Climatologists hint at wet winter

Good snowpack would mean relief for water users

By Matt Christensen
Times-News writer

Mother Nature is expected to throw southern Idaho water users a life preserver this fall and winter after one of the worst water years in a decade.

Water and climate experts met this time last year in Boise and predicted a drought. They were right, but drastically underestimated its scope: Demand for water soared at the same time supply was short, nearly prompting the closure of hundreds of wells and preventing surface irrigators from watering their crops.

This year, the experts say southern Idaho should expect about average fall and winter temperatures and above-average precipitation. There may be enough water to replenish depleted reservoirs, reforest parched soil and take pressure off junior water users — though the experts are careful to remind they're making predictions, not promises.

"The models are tilting the odds toward a cool, wet, better-than-average snowpack," said Nate Mantua, a climate analyst with the Climate Impacts Group at the University of Washington.

Last year winter, little precipitation fell in January and March — traditionally wet months — and the snow that did fall melted off a month earlier than normal. That made it difficult to capture in reservoirs to use as storage for irrigators.

"We didn't get much rain at all and we had some high temperatures in March that triggered that

Fish and Game wants reports of dead birds

By Matt Christensen
Times-News writer

Officials want bird watchers' eyes to the ground, not the sky, in search of waterfowl this fall.

The Idaho Department of Fish and Game has asked bird watching groups to be on the lookout for dead ducks that may have fallen victim to avian influenza, commonly known as bird flu.

"Although these birds are affected by many diseases, it is important that biologists investigate reports of dead waterfowl and shorebirds," wrote Kevin Warner, avian flu coordinator with Fish and Game, in a message to bird groups.

Officials want bird watchers to pay special attention to ducks, geese, swans and shorebirds.

About 2,500 dead mallards were discovered last December along Land Creek Springs near Oakley. Multiple lab tests confirmed the birds died of aspergillosis, a fungal infection the ducks likely contracted by eating moldy corn at a nearby farm, Fish and Game officials said.

The die-off sparked an concern about bird flu and prompted coverage from worldwide media outlets.

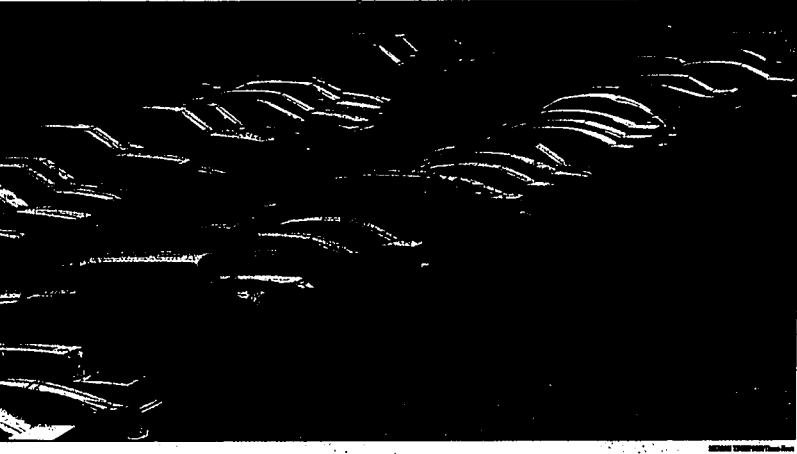

Public health officials are now especially concerned about bird flu affecting ducks. Studies have shown that as the virus adapts, ducks can now carry bird flu for longer periods without showing symptoms, perpetuating transmission to other birds. The World Health Organization calls ducks "silent reservoirs of the virus."

Humans can contract bird flu, though cross-species transmission is rare. Outbreaks, mostly in Asia and the Middle East, have killed hundreds

CSI survey shows many want more programs, classes and parking

By Andrea Gates
Times-News writer

Plans for the next five years at the College of Southern Idaho are being shaped in part by comments from 451 people, who are predominantly affiliated with the institution.

That input was gathered from a widely advertised public survey from the college, which was taken offline last week. Other input was also gathered at recent public meetings. Information from the recent online surveys is still being analyzed, but some trends have been pinpointed.

An overwhelming majority of people surveyed think more bachelors and masters programs should be offered in Twin Falls. Other high ranking priorities for the people polled were educational quality, tuition costs, and the availability of financial aid and scholarships, CSI Vice President of Student Services Edli Szanto said.

Survey respondents also want more online, evening and off-campus classes, she said.

A strategic plan should be developed within the next couple of months, and it will eventually go before the CSI Board of Trustees for approval. The vast majority of people who filled out the survey were affiliated with CSI — 339 were current students, 97 were faculty or staff and there were 15 community members.

"Although I was hoping for more responses from the community, we have kept in mind that most of our students, faculty and staff are also community members," Szanto said.

A lot of the online survey involved write-in answers, and Szanto said she noticed many comments called for more parking.

"Indeed quite a few comments, I can't say how many, were on parking and

Man arrested for robbing Burley bank a second time

By Cass Friedman
Times-News writer

HANSEN — Some people never learn. Steven James Parker, 33, who was arrested for the armed robbery of a Zions Bank in Burley in August 2001, was arrested for the same charge — and the same bank — Wednesday evening.

When detailed Wednesday, Parker confessed to the robbery and for robbing the same bank last month, Sept. 12.

Parker was arrested after he eluded Cassia County and Twin Falls County deputies in a 44 minute chase that reached speeds exceeding 100 mph, and plunged his late model Ford F250 pickup into a canal at 4000 E. Highway 30 in Twin Falls County, just east of Hansen.

Parker was taken to the Cassia County Sheriff's Office, where he confessed to the robberies.

Search and Rescue divers sent into the frigid canal near milepost 230, where the pickup had plunged, had yet to find the lost and handgum from the fully submerged pickup Wednesday evening.

A man at a business neighboring the bank, having heard the suspect's description on a scanner, looked out to see who he thought was the suspect enter a white, four-door Ford pickup with

T.F. County uses new tactic on sheriff deficit

Overspent money comes out of '08 budget

By Jared S. Hopkins
Times-News writer

Unlike the advice given to George Constanza, sometimes double-dipping is necessary.

After Twin Falls County Sheriff Wayne Tousey spent more than $80,000 over budget near the end of the last fiscal year, county commissioners chose to reimburse the money with funds from the sheriff's current budget.

During the last pay period of the 2006-07 fiscal year, Tousey spent $55,831 on overtime and $25,669 for maintenance and fuel costs. Tousey attributed the costs to understaffing and increases in crime and population.

But in order to close out the fiscal year, which ended Sept. 30, budgets must be balanced, so the commissioners responded by reaching into the general fund. That's how they typically covered overspending — since the disease was discovered in people in 1997, it's likely bird flu has killed many more whose causes of death were not confirmed by lab tests.

Bird flu kills about 60 percent of the people who contract the virus, according to the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention.

Bird flu is yet to strike the United States. Federal and state agencies sampled 150,000 birds last year and did not detect the virus.

"There's no real concern right now that we have avian flu," said Kelton Hatch, a regional conservation educator with Magic Valley's office of Fish and Game. "It's really something people shouldn't get excited about."

Despite the test results, officials say it is possible for the virus to be carried here by migratory birds.

In August, the leaders of Canada, Mexico and the United States announced a North American bird flu preparedness plan that stressed the importance of early detection.

The CDC and WHO are working together to develop a bird flu vaccine, though there is currently no cure for bird flu.

 including Touseley, who has done so in the past.

Not anymore.

The commissioners chose to reimburse the general fund with Touseley's budget for the following year, costing him more than $55,000 in potential salary for the current year. The remaining money will be covered by a grant.

"Policy-wise, I think it's a bigger deal than money-wise," said Commissioner Tom Mikesell. "We will give you the money to meet your budget."

Touseley said that the decision will have a "renewable" impact on his budget for next year, which rose by 9 percent to more than $3 million. Earlier this year, the sheriff received four new officers, marking the first time in nearly a decade his office will receive any additional deputies.

"I don't know why they decided to do that this year," he said. "For 15 years, we've operated the other way. It just blew me away."

Oversteering by Touseley is not new. In 2005, more than $53,000 was spent and in 2006, it was more than $76,000.

This is the first time, however, that the commissioners took out money from the next year. The change could simply reflect a new vision by the county.

Former commissioners Bill Brockman and Gary Grindstaff, along with Mikesell, would cover the deficit with the general fund and leave it at that.

But new commissioners Terry Kramer and George Urle, in office since January, along with Mikesell, took a different route — one that will cost Touseley next year.

Both methods used by the commission are legal.

Touseley said he sent two memos to the commissioners, including one in March, to notify them he would be over the budget. The only explanation he got was that the commissioners were advised to try a different route.

The county commissioners said the decision was made upon the advice of their auditor, Raymond Ware of Ware and Associates, who has audited the county for more than five years.

"I think they're just flexing their muscles and saying, 'We're not going to take this anymore.' And that's within their right," he said. "It's a different commission and they're handling it differently."

The commissioners blamed the deficit on miscommunication between the two departments, not necessarily on Touseley. Kramer and Urle said that it took some time to get acclimated to their new jobs of budgeting.

"I'm just blaming it on the policy. That's the way it was done before," said Kramer.

 early runoff," said Steve Burrell, a hydrologist with the Idaho Department of Water Resources. "Now we need a normal water year to pull us out of this."

That could happen. IDWR Director Dave Tuthill has said a slightly above-average water year could mean he won't have to shut off wells in a pending water dispute.

"We're more or less coming back to average," said Alan Hamlet, a hydrologist at CIG. "Some significant recovery is suggested by the model."

Hamlet's model predicts above-average flows at Milner Dam from April through September. That's slightly above average water year could mean he won't have to shut off wells in a pending water dispute.

AG nominee Mukasey critical of Justice Department's policies

By Lara Jakes Jordan
Associated Press writer

WASHINGTON — Attorney General nominee Michael Mukasey told senators Wednesday he will reject White House political meddling and oversteering its authority in terrorism cases if approved to run the Justice Department.

He said he would resign if his legal or ethical doubts about administration policy are ignored.

Mukasey's plans for the scandal-scared Justice Department starkly contrast with how it operated under the man who would be his immediate predecessor — former Attorney General Alberto Gonzales.

Mukasey, a retired federal judge, said he also would review opinions issued by the department's office of legal counsel to make sure they are legally sound. He described as "defective" a 2002 memo that defended the Bush administration's use of torture techniques against terrorist suspects.

"That opinion 'was worse than a sin, it was a mistake,' Mukasey told the Senate Judiciary Committee. "It purported to justify measures based on broad grants of authority that were unnecessary."

Likewise, on politics, Mukasey said he would discourage his prosecutors from bringing charges against political candidates shortly before elections and would not let party loyalty be a consideration for people applying for Justice

Mukasey

Department jobs. "That's the standard I'm going to make very clear, very precise, and I'm going to enforce," Mukasey said.

It was a far cry from the policies Gonzales allowed before he resigned in September after months of criticism and questions about his honesty.

An internal Justice Department investigation is looking into whether Gonzales lied to lawmakers about the administration's terror programs and illegally let politics influence hiring and firing of prosecutors.

Gonzales, a close friend of President Bush and a former Texas Supreme Court Justice, has denied any wrongdoing.

The scandal tainted the Justice Department's long-cherished independent image and has demoralized its 110,000 employees.

"This is a job interview for a big job, a big job that has become even bigger," said Senate Judiciary Committee Chairman Patrick Leahy, D-Vt. "The next attorney general has to begin to regain the faith of the public."

"I'm awaiting an attorney general who will tell the president some things he may not like to hear," added Sen. Arlen Specter of Pennsylvania, the panel's top Republican. Mukasey will all but certainly be confirmed as the nation's 81st attorney general, and Sen. Charles E. Schumer, D-N.Y., predicted he may win unanimous support from Democrats who control the Senate Judiciary Committee—a panel generally suspicious of Bush's nominees.

As Mukasey was testifying on the first of potentially three days of committee hearings, Bush urged the Senate to confirm the attorney general hopeful next week. Democratic aides would not predict if that will happen.

In a calm, measured tone, Mukasey addressing a half-filled hearing room in a day-long appearance that was pre-empted for about two hours by the Dalai Lama's visit to the Capitol. His family and friends, including former FBI Director Louis Freeh, filled more of 30 reserved chairs in the room.

The hearing promised none of the drama that marked the Senate committee's often-combative questioning of Gonzales earlier this year. But Mukasey did not get off unscathed.

Sen. Russ Feingold, D-Wis., hammered Mukasey for writing a 2004 speech that derided criticism of the USA Patriot Act as "recreational hysteria." He also described as "somewhat troubling" Mukasey's reluctance to say whether he thinks the administration's terrorism surveillance program crossed the legal boundaries of a 1970 law setting limits on government spying in the United States.

Nearly 50 million Social Security recipients to get slight adjustment

Increase is smallest in four years

By Marita Crutsinger
Associated Press writer

WASHINGTON — Social Security benefits for nearly 50 million people will rise 2.3 percent starting in January, the smallest increase in four years. The typical retiree will face the challenge of using the extra $24 to cover higher costs for everything from gasoline and food to medical care.

The new cost-of-living figure announced Wednesday by the Social Security Administration means the typical retired worker's benefit check will go from $1,055 per month to $1,079.

The increase is the smallest since a 2.1-percent-boost in 2004 and is a full percentage point lower than the 3.3 percent adjustment for 2007. In 2006, benefits rose by 4.1 percent, the biggest gain in 15 years.

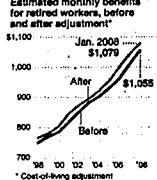

The adjustment is based on the change in consumer prices from this July through September compared with the same three-month period last year. Benefit payments have been tied to inflation since 1975.

In the past two years, retirees have benefited from the timeframe the government uses to set the adjustment for the next year. The 2006 increase picked up a jump in energy prices from that occurred in September 2005, reflecting the impact of Hurricane Katrina on production at Gulf Coast refineries.

This year, however, retirees may be penalized because energy costs, which moderated over the summer, are expected to pick up again during the final three months. In addition, food prices and medical prices have climbed rapidly.

But those gains have been offset somewhat by moderation in categories of goods that older people buy less: they include computers, consumer electronics and clothing.

"Retirees are going to feel a disconnect this year between the COLA increase and the reality of the inflation they face," said Mark Zandi, chief economist at Moody's Economy.com. "If this calculation were done in another three months, it would be measurably higher."

Advocates for the elderly said the small increase highlighted the need to revamp the cost-of-living adjustment to better reflect prices paid by retired people, including the money they spend on health care.

The Senior Citizens League said a study it has done showed that in eight spending areas, people over age 65 have lost 40 percent of their purchasing power since 2000. This finding reflects factors such as big increases for gasoline, home heating oil and prescription drugs.

Shannon Benton, the group's executive director, said it supports legislation that would base the adjustment on a special gauge of the Consumer Price Index, the most closely followed inflation barometer. It would be weighted to better reflect the goods and services that older people are buying.

David Sloane, director of government relations for AARP, which represents people 50 and older, said the cost-of-living adjustment is critical because so many depend on Social Security for most of their retirement income.

Newer test twice as good as Pap smear at spotting cervical cancer, study says

By Stephanie Nao
Associated Press writer

NEW YORK — A relatively new screening test was about twice as accurate as the traditional Pap smear at spotting cervical cancer, according to the first rigorous study of the test in North America.

The new test could replace the 50-year-old Pap in a matter of years, experts say. And there's a bonus for women: They won't need a screening test as often.

The HPV test, which looks for the virus that causes cervical cancer, correctly spotted 95 percent of the cancers. The Pap test, which checks for abnormal cells under a microscope, only found 55 percent, according to researchers at McGill University in Montreal, who published their findings in Thursday's New England Journal of Medicine.

"We've had the Pap test for over 50 years and it's high time it be replaced by technology that's more robust," said Eduardo Franco, director of McGill's division of cancer epidemiology who led the study.

Franco said some feared the HPV test would result in more false alarms, causing anxiety and requiring more follow-up testing. In the study, there were only slightly more false positives for the HPV tests (6 percent) than the Pap smears (3 percent).

HPV, or human papilloma virus, is a common sexually transmitted disease. Infections are mostly in young women and most go away on their own. The HPV test looks for the high-risk viruses that can cause cervical cancer if the infection persists. Like the Pap, it uses cells scraped from the cervix, the lower part of the uterus. Because the Pap test misses about half of the cases, doctors use frequent testing to catch the slow developing cancer at its earliest, most treatable stages.

The HPV test has been available in the U.S. since 2000 and was first used for inconclusive Pap tests. Now women over 30 can get a HPV test — but only along with a Pap — and wait three years to be tested again if both tests are negative.

More recently, scientists have been studying whether the HPV test can be used alone and whether it can prolong the intervals between exams. Debbie Saslow, director of breast and gynecologic cancer for the American Cancer Society, said evidence from a number of studies supports using the HPV test in place of a Pap.

Bush says he's still relevant, Congress has 'little to show'

By Terence Hazd
Associated Press writer

WASHINGTON — President Bush, weakened by record-low poll ratings, asserted he is still politically relevant and scolded the Democratic-led Congress on Wednesday for having "little to show for all the time that has gone by."

Trying to shape the political debate, Bush used a mid-morning news conference to lecture lawmakers about their failure to complete action on any spending bills to keep the government running or to send him legislation dealing with education, housing and other matters.

Saying he did not share any blame for Congress' failure to act, Bush said, "I think it is their fault that bills aren't moving."

With his presidency in its final 15 months, his approval ratings at just 31 percent in the latest Associated Press-Ipsos poll and Democrats running Congress, Bush has little clout to push his own agenda through Congress.

However, he can stop the Democrats' proposals with his veto since Congress has been unable so far to override his rejection of troop withdrawal deadlines in Iraq and expanded stem cell research.

The House on Thursday is expected to fail to override his veto of an expansion of a popular children's health insurance program.

Bush said his veto pen was "one way to ensure that I am relevant; that's one way to ensure that I am in the process. And I intend to use the veto."

Bush said Congress, under Democratic control for nine months, has not "managed to pass many important bills. Now the clock is winding down and in some key areas Congress is just getting started." Congress should act on mortgage relief for homeowners hit by the housing crisis, trade deals that would strengthen allies, legislation expanding U.S. markets and aid to military veterans, Bush said.

"I'm looking forward to getting some things done for the American people," Bush said. "And if it doesn't get done, I'm looking forward to reminding people as to why it's not getting done."

Democrats were quick to return Bush's criticism.

"While the Democratic Congress works to pass children's health insurance, to protect Americans while preserving civil liberties, and to end the disastrous Iraq war, the president chose to launch another partisan attack," said House Speaker Nancy Pelosi, D-Calif.

While Bush opened his news conference with criticism of Congress, reporters turned the questioning to foreign policy subjects.

The president spoke candidly about the souring of relations with Russian President Vladimir Putin, a leader he once praised as straightforward and trustworthy. Relations have cooled because of U.S. criticism of Russia's backsliding on democracy, and Russia's objections to a U.S.-planned missile defense system in eastern Europe.

Cyberthreats said to be increasing against electric grid

By H. Josef Hebert
Associated Press writer

WASHINGTON — The electricity grid, power plants and refineries are increasing threats from computer hackers who could cause major disruptions and economic chaos, congressional investigators say.

Private industry and government are paying more attention to cybersecurity. But the Government Accountability Office said control systems at such critical facilities "are more vulnerable (today) to cyberattacks than in the past."

Among the reasons are the extensive use of the Internet and the systems' links.

Greg Wilshusen, the agency's director of information security issues, told a House Homeland Security subcommittee Wednesday that the government has improved the security of power lines, nuclear plants, refineries and power stations.

Yet, he added, "there is yet no overall strategy to coordinate the various activities across federal agencies and the private sector."

The agency and several lawmakers said the Homeland Security Department is not doing enough to spread word about adequate standards for cybersecurity and threat information.

"The cyber-risk to these systems is increasing," said Rep. James Langevin, chairman of the subcommittee on emerging threats, cybersecurity and science and technology. "If this administration doesn't recognize and prioritize these problems soon, the future isn't going to be pretty."

Langevin, D-R.I., cited the recent disclosure that government scientists at the Energy Department's Idaho National Laboratory were able to hack into a simulated power plant control system and cause an electric generator to destruct.

While the test was conducted on a small-scale system, experts said it showed that a similar attack potentially could disable huge generators and other equipment essential to power production.

Big reforms coming to the Big Easy after storms

NEW ORLEANS — People here haul out multi-syllable adjectives to describe the back-to-back storms that devastated Louisiana two years ago. Catastrophic, cataclysmic and apocalyptic are three of the favorites.

Touring New Orleans today, seeing barren lots where homes once stood and giant X's still marking houses to indicate if bodies were found, it is easy to think in these terms.

But hurricanes Katrina and Rita did more than just destroy homes and histories. They seem to have changed Louisiana's personality. Where once cronyism and corruption were tolerated almost as local eccentricities, today they are viewed as the detritus of a benighted past.

As voters prepare to elect a new governor and a large slate of legislators on Saturday, ethics is the new byword and brains may trump political brawn. The political emphasis post-Katrina isn't so much ideological — Democrat vs. Republican — as it is reform vs. status quo. Leading the reform surge, as well as in the polls, is a young politician Huey Long could never have imagined. Bobby Jindal, the wiry and wired Republican son of Indian immigrants, doesn't look like a Louisiana good 'ol boy and he doesn't talk like one either.

At 36, he has a resume that should place him closer to retirement than to yet another career. A Rhodes Scholar, Jindal was accepted to the medical and law schools of both Harvard and Yale though he attended neither.

While still in his 20s, he served as president of the University of Louisiana System and as assistant secretary of the U.S.

KATHLEEN PARKER

Department of Health and Human Services. He successfully reformed Louisiana's Medicaid program and was elected to the U.S. House of Representatives in 2004.

Meeting at a Baton Rouge coffee shop late in the afternoon, I was relieved when Jindal did not have coffee. The man has so much energy, I already he could change batteries. I ordered a double cappuccino.

If elected, Jindal wants to turn that energy on ethics reform, which might make him popular among voters. With legislators, maybe not so much.

He wants to make lawmakers fully disclose their finances — income, assets and debts. He also wants to forbid legislators from serving as lobbyists or consultants while in office and to prevent people from serving in government and doing business with government at the same time. Jindal's tough-love approach to the business of government stems from his belief that Louisiana is at a now-or-never point in its history.

If the state doesn't get its programs straightened out, Big Easy, for one, may go down hard and Louisiana may never recover.

What happens here also affects the rest of the country, as Louisiana is home to a third of the nation's petrochemical industry. As a port and entry point to the Mississippi River, the state is also crucial to distribution of 40 percent of the nation's natural gas and 20 percent of its imported crude oil. A third of the seafood consumed in the U.S. is harvested off the Louisiana coast. Jindal has found support in unexpected quarters, including the 65-member Louisiana Sheriffs' Association, all but seven of them Democrats.

The group supported a Jindal opponent when he first ran for governor in 2003, the race Kathleen Blanco won. She is not seeking reelection.

The sheriffs' convention to Jindal's camp is another of Katrina's legacies. St. Bernard Parish Sheriff Jack Stephens told me that many voters have "buyers remorse," and, "we've come to play a high value on intellect."

Also, in the days after Katrina when state and local leaders were tangled up in one epinephrine-induced panic, his opponents to play a deck of cards — from religion to ethnicity. One ad asserted that Jindal, a Catholic, is anti-Protestant. The state Democratic Party has used Jindal's given name, Piyush, clearly aiming to rally ethnophobes.

In an act of desperation, one opponent ran a television ad noting that, yeah, sure, Jindal's got brains, but does he have a heart?

Being too smart hasn't been plaguing Louisiana leadership lately. It couldn't hurt to give brains a chance.

Something useful from Washington: an affordable housing trust fund

WASHINGTON — House Representatives, which has a penchant for spending time on issues such as the Armenian genocide of 1915, actually did something useful last week. It passed a bill creating an Affordable Housing Trust Fund, a measure which, if it becomes law, would add 1.5 million badly needed units in the next decade.

The bill has been sought by housing and homeless advocates, local governments and their allies for the better part of a decade. It was endorsed by the National Association of Realtors and the National Association of Home Builders. Its champions in the House included Rep. Barney Frank of Massachusetts, the Democratic committee chairman, and Rep. Maxine Waters of California, who heads the housing subcommittee.

The measure, which passed the House last Wednesday, creates a separate Treasury account, similar to the Highway Trust Fund, that can be used only to build, repair or rehabilitate affordable rental units and assist first-time homebuyers with their down payments. The funds from the trust will be distributed to states and local communities, which will allocate money to people on the basis of need. The first priority will go to those who are struggling hardest to find decent shelter for their families.

Sadly, their numbers have been increasing. The Joint Center for Housing Studies at Harvard reported that in 2005, the latest year for which records are available, 2.3 million more households will go into the rental market that consumed at least 30 percent of their income — bringing the total of such burdened households to 37.3 million. More than 8.9 million renters and 8 million homeowners had "severe" housing burdens, meaning more than half their income went for that purpose.

In addition, on any given night, about 750,000 people were homeless.

The new fund is expected to have between $800 million and $1 billion a year to distribute. The money will come from a 1.2 percent charge on the value of mortgages held by Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac, two government-chartered, privately owned financial agencies, and a similar contribution from the reserves of the Federal Housing Administration.

Some Republicans argued that this is a backdoor way of taxing some homebuyers to benefit others, but Frank insists that no one's mortgage payments would rise as a result of the bill.

The other Republican objection was a bureaucratic one — an argument that this fund should be made part of another, smaller program already running in the Department of Housing and Urban Development. But the other program depends on annual appropriations, while this one would have an assured source of money not subject to the vagaries of the congressional budget process.

Rep. Shelley Moore Capito, a Republican who spoke for the bill, noted that her state of West Virginia, like several others, had a Housing Trust Fund of its own. She said she welcomed the aid that the federal fund could provide — with great flexibility on its use.

The bad news is that prospects for Senate action are uncertain. In part because Sen. Chris Dodd of Connecticut, Frank's counterpart as committee chairman, is preoccupied with his campaign for the Democratic presidential nomination.

And the Bush administration has warned that the measure could face a presidential veto. If it gets that far in anything like its present form.

An Oct. 9 memo from the White House Office of Management and Budget, which said it would recommend a veto, argued that the Trust Fund proposal would "disrupt the appropriations process" and might even lead FHA to "ration credit."

The spending issue is the same one that has caused the president to strike down the proposed expansion of Social Security's Health Insurance Program.

The bill creating the Housing Trust Fund passed 264-148 — 216 votes short of the maximum two-thirds majority needed to override a veto, but with 23 members absent and uncounted.

Housing is not a sexy issue for presidents, or presidential candidates. The Senate will have the president almost no newspaper coverage. But housing is as important to people as food and drink — and life itself. Will the Senate act? Will the president renege? I will keep reporting this story.

Turkey approves possible attacks across Iraq border

By Christopher Torchia
Associated Press writer

ISTANBUL, Turkey — Parliament authorized the government Wednesday to carry out a cross-border attack on Kurdish rebels in northern Iraq, approving an offensive that would put Turkey at odds with the U.S. There is no sign of an imminent invasion.

Washington and Iraq have pressured Ankara to show restraint and Turkish leaders signaled that they would not immediately give the order to send in the 60,000 troops, armor and attack helicopters into a region that has largely escaped the chaos of the Iraq war.

The crisis along the Turkey-Iraq border, where the Turkish forces have massed since summer, has driven up oil prices along with tensions between Ankara and its NATO ally, the United States.

President Bush said the U.S. was making clear to NATO ally Turkey that it should not stage a major army operation in the Iraqi north, much of which has escaped the sustained violence and political discord common in the rest of Iraq since the U.S.-led invasion in 2003.

Bush said Turkey has had troops stationed in northern Iraq "for quite a while," a reference to about 1,500 soldiers deployed for years to monitor the rebel Kurdistan Workers' Party, or PKK, with the permission of Iraqi Kurd authorities.

"We don't think it's in their interest to send more troops in," he said. Although the vote lifted the last legal obstacle to an offensive, Turkish leaders apparently hoped that the threat of an incursion would prod Iraq and the U.S. to move against rebel bases.

Turkey, which last carried out a major incursion into Iraq a decade ago with 50,000 soldiers, estimates 5,000 Turkish Kurd guerrillas operate from Iraq and 2,300 are inside Turkey.

An attack would put the United States in a difficult position between key allies: Turkey, a relatively stable Muslim democracy in a strategic region prone to conflict, and the Iraqi central government as well as the Kurdish administration in Iraq's autonomous northern region.

In a 507-19 vote, Turkey's Parliament approved military operations against rebel bases in northern Iraq over the next year, but the government appeared willing to give diplomatic pressure on the U.S.-backed Iraqi administration more time to work.

Turkey also moved to explain its decision to invade Iraq in pursuit of the PKK to its Arab neighbors with Turkish Foreign Minister Ali Babacan visiting both Egypt and Lebanon.

Oil prices surged briefly to a new record of $89 a barrel after the vote. Traders worry that any escalation in the conflict will cut oil supplies from northern Iraq.

Iraqi PM pressing U.S. for quicker withdrawal of Blackwater

By Steven R. Hurst
Associated Press writer

BAGHDAD — Prime Minister Nouri al-Maliki has pressed U.S. Embassy officials in recent meetings to pull the Blackwater-USA security firm out of Iraq even before the six-month deadline he initially set, a top aide to the Iraqi leader said Wednesday.

The aide said the Americans responded that they cannot give al-Maliki an answer until the FBI finishes its inquiry into the incident in which Iraqi officials say Blackwater personnel killed 17 Iraqis.

FBI agents on Saturday began questioning survivors and other witnesses to the Sept. 16 shooting by guards in four Blackwater gun trucks.

Iraq's government says they opened fire without provocation; the company says the guards responded to an attack.

The State Department also has teams in Iraq looking into what happened. Patrick Kennedy, the department's top management official, is said to be studying whether the agency should continue using Blackwater to provide security.

Al-Maliki's aide, who spoke on condition he not be identified because of the sensitivity of the matter, said an Australian-owned security firm, whose employees mistakenly shot and killed two Christian women Oct. 9 does not face eviction from Iraq because it quickly apologized, cooperated with authorities and offered compensation for the deaths.

Iraq's government is demanding $8 million compensation for each of the 17 people reported killed in the Sept. 16 incident involving Blackwater.

Coming off a 30-7 record and fourth-place finish last year's national tournament, the Golden Eagles trail only top-ranked Chipola College of Marianna, Fla., which finished 33-3 last season and second in the nation to Texas Midland College, which enters the new season ranked fifth.

SLCC takes over No. 1 spot

Why not add another chapter? The story of the rivalry between the College of Southern Idaho and Salt Lake Community College athletic programs has been nearly as epic and pointed as William Shakespeare's legendary tale of the feuding Montagues and Capulets.

While one of the most heated rivalries in junior college sports has been contested over three region championships and a number of Scenic West Athletic Conference battles over the past two years, Saturday's 3 p.m. match between the programs' volleyball teams in Salt Lake City will feature something the rivalry hasn't seen since 2005: A team ranked No. 1 in the nation.

The 35-1 Bruins overtook previous No. 1 Western Nebraska Community College in the most recent NJCAA Division I Volleyball Poll, released Wednesday. Western Nebraska fell 30-27, 28-30, 15-12 to No. 7 rank Phillips College (Texas) on Saturday to drop to No. 5 overall. Meanwhile, The Bruins are in the midst of a 21-match win streak heading into Friday's home match against North Idaho College.

The 32-9 Golden Eagles jumped up two spots in the poll as No. 11 Blinn College (Texas) and No. 15 Hillsborough Community College (Fla.) fell out of the Top 10 after holding the No. 3 and No. 8 spots, respectively, in last week's poll. While CSI has to get

HITTING THE PITCH

Filer senior Matt Henry leads the Bulldogs and Class 3A state champion Filer in a preying debut season for the school's girls soccer team.

Jerome's Sergio Becerra has been a big player in the Tigers' run to the Class 4A state tournament. The Tigers took on Bonanza in the first round derby in Pocatello.

Upstart Wildcats hoping to punch above weight at state

By David Bessner
Times-News writer

It sounds like something straight out of a Hollywood script, but it's actually true. And it happened right here in the Magic Valley. A team, which didn't even exist a year ago, embarks upon the quest for a state championship, starting with the Class 3A quarterfinal showdown in Pocatello.

In his first year, Filer coach Shane Filler delivered a strong message during the regular season and then won three games in the District IV tournament to reach the state tournament with a record of 10-5.

"The girls are very confident," Filler coach Shane Filler said.

Tourney bracket no picnic for area's Class 4A squads

By David Bessner
Times-News writer

Few expected this from Jerome's boys' soccer team: Breaking up the "Big Three" derby schedule, the Tigers ultimately exceeded everyone's expectations to edge an elite District IV championship match on penalties over Burley and qualify for the Class 4A state tournament.

"The kids were actually hyper throughout the week and wanting to play again," Filler said.

Champs: Bulldogs best Wildcats for SCIC tourney title

By Diane Phibin
Times-News writer

KIMBERLY — When the early-season predictions were made, the Kimberly Bulldogs were picked to finish in the middle of the five-team Sawtooth Central Idaho Conference and that was pretty much where the Bulldogs finished. But after Tuesday's 16-25, 25-22, 25-5, 25-20 win over Filer in the championship game of the Class 3A District IV Tournament, the Bulldogs are headed for state. Filler knocked off the top seed and regular-season champion Gooding Senators in a loser out match, 25-21, 15-25, 16-25, 27-25, 15-11 to earn a spot in the championship game against Kimberly.

The Wildcats lost their opening match of the tournament to Kimberly and had to beat Declo and Buhl before facing Gooding.

"I think the kids just knew they would win district," said Kimberly coach Jan Hall. "Tonight, we came out flat in the first game but then we all remembered how much fun volleyball can be."

The Bulldogs got their usual stellar performances from senior Cassie Newberry with a match-high 16 kills and sophomore Alex Pfeiffer, who recorded a double-double with 12 kills and 11 assists. On defense, junior Sarah Lentz had a team-high 13 digs and senior setter Bailey Keller dished out 19 assists. Keller has no regrets about the players that always seem to get most of the attention for the high number of kills they record.

"I feel great about putting the ball down in their hands," said Keller.

For Filler, freshman Mackenzie Jasper led the Wildcats with nine kills and 23 digs and senior libero Erica Kober had 22 digs. Senior Emma Wierama had seven kills and junior Katie Vierstra added five. Senior setters, Kayla and Kelsey Richards combined for 25 assists.

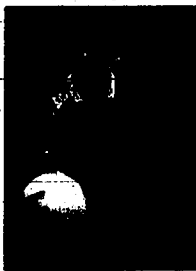

"We just missed way too many serves at crucial times," said Filler coach Ed Richards. "Our attack at the beginning was great but we got a little slow and didn't finish. Kimberly played well. Jan has worked hard for a long time to earn a trip to state."

FLER 3, GOODING 2
Successful passing highlighted the Wildcats 25-21, 15-25, 16-25, 27-25, 15-11 win over the Senators.

Vierstra had 12 kills and Wierama had 10 for the Wildcats. The Richards twins totaled 43 assists.

Senior Jordan Braga and Niel Abramowski chipped in double-doubles for the Senators. Braga led Gooding with 12 kills and had 20 digs. Abramowski had one less kill and 24 digs. Senior libero Megan Plerson had a match-high 28 digs and Fallon Turner chipped in 14.

Gooding ended the season at 11-8.

The power of 2 earns win streak

M winning two weeks in a row in any fantasy league I've played in is as likely as my Oakland Raiders making the playoffs.

BILL WAMBEKE

While the Raiders were thrashed by the San Diego Chargers last week, I benefited from the Raiders' poor performance defending LaDainian Tomlinson. Four touchdowns and almost 200 yards later, LT helped my team to 133 points and a 31-point win last week.

Cleveland Browns quarterback Derek Anderson also had four touchdowns (three passing, one rushing) and accounted for 28 points. Those two had more than half of my team's points. Jacksonville's defense and Tampa Bay Buccaneers receiver Joey Galloway also helped the cause.

The problem still remains the lack of a second running back. I thought Justin Fargas of the Raiders was going to get the job done, but he was wrong. Three points later, I'm ready to drop him.

Washington Redskins running back Ladell Betts has given me zero production. For whatever reason, the Redskins have gone away from him as a reliable substitute for starter Clinton Portis. Last year he was a stud finding it, now he's riding the pine on the sideline. I could have avoided all this if I wouldn't have traded away Jacksonville's Maurice Jones-Drew.

I've also realized it's time to cut ties with Tennessee Titans quarterback Vince Young. Young has driven fantasy owners crazy because of his inconsistent numbers. He's only thrown for more than 200 yards a handful of times in his young career. You figure he would make it up scrambling and running quarterback draws but he hasn't even done that in his year. Now he's got a bum leg and is questionable for Sunday's game against the Houston Texans. I've offered him as trade bait but no one is willing to take him. Now I'm forced to drop him and get nothing in return.

Sorry to anybody who took my advice and picked up Arizona Cardinals quarterback Kurt Warner who promptly went out and busted up his elbow in the first few minutes against the Carolina Panthers.

My advice for this week: Hold on to who you have and try and predict who'll score four TDs or more.

A bit of Magic comes to China as NBA looks to expand reach

SHANGHAI, China — LeBron James stood in the middle of the court at halftime, an advertisement as big as any for next year's Olympic.

He wore a replica of the red and silver torch for the Beijing Games while Chinese and U.S. flags hung from the rafters of newly built Qizhong Arena.

The public address announcer mingled English with Chinese. NBA commissioner David Stern was at the game. Jazz musician Kenny G sat in the front row.

"The atmosphere was amazing," James said. "Everything I expected and more."

James and his Cleveland Cavaliers lost an exhibition game on the outskirts of Shanghai on Wednesday, October 10-06 by Orlando Magic.

But the final score was the least of it.

This was the first of the NBA's three "China Games," and Stern was on hand to explain the league's massive expansion plans in a country with the world's fastest growing major economy. This is also where 300 million people — the entire population of the United States — are reported to play basketball.

The halftime show — James aside — featured a juggler balancing one-legged on a unicycle. She began with a dozen bowls stacked on her head. She then succeeded in flicking a half-dozen more atop the stack, throwing them with flicks of her right leg.

James finished with 17 points in 28 minutes.

He expects the disgruntled Los Angeles Lakers' star to play in an exhibition game Thursday night.

"Yeah, we'll probably play him, get him out there," Jackson said after practice Wednesday. "He seemed all right, sure did."

The Lakers face Seattle in Bakersfield on Thursday night in the first of six exhibition games in nine days. They lost their first two exhibition games to Golden State last week in Honolulu.

Bryant hadn't practiced since Saturday because of a knee kneec. He didn't speak with reporters Wednesday, but made his feelings clear a day earlier in his only formal interview since Lakers owner Jerry Buss stated he "would certainly listen" to trade offers for the two-time defending NBA scoring champion.

Boozler returns to lead Jazz

SALT LAKE CITY — Carlos Boozler had 17 points and 10 rebounds as the Utah Jazz beat the Philadelphia 76ers 101-93 Wednesday in an exhibition game.

Boozler, making his first appearance in front of his home fans after missing, most of training camp while tending to his ill son, led four Jazz players in double figures.

Twice knocked down, Cabrera rallies for playoff win at Grand Slam

TUCKER'S TOWN, Bermuda — U.S. Open champion Angel Cabrera thought he was on the ropes when he couldn't get out of the hole, he made triple bogey on the first hole to fall five shots behind Wednesday in the PGA Grand Slam of Golf.

Worse yet was missing a short par putt on the 16th that really crippled his chances.

"It was more difficult to be two behind on the 16th than five behind on the second tee," Cabrera said. "There's a lot of golf left on the second tee — not on the 17th."

He made the most of the little golf he had left, finishing birdie-eagle to close with a 2-under-68 and force a playoff with British Open champion Padraig Harrington (69), then beating the Irishman with a birdie on the third extra hole.

Both finished at 4-under-136.

Some 7,000 fans at the Mid-Ocean Club — that's about 10 percent of the population of Bermuda — were treated to an exciting finale they never saw coming. Harrington led for four shot with 11 holes to play and appeared to hold off a revolving door of challengers from the other three major champions in the field.

Jim Furyk, the replacement when PGA champion Tiger Woods skipped the event for a hip injury he was plagued, had momentum on his side until he tried to hit a shot he didn't have out of the bunker, knocking it over the green and into the bushes for a triple-bogey 8.

Masters champion Zach Johnson, seven shots behind with 10 holes to play made up five shots in five holes but couldn't get any closer.

"I couldn't keep track of who he was behind me," Harrington said.

Buckeyes, Bulls face tricky first games as Nos. 1 and 2

NEW YORK (AP) — It had been 11 years, since Nos. 1 and 2 met on the same day before LSU and California pulled the trick last week.
In this unpredictable college football season, would it be all that surprising to see the top two teams in the AP poll and the BCS standings go down in the same weekend again?

Top-ranked Ohio State and No. 2 South Florida both face unranked opponents. But 10 teams with top-10 rankings have already lost 6:30 p.m. ESPN to unranked opponents, so what's a couple more?
The Buckeyes' (7-0, 3-Big Ten) first game this season as No. 1 will be at home against Michigan State and former Ohio State defensive coordinator Mark Dantonio, who in his first season as head coach has the Spartans (5-2, 1-2) well positioned for their first winning season since 2003.

Dantonio has the Spartans getting after the quarterback, they're second in the nation in sacks with 29, and running the ball well (243 yards per game).
Ohio State's rise from No. 21 to start the season includes only one victory over a team that's been ranked at any point this season.

South Florida, the feel-good story out of the Big East, faces last year's feel-good story out of the Big East, the Bulls (6-0, 1-0) visit Rutgers on Thursday night.
The Scarlet Knights (4-2, 1-1), who started the season 16th in the rankings, broke a two-game losing streak with a win over Syracuse last week.
Saturday's game would put Rutgers' league title hopes in peril.
The pick: South Florida.

Utah-TCU not midseason clash it could have been

PORTLAND, Ore. (AP) — Forget the expected matchup of Missouri and Iowa in the Big Ten's new Bowl Championship Series run.
No, Utah vs. TCU on Thursday night won't be the game many thought it would be. Or should have been.

Instead of a midseason matchup for conference supremacy and national recognition, the preseason favorites to win the league (both 4-3, 1-2 MWC) are trying to avoid mutual elimination in the Mountain West conference's new bowl game.

"They gave you the goal, didn't they, based on how it turns out and how you do things. Right now, you can't win it," says coach Gary Patterson. "History tells you that if you have three losses, it's tough to win it."
Utah and TCU have both set off to a slow start for different reasons, but the two teams have started to gain their momentum.

Down 3-1, Beckett and Red Sox need win over Indians in ALCS

CLEVELAND (AP) — History gives Josh Beckett and the Red Sox a pretty good shot. They've come back from big postseason deficits.
Then again, they didn't do it against these Cleveland Indians.
Down 3-1 in the AL championship series, Beckett and Boston will have to save their season when they face C.C. Sabathia tonight. It's a rematch of the opener, the only game the Red Sox won.
"I don't think there's anyone in the league that we'd prefer on the mound for our team in this situation," Boston third baseman Mike Lowell said. "We can believe all we want, but we have to get hits off Sabathia and hold them down."
In 2004, the Red Sox ended an 86-year four-series championship drought with a World Series sweep of St. Louis. First, though, they had to overcome a 3-0 deficit in the ALCS against the New York Yankees.

The Red Sox became the first team to win a postseason series after losing the first three games.
"When you see something that's never been done before, you can believe in anything," first baseman Kevin Youkilis said. "For us, it's all about winning one game."
Seven players from that World Series team, including David Ortiz and Manny Ramirez, are still with the Red Sox.
One who wasn't there also came back from a 3-1 LCS deficit.
Beckett started Florida's comeback in 2003 with a two-hit shutout against the Chicago Cubs in Game 5. He struck out 11 and walked one.

Bills' Everett determined to continue recovery

HOUSTON — Buffalo Bills tight end Kevin Everett feels fortunate to be alive, and is determined to continue the significant progress he's already made in the five weeks since sustaining a severe spinal cord injury.
"1 have shown significant progress in my recovery," Everett said Wednesday. In a statement released by Memorial Hermann/TIRR, where the player has spent the past three weeks in bed.
"1 am also fully aware that the recovery from this type of injury I have sustained is filled with many peaks and valleys.
"1 will be glad to return to work and hard, I am determined to fight through it each and every day."
The comments were Everett's first since he was hurt while making a tackle during Buffalo's season opener against Denver on Sept. 9. They came days after Everett was able to take a few first steps with the assistance of a walker.

After working through a preseason schedule that has so far included scrimmages wins over No. 1 Chipola and No. 21 South Plains College of Levelland, Texas, the Golden Eagles are looking forward to the Thursday, Nov. 1 season opener against Central Arizona College during the first day of the 31st Annual K&I Steel Tournament in Twin Falls.

The CSI women also expect the rewards from last year's strong 25-7 finish will start the new season ranked No. 11 in the nation. The Golden Eagles are the only ranked scenic West Athletic Conference women's team. Seward County Community College of Liberal, Kan., picked up the

No money, no access Health Initiative Trust surveys reveal varied concerns from providers about health care in Twin Falls County

By Nate Poppino
Times-News writer

The community has spoken.

And so far, it's all over the place when it comes to health care in Twin Falls County.

The county Health

Initiatives Trust board of directors is still examining 900 surveys returned from about 9,800 mailed to health care providers. But the early results, which will help the board determine what services already exist in the county and what challenges providers face, cover everything from inadequate health care access to the high costs of health insurance and medical procedures.

Once compiled, the information will be combined with community responses to help the board decide the health care priorities in the area, which they then plan to address with grant money. The trust, formed as part of the deal that sold Magic Valley Regional Medical Center to St. Luke's Health System, was started with $15 million earlier this year and will receive an additional $500,000 a year for the next 10 years.

"We've had some really wonderful comments," Tom Mikese, board member and Twin Falls county commissioner, said Wednesday after going through about 50 of the surveys.

The next step will be compiling those comments and communicating the results, something board members say they need more help with. An advertisement seeking new board members over the last two weeks failed to stir any interest in the jobs.

Leaky neutrons Twin Falls-born scientist keeps nukes out of U.S.

By Nate Poppino
Times-News writer

Sept. 11 would be small fry compared to this.

A mushroom cloud appears over Manhattan. A radioactive plume poisons the water, air and land all the way to the tip of Massachusetts, with damages and cleanup costs approaching $3 trillion.

And, as nuclear engineer Eric Smith said Wednesday evening, "chaos ensues."

It's a bleak, worst-case picture. But Smith and his fellow engineers at laboratories across the U.S. are on the case.

Smith, born and raised in Twin Falls, returned home to speak at the October Herrett Forum, a lecture series featuring topics from health care to paleontology. His talk focused on border security — specifically what scientists like him do to keep nuclear "dirty" bombs and similar materials away from U.S. shores.

"The problem is that there's radiation everywhere around us," said Smith, who now works at the Pacific Northwest National Laboratory in Richland, Wash.

So, he said, scientists have to become adept at recognizing what radiation signatures mean. To demonstrate the challenge, he took the audience of about 60

TWIN FALLS SCHOOLS TO CONTRACT SPECIAL SERVICE

Mike Zienberg, a PSR employee, works with Ignacio Goodfetti, shown above and below, a student in Judy Woody's first grade class, Wednesday afternoon at Oregon Trail Elementary in Twin Falls.

Two local companies to provide special education

By Andrea Gates
Times-News writer

A decision by the Twin Falls School District to contract out a specific type of special education service concerns at least one parent who worries the quality of help her autistic 12-year-old son receives could decline.

"I'm concerned the level of qualifications will go down and perhaps the money saved won't counter the effects," said the parent, Teresa Pettingill, last week at a regular meeting of the Twin Falls School District Board of Trustees.

This week, though, school district officials said the change is designed to enhance services, and cost analyses have not yet been completed.

Starting in about 10 months, the school district will no longer directly employ workers in Psycho Social Rehabilitation, or PSR. They work with certain children on behavior control issues as well as socializing and communication skills.

Around 67 children in the school district, spanning all grade levels, receive PSR services, said Twin Falls School District Director of Support Services Clara Allred. Some of the children are eligible for Medicaid, which pays for their PSR needs — but officials did not know how many students that applied to.

By the next school year, the PSR workers will be contracted from two local agencies — Absolute Family Solutions in Twin Falls and Adolescent Day Treatment, or SME, in Jerome.

The quality of the service and training for providers will not decrease, school officials stressed.

No one is saying what the exact financial impact will be before it announced plans to hire out services. The school district has since offered to pay for some additional training for those employees, Allred said.

But Allred said not all the PSR workers will continue to work with the district through contracts.

The district has already been contracting some special services out. Students with more severe special needs are bussed to the Jerome facility, where they stay for a whole school day.

The school district will be looking into moving the day treatment closer to the schools.

"That's also on the burner," said Allred.

The contract service switch has garnered little public debate, and Pettingill would like to see more input from the community on the issue.

Pettingill had called for a "focus group" to discuss the contract switch. She plans on speaking at the next school board meeting, and she said she appreciates the district's responsiveness to her concerns.

Andrea Gates can be reached at 735-3380.

Dr. Eric Smith, a TFHS graduate who became an engineer and works with the Pacific Northwest National Laboratory, speaks Wednesday night at this month's Herrett Forum at the Herrett Center in Twin Falls.

$10.25 million Kimberly school bond vote held today

Times-News

Kimberly residents can vote today on a proposed school bond for up to $10.25 million that would buy additional classrooms at the district's three schools.

Schools are "full" and this year's enrollment rose by 74 students compared to last year, which had a 10 percent enrollment growth rate during the last five years, according to information from the Kimberly School District.

The proposed school bond election would fund four classrooms at the high school with additional labs and equipment space, as well as an agricultural/science building with classrooms, a shop, an office and relocation of the greenhouse.

Cast your vote

Voting will be held from 8 a.m. to 8 p.m. at Kimberly High School, 985 Center St. W.

The old high school could be taken down, and six classrooms at the middle school could be erected, as well as a multi-purpose lunchroom.

Six new classrooms at the elementary school could also be built, along with a library, support facilities, workrooms and office space.

This is the second school bond attempt since January, when a proposed $6 million bond failed by one vote.

With a home valued at $150,000 the annual cost to the homeowner is estimated at $18 per month for the 20-year life of the new bonds. This includes $4 million remaining from bonds issued in 1999 when the high school was built.

More than 80 percent of voters supported the 1999 school bond.

If the school bond passes, the $2.69 levy rate and the $18 monthly estimate for taxpayers would not change — but the number of years for payback would increase.

Mary Margaret Jones

Mary Margaret Jones, 88, of Gooding, passed away Monday, Oct. 15, 2007, at the Gooding County Memorial Hospital.

Margaret, as she was known by her friends, was born Dec. 23, 1918, in Elmore County, west of Hill City, which is now in Camas County to Andrew Fred and Sylvia Andersen. She was the third child in a family of nine children. Due to the Great Depression, Margaret worked hard at every job she could find to provide for her education. She graduated from Gooding High School, Gooding, Gooding College and received a teaching degree from Albion Normal School in 1939. She taught several years at various schools in the area.

On June 6, 1943, she married John Wesley Jones in Fairfield. She was a wonderful mother to her husband's two sons, Richard and Pat, and the couple's two daughters, Cheryl and Nancy. She was a homemaker when the children were small. When they got older, she began working at the family-owned Ray Jones & Sons general store. In 1965 when the store was sold, she went back to teaching.

In 1971, she earned a bachelor's degree in education from Idaho State University. She taught third grade at Camas Elementary School until she retired in 1984. She really enjoyed working with children and most of her hours outside the classroom helping those who needed extra help. She stayed active in the community until her health declined the last few years.

She is survived by one son, Wayne "Pat" (Clara) Fowler Walden. He grew up and attended schools in Arkansas. On Oct. 22, 1938, Merl married Roberta Ann Lee Martin in Arkansas. Merl served his country proudly in the U.S. Navy during World War II. In 1945, they came to Idaho for a visit and then returned to Idaho in 1947 to live in their home. They lived in Castledorf until 1952, when they moved to Filer, where they have resided since. Merl worked for the Twin Falls Canal Company for more than 40 years, retiring in the early 1980s.

Following their retirements, Merl and Roberta went on many camping and fishing trips with their close friends to many Idaho destinations. In 1991, they began to make family vacations twice a year to places such as Yellowstone, the Oregon Coast, Nevada and California.

The funeral will be held at 11 a.m. Friday, Oct. 19, at the Fairfield Community Church, with Pastor Chuck Butler officiating. Interment will be at the Mountain View Cemetery north of Fairfield. Viewing for family and friends will be from 7 p.m. Thursday, Oct. 18, at Demary Funeral Service, Gooding Chapel. Memorial contributions may be made to the Camas County Library Building Fund or the Camas County Senior Citizens Center.

Trust

 resulted in 30 applicants, and a handful have responded to the board's search for a financial investment adviser. The investment adviser will help the trust grow — the interest will pay for the grants — and any board candidates would replace some long-serving members of the board and expand its membership from eight to 11. The executive assistant may provide the most relief for the board: That person's duties will include coordinating the board's calendar and presentations to Rotary clubs, the media and others. "I think it's very, very good news that people are interested in the position," board chairman Curtis Eaton said. The 900 returned surveys were also a pleasant surprise for the group. Based on his experience, Mikessell said, he had expected closer to 500. The larger return was a sign of the interest in the board's work. "A lot of people are very excited to be involved in this process," he said. The provider-and public surveys were released later than planned. But the board, Eaton said, still plans to meet its goal of releasing the first grants in late spring or early summer 2008. "That's kind of the only real deadline we've set for ourselves, and I think we're still on track for that." Nate Poppino can be reached at 735-3237 or npoppino@magicvalley.com.

 improving our economic base." Dunn holds an associate's degree in business administration from Southeast Community College in Lincoln, Neb., and is a certified building inspector. Since the first of the year, he has worked as an administrator responsible for overseeing the Twin Falls County Planning and Zoning and Building departments. Dunn admits he doesn't have a lot of experience in public office or politics, but his career has allowed him to work directly with city council members and other agencies on building issues. He served as president of the High Desert Chapter of Building Officials in 2006, and has been selected to hold that position again in 2008. "I'm also on the State Board of Building Officials," he said. "We're basically responsible for making sure that planning and zoning guidelines and building ordinances are uniform across the state." If elected, Dunn says he would like the new Filter sewer project to move forward more efficiently. "I've sat in on a few City Council meetings and haven't really heard much about it but it's been a year and it seems that all the details should probably have been taken care of before now," he said. "This is a great community and we've got a good council, but I think I can help."

Nukes

 through a brief primer on radiation detection and border security techniques. Those include hundreds of yellow scanners U.S. authorities have installed at ports of entry since 2002. The job can sometimes seem daunting, Smith said, especially after he took a boat out once on a lake that bordered Canada. "We're spending so much time putting portal monitors up at ports of entry, and the only deterrent out here is if the terrorists can't swim," he joked. But he loves his work. The son of state Sen. Leon Smith, R-Twin Falls, he knew he wanted to end up in an engineering field while attending Twin Falls High School in the late '80s. He studied nuclear engineering at Oregon State University and the University of Michigan, and received his doctorate before working at labs in Idaho and Washington. The industry was a sleepy one. But the events of Sept. 11, 2001, changed everything. "If the terrorists were smart enough to do 9/11, they were smart enough to do a nuclear weapon," Smith said. Suddenly, detecting and preventing nuclear attacks became a federal priority, and all sorts of funding and support poured in for Smith and his fellow engineers. Within three or four years of the attack, his group tripled in size. "In our field right now, if you have a pulse, you probably have a grant to do some kind of work," he said. Much of his work is now classified. But Smith said he thinks the U.S. is taking the right approach. The odds of the country facing an attack are impossible to guess, he said, and the preparation is worth the cost. "Some people will say it's inevitable, and some people will say it's not."

Western apartment rents still rising

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Apartment rents throughout the western United States are rising, according to a new survey showing standards that have made it more difficult for many people to buy a home. The average cost of renting an apartment in September increased from last year in all 20 major Western markets covered in a quarterly survey released Thursday by Novato-based research firm RealFacts Inc. The severity of the rent increases varied, rising by double digits in Silicon Valley and Seattle, while hovering in a range of 1 percent to 2.5 percent in much of California's Central Valley, Las Vegas and Colorado Springs, Colo. While it's too early for definitive conclusions, a credit crunch that has made it tougher for people with blighted credit or below-average incomes to obtain home loans is probably helping to lift apartment rents by propelling demand for the living space, RealFacts spokesman Chris Bates said. Other factors lowering apartment vacancy rates also have given landlords more leverage to raise rents. For instance, high-paying jobs in high-tech hubs like Silicon Valley and Seattle are contributing to rent increases there. And anecdotal evidence indicates that at least apartment renters who could qualify for a mortgage are holding off on buying a home because they're worried about real estate prices falling even further.

Thanks Joe

Thank you Joe Albertson.
 For the past 16 years we've been proud to carry the Albertson name. We value our history and heritage as the Albertson College of Idaho. Because of your support and the support of the J.A. and Kathryn Albertson Foundation, the College has prospered. With your help and the hard work of our faculty and staff, we've provided the best and brightest students access to a world-class liberal arts education. We have much to be proud of. The successes of our graduates and the quality of students we attract are a testament of the education we provide. Our graduates have thrived out in the world. In recent years, nearly 80% of our pre-law and pre-medicine students who applied to professional schools were accepted. This year we welcome the largest and most accomplished freshman class in our history. A new chapter begins. In the last 117 years we have achieved much. But we have much more to do. To prepare the College for the next 100 years we are embarking on a 10-year, $175 million comprehensive fund raising campaign. It is a lofty goal, which will require substantial effort and support from our alumni and friends.

Once again the J.A. and Kathryn Albertson Foundation has risen to the task with a $50 million gift to start the campaign — the largest single gift given to a college or university in Idaho. We thank the Foundation for this generous financial help and also for their gracious support as we become again The College of Idaho.

Coal plants delayed due to costs, climate concerns

By Matthew Brown
Associated Press writer

... BILLINGS, Mont. — At least 16 coal-fired power plant proposals nationwide have been scrapped in recent months and more than three dozen have been delayed as utilities face increasing pressure due to concerns over global warming and rising construction costs.

The slow pace of new plant construction reflects a dramatic change in fortune for a fuel source that just a few years ago was poised for a major resurgence.

Cancelled, the canceled and delayed projects represent enough electricity to power approximately 20 million homes.

"All these reports that we were about to be inundated with coal plants. I believe this report tells a different story," said Kenneth Kern, director of analysis and planning at the department's National Energy Technology Laboratory.

"What has actually happened, if you look at it closely, was much more modest than what was anticipated," he said.

Coal has been a mainstay for utilities, producing half of all electricity consumed in the United States. But it's also one of the largest sources of greenhouse gases blamed for climate change. In the late 1990s, with natural gas prices rising, utilities eyed cheaper coal as the fuel of choice to meet the growing demand for electricity. Now it appears the resurgence of "King Coal" may have been overstated — or at least put in check by rising plant costs and environmental concerns.

As Congress considers restrictions on greenhouse gas emissions, analysts said utilities are suspending some projects while they wait to gauge the economic impact of future regulations. Meanwhile, material costs and demand for skilled labor has prompted plant costs to spike 40 percent or more. Industry representatives blamed increased competition from China and other developing nations aggressively pursuing new coal plants.

"This is like a tsunami attacking the whole industry all at once, with very limited amounts of solutions going forward," said Daniele Seitz, an industry analyst with Dahlman Rose and Co. in New York.

In Texas, TXU Energy has turned its attention to nuclear and wind power after dropping eight of 11 proposed coal plants.

"We're taking a different look at the way we plan to meet the demand for energy," said company spokesman Tom Klecker. Fewer coal plant proposals in the United States should be welcome news for environmentalists. They have made the utility industry a prime target in their push to confront climate change.

But the trend also could portend problems in satisfying a projected 40 percent increase in electricity demand by 2030, said James Owen with the Edison

Electric Institute, which represents many of the nation's major utilities.

The Bush administration has said 6,000 megawatts of additional coal-fired capacity would be needed every year to cover that increase in demand.

Of 151 new coal plants announced in recent years, only 15 have been built since 2002. Combined, they generate about 3,700 megawatts.

Of the remaining projects, 121 proposals still are considered viable. That includes 76 now listed by the government as "uncertain" in terms of whether or when they will be built.

Peter Altman, a climate policy specialist with the National Environmental Trust, said the new data raises questions about why the government was "bullish" on coal in past industry analyses.

Idaho Falls police chief forced out over management differences

The Associated Press

IDAHO FALLS — The mayor of this southeastern Idaho town has appointed a new police chief after forcing out the previous one.

"There's no single issue that brought this on," Mayor Jared Fuhriman said at a news conference Tuesday about his decision to replace J. Kent Lisey, 62. "I made this change because I thought it was in the best interest of the IFPD and its future."

Fuhriman made the announcement shortly after a separate news conference in which Lisey announced his resignation. Lisey, on administrative leave, will be paid his $83,000 annual salary until Jan. 9. He said he was told he wouldn't be reappointed to the post in January because of a conflict in management styles.

Fuhriman appointed Capt. Steve Roos to head the department shortly after Lisey announced his resignation. Fuhriman did not attend Lisey's news conference but said afterward he was not surprised Lisey resigned.

Lisey said he decided to resign after a meeting Oct. 10 in which Fuhriman said he wouldn't be retained.

Of course, after such a meeting, it would be difficult to continue to work together even in the short term, Lisey said.

Lisey did not answer questions after the announcement, and Fuhriman would not elaborate on the conflict in management styles.

"I support the mayor in this 100 percent," said Ida Harcastle, City Council president. "It's just time for a change and a new direction."

The president of the local Fraternal Order of Police, Brad Landes, said Roos was a good choice.

"Steve Roos is a good guy," he told the Post Register. "I think he's popular with most of the guys, so I'm sure he'll do a fine job."

Lisey, in a written statement, acknowledged some of his decisions were unpopular among police officers.

"I understand why they are frustrated with me at times and why, because of that frustration, some of them don't like me at all," he wrote. "I wish I could do everything they would like, but it is not possible."

Roos started with the police department in 1982 as a patrol officer and has worked as an undercover narcotics officer, sergeant of detectives and services captain. He said he would probably reduce the number of police administrators to have more officers on patrol.

"I've always felt we're a little bit top-heavy," he said.

Northern Idaho sports bar owner faces arson trial

COEUR D'ALENE (AP) — A sports bar owner in northern Idaho accused of burning down a rival pub has been bound over for trial based on leg burns that prosecutors say match a surveillance video of a man running out of the burning building with his legs on fire.

"Not the smartest arsonist on the planet," Mingstler-Scott Wayman said Tuesday in 1st District Court.

A court date has not yet been set for Richard Eugene "Hanson," who has "not yet made a plea. He is charged with burglary and first-degree arson."

Hanson's fiancée, Kelly Harte, told authorities about the burns three days after the fire.

"I didn't want to be an accessory and I wanted him to seek medical attention," Harte said. "I had my doubts, I thought he might have done it."

Hanson's attorney, Jim Siebe, argued that his client burned himself while changing frying oil at his bar in Coeur d'Alene.

in, including items from Don Larsen of Hayden, who pitched a perfect game for the New York Yankees in the 1956 World Series.

In the eight-minute video shows a person, whose face is covered with a bandanna and who is wearing a hat and hooded sweat shirt, stacking chairs near the entrance of the pub and carrying what appears to be a 5-gallon can of gas into the building.

In the video, the person strikes a match, and four seconds later the whole thing is an inferno," Kootenai County Chief Deputy Prosecutor Mary Raap told The Associated Press. "You would not have wanted to be in the bar, and he was in the bar."

The surveillance video does not show the person's face, but "the burns on his legs match identically to where you see the flames on the video," said Raap at the court hearing, the Coeur d'Alene Press reported.

Girl who's being harassed must take a firmer stand

DEAR ABBY Jeanne Phillips

DEAR ABBY: I am being sort of sexually harassed, and I don't know what to do. I'm 15 and my brother 'Joey' is 16. We live with our mother. Our parents are divorced. Mom works, so we're home by ourselves in the afternoon after school.

stop. What can I do? — EMBARRASSED IN BAKERSFIELD, CALIF. DEAR EMBARRASSED: The next time Mike makes one of his off-color "comments," tell him you don't like it and consider it degrading. Then tell him you want an immediate apology and his word that it won't happen again because if it does you will tell your mother, and he won't be welcome there again.

Joey has a new friend, "Mike," who constantly makes sexually oriented comments to me. He has never tried to touch me, and I don't think he ever would, but the comments really bother me and I have tried to tell him so. He just laughs and says he means it as a compliment.

And if it happens again, follow through on your word. Your brother isn't "mean," he's acting like a wimp by allowing Mike to disrespect you. And I have a strong hunch that Mike isn't coming to a woman, or he wouldn't be talking about your brother. I suspect he's there because he has a crush on you.

How much it bothers me and asked him to get Mike to stop, but he won't say anything. Joey is very meek and Mike is very domineering. Also, he has always had trouble making friends, and Mike is his only friend right now, and I think he's afraid of losing his only friend.

DEAR ABBY: I was married for five years to my ex-husband, "Hank," and I share custody of our soon-to-be 7-year-old son. As a result, we see each other frequently.

I stay out of the bedroom when Mike is here, but we live in a small apartment, so I can't really get away from him. But I don't feel I should have to hide whenever Mike is here. So far, I haven't said anything to Mom. Knowing her, I am sure that if I told her, she'd say Mike can no longer come over—and that would be the end of the friendship. I don't want that. I just want the comments to

Over the last five years, we have had an on-again/off-again sexual relationship.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Thursday, Oct. 18, the 291st day of 2007. There are 74 days left in the year.

Today's highlight:

On Oct. 18, 1962, Dr. James D. Watson of the United States and Drs. Francis Crick and Maurice H. Wilkins of Britain were named winners of the Nobel Prize for Medicine and Physiology for their work in determining the double-helix molecular structure of DNA.

On this date:

In 1648, Boston shoemakers were authorized to form a guild to protect their interests; it's the first American labor organization on record. In 1685, King Louis the XIV signed the Edict of Fontenay, revoking the Edict of Nantes that had established legal toleration of France's Protestant population, the Huguenots. (The French Parliament recorded the new edict four days later.) In 1867, the U.S. took formal possession of Alaska from Russia.

In 1892, the first long-distance telephone line between New York and Chicago was officially opened. It was the first one-call-at-a-time.

In 1898, the American flag was raised in Puerto Rico shortly before Spain formally relinquished control of the island to the U.S.

In 1931, inventor Thomas Alva Edison died in West Orange, N.J., at age 84.

In 1944, Soviet troops invaded Czechoslovakia during World War II.

In 1969, the federal government banned artificial sweeteners known as cyclamates because of evidence they caused cancer in laboratory rats.

In 1977, West German commandos stormed a hijacked Lufthansa jetliner on the ground in Mogadishu, Somalia, freeing all 86 hostages and killing three of the hijackers.

The last time we had sex was three weeks ago. Literally the next day, his engagement announcement came out in our local paper. I was shocked, to say the least.

Hank is a pilot and travels every other week. His fiancée is a drug sales rep, and I assume she travels, too. I knew he was seeing her, but he always told me it was casual. The wedding is next month.

The other problem is, I am now two weeks late for my period. What should I do? I think she should know, especially if there is the possibility that I could be pregnant.

— CONFLICTED IN NISKAYUNA, N.Y.

DEAR CONFLICTED: Do you know for a fact that you're pregnant? Does Hank know if the answer to both questions is yes, then his fiancée should be told that he has remained sexually involved with you. Hank appears to have no respect for women, or he wouldn't have been cheating on his girlfriend and having unprotected sex with you. If you're pregnant, he will be legally obliged to support the two children.

ES. In the future when he's visiting "the children," please stop having sex with him. Being a single parent with two children is hard enough without adding a third.

NYC bride sues florist, saying $27K wedding flowers were wrong color

NEW YORK (AP) — The wedding was lovely, except for the flowers: They were the wrong color.

So says the bride, Elana Glatt, who was so upset that she sued the florist and alleged breach of contract.

She says Posh Floral Design in Manhattan substituted pastel pink and green hydrangeas for the dark red and green ones she had specified for 22 centerpieces. Not only that, she alleges that the hydrangeas were wilted and brown, and arranged in dusty vases without enough water.

"The use of predominantly pastel centerpieces had a significant impact on the look of the room and was entirely inconsistent with the vision the plaintiffs had bargained for," Glatt, a lawyer, said in the lawsuit, filed on behalf of herself, her husband David, and her mother-in-law, Tobi Glatt, who paid for the flowers. The flowers cost $27,435.14. The lawsuit asks for more than $400,000 in restitution and damages.

Stamos Arakas, the florist, said that he and his wife, Paula, tried to match the color of the hydrangeas with a picture Glatt had given them, but explained to her that the colors might not look the same. "My father used to tell me, 'Don't deal with the lawyers,'" Arakas said. "Maybe he was right. God bless his soul."

Bush praises Dalai Lama, urges China to invite him for talks

By Foster King
Associated Press writer

WASHINGTON — President Bush, raising Beijing's ire, presented the Dalai Lama on Wednesday with the U.S. Congress' highest civilian honor and urged Chinese leaders to welcome the monk to Beijing.

The exiled spiritual head of Tibet's Buddhists by his side, Bush praised a man he called a "universal symbol of peace and tolerance, a shepherd of the faithful and a keeper of the flame for his people."

"Americans cannot look to the plight of the, religiously oppressed and close our eyes over the way" Bush said at the U.S. Capitol building where he personally handed the Dalai Lama the prestigious Congressional Gold Medal.

The Dalai Lama, chuckling as he stumbled over his remarks in English, said the award will bring "tremendous joy and encouragement to the Tibetan people" and he thanked Bush for his "firm stand on religious freedom and autonomy."

He said he supports the 2008 Beijing Olympics in the hopes China would become a more open and tolerant country. He also addressed Chinese suspicions of his advocacy for Tibet, saying, "I have no hidden agenda."

China reviles the 72-year-old monk as a Tibetan separatist and vehemently rejected the elaborate public ceremony. But at a news conference earlier in the day, Bush said he did not think his attendance at the ceremony would damage U.S. relations with China.

"I support religious freedom; he supports religious freedom. ... I want to honor this man," Bush told reporters at the White House. "I have consistently told the Chinese that religious freedom is in their nation's interest."

Bush and the Dalai Lama listened as top U.S. lawmakers lined up to laud the Buddhist leader and criticize China.

Democratic Rep. Tom Lantos, D-Calif., chairman of the House Foreign Affairs Committee, advised China that inviting the Dalai Lama for talks over Tibet's future will help make the 2008 Olympics a success.

"Let this man of peace visit Beijing," Lantos said as the crowd and Bush applauded. "He is not a splitist. He merely wants the religious and cultural autonomy for his own people that they so richly deserve."

Pope names 23 cardinals, including Texas prelate in recognition of growing Latino presence

By Nicole Winfield
Associated Press writer

VATICAN CITY — Texas is getting its first Roman Catholic cardinal — a nod to the influx of faithful from Mexico and Central America. Archbishop Daniel N. DiNardo's appointment was to some degree unexpected, but Vatican watchers say it shows Pope Benedict XVI clearly understands where the American church is growing — and who is behind the growth.

"It says something about Texas and how wonderful Texas is in the terms of the growth of our Catholic faith," DiNardo, leader of the Houston-Houston archdiocese, told reporters in Houston on Wednesday.

DiNardo was among 23 new cardinals appointed Wednesday by Benedict, who tapped Vatican officials, academics, diplomats and archbishops from five continents. Eighteen of the new cardinals are under age 80 and eligible to vote in a conclave; five others, including the patriarch of Baghdad, were named in recognition of their service to the church.

The appointments of DiNardo and another

American bring the number of U.S. cardinals to 17 — second only to Italy — and increases the American contingent's clout in any conclave to elect a future pontiff.

Benedict said he would give them all their red hats at a Vatican ceremony Nov. 24.

Like many Catholic dioceses in the South, the Houston-Houston area has witnessed a remarkable influx of the faithful from Mexico and Central America in recent years — so much so that it was upgraded to an archdiocese. There are about 7 million Roman Catholics in Texas, about 1.3 million of whom live in the Houston-Houston archdiocese.

"This is a very clear recognition of the growth and importance of the Latino population in the Catholic Church in the United States," said the Rev. Robert Wlster, professor of church history at Seton Hall University. "In particular it's a recognition of the Mexican-American presence in the church, of which there is a very large number in the archdiocese of Galveston-Houston."

The Rev. James Martin of the Jesuit magazine "America" concurred.

"It's hugely significant in terms of the Vatican recognizing the center of gravity for American Catholicism is moving south," he said.

Wlster noted that the growth in the Texas region prompted Pope John Paul II to elevate Galveston-Houston into an archdiocese in 2004 — making Texas only the second U.S. state after California to have two archdioceses.

Bhutto supporters through Pakistan's biggest city ahead of return from 8 years in self-exile

By Matthew Pennington
Associated Press writer

KARACHI, Pakistan — Legions of supporters of former prime minister Benazir Bhutto converged on Karachi for her planned homecoming Thursday from eight years in self-exile and return to the center stage of Pakistan's volatile politics.

Brushing off fears of an attack by Islamic militants, she vowed Wednesday to restore democracy and to fight religious extremism. But there is public skepticism she can turn the bold rhetoric into reality.

"My return heralds for the people of Pakistan the turn of the wheel from dictatorship to democracy, from expectation to empowerment, from violence to peace," Bhutto told reporters in Dubai ahead of the flight home.

Bhutto's arrival was expected to draw 100,000 or more people to the streets of this southern port city.

The path for her return was paved by negotiations with President Gen. Pervez Musharraf, who seized power in a 1999 coup and has promised to give up command of the army if he secures a new term as president. The talks yielded an amnesty covering the corruption cases that led Bhutto to leave Pakistan, and could see the archrival team up in a U.S.-friendly alliance to fight al-Qaida and the Taliban.

Bhutto, 54, whose two elected governments between 1988 and 1996 were toppled amid allegations of corruption and mismanagement, is vying for a third term if her Pakistan People's Party can win parliamentary elections in January.

Housing construction plunges to lowest level in 14 years

Indicators show that housing market may continue to slide

By Martin Cutsinger
Associated Press writer

WASHINGTON — Problems in the housing industry intensified last month with construction of new homes plunging to the lowest level in 14 years. Consumer prices, meanwhile, rose at the fastest pace in four months, reflecting higher energy and food costs.

The Commerce Department reported Wednesday that construction of new homes fell 10.2 percent last month, compared to August, to a seasonally adjusted annual rate of 1.191 million units. That was the slowest building pace since March 1993 and was far bigger than the 4.2 percent decline that economists had been expecting.

Meanwhile, the Labor Department reported that consumer prices rose by 0.3 percent in September, slightly more than the 0.2 percent analysts had been expecting as energy prices rose after three straight declines and food costs shot up at the fastest pace since June. Core inflation, excluding energy and food, remained tame, however, rising by 0.2 percent, in line with expectations.

Analysts said the bigger-than-expected drop in housing construction could be signaling that the housing downturn, already the worst in 16 years, may be headed for bigger troubles. Housing activity is now 30.8 percent below the level of a year ago.

"The contraction in housing is transitioning from an average downturn to among the worst in the post-World War II history. As the current downturn probes deeper depths, the risk of an outright recession will mount," said Michael Gregory, an economist with BMO Capital Markets.

Housing sales, which had set records for five straight years, have been slumping since 2006. That decline has intensified in recent months as mortgage lenders have tightened standards for giving loans in response to soaring defaults. The higher defaults and the inability of prospective buyers to qualify for mortgages have contributed to record high levels of unsold new and existing homes.

Both Federal Reserve Chairman Ben Bernanke and Treasury Secretary Henry Paulson warned this week that the housing downturn was likely to persist longer than had been expected.

The National Association of Homebuilders reported Tuesday that its index of builder confidence fell for the eighth consecutive month in October, pushing the index to a record-low of 18 from a reading of 20 in September.

Many economists believe that housing will trim economic growth by more than a percentage point in the current quarter.

Apple Inc. approves third-party applications to work on iPhone

By May Wong
Associated Press writer

SAN JOSE, Calif. — In an apparent about-face, Apple Inc. will allow third-party applications to work directly on the iPhone, Chief Executive Steve Jobs said in a posting on the company's Web site Wednesday.

Apple infuriated developers and some iPhone users when it issued a software update Sept. 27 that disabled unofficial programs installed on the handsets.

Until Wednesday, Apple had tried to control which applications consumers had on their iPhones.

Now, Jobs said the company intends to release a software development kit in February that will let coders create applications to work directly on the iPhone and the iPod Touch. The Touch is the new iPod portable player that resembles the iPhone but lacks the function of a cell phone.

"We are excited about creating a vibrant third-party developer community around the iPhone and enabling hundreds of new applications for our users," Jobs said in the posting.

It is easy to find many unofficial programs for the iPhone on the Internet; users just had to take the risk of installing them, knowing that any damage to the iPhone stemming from unofficial programs was not covered by Apple's warranty.

"I'm thrilled," said Erica Sadun, a Denver computer programmer. "I hope it is exactly as they say, full third-party development."

A Mac enthusiast and blogger — and a critic of Apple's decision to restrict the iPhone to carrier AT&T Inc. in the United States — Sadun predicted Apple's chief of heart will ultimately help the company sell more iPods and iPhones.

Cash cows

Salvador Cruz milks cows at Stanton Farms in Coeymans Hollow, N.Y. Retail milk prices are up 18 percent since the start of the year due to a combination of higher production costs and higher demand.

Higher milk prices offer a lifeline for dairy farmers who lost money in last year's downturn

By Michael Mill
Associated Press writer

COEYMAN'S HOLLOW, N.Y. — Higher milk prices might be unwelcome news for grocery shoppers, but they have been a lifeline for dairy farmers who lost money last year when prices bottomed out.

"Things are a lot better this year," said farmer Mark Stanton, who keeps 300 milk cows in the rural hill country south of Albany that his family has farmed since 1873. "If this price didn't turn around, there would have been a mass exodus."

Retail milk prices are up 18 percent since the start of the year amid higher production costs and higher demand. The related wholesale price increase has given dairy farmers a bit of financial breathing room.

Some farmers are using the increased margins to dig out of the debt they racked up last year. Mark Stephenson, of Cornell University's program on dairy markets and policy, calls this a "recovery year" for dairy producers.

"It has bailed them out across the country," he said. Farmers in New York last month received an average of $22.80 per 100 pounds for their milk, far above the $13.20 average paid out a year earlier. It's the same story across the nation, where wholesale prices jumped on average from $13 to $21.80 in the same period, according to the U.S. Department of Agriculture.

Milk prices have been dropping since late 2004, pinching dairy farmers who operate on thin margins in the best of times. Farmers last year complained the prices weren't covering the cost of doing business, and from 300 to 500 farms in New York folded, said Peter Gregg of the New York Farm Bureau.

"Last year we lost money for the first time in the 40-year history of our farm," said Twin Birch Dairy's Dirk Young, who has 980 milk cows near Skaneateles in the Finger Lakes.

Milk prices have climbed along with fuel and feed costs. Corn, in particular, has become pricier as the burgeoning ethanol business created a demand spike. But dairy analysts say growing global demand for processed milk products — especially skim milk powder — has also sent prices up.

"There's a lot greater demand for all milk products in general, especially in emerging markets in Asia," said Joe Morse of the USDA's National Agricultural Statistics Service.

Stephenson said U.S. exports of milk products used to be negligible, but that's changing as China's appetite for milk grows and oil-rich countries from Saudi Arabia to Mexico also step up demand. The relatively weak U.S. dollar also has helped fuel the export increase, he said.

Stephenson expects milk prices to moderate as dairy farmers increase output in reaction to the higher prices they're receiving. But he still expected U.S. dairy farmers to have "a few pretty good years."

Urban legend?

Illegal immigrants not abusing Idaho health and welfare benefits

By Pat Marcantonio
Times-News writer

Tom Shanahan calls it an urban legend that won't die.

Glenda Dwight calls it unfair and not true.

That is, the perception that undocumented residents are using and abusing welfare benefits in Idaho and Magic Valley. "It's unfair for people to say that," said Dwight, Region 1 Idaho Health and Welfare self-reliance supervisor in Twin Falls, at a meeting of the Hispanic Business and Professionals Network.

People who think that illegal residents are sucking up welfare benefits are running on emotion, not facts, she added.

Not a whole lot of people who are in the country illegally come into Health and Welfare offices to apply for benefits for themselves, said Shanahan, state Health and Welfare spokesman. "It's pretty rare." If they do come in, they are applying for their children, who may be eligible.

And that is usually the case we see," he said. Under state and federal regulations, undocumented residents cannot receive welfare benefits, such as Food Stamps, cash or Medicaid, which pays for medical services. However, if their children are American-born or have the required documentation, those children may be eligible even if their parents are not.

Health and Welfare officials say welfare fraud by undocumented people is rare because of the many all-around checks on information — make that, almost instant verification of the information that applicants are required to give, such as names and Social Security numbers, Shanahan said. "That's checked out immediately."

Those applying for benefits must show proof of citizenship or legal residence. Those accepted conditions can include birth certificates, naturalization and immigration papers and passports, according to Health and Welfare regulations.

People who apply for benefits are asked to sign a declaration of citizenship or immigration status, which is verified by the Alien Status Verification Index through the U.S. Citizenship and Immigration Services.

"They have to have identity to prove who they are," Shanahan said.

Because undocumented residents can't receive welfare benefits, Health and Welfare doesn't track how many undocumented residents have applied, Shanahan said.

And if a child is granted welfare benefits and the child's parents aren't legal residents, the department doesn't keep track of how many of the parents came into apply for their children. The reason: The parents who are undocumented can't receive benefits so they aren't counted.

"But we do scrutinize the children to make sure they are legal," Shanahan said. In those cases where applicants don't have acceptable residency documentation but their children are legal residents,

Health and Welfare workers are prohibited by federal law to call immigration enforcement.

A note in Health and Welfare regulations says that Health and Welfare personnel can only know if a person is in the United States illegally if there is a deportation order or other lawful order to that effect. Glenda Dwight — a long-time department employee — couldn't think of any local case where undocumented residents wanted to collect benefits to which they were not entitled.

Statewide, Shanahan had the same problem remembering a fraud case involving an undocumented resident.

In some cases, undocumented residents may receive emergency medical services. For example, a pregnant woman may receive aid only for birth costs — not prenatal or postnatal care, Shanahan said.

The woman must still meet Medicaid requirements, such as being low-income.

A majority of the emergency medical aid for what are termed "ineligible aliens" goes for births.

Last year in Idaho, there were 1,196 such births at an average cost of $2,977, Shanahan said.

This also is a federal mandate. However, no one wants to see a woman give birth without help, he said.

The American-born child would be eligible for full benefits.

With immigration an issue as hot as a growing season, the federal government has not ratcheted up the regulations against undocumented residents. That's because government agencies know that undocumented residents are not abusing welfare benefits, said Alex Castaneda, a Twin Falls real estate agent involved in many community groups.

"People just need to look at the information," he said.

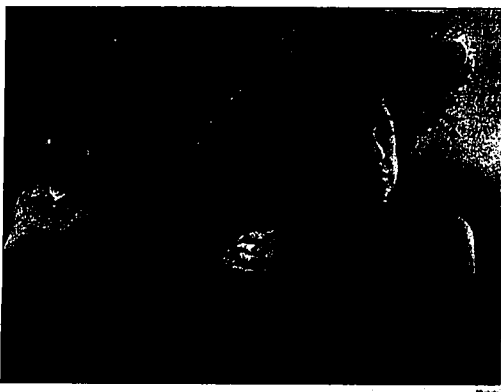

On average, about 70 percent of the benefits are paid by the federal government and the rest is by the state.

Food Stamp benefits are all paid by the federal government with the feds and state both paying for administration.

Even if an immigrant is in the United States legally, there is a five-year wait on Medicaid and welfare benefits.

The only exception is refugees, who may be arriving with no possessions. They are handled on a case by case basis, Shanahan said.

Study of 1,000 gay brothers and relatives seeks genetic clues to homosexuality

CHICAGO (AP) — Julio and Mauricio Cabrera are gay brothers who are convinced their sexual orientation is as deeply rooted as their Mexican ancestry.

They are among 1,000 pairs of gay brothers taking part in the largest study to date seeking genes that may influence whether people are gay. The Cabreras hope the findings will help silence critics who say homosexuality is an immoral choice.

If fresh evidence is found suggesting genes are involved, perhaps homosexuality will be viewed as no different than other genetic traits like height and hair color, said Julio, a student at DePaul University in Chicago.

Adds his brother, "I think it would help a lot of folks understand us better."

The federally funded study, led by Chicago area researchers, will rely on blood or saliva samples to help scientists search for genetic clues to the origins of homosexuality. Parents and straight brothers also are being recruited.

While initial results aren't expected until next year — and won't provide a final answer — skeptics are already attacking the methods and disputing the presumed results.

Previous studies have shown that sexual orientation tends to cluster in families, though that doesn't prove genetics is involved. Extended families may share similar child-rearing practices, religion and other beliefs that could also influence sexual orientation.

Research involving identical twins, often used to study genetics since they share the same DNA, has had mixed results.

One widely cited study in the 1990s found that if one member of a pair of identical twins was gay, the other had a 52 percent chance of being gay. In contrast, the result for pairs of non-twin brothers, was 9 percent. A 2000 study of Australian identical twins found a much lower chance.

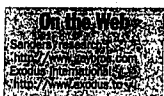

Dr. Alan Sanders of Evanston Northwestern Healthcare Research Institute, the lead researcher of the new study, said he suspects there isn't one so-called "gay gene."

It is more likely there are several genes that interact with nongenetic factors, including psychological and social influences, to determine sexual orientation, said Sanders, a psychiatrist. Still, he said, "If there's one gene that makes a sizable contribution, we have a pretty good chance" of finding it.

Many gays fear that if gay genes are identified, it could Julio Cabrera poses in a park near his home in Chicago on Aug. 20, 2007. Cabrera and his brother, Mauricio, from Olathe, Kan., are among 1,000 pairs of gay brothers nationwide who are donating blood or saliva to help scientists search for genetic clues about the origins of homosexuality.

result in discrimination, prenatal testing and even abortions to eliminate homosexuals, said Joel Ginsberg of the Gay and Lesbian Medical Association.

However, he added, "If we confirm that sexual orientation is an immutable characteristic, we are much more likely to get the courts to rule against discrimination."

Sanders' new research is an attempt to duplicate and expand on a study published in 1993 involving 40 pairs of gay brothers. That hotly debated study, wrongly touted as locating "the gay gene," found that gay brothers shared genetic markers in a region on the X chromosome, which men inherit from their mothers.

That implies that any genes influencing sexual orientation lie somewhere in that region.

Previous attempts to duplicate those results failed.

But Sanders said that with so many participants, his study has a better chance of finding the same markers and perhaps others on different chromosomes.

If these markers appear in gay brothers but not their straight brothers or parents, that would suggest a link to sexual orientation. The study is designed to find genetic markers, not to explain any genetic role in behavior.

And Sanders said even if he finds no evidence, that won't mean genetics play no role; it may simply mean that individual genes have a smaller effect.

VIDEO GAME REVIEW

If anything, life as Master Chief in 'Halo 3' is predictable: aim, shoot and reload.

'Halo 3': Solid, but not spectacular

BY MATT SLAGLE
 The Associated Press

"Halo 3" answers all these questions and more in a narrative that sometimes stumbles but at least provides a sense of closure.

Without any prologue, "Halo 3" picks up with Master Chief, crash-landing on Earth in a popular title.

But let's cut through the enormous hype: It's not the best video game ever.

"Halo 3" (Rated M, $59.99, $69.99 or $129.99) does refine many aspects of the first-person shooter genre on the Xbox 360 console. And new multiplayer features make it the most robust online experience on any console.

Since receiving my early copy of "Halo 3," I've indulged my senses and blistered my fingers in nonstop game playing. I've completed the single-player campaign and experimented with the game's voluminous multiplayer features.

It turns out there are two very different sides to "Halo 3." I suspect only one aspect will keep gamers going for more than a few days.

It's been three years since the infuriatingly obscure end of "Halo 2" left us all wondering what happened.

Without any prologue, "Halo 3" picks up with Master Chief, crash-landing on Earth in the year 2552. The gunplay-driven action is relentless from there as you blast droves of aliens from the front lines of our future home world.

Master Chief's motivation is nothing less than survival of the galaxy.

This doomsday premise of the game drives the action forward through levels that occasionally falter with unclear goals or too much repetitive backtracking.

The game's bulky builds in intensity but suffers from some uneven difficulty. A showdown in a Flood-infested spacecraft was by far the most difficult section for me to complete. However, I was far from finished and the real final battle felt like a letdown by comparison.

Like its predecessors, "Halo 3" liberally uses cinematic interludes between the action to advance the story. And again, it sometimes cheapens the game.

7,000 visitors expected for this weekend's SV jazz jamboree

BY KAREN BOSSICK
For the Times-News

SUN VALLEY — A red hot jazz special.

It's what's being offered Blaine County residents who nearly watched their homes and ski resort go up in flames this summer.

Organizers of the 18th Annual Sun Valley Swing 'n' Dixie Jazz Jamboree will make available an "End of the Fire Season" special during this year's festival.

For $30, Blaine County residents with ID can spend the next four evenings listening to and dancing to the music in Sun Valley's Indoor Ice Rink.

The "After 5 at the Rink" offer, good for the ice rink only, starts at 5 every night. And $3 of every $30 badge sold will go to benefit firefighters.

Three-hundred passes will be available first-come, first-served at the Sun Valley Lodge and will allow jazz fans to see the Titan Hot Seven, Stompy Jones, Allred's Classic Jazz Band, Blue Street, Cornet Chop Suey, Midori Brothers and 51st Eight, as well as a big band bash on Saturday night.

"It's our way of saying to the people of Sun Valley that we understand a little of what you went through and we're very happy that your home and town were saved," said Carol Loehr, who heads up the music of Sun Valley with her husband, Jeff. The Castle Rock Fire ravaged Stompy Jones is a San Francisco-based sextet known for its explosive stage show and a 'people's rhythm' that would catch the fancy of patrons at a kangaroo convention. The group wails boogie-woogie, rhythm 'n' blues — the kind of jazz that came to be known as rock 'n' roll.

The Loehrs kept close track on it from their Washington home. And, like so many, they canceled their planned vacation to Ketchum's annual Wagon Days celebration over Labor Day after Ketchum's mayor told would-be visitors to stay away.

But when the all-clear sounded, it was back to work finalizing details on the jamboree, which Carol Loehr's father and mother, Tom and Barbara Hazzard, started nearly two decades ago with Sun Valley Co. General Manager Wally Huffman.

'ELIZABETH: THE GOLDEN AGE'

A disappointing golden age for Queen Kate

BY DESSON THOMSON
 The Washington Post

Just in time for Halloween, "Elizabeth: The Golden Age" is here to tell us that evoking England's greatest queen is just a matter of finding the right gown, ruffled collar and frizzy wig. That seems to be the only purpose of this much-anticipated follow-up to 1998's "Elizabeth," which thrilled audiences with its spirited embrace of history and the introduction of a fiery newcomer named Cate Blanchett.

Unfortunately, director Shekhar Kapur has doffed that sensual primacy for a bloated costume opera, in which the characters are essentially dress-up dolls, and Elizabeth has evolved from our favorite royal ingenue to a lifeless, chalk-faced runway diva. As she weathers the most significant events of her 45-year reign—including war with the Spanish Armada and the threat of Mary Queen of Scots—the movie seems more taken with the dragonfly-winged collars framing her red tete and the circus parade of zebras, snakes and New World Indians before her gaze. Even Elizabeth's relationship with Sir Walter Raleigh (Clive Owen), the movie's golden opportunity to reveal her innermost impulses, amounts to a sarorial face-off (THIS Raleigh is the puffy-pants prince of her domain) and exchanges of pseudo-meaningful dialogue.

Clearly, the filmmakers, including screenwriters William Nicholson and Michael Hirst (the latter penned the first film), assume we commoners will forget our need for emotional involvement amid the folds, pleats and billows of period pageantry. And as if to compensate for this emptiness, Kapur floods every possible moment with orchestral music. This mood marshaling has the unintentional effect of suggesting England contracted with Bose to outfit every corner of the realm with giant music speakers while 16th-century undead roam the Earth.

Nine years after playing Queen Elizabeth in "Elizabeth," actress Kate Blanchett is back for the sequel.

 Rated PG-13 for violence, some sexual/nudity

This couture-centric story-telling echoes last year's "Marie Antoinette," in which director Sofia Coppola reduced the French Revolution to a backdrop for the wig-and-powder follies of a youthful Marie and Louis XVI. But Coppola's effort still presented the French royal couple as disconcertingly real. Kapur allows spectacle to dwarf and choke his characters, who move like Tudor-style Barbies from palace to sea battle to bedchambers. We feel nothing for these well-dressed screen beings, or the movie's climactic, too-obviously-computer-generated naval skirmishes. When Mary Queen of Scots (the luminous Samantha Morton) faces that inevitable chopping block, for example, we should have our hearts in our mouths. Yet we are strangely unmoved.

Most unreflecting of all is the story's central affair between Elizabeth and Sir Walter. Where the real Elizabeth sought out Raleigh as something of a boytoy sage, the movie paints a stillier postmodern version. Blanchett's Elizabeth sees Raleigh as a medieval Dr. Phil, a man of external strength and tenderly dispensed homilies and observations. When Raleigh asks Elizabeth to consider a world in which she's liked for herself, not because she's queen, we're only missing a reaction shot from Oprah Winfrey, nodding enthusiastically from m'lady's chamber.

Although Blanchett plays Elizabeth energetically, it's without subtlety. What she says—or exactly what she means. It's as though Blanchett opted for the acting style of the period, when performers projected their emotions to large, unsophisticated crowds. By contrast, Helen Mirren's portrayal of the monarch in the 2006 British miniseries "Elizabeth I" offered a more complex performance. Mirren, of course, also looked the part of an aging queen, dependent on young courtiers for poetic, often insincere flattery. In "The Golden Age," Owen's Raleigh, whose historical counterpart was in his late 20s when he met Elizabeth, looks at least 10 years older. And Blanchett seems a healthy 35, hardly the almost-50 spinster she's meant to be.

Movie nuggets

• "The Brave One"/B+ A canny, thoughtful and violent film from director Neil Jordan ("The Crying Game"), asks 'if perhaps there is a killer lurking within in each of us. It stars Jodie Foster as Erica Bain, a radio talk host who roams New York collecting stories about "the safest big city in the world." Until one evening when she is mugged in a Central Park tunnel, bugged close to death, while her fiancé is killed. And after weeks in a coma, she unexpectedly finds a murderous urge within her. The New York locals attempt to accentuate the post-9/11 paranoia at work, but the film has a clearer antecedent in 1974's "Death Wish." If "The Brave One" draws the shazable audience it deserves, look for it to trigger debate over the morality of Erica's actions. No matter which side you find yourself on, it is hard to deny that this is an urban thriller with something worth thinking about. 2 hours, 2 minutes. B.

• "The Comebacks"/No Rating A spoof of such sports movies including "Rocky." Remember the Titans? "Friday Night Lights" and "Field of Dreams." With Carl Weathers, David Koehnner, Matthew Lawrence. PG-13.

• "Eastern Promises"/A- One of David Cronenberg's finest films, with Viggo Mortensen as a driver for the Russian Mafia in London, and Naomi Watts as a midwife determined to protect the life of a newborn infant. A diary leads her to the sealed world of the Russians, led by Armin Mueller-Stahl as the patriarch and Vincent Cassel as his son; the result isn't exactly a crime story, but a thriller about human nature. Scenes of startling violence. 1 hour, 36 minutes. R.

• "Game Plan"/C The game plan behind "The Game Plan" was obvious from the movie's trailer and poster: Look. The Rock's back, but now he's a lovable lug, a softie learning to embrace his paternal side and hang with the wee ones. Just like Vin Diesel in "The Pacifier." Dwayne "The Rock" Johnson's "Game Plan" aims to turn an action-movie bruiser into a benign father figure. And the same as Diesel, Johnson manages enough charisma to overcome an often awkward performance and at least provide a likable anchor for this lazily plotted, vacuously predictable tale of an egomaniacal football star dealing with a daughter he never knew he had. 1 hour, 50 minutes. PG.

• "Gone, Baby, Gone"/No Rating When a girl is stolen from her home, a pair of investigators search desperately for the child in the streets of Boston.

With Casey Affleck, Morgan Freeman and Michelle Monaghan. Directed by Ben Affleck. R.

• "The Heartbreak Kid"/C- Ultimately, this is a condensed re-take of a 1972 comedy classic about falling in and out of love on one's honeymoon. In his first film with the Farrells since "There's Something About Mary," Ben Stiller brings his usual likable schmo persona, which further softens the horrible things that his character does in the name of love. Stand-up comic Carlos Mencia gets a few crude laughs as a Mexican resort employee. But remarks that change this much from the original film usually have the courtesy to take a different tone. Even still, there would be plenty of reason for heartbreak. 1 hour, 58 minutes. R.

• "The Kingdom"/C Director Peter Berg ("Friday Night Lights") uses very hip hand-held and ultra-close-up camera tricks to tell his filmly story of FBI cowboys who fly to Riyadh, the Saudi capital, hoping to avenge a massive act of terrorist brutality against a community of Americans. While such cinematography proved effective in this summer's "Bourne Ultimatum," here they seem to be trying to hide the emptiness of Matthew Michael Carnahan's screenplay. 1 hour, 50 minutes. R.

• "Michael Clayton"/B George Clooney is "fixer" at a white-shoe law firm who, over the course of four days, finds himself enmeshed in an increasingly sticky web of corporate intrigue, personal financial strains, madness and murder. Eschewing the glitzy, glamorous persona of the "Ocean's" movies and other slick bonbons, is in baggy-eyed "Syrtara" mode here, Clooney moves through the days-long 3 a.m. of the soul with none of the cocky affectations that he often relies on. With Tilda Swinton, Tom Wilkinson and Sydney Pollack. R.

• "Mr. Woodstock"/B- A young author learns that his mother (Susan Sarandon) is marrying his former gym teacher (Billie Bob Thornton), a man who made his life hell during his school. 1 hour, 27 minutes. PG-13.

• "Ratatouille"/B- Sure, children will probably enjoy watching the animated adventures of Remy (voiced by comedian Patton Oswalt), a plucky Parisian rat who leaves the colony to pursue his dream of becoming a gourmet chef. There's some slapstick physical comedy, and writer-director Brad Bird keeps things going at a lively, engaging clip. But there's nothing silly or childlike about the film story. This latest from Pixar-Disney is also visually wondrous in ways that are both lush and intricately detailed. In ways that seem to have been tailored more toward grown-up tastes and sensibilities. It would seem that computer-generated technology couldn't get any better, but wow — it just does. Yet "Ratatouille" just feels like parody compared to "The Incredibles." Bird's Oscar winner about a family of superheroes trying to live quietly in suburbia, which worked beautifully both as pure entertainment and as a film with something to say. 1 hour, 50 minutes. G.

• "Rent/No Rating Reese Witherspoon stars as the American wife of an Egyptian-born chemical engineer who disappears on a flight from South Africa to Washington. Meanwhile, CIA analyst (Jake Gyllenhaal) at a secret detention facility outside the U.S. is forced to question his assignment as he becomes party to the man's unorthodox interrogation. With Meryl Streep, Peter Sarsgaard and Alan Arkin. R.

• "Sarah Landon the Paranormal Hour"/No Rating In the first film in the "Sarah Landon Mysteries" series, the 17-year-old heroine (Rissa Andrews) has just returned to her childhood home. But things aren't as quiet as they seem in the small town, and Sarah begins to discover strange and supernatural happenings. With Alessandra Daniele and Brian Currie. PG.

• "Superbad"/B+ Four-letter raunch-o-ga-rama with a heart, and a fascination for other key organs. Best friends Seth (Jonah Hill) and Evan (Michael Cera) have been inseparable in high school, mainly because they were equally unpopular. Now it is the last night of the high school year, bringing to mind the ancient truism that if you haven't had sex yet and you don't have it tonight, you will never have had sex in high school. With Seth Broder, who co-wrote (Roger Ebert, Universal Press Syndicate) 1 hour, 52 minutes. B.

• "The Ten Commandments"/No Rating The Old Testament tale of Moses comes to life in this animated feature. Narrated by Ben Kingsley, with the voices of Christian Slater, Al-Fred Molina, and Elliott Gould. G.

"Transformers"

"Transformers" uncovers man's greatest love — for machines that whir, click, rev or destroy.

But before you dismiss this movie as toy porn for overgrown boys (not that there's anything wrong with that), consider this: Never was this goofy rupture explored with more fun. For the non-Transformer heads among us, who couldn't tell an Autobot from a Decepticon, it's a wonderfully playful experience.

Director Michael Bay — of "Armageddon" and "Pearl Harbor" — has superbly universalized the Transformers franchise, a behemoth of a subculture that includes a 1980s animated television series, comic books, the Hasbro line of toys, a 1986 movie and Japanese TV spinoffs with titles such as "Transformers: Super-God Masterforce."

Sure, his movie (co-produced by Steven Spielberg) targets those who grew up with profound or casual familiarity with the Transformers. He's deeply aware that potent childhood memories are at stake here. Which is why "Transformers" has some of the best action sequences you'll see all summer, including a way-cool shoot-out between a tank-size, scorpion-tailed Decepticon and American soldiers in the Middle East desert.

An outer-space conflict brings good alien robot Optimus Prime (voice of Peter Cullen) to Earth to confront his evil nemesis in "Transformers."

Hillary Swank's talents are wasted as a parasnoozer-busting sleuth roaming around the Louisiana swamps in "The Reaping."

But in Bay's hands, the movie's about more than explosions and robots. It's also a warmly appealing comedy centered on delightful jittery teenager Sam Witwicky (Sola LaBeouf), who has to not only save the world but also watch for the facial bleמים and dorky moves that might jeopardize his other pressing project — getting into the good grades of comely new companion Micaela Barnes (Megan Fox).

Sam's worries don't end there. He has to tiptoe around a pair of particularly inquisitive parents (Kevin Dunn and Julie White), who remain blissfully unaware of his mythical responsibilities.

An outer-space conflict that brings good alien robot Optimus Prime (voice of Peter Cullen) and his evil adversary Megatron (Hugo Weaving) to Earth, where they desperately seek an all-powerful cube of life-giving energy, hidden somewhere on the planet. Sam's involvement stems from a startling discovery made by his great-great-grandfather in the 1870s.

The joys come in discovering these things for the first time, and enjoying such eye-bulging special effects as Sam's dusty old Caravan — his first car bought by his dad — turns into a building-size transformer by the name of Bumblebee (voice by Mark Ryan).

That boy-and-his-machine relationship follows the affecting tradition of films such as Brad Bird's animated "The Iron Giant," featuring a heart-melting affection between a 9-year-old boy and his giant robot from outer space, or the second and third "Terminator" films, in which the young John Connor befriends the imposing Terminator, as far more terrifying machines threaten humankind. For audiences, the emotional pull comes in finding a hint of humanity amid all that circuitry. And in "Transformers," we seek, and find, the same connection.

—Washington Post

"The Reaping"

R

"The Reaping" is so beneath Hillary Swank, let alone two-time Academy Award Winner Hilary Swank. It's a high-falootin' hedge-podge of biblical mumbo jumbo, more likely to inspire laughter than fear.

Swank stars in a role that any attractive actress her age could have played as professor Katherine Winter, who debunks supposed examples of miracles using scientific explanations. It essentially requires her to run around the Louisiana swamps in tousled blonde hair and clingy tank tops, trying to understand an increasingly intense series of supernatural phenomena.

Despite her unquestionable ability to immerse herself in a role, as she earned Oscars for in "Boys Don't Cry" and "Million Dollar Baby," Swank can only go so deep when the material is this shallow.

It seems a little girl named Loren (the angelically creepy AnnaSophia Robb from "Bridge to Terabithia") has brought the 10 plagues upon a tiny bayou town known as Haven. Katherine and her investigative partner at Louisiana State University (Idris Elba) snoop around and try to prove otherwise.

The locals, meanwhile, watch and worry. They gather on side-walks and whisper to each other and are generally depicted as folksy, backward and closed-minded.

David Morrissey co-stars as the widower who beseeches Katherine to save Haven, with Steven Rea squandered in a couple of scenes as the faraway priest who knew Katherine long ago and senses that she's in danger, based on some stuff in his office spontaneously combusting.

Once you get past the frogs, maggots and flies you're left to squirm and wonder: Are they really going to run through all 10? Of course they are. Director Stephen Hopkins comes up with a couple of decent scares — and the locust attack is admittedly impressive — but the rest is just atmosphere and bombast.

Peter Levy provides some striking cinematography — all that blood-red river water contrasting sharply with the lush greenery surrounding it — while other effects, including the climactic killing of the firebrons, look just plain cheap. The fifth plague, dead livestock, also offers some unintentional hilarity.

But the bigger problem in the script from twin brothers Cary W. Hayes and Chad Hayes is that it lacks a strong narrative drive. It feels more like a series of occurrences that are intended as eerie, and will eventually come to an end.

'The kind of music that makes you feel good'

World-class military musicians to perform in Twin Falls

BY ARIEL HANSEN
Times-News writer

In the mood for a march? The U.S. Air Force Concert Band has just the thing — and you won't have to put on your parade boots to enjoy it.

The band has entertained audiences military and civilian since 1941, and next month it is coming to Twin Falls, accompanied by the U.S. Air Force Singing Sergeants. Although the program won't be chosen until just before the Nov. 2 performance, the band's repertoire includes such fare as "Acres of the Air" by Karl King; "A Morning, a Noon and a Night in Vienna" by Franz Von Suppe; the "Eagle Squadron" march by Kenneth Alford; selections from "South Pacific" by Rodgers and Hammerstein; "America the Beautiful" by Samuel Ward; and "Stars and Stripes Forever" by John Philip Sousa.

Patriotic songs usually end the performance, said tour manager Master Sergeant Michael Ryan.

"It's inspirational. It's patriotic. It's the kind of music that makes you feel good," Ryan said. "After the patriotic closer, you won't see too many dry eyes."

All the musicians are members of the U.S. Air Force and must audition to be assigned to the band. "First we're a soldier, then we're musicians," Ryan said.

They practice almost daily, and perform across the country and in combat areas where service members are deployed. They also play at high-level events with international audiences, where the universal language of music brings disparate cultures together.

"We do have something of a diplomatic mission," said Chief Master Sgt. Beisy Campenu, the band's director of marketing. "It often results in the two communities being closer together after the music has taken place."

When performing in the U.S.,

The U.S. Air Force Concert Band plays a Nov. 2 free concert in Twin Falls, featuring marches, classical selections and popular songs.

the band attracts military veterans and families and friends of active service members. Ryan sees the performances as a way for the band to honor this service.

"It's a way to say thank you to them and to the public," he said. Audience members are often impressed by the quality of the performances, which reflects on the Air Force. Ryan said he has been told: "If your band performs this well, we can only imagine what your pilots are like."

This representation extends to civilian audience members with no military connections, as well.

"By going out into the communities that don't have any other contact with the Air Force, we represent all the men and women who are out on the flight lines," Campenu said. "We do that through our expertise, which is music."

The tours give band members an opportunity to see parts of the country they might not otherwise, and to visit family and friends in cities along the tour route.

The music is designed for all ages, to give audiences a free, world-class performance as a public service. The band often enlists local media help; the Times-News is sponsoring the Twin Falls performance.

"The best reason to go to an Air Force band concert is because you will hear one of the finest musical performances you can hear anywhere," Campenu said.

"This is family entertainment. It's patriotic. It's top-notch performance."

The 10 front-row seats of the theatre are also available for $10 each on a first-come, first-serve basis the night of a performance. For tickets, call 578-9122.

HALLEY—The marble facade of the Catholic church, with its solid-looking arches and traditional stained glass window, looks impenetrable.

This facade, which Joe Lavigne created for the stage of the Liberty Theatre, exudes the black and white of religious convictions, the certainty of religious creeds.

But what happens when doubt enters these walls of certainty, this place where there is no room for uncertainty?

"That's the question posed by "Doubt," which runs through Nov. 4.

The Pulitzer Prize-winning play revolves around a strong-minded principal in a Bronx Catholic school who wrestles with her conscience and uncertainty as she is led to believe one of her teachers, a charismatic idealistic young man who is passionate about teaching children, may have molested a young boy.

Should she voice her concerns, even though she has no proof? Should she back down to avoid tearing the school apart, even though he claims there's not a shred of evidence to support her convictions?

"There are plays a theatre company longs to do because of the brilliance of the story," said Director Denise Simone. "'Doubt' is such a play. It has all the elements of a journey worth taking—complicated human and social issues mixed in with sharp humor creating a very, very entertaining night in the theater."

Indeed, the Broadway play has won every major drama award imaginable, including the Tony. New York Drama Critics Award and the Pulitzer Prize.

New York Daily News critic Howard Kissel called it "the richest piece of theater we've had in years."

"Doubt" is not really about priests and child molestations, but viewers will no doubt find the play timely given the recent scandals within the Catholic Church. The play is also timely in light of the recent publication of a bestseller chronicling Mother Teresa's spiritual struggle with doubt and uncertainty about her faith.

Playwright John Patrick Shanley also wrote the Academy Award-winning screenplay for "Moonstruck," says that the play is less about the Catholic Church sex scandals and more about the "certainty" of weapons of mass destruction, which the Bush administration offered as a rationale for invading Iraq.

"I keep say, 'How do they know? Why are people so accepting of this notion that they know and we don't and we should trust them,'" he told the Houston Chronicle.

When smart people don't use their brains to question things presented as "certain," terrible things can happen right under their noses, Shanley says.

"Doubt requires more courage than conviction does," he wrote. "You may come out of my play uncertain. You may want to be sure. Look down on that feeling: We've got to learn to live with a full measure of uncertainty. There is no last word."

Company of Fools' version of the play stars Jana Arnold as the rigid, unbending Sister Aloysius and Chad Smith as the young priest. Guest actress Michelle Carter, of Los Angeles, plays the African-American mother, Aly Wopple, the Richmond, Va., actress who starred in the Fools' production of "The Spliffie Grill" this past summer, portrays an impressionable young nun who becomes a pawn in the game of uncertainty.

Company of Fools had hoped to stage the play last year but the rights were withheld when the play went on tour.

"We even wrote to Shanley and he said, 'I'd like to help you out, but even I don't have the rights,'" Simone said.

Magichords celebrate 'The Music Man' on Saturday

BY STEVE CRUMP
Times-News writer

After years of development, a change of producers and more than 40 drafts, composer and playwright Meredith Willson was finally ready to the open the Broadway production of "The Music Man" in the fall of 1957.

"But he needed a barbershop quartet," said Fred Burkhalter, longtime member of the Twin Falls Magichords, who will stage their 41st annual Barbershop Harmony Showcase Saturday night in the College of Southern Idaho Fine Arts Center auditorium in Twin Falls. "So he contacted the society (the Society for the Preservation and Encouragement of Barber Shop Quartet Singing in America) and they set him up with a group called the Buffalo Bills."

Fifty years on, what would American musical theater be without "Lida Rose?"

Or barbershop harmony, for that matter. That's the reason the Magichords will be celebrating the 50th anniversary of "The Music Man" at their Saturday show.

"Music Man" provided music that barbershop quartets all over sing today," said Burkhalter, whose daughter Marilyn Nexus, a Denver barbershop harmony group, will be the headline act at Saturday's Magichords Barbershop Harmony Showcase.

Saturday's headline act, Nexus, is the Rocky Mountain District champion. Bartone

George Davidson, lead Ryan Wilson, baritone Mike Davidson and bass Mark Zelik sing barbershop, jazz, contemporary and gospel.

"Also on the bill are a local quartet, Give & Take.

"We have some new members, new voices this year," Burkhalter said. "We'll have about 25 singers on the risers, and it's a good group."

Jazz Continued from page 3

This year's jazz fans will find a new venue. A 13th venue—a convention tent outside Trail Creek Cabin—has been added. In addition to serving as a concert venue, the tent will host the swing dance competition Friday night and the Lindy Hop competition Saturday night.

"It'll provide 1,100 square feet of dance floor. And people will have access to the wonderful food at Trail Creek Cabin, as well," Loehr said. "It's not a tent as someone might normally think of a tent. It's got drapes and chandeliers—it's a tent done up in Sun Valley fashion." The swing dance competition, which starts at 9 p.m. Friday, will have live accompaniment from the 110 Tomatoes Dance Orchestra this year. And Evolution, the Oregon Coast Lab Band, will play for the Lindy Hop contest at 8 p.m. Saturday night, as it did last year.

"Last year we just used CDs for the ballroom swing contest and we thought, with all these great bands here, we should provide live music," Loehr said. "The dance contests last year were a little disorganized since it was our first year for them, but they were a great success. The energy level was high and people loved them."

New bands this year include the Barking Dogs, a co-ed college-age group from Lodi, Calif., that's played for 10 years at jazz festivals in Sacramento, Mammoth Lakes and Fresno, Calif. Enthusiastic and energetic. It plays Dixieland classics with a youth twist.

The Cannibals Happy Jazz group is a sextet that originated in 1959 at the St. Anne Music School, home to Denmark's Copenhagen Royal Chapel Choir. Now, nearly a half-century later, the group is still playing traditional Dixieland and New Orleans jazz from Armstrong to Ellington, from "Mood Indigo" to "White Cliffs of Dover."

Stompjones, sponsored by the Airport Inn and Keith and Paula Perry, is a San Francisco-based sextet known for its explosive stage show and a jumpin' rhythm that would catch the fancy of patrons at a kangaroo convention. The group wails boogie-woogie, rhythm 'n blues—the kind of jazz that came to be known as rock 'n roll. And they've recorded and performed with such musicians as Commander Cody, John Lee Hooker, Bonnie Raitt and Santana.

Paulette Pepper has vacated her home in Florida to come back on the road for the first time in a few years. And she'll lead the Ladies Sing, which was brought back this year by popular request.

Closer to home, local singing sensation Cheryl Morell will perform with pianist Alan Penny. Loehr also is excited about the emergence of a young new talent—18-year-old Brianna Bower from Boise. Bower, daughter of KTVB anchorwoman Dee Sarton, is a charming, gracious young lady who shows much potential, according to Loehr. Bower will perform by herself and with a trio.

Advance badge sales, which are capped at 6,000, are running ahead of last year's record pace, said Loehr. And they're being snapped up by people from every state in the U.S., every province in Canada and several foreign countries.

"A lot of badge buyers are saying that this is their first year. They've been hearing about it from friends, for years and finally decided that this was the year to check it out for themselves," said Loehr, who added that the jazz festival plays to about 7,000 people by the time the 350 musicians, 300 volunteers, 150 sponsors and Sun Valley employees are accounted for.

Jazz fans can find a festival going on somewhere in the U.S. every weekend, with the exception of Christmas. Of course, the big question on everyone's minds is whether these kinds of jazz festivals will continue after the World War II generation is gone.

"Our answer is a resounding yes," said Loehr. "Kids are picking up the lindy hop and getting turned on to the music. We find that those festivals who do a good job of drawing young people are flourishing while those who do not make themselves attractive to young people are not."

CSI professor uses travel detritus to tell of his travels

BY KAREN BOSSICK
For the Times-News

HALLEY — Bruce Kremer looks at the Dole sticker on his map of Crater Lake and muses about the vacation he took there years ago.

"Must've had a banana that day," he said.

That and a Miller Lite Beer, too, judging from another sticker pasted on the page.

Maps are typically associated with showing us where we're going. But, in Kremer's case, they also show where he's been.

That's the idea behind Sun Valley Center for the Arts' new exhibition in its Halley Center. The exhibition of Kremer's journals opens with a public reception from 5:30 to 7 p.m. Friday.

The exhibition is part of The Center's current multidisciplinary project "Lines in the Earth," which includes several artists' work using maps. Kremer's exhibit will run through Dec. 14.

Kremer, a photographer, sculptor, painter and instructor at the College of Southern Idaho, has kept dozens of "visual journals" over the past 20 years, recording his travels and daily doings in them.

He has inscribed few words in them. Rather, he lets his doodles, sketches and the tickets, magazine pictures and maps that he's pasted onto the pages tell the story.

On this trip to Oregon's Crater Lake, for instance, he has included a picture of the area, a receipt for his $5 park entry fee, marked an "X" where he camped, traced the hike he took around the lake and noted, "Rained all day."

If you go...

Bruce Kremer's visual journals will be showcased at the Sun Valley Center for the Arts' Halley Center through Dec. 14. An opening reception will be held from 5:30-7 p.m. Friday. The exhibition will include pages from Kremer's journals featuring maps of his travels. It will also include four collages with maps and a mockup of a book Kremer made to teach others about his journal-making process. The Halley Center, located in the historic Ezra Pound house at Second and Pine streets, is open from noon to 5 p.m. Wednesdays through Fridays. Admission is free.

"In some ways, it's like an archaeological dig," Kremer said. "It shows you what was going on at a point in time. For me, it's interesting to see that I was there on a rainy day, traveling through Crater National Park. On the other hand, it's almost like seeing something another person did there's so much water under the bridge."

Kremer, who worked at San Francisco's Museum of Modern Art and art museums in Los Angeles before moving to Halley in 1998, carries a small bag of journal-making tools with him wherever he goes. It includes pens, colored pencils, tape, a correction pen, tiny watercolor set and grease pencils to write over photos. It also contains spray adhesive and a glue stick to paste business cards, currency stamps and foreign currency into his illustrated journals.

A few of his illustrated books include pages from his trip around the world in 1990.

"I see art as making thoughts and ideas real."

— Bruce Kremer

Two pages bearing a map of Paris, for instance, include the notation that his dirty laundry was stolen in the fashion capitol of the world.

The New Zealand pages include his sketch of the oldest church in New Zealand, suggestions from friends telling him what to see and the bodies he drew underneath stamps depicting faces of royalty.

Other pages feature scraps of bark from Bali, a ticket stub from a movie theater in Buenos Aires and sketches he drew of various shark teeth.

Closer to home are two pages based on a road trip to Twin Falls. There's a map showing where the snow line ended just north of Shoshone. A business card from the Buffalo Cafe, which notes he had a cheeseburger, fries and Pepsi for lunch. The pages boast an reminder of how he slipped on ice at a carwash in Shoshone, getting a three-quarter-inch gash. And they feature a sketch of the new radial tires he bought and a business card from Idaho Youth Ranch thrift store.

"I used to make quite a few loops through there, hitting the thrift stores, before gas got so expensive," he says.

Kremer says his journals provide inspiration for larger works in acrylics, collage or ceramics. They also serve as a reminder of what he was doing on a certain day right down to the inscription, "Buy auger for toilet" next to an orange advertisement of a toilet.

"Your business card will likely end up in my current journal as a reminder of my interview with you," he tells a reporter who has come to view his collection.

While they've been featured in the books "The Decorated Page" and "Making Journals By Hand," Kremer questions at times whether they really constitute art.

"When I made these, I had no idea anyone would ever look at them. I'm just recording what I do. But, on the other hand, I think people enjoy looking into someone else's mind," said Kremer, who studied at New York State College of Ceramics at Alfred University.

"I see art as making thoughts and ideas real. And part of what I'm doing is a reaction to popular culture. You can look through these, for instance, and see how ads have changed over the years."

Another thing's that changing is the amount of effort Kremer puts into his journal.

"I used to cull pictures and articles from newspapers and magazine more," he said. "Now I find that's tapering off because I'm busy with other projects and because I'm doing more cruising of the internet."
