St. Luke's, T.E. County still at odds

Solutions to clinic dispute include mediation, judicial appearance

By Nate Poppino
Staff writer

St. Luke's Health System and Twin Falls County have both proposed separate solutions to a long-running clinic dispute, according to correspondence between the parties.

The dispute at first involved the dates the county can take over the hospital's downtown clinic building at 660 Shoshone

St. N., and came to a head in January when the hospital attempted to have County Commissioner Tom Mikesell arrested for trespassing while the county changed four office locks in the building. But it soon centered on the hospital's required $3 million contribution to remodeling the building.

In a letter sent to St. Luke's officials earlier this month,

Twin Falls county commissioners requested the parties agree to enter non-binding mediation on the matter by July. Hospital officials replied with their own request to submit the matter to binding arbitration before a judge, and told a gathering of about 70 community representatives at an invitation-only lunch meeting Friday that they hope to reach an agreement soon, expecting a county response by 5 p.m. Tuesday.

Arbitration would take the matter before a judge for a binding ruling and is seen by the hospital as a more effective solution to the dispute. St. Luke's Magic Valley Medical Center CEO Mark Schwartz said. The section of the 2006 sales agreement in question

College of Southern Idaho symposium on civil liberties wraps up

By Cassidy Friedman

U.S. District Judge B. Lynn Winmill presides daily over controversy and conflict.

But speaking to 150 audience members at the Herrett Center on the second day of the College of Southern Idaho's third annual Civil Liberties Symposium, he was addressing friends and like-minded individuals, drawing only giggles, nods and adulation — a welcome respite for the judge, no doubt.

Afterward, there was long applause; not a single question asked.

His lecture about standing up for just but unpopular principles of civil liberty focused on his heroes: attorneys, judges, writers and journalists — a demographic that matched some of Friday's audience members. So his speech was an act of support for a group he believes can challenge the status quo at a time when dissent has never been more necessary, he said. "Today, more than ever... power is being abused at the highest reaches of government," Winmill said, and added, referring to a speech Gen. George Washington

Audience member Jennifer Lovanger listens to a question posed to media representatives Friday afternoon during the final presentation of the Civil Liberties Symposium at the College of Southern Idaho. "I feel like (the symposium) really links history to very pertinent events today," said Lovanger, a seventh-grade history teacher inampa.

The dancers will have a final performance at the Prescott Ranch at 7:30 tonight in Jerome County.

Farm bill bounty for D.C. university

Ag bill provides millions for research, programs outside of rural America

By Mary Beth Sheridan
The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — The giant federal farm bill passed by Congress this week will help Iowa corn growers. It will help Kansas wheat barons. It also will help James Allen, who dreams of bringing pigweed to the backyards of Washington, D.C.

"It's like collard greens."

said Allen, lifting a leafy potted plant. "Very high in Vitamin A."

Allen is a researcher at the University of the District of Columbia. It is a thoroughly urban university. Its glass-and-concrete campus plunked at the bustling Van Ness-UDC Metro stop on Connecticut Avenue in

Teaching teachers: Idaho hopes to improve math instruction in schools

The Associated Press

BOISE — The Idaho Department of Education is working with Boise State University in hopes of training 9,500 teachers and school administrators and improving mathematics instruction in state public schools.

The state is negotiating with professor Jonathan Brandefur, director of the university's Institute for Developing Mathematical Thinking, on a $450,000 one-year contract to guide the math instruction of 1,800 educators next year.

Newborn twins weigh 23 pounds, 1 ounce

WINSTON-SALEM — They aren't America's heaviest newborn twins on record, but they certainly top the scales: Sean William Maynard and Abigail Rose Maynard weighed in at a combined 23 pounds and 1 ounce at birth this week, a North Carolina hospital announced Friday.

Freda Springs, spokeswoman for Forsyth Medical Center, said the twins were delivered two minutes apart by C-sections on Tuesday at the center's Sara Lee Center for Women's Health in Winston-Salem. The boy weighed 10 pounds, 14 ounces; the girl, 12 pounds, 3 ounces. Springs said both babies are in excellent condition after their birth to parents Joey and Erin Maynard of Winston-Salem.

The combined weight of the twins is about four pounds shy of the combined weight of twins born in Arkansas in 1927, the hospital said. Those twins weighed a total of 27 pounds, 12 ounces, hospital researchers said, adding they could find no public record of any heavier twins than the Arkansas pair born since 1900.

They said the Maynards twins topped a 1997 delivery in North Carolina of big twins weighing a total of 10 pounds, 10 ounces.

CALIFORNIA

Wildfire burns homes along N. California coast

SAN FRANCISCO — A fast-moving fire erupted Friday along the Northern California coast, burning homes, forcing hundreds of residents to flee and backing up traffic for miles on a scenic highway.

There was no immediate estimate of how many homes were threatened in the area, where dead grass and other vegetation were burning. The fire had burned 1,000 acres, less than two square miles, and sent thick black smoke hundreds of feet into the air. Evacuations were mandatory. Chris Hirsch, a spokeswoman for Santa Cruz County, said the 2,000 evacuees were being taken to a school.

Some homes were burning, but there was no indication how many, Hirsch said.

Paul Van Gerwen, a battalion chief with the California Department of Forestry and Fire Protection, said "numerous structures" are threatened.

Helicopters were dropping water and fire retardant, Van Gerwen said.

The cause of the fire is under investigation. Van Gerwen noted that multiple grass fires appeared to have merged into the larger blaze.

The California Highway Patrol closed 6 miles of Highway 1, where traffic was backed up for miles.

Man sheds 80 pounds eating at McDonald's

QUINTON, Va. — A Virginia man lost about 80 pounds in six months by eating nearly every meal at McDonald's.

Not Big Macs, french fries and chocolate shakes. Mostly salads, wraps and apple dips without the caramel sauce.

Chris Coleson tipped the scales at 278 pounds in December. The 5-foot-3 Coleson now weighs 199 pounds and his waist size has dropped from 50 to 36.

The 42-year-old businessman from Quinton says he chose McDonald's because it's convenient.

His inspiration came from his two children and from the story of a blind war veteran who rode a tandem bicycle coast-country.

Coleson says his goal is to get back to the 185 pounds he weighed when he married Ticia Summer. Their 10th anniversary is Saturday.

Model Naomi Campbell pleads guilty to assaulting police

LONDON — Temperamental model Naomi Campbell was sentenced to 200 hours of community service Friday after pleading guilty to assaulting two police officers after an "air rage" incident at Heathrow Airport.

She was also ordered to pay 200 pounds ($400) to each of the police officers she assaulted, according to 150 pounds ($300) to Miles Sutherland, the captain of the British Airways plane she disrupted, in addition to a 2,300 pound ($4,600) fine.

She could have received six months' jail time and a heavy fine for the six offenses stemming from a violent spat in April with British Airways cabin crew and police who removed her from a flight in her seat while waiting on the tarmac at Heathrow.

Prosecutors said Campbell used foul language, kicked and spat at police, accused airline personnel of racism and threatened to sue them after she was told that one of her bags had not been placed on the flight to Los Angeles in April.

Campbell was traveling in first class and became abusive to the captain after she left a cockpit to personally explain to her why her bag — and those of many other travelers — had not been placed on the flight.

HOROSCOPE BY JERALDINE SAUNDERS

IF JUNE 21 IS YOUR BIRTHDAY: Ambitions become an awesome force in your life the year to come. Once you get a taste of power, you may come back for more and more. Just be advised that your forceful tunnel vision leaves no room for error and that others may oppose your desires. Between September and December you might feel that absolutely anything is possible and if you play your cards right much can be accomplished. It may be late December or January before you receive a payoff on the back or a reward for a job well done, but as they say, better late than never.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) - Make a first day of summer remark on home. Be determined to push the limits. The competition can lead you into no-man's land. For the best success, sit tight and leave things just as they are for the moment.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) - Your crystal ball might need glass cleaner. Don't make important changes to your life until you can forecast the outcome. It may be impossible to make the right decision under these conditions.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) - Relax. The long hours of the summer solstice provide extra time to restore your spirits in pleasurable ways. You may have enormous enthusiasm, but could lack concrete experience and solid know-how.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) - When work is done, look for fun. The summer solstice may offer a perfect excuse to escape from a high-tension situation. Leave business and personal pressures behind; concentrate on home.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) - Walking a tightrope requires delicate balance. Sometimes there is a fine line between personal freedom of expression and blatantly infringing upon the rights of others. Hold off on important decisions.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) - Love doesn't need to be like a revolving door. You may regret losing a relationship if you deliberately turn your back upon it. Wait for better stars to have a serious heart-to-heart discussion.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) - There may be more at stake than meets the eye. Life isn't always an open book and it is easy to misread signals from others right now. This is a day when you shouldn't trust your instincts or feelings.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) - Your time will come. Enjoy this long summer evening with a tall glass of iced tea or other beverage of your choice and a favorite playmate. While appearing to be nothing, plan quietly for the future.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) - Get grounded. The longest day of the year can be the most productive day of the year. Spinning wheels go nowhere unless they are in touch with the ground. Hold off on pursuing personal ambitions upon learning to CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) - The longest day of the year may seem too long for some people. Frustrations that have held you back will fade away soon. Success depends upon learning to patiently wait for better opportunities.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) - Take a deep breath and relax. This first day of summer may be best used for relaxation upon the stars and bug swatting. Let situations settle down and cool off before taking further initiatives.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) - The craving for intimacy can hit a back wall. Don't react or retaliate if others aren't willing to share innermost feelings. Consider your alternatives carefully and don't jump to unnecessary conclusions.

states St. Luke's will provide the county with up to $2 million in in-kind renovation services — construction, traded and finished using St. Luke's employees. An additional $1 million became available when the county opted not to purchase part of the property currently occupied by St. Edward's Catholic Church.

Hospital officials said they called the meeting on short notice because they thought it was time that the community understood what the dispute was about. Schwartz told his lunch audience — who mingled from local legislators and health care providers to Red's Trading Post marketing director Ryan Horsley — that he was still unclear as to what the county was seeking, stating that estimated renovation costs for the clinic seem to far exceed estimates and that the county seems to be looking for more money than it is allowed.

"We don't understand where the discrepancy is in that," he said of the agreement text.

Schwartz said later that the county commissioners requested $5.5 million in their latest letter, but provided no justification for the price increase. But Mikessel, who also serves on St. Luke's Magic Valley's board, said the county was not what the commission sees as the hospital willing to meet part of the agreement.

No county representative was invited to the lunch meeting, though a handful of hospital board members attended. Mikessel said he was not aware of the event.

"As a board member, I was quite surprised I wasn't invited to it," Mikessel said.

Hospital officials told the county at some point that St. Luke's construction crew would not be available to do the work. Mikessel said, the commissioners, he said, view the $3 million figure as applicable to patients, with the in-kind labor a separate segment. Therefore, they simply want to be compensated for the value of the missing labor, he said.

The county is seeking $3 million this year, with an additional $1.25 million each of the following two years.

Math

The state may spend about $3.9 million on a new approach to math instruction and learning with about $1 million that is going toward training teachers to help improve student arithmetic skills that tend to drop off by the time kids get to high school.

Idaho is in the early stages of a plan to boost student math scores among public school students from kindergarten to 10th grade. Testing shows nearly 90 percent of Idaho's students are proficient in math in the fourth grade, but that number dips to 77 percent by their sophomore year.

Brendefur has patterned his approach on research on Dutch arithmetic instruction and has already brought math instruction training to a few Idaho schools. He has now been asked to transform his small program into a statewide plan.

"The state wants every math teacher to be within five years and has agreed to pay for the training for teachers who complete the program within three years. Teachers who do not complete the training in that time must foot the bill."

"We put some incentives in place so that teachers will do this early," said Tom Luna, the state's superintendent of public instruction.

The Department of Education brought 120 math teachers and administrators to Meridian this week as part of the plan.

Under the old way, teachers would present math as abstract numbers and ask students to relate the numbers back to real life with "word problems."

Using Brendefur's approach, teachers shouldn't tell kids how to do math, but build problems they can Mikessel said. The total is still less than an April 2008 estimate prepared by Hummel Architects of Boise and acquired through a public needs request to the county. That document estimates a grand total of $6.9 million for remodeling 59,515 square feet of the building at competitive commercial rates.

Neither side was willing to provide a copy of the county's June letter.

Asked about Mikessel's statements, Schwartz said the hospital views the labor as part of the $3 million in-kind contribution and that St. Luke's construction crew would still be available to the county, though workers are still busy building the new, $220 million hospital building — a total $100 million higher than initial estimates, he said. The crew would be free for the remodeling work when more of the hospital is finished, he said.

"I think it's pretty clear when you read the document that it doesn't separate the two," Schwartz said regarding the labor and materials.

Doctors in the clinic remain hopeful about the dispute, said Dr. David McNulty, and are mostly concerned about whether ongoing events could disrupt their ability to care for patients. He said St. Luke's taking ownership has improved the resources and options the physicians have.

"This is the best thing to happen to our area as far as health care," he said.

The sale agreement does allow parties to mutually agree to another form of resolution, such as arbitration. A county refusal to accept arbitration, which seems likely, would leave mediation as the sole solution allowed.

Schwartz said. In that case, it would be something the hospital would still be "very willing" to do, he said.

Both Mikessel and Schwartz stated again that their sole concern is about consumers and county residents.

"We're proud to be in this community," Schwartz told the lunch group. "We plan to be here a long, long time — forever."

delivered to exhumed revolutionary soldiers in December 1776. "Where are the winter soldiers?"

As comfortable as the group was sharing lunch together, Winmill asked attendees to step outside their comfort zone, both at their jobs and when they perceive a wrong. He pointed out that praise and recognition are either absent or available only after death for most front-runners in the fight for civil liberties. There is often no shortage of hardship for any of them.

Thomas Paine, for example, a fierce abolitionist, was "tared as an atheist" in America despite helping to inspire revolutionary soldiers. His blackballing came, in part, because he challenged the church. Winmill said. When he died June 8, 1809, not even the Quakers, of which Paine was a member, granted him a burial of his choosing, Winmill said, drawing some laughs.

Instead of his funeral there were only two blacks who came to pay their respects, he said.

The modern day "winter soldier" as Winmill sees it, is not pragmatic, suffers painful consequences, and is often relegated to a footnote in history.

The focus of this year's symposium — the role of the media — is especially important because of how journalists "dropped the ball" in the lead up to war after Sept. 11,

"Some say people have too many rights and I say, 'O.K., that just gave me job security.'"

— Mary Grant, a representative for the Idaho Human Rights Education Center in Boise

2001, said CSI history professor Russ Tremayne, who coordinated the event.

Tremayne said he believes journalists are again forging forward on issues such as the treatment of million prisoners at Abu Ghraib in Iraq and detainees at Guantanamo Bay, Cuba.

"For me to not take on this subject as a historian, that's malpractice," Tremayne said before the speech.

The crowd size expanded by 50 percent from last year's 100 participants. That's because word is spreading, Tremayne said. And it's because "civil liberties is of basic importance to everybody," said Bob Sims, a Boise State University professor Emeritus.

Mary Grant, a representative for the Idaho Human Rights Education Center in Boise, said she was "really impressed by the turnout." Lobbying on behalf of human rights both in the U.S. and internationally certainly qualified her as a member of Winmill's choir.

"Some say people have too many rights and I say, 'O.K., that just gave me job security,'" she said.

Northwest Washington.

UDC also is a winner in the farm bill that gained final approval Wednesday. The university is in line to gain $10 million or more for its agriculture and cooperative extension programs.

Some question why farm money should go to a city more associated with half-snoozes than harvesters. Fiscal conservatives call the UDC funding an example of how the $307 billion farm legislation has turned into a pork-fueled boondoggle.

"Why are we doing agricultural research at the university of Washington, D.C., when Washington, D.C., doesn't have any farmers?" Sen. Tom Coburn, R-Okla., asked.

But supporters say the UDC funding simply shows how farm legislation has evolved. The bill, often criticized as a sop to rural farmers, actually steers billions to urban areas. It will increase benefits for many of the 86,000 Washington D.C. food stamp recipients, for example, and provide fruit to thousands of poor students in the Washington area.

"That's the funny thing about the farm bill, how little of it has to do with farming. Most of it has to do with food and nutrition," said Del. Eleanor Holmes Norton, D-D.C., who participated in final negotiations on the legislation.

Through the changes sought by Norton, UDC will be able to apply for more grants for agricultural facilities, research and extension programs such as pest management and nutrition. UDC expects additional annual funding of $2 million to $3 million over five years, depending on congressional appropriations, officials say.

UDC offers an example of how elastic the concept of farm support has become. It is one of the country's "land-grant colleges," which were created in the 19th century to teach agriculture and mechanics to the common man. That designation provided Washington with a multi-million-dollar endowment for its university.

Like other land-grant colleges, UDC must run an agricultural experiment station and an extension service for local residents. But farmers are about as rare in these parts as square-dancers at the 9:30 Club.

The university's response has been to focus on "urban agriculture," said Gloria Wyché-Moore, who heads the agricultural research and extension programs. That means backyard gardening, pesticide management and issues far removed from rural America.

Teen pregnancy pact alarms fishing town

By Melissa Trujillo
Associated Press writer

GLOUCESTER, Mass. — The girls showed up repeatedly at the high school health clinic, asking for pregnancy tests. But their reactions to the test results were puzzling: high-fives if they were expecting, long faces if they weren't.

School officials in this hard-luck New England fishing town say an alarming 17 girls — four times the usual number — became pregnant this year. And even more disturbing: Some of the girls may have made a pact to have babies and raise them together.

"A typical girl you would think would say, 'Oh my God! What am I going to do now? How am I going to support this baby? How am I going to finish school?'" Superintendent Christopher Farmer said. "These young women clearly have not seen that."

But story exploded after Joseph Sullivan, the principal of Gloucester High School, was quoted by Time magazine this week as saying the girls confessed to making such a pact. Sullivan was on vacation Friday and did not return calls for comment.

The superintendent said he had no independent confirmation of a pact. But he added: "What we do know is that a group of students being tested for pregnancy on a regular basis, which would suggest they were not taking steps to avoid becoming pregnant, and that when some of them had their babies, they appeared to be very pleased."

None of the girls or their families have come forward to confirm any type of pact, and school and health officials have not identified any of the youngsters.

The girls are all 16 or under, nearly all of them sophomores. The superintendent said they have been reluctant to identify the fathers, many of whom are older. But one of them "is a 24-year-old homeless guy," the principal was quoted as telling Time.

City and school officials in the town, of about 30,000 people, 90 miles north of Boston have been struggling for months to explain and deal with the pregnancies, where on average only four girls a year at the 1,200-student high school become pregnant.

Just last month, two officials at the high school health center resigned to protest the local hospital's refusal to support a proposal to distribute contraceptives to youngsters at the school without parental consent. The hospital controls the clinic's funding.

Mayor Carolyn Kirk said Friday there are many contributing factors to what she called a "blip" in the pregnancy rate, from glamorization of teen pregnancy in pop culture to cuts in funding that have reduced teachers and health classes in Gloucester.

"We have fallen on hard times," Kirk said of her city, which has suffered in recent decades with the decline in the fishing industry that has led Gloucester since the colonial era.

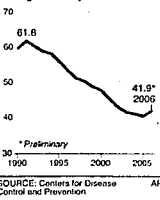

Gloucester is the town that lost six fishermen in the 1991 shipwreck that inspired the book and movie "The Perfect Storm." Its high school teams are known as the Fighting Fishermen.

"Baby bumps get written about the same way designer handbags do. It's just one more lifestyle choice, just another personal expression ..."

Student Council member Emily Spreer said many of the girls came from difficult socioeconomic circumstances: "Their circle or clique, they're not the most fortunate family-wise."

"If you're a young person who really is struggling to find an identity for herself, absent the support and the guidance, it can become almost a default option for some to become a mom," said Patricia Quinn, executive director of the Massachusetts Alliance on Teen Pregnancy.

"We need to do more for young people and show them more paths."

Gloucester — a heavily Roman Catholic town with a large Italian and Portuguese population — has long been supportive of teen mothers. The high school has a day care center for students and employees.

Christina Callahan, a former Gloucester High student who had a child when she was 15, said on NBC's "Today" show that some of the girls would ask her about her own pregnancy. "They would say stuff like, 'Oh, I think my parents would be fine with it and they would help me,' stuff like that," Callahan said.

Sarah Brown, chief executive of the National Campaign to Prevent Teen and Unplanned Pregnancy, suggested some of the blame lies with the nation's Hollywood-obsessed culture, in which stories about pregnant celebrities abound.

Just this week, 17-year-old TV star Jamie Lynn Spears, the unmarried sister of Briney Spears, gave birth. "Lino," a very comedy about a 15-year-old girl who gets pregnant, was one of the most acclaimed movies of the year.

Scientists ponder whether ice on Mars ever melted

By Alicia Chang
Associated Press writer

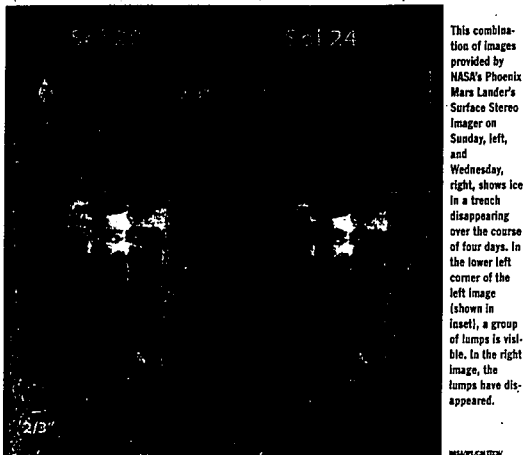

LOS ANGELES — The apparent discovery of ice near Mars' north pole has scientists asking: Did the frozen water melt at some point in the planet's long history to create an environment friendly for life?

The Phoenix spacecraft exposed bright white crumbs at the bottom of a trench while digging near Mars' north pole earlier this week. The bits disappeared in new photos sent back on Thursday, convincing scientists that the magic act was evidence of ice that vaporized after being exposed to the sun.

"The fact that there's ice there doesn't tell you anything about whether it's habitable," chief scientist Peter Smith of the University of Arizona said Friday during a teleconference with reporters. To judge whether the Martian polar environment could be hospitable, scientists are using the spacecraft's instruments to study minerals in the soil and ice for hints of carbonates and chlorates, which are formed by the action of liquid water.

Preliminary results from an experiment that baked a soil sample in one of Phoenix's test ovens failed to find evidence of water. A yield glitch on the lander this week prevented scientists from getting the results right away from the last testing phase.

Water is a prerequisite for life, but it's just one piece of the equation. Scientists generally agree that organic carbon and an energy source like the sun are also considered necessary ingredients. Mars today is arid and dusty, constantly bombarded by radiation and with no apparent trace of water on its surface. But carvings of channels and gullies on the

This combination of images provided by NASA's Phoenix Mars Lander's Surface Stereo Imager on Sunday, left, and Wednesday, right, shows ice in a trench disappearing over the course of four days. AP/WIDEWORLD

Martian surface suggest a wetter past. Some scientists speculate that water may have evaporated into the atmosphere and the rest trapped beneath the surface in the form of ice.

"The holy grail is to find water near the surface of Mars," said astrobiologist Mitch Sogin of the Marine Biological Lab in Woods Hole, Mass., who is not part of the mission.

Phoenix's latest discovery is not a total surprise. In 2002, the orbiting Mars Odyssey spacecraft spied evidence of a reservoir of frozen water near the planet's poles. Phoenix, which landed May 25, is the first robotic craft to reach out and touch it.

Scientists not involved in the mission said the Phoenix team makes a compelling case for the presence of ice.

"It's not unexpected, but finding it is different than predicting it," said Bruce Jakosky, an astrobiologist at the University of Colorado at Boulder. "Everybody expected the ice to be there. That's why Phoenix went there in the first place."

The bright chunks seen in the Martian soil vanished in images taken Thursday of a trench where they were seen four days earlier. Scientists had debated whether the clumps were salt or ice, but settled on frozen water since salt would not disappear. "We have found the proof that we've been seeking," Smith said.

Smith said the ice, which appeared to be pure, was found 2 inches deep in the trench.

Digging in another trench, Phoenix hit a hard surface believed to be an icy layer, which will also be tested.

The big question is whether the ice ever melted and remained stable long enough as a liquid.

"If so, one of the requirements is satisfied for life as we know it," said Kenneth Nealson, a geobiologist at the University of Southern California, who had no role in the mission.

Flooding strands 100-plus barges on Mississippi

By Betsy Taylor
Associated Press writer

WINFIELD, Mo. — The flooding in the Midwest has brought freight traffic on the upper Mississippi to a standstill, stranding more than 100 barges loaded with grain, cement, scrap metal, fertilizer and other products while shippers wait for the water to drop on the Big Muddy.

"We're basically experiencing total shutdown," said Larry Daily, president of Alter Barge Line Inc. of Bettendorf, Iowa.

While the bottleneck is costing him and other barge operators tens of thousands of dollars in lost revenue per day, June is a slow shipping period on the river compared with the late-summer harvest, the shutdown is expected to last only a few weeks, and it involves primarily non-perishable goods. So no major damage to the economy is expected.

Among the freight being held up: corn and soybeans headed downstream for New Orleans, where grain is loaded onto ships for export. Construction supplies and petroleum products headed upstream on the Mississippi are not getting through either. Because of the high water, the Army Corps of Engineers has closed 13 locks along the upper Mississippi since June 12. As of Friday, nine locks remained closed, a roughly 215-mile stretch between Illinois City, Ill., and Winfield, Mo., northwest of St. Louis.

The situation along the Mississippi in Missouri was improving Friday as government forecasters predicted crests sharply below 1993's record levels. Several communities up and down the Mississippi were still under inundated, however, including Lincoln County, Mo., where 300 to 350 homes were flooded after the water flowed over or through the levees.

In Old Monroe, 45 miles north of St. Louis, retired steelworker Bob Scott watched as the river puddled at the edge of his front yard. But he said he thought the river had stopped rising and his home might come through the flood unscathed.

"It's kind of harrowing, a lot of sleepless nights, worried about your property," said Scott, 61. "You work all year long for what little bit you get."

FDA investigators retrace route of tainted tomatoes

By Amya Stein
The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — Federal investigators plan to descend on tomato farms, warehouses and packing sheds in Florida and Mexico on Saturday to search for the cause of a salmonella outbreak that has now sickened 52 people in 32 states and the District of Columbia.

U.S. Food and Drug Administration officials said they have figured out the route that some of the tainted tomatoes took before reaching consumers.

"Now we know the path those tomatoes have traveled, we're looking all along those pathways," said David Acheson, a top FDA food safety official.

The number of illnesses increased by 169 in two days. Officials with the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention said the jump was the result of state health labs stepping up their surveillance of salmonella cases and completing lab work that linked previously collected samples to the outbreak. Texas alone confirmed 134 additional cases. Many of the new cases date back several weeks.

The outbreak is not over. CDC officials said. A person became sick as recently as June 10, after federal food safety officials had issued a nationwide alert warning consumers to avoid Roma, red plum and red round tomatoes grown outside certain regions.

Ian Williams, chief of the CDC's OutbreakNet Team, also told reporters Friday that he is aware of more recent illnesses that may eventually be linked to the outbreak. So far, no deaths have been officially associated with the outbreak, but a man in his 60s in Texas who died from cancer was infected with the outbreak strain; the infection may have contributed to his death.

Food safety officials initially suspected Florida and Mexico as likely sources of the tainted tomatoes because they are the main suppliers of fresh tomatoes to the United States in April, when people began getting sick. Officials have been able to clear dozens of states and a handful of countries based on the timing of their tomato harvest. A complete list of safe areas is at www.fda.gov/oc/opa/com/topics/tomatoes.html.

Acheson stressed that investigators have not identified a particular farm or warehouse as a source and that the contamination could have occurred at any point between cultivation and consumption.

"That's why it's so critical to go to all points in this distribution chain and not just farms where harvesting may have stopped," he said. "We've got to continue to be aggressive on this."

A new cluster of cases in Texas might also help FDA officials narrow the list of potential sources. Clusters provide more information than isolated individual cases and allow investigators to work their way down the distribution chain more quickly and with greater confidence.

Tomatoes are especially difficult to trace, Acheson said. In this case, they did not come with the bar codes that the bags of spinach did in the E. coli outbreak two years ago that ultimately led investigators to a farm in California.

McClellan: Bush must blame himself for nation's mistrust

By Laurie Keilman
Associated Press writer

With a copy of his book at left, former White House Press Secretary Scott McClellan waits to testify on Capitol Hill in Washington, Friday, before the House Judiciary Committee hearing to investigate Vice President Cheney's precise role in the leak of Valerie Plame's CIA identity case. His attorney Michael Tigar is at left.

WASHINGTON — If the nation doesn't trust the Bush White House, it's the president's and Dick Cheney's own fault, Bush's former spokesman told Congress Friday.

From life-and-death matters on down — the rationale for war, the leaking of classified information, Cheney's accidental shooting of a friend — the government's top two leaders undermined their credibility by "packaging" their version of the truth, former press secretary Scott McClellan said.

He described the loss of trust as self-inflicted, telling the House Judiciary Committee that Bush and his administration failed to open up about White House mistakes.

Fratto, who is Bush's deputy press secretary, came to the White House after McClellan left, apparently in good standing, in April 2006.

McClellan, considered an ultimate Bush loyalist until the book came out, worked for Bush when the future president was Texas governor, jumped to his presidential campaign and then followed him to Washington when he won.

On Friday, McClellan returned repeatedly to his theme that Bush, Cheney and others in the administration had done great damage to themselves — and by extension to aides like McClellan — by being less than truthful on a range of official matters.

"This is a very secretive White House," McClellan said. "There's some things that they would prefer not to be talked about."

McClellan took aim at Bush's personal honesty when discussing the president's handling of allegations that he had long ago used cocaine.

In the book, McClellan recounts hearing Bush on the telephone telling a supporter that "I honestly don't remember whether I tried it or not."

McClellan called that kind of response to sensitive questions by Bush and other politicians "essentially evasion" that for Bush later "transferred over to other issues" of policy.

"It tells something about his character," he maintained.

Committee Republicans said McClellan was the one with the credibility problem.

"Some would say that you included that sensational information about the alleged drug use and his denial not to promote bipartisanship and civility but rather to promote book sales," said Rep. Ric Keller, R-Fla.

McClellan made clear in the book and in person that he felt especially burned by the Plame matter.

He said that former White House chief of staff Andy Card told him that the president and vice president wanted him to publicly say that Cheney's top aide, I. Lewis "Scooter" Libby, was not involved in the leak.

"I was reluctant to do it," McClellan said Friday. "I got on the phone with Scooter Libby and asked him point-blank, 'Were you involved in this in any way?' And he assured me in unequivocal terms that he was not."

In fact, both Libby and former presidential adviser Karl Rove had discussed Plame's identity with reporters.

State Department official Richard Armitage first revealed Plame's CIA identity to columnist Robert Novak, who used Rove as a confirming source for a 2003 article. Around that time Plame's husband, former ambassador Joseph Wilson was criticizing Bush's march to war in Iraq.

Plame maintains the White House quietly revealed her position to reporters as retribution for criticism from her husband. McClellan told the panel he agreed.

Libby resigned from office the day he was indicted on charges of covering up the leak. He was later convicted, but last July Bush commuted his 2½-year sentence.

Hagel says he'd consider VP offer from Obama

OMAHA, Neb. (AP) — Republican Sen. Chuck Hagel said Friday he would consider serving as Democratic presidential candidate Barack Obama's running mate if asked, but he doesn't expect to be on any ticket.

Hagel's vocal criticism of the Bush administration since the 2003 invasion of Iraq has touched off speculation that if Obama were to pick a Republican running mate, it might be Hagel.

Hagel said in an interview with The Associated Press that after devoting much of his life to his country — in the Senate and the U.S. Army — he would have to consider any offer.

"If it would occur, I would have to think about it," Hagel said. "I think anybody, anybody would have to consider it. Doesn't mean you'd do it, doesn't mean you'd accept it, but it's too many steps there, but you'd have to consider it, I mean, it's the only thing you could do. Why wouldn't you?"

In a book published this year, Hagel said the desire of holding one of the Senate's strongest records of support for President Bush, his standing as a Republican has been called into question because of his opposition to what he deems "a reckless foreign policy ... that is divorced from a strategic context."

Hagel wrote in "America: Our Next Chapter" that the invasion of Iraq was the triumph of the so-called neo-conservative ideology, as well as Bush administration arrogance and incompetence.

He said Friday that he and Obama also have differences.

"But what this country is going to have to do is come together next year, and the next president is going to have to bring this country together to govern with some consensus," Hagel said.

He hasn't endorsed Sen. John McCain of Arizona, the presumed Republican nominee, whom he calls a friend.

Minico prosecutor can't make flag charges stick

JEERS: To Minico County Attorney Nicole Cannon for pursuing a long-odds prosecution of former Minico High School teacher Dan Laker for desecrating an American flag.

An English-as-second language teacher, Laker is charged with throwing a small American flag on the floor of the school vice principals office and stomping on it. He was protesting the actions of fellow teacher Clint Strautman, who took a Mexican flag from a Latino student on Cinco de Mayo and put it in a trash can.

Laker's behavior was asinine, but there's little chance Cannon can get a conviction that wouldn't be overturned on appeal. Desecrating the U.S. flag has been protected as free speech since the U.S. Supreme Court struck down Texas' flag desecration law in 1989.

Cannon's office is talking about taking the case all the way to the Supreme Court, if necessary. That could cost Minico County taxpayers more than $1 million.

The prosecutor should save tax dollars for things the county really needs.

CHEERS: To the Twin Falls Planning and Zoning Commission, for denying a Bull doilyments request for a variance on county setback requirements along Salmon Falls Creek Canyon.

Mal Machado, who runs the Providence Dairy, sought the variance in order to expand his 280-cow operation to 999 animals. The dairy's existing setback from the canyon rim is 2,275 feet, but the county requires a mile setback for new dairy construction.

The buffer zone was established to preserve the scenic values of the canyon. Had the planning commission granted Machado's request for an exception, other dairy operators would be next in line seeking to expand toward the rim.

JEERS: To Twin Falls County Sheriff Wayne Tousey for his eye-popping budget request to the county commissioners.

Tousey, who has overspent his budget for three years running, wants an increase of almost $1.5 million for the 2009 fiscal year. That exceeds all the new tax revenue the county is expecting to collect this year.

The sheriff wants a 100 percent increase in funding to house inmates out of county — from $100,000 to $200,000 — and $1,000 for additional overtime money. He also wants to hire 10 new deputies at a cost of $377,910 and asked $143,527 for pay raises based on merit and years of service.

Even if the county could afford it, it's doubtful all that spending could be justified.

There's no question Tousey faces challenges keeping the peace in Twin Falls County and in managing the overcrowded Twin Falls County Jail. But this budget request is not reasonable.

The sheriff should trim it before the commissioners do it for him.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Bell's comments, audience add to bigotry

In 1994, Native American Larry Echolaw was the Democratic candidate for governor in Idaho. He was the current highest respected Idaho attorney general. As a campaign worker for Mr. Echolaw, I accompanied him to the Cassia County Fair and Rodeo. I do not know who the rodeo clown was, but Zeb Bell was the announcer. Between the clown and the announcer, they spent considerable time telling bigoted and very distasteful "drunken Indian" jokes.

It was an extremely embarrassing situation for both myself and Mr. Echolaw. I offered an apology, explaining the dialogue simply as "ignorance." But the part that was harder to accept was that the 3,000 Cassia County citizens attending that rodeo all roared with laughter at each distasteful remark.

Racial intolerance and bigoted behavior isn't limited to Bell and his cronies. Everyone who provides an audience is a contributor.

Mr. Echolaw moved past any repercussions of that kind of treatment and is now a law professor at Brigham Young University in Provo, Utah. Let's hope that the good folks in Cassia County have moved beyond being amused by racial jokes and innuendos.

Jazz in the Canyon a good way to spend a day

What a great time I had Saturday (June 14) at the Jazz in the Canyon. Magic Valley needs to take notice of the Chamber of Commerce and Arts Council's superb planning of an annual event that gives us, the patrons, a chance to hear not only good music but to have a venue with a relaxing atmosphere in the canyon, surrounded by friends, kicked back in a lounge chair, tapping a finger to the diverse sounds.

The talent has just gotten better as this event matures into one of the valley's premiere gatherings.

A special thanks to all who find the time, energy and dedication to bring this together for us all. If you missed it, plan next year. You just can't find a better way to spend a Saturday afternoon.

Thanks for help with water rights confusion

We recently received a $210 irrigation assessment from Hazelton. We asked the mayor on what basis this was issued.

He stated when Hazelton annexed our property, our North Side Canal Company shares reverted to Hazelton and thus the assessment. This is an amazing achievement since there have been zero NSCC shares affiliated with our land since at least 1979. We have wastewater rights back to 1979. The mayor knew nothing about wastewater rights, nor did the City Council.

When approached, they also didn't care to enlighten themselves about same.

Who to turn to for help? A huge thanks to Cindy Yenter, watermaster for Water District 130.

When contacted, she confirmed our wastewater rights, indicated she knew no way Hazelton could take those rights and that they be passed only with the ownership of the land.

We then contacted NSCC. Again, a huge thanks.

Terri Walters took many calls from me and answered all possible.

For a busy lady, she gave me a lot of her time. She also helped me contact Ted Diehl, director of NSCC. When I requested a meeting with him to explain our situation and seek help, Ted offered to come to our home for that meeting. He checked our ditch situation and paperwork.

The then stated the assessment was not valid because our ditch was not appurtenant to that of Hazelton. He also asked his associate, Joe Cooper, to attend the next council meeting and provide them with this information.

With that, our assessment and any future ones of that nature, were violated.

We thank all four of you for sharing your expertise and time. Your assistance was invaluable. You are truly remarkable individuals and a huge asset to this county.

Bell speaks truth to America

Concerned citizens like Zeb Bell and Frosty Wauldridge are too often vilified for speaking the truth about decay and corruption that is slowly turning America into something less than a Third World nation.

Waste, in my opinion, two dim bulbs running for the most powerful position in the world. One is a big windbag and the other not much better.

Neither one has a clue about what to do about the drug and gang problems, the illegal immigrant problem that is bankrupting American taxpayers, obscene oil prices that are wrecking havoc on our economy and the disease of immorality.

If America does not wake up from this slumber we are looking at a socialized America or a form of communism that will wipe out our Constitution and Bill of Rights. At 78 years of age and having lived through the Great Depression, never have I felt more threatened by the corruption in this country than I do right now.

Wake up, Americans, or suffer the consequences!

Will gay rights trample religious freedom?

Early Tuesday mornings, gay and lesbian couples lined up at county clerk's offices across California to exercise their new right to marry, bestowed on them last month by the state its citizens; moral decisions ought to be, as much as possible, a matter of private choice and not law.

But it should not follow that having allowed same-sex couples to come out of the closet, as it were, that religious people should in turn be confined to the sanctuary.

In the same-sex marriage decision, the state Supreme Court suggests that all will be well and good as long as the "official" activities of the clergy aren't affected. But that excludes religion entirely from a broad range of social welfare and other activities, despite the fact that the California Constitution declares: "Free exercise and enjoyment of religion without discrimination or preference are guaranteed."

Evidence from previous and pending cases indicates that the court tends to take an extremely narrow view of people's "free exercise and enjoyment of religion" when they clash with another group's need for equal protection.

Religious liberty claims rarely, if ever, have prevailed in the face of complaints about racial discrimination. Conflicts about the rights of gays and those of religious believers demonstrate that these are not hypothetical fears. Consider the following:

• A San Diego County fertility doctor was sued for refusing to perform artificial insemination for one partner of a lesbian couple for religious reasons. The doctor referred the patient to a colleague, promised there would be no extra cost and offered to care for her during her subsequent pregnancy. The case is now before the California Supreme Court, and justices seemed hostile to the doctor's defense during oral arguments last month.

• Catholic Charities in Boston and San Francisco ended adoption services altogether rather than be compelled by anti-discrimination laws to place children with same-sex couples. In the Boston case, Catholic Charities was prepared to refer same-sex couples seeking to adopt to other providers, but that was not sufficient.

• Lutheran school in Riverside County, Calif., was sued in 2005 under California's Unruh Act (which forbids discrimination by businesses) for expelling two students who allegedly were having a lesbian relationship, in contravention of the religious views of the school. The case was thrown out in Superior Court in January, but the students have appealed.

In each of these cases, and other similar ones, the government has acted in some way to forbid gays and lesbians from being demeaned. But allowing same-sex couples to force religious individuals or organizations to act out of accord with their faith is not cost-free either. Their dignity is no less affected. Unless claims rooted in equal protection under the law cease to sweep away claims rooted in freedom of religion, a more sensitive balancing approach is essential.

Given the array of church views on homosexuality, and the number of secular organizations offering social services to same-sex couples, allowing religious groups opposed to same-sex marriage to put that opposition into practice beyond the sanctuary is not likely to often seriously impede anyone.

Concurring in the May 15 California marriage judgment, Justice Joyce L. Kennard is observed that the court's most important role was to preserve constitutional rights "from obliteration by the majority."

If past rulings are any guide, it is religious rights that are likely to be "obliterated" by an emerging popular majority supporting same-sex relationships — and it seems unlikely that the California courts will intervene. That's a shame.

Marc Stern is general counsel of the American Jewish Congress and a contributor to a forthcoming book, "Same-Sex Marriage and Religious Liberty." He wrote this commentary for the Los Angeles Times.

MARC D. STERN

Supreme Court.

In its controversial decision, the court insisted that these same-sex marriages would not "diminish any other person's constitutional rights" or "impose upon the religious freedom of any religious organization, official or any other person." Religious liberty would be unaffected, the chief justice wrote, because no member of the clergy would be compelled to officiate at a same-sex ceremony and no church would be compelled to change its policies or practices.

And yet there is substantial reason to believe that these assurances about the safety of religious liberty are either wrong or reflect a cramped view of religion.

The case for same-sex marriage, reduced to its essentials, is an attractive one. It is that the government in a liberal democracy ought not to impose any one moral vision on

Economy keeping illegal immigrants at bay

Who needs moats, walls or chain fences? The strength and reach of America's most powerful assets are doing a good job of dissuading immigration. Americans believe that the economy is in bad consumer confidence. And the lack of confidence is spreading. The latest calculation is grim.

The latest report from the Conference Board (the group that measures the confidence level) says consumer confidence which had declined in April, continued its downward trend in May. The index now stands at 57.2 (1985=100), down from 62.8 in April. The Present

VICTOR LANDI

Situation Index decreased to 74.4 from 81.9. The Expectations Index declined to 45.7 from 50.0 in April.

Bad news travels fast. Word from communities south of the border is that a free-gambling trip to the United States in search of work is not worth the effort.

America's weak economy and its strong communication system have done more to stem the flow of immigration than Lou Dobbs and Tom Tancredo could have ever imagined. The question now becomes, do we really need a wall? There will be fewer immigrants coming our way, and with fewer workers, who'll build it? It turns out that bad news through word-of-mouth is stronger than the Patriot Act.

And here's the scariest irony: If the wall is scrapped because of a lack of workers, we could thank the immigrant grapevine for saving the Constitution from decimation. Granted, our Constitution won't be safe until the Patriot Act and those who hide behind it to propose their fear, are gone. But until that happens, our weak economy seems to be doing you men's work along the border.

America's weak economy and its strong communication system have done more to stem the flow of immigration than Lou Dobbs and Tom Tancredo could have ever imagined. The question now becomes, do we really need a wall?

To be on the safe side, to pound the story home, immigration officials recently arrested 270 undocumented workers at an Iowa meatpacking plant. That in itself is not surprising. It's a peril that's included in the undocumented's risk calculus.

What's different is that these workers were caught, arrested and brought before a judge under felony charges. They all signed up to work using Social Security numbers that didn't belong to them. The guy who stole those identities and sold them to the workers is still roving the streets. Almost all of the arrested meatpacking workers, all of them Guatemalan, have been sentenced to five months in federal prison under felony identity theft charges, and then they will be deported.

So who needs a wall when you can send a message and reinforce it with slamming jail bars? And this economy won't be lackluster forever.

Who was the man in the room at Walter Reed?

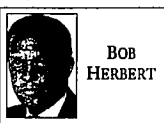

Who was the tall, young man, the quiet guy with the small wire-rimmed glasses, who was spending the entire day, every day, with the badly wounded soldier in room 5711 at the Walter Reed Army Medical Center?

The doctors, the nurses, the technicians and assorted attendants all wanted to know. The man was always very calm and patient and quick to help out however he could. Who was he?

Joshua Hubble and Luis Rosa-Valentin were best friends at Meade Senior High School at Fort Meade, Md., just outside of Washington. Josh graduated in 2000 and Luis in 2001. Both of their dads were career soldiers.

"We'd go straight from school to his house to play video games," Josh told me over the weekend.

Luis laughed. "Remember 'Golden Eye' from Nintendo? That was one of the best games."

A few years ago, Josh, who is 25, learned he had testicular cancer. "At that young age, you think you're invincible," he said. "The toll that it took mentally was just devastating."

Luis, who had joined the Army, he began basic training on Sept. 11, 2001, was constantly on the phone with Josh, offering encouragement and moral support, helping his friend get through the ordeal.

"It still doesn't realize how much he helped me," Josh said.

Inevitably, Luis was sent to Iraq, which was fine with him. He was as gung-ho as they come. "I didn't just love being in the Army," he said. "I loved being in the infantry. It was my life."

His encounter with the improvised explosive device that almost ended his life came in April, during his second tour in the combat zone. Simply stated, while he was laying a mine on a street in Baghdad at about 3 o'clock in the morning, Sgt. Luis Rosa-Valentin was blown up. Injuries didn't get much more devastating. He lost both legs above the knee. He lost his left arm. He lost his hearing.

Luis' mother called Josh's mom to tell her that Luis had been badly wounded and was being flown back to the States. Josh listened as his mother spoke on the phone. "She had that tone," he said. "You know, where something is so horribly wrong."

Josh immediately began emailing Luis, who was divorced and had a 3-year-old daughter. "I just kept saying, 'I hope you have to survive. Just survive. It won't be easy, but if you just survive you're the kind of person you can get through this.'"

Josh showed up as soon as Luis was admitted to Walter Reed. He gazed at his friend with the dark hair and the dark eyebrows who was now a triple amputee and could hear nothing. He stayed as long as he could, and then came back the next day, and the next, and every day since.

"The people at the hospital were always asking, 'Who are you?'" he said. "And I'd say, 'I'm just his best friend.'"

Luis has made tremendous progress and is fully alert and will be fitted soon for prostheses. He and the man who is constantly at his bedside communicate through a special computer. Each has a keyboard and small screen. Josh types whatever he wants to say. Luis reads it, and then usually responds aloud.

When I spent the afternoon with them, Josh typed the questions I wanted to ask Luis, and Luis would look at me and answer in a normal tone of voice.

"I have no memory of the attack," he said, "which causes problems for me. As you can imagine, it's a little tough to be walking down the street in Baghdad one moment, and the next you're waking up in Walter Reed with no legs, one arm and you can't hear anything. It makes coping difficult."

"The hearing loss is especially hard. I can't call anybody to say hello or tell them what's happening with me. And when people are having a conversation around me, I'm completely left out of it, unless someone decides to write down real quick what's being said."

There is no use looking for words to explain the value of Josh's constant presence at Luis' bedside. The two men talk, play video games, watch movies, speculate about life and go through the good days and bad days together.

It's supposed to be the meaning of love," Luis said. "I've got my best friend here helping me, and I need the help. I'm just extremely grateful to have a friend like Josh."

Josh does not act as though he's doing anything extraordinary. "This is a fine way to spend my time," he said. "It's just nice to be able to hang out with him, after him being so close to being gone forever."

LETTERS OF THANKS

Thanks to T.F. vet hospital for its compassion

My wife and I would like to take a moment to thank Dr. Szantio and his staff at the Twin Falls Veterinary Clinic and Hospital.

We recently struggled with the decision to put down our cat, Socks, who was wasting away from kidney failure. Their concern was obvious, and they treated Socks so that we could spend time saying goodbye. When the end came, Dr. Szantio and his staff respected the dignity of our cat's life and our feelings. Although their concern would have been more than enough, to our surprise, we received not only a card but flowers to honor our cat and recognize our loss.

Dr. Szantio and staff, thank you for going out of your way during such a difficult time.

Good medical care is close to home

Kudos to the St. Luke's Magic Valley Medical Center Cardiac Unit!

I would like to take a moment to thank the cardiology department at St. Luke's for the wonderful care I received during a recent stay.

I particularly want to thank Dr. David Kemp and the nursing staff there. What a very professional team.

It's nice to know we don't have to travel very far for the finest care and doctors.

Thanks for the kindness of strangers

On May 23 at the Costco store, my husband, John Larribeau collapsed.

Thanks to all the strangers who showed love for the paramedics and ambulance, to the emergency room nurses and doctors and Dr. McKain, who fought so hard to save him; the people in the ICU waiting room who were so kind to comfort me. Though the faces are clear, your names are unknown, but you will always be in my heart and prayers.

Being a longtime sailor, John is sailing his last voyage to meet with God.

Thank you one and all.

House passes new surveillance law

Bill would protect telecoms from lawsuits

By Pamela Hess
Associated Press writer

WASHINGTON — The House on Friday easily approved a compromise bill giving new electronic surveillance rules that effectively shield telecommunications companies from lawsuits arising from the government's terrorism-era warrantless eavesdropping on phone and computer lines in this country.

The bill, which was passed on a 293-129 vote, does more than just protect the telecoms. The update to the 30-year-old Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Act is an attempt to balance privacy rights with the government's responsibility to protect the country against attack, taking into account changes in telecommunications technologies.

"This bill, though imperfect, protects both," said Rep. Jane Harman, D-Calif., and a former member of the House intelligence committee.

President Bush praised the bill Friday. "It will help our intelligence professionals learn enemies' plans for new attacks," he said in a statement before television cameras a few hours before the vote.

The House's passage of the FISA Amendment bill marks the beginning of the end to a monthslong standoff between Democrats and Republicans about the rules for government wiretapping inside the United States. The Senate was expected to pass the bill with a large margin, perhaps as soon as next week, before Congress takes a break during the week of the Fourth of July.

The government caves-dropped on American phone and computer lines for almost six years after the Sept. 11 attacks without permission from the Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Court, the special panel established for that purpose under the 1978 law. Some 40 lawsuits have been filed against the telecommunications companies by groups and individuals who think the Bush administration illegally monitored their phone calls or e-mails.

The White House had threatened to veto any surveillance bill that did not also shield the companies. The compromise bill directs a federal district court to review certifications from the attorney general saying the telecommunications companies received presidential orders telling them wiretaps were needed to detect or prevent a terrorist attack. If the papers were deemed in order, the judge would dismiss the lawsuit.

It would also require the inspectors general of the Justice Department, Pentagon and intelligence agencies to investigate the wiretapping program, with a report due in a year.

Critics of the bill say dismissal is a foregone conclusion.

"These provisions turn the judiciary into the administration's rubber stamp," said Rep. Zoe Lofgren, D-Calif. She opposes the bill. Opponents of immunity believe civil lawsuits are the only way the full extent of the wiretapping program will ever be revealed.

Key senators voiced strong opposition to the compromise, although they're unlikely to have the votes to either defeat or filibuster the bill.

Officials say bureaucracy failed 5-year-old abused boy

By Allison Hoffman
Associated Press writer

LOS ANGELES — The little boy's body was a study in pain.

He was covered in cigarette burns, including to his genitals. He couldn't fully open his hand because it had been burned on a stove. His tooth was broken with a nerve exposed. And he had been made to sit in his own urine and feces, authorities say.

As the 5-year-old remains hospitalized by kidney failure brought on from malnutrition, two county supervisors are blaming welfare and law enforcement agencies for missing earlier chances to rescue the child from what police say were months of "unbearable psychological and physical abuse."

The case came to light after a woman called a hotline June 4, saying the boy told her at a commuter train station that his mother had burned his hand on top of a stove.

Summoned to a county Department of Children and Family Services office, authorities say Starkeisha Brown brought her baby sister's healthy 4-year-old son and daughter and tried to pass them off as her own.

Brown and her girlfriend ran from the office when a social worker questioned whether the child was really Brown's, authorities say. The boy was found nearby, after someone called 911 to report that a sick child with bruises had been left with a homeless person.

The child was taken to a hospital with a round belly common in cases of severe malnutrition. Police were shocked by injuries that showed the abuse was horrific and prolonged.

"I've never seen anyone with these kinds of injuries who has lived," Assistant

Police Chief James McDonnell told reporters last week. "This kid must have a tremendous will to live, to be able to still hang on despite what he's been through."

The anonymous June 4 call was the second public tip that the boy was at risk.

DCFS is investigating why no one followed up on an initial case review after a tip in November 2005 that the boy was neglected and at risk while in the care of his grandmother, who took the boy in after his mother was arrested for shoplifting.

An array of other agencies missed their chance to intervene, said Gloria Molina, a member of the Los Angeles County Board of Supervisors, including the state Department of Corrections and the county's Department of Probation, Department of Mental Health and foster care agencies that had case files for Brown and the two other women charged in the case.

"Why was there no intervention? It shouldn't have to be from the hotline," Molina said. Supervisor Zev Yaroslavsky blamed a "silo" mentality of agencies that do not reflexively alert one another to potential risks posed by cases.

Inmate who allegedly tried to mail dope gets new lawyer

Rackham's court date moved up

By Andrea Jackson
Staff writer

An inmate charged in connection to an alleged meth smuggling incident at the Twin Falls County Jail had a new, private attorney on Friday working his case.

Robert Z. Rackham, 24, has been in jail since May 14 when he was brought in on two warrants for probation violations stemming from DUI charges, sheriff's office officials have said.

Rackham was charged June 9 with felony possession of a controlled substance, methamphetamine or amphetamine, after jailers said they found dope in a vent of his cell.

The court assigned him a public defender on June 9 when his bond was set at $10,000.

On Friday a private Twin Falls attorney, Michael Wood, stepped in, and announced he's taking the case.

Wood told the court he was retained Thursday night, and asked for the pre-trial hearing to be pushed forward. It is now set for July 11.

Wood didn't immediately return a call Friday from the Times-News.

Deputies assert Rackham tried to send drugs to a house in Twin Falls where his dad lives at 601 Quincey St.

The allegation unfolded after authorities came across a letter, lacking a recipient's name, bound for the Quincey Street address, records show.

Outgoing mail must have a recipient's name on it so deputies opened the letter, which contained a powder that tested positive for meth.

Deputies proceeded to search the cell block where Rackham was staying and found some more material that tested positive for meth.

Rackham told deputies he wanted a lawyer when they tried to interview him at the time of the incident.

Twin Falls County Sheriff Wayne Towsley said inmates shipping dope out of the jail is extremely rare, and he hasn't seen it happen in 27 years.

Crash claims Burley teen

Three other men injured in rollover southwest of town

By Laurie Welch
Staff writer

A one-vehicle crash claimed the life of a Burley teen Friday and injured three other men.

Victor M. Almazan-Analeco, 19, died at the scene shortly before 10 a.m. after his 1991 Nissan Pathfinder left the road at 400 W. 655 S. and rolled, partially encircling him, according to the Cassia County Sheriff's report.

Burley Fire Department and Mini-Cassia Search and Rescue extrication crews worked to free two of the passengers, Manuel Hernandez-Gasper, 28, of Burley, was transported to Cassia Regional Medical Center along with a still unidentified male, who was taken to St. Luke's Magic Valley Medical Center by air ambulance.

The third passenger, Oscar Marino, 24, also of Emergency workers extricate victims from a one-vehicle rollover at 400 W. 655 S., southwest of Burley, which claimed the life of one Burley man and injured three others Friday morning. The 1991 Nissan Pathfinder, which was apparently traveling southbound on 400 W., rolled several times before it came to a stop on the east side of the roadway.

Burley, was not trapped by the wreckage, but was taken to Cassia Regional Medical Center by ambulance. All three men sustained incapacitating injuries.

The report said the vehicle apparently blew out a tire before crashing, and Almazan-Analeco was exceeding the posted speed limit of 55 mph.

Filer moves forward on plans for intermediate school

By John E. Swayze
Correspondent

FILER — A major facility expansion in the Filer School District is one step closer to becoming reality.

Filer School Board members have approved a resolution to sell $16.4 million in bonds to fund the construction of an intermediate school and various other projects to help meet current and future growth in the district.

Conducted through Seattle Northwest Securities in Boise, Wednesday's sale to brokers, bond funds, money managers and banks was made possible by a bond levy that received 66.82 percent voter support in May.

"We actually did today what we marketed and got 64 orders for the bonds," company representative Eric Heringer said. "We wanted to sell the bonds as quickly as possible to lock in interest rates (4.48 percent) and achieve the $2.00 tax rate goal communicated to voters."

With an interest rate lower than the original 5 percent estimate, the district will save approximately $1.9 million over the next 20 years.

The close of sale on July 2 will clear the way for $11 million to be used for the construction of a 49,000 square-foot intermediate school next to Filer Elementary. Moving the fourth through sixth grade students into the new facility will open up classroom space at both the elementary and middle school.

A remaining $5.4 million will be used for an eight-room expansion at the high school, roof repairs at Filer and Hollister elementary schools and improvements to the football field.

In other action, the district has decided to form a committee of teachers, administrators, community patrons and parents to help evaluate and strengthen the district's Student-Patron Extracurricular Concern Policy. The existing policy follows a progressive complaint procedure, including meetings with teachers, administrators and the school board, though officials say it is often circumvented and creates a lack of communication.

"Right now there are loopholes in our policy that make it easy for a meeting with an administrator or teacher to be bypassed," board member Jason Ramsey said. "Teachers are concerned that we only hear one side of the story, and I'd like to see a ridged chain of cause and effect before things get to us."

Individuals who would be interested in serving on the committee should contact the district office or any school board member.

Wendell council denies bid for beer, wine garden

Country Music Fest may bow out this year

By Blair Koch
Correspondent

WENDELL — The Wendell City Council voted unanimously Thursday to keep the City Park alcohol-free, denying a request by the city's Chamber of Commerce for a special-use permit to allow for a beer and wine garden during its September Country Music Fest. The request was made by the Chamber during the June 5 council meeting.

Mayor Rick Cowen said a special use permit could not be granted for the request due to city code.

"I guess our problem now is we have an ordinance against alcohol in the park," Cowen said.

After the Chamber approached the city, Council President Irene Bounseff had Mickey Walker, council clerk and treasurer, investigate other area cities' alcohol ordinances.

Walker reported that Filer and Gooding do not allow alcohol to be brought into city parks or sold. Jerome allows it only with prior approval by the council, while Shoshone allows some alcohol to be brought in but does not allow its sale. The cities of Buhl and Castleford also make consideration for alcohol sales and consumption during special events.

Chamber President Earl Fitzgerald pointed out that Twin Falls' Jazz in the Canyon has become a regional event in part because of the wine that is featured during the festival.

The Council briefly discussed changing the ordinance to accommodate the Chamber's request but Councilman Barry Brown ended discussion.

"I move to not allow alcohol in the park period," he said.

The Chamber had requested the permit to set up the beverage garden, which would have been completely enclosed within the park's tennis courts, as a way to raise money to pay for musical acts.

It's going to create a large venue highlighting country music, the North Side's signature event comparable to Jazz in the Canyon, in hopes of drawing a large number of visitors to the city.

Since the Chamber's planning is already underway, the show will go on this year, but it will be the last.

"It was worth a try but you can't get good musicians for free," said Fitzgerald.

Other meeting highlights include the council's approval of changing July's council meetings from the first and third Thursday, to the second and fourth Thursday, to accommodate for the Fourth of July holiday.

AROUND THE VALLEY

Semi-trailer rolls over on I-84, blocking westbound traffic

A rolled trailer blocked Interstate 84 Friday morning for about two hours after a semi drifted off the roadway for unknown reasons, according to a press release from Idaho State Police.

The westbound lane was blocked for an additional hour while crews worked to lift the trailer upright, said ISP Trooper Corey Gates.

The tractor-trailer, driven by Jerry Christensen, 38, of Meridian, crashed at 3:51 a.m. near Jerome in the west lane, according to the press release.

Christensen was cited for inattentive driving, said Gates. "We don't know at this time why he drifted off the roadway."

Christensen attempted to correct his driving but lost control of the trailer, which was carrying food for Nicholas and Co. Inc. Food from the trailer had to be emptied into another truck with a cooling unit, Gates said.

Drugs or alcohol are not believed to be involved, Gates said.

Area police agencies assisted with the crash response, along with the Idaho Transportation Department, Gates said.

Three-term Blaine County Commissioner Sarah Michael resigns

Sarah Michael, 62, a three-term District 3 commissioner and Keetchum-area resident, submitted her resignation from the Blaine County Board of Commissioners earlier this week.

Michael announced Wednesday that she will step down from her position on July 1, leaving the board until Aug. 1 to fill her vacated seat.

Michael said she plans on traveling to various domestic and international locations with her husband, Bob Jonas.

Michael's term runs through Jan. 11, 2011. Her replacement, who must be a Democrat due to a partisan-based election for the position, will serve through that date.

Community Action Partnership to convene annual meeting July 17

The South Central Community Action Partnership will hold its annual meeting July 17 to select its elected low-income representatives and selected private sector representatives to the Board of Directors for the three regions of south-central Idaho.

Those three regions consist of Twin Falls County, Minidoka and Cassia counties and Lincoln, Gooding, Jerome, Blaine and Camas counties. The agency's mission is "to provide a wide range of services in an effort to help individuals and families build bridges toward self-sufficiency."

The board of directors represents three groups in the community: the public sector (county commissioners), the private sector (civic groups, church, business, etc.) and the low-income sector, representing the needs of low-income people in the community.

The low-income representative does not necessarily have to be low-income; however, they must be aware of the problems affecting low-income families, currently working with low-income families and be willing to speak up for their needs.

Applications for the opportunity to participate in the Low-Income Board representative election may be obtained at 550 Washington St. S. in Twin Falls; 314 E. Fifth St. in Burley and 300 N. Lincoln in Jerome. Courts-house basement or by calling 733-9551 for more information.

Applications and a letter of interest must be returned by June 25.

Low-income participants are encouraged to vote for the representative of choice to serve their interests on the board of directors from 8 a.m. to 4 p.m. July 1 at the above locations.

Twin Falls Police award two local veterans for coming to officer's aid

On June 4, Twin Falls Police Chief James R. Munn Jr. presented two local citizens with the Twin Falls Police Department's Chief's Recognition Award. The award is presented to citizens who have provided assistance to officers during a call. In this case, the award was presented to two local veterans who helped Officer Hutchison during a medical emergency.

The awards were presented to Roger Harner and Leland McFelly in acknowledgment of the medical assistance they provided to Officer Jerry Hutchison after he was injured while chasing a wanted subject on foot earlier this year. On July 22, both Harner and McFelly observed Officer Hutchison chasing the wanted person in the 300 block of Pierce Street. After they witnessed Hutchison collapse, they rushed to his side without concern for their own welfare. While other officers continued pursuing the subject, they stayed with Officer Hutchison and provided medical care until he was transported to the hospital by paramedics. The compassion they displayed during this incident is highly commendable and is a testament to their character.

Mini-Cassia veterans urged to lend a hand

Veterans from all services and grades of service are needed to participate in color guards, military funeral rites, parades and the various military organizations in Mini-Cassia.

Each organization has its own membership criteria, but the Mini-Cassia veterans organization is open to all veterans at no cost. The organization provides support for the community and fellow veterans. # Yacht dweller casts off life's cares in California

By William Lobdell
Los Angeles Times

"My spirituality has set me free and turned me on to the bondages that the world places on us. I'm having a ball."

— Dave Dixon

Dave Dixon aboard his 37-foot yacht. "Time, not money, is the real commodity in life," Dixon says. "And I've got more time on my hands than anyone I know."

NEWPORT BEACH, Calif. — Eight years ago, Dave Dixon set some lofty goals, especially for an unemployed, twice-divorced middle-aged man with no savings.

He wanted to live on the water in Newport Beach. He didn't care to work too much. And he aspired to play golf and tennis several times a week.

Today, Dixon, 60, is living his dream, albeit with some compromises.

He lives aboard a beat-up 37-foot mahogany yacht he bought on a credit card for $10,000. Lacking a permanent mooring, he often anchors in the open sea off Corona del Mar, and for shelter he uses the Orange County Harbor Patrol's guest facilities. To get around on land, Dixon owns a battered car with more than 300,000 miles on it.

Yet he works only about 15 hours a week, singing at private parties and two Orange County restaurants to cover his $565 in monthly expenses (not including food). He gets out on the tennis court or links almost every day, except to white down his golf handicap to seven and his weight by 40 pounds. And he is rocked to sleep each night by the rhythm of the Pacific Ocean, surrounded by multimillion-dollar views of the bay.

All in all, he considers himself one of the richest residents of this pricey beach town.

"Time, not money, is the real commodity in life," said

Dixon. "And I've got more time on my hands than anyone I know."

It took several careers, two divorces and plenty of prayer and reflection before Dixon settled on this lifestyle, one that he says is divinely inspired. The ordained pastor sees himself living out God's message that faith and people, not possessions, are what is of true value.

"My spirituality has set me free and turned me on to the bondages that the world places on us," said Dixon, a tall man with a silver beard and gray hair. "I'm having a ball."

Newport Beach held the heart of Orange County conservatism, Dixon has picked a tough place to spread the message that "whatever we own actually owns us."

But in Corona, Dixon earned a music degree with a minor in theology from Azusa Pacific University in 1971 and tried to make a career in gospel music. But with a wife and two boys to support, he started working for Earl Scheib Paint & Body. He eventually started his own auto body shop, which he operated for more than 20 years.

In his off-hours, he kept working on his music, performing as a country artist during amateur nights in Hollywood and volunteering his talents to churches.

In 1995, Dixon said, he took a leap of faith, embarking on a quixotic quest to help developing countries prosper that involved an Indonesian princess and millions of dollars in promised funding that never materialized. Dixon said he spent five years fighting government red tape and greedy politicians before calling it quits.

"I was relieved of the burden of trying to save the world single-handedly," he said.

At 52, Dixon returned to Southern California virtually penniless, having spent $300,000 of his family's money on his ill-fated venture. He decided God wanted him to learn firsthand about servitude, so he took a waiter's job at Regatta Cafe in Newport Beach. The restaurant let him sing between courses, and his rich baritone voice, eclectic repertoire (including opera and pop) and affable personality brought in a new stream of tips.

Dixon said he came across two statistics that changed his life. First, he read that 21-year-olds have an easier time coming up with $1,000 cash than 65-year-olds. And, second, he learned — erroneously — that the average American receives just 15 monthly Social Security retirement checks before death (actually, with retirement at 66, the average is about 18 years of checks). The statistics motivated Dixon to forget waiting until retirement to enjoy life. He gave away his property until his worldly goods fit into his Volvo station wagon.

"My possessions made me work harder and stole my time," Dixon said.

In 2002, he discovered that he could combine his love for the water with his need for cheap housing by buying a boat and living on it.

Dixon rented dock space for several years, but when the rent doubled, he cast off and became a guest boater in Newport Harbor where he could stay 15 days at a mooring and another five days at anchor. For the remaining 10 days, he anchors in the ocean — unproctored from inclement weather. During one strong winter storm, his anchor dragged along the ocean floor until his boat crashed into another yacht.

There are other hardships to Dixon's minimalist life. Having no permanent mooring means he needs to move three times a month. Recently, Harbor Patrol deputies padlocked his boat because he didn't pay his rent on time. The problem has been cleared up.

Onboard, he's got a limited amount of water, electricity and waste storage. The salt water ensures that the yacht's hardware and wood need constant repair. And every trip off his yacht requires a short voyage in a rubber dingy. Dixon said he can't afford health insurance, instead relying on God's healing powers, a physician friend and, once, government help for the indigent when kidney stones put him in the hospital.

But life on the water can be magical, with its views, fresh air and brown pelicans gliding by. Dixon often invites friends and strangers aboard his yacht, serving meals, entertaining and occasionally converting someone to Christianity.

Vicky and Ed Berg of Irvine-based hired Dixon for private parties and, like other customers, have been invited on the singer's boat. "Everybody loves him, and he's doing what he loves," Vicky Berg said. "He's living the dream."

White House asserts executive privilege in EPA dispute

By Erica Werner
Associated Press writer

WASHINGTON — President Bush asserted executive privilege Friday to withhold documents from a congressional investigation into whether he pressured the Environmental Protection Agency to weaken decisions against smog and greenhouse gases.

White House officials notified a House committee of the rare assertion about 15 minutes before the committee was to vote on holding the head of the EPA and a White House budget official in contempt of Congress for not providing the documents.

The committee's chairman, Rep. Henry Waxman, D-Calif., then canceled the vote while expressing skepticism over the privilege claim.

"I have a clear sense that their assertion of this privilege is self-serving and not based on the appropriate legal rules," Waxman said from the dais of the House Oversight and Government Reform Committee hearing room.

"I don't think we've had a situation like this since Richard Nixon was president when the president of the United States may have been involved in acting contrary to law, and the evidence that would determine that question for Congress in exercising oversight is being blocked by an assertion of executive privilege," he said.

Waxman said he wanted to review Attorney General Michael Mukasey's rationale for the executive privilege claim before deciding what to do next. He said he would not abandon his attempts to get what he wants from EPA Administrator Stephen Johnson and Susan Dudley, administrator for information and regulatory affairs at the White House Office of Management and Budget. Executive privilege, while not explicitly mentioned in the Constitution, is grounded in the constitutional doctrine of separation of powers and is sometimes invoked to keep executive branch deliberations private.

Bush has also asserted executive privilege to keep his chief of staff, Josh Bolten, and former White House counsel Harriet Miers from having to provide information to Congress about the firing of a group of U.S. attorneys in what Democrats consider a political purge.

In February the Democratic-led House voted to hold Miers and Bolten in contempt of Congress despite the assertion of executive privilege. When Mukasey refused to refer the appointments to a federal grand jury, the House Judiciary Committee sued in federal court to enforce them, arguing that Bush was making an overly broad use of executive privilege.

Waxman contends the White House intervened with EPA to produce more industry-friendly outcomes in setting new smog standards and denying California and more than a dozen other states permission to cut greenhouse gas emissions from cars and trucks.

EPA and White House officials have turned over thousands of pages of documents in response to Waxman's subpoenas, but Waxman contends they are keeping back some that would clearly reveal President Bush's role. These include documents about Bush's participation in the smog decision, talking points on the smog rule for Johnson to use with Bush, and communications about preparing talking points for Bush to use in discussing the greenhouse gas veto with California Gov. Arnold Schwarzenegger. These documents and others are referenced in a June 19 letter from Mukasey to Bush supporting a claim of executive privilege to block their release.

Catholic charity probed for helping teen get abortion

By DiAnne Walker
Associated Press writer

RICHMOND, Va. — Authorities are investigating whether a Catholic charity violated state and federal law by helping a 16-year-old illegal immigrant who was in the organization's care get an abortion. Workers with Commonwealth Catholic Charities helped the girl travel to and from the procedure in January and signed a consent form for the abortion, Joanne Natrass, the charity's executive director, said in a statement Thursday. She declined further comment.

Four of the Richmond-based charity's workers were fired, according to a letter by David Siegel, head of the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services' refugee resettlement program.

The federal department is looking into the charity's actions and the role played by the United States Conference of Catholic Bishops. The conference receives $7.6 million a year in federal funds to place unaccompanied illegal immigrant children in foster care until they're reunited with relatives, sponsored, or returned to their homeland. The girl is from Guatemala but was living in Virginia when the abortion took place.

Federal law bans the use of federal money to pay for abortions with exceptions for rape, incest or threats to the life of the mother. Virginia law requires parental consent for an abortion for a girl under 18.

Commonwealth Catholic

Charities serves children in the Richmond area as a subcontractor of the bishop's conference. The conference "appears to have been aware of Commonwealth Catholic Charities' actions," Siegel wrote in his April 23 letter to DHS' deputy inspector general, Timothy Menke.

Snow, avalanches delay clearing of Glacier road

KALISPELL, Mont. (AP) — Officials at Glacier National Park said it will be a few weeks until they finish clearing Going-to-the-Sun Road, after a series of avalanches stalled snowplowing efforts.

Two feet of snow fell on the road last week.

That triggered avalanches that buried sections of the road that had already been cleared.

Efforts to clear the popular but precipitous route through the park began in April. About 29 miles of the 50-mile route are open to the public, but the section over Logan Pass remains closed.

Park officials said the entire road may not open until after the Fourth of July. "It's not just the snow," said Jim Foster, the park's deputy chief of facility management. "It's everything else. It's snow, rock, bushes, branches, trees, ice. Those avalanche paths are absolutely packed full of debris."

Last year, the opening of Logan Pass was delayed until July 1 as crews repaired damage to the road from a fall storm.

Glacier spokeswoman Melissa Wilson said visitors should not be deterred.

EU leaders endorse stricter border security rules

By Constant Brasc Associated Press writer

BRUSSELS, Belgium — European Union leaders vint their nations to fingerprint all foreign visitors and take other new steps to keep out illegal immigrants as part of a sweeping security overhaul on Friday.

prompted concerns about privacy and the rights of those seeking refugee status in the EU. But EU leaders suggested security is paramount.

In a declaration Friday, the EU leaders ordered their governments to draft legislation on tougher new border security measures to ease the way toward a more seamless immigration and asylum policy.

The screening would apply to everyone: Those who need a visa to enter EU nations, such as visitors from most African nations, as well as those who do not, such as U.S. citizens.

will enhance safety," said Gary Gordon, an attorney from Lansing, Mich.

that would represent one of the largest security overhauls in the European Union and could cost billions of dollars.

Afghanistan villagers return to grim aftermath of battle against Taliban

By Noor Khan Associated Press writer

MANARA, Afghanistan — Corpses lay stinking in the shade of mulberry trees and in the ruins of a collapsed storehouse. Villagers rushed home to see if their livestock had died in the heat.

An Afghan soldier puts his heavy machine gun on his shoulder in Manara village of the Arghandab district Friday after it was recaptured from Taliban militants in Kandahar province south of Kabul, Afghanistan.

With the battle in Arghandab valley apparently over, grim signs remained Friday of the fight government and NATO troops waged against Taliban militants who had crept within range of Afghanistan's second-largest city.

The grinding violence that has plagued the country for much of the past three decades persisted elsewhere Friday, with suicide attacks and a roadside bomb killing five civilians and two members of the U.S.-led coalition.

The advance of up to 400 militants on Arghandab early this week raised particular alarm, because it is considered a potential springboard for a counter-offensive against the Taliban's capital, U.S. bombs drove the Islamic militia from power in late 2001.

Hundreds of government and NATO troops launched their counter-offensive Wednesday, and two days later the provincial governor escorted reporters through army checkpoints on the 10-mile route from Kandahar to what died in the aftermath.

In the village of Manara, an Associated Press reporter counted 19 bodies, some of their missing limbs. Some were piled in a mud-brick storehouse, which was missing its roof. Others lay prone in an alleyway beside a tree-shaded stream.

Afghan and French soldiers pointed to a 3-foot-deep crater in a nearby field and to broken and scorched trees as evidence of an airstrike. There was no sign of a gunbattle, though residents of other villages reported hearing heavy fire.

NATO spokesman Brig. Gen. Carlos Branco said the fighting was over by early Thursday. He said there had been only small ground skirmishes, though an alliance helicopter had returned fire against gunmen in one incident and warplanes carried out "very limited" airstrikes. The Afghan Defense Ministry said 56 militants were killed in all. Two Afghan troops also died. However, Gov. Asadullah Khalid said Friday that militants were killed in about 10 locations, and that the death toll was over 100.

He said villagers reported some militants spoke the Pashto dialect of tribes from across the border in Pakistan, who are suspected of harboring Afghan insurgents as well as al-Qaida leaders and sending volunteers of their own.

"We want to tell the Taliban, especially the Pakistani Taliban, that if they come again they will get the same treatment," Khalid said.

NATO sent 600 reinforcements to back government troops confronting the militants, who Afghan officials said numbered some 400 and had seized 10 villages.

The alliance has played down the threat to Kandahar amid concern that the Afghan public, already dismayed over a mass Taliban jailbreak in Kandahar last week, would further lose faith in the central government.

Western nations have also urged President Hamid Karzai's administration to get tougher on the corruption and drug trafficking undermining effort to stabilize the country.

Branco said the lone reported civilian casualty and the deployment of 1,100 Afghan troops within 24 hours were "very important" positives from the operation.

"We understand people were frightened after the jailbreak," he said. The big NATO deployment was to "make sure everything would go right."

On Thursday, NATO declared Arghandab safe enough for some 700 families who had fled the fighting to return.

Din Mohammed, a farmer returning to Manara with 12 relatives, said Taliban fighters had been bent on combat.

"They said they wanted to fight the Afghan and foreign forces. I asked them what should I do, but they said they didn't care, so I left everything, my land, my possessions, my animals," he said.

"Last night I heard on the radio that the Taliban were either dead or gone, so we came home," he said.

Investigation halts rebuilding of Iraqi city

By Chelsea J. Carter Associated Press writer

FALLUJAH, Iraq — U.S.-funded reconstruction in a one-time Sunni insurgent stronghold has been suspended because of a corruption probe, including allegations that the mayor and police chief were involved in a multimillion-dollar oil smuggling ring, The Associated Press has learned.

In that mayor, Hikmat al-Ghawi, was under investigation, Marine Lt. Col. Chris Hughes, a spokesman for U.S. forces in Anbar province, said the mayor's current whereabouts were unknown and that it was unclear whether he fled the country.

But a man identifying himself as the mayor told the AP when contacted on al-Ghawi's mobile phone that he was still in Fallujah, still in his job as the mayor.

"There is a committee that it is investigating the case of stealing oil and its work has not finished yet," he said Thursday.

Among the reconstruction projects that have been suspended are repairs to the town's dilapidated infrastructure, including street repairs, sewerage upgrade and school construction.

U.S. military officials said reconstruction projects in Fallujah would remain on hold during the investigation, which Iraqis said was being conducted by the Ministry of Interior.

"Since the mayor and the chief of police are under investigation for corruption, we have stopped all reconstruction efforts in Fallujah until the investigation is resolved," said Mike Isho, the Arabic public affairs officer for Multi-National Forces-West.

located in Anbar province 85 miles west of Baghdad.

Although the U.S. has been trying to pursue reconstruction projects in Iraq since the early months of the war, the effort has taken on greater urgency since Gen. David Petraeus assumed command of the U.S. mission in late 2006.

New data found on N. Korea's nuclear capacity

By Glenn Kessler The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — The United States in recent weeks has obtained new intelligence — fresh traces of highly enriched uranium discovered among 18,000 pages of North Korean documents — that are raising new questions about whether Pyongyang pursued an alternative route to producing a nuclear weapon, according to sources familiar with the intelligence findings.

Officials at the State Department and with the director of national intelligence declined to comment on the new information, but sources said Secretary of State Condoleezza Rice made an allude reference to it in a speech on North Korea policy to the Heritage Foundation on Wednesday.

troubled by additional information about North Korea uranium-enrichment capability," Rice said. "And this information has reaffirmed skepticism about dealing with North Korea."

The new intelligence arrived at an awkward moment for the Bush administration. North Korea next week plans to submit its long-awaited declaration of its nuclear program, which is expected to disclose that its nuclear reactor at Yongbyon produced about 37 kilograms of plutonium.

Pyongyang has insisted that it had no uranium-enrichment program, even taking an American diplomat in 2007 to a missile factory using the tubes and allowing him to bring home samples in his suitcase.

Just a couple pieces left to complete CSI baseball puzzle

By David Bashore
Staff writer

The recruiting circus never truly stops. After picking up a handful of solid signings before the 2008 baseball season even began, the College of Southern Idaho is just now pitching recruits away from rounding out the roster for the 2009 edition of Golden Eagles baseball, head coach Boomer Walker said. That status is thanks to the recruitment of 14 players from this season's squad and the addition of a further five recruits.

As previously reported, Tyler Gilder and Tyler Barrett signed National Letters of Intent to return to CSI. Those two will be joined by 10 players who saw action last season — Judd Jensen, Victor Spencer, Garrett Wolff, Tyler Chism, Sam Armstrong, Tyler Curtis, Tony Hunt, Andy Fox, Cameron Cushing and Nate Carlson. Medical redshirt Trent Johnson and LDS mission returnee Alex Hancock will also be on the 2009 roster.

Add Canadian shortstop prospect Dale Anderson, Twin Falls High pitcher and third baseman Casey Jerome, Pocatello pitcher Casey Lish, Lake City righty Zach Clanton and Bakersfield, Calif., speedster Ryan Lay to the mix and you get a recruiting class that Walker believes is "pretty good."

"I think we're going to be able to get back to what won us a lot of games two or three years ago, and that's stealing bases, bunting, and getting good pitching," Walker said. "We were pretty limited athletically last year and that's something we needed to improve on. I think we've addressed both areas pretty well."

Lay's Stockdale High School team won the Central Section championship — the California equivalent of a state title — his senior year, during which the outfielder hit .459 and stole 21 bases.

Clanton won a state championship at Lake City his junior season, and was on the Class 5A runner-up this year. Jerome was on the fourth-place Twin Falls team this season. What that means for Walker and Co., is that CSI is bringing more proven winners into the program, and talented ones at that.

"Talent is always more important than experience in my opinion ... We have some quality individuals as people coming in that can help our club," Walker said. "It's huge to have guys who win because they're used to winning, and the kids who have the attitude that they're used to winning find a way to win in the big situations."

"We have kids from Taylorsville (Utah) that are used to winning and these guys are used to winning too." CSI did lose one recruit, however, but Walker said that Canadian pitcher Danny Britton-Foster's situation was known to be tenuous beforehand and harbored no ill will when he opted for the University of British Columbia after going unrecalled in the pro draft.

"Danny's a super smart kid, and we kind of knew that if he was going to get drafted, he was going to come here and if he didn't, then he was going to go to a four-year school for the academics," Walker said.

Twin Falls' Game 2 struggles continue in DH against Poky

Staff report

What do the Twin Falls Class A Cowboys have in common with gymnasts?

Both excel at splits.

As has been a pattern all season, the Cowboys won the first of a doubleheader on Friday, topping visiting Pocatello 8-5 at Bill Ingram Field. But as they have done all summer, the Cowboys came out flat in Game 2, falling 13-3.

"Game 1 we're coming out and playing well," said Twin Falls coach Devin Kunz. "But in Game 2 ..."

Friday's evidence: Six errors in the nightcap. Those miscues, coupled with 15 hits by Pocatello, doomed Twin Falls (12-4, 8-4 Area C) to yet another split.

Cy Sneed struck out seven and 6 1-3 innings of Game 1, before running out of gas in the hot sun. The Cowboys constructed for 11 hits, including Jared Jordan's two doubles as part of a 3-for-4 effort, Tyler Wolters finished 2-for-3 and Cody McBride 2-for-4, while Jayson Welker had a double.

While Scott Speer fanned five batters in his four Game 2 innings, the defense behind him struggled from the get-go.

"Speer pitched well, but we never gave him a chance," said Kunz.

The Cowboys, who visit Shelley for a 3 p.m., doubleheader on Monday, know they need to shake off their Game 2 struggles if they want to make a run in the postseason. Putting consecutive strong games together will be a must.

"They need to find a little bit within themselves," Kunz said of his players. "Today I asked them to think about it. In Game 1s, I want us to do the exact same things. But in Game 2, I asked each of them to just bring a little bit more."

Twin Falls Cowboy pitcher Scott Speer burts the ball during American Legion play against the Pocatello Rebels Friday afternoon at Bill Ingram field in Twin Falls.

Lopes hired as assistant by Vandals

The Associated Press

MOSCOW — Former Fresno State basketball coach Ray Lopes, who lost his job because of recruiting violations, has been hired as an assistant basketball coach at Idaho.

Lopes spent the past two years as associate head coach of the minor league Idaho Stampede in Boise. The team finished 36-14 last season on its way to the 2007-08 NBA D League Championship.

"I can't express how excited I am for Ray Lopes to be joining our Vandals family," Idaho coach Don Verlin said. "His resume and experience speak for themselves."

Lopes led Fresno State to the Western Athletic Conference regular-season title in 2003. He was 50-37 in three seasons at Fresno State, but resigned in 2005 because of NCAA rules violations in the recruiting process.

"We are well aware of Ray's past and have vetted it thoroughly with both Ray and the NCAA," athletic director Rob Spear said. "Ray has acknowledged his past mistakes and is ready to move forward. He has served his penalty and is clear of any further NCAA sanctions."

Prior to Fresno State, Lopes spent eight seasons as an assistant coach at Oklahoma under Kelvin Sampson.

Lopes also served as an assistant coach under Sampson for one season at Washington State, where he helped the Cougars to a 20-11 record and a berth in the NCAA Tournament.

"It's an very grateful and appreciative to both coach Verlin and Dr. Spear for providing me this opportunity to get back into the college game and to join the Vandals family," Lopes said. "I am excited to join coach Verlin's staff and look forward to being a part of a very bright future in Idaho basketball. This is a great opportunity for me and my family."

Three from CSI advance to short go at nationals

Wendell's Webb also qualifies for today's action

Staff report

Rodeo drama was at its highest on Friday night, as the final session of the third and final preliminary go-round at the Collegiate National Finals Rodeo in Casper, Wyo., came to a close.

The College of Southern Idaho qualified three participants for today's short go, and those three aren't the only locals who made it.

Drew Hummel had a nervous wait, but he's moving on to the short go after finishing 14th in the tie-down roping average over the three goes.

Hummel needed just one of three cowboys with the opportunity to pass him to fall or fall behind him, and two did so to qualify Hummel on Friday night after he completed his third go Thursday.

Walla Walla Community College tie-down roper Cody Rogers of Rupert was injured and was given a "turn-out" for his third go — a turn out is when the calf is released from the chute and allowed to run without a rider due to injury. He finished 25th in the final standings.

Rogers' teammates, Rob Webb of Wendell and his team roping partner Bo Patzke, will head to the short go as owners of the team-roping lead.

Italy Sheehan caught a major break when only two riders passed her mark in barrel racing, meaning that she too will participate in the today's final go-round. Jack Smith enters the final round tied for seventh in breakaway roping — she was one of five riders to surpass CSI teammate Lancey England, who was sitting in the final short-go position prior to the final session. England finished 17th, ending her action at nationals.

South Plains (Texas) College cowgirl Cassie Vierstra of Twin Falls finished 24th in goat tying.

Has Schilling thrown his last pitch?

Shoulder surgery could end pitcher's MLB career

By Howard Ulman
Associated Press writer

BOSTON — Even if he never pitches again, Curt Schilling has left his mark on the Boston Red Sox by helping them win two World Series titles. And that's a distinct possibility after the club faces shoulder surgery.

The 41-year-old right-hander, one of the best postseason pitchers in baseball history, will have the season-ending operation Monday after the rehabilitation program preferred by the club didn't work.

"Coming back from this surgery at 31 will be an enormous challenge, at 41 more so," Schilling wrote on his blog, 38pitches.com on Friday. "But, if that is an option at least I'll be able to make that decision with all the cards on the table, and it will end on terms I choose. I won't come back throwing 85 with so-so camp. If there is not an option to come back and be good, I won't."

Schilling's bullpen session last Friday did not go well. He was examined Monday by his personal physician, Dr. Craig Morgan, who had recommended surgery during spring training. The Red Sox insisted on a more conservative approach of rehabilitation.

Boston Red Sox pitcher Curt Schilling says he's out for the season, and his career may be over. The 41-year-old will have shoulder surgery next week.

The 20-year veteran, who hasn't pitched since last season, announced plans for surgery Friday on WJLB radio. Morgan, who operated on Schilling's right shoulder in 1995 and 1999, told The Associated Press that he would perform the operation in Wilmington, Del., where he is based.

"This could conceivably be a career-ending procedure," Morgan said by cell phone from Naples, Fla. "We're doing this so that Curt Schilling will have a totally functional, pain-free shoulder for the rest of his life."

Morgan estimated recovery time at six-to-eight months.

"I talked to him yesterday a couple of times," general manager Theo Epstein said Friday. "It's realistic about it. He said, 'There's a very good chance that I've thrown my last pitch.'"

"I think he's also prepared to try to work hard this winter, and come back in the second half of the season."

NBA seeks $1.4 million from disgraced referee

NEW YORK — The NBA wants disgraced referee Tim Donaghy to pay the league $1.4 million, including his wages for games on which he bet or provided inside tips to gamblers.

The written demand, filed Thursday in federal court, asks a judge to force Donaghy to pay the sum as restitution in his gambling case.

The Donaghy scandal "has harmed the NBA and caused it to spend vast sums to undo that harm," league lawyers wrote.

In an earlier filing, defense attorney Jeffrey Lauro accused the NBA of trying to extract the money to punish Donaghy for embarrassing the league with allegations of widespread misconduct by referees and employees — including claims that referees rigged games by making bad calls. The league has denied the accusations.

The NBA "provides no support whatsoever for the demand, which appears to be a transparent effort to intimidate Mr. Donaghy," Lauro wrote.

Both sides are expected to argue the issue next week in court in Brooklyn.

Donaghy, 41, pleaded guilty last year to felony charges of taking cash payoffs from gamblers and betting on games himself. He faces up to 33 months in prison at sentencing set for July 14.

Donaghy has admitted betting on about half the games he officiated for three seasons, beginning in 2003. The NBA argues that he consequently owes the league roughly half his wages for that period: $504,719. The league also claims he should pay back an additional $72,593 for the 16 games on which he provided tips to gamblers during the 2006-2007 season.

Finally, Donaghy should foot the bill for the legal fees and other expenses related to an internal "risk review" prompted by the case, the NBA said.

Former Sonics president Walker takes stand

SEATTLE — The SuperSonics said in court Friday that the city of Seattle tried to make it too expensive for them to leave town.

The accusations stemmed from a previously settled document that was admitted Friday as an exhibit in the city's lawsuit against the team. It discussed "locking them into losses" and exposing "the league to embarrassment in a market they like."

Owens Clay Bennett, who bought the team in 2006 for $350 million, is trying to move the Sonics to Oklahoma City, his hometown, saying the team could lose $60 million if forced to stay for the final two years of its lease at KeyArena, the NBA's smallest venue.

The city is asking U.S. District Judge Marsha Pechman to enforce its terms, hoping two more years would be enough time to find a way to keep the Sonics — or at least another NBA team — in town.

Titled "The Sonics Challenge, Why a Poisoned Well Affords a Unique Opportunity," the document was carried by former Sen. Slade Gorton to a meeting at the home of former Sonics president Wally Walker last September. Also present were Microsoft Corp. chief executive Steve Ballmer and former Safeco Corp. CEO Mike McGavick.

The hour-and-a-half meeting and e-mails about it were the focus of questioning when Walker took the witness stand Friday.

"You wanted to make it too expensive to leave?" Sonics lawyer Paul Taylor asked Walker.

"Oh, I think that's true, yes," he answered. "I would have been fine with whatever they took to keep them from moving the team."

Knicks fill out new coaching staff

NEW YORK — The New York Knicks added three assistants to coach Mike D'Antoni's staff Friday, retaining Herb Williams from Isiah Thomas' crew and signing former Stars assistants Phil Weber and Dan D'Antoni.

"We have three top quality assistant coaches that will be great assets as we work toward our goal of bringing winning basketball back to New York," said Donnie Walsh, the Knicks' president of basketball operations. "Phil and Dan enjoyed tremendous success with coach D'Antoni in Phoenix, while Herb has been a great part of our franchise for many years."

WIMBLEDON

Federer, Djokovic may have meeting in semis

WIMBLEDON, England (AP) — Roger Federer may not want to look too far ahead in the Wimbledon draw. Waiting in the semifinals could be the dangerous Novak Djokovic.

Even the first round could be tricky for Federer, who will face a player he's never beaten as he begins his bid for a sixth straight Wimbledon title. He'll open against Dominik Hrbaty, a 29-year-old Slovakian playing in his 45th consecutive major — in the first match on Centre Court on Monday.

In the women's draw Friday, top-seeds Anna Ivanovic and two-time champion Serena Williams are in the same top half. No. 2 Jelena Jankovic and Venus Williams, the defending champion and four-time winner, are in the bottom section.

Hrbaty beat Federer in their only two previous matches in 2000 and 2004, but has slid from No. 12 in the rankings to No. 272 since their last meeting.

If he gets past Hrbaty, Federer could face a third-round match against rising French star Gael Monfils, whom he beat in the French Open semifinals, and either 2002 champion Lleyton Hewitt or Fernando Gonzalez in the fourth. Federer's projected quarterfinal opponent is fifth-seeded David Ferrer. Djokovic, ranked No. 3, beat Federer in the Australian Roger Federer will be the men's top seed at Wimbledon, which begins Monday in England.

Open semifinals to end the Swiss star's winning streak there. Djokovic has the size, power and overall game to challenge Federer's supremacy.

No. 2 Rafael Nadal, who lost to Federer in the past two finals, is in the other half of the draw. He could face two-time runner-up Andy Roddick in the semifinals.

Djokovic believes Federer is vulnerable after his lopsided defeat to Nadal in the French Open final and lack of a Grand Slam title this year. "Some things are changing. I think he's a little bit shaken with that loss and mentally he has been struggling in the last couple of months," Djokovic said this week in London.

Juan Pablo Montoya climbs into his car for practice laps for the NASCAR Sprint Cup Toyota/Save Mart 350 auto race at Infineon Raceway on Friday in Sonoma, Calif.

No pressure on Montoya in return

SONOMA, Calif. (AP) — The pressure was on Juan Pablo Montoya last year when he arrived at Infineon Raceway expected to score his first Cup Series victory.

The road-racing ace delivered, winning when he was able to stretch the gas in his No. 42 Dodge all the way to the finish line. Now he's back, without the target, and a much different attitude.

"There's no pressure at all," Montoya said. "It's a great race to win, but it's sort of like 'been there, done that.' I don't need to win to prove anything."

So Montoya is totally at ease heading into Sunday's race — he has used his time in California to play a round at the exclusive Sonoma Country Club, shop with wife Connie and enjoy local fare with friends his family.

His crew chief, meanwhile, could barely sleep.

Montoya might not be feeling the pressure, but Brian Pattie most definitely was.

"There's a lot of pressure. A ton," Pattie said before practice Friday. "But that's because I want to win a Cup race."

And if there was anywhere that the struggling Chip Ganassi Racing team can do it, it's on a road course.

The team has three road racing veterans running this weekend in Montoya, former IndyCar Series champion Dario Franchitti and former Grand-Am Series champion Scott Pruett. Although Franchitti struggled through his first practice around the 10-turn, 1.999-mile

Kahne wins another pole

SONOMA, Calif. (AP) — Casey Kahne continued his recent hot streak Friday by winning the pole at Infineon Raceway for his best career starting position on a road course.

Kahne was the third driver to make his qualifying attempt and his lap around the twisting track at 92.153 mph was good enough to hold the top spot for the entire session. It was his second pole of the season, and second in three weeks.

It's Kahne's best start at a road course, bettering the second-place qualifying effort he made at Watkins Glen in 2006. His highest start in Sonoma was sixth that same season.

"To get the pole is always very difficult, especially at these tracks," Kahne said. "There's certain guys that seem like they're right there. We've been close here in the past, we've been close here in the past, so I felt I could make that one lap and come close to the pole and today we had a great Dodge and we were able to get it."

"I came in today thinking I had a good shot, but winning a pole at Infineon is tougher than it sounds."

Jimmie Johnson qualified second with a lap at 92.040 and Kurt Busch was third with a lap at 92.005.

course, all three could conceivably challenge for the victory.

But it's Montoya that everyone looks to lead the charge, and Pattie is responsible for giving him a car capable of winning. The two have only been together a month, as Pattie took over the No. 42 crew in late May in the third race chief change this season for Montoya.

Their four races together have been a frustrating cycle of one step forward, one step back with crashes in Charlotte and Pocono, a 12th-place finish at Dover and then a miserable 30th-place showing last week in Michigan.

Despite the results, the duo has finally settled in with each other and are moving forward committed to turning the team around.

"I like who he is, and as long as you know that and accept that, you are fine," Pattie said of the passionate Colombian driver.

Now they've turned their attention to Sonoma, where Pattie brought a brand new car and last year's notes to give Montoya a chance to win. Because he won on fuel mileage strategy, Montoya isn't shy about admitting he didn't have the best car here last year.

It's a sentiment shared in the garage, as some are naming veterans Jeff Gordon (nine career road course wins) and Tony Stewart (six more credible favorites to win Sunday).

"Everyone said what a great job he did last year, but he had a 15th-place car last year and just happen to get better fuel mileage than everybody else," said two-time road course winner Robby Gordon. "I don't even look at him as being a threat as much as I do with Jeff or Tony."

GOLF ROUNDUP

Cink sinks two eagles, grabs Travelers lead

CROMWELL, Conn. — Stewart Cink moved to the top of the Travelers Championship leaderboard Friday, making two long eagle putts in a 6-under-64 that left him a stroke ahead of defending champion Hunter Mahan and two others.

Cink, the 1997 winner at the TPC River Highlands, is seeking his first victory of the season after six top-10 finishes.

"I hope it's just a matter of time," said Cink, who opened with a 66 on Thursday en route to a 10-under-130 total. "I hope it's a matter of about two days."

It didn't look good early at Cink, who began the day at 4-under and promptly bogeyed the first two holes. He got one back with a birdie at the third before knocking in a 26-foot putt for eagle on the par-5 sixth. He bettered that cut by curling in a 49-foot right-to-left eagle putt on the 13th.

Mahan shot a 63, the best round of the day to join Ken Duke and Lucas Glover at 6-under. Duke and Glover shot 66s.

Mahan has been under par in 10 of his last 11 rounds at the TPC River Highlands, where he won last year in a playoff with journeyman Jay Williamson. Mahan tied for

PRESSLE LEADS WEGMANS LPGA ROCHESTER, N.Y.

Morgan Pressel shot a 7-under-65 to take a one-stroke lead over Suzann Pettersen midway through the Wegmans LPGA.

Pressel, the youngest major winner in LPGA Tour history, had a second bogey-free round to break open a leaderboard logjam and get to 10-under 134.

Defending champion Lorena Ochoa shot 70 to drop into a tie for 17th at 2 under.

Annika Sorenstam (72), who is stepping away from the tour at the end of the season, finished her second round by being cut out of weekend play for the first time in 40 events dating to May 2006.

Pettersen, a five-time tour winner last year, chipped in for birdie on No. 9 — her last hole — to match Pressel's 65 and get to 9 under.

Michelle Wie matched her opening-round 71 to get to 2 under.

KITE IN FRONT AT BANK OF AMERICA CHAMPIONSHIP

CONCORD, Mass. — Tom Kite made his course record with a 9-under-63 to take the first-round lead in the Bank of America Championship.

The 57-year-old Kite birdied the first three holes at Nashawutt Country Club and played the front nine in 6-under-30 in the Champions Tour event. Two strokes ahead of Mark McNulty and David Eger, Kite matched Allen Doyle's tournament record set in 2003.

Kite McNulty and defending champion Jay Haas played in the same threesome and had a cumulative score of 20 under.

Judge grants temporary restraining order for Gatlin

The Associated Press

Banned sprinter Justin Gatlin finally won a round in his bid to defend his 100-meter title at the Beijing Olympics. His chances of ultimate success, though, still faced significant, perhaps insurmountable, obstacles.

A Florida federal judge ruled Friday that Gatlin should be allowed to compete at the U.S. Olympic track and field trials, which begin June 27 in Eugene, Ore., U.S. District Judge Lacey A. Collier's temporary restraining order is in effect for 10 days at present. The first two rounds of the 100-meter qualifying are set for June 28. The semifinals and finals are the following day.

Jog Zarzaur, Gatlin's third attorney in his dogged attempts at reinstatement, said his client is "guardedly, cautiously optimistic" but added the judge could change the decision.

A Monday hearing in Pensacola has been set to discuss the order, and Gatlin is expected to attend.

Any U.S. court ruling might not be enforceable, however, because the International Association of Athletics Federations, which oversees the sport, and the International Olympic Committee, are not based in the United States.

More Wyoming cattle may be diseased

State industry threatened with losing brucellosis-free status

By Bob Moen
Associated Press writer

CHIEVENNE, Wyo. — Preliminary tests indicate that 13 more cattle from a western Wyoming herd may be infected with brucellosis, dampening hopes that the disease may be contained to a single herd.

"We still have very high hopes that we'll maintain this to one herd and not lose our free status, but that's probably just a prayer right now if you want the truth," Jim Schwartz, director of the

Wyoming Livestock Board, said Friday.

The state has conducted preliminary blood tests on 327 cattle belonging to a rancher near Daniel in Sublette County, assistant state veterinarian Jim Logan said.

Two cattle from the rancher's separate purebred Angus herd were determined earlier this month to have the disease, which can cause pregnant cows to abort their young.

The remaining 250 or so Angus cattle will be tested next week, Logan said. Once the entire herd is tested, the state will begin testing surrounding herds belonging to other ranchers.

While the state has confirmed the presence of brucellosis, the federal government was still conducting tests to make the confirmation official.

Wyoming is in danger of losing its brucellosis-free status if the disease is found in another herd or if the Daniel rancher declines to slaughter his entire herd.

Schwartz said it's "fairly high," but not alarming to have 15 cattle in the herd test positive for brucellosis.

"It's really a fairly clean herd but we do have more than just the two that were initially found," he said.

He noted that wild elk herds commonly have 30 percent infection rates and some bison herds have had up to 70 percent infection rates.

The cattle from the Daniel area herd have been quarantined.

Schwartz said the latest case of brucellosis infection has ranchers in western Wyoming concerned.

"There's a lot of nervousness," he said. "It's going to have huge implications on our industry."

If the state loses its brucellosis-free status, Wyoming would have to impose costly testing requirements for all cattle in the state that are sold or moved to another state.

Schwartz said the brucellosis issue adds to the frustration of many ranchers already dealing with wolf and grizzly bear issues.

"They kind of question why they stay in business," he said.

Ethanol plant owner files for bankruptcy

HEYBURN — London-based Renova Energy Plc, which has suspended construction on a new ethanol plant in Idaho, says its U.S. subsidiaries have filed for Chapter 11 bankruptcy protection.

The company said Friday in a press release that it has secured $4 million from lenders and that seeking protection from creditors is part of its plan to move forward with financial restructuring.

Renova stopped construction at the plant near Heyburn, in late 2007 after the cost of the project rose to nearly $60 million, up from $45 million. The company also said Friday that it's in talks with interested parties to sell the partially finished facility.

COEUR D'ALENE — The Coeur d'Alene-based Itclca Mining Co. is selling its gold mines in Venezuela for about $25 million, prompted by rising costs at the mines, as well as investors' concerns about President Hugo Chavez's leftist government.

Rusoro Mining of Vancouver, B.C. is buying the properties for $20 million in cash and 4.3 million in shares. The Venezuelan operations accounted for about 5 percent of Itclca's gross profits last year.

Winnebago sales slide 73 percent

DES MOINES, Iowa — Winnebago Industries Inc. said Friday its third quarter profit skidded 73 percent as high gas prices, tighter credit and a soft economy drive motor homes sales lower industrywide.

Company officials say they expect no improvement in the industry for the rest of 2008. The Forest City-based motor home manufacturer earned $3 million, or 10 cents a share, in the three months ended May 31 compared with a profit of $11.3 million, or 35 cents a share, a year ago.

Sales fell almost 40 percent to $139.7 million from $231.7 million a year ago.

Cutting costs and grass

High gasoline prices changing lawn-mowing habits

By James Hannah
Associated Press writer

When Eric King moved from his apartment in Pittsburgh to a single-family home with a lawn, he bought a manual lawn mower instead of the usual gas-powered kind. He figures he's putting money in his pocket and saving trips to the filling station.

"I've got plenty of company. Sales of manual — or push reel — mowers with the cartwheeling blades are on the rise this year. Officials attribute the surge to increased environmental concerns because of emissions from gas-powered mowers, the faltering economy that makes the generally less expensive push reels more attractive, and $4-a-gallon gasoline.

"With the way gas prices are going through the roof and are going to stay there or increase even further, that was the main reason I considered one," said King, 23. "I don't consider myself an environmentalist; I consider myself an economist."

American Lawn Mower Co., a Shelbyville, Ind., manufacturer of manual and electric lawnmowers, says sales are up 60 percent to 70 percent over last year.

"It's unbelievable," said Teri McClain, inside sales administrator. "I think gas prices are playing a part in this."

McClain estimates that about 300,000 push reel mowers are sold annually in the United States. That's about the same number of electric mowers that are sold. Though growing, sales of both still are dwarfed by the roughly 6 million typical gas-powered, walk-behind mowers purchased every year.

Push reel mowers have evolved from these heavy iron beasts of the past into lighter (19 to 34 pounds), easier-to-push models with widths up to 20 inches and cutting heights that can be adjusted quickly. Accessories include grass catchers and sharpening kits.

Prices for push reel mowers usually range from nearly $100 to $250.

A sampling of Web sites show electric mowers selling for about $145 to $430. Walk-behind gasoline-powered mowers usually cost $150 to $400. The non-riding, self-propelled variety can go from $200 to $900.

Clean Air Gardening, a Dallas, Texas, retailer that sells push reel and electric lawn mowers as well as composters, rain barrels and organic fertilizers, said sales are up 27 percent this year, while sales of

Making a difference with jewelry

Twin Falls Jeweler for Children chapter ranks nationally

When Teresa Packard's mother was diagnosed with lung cancer seven years ago, the Twin Falls resident knew she wanted to put her efforts into making a difference.

Unfortunately, Packard, the manager of Samuel's Jewelers in Twin Falls, knew she couldn't do much for her mom, except visit and try to remain positive.

"My mom could understand she had cancer. But kids, they don't understand why they can't go outside and play with the other kids or why they are sick," Packard said. "I wanted to do something where I could make a difference."

A few years ago Packard, at a Samuel's Jewelers function, had the opportunity to hear company President Randy McCullough speak. She was inspired.

That night, this man, who is also on the board of directors for Jewelers for Children, is so busy with everything and as busy as he is, I have no excuses," she said.

Through that connection, she organized the Twin Falls chapter of Jewelers for Children.

Last year it raised $38,000 for the charity which supports the Elizabeth Glaser Pediatric Foundation, Make A Wish Foundation, St. Jude Children's Hospital and Court Appointed Special Advocates, or CASA.

It was the second fundraiser for the chapter. In 2006, it raised $6,800 for the charity.

Cooks take over restaurant Employees of the restaurant formerly known as Toro Viejo, located at 164 Main Ave. North in Twin Falls, bought out the business they were working for and renamed it Janitizo.

The new owners, Jose and Gloria Guzman, named it after a small island in their native state of Michoacan, Mexico.

They recently added a few new items to the menu, but the restaurant still boasts the same great food — and of course the same great cooks.

They'll all dance together

LDS youth prepare for temple cultural celebration

By Ariel Hansen
Staff writer

A hundred or so kids stand in four groups, one in each corner of a roped-off parking lot. The music kicks on, and they're off, skipping as fast as they can toward each other, eventually making two big circles. Their director cuts off the boom box, up go the yellow "pay attention" flags, and the kids get a question: You should be in your circles. Are you there?

No, not really. Their circles are pretty uneven, and the stage-right one doesn't look like the stage-left one. But that's OK.

These kids, along with thousands of others from across Magic Valley, have two months left to perfect their act before they'll perform for visiting dignitaries at the dedication of the Twin Falls temple of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. The Aug. 23 performance will bring together youth from 14 stakes, including a few non-LDS friends who wanted in on the fun.

And despite repetition — they've been practicing every Wednesday evening since late April — the dancing really is fun, say several of the kids from the Twin Falls West stake.

"Just being with everybody, it's kind of a fun atmosphere," said Dan Plant, 13. "I screw up a lot, and we just laugh about it."

He's not the only one to make errors, of course. So when the group gets it right, there's a quick moment of celebration, some hollering of "yeah" and pumping of fists. Then it's back to the dance.

"Getting in the circles is really hard, because it's like playing by ear," Plant said. As is staying on tempo, said Carly Cornia, 16. "It's hard to have both groups on the same beat at the same time."

Each stake is learning a dance that represents the history of the Twin Falls area. An American Indian-style dance will feature dancers from all the stakes, followed by a pioneer dance, one about the settlement of the Oakley Valley, then pieces that represent mining, canal work, the influx of immigrants from across the world, and several about modern Idaho culture. The pieces were chosen by a group of church leaders from each stake.

"They got together and looked at Magic Valley and looked at our roots. How do we bring that to light in dance and song?" said Mark Holmstead, president of the Twin Falls West stake. He looked out over the parking lot and smiled. "The remarkable thing in my mind is that this is happening at 14 different stakes tonight."

The fun of the performance is only one reason the youth, ages 12 to about 18, are participating. This is their opportunity to show the leader of their church a set of dances that reflects their commitment to their faith as well as regional history.

"We're celebrating the Magic Valley and the heritage here and, just, the people, and showing what

See the kids perform

The LDS cultural celebration will be held the day before the Twin Falls temple is dedicated. Although the performing youth and invited guests will be at the Twin Falls County Fairgrounds, the venue is not big enough to host many spectators. The performance, which begins at 7 p.m. Aug. 23, will be simulcast via closed circuit television at Mormon stake centers throughout the region. Contact your nearest stake center for information.

Track the temple

Last week, the Times-News launched a comprehensive Web page about the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints' Twin Falls temple. The site, magicvalley.com/temple, is your source for news, photos and video of the temple; archived stories back to the church's purchase of the property in 2004; and links to construction cams and open house tickets. It will also provide a space for community discussion of the temple on a comment board. These comments will be moderated by the Times-News' Religion editor, Ariel Hansen, who may be reached directly at ariel.hansen@lee.net.

You can also find information about the posters the Times-News has produced to commemorate the temple opening. The poster-sized prints will be available by July 11 on magicvalley.com, at the Times-News' offices and through order forms printed in the Times-News; the posters are $10, plus $4 shipping and handling if mailed. "It shows the amazing people that lived here in this melting pot," Bastow said. He's performing in an Italian dance that specifically honors the individuals who helped build the Irrigation canals; another Twin Falls West stake group is rehearsing a Basque dance in the next parking lot over.

CHURCH NEWS

Both speaks at recovery workshop

The Rev. Leo Booth will be the featured speaker for a lecture and workshop to celebrate hope, healing and health in recovery today in the Continental Room in the convention center at the Sun Valley Inn.

Booth will speak on "My Life Story" from 9 to 11 a.m. He will share what he called "the moment" in his life that awakened him to seek and live a recovery life (he is a recovering alcoholic).

Following a lunch break, Booth will speak on "Spirituality and Recovery" from 1 to 4 p.m. He says spirituality is the healthy relationship between body, mind and emotions, defines spirituality as being a positive and creative human being, and says that spirituality and religion are not the same. He will discuss transformation and healing, the actions to be taken, the boundary issues and utilization of support groups and therapy.

Booth is an internationally known speaker on spirituality, addictions and low self-esteem. He is also a spiritual director for several treatment centers across the country. He writes for recovery newspapers and magazines and has appeared on national television shows such as "Open" and "Good Morning America." His books will be available to buy.

The public is invited. Admission is free, but donations will be accepted. Information: Ed Stegel, 725-2203.

Buhl church shows film

The Buhl United Methodist Church will show the film "The Perfect Stranger" at 10:30 a.m. Sunday. A potluck lunch will follow in the fellowship hall.

"The Perfect Stranger" is based on the bestselling novel, "Dinner with a Perfect Stranger," in which a successful attorney troubled by her imperfect life receives an invitation to "dinner with Jesus Christ." Thinking it's a prank, she shows up to find herself in a whirlwind evening of debate and revelation with the most unforgettable man she would ever meet.

Information: Penny Hodges, 543-6117.

The group Soft Touch will present a Temple fireside at 7 p.m. Sunday at the Burley LDS West State Center. Refreshments will be served; all are welcome. Information: 678-7221.

Bereans host tent meetings in Wendell

The Berean Baptist Church is hosting Gospel Tent Meetings featuring Evangelist Steve Cody from Lenapah, Okla. Special music will be provided by Jeff Gore, an ordained Southern Gospel minister.

Cody has been proclaiming God's word for more than 30 years, primarily in the Southwestern states. He says he loves to minister in rural communities. This is the sixth time he has preached at tent meetings at the Berean Baptist Church. Information: stevecodyministries.com.

Gore is a Texas cowboy who performs cowboy songs and poetry as well as Christian music. He has had some parts in movies and TV and has done some TV commercials. Information: jeffgoreministries.com.

Tent meetings will be held at 7 p.m. Sunday through Wednesday on the church grounds at the corner of Shoshone Street and Second Avenue West in Wendell. Look for the yellow, green and white tent. Dessert and refreshments will be served after each meeting.

Bible study classes will be held at 10 a.m. Sundays.

The church is hosting a Vacation Bible School for children of all ages but with a focus on 5- to 8-year-olds. Classes will be from 10 a.m. to noon Monday through Wednesday. Music, crafts, games, snacks, learning and singing are included.

Cody also will speak at 11 a.m. June 24 at the church, 175 Second Ave. W. in Wendell. A fellowship meal will follow the service.

Liles to perform concert in Jerome

Highly Liles will perform in concert at 7 p.m. Wednesday at the Jerome Free Will Baptist Church.

All are invited to share in the music of this man, who was with the "Florida Boys" for 25 years.

Special offerings will be taken. Information: 324-8143 in the mornings.

Adventists host gospel concert on Thursday

The Twin Falls Seventh-day Adventist Church, 131 Grandview Drive, will host Simply His in a gospel concert straight from the Ozarks at 7 p.m. Thursday.

Simply His blends traditional mountain instruments such as a hammered dulcimer, mountain dulcimer, mandolin, guitar, banjo, fiddle, mandolin, autoharp, upright bass and harmonica with vocal melodies to bring new life to old hymns and a unique sound to their own original Christian music.

Group members are Dan and Donna Mohl of Fair Grove, Mo., and Jerry and Cheryl Jorgenson of Russellville, Mo.

Admission is free, but offerings will be accepted. The public is invited. Information: 733-4202.

Olive Tree hosts garage sale at new building

Children and teen groups at The Olive Tree Ministry

Center will host an indoor garage sale from 8 a.m. to 2 p.m. Friday at its new building, 338 Idaho St. E. in Twin Falls. All proceeds will go to help with the water crisis in western Africa through the Adventist Development and Relief Agency.

When they visited the World Vision Experience at the College of Southern Idaho, shopping youth from The Olive Tree were impressed to do something to help with the crisis.

Six-year-old Tanner Cuellar suggested having a garage sale and selling lemonade. He got a free lemonade stand through Sunkist's charity pledge program and will be selling lemonade throughout the summer.

Leaders call for immigration compassion

PHOENIX (AP) — More than a dozen religious leaders are urging Arizona elected officials and community leaders to rethink their passionate way to debate immigration policy.

The mostly evangelical leaders wrote a letter to the governor, House speaker and Senate president asking them to rethink their rhetoric as they search for a viable approach to the illegal immigration problem.

The discussion "is dividing our community, confusing enforcement procedures and creating an unwelcome spirit for many seeking to make Arizona their home," the leaders said in a letter released Monday. "The debate continues to focus on broad fears and assumptions concerning the complex issue of immigration."

Pastor Gary Kinnaman of the 6,000-member Word of Grace church in Mesa, said faith leaders aren't advocating a specific policy to address illegal immigration. But they do support discussing a path to citizenship for the nation's 12 million illegal immigrants, Kinnaman said.

"No one is illegal in the eyes of God," Kinnaman said. "Regardless of how we stand politically and how we see this issue, there are real people in the crossfire. Sometimes we have to affirm the need for law and order, but by the same token, we've got to do something that's compassionate."

Hispanics are being pulled over for minor traffic violations, families are being separated by deportation and some workers in the country illegally are not getting paid, among other hardships, said Kit Danley, president of Neighborhood Ministries, a west Phoenix nonprofit.

Bartlett Marsom, a spokesman for Republican House Speaker Jim Weiers, said in a statement that "people obeying the laws should have no fear from law enforcement."

Jeanine LeCuyer, a spokeswoman for Democratic Gov. Janet Napolitano, said the religious leaders weren't "too far afield" from the governor on the issue. "We look forward to hearing from them in constructive ways as we go forward," LeCuyer said.

Vatican creates new anti-terror teams

VATICAN CITY (AP) — The Vatican has formed two new anti-terrorism teams that will work with police to prevent attacks, the Holy See's security director said.

The rapid intervention and anti-sabotage groups will be subunits of the Vatican's gendarme corps, said corps director Domenico Gianti. The Vatican also has begun closer collaboration with Interpol, the International Criminal Police Organization, according to a June 7 report in L'Osservatore Romano, the Vatican newspaper.

The Vatican and Pope Benedict XVI have been named as potential terror targets in recent years. An al-Qaida leader recently accused the pope of leading a campaign against Islam.

Although the Vatican has downplayed the threats, it also has strengthened security, adding metal detectors for all visitors to St. Peter's Basilica and attendees at papal events.

The gendarme corps also has been deployed at Vatican territories outside Vatican City, including at Rome's patriarchal basilicas, according to Catholic News Service.

Christians face discrimination around globe

WEST PALM BEACH, Fla. — The dirty little secret in Middle Eastern and African countries is that, while Islamic groups complain loudly, religious persecution falls most heavily on Christians.

Meanwhile, a United Nations agency dominated by Muslim influence passed a resolution in April scolding anyone who speaks ill of religion. The U.N. suppresses freedom of religion, too, says Christians fear religious discrimination.

Arab Christians in the Holy Land, descendants of Arabs present at Pentecost according to the Book of Acts, are a vanishing species. Dan Watterspoon, who has migrated to the West.

The remaining Christians huddle in traditional Christian towns of Nazareth

STEVE GUSHIE

African Christians suffer a different ordeal. Some are persecuted by the church itself for insisting on an inclusive Gospel that will not turn its back on homosexuals. More often, persecution has political motivation.

The Anglican Church in Zimbabwe is currently under siege by the country's ruling party in its effort to hang on to power. If riot police, helmets on, batons swinging, invaded St. Francis Anglican Church in the country's capital last month as the faithful received Holy Communion.

They struck a girl, beat a grandmother and drove the congregation out the doors. Robert Mugabe's mob has locked thousands of Christians out of dozens of churches, according to The New York Times.

Against such a backdrop, the U.N. Human Rights Council tried to muzzle any criticism of Islam. Critics insist that is a reaction to the Danish cartoons mocking Mohammed the Prophet in 2005. Christianity is routinely challenged, mocked or, worse, simply dismissed, but few call for curbing religious speech.

To be sure, non-Christians in Christian countries can suffer discrimination, but no one doubts their the opportunity to choose their religion, worship, vote, if eligible, and participate in the life of the land. Christians lose those privileges routinely in countries around the globe.

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — Sunstone, the self-described magazine of independent Mormon thought, has a new editor.

The board of the Sunstone Education Foundation says

Steven R. Carter will take over as director of publications and editor in August, replacing the late Dan Watterspoon, who is leaving to join the Foundation for Interreligious Diplo-

The foundation board has also named Mary Ellen Robertson as director of outreach and symposia, responsible for the annual Sunstone conferences. She begins the job in June.

Anti-torture banners go up on churches

WASHINGTON (AP) — About 300 houses of worship are displaying anti-torture banners this month in an initiative by the National Religious Campaign Against Torture.

Most of the banners are a stark black-and-white and read, "Torture is Wrong" or "Torture is a Moral Issue." Congregations participating in the monthlong campaign include Methodists, Presbyterians, Jews, Muslims, Episcopalians, Lutherans, Quakers and Roman Catholics.

The anti-torture group is lobbying for a congressional investigation of U.S. treatment of suspects and prisoners since the Sept. 11, 2001, terrorist attacks.

Government lawyers who drew up the legal basis for the Bush administration's use of harsh interrogation methods against terror suspects argued that the president had broad wartime authority that could not be limited by domestic law or international bans on torture.

One government legal memo defined torture, as recognized by U.S. law, as covering "only extreme acts" causing pain similar in intensity to that caused by organ failure or accompanying death. An internal Justice Department investigation is now considering whether such advice was improper.

Catholic bishops condemn embryonic stem cell research

By Rachel Zoll
Associated Press writer

ORLANDO, Fla. — The nation's Roman Catholic bishops issued a document last week warning against what they consider the moral dangers of embryonic stem cell research, saying it treats human beings as commodities and reduces procreation to a manufacturing process.

With elections looming this fall, the bishops said they are not asking Catholics or the public to choose between science and religion. Instead, they are urging people to examine how society should conduct medical research.

Research advocates say that banning scientific use of embryos would halt promising efforts to find treatments for diseases such as cancer and multiple sclerosis. Human embryonic stem cells are created in the first days after conception and give rise to all organs and specialized tissues in the body.

But the bishops said that "no commitment to a hoped-for 'greater good' can erase or diminish the wrong of directly taking innocent human lives here and now."

"As believers who recognize each human life as the gift of an infinitely loving God, we insist that every human being, however small or seemingly insignificant, matters to God," the bishops said.

The document, which church leaders approved in a 191-1 vote, contains no new teachings.

However, bishops said the statement was needed to clear up confusion on Catholic beliefs, especially in an election year when the issue is expected to be the subject of policy debates.

On Thursday, a proposed state constitutional amendment in Colorado that would also deter in-vitro fertilization and stem cell research.

Church opposition to embryonic stem cell research is noted four times in the bishops' election-year guide on public policy issues — "Forming Consciences for Faithful Citizenship."

"An initial decision to destroy so-called 'spare' embryos for this research leads to far broader abuses, including human cloning and new risks to women," said Archbishop Joseph Naumann from Kansas City, Kan., and part of the bishops' Committee on Pro-Life Activities.

Last month, Naumann said that Kansas Gov. Kathleen Sebelius, a Catholic Democrat who supports abortion rights, should stop taking Holy Communion until she changes her stance.

"Certainly, we hope it would be a document that would be taken seriously by all policymakers," Naumann said after the vote.

Bishops adopted the document during the final public session of their midyear meeting.

"They said the church had no objection to use of stem cells from adult tissues and umbilical cord blood. Nor do they oppose other research that 'involves no harm to human beings at any stage of development.'" But they rejected the argument that embryonic stem cell research is harmless because the embryos would be destroyed anyway.

Choir director in Ohio to pray for cheaper gas

TOLEDO, Ohio (AP) — A flocky Twyman would disagree with anyone who thinks consumers don't have a prayer against high gasoline prices.

The choir director from the Washington, D.C., area has come to Toledo with what he calls his "Pray at the Pump Movement." Twyman says politicians have been unable to do anything about rising fuel costs, so it's time to ask God to intervene and lower prices.

He planned to lead prayers Friday at two local service stations, followed by a 12-hour prayer vigil at Toledo First Seventh-day Adventist Church.

Church Pastor Mike Ferrone read about Twyman and invited him to come to town.

Twyman also has led campaigns to nominate Oprah Winfrey for the Nobel Peace Prize and to encourage African Americans to donate bone marrow.

Report: Ohio teacher burned cross on kids' arms

MOUNT VERNON, Ohio (AP) — An outside investigation has found that an Ohio public school teacher taught creationism in his science class and used a device to burn the image of a cross on students' arms.

One family filed a federal lawsuit against Mount Vernon Middle School teacher John Freshwater and the school district last week, saying their child was left with a burn mark for three or four weeks.

The report also says Freshwater was insubordinate in failing to remove a Bible and other religious materials from his classroom.

The findings released Thursday by consulting firm HLT. On Call Inc. were to be discussed Friday at a school board meeting.

A message seeking comment was left for Freshwater's attorney, Roger Weaver.

"The immigrants came together to build the canals. That's the living water, which is the theme."

Although the teens will continue to rehearse for about an hour once a week until mid-August, there will be only two dress rehearsals, said Rich Crowley, a local cultural celebration organizer. That's purposeful, he said, as the performance is supposed to be fun for the kids, rather than overly polished.

"There is a temptation to do that, so we got a directive about a year ago from the headquarters of the church saying, 'Do not think this is going to be a Broadway show.' We want the youth to have a marvelous, memorable, fun, spiritually invigorating experience," he said.

"It's really for the kids to have a memory they'll never forget and connect to the temple."

The kids know this is a once-in-a-lifetime opportunity, to be part of the cultural celebration that precedes a temple dedication. As Bastow said, "Twin Falls only gets a temple once, and we're only this age once."

Olympic flame on visit to Tibet

LHASA, China (AP) — The Olympic flame traveled to Tibet's isolated capital Friday and an official announced that additional sentences have been handed down following anti-government riots that rocked the city three months ago.

The torch relay, which was disrupted during its international stops by anti-China protests — including Beijing's policies in Tibet — was scheduled to kick off in Lhasa at 9 a.m. Saturday (7 p.m. MDT Friday). The 6.8-mile run is scheduled to begin at Norbulingka, the Dalai Lama's former summer palace, and end at the hilltop Potala Palace, the traditional seat of Tibetan rulers, the state-run China Daily newspaper reported. Tight security was expected in light of anti-government rioting on March 14 in Lhasa and subsequent protests throughout Tibetan-inhabited regions of western China.

On Friday, shops were open and people walked around in the center of Lhasa, where banners saying "Go China" and "Go Olympics" were displayed.

Groups of police were visible on virtually every corner and a truckload of riot troops stood watch in the city center.

Police stopped an AP Television News cameraman from shooting street scenes and forced him to erase footage of security arrangements.

At a briefing for reporters, the vice governor of Tibet's Chinese-appointed administration said 12 more people had been sentenced for taking part in the rioting.

Palma Trily gave no details of their offenses or punishments, but said another 1,157 people had been released from detention for minor offenses related to the violent anti-government protests.

NAR AND IAR RELATE REAL FACTS ABOUT REAL ESTATE TO CONSUMERS

by Melissa Gray

reports about the housing market.

Beginning this week, the Idaho Association of REALTORS* (IAR) is teaming up with the National Association of REALTORS* to give Idaho residents the facts about homeownership and information about the local real estate market. Would-be homeowners who are uncertain about their home buying plans can learn more about the options available to them and the long-term benefits of owning a home through a new advertising campaign that will provide current, relevant housing data to help them make an informed decision.

"People don't buy a home in the national real estate market," said Idaho Association of REALTORS* President Willis Stone. "All real estate markets are local, and buyers and sellers who are thinking about making a move should consult with a REALTOR* in their local market to learn about conditions specific to the area. It's also advisable to look beyond the immediate horizon - real estate has proven itself to be a good long-term investment and a safe, secure way to build long-term wealth."

Over the past 30 years, the median price of existing homes has increased an average of more than 6 percent every year, and on average home values nearly double every 10 years, according to historical data from NAR's existing-sales series. A Federal Reserve study has shown that the average homeowner's net worth is 46 times the net worth of the average renter. Despite this and other research, some potential home buyers are being kept on the sidelines as they react to national media

"REALTORS* in Idaho are an integral part of their communities and are committed to helping others achieve their dreams of homeownership," said Stone. "This campaign goes beyond advertising to provide useful real estate research and information directly to consumers to help them make informed decisions about whether or not homeownership is the right choice right now for them."

There is a new Web site, www.HousingMarketFacts.com, which provides more information about the benefits and value of owning a home, identifies current public policy issues of importance to consumers in the real estate transaction and allows visitors to link directly to www.REALTOR.com to find a REALTOR.

realize the value of using a REALTOR to help them buy or sell real estate, and is now educating consumers about the value of housing as a long-term investment.

The National Association of Realtors, "The Voice for Real Estate," is America's largest trade association, representing more than 1.3 million members involved in all aspects of the residential and commercial real estate industries.

NAR's Public Awareness Campaign has helped millions of consumers

THE ACES ON BRIDGE Bobby Wolff

"History teaches us that men and nations behave wisely once they have exhausted all other alternatives."

NORTH AK 975 AJ 6 J 54 K 9

WEST Q 10 8 3 9 5 K J 3 2 10 5 5

SOUTH J 4 2 Q 7 3 A 10 9 A J 7 2

In this deal from last year's Antalya European Open Mixed Teams, many partnerships brought home a game. For example, when North declared three-trump, it was easy for him to win the heart lead cheaply in hand, cash the spade ace, then make the safety play of leading low to the jack. Now all that was at stake was overtricks.

Vulnerable: North-South Dealer: South

The bidding: South West North East 1 NT Pass 1 NT Pass 3 NT Pass 3 NT All pass

Opening lead: Diamond two

BID WITH THE ACES South holds: J 4 2 Q 7 3 A 10 9 A J 7 2

South West North East 1 NT Pass 1 NT Pass 3 NT Pass 3 NT All pass

But when South was declarer in three no-trump on a heart lead, the fate of the contract was up in the air. If South could score the heart queen at trick one, he could take the safety play in spades to ensure the contract. But Sandra Penfold as East hopped up with the heart king at trick one and shifted to a dramatic diamond queen. Now declarer took the third diamond, but did not know who had the jack. So here it was logical to cash the ace and king of spades, trying to keep East off lead — down one.

In four spades, one declarer succeeded by leading to the spade jack immediately. Though it worked, this line might have lost out to a singleton spade queen off-side. (Also, if the spade queen were doubtless all along, with the club finesse failing, you might be very embarrassed.) Ian Herbst and Fulvio Fantoni followed the best technical approach, playing dummy's spade ace and then taking the club finesse. When it held, they could make the spade safety play, the only issue being whether to cash all the top clubs first.

ANSWER: Were you tempted to bid three hearts, or did you settle for the cautious advance to two hearts? Neither action is correct in the modern game. A simple raise could be made with an ace less, or perhaps an even weaker hand. A jump raise is pre-emptive, not invitational. The right action is a cue-bid of two diamonds, suggesting at least a limit raise in hearts.
