as you might end up with ragged nails. You'll decide once and for all to keep the house tidy. Be adventurous with a learning program or have fun visiting a local zoo.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): This shopping trip you've been planning will not yield the results you seek. You'll smile dreamily all day, even if some around you have sunken eyes. Your work projects will move ahead without much fuss.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): This month of many heavy worries is coming to an end. You will start reaping the rewards of hard labor, though not in cash. Treat your partner to an unusual evening and make whatever amends are necessary.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): The grief at work is starting to die down. You know who's been talking behind your back and you can straighten this out. You can start implementing new educational methods today.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Financial speculation is a temptation best resisted. If you are going to spend money anyway, then book a country or mountain holiday with your family rather.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Family loyalty may be lacking if you aren't doing your share. Don't get so wrapped up in an intellectual pursuit that you forget to buy the basics for a decent weekend.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Get up early and finish work you've taken home before spending the day organizing tonight's barbecue. Your significant other might prove elusive, so invite many friends.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Don't confuse sex with love tonight. As for the day, if you spend it pulling weeds in the garden, you'll feel satisfied. Tomorrow is better day.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Moody and stubborn, look after yourself today. Take care to avoid crowds and impulse shopping, as the goodies are likely to be forgotten in the cellar. Do utipote in love matters to avoid potential problems. Tomorrow is better day.

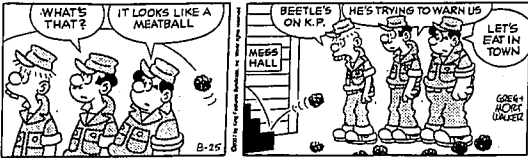

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Talk with your partner, grant forgiveness and start anew. If single, love is beckoning. A simple filing with no expectations might work, but if you're looking for a stable mate, this is not the one.

Dinner table reprimands are best served up sweet

DEAR ABBY: My daughter says her children, ages 11 and 8, are afraid of me because I no longer expect them to keep their lack of manners. Is asking them to say "please" and "thank you," or to use a knife to cut things on their plate into small pieces rather than have food hanging out of their mouths, really expecting too much?

If their parents don't care, who will teach them? While I no longer expect people to keep their arms off the table, what are the minimal standards I should expect at a dinner table these days? Or am I expected to watch elbows sprawled over the table, plucking at their food with their hands and chewing with their mouths open?

— RICHARD IN SARASOTA, FLA.
RICHARD: Sometimes it isn't what we say, as much as how we say it. I see no need to worry about teaching children to use their manners and explaining what they are. But if you are doing it in such a way that your grandchildren are afraid of you, it may be time to work on your delivery.

DEAR ABBY: I am a new minister at a fairly large

DEAR ABBY
Jeane Phillips

church. For this reason, I'm having a difficult time getting to know the families and remembering the hundreds of names. I would like to take the time to "come calling," as my grandmother used to say.

Is there a polite way to invite yourself over to someone's home? — POLITE VISITOR IN MISSOURI
DEAR POLITE VISITOR: The people who have written me about this subject have been parishioners who felt it was an intrusion.

A more palatable way to get to know your church members would be to institute a social hour after the service so you can mingle and chat with them.

DEAR ABBY: I am 52 years old and have absolutely adored the Beatles ever since they came over in 1964. At the time, I was growing up in a home filled with domestic violence and alcoholism. When I heard their music, I felt I had a voice for the feelings I had to keep inside — a safe voice through music. At the same time, I could sense that each of the men in the group was as sincere as their lyrics. To this day, I still listen to Beatles music and care about the surviving members.

I know I'm not alone, as thousands love them all over the world. Even today's teenagers are catching on. I've been to Liverpool twice and have felt the essence of their songs through seeing places where their lives began.

Am I obsessed with the Beatles, or did they arrive at a time in my life when I needed to believe in something? — VIRGINIA IN WARMER ROBINS, GA.
DEAR VIRGINIA: I'd call you less obsessed than devoted, and with good cause. The Beatles arrived at a time when many people's lives when they needed to believe in something. Their music spoke for a generation and continues to shine to people of every age when their days were cloudy and their hearts were heavy. It continues to do so.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Saturday, Aug. 25, the 237th day of 2007. There are 128 days left in the year.

Today's Highlight

On Aug. 25, 1944, during World War II, Paris was liberated by Allied forces after four years of Nazi occupation.

On this date

- In 1825, Uruguay declared independence from Brazil.
- In 1878, C. Matthew Webb became the first person to swim across the English Channel, getting from Dover, England, to Calais, France, in 22 hours.
- In 1916, the National Park Service was established within the Department of the Interior.
- In 1921, the United States signed a peace treaty with Germany.
- In 1943, U.S. forces liberated New Georgia in the Solomon Islands from the Japanese during World War II.
- In 1959, President Harry Truman ordered the Army to seize control of the nation's railroads to avert a strike.

In 1967, George Lincoln Rockwell, founder of the American Nazi Party, was shot to death in the parking lot of a shopping center in Arlington, Va; former party member John Patler was later convicted of the killing.

In 1981, the U.S. spacecraft Voyager II cut through an 63,000 miles of Saturn's cloud cover, sending back pictures of and data about the ringed planet.

In 1985, Samantha Smith, 13, the schoolgirl whose letter to Yuri V. Andropov resulted in her famous peace tour of the Soviet Union, died with her father in an airliner crash in Auburn, Maine.

In 1998, retired Supreme Court Justice Lewis F. Powell died in Richmond, Va., at age 90.

Ten years ago: The tobacco industry agreed to an $11.3 billion settlement with the state of Florida. Dow Corning Corp. offered $2.4 billion to settle claims from more than 200,000 women with illnesses related to silicone breast implants.

Five years ago: China set Nov. 8 as the date for its long-awaited Communist Party national congress. Louisville, Ky., beat Sendai, Japan, 1-0 to win the Little League World Series in South Williamsport, Pa. Former Swedish diplomat Per Anger, who had worked with Raoul Wallenberg in Sweden, was honored for his aid to Hungarian Jews from Nazi death camps, died in Stockholm, Sweden, at age 88. Acclaimed bass-baritone William Warfield, best known for his rendition of "Of Man River" in the musical "Show Boat," died in Chicago at age 82.

One year ago: A college student's checked luggage on a Continental Airlines flight that had arrived in Houston from Buenos Aires, Argentina, was found to contain a stick of dynamite, one of six security incidents that day that caused U.S. flights to be diverted, evacuated or searched. Joseph Stefano, who wrote the screenplay for Alfred Hitchcock's "Psycho," died in Thousand Oaks, Calif., at age 84.

"Tradition is what you resort to when you don't have the time or the money to do it right."

— Kurt Herbert Adler, Austrian-born conductor (1905-1980)

Campers tie Peeping Tom to tree for police

PORTLAND, Ore. (AP) — A group of campers used a Peeping Tom camera to spy, keeping him bound until police arrived.

Richard H. Berkeley, 63, was charged with private indecency in a misdemeanor by sheriff's deputies who were called to the Big Fan Campground near Bagby Hot Springs last weekend, according to Clackamas County Detective Jim Strawn.

Campers told deputies they recognized Berkeley from a similar incident at the campground last year and wanted to make sure he didn't get away.

The 2006 incident was reported to police but did not result in charges.

"Last year, we took down his license plate number and turned it in to the sheriff, but there wasn't any other cops," really," said Jason Dugan, one of the campers. "This year, that wasn't happening."

Dugan and another camper, Michelle Brandow, said several friends were playing chess, eating and relaxing last Saturday, when they heard rustling in an area the women used as an open latrine.

Dugan went to investigate, saw a man running from the area and tackled him. With help from two other campers, Dugan led Berkeley to the group's campsite and tied him to a tree. Another camper left to call police.

Berkeley told KGW-TV in Portland he was surprised by the response.

"I just didn't think it was that big of a deal," he said.

A phone call to Berkeley's house in Beaverton was immediately returned Friday.

"YOU DON'T HAVE TO WORRY ABOUT ANY OL' STRANGER PUTTING THE FIRST PING IN YOUR NEW CAR ANYMORE, DAD."

"Oh, boy! Home again and NOTHIN' TO DO!"
