House leadership not as heavy-handed this year

By Jared S. Hopkins
Times-News writer

BOISE — When a bill's passage was in jeopardy during a recent hearing in a House committee, a lobbyist in the front frantically wrote "Kill this bill! We'll work on it" on scraps of paper.

He quietly passed them out to the three committee members on House leadership. Majority Leader Mike Moyle, R-Star, mouthed the words, "I don't have the votes."

But he didn't need them. Instead, lawmakers voiced their own worries and killed it convincingly.

The subtle exchange — and lack of response from leadership — represents what some call an environment shift in the House from last year when moderate Republicans accused the new four-member leadership team of strong-arming and over-extending its influence.

The complaints from moderate Republicans are fewer — or at least quieter. Leadership, in turn, has flexed its muscles just a handful of times. Even those who criticized the senior caucus members have been asked to take the lead on bills.

"My sense is the membership of the House is happier with the leadership team this year," said Keith Allred, president of The Common Interest, a non-partisan citizens group who frequents the Legislature. Before the 2008 session, Allred, a Twin Falls native and Harvard professor, predicted the Republican relationships in the House

Getting attention

Chase Nielson, 10, gazes out the window during an interview Wednesday afternoon with his mother and step-mother as they talk about their efforts in forming a support group for parents of children with attention deficit disorders.

Local moms start AD/HD parent support group in Twin Falls

A kid with spiked black hair sporting a T-shirt reading "I didn't do it" takes a while to get ready in the morning. But it's not his fault, both his mom and his dad say. "It's getting harder and harder to get him ready for school," his mother says. "He's always with his hair and his clothes."

He takes a type of Ritalin as a daily prescription, said his mom, Dana Evans. The meds take some time to kick in every morning before school, and without them Nielson's thoughts scatter when it's time to get dressed, he said. "These Chase medications and these Ritalin pills make it hard to focus. It's hard to concentrate. It's hard to remember what I'm supposed to do."

JPMorgan says it will buy Bear Stearns in $236.2M deal

By Jeannine Aversa
Associated Press writer

NEW YORK — JPMorgan Chase said Sunday it will acquire rival Bear Stearns for a bargain-basement $236.2 million — or $2 a share — a stunning collapse for one of the world's largest and most storied investment banks.

The last-minute buyout was aimed at averting a Bear Stearns bankruptcy and a spreading crisis of confidence in the global financial system.

JPMorgan Chase & Co. said the deal has received the required approvals from the federal government and the Federal Reserve. Bear Stearns shares closed Friday at $30 a share.

The Fed will provide special financing to JPMorgan Chase for the deal, JPMorgan Chase said. The central bank has agreed to fund up to $30 billion of Bear Stearns' less liquid assets.

the rate at which banks lend each other money, the Fed was widely expected to again cut its headline rate by as much as a full point to 2 percent.

The announcement from both the Fed and JPMorgan comes ahead of what some analysts expect to be a brutal day for global stocks. Before the announcements, New Zealand's markets opened drastically lower — then began to recover after the deal was unveiled.

Meanwhile, Treasury Secretary Henry Paulson said Sunday the Bush administration will "do what it takes" to stabilize chaotic markets and minimize the economic damage after a tumultuous week. Paulson, in a series of interviews, sought to send a message that the administration is on top of the situation. "The government is prepared to do what it takes to maintain the stability of our financial system," he said. "That's our priority."

On Manson's trail: Forensic testing suggests possible new graves

By Juliana Barbassa

DEATH VALLEY NATIONAL PARK, Calif. — Bone-white stretches of salt, leached up from the lifeless soil, lay like a shroud over the high desert where a paranoid Charles Manson hoted up after an orgy of murder nearly four decades ago.

evidence of death — clues pointing to possible decades-old clandestine graves. And the results of just-completed followup tests suggest bodies could indeed be lying beneath the parched ground. The test findings conclude there are two likely clandestine grave sites at Barker Ranch, and one additional site that merits further investigation.

camp then fell out of favor. The same jailhouse confessions that helped investigators initially connect the band of misfits living in the Panamint Mountains to the gruesome killings that terrorized Los Angeles hinted at other deaths. Manson follower Susan Atkins boasted to her cell mate on November 1, 1969, that there were "three people out in the desert that they done in." Other stories surfaced. In the absence of bodies, they were forgotten.

Plan could send Hanford waste to INL

RICHLAND, Wash. — A revised U.S. Department of Energy plan could send up to 9,000 containers of radioactive waste from southeastern Washington's Hanford nuclear reservation to Idaho for repackaging. The Energy Department recently announced it plans to make Idaho National Laboratory the nation's primary processing center for transuranic waste from nuclear sites that don't have their own processing capabilities.

The federal government created Hanford in the 1940s as part of the top-secret Manhattan Project to build the atomic bomb. One of its reactors produced plutonium for the bomb that was dropped on Nagasaki, Japan, in August 1945.

Hanford's transuranic waste, which includes building, laboratory and other debris contaminated with plutonium, was temporarily buried after 1970 when Congress ordered that the waste be sent to a national repository.

That was before the Waste Isolation Pilot Plant opened in New Mexico for permanent disposal of such waste. The Energy Department believes that sending some Hanford waste to Idaho would allow the waste to be packaged more efficiently than with the manual process that must be used at Hanford.

Astronauts attach handyman robot's arms outside space station

HOUSTON — Two spacewalking astronauts attached 11-foot arms to the international space station's huge new robot on Sunday, preparing the giant machine for its handyman job on the orbital outpost.

The Canadian-built robot, named Dexter, will stand 12 feet and have a mass of 3,400 pounds when it's fully assembled. It is designed to assist spacewalking astronauts and possibly someday take over some of the tougher chores, like juggling around big replacement parts.

The already challenging outing turned grueling as Linnehan and fellow spacewalker Michael Foreman struggled to release one of the robot's arms from the transport bed where it had been latched down for launch.

Two of the bolts wouldn't budge, even when the astronauts banged on them and yanked as hard as they could. They had to use a pry bar to get it out. The other arm came out much more smoothly and quickly, paving the way for Linnehan to pull up Dexter's body 60 degrees, like Frankenstein rising from his bed. That was the ideal position for plugging in Dexter's gangly arms to its shoulders.

"The whole team did a spectacular job today," Mission Control radioed the crew after the spacewalk. "You guys ought to be proud of yourselves."

40 years after My Lai massacre, survivors gather to pray for peace

MY LAI — Forty years after rampaging American soldiers slaughtered her family, Do Tuyet returned to the place where her childhood was shattered. "Everyone in my family was killed in the My Lai massacre — my mother, my father, my brother and three sisters," said Tuyet, who was 8 years old at the time. "They threw me into a ditch full of dead bodies. I was covered with blood and brains."

More than a thousand people turned out Sunday to remember the victims of one of the most notorious chapters of the Vietnam War. On March 16, 1968, members of Charlie Company killed as many as 504 villagers, nearly all of them unarmed children, women and elderly. When the unprovoked attack was uncovered, it horrified Americans, prompted military investigations and badly undermined support

Crews search rubble of crane collapse that killed at least 4

Three people were still listed as missing Sunday as rescue teams picked through the rubble of a town house crushed by a toppling construction crane in an accident that killed four construction workers.

Crews removed one section of the 19-story-tall crane that crashed onto the four-story brownstone and seriously damaged five other buildings in an affluent East Side neighborhood. Rescuers were waiting for removal of the largest pieces of debris so they could intensify their search for possible survivors. Mayor Michael Bloomberg said Sunday.

The missing people were two other construction workers and a woman who was staying at an apartment in the town house, the mayor said.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Monday, March 17, the 77th day of 2008. There are 289 days left in the year. This is St. Patrick's Day.

Today's Highlight:

Fifty years ago, on March 17, 1958, the U.S. Navy launched the Vanguard 1 satellite.

On this date:

In A.D. 461 for A.D. 493, according to other authorities, St. Patrick, the patron saint of Ireland, died in Saul. In 1776, British forces evacuated Boston during the Revolutionary War.

In 1906, President Theodore Roosevelt first likened crusading journalists to a man with "the muckrake in his hand" in a speech to the Gridiron Club in Washington. In 1910, the Camp Fire Girls organization was formed. It was formally presented to the public on this date two years later.

In 1950, scientists at the University of California at Berkeley announced they had created a new radioactive element, "californium." In 1966, a U.S. midge submarine located a missing hydrogen bomb which had fallen from an American bomber into the Mediterranean off Spain. In 1968, a peaceful anti-Vietnam War protest in London was followed by a riot outside the U.S. Embassy, more than 800 people were reported injured. In 1969, Golda Meir became prime minister of Israel.

In 1992, 29 people were killed in the truck bombing of the Israeli embassy in Buenos Aires, Argentina. Ten years ago, Jeff King battled through blowing snow and poor visibility to earn his third victory in the Iditarod Trail Sled Dog Race. Five years ago, Edging to the brink of war, President Bush gave Saddam Hussein 48 hours to leave his country. Iraq rejected Bush's ultimatum, saying that a U.S. attack to force Saddam from power would be "a grave mistake." In Washington, tobacco farmer Dwight Watson, claiming to be carrying bombs, drove a tractor and trailer into a pond on the National Mall; the threat disrupted traffic for two days until Watson surrendered; there were no bombs.

One year ago Denouncing a conflict entering its fifth year, protesters across the country raised their voices against U.S. policy in Iraq and marched by the thousands to the Pentagon, John Backus, the developer of Fortran, a programming language that changed how people interacted with computers, died in Ashland, Ore., at age 82.

for the war. Sun's memorial drew the families of the victims, returning U.S. war veterans, peace activists and a delegation of atomic bombing survivors from Hiroshima and Nagasaki. "We are not harboring hatred," said Nguyen Hoang Son, vice governor of Quang Ngai, the central Vietnamese province where the incident occurred. "We are calling for solidarity to defend peace, to defend life and to remind the world that it must never forget the massacre at My Lai."

Although the occasion was somber, many visitors said they drew hope from it. "So much positive energy has come from such a negative event," said Richard Chamberlain, 63, a returning Vietnam vet from Madison, Wiscon. "The people here have amazing resilience. I'm grateful that they've treated us as friends, not enemies."

PAKISTAN

Missiles strike Pakistani tribal area, 20 dead

MIRAN SHAH — Missiles that witnesses say came from an unmanned drone flattened a suspected militant safe-house Sunday in Pakistan's tribal area along the Afghan border. State television said the strike killed about 20 people.

Witnesses said a drone dropped seven missiles on the sprawling, mud-brick compound about three miles outside Wana, the main town in South Waziristan. Only U.S.-led coalition forces in Afghanistan are known to operate unmanned drones in the region, and they have launched attacks over the Pakistani border before.

Osama bin Laden and other senior al-Qaida and Taliban leaders are believed to be hiding out somewhere in the rugged, lawless tribal regions along the Afghan-Pakistan border.

Anger over U.S. attacks on militants in the area, which often have tacit approval from President Barack Obama's regime, helped carry the president's opponents to victory in parliamentary elections last month. The new parliament convenes on Monday.

Many Pakistanis believe Musharraf's friendship with the U.S. and tactics in fighting al-Qaida and Taliban militants have only fueled terrorism at home. Witnesses, state TV and intelligence officials said the destroyed building belonged to a local militant leader and Taliban sympathizer who goes by the single name Noonahil.

House

to be a top issue to watch.

Last year, Lawrence E. Denny, a farmer from Midvale, was elected House Speaker over Bill Deal, a moderate Republican. Many moderate Republicans cited differences with Denny and his cohorts, primarily Mylee.

It was the first conservative transition for lawmakers since Tom Stivers of Twin Falls was House Speaker in the early 1980s. Denny succeeded Burley's Bruce Newcomb, a moderate who followed a mid-to-road philosophy set by his predecessors Mike Simpson and Tom Boyd.

"I'm not hearing the reports that we heard last year, of leadership being heavy-handed," said Jim Weatherly, a retired Boise State University political science professor and legislative observer for several decades. "That comes with being a little more effective in controlling the levers of the power in the House."

About a dozen moderate Republicans complained in 2007 that the Legislature was aggressively managing its caucus and bullying members.

Two such lawmakers have since left the chamber: Clete Edmondson now works for Gov. CL "Butch" Otter and Bob Ling retired.

The shift in the House atmosphere is perhaps most prevalent in Rep. Lon Smith, R-Twin Falls. Last year, the attorney and five-term legislator saw just one of his bills make it out of the House, while other efforts were denied in conservative committees. Smith openly criticized Denny as being in "punishing mood" after Smith supported Deal.

But things have turned around in the year for Smith. He's more engaged in committees, has helped lead the House initiatives on transportation reform, and says he's having more fun.

"Last year I was on the retaliatory end," he said. "You beat a dog because he's been disobedient. After you get him down you don't keep beating him."

Smith said he's even decided to seek a sixth term — something he admits was unlikely had the choice been made a year ago.

"Compare those quotes he's just given to those quotes he gave a year ago — quite different," said Weatherly.

There also have been some visible clashes like last year when a vote-by-mail bill was approved by a committee but never given a full vote on the floor. This year it appears House leaders learned from their mistakes and developed a more palatable management style, said Weatherly. He referenced a bill requiring home sales price disclosure to county assessors that passed the Senate but hasn't been seen in a House committee.

"It's below the surface but the net effect is these both are killed," said Weatherly.

Leadership has mended fences with Democrats, said House Minority Leader Wendy Luttrell, D-Ketchikan. She said the leadership team, which also includes Assistant Majority Leader Scott Beike of Oakley and Caucus Chair Ken Roberts of Donnelly, has been noticeably nicer to their own.

"I don't hear people calling each other BINO this year," said Beike, referring to the legislative acronym for "Republican in name only."

As in the past, leadership refuted any reports of strong-arming. Last week, they said all legislators try to be moderate. Lawmakers who say they enjoy this year more might be credited to the cramped quarters of the Capitol Annex that require working together.

"Not everyone can win every time on every issue and it culminates to a head at the end of the session," said Beike. "Every session has a different chronology to it. The collective psyche can take so many turns."

When asked why moderates aren't criticizing him and his comrades, Beike said, "I guess we must be doing something right."

Still, the political battleground is not over, particularly with ideas from leadership. Transportation funding is up in the air. A constitutional amendment just cleared committee. And a 93-page proposal to consolidate elections is due for a hearing.

Manson

could have killed someone else? Possibly. Could another member of the family have killed someone? Sure," said Steve Kay, a former deputy district attorney.

Last month, equipped with cutting-edge forensic technology, the investigators assembled in the ghost town of Ballarat for a 20-mile ride in all-terrain vehicles to the ranch.

The team included two national lab researchers carrying instruments to detect chemical markers of human decomposition, a police seeking dog, and an anthropologist armed with a magnetic resonance reader.

Also in the group were a woman whose life was forever marked by the cult's brutal murder of her pregnant sister, and a gold prospector who once accused Manson's closest neighbor and remains intimate with the sharp creases of the Panamints.

Prospector Emmett Harder guided the expedition.

He had a claim on Manley peak, one of the jagged peaks overlooking Barker Ranch, while the Manson family camped out there in the late 1960s. He shared dinner with the band at times, and gave the men work.

Later, Harder would learn more about the cult leader's beliefs, that the end of the world, which he called "Helter Skelter," was near — and Manson's conviction that through murder, he had a role to play in accelerating that chaotic time.

Barker Ranch was one of several hide-outs used by Manson and his followers.

The killings that launched the cult onto national newspapers had been orchestrated from Spain Ranch, a former Western movie set that served as backdrop to episodes of "Bonanza" and "The Lone Ranger."

It was to Spahn that the killers initially retreated after the 1969 murders of Gary Hinman on July 31; Sharon Tate, Jay Sebring, Voytek Frykowski, Abigail Folger and Steven Parent on August 9; and Rosemary LaBianca on August 10.

"This was to signal the start of the apocalyptic race war that Manson told his followers would pit blacks against whites. He preached that they would emerge from the desert at the end and rule over the survivors."

But a daybreak raid on Spain Ranch on August 16 by Los Angeles sheriff's deputies looking for car thieves netted 26 arrests. All were released a few days later on a technicality but Spahn was no longer safe.

Barker Ranch was where Manson withdrew in those last, frenzied days.

Retracing his steps nearly four decades later, the search group stopped at the dilapidated house. From the porch, the view was clear for miles, broken only by the long twisted stems of creosote bushes and knee-high bunches of desert rabbitbrush.

"After the murder, my mom became a shell of herself," said Debra Tate, who was 17 when her sister, actress Sharon Tate, was killed. Her younger sister Patti was 11 and filled in at home, as best she could.

She has given herself two tasks, said making sure her sister's killers never go free, and helping other families find the peace that has eluded her.

"If there are bullies here," she said at the ranch, "we need to find them and send them home."

About 100 yards behind the house, Dostie readied his trained dog, Buster, for the search.

"Go find Fred!" Dostie said, releasing the dog on the command that sends him searching for human remains.

The dog bounded away, zigzagging over the terrain. Then he lay down in a depression in the ground, quivering, ears upright. Buster looked at his trainer and emitted a high-pitched whine.

"He's alerting," Dostie said, throwing the dog his reward and planting a flag on the site.

Meanwhile, Arpad Vass and Marc Wise, senior researchers from Tennessee's Oak Ridge National Laboratory, were reading the first of the instruments they'd first brought, capable of chemically detecting evidence of decades-old human bodies. It was a hand-held device shaped like a gun.

"It's a crude sniffer," said Vass. "It gives us a quick indication of areas we want to come back to."

The machine detects fluorinated hydrocarbon compounds, one of the approximately 400 types of volatile organic compounds emitted by human bodies during decomposition. Focusing on these compounds is important because Vass believes they're formed as the fluoride added to urban drinking water is released after death.

Their presence helps differentiate a human from animal bones, explained Vass, who has spent years developing a decomposition odor database using bodies donated to the Oak Ridge Lab.

The instrument beeped at regular intervals. As it approached the ground, the beeping accelerated until it was a steady stream of sound.

"That's impressive," said Vass, a senior researcher at Oak Ridge specializing in environmental analytical chemistry.

Vass agreed, considering the quantity and the types of markers of human decomposition found, the cadaver dog's response, and the probing exercise, he found enough evidence to warrant further testing at a deeper level and a full scale excavation at Barker Ranch, according to the report he issued to law enforcement.

"I'd recommend a dig, excavate the sites," said Dostie, who reviewed the report.

"If a body is found on the Barker Ranch, then what? The likelihood of a new prosecution appears slim. Locating remains would just be the first step, said Patrick Sequeira, the Los Angeles County deputy district attorney who has been in charge of the Manson family parole hearings since Kay's retirement.

"You have to tie them to someone who has disappeared, and there were a lot of people floating in and out of the family environment," he said.

Then investigators would have to find out who killed them, where, and who could testify, he said.

The Manson family members currently in prison are already serving life sentences — the maximum penalty allowed at the time the crimes were committed.

wants to give their kid medication to alter their brain chemistry."

But without it, Nielsen wouldn't be able to sit still, said Michelle Nielsen, his step-mother.

"We felt there are other parents out there with the same questions as us," said Nielsen. "We felt alone."

So they started a support group. Even though only one person showed up to the first meeting on March 10, Evans and Michelle Nielsen are not alone and they're not giving up. The group is a Twin Falls chapter of a national charitable organization, Children and Adults with Attention Deficit/Hyperactivity Disorder (CHADD).

In Twin Falls, there are about 92 kids with similar disorders, but the school district doesn't specifically classify them, said Clara Alred, the district's director of support services.

The only other Idaho chapters of CHADD are in Chubbuck and Eagle. Meetings are free and CHADD does not endorse or represent products, services, medications or treatment, according to its Web site.

Nielsen's mom and step-mom said they just want to give parents a place to talk, compare notes, and listen to experts in the field. They said they want to chisel away the stigma sometimes associated with the disorder.

"Some people think it's the parents that don't know what they're doing," said Evans.

Evans said from the time Nielsen could walk he was into everything.

"I'd tell the doctor 'I'm exhausted,'" Evans said. "They'd just put-poo-poo it saying you're just a single mom of a toddler."

Nielsen was diagnosed when he was 6 1/2-years old, after he was expelled from the Boys and Girls Club, his mom said.

"I'm like an atomic bomb that blows up," Chase said about when he's off his medication. "I can feel the tush."

"It's not Chase's fault that he has this," Michelle Nielsen said.

Zoning seminar educates local commissioners, council members

By Damon Hunzcker
Times-News correspondent

Local officials spent Saturday being told how to plan and zone. The Twin Falls City Council Chambers hosted a one-day seminar on subdivision zoning and procedural matters. About 100 people attended, including elected council members and zoning commissioners from the Magic Valley.

The seminar was facilitated by two Idaho attorneys — Jerry Mason of Coeur d'Alene and William Herrington of Moscow, both of whom have conducted similar seminars in Twin Falls for more than a decade and in other areas of the state for 17 years.

The workshop — with its univisly title Seven Keys to Sustainable Zoning or Subdivision Decisions — was both practical and legalistic. While words such as "dedicatory" and "quasi-judicial" were often used, the attorneys balanced them with pragmatic advice. "Don't waste your time arguing about nothing," Mason suggested. And regarding Robert's Rules of Order, Herrington said, "Robert's are parliamentary rules, and unless you've got a parliament, we don't recommend that you follow them."

The latest ordinances and court rulings regarding subdivisions were explained, but Mason and Herrington also warned the group about the most sensible ways to avoid legal disputes and even touched upon the proper methods of signing in public-hearing participants without incurring problems like illegible handwriting.

On a related note, Mason admonished the commissioners and council members about holding unnecessary and excessive hearings. "Imagine if the sheriff called a public hearing every time he was going to issue a driver's license," he said. "There are people out there who would go to the meetings."

Commissioners and council members are often compelled to over-compensate and appease constituents by applying a "personal touch," as Mason called it, but he reminded them, "There are lawyers out there, so your folksy approach sometimes gets lost in the lawsuits."

At the same time, it's imperative to provide an opportunity for everyone to be heard. "If you want to create an angry constituent, tell them you came to the public hearing but we wouldn't let you speak. That voice's gone the next election," he said.

Mason argued that it's also crucial to limit the time allotted to each speaker. "Only attorneys think you can persuade people by talking at them for eight hours," he said toward the end of the six-hour seminar.

Afterward, Mark Spencer of Wendell Planning and Zoning told the Times-News, "It was very common-sensical. They pointed out the best ways to deal with the traps that we can obviously fall into if we haven't thought about them."

Former Wendell Mayor Paul Isaacson, who has attended the previous six seminars, offered a briefer assessment: "It was good," he said.

Every city council and zoning commission in the Magic Valley constantly changing ordinances, but on a more timely note, Mason told the Times-News, "About two-thirds of the people here have been newly appointed or elected, so the field of planning-and-zoning, laws are new and difficult for them. This provides a practical value."

Making Buhl services better

City aims for $286K toward improvements

By Blair Koch
Times-News correspondent

The amount is $14,000 less than the original $300,000 federally appropriated to Buhl, but city officials say they are glad $286,000 is still planned to come to the city.

Susan Riddle, community development consultant, revealed to the city last week the amount of funding through a spending bill signed into law by President Bush in December.

Before Buhl can receive funding it will need to complete an application through the Environmental Protection Agency's State and Tribal Grant program, Riddle said.

The money will be used to help finance the city's multi-million-dollar water and wastewater system upgrades. The city passed $32 million in bonds in 2006, and is seeking additional grant opportunities.

"Any money we can get will help us pay for our projects," said City Engineer Scott Bybee.

Besides constructing an arsenic treatment facility to lower the city's arsenic level from 22 parts per million to the EPA's required 10 ppb, the city is also in the process of planning upgrades to its sewer system.

The project has been stalled while the city determines how much growth it should plan for.

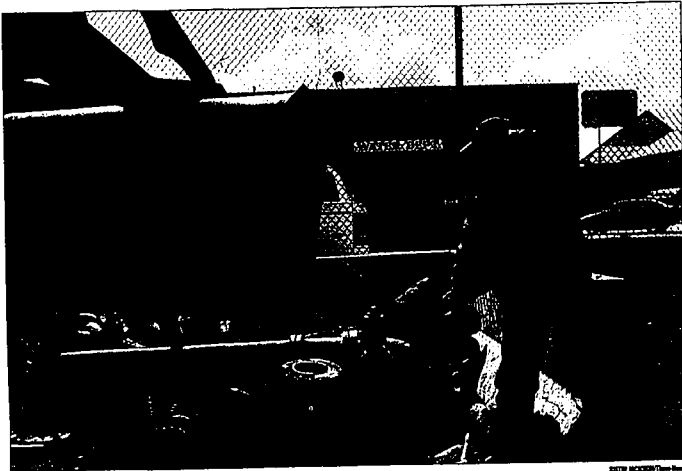

"We've got a pretty good handle on the wastewater project, but we are trying to determine the design loads," Bybee said. "It looks like a few industries may be coming into town but we don't have any certainties. We would hate to under build and we would hate to overbuild. We just don't know yet how best to move forward."

In other council news, the city will soon be hiring a new public works director. The decision came after Hans Camenzind, who had headed the public works department since November, decided to move to California.

"His wife was supposed to get a transfer but they were told it would be at least a year," said City Clerk Sharon Hayes. "He just couldn't be gone that long."

Complex would solve crowding, structure concerns for Twin Falls public works

By Nate Poppino
Times-News writer

Anyone trying to find the city of Twin Falls' public works offices might as well have signed up for a scavenger hunt.

Scattered across the downtown area, and the city's mechanic shop, street, water and wastewater departments have no more room to expand, city manager assistant Gretchen Scott said. There's no centralized location for people needing help. Those buildings aren't in the best shape, she said, and the city's golf building "is literally falling down around staff."

"At today's 5 p.m. meeting, the Twin Falls City Council will consider a solution to those problems. The proposal, developed over the last year, would partner the city with Legion IV Development to build a new public works complex on Victory Avenue, on the same land as the city's animal shelter.

According to documents prepared for the council, Region IV would construct the buildings and lease them to the city for 20 years. The city would pay $225,000 a year during the course of the lease and own the buildings at the end of it.

The complex, including an office, golf shop and 23,000 square-foot building for the water department, would provide room for the departments to expand with the city and nicer facilities for people using the golf course, Scott said. It also would make 6th Avenue

West, where many city facilities are lined up, safer for both the public and public works employees, creating a better exit for city equipment.

"We're driving big backhoes and dump trucks with trailers right out into the middle of traffic," she said.

The city will also consider a request to allow a greater than standard building height for a proposed hotel on Fillmore Street, and the final plat of the Perrine Point Subdivision near the intersection of Falls Avenue West and Grandview Drive North. Meetings are held in the council chambers at 305 3rd Ave. E.

Popplewell students participate in math-a-thon

Event raises money for Parent Teacher Network

By Blair Koch
Times-News correspondent

Buhl did it for the children.

An upcoming recall election, a recent failed levy and ongoing negotiations between the community and school district, didn't stop residents from pulling together for the benefit of school children.

The annual elementary Math-a-thon fundraiser is anticipated by students and others, but this year's success brought a great deal of pride — and money — to the elementary school.

During the awards ceremony Friday, students cheered at raising nearly $31,000, the second highest amount since the event's inception some 20 years ago.

"We are pleased the community supported this event and made it one of our most successful years ever," said Marcy Brodine, president of the Parent Teacher Network.

Each student in the elementary school collected pledges in February for their 100-question math tests. Not only were students able to collect on their pledges, but a number of local businesses and residents donated special items as prizes.

When the fundraiser kicked off last month, the PTN mailed students to do their best on the test. Students earning 90 percent or higher would have their names placed in a Poppell Elementary kindergarten student Allis Breck of Buhl dressed in cowgirl wear for the school's Math-a-thon award assembly Friday. This year's western-themed event raised nearly $31,000 toward the Parent Teacher Network.

Teen returns to face charges in father's death

BOISE — A 17-year-old Boise boy has been returned to Idaho and is expected to appear in court Monday to face charges in the death of his father.

Derek Lewis was returned to Boise Saturday from an Oregon juvenile facility where he had been held since his arrest Monday after a vehicle and foot chase on the southern Oregon coast.

Police say the teen, formerly of Declo, was driving his father's pickup truck.

A co-worker found his father, 45-year-old Dennis Lewis, dead in his Boise home on Monday. An autopsy revealed Lewis died of a small caliber gunshot to the back of the head.

The younger Lewis is scheduled to make an initial court appearance in 4th District Magistrate Court.

Burley, nearby towns fight over airport's location

BURLEY — Burley officials say plans to relocate the city's airport are swayed in an annexation dispute with nearby Heyburn.

They say if airport construction does not move forward, the Federal Aviation Administration will refuse to work with Minidoka and Gassio counties. Burley officials also say the FAA has warned it will shut down the city's small, aging airport.

About half of the city's preferred site for the new airport is being considered for annexation and rezoning by Heyburn. The owners of the land say an airport would waste its commercial potential.

The FAA would pay about 95 percent of the new airport's cost. But Burley officials say there may not be enough money to purchase the land if half of it is zoned for commercial use.

Recall election set for Buhl School Board chairman Clemens

A special election for voters to decide if they want to recall Buhl School Board Chairman Gene Clemens has been set for 12 to 8 p.m., April 16, at the district office. The recall effort garnered the 20 signatures needed, canvassed and certified March 4, to move the issue to the ballot box.

Clemens, who ran unopposed during the May 2007 trustee election, now has an opportunity to respond to the recall with a statement printed on the election ballot.

According to Idaho code, the statement must be filed with the district clerk and not exceed 200 words.

Child poverty rates rising in Utah

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — The poverty rate among children in Utah's largest city grew from 19 percent in 1999 to 28.4 percent in 2006, according to new data from the U.S. Census Bureau. The statewide poverty rate for Utah children rose slightly in those years, growing from 10.1 percent to 11.9 percent. Other cities, including Ogden and Provo, saw larger increases than the state rate, but the survey's margin of error for places other than Salt Lake City makes the significance unclear. But in Salt Lake City, increases in poor children qualifying for discounted lunch and the demand for low-income family housing and affordable preschool indicates that families are struggling.

Advocates say no single reason explains why poverty is increasing among Salt Lake City children. But data experts and those who work with struggling families say the increasing number of immigrants plays a significant role. Minorities made up 61 percent of Salt Lake City's population growth from 2000 to 2006.

EDITORIAL

Why can't communities decide what's best for them?

The conservative Republicans who dominate the Idaho House Revenue and Taxation Committee are not satisfied just to set tax policy for the current Legislature. They want to do it for all future Legislatures.

On Friday, they approved an amendment to the state Constitution that would require a two-thirds vote for all new local-option sales taxes.

"Down the road, you could have a renegade Legislature," said House Majority Leader Mike Moyle of Star. "You never know."

Beg your pardon? The members of Rev and Tax are evidently smarter than the future lawmakers, city council members and county commissioners who will have to clean up the mess in 10 years.

What the committee stalwarts are after, of course, is to foreclose future sales tax increases on the local level, whether they're needed or not.

Besides requiring a two-thirds majority of voters to approve future local-option sales taxes, the amendment would set the same minimum in every county where such a taxing district — a regional transportation authority, for example — is proposed.

That's to prevent counties with large populations from overwhelming smaller ones.

A temporary local-option sales tax now available for Idaho resort towns requires 60 percent voter approval. Moyle's proposal would mean towns like Ketchum would be required to meet a higher standard to replace existing taxes as they expire.

Ketchum's resort tax expires in 2013. Democratic lawmakers say the constitutional amendment is a Trojan horse designed to stall local-option efforts.

"What we're doing is just delaying opportunities for discussion on transportation," said House Minority Leader Wendy Jaquet, D-Ketchum. "It's a political year."

She's right. Ideologues in the House are paying lip-service to local control, but voting the other way.

But then again, they've had years of experience doing so.

Our view: Once and for all, anti-tax hawks in the Idaho House of Representatives are looking to thwart local control. What do you think? We welcome viewpoints from our readers on this and other issues.

Four years ago, an academic economist named Ben Bernanke co-authored a technical paper that could have been titled "Things the Federal Reserve Might Try if It's Desperate" — although that may not have been obvious from its actual title, "Monetary Policy Alternatives at the Zero Bound: An Empirical Investigation."

PAUL KRUGMAN

Today, the Fed is indeed desperate, and Bernanke, as its chairman, is putting some of the paper's suggestions into effect. Unfortunately, however, the Bernanke Fed's actions — even though they're unprecedented in their scope — probably won't be enough to bail the economy's downward spiral.

And if I'm right about that, there's another implication: The ugly economics of the financial crisis will soon create some ugly politics, too.

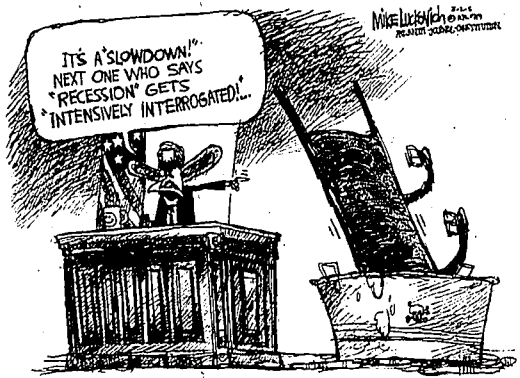

To understand what's going on, you have to know a bit about how monetary policy usually operates. The Fed's economic power rests on the fact that it's the only institution with the right to add to the "monetary base": pieces of green paper bearing portraits of dead presidents, plus deposits that private banks hold at the Fed and can convert into green paper at will.

When the Fed is worried about the state of the economy, it basically responds by printing more of that green paper, and using it to buy bonds from banks. The banks then use the green paper to make more loans, which causes businesses and households to spend more, and the economy expands.

This process can be almost magical in its effects. A committee in Washington gives some technical instructions to a trading desk in New York, and just like that, the economy creates millions of jobs.

But sometimes the magic doesn't work. And this is one of those times.

These days, it's rare to get through a week without hearing about another financial disaster. Some of this is unavoidable: There's nothing Bernanke can or should do to prevent people who bet on ever-rising house prices from losing money. But the Fed is trying to contain the damage from the collapse of the housing bubble, keeping it from causing a deep recession or wrecking financial markets that had nothing to do with housing.

I used to think that the major issues facing the next president would be how to get out of Iraq and what to do about health care. At this point, however, I suspect that the biggest problem for the next administration will be figuring out which parts of the financial system to bail out, how to pay the cleanup bills and how to explain what it's doing to an angry public.

So Bernanke and his colleagues have been doing the usual thing: printing up green paper and using it to buy bonds. Unfortunately, the policy isn't having much effect on the things that matter. Interest rates on government bonds are down — but financial chaos has made banks unwilling to take risks, and it's getting harder, not easier, for businesses to borrow money.

As a result, the Fed's attempt to avert a recession has almost certainly failed. And each new piece of economic data — like the news that retail sales fell last month — adds to fears that the recession will be both deep and long.

So now the Fed is following one of the options suggested in that 2004 paper, which was about things that, when conventional monetary policy isn't getting any traction. Instead of following its usual practice of buying only safe U.S. government debt, the Fed announced this week that it would put $400 billion — almost half its available funds — into other stuff, including bonds backed by, yes, home mortgages. The hope is that this will stabilize markets and end the panic.

Officially, the Fed won't be buying mortgage-backed securities outright; it's only accepting them as collateral in return for loans. But it's definitely taking on some mortgage risk. Is this, to some extent, a bailout for banks? Yes.

Still, that's not what has me worried. I'm more concerned that despite the extraordinary scale of Bernanke's action — to my knowledge, no advanced-country's central bank has ever exposed itself to this much market risk — the Fed still won't manage to get a grip on the economy. You see, $400 billion sounds like a lot, but it's still small compared with the problem.

Indeed, early returns from the credit markets have been disappointing. Indicators of financial stress like the "TED spread" (don't ask) are a little better than they were before the Fed's announcement — but not much, and things have by no means returned to normal.

What if this initiative fails? I'm sure that Bernanke and his colleagues are frantically considering other actions that they can take, but there's only so much the Fed — whose resources are limited, and whose mandate doesn't extend to rescuing the whole financial system — can do when faced with what looks increasingly like one of history's great financial crises.

The next steps will be up to the politicians.

I used to think that the major issues facing the next president would be how to get out of Iraq and what to do about health care. At this point, however, I suspect that the biggest problem for the next administration will be figuring out which parts of the financial system to bail out, how to pay the cleanup bills and how to explain what it's doing to an angry public.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Leave Idaho alone or leave Idaho

Please understand that folks like Jim Prunty, Jon Marvel and Gloria Carlton, would rather see our public land burn in wildfires that cost taxpayers far more than grazing.

Ranchers pay to graze public lands. The truth is that the best people to manage our public lands are the ranchers; they will do what is best to protect the land that puts the meat on your table and helps them to make a living. I have a real hard time with a retired firefighter with the U.S. Forest Service, former rancher having so much anger toward the ranching industry of Idaho. I've never heard of any rancher saying kill any elk and say nothing. I've been around ranches all my life and that's just not true in my opinion.

By the way, Gloria, the Idaho Fish and Game is funded by sportsmen, not taxpayers. When did you buy a hunting permit? It is too bad there is so little common sense, there are too many over-educated idiots that are either in charge or trying to be. If you don't like Idaho the way it is, don't let the door hit you in the behind on the way out.

Why Idaho needs a medical school

In 2007, the Legislature commissioned a study of medical education in Idaho. The results are startling. Here are some of the facts:

Idaho has a severe scarcity of physicians. We currently have about 2,425 physicians, or 198 per 100,000 residents, ranking us 49th in the nation. Adding an additional 1,184 physicians would be needed to raise us to the national average. In addition, 40 percent of our physicians are over 55 years of age, giving us the sixth-oldest physician pool in the country.

Idaho is experiencing increasing demand on its physician resources. Our population is growing at twice the national rate. We are projected to grow from 1.41 million in 2005 to 1.74 million in 2020. We also expect an 85 percent increase in the number of those over 65. We need 120 new doctors a year just to handle the turnover of our existing physician workforce.

READER COMMENT

The current availability of medical school seats for Idaho residents is very poor. Under the national average, ranking us 48th in the nation. We also purchase eight seats from the University of Utah, giving us a total of 28 seats per year. This is 32 percent of the national average, ranking us 48th in the nation.

In terms of residency programs, we face even worse. We have four residency programs that train 17 residents each year. The national average is 167 programs per state training 716 residents per year.

Idaho is the largest state without a medical school. Of the 11 states smaller than Idaho, seven have a fully accredited medical school. Where do we go from here?

Our greatest asset as a state is our ability to put local interests temporarily aside and seek the good of the whole. The biggest enemy to our eventual success is the provincial and regional mind-set we so easily fall into. An issue as large as this demands a cooperative and synergistic approach. Why is that?

In the "distributive model" of medical education being considered, much of the training would be provided in locations separate from a main campus. From Kellogg to Nampa to Rexburg, the entire state would become the classroom. Every community with a hospital would likely be involved in some way. Likewise, each of our state universities would participate in a major way. Another player is the University of Washington through its WWAMI program. The key to our success is to realize that this is bigger than any of these constituents. It is not about Pocatello or Boise or Moscow. It is not about JSU or BSU or U of I. It is not about the future of WWAMI. It is about what is best for Idaho. It's just that simple.

For those interested, the complete text of the report "Medical Education Study Final Report" is available on the Idaho State Board of Education's website at www.boardofed.idaho.gov/prcss_releases/publications.asp.

Tribes challenge Interior Dept. ruling on casinos off the reservation

By Ryan Nakashima
Associated Press writer

LAS VEGAS — A major policy change this year by the Department of Interior will slow the growth of the multi-billion-dollar Indian casino industry, which has gained controversy for developments in communities far from reservation land.

The change, made in a series of letters and a memo issued in early January, essentially rejected 22 applications for new off-reservation casinos, by singling their approval on a single criterion: the distance from the reservation.

While the change was hailed by opponents of the sprawling business — that raked in $25.1 billion in gambling revenues in 2006, many tribes attacked the ruling as unfair and unjust, robbing them of what many consider their only economic opportunity.

"We were shocked by the lack of due process involved," said Mark Van Norman, executive director of the National Indian Gaming Association. "The Department of Interior created a new regulatory standard one day, didn't notify anybody and applied it the next day."

The St. Regis Mohawks in upstate New York, one of two tribes that sued the department, called the decision racist and paternalistic because it purported to look out for the best interests of the tribes by supporting the integrity of reservation life.

"It's outrageous for us as Mohawk people to be told that we can't sustain our community relations," said St. Regis Chief Lorraine White.

White said male members of the tribe had for decades traveled to faraway construction sites to support their families on the reservation in upstate New York.

"What a bunch of bulls— when you're talking to the very people who actually built New York City with their hands," White said.

But several groups, including tribes with existing casinos, hailed the change.

Alvin Feldman, spokesman for MGM Mirage Inc., the largest casino operator on the Las Vegas Strip, said the policy brought order to an unruly process that has approved dozens of off-reservation casinos in recent years.

"We've never ever had a problem with tribal gaming ... but we definitely take a position when tribes anywhere try to take land that's 300, 400, 500 miles away from their reservation and say, 'Oh, we want to do this there,'" he said.

Proposed casino splits tribes, Columbia River town

By Joseph B. Frazier
Associated Press writer

CASCADE LOCKS, Ore. — A lawyer, doctor, bank and pharmacy are gone. The George Gas and Mart is closed. The Gum Oak Restaurant, closed. Scenic Winds Motel, closed. Big D auto service, closed. An Internet facility, closed. Whisky Flats Mercantile, closed.

"In the 1960s we had about 60 licensed businesses," said Charles Daugherty, port manager in this former timber town in the scenic Columbia River Gorge. "We now have about 12, and half of them are for sale."

About 100 miles to the south, the Confederated Tribes of Warm Springs are having their own troubles. Reservation unemployment is about 26 percent. The tribal lumber mill is closing. The tribes are millions of dollars in debt. Tribal leaders say they need to provide basic services.

The Warm Springs tribes and many Cascade Locks residents also have this in common: They see building an Indian casino on the banks of the Columbia as their salvation.

It is an ironic twist in history. Cascade Locks sits on part of 10 million acres ceded by the Wasco and Warm Springs Indians to the U.S. government in 1855. In exchange, the tribes got government services, fishing rights and a 640,000-acre reservation. Oregon's largest, that begins about 65 miles east of Portland.

And now, many here hope the Warm Springs tribes would be permitted to build an off-reservation casino on a sliver of the land they gave up.

But building the casino in this town of 1,100 is not a sure thing.

Environmentalists say it would blight the federally designated Columbia River Gorge National Scenic Area, an 85-mile strip of river where the town is located. Some residents have the same worry.

Leading the opposition are the Confederated Tribes of Grand Ronde, which have a flourishing casino about 65 miles southwest of Portland and are worried that a Warm Springs casino in Cascade Locks would siphon off some of the Portland market.

At federal hearings that have just begun on the proposal, emotions have run high.

Cheryle Kennedy, tribal chairwoman of the Grand Ronde, pointed out the Warm Springs already have a casino on their reservation, and argued allowing another in Cascade Locks would violate Oregon's long-held policy of one casino per tribe on tribal lands.

The Warm Springs tribes say they will close the small casino if they can build at Cascade Locks.

"We do not oppose the Warm Springs people," she said, bringing hoists and groans from the overflow crowd at the hearing — Warm Springs tribal members and residents of Cascade Locks alike.

Three years ago, Gov. Ted Kulongoski and the Warm Springs tribes signed an agreement that would allow Oregon's first off-reservation tribal casino.

The Warm Springs say revenues from the casino on their reservation are insufficient to help them out of poverty. They are hoping a casino in Cascade Locks would draw gamblers from Portland, which is just 45 minutes away.

Kennedy contended the Grand Ronde is an "affected tribe" with a stake in the decision.

Only three off-reservation casino applications have made it through the legal labyrinth since the 1988 Indian Gaming Regulation Act.

But the Warm Springs tribes, and Cascade Locks, have their hopes up. The off-reservation application for Cascade Locks is one of six the Interior Department recently allowed to proceed.

Most of those rejected were judged to be too far from reservations to provide jobs for tribal members.

Cascade Locks isn't far from the edge of the reservation but is about 100 miles each way from where most members live. Whether that fits the nearness guidelines is disputed.

Not everyone in Cascade Locks is in favor of the casino. Some fear the casino, the 250-room hotel and its several restaurants would run off the handful of businesses still here.

At the hearing, local Ray Gress said the casino could leave the town "little more than a frontage road. We only have one Yosemite, one Yellowstone, one Big Sur and one Columbia Gorge."

Mayor Roger Freeborn doesn't see it that way.

"This community is limping along where we are now.

There might be negative impact, but we think the positive will far outweigh it. We're comfortable to deal with that," Freeborn said.

Cascade Locks was a boom town in the 1960s when Interstate 84 was being built, a new power-house was being added to nearby Bonneville Dam and the timber industry was thriving.

But when all that went away, Cascade Locks began to wilt.

Smart Moves Can Help Women Achieve Financial Goals

All of us face challenges in our efforts to achieve our long-term financial goals, such as a comfortable retirement. But if you're a woman, the unfortunate truth is that you may have more hurdles to overcome than a man. However, knowledge is power, and as long as you are aware of what you are up against, you can take steps to boost your chances for success.

- What are the special issues facing women? Here are a few to ponder:
- Longer life expectancy than men - No matter when you were born, your life expectancy is going to be longer than that of your male age-group peers. Obviously, these "extra" years of life mean more expenses.
 - Lower earnings than men - In 2006, women who worked full time earned, on average, 81 percent of what their male counterparts earned, according to the U.S. Bureau of Labor Statistics. In the future, this gap may narrow, because the earnings of younger women entering the workforce today are very close to those of men. But if you've been in the workforce for many years, there's a pretty good chance that your earnings trail those of your male peers.
 - More time out of the workforce - To raise their families, women spend far more time out of the workforce than men. During those years away, women are not contributing to Social Security, pension plans or 401(k) plans - which means they'll have less retirement savings than men.

These figures may seem somewhat depressing, but they don't have to lead to gloomy results. You can actually do quite a bit to improve your financial fortunes. Consider these suggestions:

- Take an active interest in your investments. Whether you are single or married, make sure you are familiar with your investment portfolio. Know what you own and why you own it. Work with a financial advisor who understands your goals and risk tolerance and who can help you make the right choices for your individual situation.
- Contribute as much as you can to your retirement plans. Each year, put in as much as you can afford to your 401(k) or other employer-sponsored retirement plan. And when you get a raise, increase your contributions. Also, if you don't have a Traditional or Roth IRA, open one - and try to fully fund it each year.
- Invest for growth. Some evidence suggests that women may be more conservative investors than men. Of course past performance is not an indication of future results, but if you're going to achieve your long-term objectives, you'll need to invest for growth - and that means you'll need a certain amount of your portfolio devoted to stocks, which have traditionally outperformed all other asset classes. It's true, of course, that you can lose some - or even all - of your principal in stocks. But if you purchase a variety of quality stocks and hold them for the long term, you can potentially reduce the effects of market volatility and inflation and potentially earn a rate of return that can help you make progress toward your objectives.

You may not be able to single-handedly change the social and institutional forces that can create problems for women striving to achieve their long-term goals. But by becoming an informed, active investor, you can better improve your chances to go a long way toward achieving the financial freedom you deserve.

Burton steals win at Bristol after Harvick wrecks Stewart with 3 to go

By Jenna Fryer
Associated Press writer

BRISTOL, Tenn. — Tony Stewart should have won the race. And when he didn't, it gave Denny Hamlin a clear shot at victory. But the Joe Gibbs Racing drivers failed to seal the deal — again — at Bristol Motor Speedway, and Jeff Burton and his Richard Childress Racing teammates were there to capitalize. Burton scored his first victory at Bristol Motor Speedway, leading teammates Kevin Harvick and Clint Bowyer to the first 1-2-3 sweep in ICR history by pouncing when the ICR drivers faltered at the very end Sunday. "We did the little things right," Burton said. "That's the sign that this team's matured. That's the sign of a team that's ready to take advantage of situations. I won't lose sleep tonight because somebody says,

"We had a faster car." "All I know is we've got the trophy." A year ago, Stewart and Hamlin combined to lead 434 of the 504 laps here before mechanical failures sabotaged seemingly surefire wins. This time, Stewart, Hamlin and Kyle Busch combined to lead 372 of the 505 laps, but Hamlin's sixth-place finish was all they had to show for it. Busch's power steering failed, causing him to crash while he was leading midway through the race. Then Harvick wrecked Stewart with two laps to go, setting up a two-lap overtime sprint to the finish. All Hamlin had to do was hold on for two laps and the win was his. But a fuel pickup problem on the restart allowed Burton to race past him and pull his ICR teammates along for the sweep. "It's just a shame. We had another win taken away," Hamlin said. "Our ears just won't pick up fuel. Everyone else's does. It cost us the race. I could have held those guys off, as fast as the car went after it picked back up. "This is so frustrating to have days like this." Stewart led a race-high 267 laps — 10 more than he did in this event last year — but again fell short because of questionable strategy and the contact with Harvick. Stewart was chugging along toward the victory, trying to hold off the hard-charging Harvick and Hamlin, when Brian Vickers crashed to bring out a caution with 11 laps to go. Stewart thought he should pit for tires, but was overruled by crew chief Greg Zipadelli, who wasn't sure there were enough laps left to warrant coming in. So Stewart stayed out — along with Hamlin and Dale Earnhardt Jr. — while everyone else on the lead lap headed to the pits. Zipadelli instantly questioned the call. "I don't know if that was right or wrong," he radioed Stewart, "but it's in your hands now." Stewart was great on the restart with five laps to go, but Hamlin quickly chased him down and moved into first. Harvick, who restarted fourth with fresh tires, also closed quickly on Stewart's bumper. But as Harvick moved in for the pass, the cars made contact and Stewart went spinning into the wall. "I just lost it there underneath of Tony. Just made a mistake," Harvick said. "They can take it for what it's worth, and move on." Stewart, who finished 14th, was livid on his radio after the accident but had calmed by the time he climbed from his car and was taking partial responsibility for the contact. "I thought I left him enough

UNC, Kansas, Memphis, UCLA get No. 1 seeds in NCAA men's tournament

By Eddie Pells
Associated Press writer

North Carolina, Memphis, Kansas and UCLA earned the top seeds in the NCAA tournament Sunday, and the top-ranked Tar Heels got the best deal of all: Their road to the Final Four won't veer more than two hours outside their Chapel Hill campus. The Tar Heels (32-2) are the top seed in the East, with their first- and second-round games scheduled for Raleigh and the next two rounds in Charlotte. "It's an advantage if you play well," said Carolina coach Roy Williams, trying to lead the Tar Heels to their second title in four years. "Just because the crowd's cheering for you, I've never had a crowd win a game. I know it sounds wacky." Like North Carolina, Kansas, UCLA and Memphis won their conference tournaments to seal their top spots — Memphis in the South, Kansas in the Midwest and UCLA in the West. The Final Four is set for April 5-7 in San Antonio. Absent from the tournament are last year's two finalists, Ohio State and two-time defending champion Florida. The Buckeyes were a bubble team that didn't make it, and the whacky Gators saw their chances die with a first-round loss in the Southeastern Conference tournament. They're the first defending champs to miss the tournament since Kansas in 1989, when the Jayhawks were on probation. March Madness officially begins

BSU, BYU to play in NCAA tournament

The Associated Press

Three overtimes later and the 14-year drought is finally over. Boise state who is seeded fourteenth will make an NCAA tournament appearance against third seed Louisville.

The last time the Broncos reached the NCAA tournament, they won the Big Sky tournament but lost to Louisville in the first round. BSU beat New Mexico state to win the Western Athletic Conference trophy. But the WAC, with a No. 20 national conference RPI, is likely to send only the tournament champion to the NCAA tournament after four teams shared the regular-season title for the first time. That leaves New Mexico State, Nevada and Utah State to make plans for the NIT. BSU and Louisville will play in the East region in Birmingham Alabama on Friday. Brigham Young earned a ninth seed in the NCAA tournament and will be playing the eighth seed, Texas A&M. UNLV upset top-seeded and 24th-ranked BYU in the Mountain West Conference championship for the second straight season. This will be BYU's second straight appearance in the NCAA tournament. BYU and Texas A&M will play in the West region in Anaheim, Calif on Thursday.

NCAA MENS BASKETBALL CHAMPIONSHIP

Other games in the region are No. 7 Butler vs. No. 10 South Alabama; No. 3 Louisville vs. No. 14 Boise State; No. 6 Oklahoma vs. No. 11 St. Joseph's; No. 8 Indiana vs. No. 9 Arkansas; No. 4 Washington State vs. No. 13 Winthrop; and No. 5 Notre Dame vs. No. 12 George Mason, which will try to repeat its surprising trip to the Final Four two years ago.

By defeating Texas in the Big 12 title game, Kansas earned its top seed in the Midwest, a short trip to Omaha, Neb., and a first-round game against Big Sky champion Portland State.

The marquee matchup in that region, however, will be between No. 6 Southern California and No. 11 Kansas State — a meeting of top freshmen Mayo and Beasley.

Other Midwest games pit No. 8 UNLV against No. 9 Kent State; No. 5 Purdue vs. No. 12 Villanova, a bubble team; No. 4 Vanderbilt against No. 13 Siena; No. 2 Georgetown vs. 15 Maryland-Baltimore County; No. 7 Gonzaga vs. No. 10 Davidson; and No. 3 Wisconsin vs. No. 14 Cal State-Fullerton.

In the South region, Memphis opens against No. 16 Texas-Arlington. No. 8 Mississippi State plays No. 9 Oregon. No. 5 Michigan State plays No. 12 Temple and No. 4 Pittsburgh plays No. 13 Oral Roberts. The other side of the bracket includes No. 2 Texas vs. No. 15 Austin Peay, No. 7 Miami vs. No. 10 St. Mary's, No. 3 Stanford vs. No. 14 Cornell and No. 6 Marquette against No. 11 Kentucky, with coach Billy Gillispie leading the Wildcats into the tournament.

In the West, UCLA plays No. 16 Mississippi Valley State. No. 8 BYU plays No. 9 Texas A&M, No. 5 Drake plays No. 12 Western Kentucky and No. 4 Connecticut plays No. 13 San Diego. Other games are No. 2 Duke vs. No. 15 Belmont, No. 7 West Virginia vs. No. 10 Arizona — off the bubble and making its 24th straight NCAA appearance — No. 6 Purdue vs. No. 11 Baylor and No. 3 Xavier vs. No. 14 Georgia, which won the SEC tournament Sunday afternoon to make a surprise trip to the NCAAs with a 17-16 record. Georgia's run eliminated one bubble spot for a field of about 10 teams.

UNC captures ACC title

CHARLOTTE, N.C. — Wayne Ellington finished with 24 points and Tyler Hansbrough had 18 Sunday to help No. 1 North Carolina beat Clemson 86-81 in the Atlantic Coast Conference tournament championship game.

The Tar Heels (32-2) won the title for a second straight season and a record 17th time.

Ty Lawson had 12 points, five rebounds and eight assists for the Tar Heels, who have won 11 straight games. Hansbrough was named the tournament's most valuable player, finishing with 11 rebounds one day after hitting the last-second shot to beat Virginia Tech in the semifinals.

K.C. Rivers finished with 28 points and six 3-pointers for the Tigers (24-9), who saw their best ACC tournament run in more than four decades and join like all the others without a title. Clemson was in the final for only the second time after upsetting No. 7 Duke in the semifinals. Their last appearance in the championship game was in 1962.

NO. 8 WISCONSIN 61, ILLINOIS 48
 INDIANAPOLIS — Brian Butch scored 12 points and Wisconsin swept the Big Ten regular-season and tournament titles for the first time.

Marcus Landry, the tournament's most outstanding player, added 10 points, six rebounds and four assists to the top-seeded Badgers (29-4) won their second tournament championship.

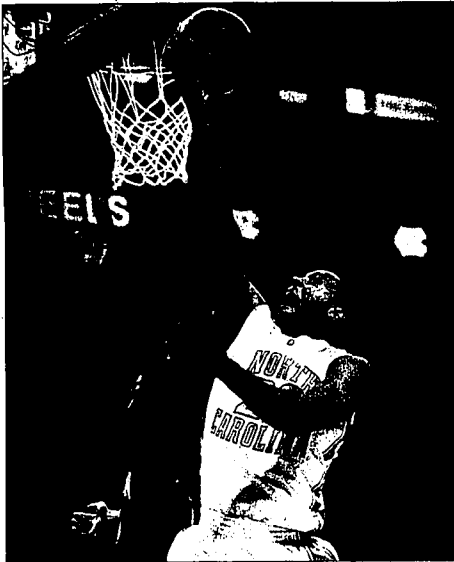

Shaun Pruitt led the 10th-seeded Fighting Illini (16-19) with 13 points and eight rebounds. Illinois had won four straight games, including a win over No. 17 Purdue in the quarterfinals.

NO. 5 KANSAS 84, NO. 6 TEXAS 74
 KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Mario Chalmers had a career-high 30 points and eight of Kansas' tournament-record 15 3-pointers as the Jayhawks won their third straight Big 12 title over Texas.

Brandon Rush hit six 3-pointers for Kansas (31-3), which was 15-for-25 from behind the arc, breaking the tournament record of 14 set by Colorado in 1995 and matched by Missouri in 2001.

Darrell Arthur had 16 points — three more than his two teammates combined — and the Jayhawks had 25 assists on 26 field goals to win their sixth Big 12 title in 12 years.

D.J. Augustin had 20 points for Texas

North Carolina's Wayne Ellington, right, shoots over Clemson's Trevor Booker in the Atlantic Coast Conference basketball tournament championship game at Bobcats Arena in Charlotte, N.C., Sunday. Ellington scored 24 points as North Carolina won 86-81.

(28-6), which made 12 3-pointers.

GEORGIA 66, ARKANSAS 57
 ATLANTA — Terrance Woodbury scored 16 points as Georgia completed its remarkable run through the Southeastern Conference tournament to earn its first trip to the NCAA tournament since 2002.

The Bulldogs (17-16) became just the third team in the tournament history to win four games in four days — actually, two game on the same day, an inopportune bit of scheduling forced by a tornado that slammed into the Georgia Dome.

Georgia got to cut down the nets on the home court of Georgia Tech, its bitter in-state rival and the replacement venue for the tournament after the dome was struck Friday night.

TEXAS-ARLINGTON 82, NORTHWESTERN ST. 79
 KATY, Texas — Anthony Vereen scored 25 points to lead Texas-Arlington to the Southland Conference title game and the school's first NCAA tournament berth.

Vereen's two free throws with 11 seconds left sealed the win for the Mavericks (21-11).

Trey Gilder had 20 points for Northwestern State.

Houston Rockets' Dikembe Mutombo, of Congo, celebrates the Rockets' 22nd consecutive win after beating the Los Angeles Lakers in a basketball game Sunday in Houston. The Rockets beat the Lakers 104-92.

22 in a row

HOUSTON — The Houston Rockets did more than extend their winning streak on Sunday: They validated it.

Rafael Alston scored 31 points and hit eight 3-pointers, both career highs, and the Rockets beat the Los Angeles Lakers 104-92 to extend their streak to 22 and claim sole possession of first place in the Western Conference.

PISTONS 105, HORNETS 84
 ALBURN HILLS, Mich. — Jarvis Hayes scored 29 points, including a career-high seven 3-pointers, to lead Detroit to the win.

Chauncey Billups finished with 17 points and Tayshaun Prince scored 13 for the Pistons, who have won four of five.

CAVALIERS 98, BOBCATS 91
 CLEVELAND — LeBron James led the way again, but some late help from his teammates helped save the Cleveland Cavaliers Sunday night.

While James scored 33 points, two baskets by Ben Wallace — the veteran forward's only points of the game — and a clutch jumper by Delonte West, helped the Cavaliers hold off a late Charlotte rally to defeat the Bobcats, 98-91.

CAVALIERS 98, BOBCATS 91
 CLEVELAND — LeBron James scored 33 points and Zydrunas Ilgauskas had 16 points and nine rebounds for Cleveland.

Delonte West scored his only two baskets of the game, Delonte West added a jumper and James hit a bank shot in the lane in the final 2 minutes as the Cavaliers held on after nearly squandering an 11-point lead early in the fourth quarter.

MAVERICKS 98, HEAT 73
 MIAMI — Dirk Nowitzki scored 21 points before sitting out most of the second half, and Dallas stormed out to a huge early lead on the way to the win.

HAWKS 109, KNICKS 98
 NEW YORK — Joe Johnson had 28 points and 11 assists, and Atlanta moved into a tie for the final playoff spot in the Eastern Conference.

Marvin Williams added 25 points for the Hawks, who used their athleticism to break open what was only a five-point game early in the final quarter. Reserve Josh Childers had 14 of his 22 points in the second half and added nine rebounds.

Marquez cries foul as Pacquiao wins fight

By Greg Beacham Associated Press writer

LAS VEGAS — At the merciful final bell, Manny Pacquiao and Juan Manuel Marquez both raised their arms in victory, just as they did after their first fight nearly four years ago.

Both men bled, bawled and brawled their way into the all-again, arms around their fighters' blood-spattered trunks. Mexican and Filipino fans joined in another unified cheer for two of the world's best boxers, whose rematch was worth every minute of the wait.

And by one point on one judge's scorecard, Pacquiao was a champion again.

Pacquiao won a split decision to claim Marquez's WBC 130-pound title Saturday night in a sensational fight that left both men bleeding, battered and triumphant.

With outstanding action and clever tactics in nearly every round at the Mandalay Bay Events Center, the fight showed why both boxers are at the peak of their profession. Pacquiao (46-3-2) nearly had the fight won when he floored Marquez with a brutal left hook in the third round, but Marquez wouldn't stay down under withering punishment in what's sure to be one of the year's best rounds.

"I thought at that point I was in control of the fight," Pacquiao said. "But when he cut my eye in the fourth round, he made it more difficult for me, and I couldn't take control of the fight. ... I wasn't sure (heading into the 12th round), but I always knew the final round was the most important. I don't take any chances."

While Marquez (48-4-1) landed more punches at a higher percentage, Pacquiao persevered through a nasty cut. Marquez also was cut near his right eye, but neither fighter backed down from one scintillating exchange after another.

Judge Duanne Ford favored Pacquiao 115-112 and Jerry Roth called it 115-112 for Marquez.

Tiger Woods celebrates after winning the Arnold Palmer Invitational golf tournament at the Bay Hill Club in Orlando, Fla. Sunday.

Woods stays perfect

ORLANDO, Fla. — Tiger Woods made a 25-foot birdie putt on the final hole Sunday to win the Arnold Palmer Invitational at Doral, which he has won six times. No wonder some are starting to question whether he will lose again.

Bryant felt hopeless, so different from so many other victims of Woods.

He hit all the right shots on the back nine to keep pressure on the world's No. 1 player, and was sitting in the scroller trailer when the largest crowd in golf this year erupted in cheers when the birdie putt fell.

Not since Bay Hill in 2001 has Woods won a PGA Tour event with a birdie on the 72nd hole to win by a shot. "I don't know how I did that," Woods said of his winning putt on greens that had given him fits early in the week. "I just wanted to get the speed right and make sure I didn't leave myself a second putt ... and it went in."

room," Stewart said. "I'm sure somehow it was my fault. I'm sorry I got in his way."

The two are terrific friends off the track, and, ironically, are scheduled to appear together on Stewart's Sirius Satellite Radio program on Monday night when Stewart is supposed to have his back waxed for charity.

Any anger between the two should subside before the show, but Harvick may have a lingering beef with Stewart's spotter. After the accident, Harvick said he sent his spotter to apologize to Stewart's, but the exchange quickly turned ugly.

"The first thing his spotter did was say he was going to whip somebody's (behind) and if Tony didn't do it, then he was going to do it," Harvick said. "If his spotter wants to have a bad attitude about it, then we can all come down here and we'll handle it."

Nobody is going to have a good attitude about getting wrecked, I understand that from Tony's standpoint. But his spotter was out of line and I didn't appreciate it."

Burton was the benefactor of all the action, sliding past Harvick and Stewart when the two made contact to move into second place.

Late-night calls rarely require Presidential snap decisions

By Michael Abramowitz
The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — There is no dispute, as a dramatic campaign ad from Hillary Rodham Clinton's campaign suggests, that presidents get plenty of phone calls at 3 a.m. A sleeping Ronald Reagan was alerted early in the morning to what turned out to be the accidental shoot-down of an Iranian passenger plane. George H.W. Bush was formed after he went to bed of an apparent coup against Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev. Bill Clinton received word in the middle of the night that negotiations had broken down in the case of Elian Gonzalez, the Cuban boy whose relatives were battling the federal government to prevent him from returning home. But in none of these cases were presidents asked to make major decisions. Instead, former White House advisers say, these calls — and countless others like them — were aimed largely at keeping the president informed of critical developments, particularly ones that might cause embarrassment if the public learned that a commander in chief had slept through the episode undisturbed.

"In my experience, I cannot think, off the top of my head, of a snap decision that had to be made in the middle of the night," said Henry Kissinger, the former secretary of state and national security adviser. In fact, he said in an interview, "I think that one should reduce the number of snap decisions to be made." As the image of a sleeping child flashes across the screen, the announcer in the Clinton ad intones: "There's a phone in the White House and it's ringing. Something's happening in the world. Your vote will decide who answers that call, whether it's someone who already knows the world's leaders, knows the military someone tested and ready to lead in a dangerous world." While the scenario is not inevitable, former presidential advisers and historians say that it misses the point that good presidential decision-making plays out over time, and in more mundane ways. The recollections of Kissinger, senior advisers in both parties and presidential historians offer an interesting counterpoint to the suggestion by the Clinton ad that critical decisions are often made in the dead of night.

The situation that unfolded after the discovery of Soviet nuclear missiles in Cuba in October 1962, perhaps the greatest crisis of the Cold War, is a case in point. As chronicled by historian Michael Beschloss in "The Crisis Years: Kennedy and Khrushchev, 1960-1963," National Security Adviser McGeorge Bundy decided to wait until morning to tell President Kennedy that the CIA had aerial photos of the missiles. Bundy knew the president was tired after a late flight from New York, and he would later tell Kennedy that he concluded "a quiet evening and a night of sleep were the best preparation" for what would undoubtedly be a major crisis. Kennedy then took more than a week to craft a response with his advisers before going public with the news. Fred Greenstein, the scholar of the presidency at Princeton University, said the episode "refutes the notion that presidents have to be on the job in a crisis situation the moment the crisis breaks. Among the Palestinian old guard, aging and sidelined, defiance mixes with regrets

By Hanza Hendawi
Associated Press writer

DAMASCUS, Syria — Looking back to the U.N. partition plan of 1947, which envisaged Jewish and Palestinian states living side by side in peace. Nayef Hawatmeh comes to the painful acknowledgment of an opportunity missed.

"After 60 years, we are struggling for what we could have had in 1947," laments the leader of the Democratic Front for the Liberation of Palestine. "We have missed many historic opportunities."

In a year when Israel is celebrating its 60th birthday, Hawatmeh and his generation of leaders are still in exile and fading from the scene.

Visited by The Associated Press in Damascus, the Syrian capital, these gray-haired grandfathers radiate nostalgia and bitterness. They speak of wasted opportunities, perceived successes, failures and divisions. In monologues that can last 90 minutes and brook no interruption, they voice anger at Palestinian President Mahmoud Abbas for negotiating with Israel, but also at Hamas for taking their struggle down the path of radical Islam.

Hawatmeh and others of his generation. Ahmed Jibril, George Habash, the shadowy Black September movement, woman hijacker Leila Khaled — exploded onto the world stage in the 1960s and 1970s with deadly raids into Israel, the attack on the 1972 Munich Olympics, and a series of airline hijackings and assaults on passenger lines at foreign airports.

Branded as terrorists in Israel and the West, they saw themselves more in the Che Guevara mold, inspired by Cuba and Algeria and the Viet Cong.

They say their goal, steeped in Marxist and Arab nationalist ideology, was to liberate Palestine from an "imperialist" Israel and draw attention to the Palestinians' plight. "The whole world now says the Palestinians must have their state," says Ahmed Jibril, whose part of the Leila Khaled, who successfully hijacked a TWA airliner to Damascus, Syria, in 1969, poses with a submachine gun at a Palestinian refugee camp in Lebanon on Nov. 29, 1970.

Dr. George Habash, head of the Popular Front for Liberation, in his office in Amman, Jordan, in March 1970. Habash, a longtime rival of Yasser Arafat who led the PLO's second-largest faction which pioneered airliner hijackings, died Jan. 26 in Jordan. He was 81.

"But maybe, just maybe, we should have shown some flexibility. Back in our days, it was 'the whole of Palestine or nothing' but we should have accepted a Palestinian state next to Israel."

— Mohammed Oudeh, architect of Black September's 1972 Olympics attack that left 11 Israeli athletes dead alphabet soup of factions is the PFLP-General Command. He rejects any suggestion that his years of struggle came to nothing. "I am sure that if I don't see it in my lifetime, my son will. If not, then my grandchildren will."

But today the face of the Palestinian struggle is the suicide bomber, acting in the name of Islam, not nationalism.

The borders envisaged in the U.N. plan have been thoroughly scrambled.

The war that followed the Arab rejection of partition left Israel ruling even more land, and the territory left to the Palestinians is split, in conditions close to civil war.

Some of the old-timers have paid a personal price.

Jibril lost one of his sons, 30-year-old Jihad, in a car-bombing in Lebanon in 2002. Jibril, 70, tells a visitor whose voice is soft. "I realize you are being polite, but you must raise your voice because all the bombings and gunfire I have been through made me hard of hearing."

Time is thinning their ranks too. Habash, whose Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine specialized in hijackings, died in an Amman, Jordan, hospital in January at 81. According to close aide Maher al-Tajer his dying words, upon hearing of the Strip, were: "There's still hope."

While the leaders interviewed say they have no regrets, and insist they will ultimately prevail over Israel, some of them wonder aloud whether things might have been different.

"Would you believe me if I tell you that if I had to do it all over, I would?" said Mohammed Oudeh, architect of Black September's 1972 Olympics attack that left 11 Israeli athletes dead.

"But maybe, just maybe, flexibility back in our days, it was 'the whole of Palestine or nothing,' but we should have accepted a Palestinian state next to Israel."

However, Oudeh is quick to add that conditions were different then, and the two-state solution might not have ended the conflict.

Though some sympathize with Hamas' continuation of the fight, they dislike its ideology.

"Muslim extremism can fascinate people for some time, but it will lead to nothing," said Oudeh, 71. "Resorting to religion is born out of the frustration that comes after a series of defeats."

Leila Khaled, the Palestinians' best known female hijacker, says the Palestinian leadership has "committed a lot of blunders, which delayed Palestinian statehood."

They jumped too quickly into negotiations with Israel, thus "defused" the Palestinian uprising and "blocked the golden path that was paved for the Palestinians," she said at her home in Amman.

But Hamas is not an option, she said, denouncing its takeover of the Gaza Strip last year as an "act of treason that divided the land and people."

Moussa Abu Marzouk, the deputy head of Hamas, counters that the old guard's methods were autocratic and produced repeated failures.

"It is clear that the prestige of these organizations in the eyes of the Palestinian people has regressed," he said.

Re-entered illegal immigrants targeted

By Anna Gorman
and Scott Green
Los Angeles Times

LOS ANGELES — Federal authorities are cracking down on immigrants who were deported and then re-entered the country illegally — a crime that makes up more than one-third of all prosecutions in Los Angeles and surrounding counties, a Los Angeles Times review of U.S. attorney's statistics shows.

The surge in prosecutions reflects the government's push in recent years to detect illegal immigrants with criminal records in what may seem the most obvious of places: the state's jails and prisons.

Immigration authorities have long combed inmate populations for illegal immigrants, but additional money and cooperation with local law enforcement, which was fueled an increase in such cases by the U.S. attorney's office in Los Angeles. The illegal re-entry charge is the single most prosecuted crime in the office.

Prosecutors filed 539 such cases in fiscal year 2007, making up 35 percent of the total caseload, compared with 207 in 2006 — 17 percent of all cases. Statistics for the first four months of this fiscal year show the trend continuing.

Federal authorities touted the recent effort, saying the prosecutions serve as a deterrent for people who see the border as a turnstile. They said they were targeting violent gang members, career criminals and drug dealers who have returned to the United States after being deported — many of them repeatedly. "They are some of the worst of the worst," said Julie L. Myers, assistant secretary of Immigration and Customs Enforcement in Washington, D.C. "They are people that citizens of any community would want out of the streets."

"I just wish that were true," said Jerry Salseda, a deputy federal public defender who has represented scores of immigrants charged with re-entering the country after having been deported. He and other critics say people who committed minor crimes years ago have been caught up in the wave of prosecutions.

Bruce J. Einhorn, a former immigration court judge, said the U.S. attorney's office should spend more resources going after smugglers rather than illegal crossers.

Tibet protests spread to other provinces; Dalai Lama warns of 'cultural genocide'

By Tai Tran
Associated Press writer

BEIJING — Violence in Tibet spilled over into neighboring provinces Sunday when Tibetan protesters defied a Chinese government crackdown. The Dalai Lama warned Tibet faced "cultural genocide" and appealed to the world for help.

Protests against Chinese rule of Tibet were reported in neighboring Sichuan and Qinghai provinces and also in western Gansu province. All are home to sizable Tibetan populations.

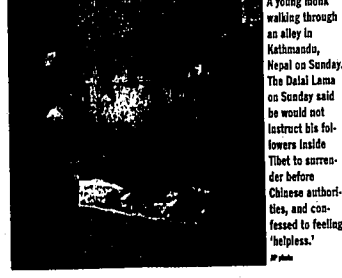

The demonstrations came after protests in the Tibetan capital Lhasa escalated into violence Friday. Buddhist monks and others torching police cars and shops in the fiercest challenge to Beijing's rule over the region in nearly two decades.

"Whether intentionally or unintentionally, some kind of cultural genocide is taking place," said the Dalai Lama, the exiled Tibetan spiritual leader. He was referring to China's policy of encouraging the ethnic Han majority to migrate to Tibet, restrictions on Buddhist temples and education programs for monks.

He told reporters in Dharamsala, the north Indian town where Tibet's self-declared government-in-exile is based, that an international body should investigate the government's crackdown on the Lhasa protests.

Tibet was effectively independent for decades before Chinese communist troops entered in 1950. The latest unrest began March 10 on the anniversary of a 1959 uprising against Chinese rule of Tibet.

V. EASY # 26
Fill in the grid so that every row, every column, and every 3x3 box contains the digits 1 through 9. That's all there is to it. There's no math involved. The grid has numbers, but nothing has to add up to anything else. You solve the puzzle with reasoning and logic. Find the answers for todays puzzle on page C8.

SWEAT ASSESSMENT

FITNESS CLASS REVIEWS

Jazzing up your workout

I wasn't sure what to expect from Jazzercise. I had images in my head of leg warmers, terrible music and instructors who are way too peppy. A quick YouTube.com search only reinforced this — I immediately found a video of Judi Sheppard Missett, founder of the fitness emphyre, bopping to "Move Your Boogie Body" in a leotard. Oh dear, I thought. Just what was I subjecting my boogie body to?

To my relief (and slight disappointment) I experienced none of this at Suzanne Reeves' Jazzercise class in Gooding.

How it went down

I filed into the room with about 15 other ladies of all ages, shapes and sizes. Friends greeted each other, and Reeves congratulated a member on her 25th class.

There wasn't a single leg warmer in sight. We got started with pop music, and throughout the course of the class moved on to country, classic rock and even a little jazz. Each song consisted of two or three repetitive steps. We switched steps every song, which worked different muscles at varied intensities. Reeves, who has 4 1/2 years of teaching experience, mirrored the moves and kept a smile on our faces while we shimmed and shook.

The room was cold, but I started sweating minutes into the class. We started out slow, then sped up in the middle of the class. Light weight training rounded off the class, and we were on our way out the door after an hour.

Even though there were only two or three steps to each song, I occasionally had a hard time keeping up. This was entirely my fault — I've always been terrible at dancing.

Suzanne Reeves, an independent Jazzercise instructor, teaches her class Wednesday morning in Gooding. Jazzercise combines cardio and strength training with music for a fun, fast-paced workout.

Some 15 participants work out Wednesday. Classes are held Monday, Wednesday, Friday and Saturday.

The class had much more cardio than I incorporate into my regular workout routine, and I needed it. It was the best workout I've had in a while.

What was sore the next morning

Sore calves reminded me of my Jazzercise experience throughout the next day. My biceps hurt a bit from the exercises with the weights, but the pain was nothing like after an intense lifting session. Overall, the class really worked my legs but focused more on cardio than strength training.

Who should stay away

If you have joint or lung problems, think twice. Although you can adjust the moves, it's hard to make this fast-paced workout low-impact. Men are welcome but have never shown up at the Gooding class: men who are looking for male bonding won't find it here. Teens may join the class, but only with a parent.

Also, poor clumsy souls might want to pass on this class. There is a lot of fast footwork, and I nearly lost my balance a few times, even when I knew what I was doing.

Vernita Talbott, 68, of Hagerman, is a member of the Cameo Club and a past participant in the Ms. Idaho Senior America pageant. The club recently performed dance and cowboy poetry pieces for the Hagerman senior center.

By Blair Koch
Times-News correspondent

A calm but stern voice floats down the hallway to a makeshift dressing room: "Five minutes, girls."

The "girls" are members of the Cameo Club, an organization of Ms. Idaho Senior America pageant contestants. With all the giddy laughter, one might think the five are teens preparing for a night out — not getting in costume for a show at the Hagerman Senior Citizen Center.

The silver hair and spectacles indicate otherwise. But more noticeable are confidence and joy of life.

An Irish frolic — with shiny green dresses and tap shoes — leads to a few rounds of cowboy poetry, then more dancing. In their final number, the women are reminiscent of Marilyn Monroe. Wearing Famous Idaho Potato sacks and red boas, they belt out a lively song called "Hot Spuds," hips shaking and smiles wide. Applause is hearty.

"I wasn't always this way," said Norma Fritzy of Twin Falls. "Before getting involved with Senior America I wasn't so good at speaking in public." Fritzy, 72, became aware of the pageant in 2000, when she went to the national event to support a friend. All the women there, she said, seemed exuberant and comfortable to each other. At the state pageant in 2001, Fritzy walked away with a Miss Congeniality title and more self-esteem than she'd had in years.

The age of elegance

Pageant gives seniors opportunity for growth

Watch senior pageant participants put on a show in Twin Falls. In our video story at maglevolley.com.

"I couldn't believe all the camaraderie," she said. "Being with this has really done some good things for me, and we do good things for others."

The pageant doesn't focus on senior issues like the state of Medicare or elder care abuse, but instead strives to spread happiness.

"The pageant is about the spirit, which is ageless. Our theory is that (seniors) are the basis for where the world came from, and we want to show the world that we are still alive, happy and serving our communities and setting a good example. You aren't going to change the world sitting in a rocking chair," said Faye Briscoe of Emmett, the Ms. Idaho Senior America pageant director. "When we are performing our talents we want people to forget their troubles, not worry about things, and just want to be entertaining and make people smile."

Community service is a large component of the Cameo Club, said Vernita Talbott, who helped the group put on a talent show

Green isn't just the color of money, Aries

HOROSCOPE Jeraldine Saunders

IF MARCH 17 IS YOUR BIRTHDAY: In the months ahead you will finally overcome past obstacles and jump important hurdles so that when good fortune knocks on your door, it will be fully appreciated. Lay low between now and mid-May and avoid entanglements: A budding romance or project may seem more beneficial than it really is. Ask the advice of trusted friends before making important changes. Green isn't just the color of money. Even without an Irish lineage, you can appreciate the contributions of the Irish to the U.S. melting pot. Take a broad view and relate yourself to others on many levels. TAURUS (April 20-May 20): The pipes are calling, but you're busy. You may fall head-over-heels in love with a person, a thing or an idea this evening, but it might seem less appealing tomorrow morning. GEMINI (May 21-June 20): As the Irish toast says, "Never forget what is worth remembering or remember what is best forgotten." Dwelling on the past can be highly useful or just plain depressing. It is up to you to pick and choose. CANCER (June 21-July 22): The demanding precision of an Irish step dance might seem similar to the foot-fetters necessary to complete the tasks on your schedule today. Look at the coupons so you can cut costs. LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): An amorous leprechaun with mischief on his or her mind might distract you from your work. Stay on your toes and don't become beguiled by a pretty face. This isn't a time to make earthshaking changes. VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): This is NOT a great day to convince others of your sincerity. Although friends dream of pots of gold at the ends of rainbows, you need hard facts. LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): You can't find shamrocks in a desert. You could be under the mistaken impression that an alluring mirage is real. A budding romance might not live out as well as you hope if you begin it under these stars.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Optimism and a positive attitude will keep you sailing high above the crowd. Be sure you don't misinterpret the boss' instructions or overlook a necessary task. SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): As an Irish saying goes, "Have the foresight to know when you've gone too far." Although certain prospects may look rosy, everything isn't exactly as it seems. SCORPIO (Jan. 20-Feb. 19): An Irish toast for you to ponder: "As you slide down the banisters of life, may the splinters never point the wrong way." Have a good time, but don't start anything of importance or make crucial decisions. AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): You will want to keep your wits about you this evening as someone might encourage you to take a needless risk. Don't be overly impressed with a new friend. PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Listen to some little Celtic harp music and get swept away by the rhythms of ancient times. If a loved one does not share your appreciation of music, find a set of headphones.

Husband remains in dark about wife's nighttime visitor

DEAR ABBY: I am 27, and my wife, 'Marybeth,' is 26. We recently went to my folks' house for supper. That evening a heavy snowstorm was starting and, because the trip home is 30 miles, we decided to stay overnight. My old bedroom is upstairs, as are the rooms of my brothers, ages 25, 24 and 22. The guest room is downstairs. Because the night is quite small, and Marybeth said she felt a cold coming on, we decided I'd sleep in my old room. The next day, while we were driving home, Marybeth told me she was glad I had come to her room after all and made love to her. Abby, it wasn't me! She had mistaken one of my brothers for me in the darkness. We are all about the same size and build. I have talked to each of my brothers (they all know about this), but they won't say who it was for fear of causing a rift between the guilty party and me. I told them that unless I find out who it was, there will be a permanent rift between all of us. (Marybeth still doesn't know it wasn't me.) How do I handle this? — ENRAGED IN ROCHESTER, N.Y. DEAR ENRAGED: While you and your brothers may have a strong family resemblance, I find it hard to believe that you all smell, that you all make love like clones. So please do not accept as gospel that your wife didn't have an inkling that it wasn't you. As to who actually crept into her bed in your absence, if your brothers won't reveal who the guilty party is, then they're all equally guilty, and I wouldn't blame you for severing ties with them. It's time to have a serious chat with your wife and get chapter and verse on what happened that night. That she should be tested for STDs and treated if necessary. It is possible for a couple to get past something like this, if you're both willing to work at it. The shortest route would be with the help of a licensed family therapist.

DEAR ABBY Jeane Phillips

he insists that Dick straighten up his act, or you'll take Sean and make other living arrangements. It's important, for your son's sake, that you draw the line NOW — even if it means getting a job and putting your baby in day care. For 'Grandpa' to give him alcohol is against the law. And if it's important that you get a step to it, it could be considered child endangerment.

Dick drinks a lot and offers my baby beer. Dick also likes to tease Sean. He also leaves coins, toothpicks and cotton swabs on the floor, where Sean sometimes sleeps. My son puts everything he can put his hands on into his mouth. Dick loafs all day and doesn't pay any of the bills. Please give me some advice. I'm so stressed out, I don't know what to do. — STRESSED OUT MIDLAND, TEXAS DEAR STRESSED OUT: First, your baby should not be sleeping on the floor in these conditions. Second, offer your husband a choice. Either

Girl stops out-of-control bus

SEASIDE, Calif. (AP) — A 15-year-old girl who stopped an out-of-control school bus she was riding on was handed a Saturday detention instead because she was skipping school. Marina High School student Amanda Rouse was on a bus with 40 elementary school students Wednesday morning when the driver fell out of her seat after a turn and hit her head. Rouse jumped up and applied the brakes, bringing the bus to a halt after striking two parked cars. No one was injured. She said had asked the bus driver for a ride because she felt sick at school. "She is in trouble with school because she made the wrong decision," said Rouse's grandmother, Sally Correll. "But I can't help but believe that she was where God wanted her to be."

LOOSE DENTURES?

Now you can have what you crave! With new mini dental implant technology you can enjoy secure eating comfort again.

You're always set your own course. But is your financial planning leading you astray?

Whether personal or professional, the success you've achieved in your life has come from numerous factors. Hard work. Unfailing dedication. Necessary sacrifices. Smart choices. When you've come this far, though, there's one factor that cannot be overlooked, but often is: prudent financial guidance. It's unfortunate, but women are particularly vulnerable to financial uncertainty. In the workplace, they earn less than men. They take more time away from their successful careers to concentrate on their families. Most will also cultivate their husbands' trustworthiness, attentive, and personalized financial guidance. You may prefer taking an active involvement in your financial affairs. Or you may wish to let someone else handle the details. Whatever your preference, you need a financial professional who will help you devise a sensible strategy to navigate the sometimes uncertain waters of your financial future.

Monastery retreat promises relaxation, new ideas

By Melissa Davlin Times-News writer

'There's nothing more powerful than a bunch of women,' said Twin Falls yoga instructor Morgan Jeno. And she's hoping her weekend retreat for women will prove it.

The early-May retreat, offered for the first time through the College of Southern Idaho, will feature workshops led by local entrepreneurs and fitness instructors. Presentations include meditation, fengshui, organic foods and belly dancing.

'They're here to relax,' Jeno said. 'If they don't want to wear makeup, they don't have to do their hair.'

Participants will be guests of the Benedictine monks of the Monastery of the Ascension, a place that fosters meditation and reflection. The monastery among fields east of Jerome, helps visitors escape their hectic lives.

The idea of the retreat isn't to market services to participants, Jeno said, rather, presenters such as a salsa teacher and a wine vendor hope simply to introduce new ideas to the women.

'They know they're there for a couple days, they can open their hearts, open their 'minds,' she said. 'They can use the information or not, but at least they have it.'

Julie Willimott, acupuncturist and retreat presenter, hopes her workshop will answer many common questions people have about her practice, like whether it hurts.

'It really gives people an access, I don't think they normally would have,' Willimott said.

Counselor Joan Dalton-Boyd will lead an informal discussion. 'It is about living from your heart, you know,' she said. 'Letting go of the head, being in the moment, being conscious, being available, and being present to yourself first and then to others.'

Women of all ages are welcome, and everyone has something to gain, Willimott said. 'It really addresses the mind, body and spirit,' Willimott said. 'I think it's really well-rounded.'

AREA CHAMBER OF COMMERCE

Business Beat

A MONTHLY NEWSLETTER FOR THE BUSINESS COMMUNITY

The Twin Falls Area Chamber of Commerce has been busy with issues important to business at the Idaho Legislature. Our weekly conference calls with lawmakers have been well-attended and we've shared our support and concerns on legislation this session. The following priority issues have been discussed during the session. We've seen progress with some, and no progress with others. If you're interested in politics and how decisions at the State Legislature impact how you do business, attend our weekly Public Policy Committee meetings Fridays at 7 a.m. at the Chamber office.

Workforce Development

Twin Falls Chamber member businesses face increasing challenges to hire and retain employees with appropriate skills and training. The Twin Falls Chamber supports assistance to Idaho businesses to retain and recruit qualified workers, including funding of workforce training programs, professional technical education, and other economic development programs from the Idaho Department of Labor and Idaho Department of Commerce for existing and future Idaho companies.

Methamphetamine Abuse

The ill effects of methamphetamine abuse are far-reaching in Idaho, impacting the health and safety of our citizens, the cost of doing business, incarceration rates, and needs for welfare assistance for users. The Twin Falls Chamber supports funding for proven programs for substance abuse education, prevention, intervention, and treatment – particularly use of "drug courts" the Idaho Meth Project and encourages a public-private partnership to fund its initiatives in a sustainable manner.

Resolution of Water Issues

The continued economic success in Idaho is dependent upon a stable and sustainable water supply. The Twin Falls Chamber encourages the Legislature in cooperation with the Executive Branch and Judicial System to act aggressively and decisively to provide leadership to recover and restore the State's aquifers, spring flows, and rivers to levels which protect the supplies of existing users pursuant to the requirements of the Idaho Constitution and Statutes and to prevent further detrimental depletion of water supplies.

Transportation

The ability to travel Idaho's highways is critical for all Idahoans and those who do business within our State. The Twin Falls Chamber understands the financial challenges facing the Idaho Transportation Department and supports improved efficiency within the department as well as limited and modest increases to vehicle registration fees, title fees, driver's license fees, gas taxes, and other funding sources.

Public Education

The Twin Falls Chamber supports development of and funding for alternative compensation to recognize and reward Idaho's public school teachers and other certificated staff for increased qualifications, expertise, leadership, enhanced performance, and involvement in the educational process.

Community Colleges

The Twin Falls Chamber understands the value of community colleges, such as the College of Southern Idaho, as a support for local and statewide economic development and workforce training efforts. The Chamber supports allocation from the State Liquor Fund of $600,000 to be distributed equally to Idaho's three community colleges increasing the maximum tuition allowed to be charged at Idaho's community colleges. Funding for the College of Southern Idaho's rural math and science dual credit pilot program. Funding for the College of Southern Idaho's online program development.

Urban Renewal

The Twin Falls Chamber supports the work of Urban Renewal Agencies in the state as an effective economic development tool. The Chamber supports legislation to enhance this tool and opposes legislation that would dismantle or unduly constrain the effectiveness of Urban Renewal Agencies.

TWIN FALLS

The Twin Falls Area Chamber of Commerce Mission Statement

The Twin Falls Area Chamber of Commerce is a non-profit business organization providing members a strong voice, vision and focused leadership to enhance the economic vitality and quality of life in our community.

Chamber to Host Annual Meeting & Banquet

Mark your calendars now for the Chamber's Annual Meeting and Banquet to be held the evening of Thursday, April 17 at the new Canyon Crest Event Center. Reserve your tickets NOW by calling the Chamber office at 733-3974.

The annual banquet will feature a review of the Chamber's activities in 2007 and a look ahead to the exciting programs, activities, and events planned for 2008. We'll also recognize several Chamber-member businesses for their commitment to our community – and present the Person of the Year and Lifetime Achievement awards.

Ballots have also been mailed out for the election of 3 new members of the Chamber Board of Directors. Each Chamber-member business is allowed one vote for each seat.

The ballots were sent to the individual who is listed as our primary contact for each chamber-member business. Candidates for the three seats are:

- Rene Avram / Vice President, Zion's Bank
- Mark Brady / CPA - Partner, Cooper Norman
- Patti Adam / Account Executive, KMYT Television
- John Pitz / Manager, Twin Falls County Fair
- Tom Thatcher / Owner, Road Work Ahead Construction Supply
- Tim Zebard / Vice President, First Federal
- Joshua Dahlstrom / Account Manager, BOE Twin Falls

Proxy ballots will be accepted until Friday, March 28. Those elected will take office at the Annual Meeting and Banquet.

Results of Local Option Sales Tax Survey

Recently, the Chamber sent out an online survey of the membership asking for input on a proposal to allow local communities in Idaho to pursue local-option sales taxation to support transportation projects. With about a 10% response rate from the Chamber membership, only 4% supported the concept...and only 37% said they would vote in favor of such a tax if it were allowed by law. The Chamber's Public Policy Committee and Board continue to monitor proposed legislation related to transportation funding. Results of the survey have been shared with our local legislators. If you'd like to get involved in the Public Policy Committee – attend their meetings at 7 a.m. every Friday morning at the Chamber office during the Legislative Session.

City Fees - What's Their Impact?

With the Twin Falls City Council recently forming an advisory group to study city residential and commercial impact fees, this topic will be an interesting one for Twin Falls area businesses. The discussion will be Tuesday, March 18 at the Twin Falls Chamber Economic Issues Forum lunch at 12:00 p.m. at 9 Beans and a Burrito - 764 Cheney Drive (please note new location for March). Lunch is on your own. Our presenters will include Twin Falls City Councilman David Johnson, local developer Gerald Martens, and Tony Hughes with the Magic Valley Builders Association.

Cost of Living Remains Below National Average

The cost of living index for the fourth quarter of 2007 has been released, and the Twin Falls area remains below the national average. Here's a rundown of the various categories:

Composite Index	94.9%
Grocery Items	99.7%
Housing	85.4%
Utilities	92.8%
Transportation	101.4%
Health Care	101.2%
Miscellaneous	98.7%

Figures are compiled each quarter based on a random sampling of a standard list of goods and services throughout the Twin Falls area. These lists are then compared with other metropolitan and micro-polititan areas of the country by the American Chamber of Commerce Research Association (ACCRA).

For example, for the "Health Care" category – which counts for 4% of the composite score – the Twin Falls Chamber samples three local providers of these services for prices: Cost of a visit to the optometrist (standard eye exam)

Cost of an office visit to a physician (standard visit)
 Cost of a visit to the dentist (standard exam and cleaning)
 Cost of a standard size bottle of Ibuprofen
 Cost of a specific prescription medication (new item chosen by ACCRA each quarter)

The prices of those 3 samples are averaged and sent to ACCRA for comparison with other communities across the country.

The comparisons do allow you to see how the Twin Falls area stacks up against other areas of the country. While the survey is not necessarily comprehensive each quarter, it does use standardized items to allow for valid comparison with other communities. If you'd like to know more about the survey, feel free to contact the Chamber office at 733-3974.
