Minico flag desecration charge against teacher dismissed

By Cassidy Friedman
Times-News writer

"They never should have filed this case and once they realized what they had done they should have dismissed the case."

— Keith Roark, attorney for Dan Luker

A misdemeanor charge of public desecration of a U.S. flag against former Minico High teacher Dan Luker was dismissed Wednesday — a day before his trial was to begin, Luker's attorney, Keith Roark, said late Wednesday.

charge "based upon the constitutional invalidity of the flag desecration statute," Roark wrote in an e-mail to the Times-News. "The First Amendment is alive and well even in Minidoka County, Idaho!"

Minidoka County Prosecutor Nikki Cannon charged Luker, an English as a Second Language teacher, with throwing a flag on the floor of a Minico High vice principal's office on May 6. He allegedly stomped on it, breaking the wooden staff and ripping it.

Luker later said he was responding to an incident earlier that day in which former gym instructor Clint Stratman took a Mexican flag from a Latino student who had brought it to school to celebrate Cinco de Mayo and put it in a garbage can.

The situation drew national attention to Rupert and the county high school, where the U.S. Supreme Court has ruled that desecrating an American flag is protected as self-expression. Cannon prosecuted Luker under a 1981 state law — a first in Idaho. Hodges, who inherited the issue after Magistrate Rick Boller disqualified himself in July, has not formalized his opinion. Roark said he is expected to do so by Friday. The last-minute dismissal came after Cannon failed to meet a deadline to respond to Roark's Aug. 1 move to have the case dismissed. Hodges had ordered Cannon leaders who are educated and patriotic, said Judy Studebaker, the principal.

To accomplish that, the school emphasizes areas of study such as history, social studies, math and English, along with classes in music and art for youngsters. It begins as soon as students start kindergarten, with reading classes that include historical lessons for youngsters.

"Our kids are going to be learning about history and people and worlds," said Deby Infanger, chairman of the school's board. "It's a broader approach for core knowledge."

Infanger believes that American history is not emphasized enough in traditional public schools, adding that she wants youngsters to be proud of their country and its heritage.

Images adorn the school walls and are a constant reminder of U.S. history, such as portraits of U.S. presidents and a picture of Mount Rushmore. Students wear uniforms, many of them a combination of red, white and blue.

Every Monday will begin with an assembly that includes the pledge of allegiance and the pledge for the Idaho state flag. The school also sings the national anthem and students are recognized for their achievements.

More arsenic headaches ahead

Officials react to study tying diabetes to low levels of arsenic

By Nate Poppino
Times-News writer

It's already well known that high levels of arsenic can cause a range of ailments, including cancer. But a new study published Wednesday in the Journal of the American Medical Association has found a correlation between lower levels of the substance — an average of 7.1 parts per billion, as measured in the human body — and a rise in Type 2 diabetes.

The study only concluded that Type 2 diabetes and low levels of arsenic occur together, meriting more research. But the implications there back up previous studies in animals that showed arsenic could block insulin receptors, said Kai Elgethun, toxicologist for the Idaho Department of Health and Welfare. It's a "breakthrough," he said, that should encourage people to test their water.

"What it says is, testing wells is extremely important," Elgethun said.

But private well owners may be left scratching their heads over what to do with those tests. Plenty of scientists seem to agree that 10 parts per billion, the current federal standard adopted in 2001, could still be dangerous. But consensus on what level is acceptable is hazy to find.

Over-the-counter, but still illegal

Idaho Board of Pharmacy director says Rupert store's sale of Mexican prescription drugs breaks laws

By Andrea Jackson
Times-News writer

Idaho pharmacists said a small Rupert market that sold prescription drugs from Mexico without a prescription this week acted outside the law.

Birth control and antibiotic pills were for sale Monday without prescriptions from under a glass counter at Diaz Campos Market at 507 F St. in Rupert.

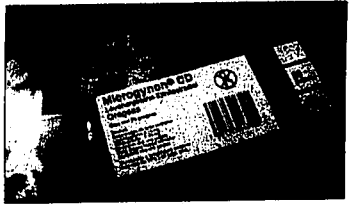

Acting on a tip from a doctor in Rupert, the Times-News bought a box of Tetracycline Oxidetracilina with a Pfizer brand name, for $29.99 on Monday without a prescription. The box is printed in Spanish, states the drugs is from Mexico and requires a doctor's note to buy.

Tetracycline, which the product may or may not contain, is an antibiotic that requires a prescription in the U.S.

Selling a Mexican version of the drug at a non-pharmacy without prescriptions breaks state and federal laws in America, said Idaho Board of Pharmacy

Independents to intervene in Idaho primary lawsuit

By John Miller
Associated Press writer

BOISE — A group of independent voters won a federal judge's permission Wednesday to join a court fight over Idaho's open primary elections.

U.S. District Judge B. Lynn Winnill ruled that lawyers for the American Independent Movement of Idaho and the New York-based Committee for a Unified Independent Party could intervene on behalf of Secretary of State Ben Ysursa, who is defending Idaho's 36-year-old system.

Currently, a voter may choose any party's primary ballot. The state Republican Party has sued Ysursa to limit voting on GOP candidates to registered Republicans, claiming that Democrats and members of other parties who cross party lines skew election results.

Harry Kresky, a lawyer for the independent groups, says voters affiliated with neither the Republican nor Democratic parties will be most negatively affected if the GOP succeeds. Kresky said the case may be the first in which independents have been allowed to join a court fight over primary elections.

He said the Republican

Fire scorches Filer grain elevator

By Eric Larsen
Times-News writer

Members of the Filer Fire Department work on putting out a fire in a Filer, Idaho, grain elevator. Firefighters from the Filer Fire Department and the Magic Valley Fire Department worked to contain the fire. Firefighters from the Filer Fire Department and the Magic Valley Fire Department worked to contain the fire.

Fire licked at a Magic Valley Feed grain elevator in Filer Wednesday night, forcing city and county officials to cordon off a two-block radius as they fought the blaze.

The fire was reported at 7:37 p.m. at the elevator, located at the intersection of North Street and Union Street, said Filer Chief of Police Cliff Johnson. Owners John Gomez and Dave Snelson, both of Buhl, arrived quickly but could only watch as crews battled the blaze.

Johnson said officials from the city's fire and police departments, along with police reserves, acted quickly to quell the blaze.

"Response time was exceptional," Johnson said.

Twin Falls County Sheriff's deputies helped evacuate and maintain a two-block perimeter around the site as a crowd of onlookers grew. An ambulance from St. Luke's Magic Valley Medical Center also responded, Johnson said.

By 9 p.m., the fire was controlled and crews remained on scene to mop up and assess the damage, Johnson said.

He said he expects the state fire marshal will come through today to determine an official cause of the fire.

Academy

In the classrooms, there are differences compared to other schools. Instead of raising their hands and talking while seated, students are expected to "stand and deliver." That means they stand up and talk to ask a question or comment, a practice that is intended to encourage student involvement in the classroom.

"What we're looking for is participation from every student," Infanger said.

That practice began on the first day. In the first-grade class, Heidi Hooper, the teacher, held up bags with letters written on them.

Students were given clues and asked to guess what objects were in the bags that started with the letter. Before venturing a guess, students stood up-to talk before Hooper finally pulled out a plastic bag of corn from a bag labeled "E."

In a classroom with eighth-grade students, teacher Cathi Qualls encouraged the pupils to set an example for the younger classes.

"We're going to be a big part of making this school what it is," she said.

North Valley Academy officials plan to expand the charter school beyond eighth grade.

By next fall, they would like to offer a high school curriculum that would be limited to 24 students for each year of high school.

The Idaho Public Charter School Commission has already given permission for the expansion, though North Valley Academy still has to meet enrollment requirements before adding high school grades.

As for the rest of this school year, the enrollment may not stop at 152 students. Students are still welcome to begin class throughout the year, and every class except for fifth grade still has space, Infanger said.

North Valley awarded portion of federal education grant

By Ben Bobbin
Times-News writer

North Valley Academy, the newest Magic Valley charter school, has been awarded a three-year grant from the U.S. Department of Education.

The federal agency and Idaho State Department of Education on Wednesday announced that new charter schools in Idaho will be receiving a combined total of $3.4 million during the next three years. For North Valley Academy, which opened for class Wednesday in Gooding, the grant will be about $150,000 each year.

The award is part of the agency's Charter School Program Grant, which has given money to charter schools in four other states.

The academy has already received its first year of grant money and used it for computer labs and furniture in classrooms, said Dely Infanger, chairman of the school board.

"We are so grateful," she said. "It would just be impossible to do this without the grant."

The grant will also help North Valley Academy with its plans for expanding into a high school in 2009.

The school plans to use next year's grant money for high school computer lab equipment, classroom furniture and textbooks.

The Idaho Public Charter

School Commission has given approval for North Valley Academy to expand into high school classes next year, provided that at least 60 potential high school students want to attend.

Infanger estimated that between 20 and 45 youngsters are already interested in attending high school, a figure that includes its eighth grade class of 13 students.

"I look at it as a certainty," she said. "Now that we have the money, we just need kids."

Efforts to reach Xavier Charter School officials for grant information were unsuccessful on Wednesday.

Idaho has 31 charter schools with 11,000 students statewide.

to respond by Aug. 15, than set an Aug. 18 deadline.

Cannon, who could not be reached for comment Wednesday, did not respond until Tuesday — well after the deadline.

Luker was suspended from work after the incident and his job at Minico High ended with the conclusion of the school year because of changes in the ESL program.

Luker was since reached a settlement with Mindoka School District that clears his record and allows him to take a teaching job in Dallas that had been stalled because of the pending charges, Roark said.

Brian Duncan, chairman of the school board, confirmed the settlement.

"Luker was back in Rupert this week for trial. Neither he nor Mindoka School District Superintendent Scott Rogers could be reached for comment Wednesday evening.

"They never should have filed this case and once they realized what they had done they should have dismissed the case," Roark said.

"They've lost the case after dragging they were going to take it to the U.S. Supreme Court."

Cannon can still appeal the dismissal to higher courts.

Inmate suicide could be second for prison program

By Andrea Jackson
Times-News writer

The state's Virtual Prison Program is only a year old and the Monday death of inmate Randall McCullough, 37, could be the second suicide involving the initiative outside of Idaho.

Idaho prison officials said Wednesday they're still investigating if McCullough committed suicide at a private contracted facility in Texas — Bill Clayton Detention Center run by the GEO Group Inc., which is holding 371 inmates each at $51 per day under a contract that expires in July 2009.

The Virtual Prison Program started in July 2007, but the state started putting inmates in non-state owned facilities in October 2005, said Idaho Department of Correction Spokesman Jeff Ray.

Six state inmates have committed suicide since July 2006, not including McCullough, Ray said.

At least one involved the Virtual Prison Program at a private facility in Dickens County, Texas, where the state has stopped sending its inmates, said Ray. "The department was not satisfied with the way the Dickens facility was being run and removed its inmates," said Ray. "We did that after the suicide."

The other five suicides included two at the Idaho State Correctional Institution; two at facilities in California and Utah that were working with Idaho under an interstate compact agreement; and one at the Elmore County jail, Ray said.

There are also 344 Idaho inmates at a contracted facility in Oklahoma at a cost of $58 per inmate each day, Ray said.

Some of McCullough's family members said they think Idaho should keep its inmates in the state.

IDOC has said building another with 1,500 beds could cost $191 million — not including staff, Ray said.

Family of Idaho inmates housed in other states can't visit them easily, said McCullough's grandmother, Nadine Smith, of Twin Falls. "He was in trouble, he was in prison, but we missed him and wanted to see him."

McCullough's sister, Laurie Williams, of Lynden, Wash., said she hadn't seen him in three years.

"I don't think (Virtual Prison Program) should exist," Williams said. "Idaho should step up to the plate and bring their prisoners home."

Prisoners are isolated even more when distanced from their families, said Williams. "That's all they have to look forward to. They have nothing else except the people in there ... That's damn lonely."

McCullough's grieving family members said they don't know exactly how he died.

Williams said she doesn't want to disclose the entire contents of a note her brother left until authorities are done with their investigation. Blame isn't going around, she said. "I wanted to thank you for being there for him and he said that he loved us."

McCullough was serving a 10-year minimum sentence for a 2001 robbery conviction out of Twin Falls County. He had a criminal record involving charges of escape, forgery, controlled substance possession, grand theft, burglary, resisting arrest and driving violations, according to court records.

Kimberly mayor's son in motorcycle accident

By Cassidy Friedman
Times-News writer

The Kimberly mayor's son, Mitch Overacre, 19, was "banged up," his passenger, a younger teenage girl suffered apparently worse injuries, after a three-vehicle pile-up Wednesday crushed his Yamaha motorcycle on Addison Avenue East and pinned his passenger to the road.

Overacre's passenger, who police did not identify, lay motionless but conscious for a short period in the center turn lane of Addison Avenue East near the Stinker Station with her right hip pinned under the weight of the motorcycle and a pickup that had struck the vehicle from behind, witnesses said.

Police received the first call for help at 5:27 p.m.

Overacre leaped to his feet. He began pounding on the hood of a hazel Toyota Tundra THD that sat on top of his passenger while he yelled "back up" over and over again, witnesses said.

Despite Overacre's insistence, Harry Knox, 56, the Tundra's driver, was unable to reverse the pickup because a Chevy Astro van driven by Patricia Cruz, 60, of Kimberly, that had rear-ended his pickup blocked the way, witnesses said.

With several people helping, including former police officer Harry Fowble, Overacre was able to lift the front-left tire of the Tundra high enough for the girl to get out from underneath it, witnesses said.

The female passenger suffered an injury on her right hip, Fowble said.

"She could talk," Fowble said. "She was just numb."

Overacre left the scene in the ambulance with his passenger, who was "hurtling everywhere," said Twin Falls Police Officer Gregg Lockwood.

The St. Luke's Magic Valley Medical Center patient care coordinator said no one by the last name of Overacre had checked into the emergency room

Wednesday afternoon. The drivers of the Tundra and Astro declined medical treatment. Twin Falls police shut down traffic to the Addison Avenue East, east of Eastland Drive for about an hour. Witnesses who observed the crash said Overacre, who was headed eastbound in the center turn lane, yielded for a stopped car ahead of him.

Knox managed to stop without hitting the motorcycle. But Cruz, driving an older black and maroon Chevy Astro van behind the Tundra rear-ended the pickup, causing the pickup to crash into the motorcycle and roll over the motorcycle with its left tire.

Firefighters make progress against South Barker

Times-News

Cooler temperatures and decreased winds helped firefighters extend a handline around the South Barker Fire's west side, where it has burned about 839 acres in the Boise

National Forest, the Forest Service reported in a news release Wednesday. The fire is being allowed to burn for management purposes in the Sawtooth National Forest, where it continues to back down into grass and sage with occasional tree fires have not shown any activity during routine monitoring. The fire was caused by lightning and now covers 6,530 acres. Already-established closures are still in effect for several campgrounds, trails and roads.

The Johnson Creek 2 Fire, also being used for the same purpose, has not grown substantially and is still about eight acres. Four other smaller

YMCA hires new CEO in Twin Falls

By Jared S. Hopkins Times-News writer

The YMCA of Twin Falls announced Tuesday it's hired a new executive director.

Gary Ettinger, a 25-year veteran of the organization in the United States, last week began work as the executive director and chief executive officer, according to Mike Preece, president of the board of directors.

"We're really excited," said Preece. "The YMCA of Twin Falls, which has approximately 6,000 members, operates three facilities and manages the city pool through a contract."

Ettinger, 50, who most recently worked in Chattanooga, Tenn., has a strong business background that includes fundraising for the YMCA, and he is strongly schooled in health, wellness and fitness, said Preece.

Preece said both factors played a role in hiring Ettinger.

"He's getting his feet wet and learning the lay of the land," Preece said.

Preece said such fundraising campaigns will be helpful in Twin Falls. He said there's nothing scheduled now, but said any future projects will be to improve the YMCA's offerings.

"There's a lot of potential in this town for growth and membership," he said. He will be formally introduced to the city's pool advisory board today at 4 p.m. The meeting is open to the public and will be at 305 Third Ave. E.

The hiring ends a search to replace Karen Jachnowski Sharpnack, who left in March. Her five-year tenure routinely sparked controversy and she faced criticism from city officials. YMCA members and former employees who accused her of harsh management.

Blaine County schools shut doors to outsiders

By Ben Bokkin Times-News writer

Blaine County School District is making sure that its incoming students are living within the district's boundaries.

Under a new policy, families enrolling students for classes this year are required to show a proof of residency.

The school district has been closed since 1996 to people outside its boundaries, and the only new change is that proof of residency must be shown, said Laurie Kaufman, clerk of the school board.

"People have been real good about it," she said.

In the past, the district has received complaints about enrollment from people outside the district, she said, adding that patrons have appreciated the policy.

The required documents showing an address are two utility bills, proof of utility service, or a lease agreement showing utilities are paid with lease and one other document like an Idaho driver's license, property tax bill, affidavit from a landlord or Idaho tax return.

Kaufman said she did not have any numbers showing how the new policy will affect the district's enrollment.

"That's probably not going to be exactly determined," she said.

AROUND THE VALLEY

Second West Nile case found in Magic Valley

A second probable human case of West Nile Virus has been reported in the Magic Valley, health officials announced Wednesday morning.

Signs of the virus showed in an adult male in his 60s from Jerome County, according to a news release from the South Central Public Health District. The man is recovering and was not hospitalized.

Four out of five people infected with West Nile do not show symptoms. However, people with symptoms may experience fever, headaches, body aches, fatigue, nausea, vomiting, eye pain and sometimes swollen lymph glands or a skin rash. Symptoms typically occur 3 to 14 days after the bite of an infected mosquito. More severe infections may involve the central nervous system.

Health officials continued to urge the public to protect themselves from mosquito bites. Steps include draining any standing water that might produce mosquitoes, wearing long sleeves and pants when outdoors and using insect repellent. Mosquitoes swarm most often at dawn and dusk. Door and window screens should be in good condition to prevent mosquitoes from entering your home.

People experiencing symptoms of West Nile should contact their local health care provider. For more information: www.pdhs.idaho.gov or www.westnile.idaho.gov.

Buhl's Living Liberally has new name

Buhl's Living Liberally group has changed its name to Common Grounds. "This reflects a more open attitude for new ideas and inclusion of everyone for the purpose of educating and finding solutions to our world's problems," said David Blaszkiewicz.

Democrat precinct captain for District IV.

The meetings, which began in June, have also been rescheduled. Common Grounds will now take place from 7 to 9 p.m., the last Thursday of each month at the Cosmic Jolt, located at 120 Broadway Ave. S. in Buhl.

This month, however, the meeting will be held one week earlier, as to not be in conflict with the Twin Falls County Fair.

Individuals, regardless of political affiliation are invited to attend the meeting at 7 tonight at the Cosmic Jolt.

The Twin Falls Drinking Liberally chapter will continue to meet at 7 p.m. every first Wednesday of the month at Pandora's Bakery located at 516 Hansen St. S.

Work release for crew boss of fatal Washington fire

By Nicholas K. Geranios Associated Press writer

SPOKANE, Wash. — A fire crew supervisor who admitted lying to investigators about the deaths of four wildland firefighters during a central Washington blaze in 2001 was sentenced to three months of work release Wednesday.

Hilreese Daniels, 47, headed a team of wildland firefighters sent in to mop up the Thirty-mile Fire, which had burned campfire in the Okanogan National Forest. The forest fire unexpectedly exploded on July 10, 2001, trapping 14 firefighters and two hikers in the Chewach River Canyon.

Four firefighters were killed, and although investigators found that U.S. Forest Service fire bosses had broken all 10 of the agency's standard safety rules, including a guideline to pick a safe escape route, only Daniels was charged criminally.

He initially faced involuntary manslaughter allegations, because prosecutors said he failed to order his crew to a safe area as flames approached. But those charges were dropped when he pleaded guilty in April to two misdemeanor counts of lying to investigators about his actions before the deaths.

U.S. District Judge Fred Van Sickle emphasized during the sentencing that Daniels was being punished for the statements, not the deaths.

"I don't think the cause of these sad, tragic deaths was yours," he said.

Police respond to I-84 bomb threat

By Laurie Welch
Times-News writer

A multi-agency bomb threat investigation at 7:20 a.m. involving a commercial truck on I-84 near the junction of the Minidoka-Jerome County line turned up nothing explosive Wednesday.

Idaho State Police Lt. Bob Storm said Idaho State Police,

Minidoka County Sheriff's deputies and the Twin Falls bomb squad were called to the scene to investigate the allegation of an explosive device on a truck carrying food to the country.

"Somebody just reported a false threat," Storm said.

Storm said the prank call originated in Elmore County but no other details are available.

A report on the incident has not been issued, said Storm.

An Idaho State Police dispatch report said the truck belonged to Vince Anderson Trucking of Minnesota but was dispatched from Forest Grove, Ore. The name of the truck driver was not available.

"All of the truck was removed from the interstate and taken to a remote location at 1350

W. 250 S. in Minidoka County, where the bomb squad completed its investigation.

"Otherwise we would have had to close off the interstate," Storm said.

The dispatch report said officers were on scene until 11:51 a.m.

Crash injures Heyburn man

By Laurie Welch
Times-News writer

A one-vehicle rollover early Wednesday morning near the former Emerson Grange sent a Heyburn man to the hospital with serious injuries.

Riley M. Ingram, 21, was driving his 2005 Ford pickup on 400 South when he apparently lost control of the vehicle at 12:26 a.m., according to a report issued by the Minidoka County Sheriff's office.

The report indicated that Ingram was traveling west-bound at 45 mph on 400 South and 900 West when he lost control of his truck.

The sheriff's report said as Ingram lost control of the vehicle he crossed the two-lane county road and left the roadway on the south shoulder. The report said Ingram steered the vehicle back onto the roadway but over-corrected, causing the vehicle to roll over and end.

Extraction units from Heyburn and West End Fire and Rescue were called to the scene to free Ingram from the wreckage.

Alcohol impairment was listed as a possible contributing factor in the crash. The airbag inside the truck was deployed and Ingram was wearing a seat-belt at the time of the sheriff's report.

Ingram was transported to Minidoka Memorial Hospital by ambulance and sustained incapacitating injury. No further updates were available on his condition.

Pills

Executive Director Mark Johnston. It also could pose health risks, said Dr. Cathy Engle, a Twin Falls family practice doctor.

Store owner Bonifacio Diaz Campos said through a Spanish-speaking translator Tuesday that he didn't know it was illegal to sell the drugs. He said he wasn't sure exactly where the drugs came from, but assumed they were flu medication.

Campos said he will not sell the drug anymore at his store, and asked to have a list of products that are prohibited for sale in America.

"The Idaho Board of Pharmacy oversees licensed pharmacies, and wouldn't have jurisdiction over the Rupert store," said Johnston.

"Obviously that's an illegal activity," Johnston said. "It's illegal on many levels. We will contact police."

Dr. Doug Fuchs, pharmacist with Dick's Pharmacy in Twin Falls, inspected the tetracycline purchased by the Times-News from Campos store.

He said pills purchased at Campos store didn't have numbers on them — a standard for prescription medications sold in America. He also said his pharmacy would charge less money than Campos store had for legal American tetracycline with a prescription.

"It has a Pfizer imprint but it may not be a Pfizer product," said Fuchs. "We have no (oral) antibiotics sold over-the-counter in the U.S."

"Taking expired pills can cause liver damage. Antibiotics are prescribed by a doctor in America because of potentially harmful drug interactions and resistance," Engle said.

This is the first time Fuchs, Johnston and Engle said they've heard of a local store selling prescription medication from Mexico without prescriptions in America. Rita Chappelle, spokeswoman for the federal Food and Drug Administration said her agency doesn't know how often pharmaceuticals are smuggled illegally into the country. "Whenever we find it we go after it. The scope of the problem is it's very smug," Lori Haley, spokeswoman for U.S. Immigration and Customs Enforcement also said cases like this are apparently rare. "ICE agents don't have any information on any cases relevant to Idaho like this."

ICE for three years investigated a case of Mexican prescription drug smuggling that ended in an indictment of Alejandro Herrera, 58, in April out of El Paso, Texas. He allegedly smuggled pharmaceutical drugs since 2000 from Mexico to businesses in Detroit and Chicago, according to an ICE press release.

Twin Falls Police and Idaho State Police recently seized about 20 bottles of Mexican alcohol allegedly being sold illegally at two 341 Falls and Buhl. Charges have not been issued and police are still trying to determine exactly how the alcohol got into America, said Twin Falls Police Capt. Matt Hicks.

Final phase of Rupert's Wilson Theater renovation to begin

By Laurie Welch
Times-News writer

Nearly a quarter of a million dollars in grants will finish the second phase of the historic Wilson Building and Theatre renovation project in Rupert and allow work to begin on the final phase in the theater.

Rennaissance Arts Center Inc. Executive Director Chris Jackson said the project will receive $147,000 through a U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development grant and $197,000 through a Save America's Treasures matching grant.

Jackson said Sen. Larry Craig, R-Idaho, promoted the Renaissance Save America's Treasures grant on Capitol Hill and Rep. Mike Simpson, R-Idaho, was instrumental in getting the HUD grant.

The money will be used to put in the brass and glass staircase that leads to the second-floor convention center.

The flation building on the Rupert Square, built in the 1920s, had fallen into disrepair before it was acquired through a land trade by the city of Rupert in 2000. The three-phase restoration project is overseen by the Renaissance board of directors and is being paid for through fundraisers, donations, grants and in-kind labor.

Jackson said $1.3 million has been raised for the project, which is estimated to cost $3 million. Community members have donated about $250,000 in labor. The first phase consisted of restoring the outside of the building and the second phase includes the lobby and upstairs convention center. The board will host an open house in November when the convention center is complete. The third phase will be the renovation of the theater.

Jackson said the second phase is about 90 percent complete now and lacks the staircase and some finishing work.

"The glass and brass staircase has held us up because it's so expensive," Jackson said. Bids so far have placed the cost around $70,000 with labor included.

"It's $25,000 to $35,000 just for the labor," Jackson said.

Jackson said they are looking for additional sources to help with installation at a reduced cost and they hope to get the staircase ordered within the next two to three weeks.

Arsenic

between cost and concern here," said Jim White, a toxicologist with the Washington State Department of Health.

Some states, such as Idaho and Washington, urge well owners to test their wells and to find alternate sources of drinking water if they can. New Jersey takes it one step further, White said, by requiring that the EPA rules for a standard of 5 parts per billion.

The current standard was selected in part because it is technologically feasible, Elgethun said.

"It may not ever be economically feasible for most of rural America to meet (a lower) level," he said.

The whole thing comes down to a numbers game, Elgethun said. A lower level would mean less cancer or other ailments. But it could be hard to measure that effect outside of the laboratory because of all the other various factors that affect such diseases. Maps of arsenic levels and diabetes rates maintained by the federal government don't even line up, according to information from the national Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, and U.S. Geological Survey.

"It's all kind of statistics and voodoo," Elgethun said. "When you get to a certain point, it really is."

"That only contributes to frustrated local officials who have spent the past seven years figuring out how to pay for the EPA increase."

Castledorf officials expect their new water treatment plant to be up and running by Sept. 15, dropping the town's arsenic levels from 22 parts per billion to under the EPA guideline.

Officials looked at what it would mean to get their water down to 5 parts per billion or less. Mayor Rita Ruffing said, "But the company building the system only guaranteed it will get them down to 10 or below, so that's not it."

"At this point, that's the important part," Ruffing said.

Buhl would be far from alone if the EPA lowered the standard again years down the line. Twin Falls City Manager Tom Courtney said he still needed more information before he could comment on the study, though he questioned if it provided enough data to lead to any sort of conclusion. Buhl would like that more work would likely have to be done should Twin Falls have to meet a lower standard.

"If it was down to 7 (parts per billion), that probably wouldn't make much difference," Courtney said. "On the other hand, if it was zero, compliance would be very, very difficult."

At its present level, the EPA limit is still a burden on small communities, as well as subdivisions in the county that seek to tie into city water systems. Ruffing said the town's project alone cost the city $1.7 million. Twin Falls officials considered a $43 million water treatment plant before agreeing to a bond $10 million for a water share at Pristine Springs earlier this year. And Buhl residents passed an $8 million bond for water system improvements in 2006, and selected an $853,000 treatment system in April of this year.

"It's not cheap to put in," Ruffing said of her town's arsenic solution.

"It's extremely unlikely that the study will affect policy any time soon," said Jerri Henry, rule and enforcement lead for the Idaho Department of Environmental Quality. Were it to place more communities across the state out of compliance, they'd be added to Castledorf and the others DEQ is already helping through the process.

"I think what we're looking at is a mixed bag," Henry said of current compliance.

"(But) I think we're making progress."

plan would shut out independent voters who represent nearly a third of the electorate.

"We need to be at the table," Kresky said. "Given what's being sought, the voting bloc that's going to most impacted by that restructuring should be heard."

Winmill agreed to let the independents intervene after hearing less than an hour of arguments. He wants to keep the case moving fast enough to be resolved before the Legislature convenes in January, partly so lawmakers can act on measures that might be affected by the outcome of the case.

The issue has divided the state GOP and was a key factor in June when delegates at the state Republican convention in Sandpoint ousted Chairman Kirk Sullivan, a closed primary opponent for whom some accused of not doing enough to resolve the issue.

"Silence is golden" is what Secretary Yursa instructed me to say," — Deputy Attorney General Michael Gilmore told the judge

Delegates voted 199-192 to recommend preserving the primary open, but the vote was only advisory and the state GOP Central Committee has maintained its preference for a closed primary. Norm Semanko, who replaced Sullivan as chairman, has said he aims to convene talks to seek a compromise.

Semanko couldn't immediately be reached for comment on the ruling — or on progress toward reaching a compromise.

John Eric Sutton, a party lawyer, argued unsuccessfully Wednesday that independents' interests in the case would be adequately represented by Yursa because the secretary of state is legally obligated to look out for all Idaho voters.

Sutton also said that independents should be denied standing in a federal case over the kind of election a private group such as the Idaho Republican Party can hold. The Supreme Court has ruled states can't force political parties to associate with those who don't share their political beliefs. More than two dozen states have closed primary elections.

Winmill, however, ruled that it would be "putting the cart before the horse to pre-judge the interveners' right" when voting rights are at stake.

Yursa's aides would not say whether he supported granting the independents intervenor status.

"Silence is golden" is what Secretary Yursa instructed me to say," Deputy Attorney General Michael Gilmore told the judge.

More sect members could face charges in Texas polygamy case

SAN ANGELO, Texas (AP) — Five men from a polygamous sect raided by Texas authorities in April stand accused of sexually assaulting children, but they're unlikely to be the only ones.

Church documents disclosed as part of a separate child custody case over the last several months identify at least 10 other men as married to girls who were 16 or younger. The girls' fathers and stepfathers blamed the unions and sometimes presided over ceremonies between other young girls and adult men, the documents show.

Jeff Jaffe

In all, about 20 underage girls, a few as young as 12, are identified in the documents as married to jailed sect leader Warren Jeffs or one of his followers.

"Underage marriages were not universal within the Fundamentalist Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, but the marriage ceremonies Jeffs favors carries, photos and family listings show they were not — as the church suggested early on — isolated events either."

"We didn't really have a sense of what was going on (in Utah there. We knew there was a potential for a problem," said Schleicher County Sheriff David Doran, who visited the Yearning For Zion compound in the years before the raid. "The state has that evidence now, or I believe they do."

"Over six days in April, Texas authorities collected more than 400 boxes of documents from the West Texas ranch, rifling through homes, offices and the towering limestone temple for evidence of girls forced into underage marriages and sex."

"Officials from the Department of Public Safety and the Attorney General's Office, which is overseeing the prosecutions, will only say that the investigation continues."

"The Schleicher County grand jury that indicted five FLDS men on sexual assault and a sixth for failing to report abuse is scheduled to meet again Thursday."

"Grand jury proceedings are secret, but documents in the dramatic child custody case, filed over the last several months, show even men who have not been charged with abuse married girls who were 15 or 16 in church ceremonies. Most of the men were in their 20s and 30s."

"Four younger girls, ranging in age from 12 to 14, are shown in marriage certificates, photos and notes as married to 52-year-old Jeffs, who was convicted in Utah as an accomplice to rape for the marriage of a girl to her older cousin."

"I'm praying to become a heavenly comfort wife for you... I feel so close to you," reads one note from a 12-year-old to Jeffs. Church records show she married him three months before she and Jeffs is among five charged last month in Texas with sexual assault, but the first faces charges in Arizona, where he is currently jailed.

Under Texas law, girls younger than 17 generally cannot consent to sex with an adult.

Being married to more than one person or even "purporting" to be married to more than one person is also illegal. Texas investigators early on were working about 50 possible bigamy cases.

Rod Parker, a Utah attorney and spokesman for the church, said he believes the practice of underage marriages was "relatively limited" and continues to believe FLDS members have been unfairly treated by Texas authorities.

He said no marriage ceremonies of any kind have been conducted in the last two years. In June, the church issued a statement saying it would not sanction marriages of anyone who is not of legal age.

Parker said the release of marriage certificates, love notes and photos as part of the child welfare case is designed to provide people against sect members.

Texas child welfare authorities were stung badly when the state Supreme Court ruled it had overreached in moving all 400 children from the ranch into foster care because it only presented evidence of five or six cases of abuse.

Physician says Duncan victim suffered intense pain

By Rebecca Boone Associated Press writer

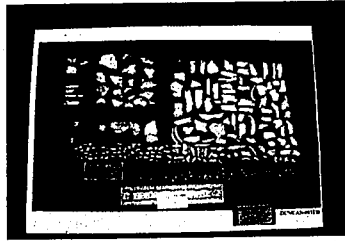

BOISE — A boy who was kidnapped, tortured and shot by Joseph Edward Duncan III likely suffered excruciating pain before his death, a forensic pediatrician told jurors Wednesday.

Dr. Sharon Cooper's testimony in U.S. District Court followed the presentation of a taped interview in which Shasta Greene, 8 at the time, related grim details of Duncan's sexual abuse and slaying of her older brother, Dylan. Greene, who also said she was sexually abused and tortured, told the jury Duncan accidentally shot her brother in the stomach with a shotgun and then blasted him in the head after deciding the boy's life couldn't be saved.

Cooper said the description of the boy's injury — he was eviscerated, his sister said, with his "guts" hanging out — indicated it was "a very potentially salvageable injury."

"We see this on the battlefield fairly often," Cooper told the jury. "They can live for several hours like that."

Cooper also said Duncan may have had enough time to get Dylan's brother to a hospital from the remote western Montana campsite

While in the Army, Cooper was assigned to child abuse cases on military installations in Hawaii and the Pacific Rim before becoming chief of pediatrics at Fort Bragg, N.C. She said she performed a medical assessment of Shasta Greene after her rescue, interviewed her father, Steve Greene, and reviewed interviews of the girl by law enforcement officers.

Duncan pleaded guilty in December to 10 federal counts in the 2005 kidnapping of the Coeur d'Alene-area children and the murder of the boy. A jury must decide whether Duncan should be executed or spend life in prison without parole.

Duncan, acting as his own attorney in the sentencing phase, suggested in cross-examining Cooper that the girl was exaggerating her brother's injury.

"How much in your experience do children tend to elaborate or exaggerate and fill in details — especially after a traumatic experience like that?" Duncan asked.

Children who exaggerate are typically much younger, between 4 and 6, and lack the vocabulary to describe what happened to them, Cooper said.

Duncan asked whether the "guts" mentioned by the girl could have been Ram Noodles the boy had eaten earlier.

Cooper said that was unlikely because chewed-up noodles wouldn't look like intestines. Besides, she told the jury, food would spill out of an abdominal wound only if the stomach also had been pierced.

Later in the morning, FBI Agent Mike Stoke told the jury he found a piece of Dylan Greene's skull at the campsite. Some jurors covered their mouths and looked down as the fragment, contained in a plastic evidence envelope, was displayed in court.

In opening statements last week, U.S. Attorney Tom Moss told the jury that the skull fragment was the only part of the boy's remains that were found at the campsite that was intact enough to yield results in a DNA test.

Jurors also were told by FBI firearms expert John Web that he could not get the shotgun with which the boy was shot to fire accidentally in "drop tests." Web added that the shotgun required five pounds of pressure on the trigger to fire.

The power of being on the same page

Rupert has eight times fewer people than Twin Falls. Its per capita income is one-fourth less, and Minidoka County total sales average about a third of Twin Falls County sales.

So how come Rupert has a downtown that works, and Twin Falls doesn't? By rights, it shouldn't. First Wal-Mart opened its Burley store in 1992 less than 10 miles from Rupert Square, and then downtown Rupert's longtime anchor retailer, Roper's, went out of business in 1997.

But former Minidoka County Prosecutor Charlie Creason and nine other residents organized a grassroots committee to do something about the town's dying economy, and they succeeded beyond their expectations.

Store vacancies plummeted from six in 1997 to one in 2008. Park View Furniture & Appliance doubled its income in 2008 and The Gathering Place, a mall-like shop — was recognized as one of the top 10 quilting shops in the nation.

"The key is getting the right combination of leadership," Creason said. "Ultimately, somebody has to step up and do the job that everyone else just talks about."

The economic ripples of downtown renaissance have extended beyond Rupert Square. Unemployment in Minidoka County, for example, is 53 percent lower than it was four years ago, and at 4.3 percent is comparable with Twin Falls County's jobless rate.

Certainly, there were obstacles along the way. The Rupert Renaissance Initiative hired a consultant who identified 39 buildings as historic, and Rupert Square was added to the National Register of Historic Places. The revitalization of the Wilson Theater, which the city bought for $90,000 in 1998, became its centerpiece.

Some Rupert residents didn't like the new ideas, and challenged the revitalization committee's authority.

Then there was a long-running, bruising dispute about signage on the square.

But by 2003, the payoff was tangible. "I think we all felt that if we could get people together to see what was possible, we could actually do something about it," Creason said. "The real trick was getting people's heads wrapped around the idea of what the place could be."

That still isn't the case in downtown Twin Falls, which since the founding of the downtown Business Improvement District has been riven with disputes over differing visions for the Townsite.

Too much attention has been paid to finding big anchor stores, and too little to the things that actually bring shoppers downtown: cleaning up storefronts, making leases and rents competitive to what retailers pay in strip malls, and recruiting small businesses that thrive in a pedestrian-friendly environment.

The Rupert Square was reclaimed by entrepreneurs risking their own money, not waiting around for somebody else to take the initiative. And it's thriving because it offers products and services that people want, in an environment they enjoy.

But most of all, it's succeeding because there was a Plan — and buy-in by business owners and the city of Rupert.

It's been many years since downtown Twin Falls could say that.

Roosevelt is spinning in his grave

Presidential elections always have their share of foolishness, hypocrisy and, let's say, elasticity when it comes to facts. This is what comes to mind whenever I hear McCain and other Republicans re-entirely invoking the name of Theodore Roosevelt. McCain will tell you outright: "I am a 'tidy' Roosevelt Republican."

BOB HERBERT

Our view: There are many lessons downtown Twin Falls could learn from downtown Rupert.

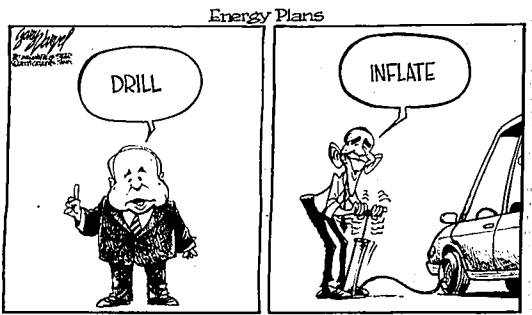

What do you think? We welcome viewpoints from our readers on this and other issues.

That's about as elastic as the facts can get. In June, McCain ("We're gonna drill here! We're gonna drill now!") got a big boost in donations from oil industry executives after he revealed some of them came out strongly in favor of offshore drilling. A Washington Post headline pointedly said: "Industry Gushed Money After Reversal on Drilling."

To put it mildly, that was not very Rooseveltian. Around the same time that the McCain campaign was peddling its oil industry windfall, the historian Douglas Brinkley was poring over letters in which Roosevelt, running for his first full term as president in 1904, was indignantly ordering his campaign to return a $100,000 contribution from the Standard Oil Co.

In a letter to his campaign manager, dated Oct. 26, 1904, Roosevelt said: "I must ask you to direct that the money be returned to them forthwith." As Roosevelt saw it: "We cannot under any circumstances afford to take a contribution which can be even improperly construed as putting us under an improper obligation."

That kind of thinking is long gone, from both parties. Barack Obama, as well as McCain, has taken contributions from oil industry executives. But what is telling about this particular difference between Teddy Roosevelt and John McCain is that it is so illustrative of what Roosevelt was really about, and how fundamentally different that was from what McCain and the latter-day Republican Party is about.

"The truth of the matter is that Roosevelt today would be on the left," said Brinkley, who is writing a biography of the former president titled "The Wilderness Warrior: Theodore Roosevelt and the Crusade for America."

Roosevelt believed passionately in regulating industry and curbing the excesses of the great corporations. He favored the imposition of an inheritance tax and fought his party's increasing tendency to cater to the very wealthy. And, of course, he was a ferocious protector of the environment.

Roosevelt was known as the "trust-buster," but it was in the area of environmental conservation that he really made his mark. Brinkley, in a draft preface to the biography, tells how a number of bird species in the United States were headed for extinction as the 20th century approached, in large part because of the popularity of feathered hats for women.

By 1886, when the Audubon Society was founded, more than 5 million birds a year were being slaughtered to satisfy the millinery trade. The feather boom was especially big in Florida. Egrets, herons — just piles and piles of birds were being destroyed, many of them by men with semiautomatic weapons.

Roosevelt was outraged that what he termed "the despoilers" were threatening to ruin the bird populations along the Florida coasts. Having already championed the preservation of what became Yellowstone National Park, Roosevelt designated Pelican Island, which had a once-thriving bird population off the east central coast of Florida, as the nation's first federal bird reservation.

The move was a tremendous success. Pelican Island became the first unit of the National Wildlife Refuge System of the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service. "By 2008," Brinkley wrote, "when Pelican Island celebrated its centennial, the U.S. National Wildlife Refuge System comprised over 540 wildlife refuges on more than 95 million acres."

We're now in a ridiculous period in which politicians are concerned about appearing too well-spoken and too intellectual — elitist — as if mangling the language while drawing a shot and slurping from a mug of beer were sure signs of fitness for high office.

So it might come as a surprise to some that McCain's macho 'hern happened to have been among the first naturalists at Harvard, an inveterate bird-watcher, and a prolific and sensitive writer.

According to Brinkley: "When writing or lecturing about American birds, Roosevelt often turned downright lyrical, sometimes achieving the level of song."

"The kicker to the story about the contribution from Standard Oil is that despite Roosevelt's repeated orders, it may not have been returned. Roosevelt went to his grave believing that it had been, but Brinkley said a later investigation of the campaign's finances left open the possibility that Roosevelt's orders may not have been followed.

Roosevelt was a complicated fellow. Progressive in much of his politics and intensely concerned about the long-term welfare of the country and its people, he was also a social Darwinist and a conflict-loving imperialist.

What is not in question is that he was a far, far cry from John McCain and today's GOP.

Anaerobic digesters solve 2 problems facing Magic Valley

The Northwest is facing a growing crisis in electrical-generation capacity; its response utilities are forced to resort to expensive generation options. But locally the Magic Valley has a powerful resource whose development will not only provide electricity but improve our communities and environment. That power source is electricity generated by anaerobic digesters.

Several weeks ago, Idaho Power requested an additional 10 percent rate increase in response to record power demands. The two facts are related: for to meet growing demand, Northwest utilities must increasingly rely on natural gas-produced power. But natural gas is expensive, two to three times more expensive than coal-fired energy. We must develop alternative energy resources.

The Magic Valley has the unique potential to generate power from dairy effluent. With more than 900,000 cows living in Magic Valley's counties, the generation potential approaches 90 megawatts, with half that, or 45 megawatts, a reasonable goal.

READER COMMENT
Scott McClure

This is enough electricity to supply 30,000 homes, a significant contribution to our expanding communities. And it's locally grown energy.

As the power is generated, installation of anaerobic digesters will benefit our environment and community quality of life. Digesters convert methane, a potent greenhouse gas, into water and carbon dioxide, compounds much less dangerous to the environment. And by taking waste from the dairies and processing it through digesters, a substantial reduction in odor occurs, making our communities sweeter places to live.

Dairies now see an added benefit by installation of digesters: major reduction in the volume of waste requiring disposal. The volume of solids is reduced to about one-fifth the amount going into the digester, and produce a much rich in nutrients and providing sale and export of the waste as a reasonable option.

If it's such a good deal, why aren't all dairies incorporating this proven technology? Several progressive dairies have installed digesters, but many are constrained by economics. Installing the digester and generation equipment is expensive, and the equipment requires continuous maintenance. Current rate structures paid by utilities to dairies for the electrical power isn't sufficient to cover installation and maintenance costs.

So we have a challenge: How to encourage dairies to construct the digesters without placing an undue burden on them, the utilities or the community. I believe in and call for an immediate negotiation session, brokered by the state government to reconcile interests of key parties and create a comprehensive path forward.

But, first the utilities need to acknowledge their need for new power, and recognize that obtaining it from a reliable, uninterrupted source enhances their system.

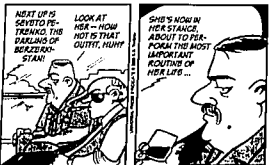

Second, the dairies need to concede that disposing of manure in the current manner is a major expense and health concern. The elimination of the quantity of waste would not only cut expenses but also remove a major impediment to future expansion. And finally, the communities need to encourage installation of the digesters to reduce odor and greenhouse gases. Modification of property setbacks, as well as property tax encumbrances for dairies with digesters would send a significant message: we are not against dairies, but want to ensure our communities are pleasant, healthful places to live and raise our children.

I am convinced the outcome will be a win-win for electrical utilities and our communities and ensure the viability of Magic Valley's dairy industry for years to come.

Here's what Idaho newspapers are saying about ...

... Randy MacMillan

Post Register, Idaho Falls

JEERs to Clear Springs Food Vice President Randy MacMillan and the surface water coalition. They've been pressing state legislators to intervene in the ongoing administrative and judicial review of water rights ...

MacMillan

At issue is the fight between surface irrigators and those who draw water from a well. Surface irrigators have senior water rights and they want the state to curtail the groundwater pumps.

But a series of decisions— including one from the Idaho Supreme Court — says Idaho's water resources director has the authority to balance the principle of first-in-time, first-in-right with the optimal development of the resource.

That was the view of former DWR Director Karl Dixon — who lost his job when Gov. C.L. "Butch" Otter got his.

Acting in an administrative capacity, former Idaho Supreme Court Justice Gerald Schroeder reached the same conclusion — and when Tullih reaffirmed Schroeder, MacMillan cried foul.

By asking legislators to convene a performance evaluation of the water resources department, MacMillan tried to use the Legislature as a way to hammer the department.

(Last week) the National Resources Interim Committee declined MacMillan's request.

That leaves the matter where it belongs — with a public official looking at the full picture and not a special interest group.

... Castle Rock lessons

Idaho Mountain Express, Ketchum

It's now just a year since the most momentous event in the Wood River Valley's modern history, the start of the Castle Rock fire, which began on Aug. 19, 2007, swept through 48,520 acres of backcountry woodlands and held valley residents and visitors spellbound as 1,700 firefighters valiantly staved off flames foot-by-foot from reaching homes.

What emerged from those 20 days of suspenseful drama were human qualities that should be remembered and memorialized as a testament to the spirit of the valley.

Thousands of people stepped forward to volunteer with time, donated food for firefighters and housing for families evacuated from danger areas, and manned information desks to provide neighbors with updated information on the fire's movement ...

The community pulled together with extraordinary energy and selflessness. And it was a time to properly reward heroes of Castle Rock — the firefighters, law enforcement and emergency medical units — with unrestricted praise and admiration.

This is a powerful force that can be triggered in other times of community need, whether weathering economic bad times or joining together on civic issues to better the lives of families or protecting the quality of life that is our main asset.

No future event is apt to be as devastating or dramatic as the Castle Rock blaze. But it demonstrated without any prodding the character and mettle of the valley when tough times require courage and teamwork.

... shameful treatment

... (National Guardsman Gregory) Jentz, of Lewiston, is not the only returnee to experience neglect at the hands of the same government that sent him into harm's way. But his case ...

provides a discouraging picture of the callousness returning soldiers can experience.

Jentz experienced several explosions while stationed in Tikrit, including one that sent him through the air, but says he was denied treatment for stress during his 2005 demobilization at Fort Lewis in Tacoma. Instead, his wife says, he was advised not to go to Wal-Mart on weekends for a while.

A year later, he was diagnosed with post-traumatic stress disorder, by a private therapist.

In 2007, Jentz was finally sent to Madigan Army Medical Center at Fort Lewis. There, he was declared unfit for duty, but again received less than impressive help.

"I have nothing good to say about Madigan," Jentz says. "I was mistreated horribly. I was talked down to. My doctor made fun of my combat experience."

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Bring back balance to state government

Idaho must be caught in a time-war. We must be living in either the former Soviet Union or under the 1930s machine politics of Kansas City's Tom "Boss" Penningast. Apparently, in Idaho, the powerful can push around public servants. Newly appointed state Sen. Bert Brackett can now add another mounted head to his trophy room, that of former Idaho Department of Fish and Game regional supervisor Dave Parrish. It seems that Mr. Parrish has been a bit of an irritation to Sen. Brackett for some time — reporting that the sage grouse had a crummy hatch a couple of years ago (Mr. Brackett was mistakenly convinced Mr. Parrish wanted to see the bird listed as an endangered species), for not wanting to graze public rangeland to dust to prevent range fires, and finally, suggesting that a wind project could have negative effects on wildlife. Such nerve!

Let's review some of the more stellar points in Sen. Brackett's career. He was paid approximately $1 million for grazing rights when the Saylor Creek Bombing range was so graciously bestowed upon southern Idaho, and then allowed to graze his cattle on most of the land anyway. He was appointed to the state House by Gov. "Hollywood" Dirk Kempthorne and now newly appointed to the state Senate by Gov. "Coubouy" Butch Otter to serve out the term of the late Tom Gannon. Perhaps we should refer to Sen. Brackett as "Commissioner" Brackett; how dare anyone question his motives or cross his specially anointed path?

The denotation of Dave Parrish and the half-hearted investigation of the Tax Commission while-heret are indicative of a dismissive attitude of all who agree with the powerful. This is a dangerous attitude and not Idaho.

We should consider electing members of the other party in Idaho, even if they are Democrats, to get back some balance in our state. Let's see if Mr. Brackett can win an honest election.

Accurate property appraisals elusive

I appreciate Stan Howland's blowing the whistle on the way big corporations obtain extremely favorable tax settlements with the state Tax Commission. It's clear how such a thing can happen.

Part of the problem is that an accurate evaluation of property is elusive. It isn't concrete. It's an estimation of a specific date based on the best available information (property sales, cost to replace less depreciation and/or capitalization of an income stream generated by the property).

Also, the state uses mass appraisals which do not reflect the sophistication of individual appraisals. So, when a big corporation with all its slick legal eagles ...

bring a challenge before the Tax Commission, how can the commission have the audacity to stand firm? What kind of price would it pay for taking the higher moral ground? If the challenge reached the courts, the big corporation would surely have a deeper pocket to fund expenses.

But, consider the cost when other corporations are subsequently inspired to mimic the "leader." A snowball effect takes place. That's probably one reason why secrecy is so prevalent within the Tax Commission. Another possibility is that the commission doesn't have faith in its own appraisers or trust its own methods and/or their applications. In any case, let's help put some resolve and backbone into the commissioners by helping them with a better administrative structure created through legislative action.

If you think the foregoing represents the biggest problem with taxes, consider a bill that would exempt personal property. If this law were to pass, only about 10 percent of all the operating property (facilities) would remain on the books. Railroad trucks, power poles, equipment centers, gas and oil pipelines all would be classified as personal property. If the measure were passed to absorb the cost to the state of exempting all those other properties.

It's something to think about and lobby your representatives about.

BETTY PETTIT
Twin Falls
(Editor's note: The writer refers to legislation backed by the Idaho Association of Commerce and Industry in the last legislative session that would have phased out the personal property tax. A compromise bill was approved by the legislature and signed by Gov. Butch Otter that exempts the first $100,000 of personal property, provided state tax revenue grows by 5 percent.)

No Jayco layoffs expected

Facility consolidation announced Tuesday

By Jared S. Hopkins
Times-News writer

There won't be any layoffs when Jayco Inc. suspends operations at its Twin Falls facility on Washington Street South and consolidates production at the new Hankins Road building Oct. 1.

"We're not planning any layoffs," Phil Geise, Jayco's vice president of operations told the Times-News on Wednesday.

On Tuesday, the company issued a statement publicizing the transition to move production from the building at 621 Washington St. S., to the building in its 176-acre industrial park on Hankins Road.

Geise said the decision was due to strengthen their business during "uncertain economic times" and production won't be affected. Jayco employs 216 people in Twin Falls, according to a news release.

"It just made sense for us right now to consolidate the operations in the same facility," he said, noting the two production lines made the same number of units. "It's just a matter of cutting our costs and improving our efficiencies and using our assets to the fullest."

He said the plan is to return to the Washington Street facility and expand, but the earliest would be next spring. That decision would be predicated on how the business is doing.

Headquartered in Middlebury, Ind., Jayco is the largest privately held manufacturer of RVs in North America. Jayco opened in Twin Falls in 2005, recruited in part by the city's Urban Renewal Agency. In 2007, Jayco opened its second Twin Falls facility on 510 Hankins Road S.

Twin Falls Economic Development Director Melinda Anderson, who oversees the URA, said it is not concerned the transition could negatively impact economic development in Twin Falls.

"We look at any business decision as just that — a business decision," she said. "We always of course hope

High energy costs prompt surge in wood stoves

The Associated Press

COBUR D'ALENE — Wood- and pellet-stove dealers in northern Idaho say business is up as customers face rising prices for natural gas and heating oil.

"It's huge," John Hoffman, customer service representative for RDI Heating and Cooling. "We gave quotes on seven wood stoves yesterday. Generally, we try to move that number in a week."

Randy Woolley, also with the company, said many stoves are being sent to customers on the East Coast.

Eric Barnett, a salesman for Andy's Heating and Cooling, said sales of stoves at his company started sooner than normal this year.

"All the manufacturers are selling out their inventories right now," said Barnett. "We have a pretty limited supply for the year. Normally, with stoves, it starts in the middle of August. It started about six weeks earlier this year."

Leslie Curran is one customer looking to convert to wood for heating.

"Obviously, it's heating costs," Curran said. "I have gas right now and it's always going up."

Officials with the Panhandle National Forest say more than 11,000 permits to collect firewood have been sold this year, putting it on track to be the most this decade.

Wood stoves burn "dirtier" than natural gas heaters, said Mark Boyle, a regional air program manager with the Idaho Department of Environmental Quality. But he said newer wood-burning stoves are "a lot cleaner than the old stoves."

He said a state-run program lets people receive tax rebates if they trade in an old stove not certified by the Environmental Protection Agency for a stove that is certified. He said most stoves built in the last 15 years are certified.

"Some studies have shown (certified stoves) are up to 30 percent more efficient," Boyle said. "We're encouraging to burn clean. Use a nice, hot fire. Don't damper down your stove at night."

Hoffman said customers thinking of making the switch should do it soon because rising steel prices will make stoves more expensive.

"If a customer is thinking about it, they should probably act now," he said.

Cashing in on Phelps' fame

Will Olympic gold translate into advertising gold?

By Emily Fradix
Associated Press writer

MILWAUKEE — Visa Inc. popped out ads almost as quickly as he swam his laps. Pizza Hut is giving Michael Phelps free pizza and pasta for a year — his teammates, too — for beating Mark Spitz's record of seven gold medals in one Olympics.

The makers of a new sports drink are embarking on their first national advertising campaign, banking on his most recent swimming glories.

Phelps — the biggest Olympic athlete in years, if not ever — is everywhere this summer. And companies want to share in his fame. They're taking out ads, pitching endorsements and giveaways.

The 23-year-old from Baltimore has proven himself in the pool, but will he sink or swim as a long-term pitchman on Madison Avenue?

"He is in the top tier of athletics and now he's going to get his trout as a personality," said John Sweney, director of sports communication at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill's School of Journalism and Mass Communication.

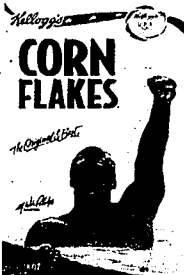

"And Tiger Woods sure passed, but Mark Spitz didn't. And there are plenty of people who they try to develop the whole persona around and two years later it's gone."

Phelps has won 14 gold medals, the most of any Olympian ever. Eight of those were at the Beijing Olympics, which end Sunday. His achievements at this Olympics broke American swimmer Spitz's record of seven golds at the 1972 Olympics. "In Munich for most won in at one time."

Phelps already has top endorsements from companies like

Visa, Speedo, Omega, Hilton, and AT&T. And he's certainly got a big fan base — or Phans as they call themselves. On the online networking site Facebook, more than 795,000 people have officially declared themselves fans of Phelps. That's a boost of more than 120,000 just on Monday.

Please see PHELPS, Page B2

In this image provided by Kellogg's Co., a prototype of a box of Kellogg's Corn Flakes with U.S. swimming star Michael Phelps is seen. The record-setting swimmer will soon be appearing on boxes of Kellogg's Frosted Flakes and Corn Flakes. The cereal boxes expected to be in stores by mid-September.

Businesses' steps to save on energy turn permanent

NEW YORK — As the cost of gasoline soared over the past year, many small businesses took steps to mitigate the damage to their cash flow and profits. Now, even though gas has fallen from the record levels it hit in mid-July, companies are making those money-saving strategies permanent.

Of course, gas that averages $3.70 a gallon nationally instead of $4.10 still isn't cheap. But even if the decline in gas becomes steeper, companies have found that the strategies they used to cut their fuel and energy bills are helping them work better, and therefore are worth holding on to.

SMALL TALK
Joyce M. Rosenberg

When Janet Buck moved her consulting firm, Emergent Success, from Northern California to Orange County in the southern part of the state four months ago, she decided not to take permanent office space, but to operate the business using her home office and the Internet. That allowed her employees to work at home if they weren't visiting clients. She also used conferencing services so employees who lived hundreds of miles away in San Luis Obispo, Zuni, or San Francisco could be part in meetings without traveling.

Buck said the costs of gasoline and fuel surcharges on plane tickets factored heavily in her decision to run her business virtually. Her policy has been to reimburse employees for the mileage they run up driving to and from work, and she estimated that eliminating their commutes is saving her company $2,800 a year. She calculates that airline fuel surcharges cost another $1,200.

"That's a biggie," Buck said of the total $4,000 she won't have to spend on those two budget items.

"A small business needs to be so conscious of cash flow," she said. "To keep more of the profits for us, that's just a good way to be."

As gas prices retreat, Buck said she has no plans to set up a freestanding office.

What started in part as a way to save on energy is making good business sense for her firm.

Businesses have many ways to cut back on their outlays for gasoline, diesel and other energy. For example, companies whose business involves deliveries, such as florists, are making fewer trips each day, or they plan their deliveries so they can bunch together stops that are near one another. Many businesses that need to buy new vehicles are looking for smaller ones, or hybrids.

Wing Zone, an Atlanta-based franchise chain of 120 stores that sell chicken wings, decided this spring to convert its company-owned delivery vehicles so they'll run on used cooking oil — something that is in great supply at a store that is frying wings all day long.

Matt Friedman, Wing Zone's co-founder, estimated that the company's fuel costs Growing trade in used books cuts into publishers' take

The Washington Post WASHINGTON — The rising cost of college textbooks has driven Congress and nearly three dozen states to attempt to curtail prices and controversial publishing practices through legislation. But as the fall semester begins, students are unlikely to see much relief.

CRASHED AIRLINER/ Washington Post
Travelers disembark at Lynchburg Regional Airport, where passenger traffic is half its 1994 peak. Small-city airports are struggling to stay afloat in the face of carriers' service reductions.

Small-city airports threatened by carriers' service reductions

By Sholm Freeman
The Washington Post

LYNCHBURG, Va., — American cities have long viewed a thriving commercial airport as a source of civic pride, a way to attract businesses and jobs, a selling point promising an easy connection to the outside world. Any community vibrant enough to support a respectable airport, the thinking goes, is a community that counts.

At the Lynchburg Regional Airport, about 180 miles southwest of Washington, travelers are welcomed with a dome in the style of Monticello and the words of Thomas Jefferson etched across the floor.

The number of passengers boarding planes at Lynchburg in 2007 was 55,675 — about half of the peak number in 1994, two years after the new terminal opened.

Now Lynchburg and other small-city airports, which represent the majority of the nation's 524 airports with service cuts of up to 50 percent. They are halting expansion projects, freezing hiring and trying to preserve what services they've got.

Smaller airports are vulnerable because they rely on smaller, more expensive planes and, with fewer passengers, have less economy of scale. Airports are putting together contingency plans for service cuts of up to 50 percent. They are halting expansion projects, freezing hiring and trying to preserve what services they've got.

Department of Transportation. Airport Director Mark Courtney has met with three airlines but none has taken the bait.

"We've reached the low-water mark," Courtney said. "We can't afford to go any lower."

Collectively, the major U.S. airlines lost $1 billion in the first half of the year, according to the Air Transport Association, the airline industry's lobbying group.

Despite millions of dollars spent to improve Lynchburg's airport, departures have fallen from 20 a day a decade ago to just six. Airlines are so reluctant to fly here that Lynchburg can't pay them to come. The airport is dangling a $405,000 incentive package to get an airline to connect the city to a big hub to the north, such as Washington's Dulles International Airport or Philadelphia International Airport.

Chinese treat shopping as an Olympic event

The Washington Post

BEIJING — There is souvenir shopping to be had when there is souvenir shopping in China.

Every four years, enthusiastic crowds bundle over Olympic merchandise. Many wait for the T-shirts, mugs, baseball caps, sunglasses, pins, umbrellas, knapsacks and stuffed animals to go on sale at a discount. But here in Beijing, shoppers don't wait, and they don't just browse. In a robust display of consumerism and Olympic enthusiasm, families of most of them Chinese from both the mainland and overseas — carry two or three baskets each at a time. Cashiers say shoppers routinely ring up tabs of nearly $200; some spend more than a grand.

Back to school: Shaky economy hits kids

By Alby Quaid
Associated Press writer

WASHINGTON — Hard times and high fuel prices will follow kids back to school this fall.

Children will walk farther to the bus stop, pay more for lunch, study from old textbooks and wear last year's clothes. Field trips? Forget about it.

This year, it could cost nearly twice as much to fuel the yellow buses that rumble to school each morning, you think it's expensive to fill up a sport utility vehicle, try topping off a tank that is two or even three times as big.

At the same time, cuts for air conditioning and heating, cafeteria food and classroom supplies are mounting, all because of the shaky economy. And parents have their own work to do.

Nearly half are cutting field trips

In the 2008 school year, 44 percent of school administrators said their school systems are cutting back on student field trips.

Things schools are doing to minimize the impact of rising fuel and energy costs:
- Implementing other energy conservation measures: 15%
- Cutting back on student field trips: 18%
- Cutting back on heating and AC use: 18%
- Consolidating bus routes: 20%
- Limiting staff bus use: 23%
- Eliminating bus routes: 23%
- Eliminating bus stops: 27%

NOTE: Survey of 648 superintendents by NAEP, July 15-18, 2008.
SOURCE: American Association of School Administrators

The extra costs present a tricky math problem: Where can schools subtract to keep costs under control?

In rural Minnesota, one district is skipping classes every Monday to save fuel. On the other days, classes will be about 10 minutes longer.

John Jaensch, a principal, said it's a great opportunity, but it's not easy. Jaensch, whose two sons and daughter will be making the switch. "You're cutting expenses that really don't affect school," he said.

to school clothes, Heidi McLean shops at outlets and the Marshalls discount chain for her son and daughter, high school students in Butte, Calif.

"It's this year, I'm forcing the kids to reuse their backpacks," McLean said. "They each cost $50. They like the special cool ones, and they're still holding up."

Jacksonville, school lunch prices will rise from $1.45 to $2 for secondary schools. "It's a huge jump," said LaTasha Green-Cobb, whose sons are in the seventh and eighth grade.

As food prices have rocketed higher, the cost of food has zoomed, especially for lunch-trip staples like milk.

As for supplies, teachers often asked for hand sanitizer and tissues, but will use copy paper, Lenelle Cruss, the state PTA president in Florida, said last year's budget was so tight, a Jacksonville school actually had a toilet paper drive.

Virtual worlds get real about punishment

By Kim Hart The Washington Post Virtual worlds have often been called the digital equivalent of the Wild West, where animated alter egos can live in a fantasy frontier. But in some of these universes, a sheriff has come to town.

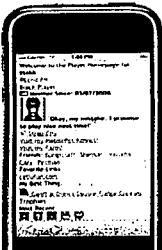

Slipping a four-letter word into an instant message now can land a user in a virtual timeout. Repeated attempts to make friends with an uninterested character could result in a loss of blogging privileges. And if convicted of starting a "flame war," or an exchange of hostile messages, a user may endure the ultimate punishment — permanent exile.

A virtual world for mobile devices, called Cellfun, has established a courthouse, where rule-breakers are indicted by their peers and tried by a jury of all make-up members. If found guilty of a charge, such as using profanity, users must carry out varying levels of sentences, from being mute for 20 minutes to being banished.

For the duration of punishment, a user's avatar — a cartoon version of his or her real-life self — is pictured behind bars.

At least one user has been convicted of a crime every day since the Cellfun courthouse opened two weeks ago. Chief Executive Officer Goldman said. Every day, dozens of members are indicted.

"It's really affected the tone and tenor of the site," he said. "People are much, much, much more careful now."

CARY TOMPKSON In the online community Cellfun, troublemakers found guilty by other users get their virtual alter egos placed behind bars.

have been accumulated. Most also allow users to report abusive behavior and provide a tool to let members ignore bothersome avatars.

Some worlds have devised their own versions of jail, where boredom is the punishment. In Second Life, the largest virtual world, where about 60,000 residents are logged on at any given time, find themselves stuck in the Corn Field, an eerie place with nothing but endless rows of corn, a decaying tractor and a black-and-white television. The Corn Field still exists but is no longer used as a penalty box.

Another site, called VZones, created the Void, a full-on cyber jail. Last-chance holding cell where delinquents are sent before getting a final warning or being removed from the world entirely.

"Very rarely does it get to this point," said Justine Reichman, chief executive of VZones.

Washington offers no relief for savers

By Jeanine Press Associated Press writer

WASHINGTON — Two giant mortgage companies get into hot water over risky investments. The government keeps steps in to threaten a lifeline should they need it. Hundreds of thousands of Americans buy homes more expensive than they can afford. Congress approves a rescue package.

Troubles erupt at a Wall Street investment firm that made bad bets on mortgage investments. The Federal Reserve steps in and provides financial backing for the company's takeover.

Meanwhile, tens of millions of people pay their mortgages on time, don't mix out their credit cards and put money into retirement funds. They may even save a little extra on the side.

In return, they get rates on their savings that don't even keep up with inflation. They also are witnessing the horror of their nest eggs shrinking as the value of their stocks plummets and the home market tumbles.

Washington policymakers seem more focused on rescuing those who behave badly by putting at risk taxpayers who've played by the rules and shunned the get-rich-quick schemes of Wall Street scoundrels.

If the government can toss a lifeline to troubled mortgage underwriters Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac, why won't they do something for Americans who save their money?

Cally Tozzi shops at her local dollar store Aug. 15, in New York. Tozzi, who lives in Brooklyn, N.Y., has cut back. 'I shop at the 99 cent stores. There are ways of saving money. Even so, she worries about inflation 'eating into my savings.'

saving now versus people who are done saving are two very different groups," said John Hultzing, professor of economics at the University of Chicago's Graduate School of Business.

Tozzi, who lives in Brooklyn, N.Y., has cut back. "I shop at the 99 cent stores. There are ways of saving money," even so, she worries about inflation "eating into my savings."

"People who grew up during the hardships of the Great Depression are from a generation that was more frugal and knew how to save. To them, debt was a dirty word."

lets the government lend money to Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac or buy their stock should they need it.

David Middleton and others are so mad about the situation in Washington that they got together and formed the grassroots group, Fed Up USA. The group, whose members number around 40 — have protested in Washington and elsewhere against "federal financial irresponsibility."

He was equally agast at the sweeping housing-rescue package approved by Congress and signed into law by President Bush last month. The package provides cheaper mortgages to struggling homeowners and

Washington policymakers — In Congress, the Bush administration and at the Fed — should hold banks, investment firms and other involved in the nation's financial debacles accountable for their actions.

Middleton said And, policymakers should bolster their oversight and provide more information to the public.

"We really want to get the message out to people," he said.

Getting the word out, may be easier than getting Washington to come around. Middleton has written letters to Fed Chairman Ben Bernanke and his lawmakers in Washington, "I got back the standard form letter — thank you for your comment," he says.

TAG MAN

T.F. man has caught bevy of jaw-tagged trout; hopes to win $1,000 drawing

By Andrew Weeks
Times-News writer

Bruce Willis doesn't stand a chance. Not in Troy. Boomhower's boat anyway, and not when there's an opportunity to go fishing.

For Boomhower, of Twin Falls, there isn't anything much better — not even working on a movie star's house — than fishing the Snake River on a calm summer afternoon, especially when jaw-tagged trout are the catches.

Every Friday from about sunrise to noon, Boomhower takes his 17-foot long Grumman aluminum canoe to the Snake River, launches it from the boat docks at Centennial Waterfront Park, and steers his craft — he does not paddle, but outfits it with a small motor — to one of his favorite fishing spots and to take in the scenery. It is that same spot — in an undisclosed place west of the Perrine Bridge — where he has caught 16 tagged fish since June.

The catches mean more than just a good fish fry. For Boomhower, it could mean $1,000 — at least that is what he is hoping.

Idaho Power twice a year releases rainbow trout — 80,000 in spring, 63,000 in fall — into parts of the Snake River from Shoshone Falls to C.J. Strike Dam near Grand View. A number of the fish — 15,000 in spring, 13,000 in fall — have metal tags on their jaws, said Idaho Power spokesman Russ Jones.

"The information we get from these tags help us to determine the success of our stocking program," he said. It lets the company know how many of its fish are being caught and where.

The Idaho Department of Fish and Game also has tagging programs, which helps it to track and research fish.

Idaho Power is required by the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission to annually stock fish in the Snake River as part of a release agreement to operate its hydroelectric power project. But Jones said it's also a good way to give back to sportsman.

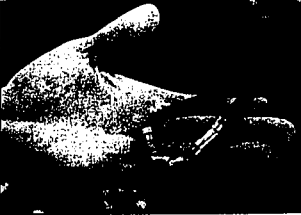

Each jaw tag found on a fish has a number. When anglers catch a fish with a tag, they are to call Idaho Power to report the tag number and where they caught the fish. They are then entered into a drawing for $1,000. Drawings take place twice a year, in February and September. But some fish have two tags, one of them with a dollar sign instead of a number, which means the angler has instantly won a cash reward. Anglers just have to call Idaho Power to redeem it, Jones said.

"Maybe I can retire," Boomhower joked if he were to win the $1,000 drawing.

Boomhower commutes to the Wood River Valley area where he works construction. Lately he's been working on Willis' kitchen home. "But come Fridays, he forgoes work on the movie star's spacious Idaho retreat and heads back to Twin Falls to haunt his favorite fishing spot on the Snake River.

Ray Boomhower of Twin Falls loads his 17-foot Grumman canoe onto the back of his pickup at Centennial Waterfront Park. He takes his canoe to the Snake River every Friday, where he tries to catch jaw-tagged rainbow trout. For every tag reported, a person's name is entered into a drawing for $1,000 from Idaho Power.

Ray Boomhower shows off the 16 trout tags he's caught this summer at the Snake River. Boomhower is aiming for 20 tags before he submits them for a $1,000 drawing, but with a September deadline fast approaching, he said he might not reach his goal. Fishing has slowed since he started catching the fish in early June, he said.

Ray Boomhower unspools his 17-foot aluminum Grumman canoe at Centennial Waterfront Park in Twin Falls on a recent fishing trip to the Snake River.

Boomhower originally wanted to collect 20 tags before submitting them for the drawing, but with a September deadline fast approaching, he said he might not meet his goal.

Though he still catches fish just about every time he comes out, the bites come less frequently now. After all, it's almost September, when waters start to cool and fish become less active.

"I can see that it was better a couple months ago," he said. "I used to catch two or three a day, but lately I haven't caught many trout. Now it just seems to be bass and other fish."

"But," he added quickly, "it's great to be out here anyway. The scenery is

T.F. County pursues another boat ramp at Centennial Ramp would be used for non-motorized watercraft

By Andrew Weeks
Times-News writer

It hasn't happened yet, but that doesn't mean it won't. Twin Falls County still aims to install a non-motorized boat ramp at Centennial Waterfront Park as soon as possible. But like any community project, that depends on funding.

"We're in the process of looking for money from government entities and other sources right now," County Commissioner Tom Mikessell told the Times-News.

The idea for another boat ramp has been in the works for sometime. The county previously applied for a $39,036 state grant to help with the project but was denied this spring, according to county grant writer Mark Brunelle. Mikessell said the county will still pursue the project, but hopefully without having to apply for another grant.

"The first step is finding what the costs are going to be, from clearing the area to buying a ramp," said Kall Van Leeuwen, parks director for the county's Parks and Waterways Department. "We need to meet with some of the players to get our ducks in a row. We want to work with the Department of Water Resources and the DEQ (Department of Environmental Quality) to make sure we do everything right."

The idea for another boat ramp — one specifically for non-motorized watercraft — came about because of public input, Van Leeuwen said. She said the Parks and Waterways Advisory Board has received a number of suggestions from the public saying that such a ramp is needed.

The current ramp is highly used, especially on weekends. "If we can get another one installed, hopefully it'd free up some of the conflict," she said.

The future boat ramp would likely be placed just north of the playground, Van Leeuwen said, because it'd be the most convenient location and easiest spot to clear. "It wouldn't take a whole lot to put a boat ramp in there," she said.

Aim is to have the county's "ducks in a row" as soon as possible, Van Leeuwen said, and to have a boat ramp installed by next spring.

Dealing with aggressive hawks

By Bill Mattox
For The Times-Herald

At this time of year we should all be aware of some of the most interesting — and sometimes threatening — facts about nature. It may come as no surprise that wild animals will protect their territory and young.

In particular, Swainson's hawks — about the size of our well-known red-tailed hawk — are in their final days of parenthood and consequently are very aggressive in the defense of their young.

Returning from their wintering areas in South America, in early April, Swainson's hawks (Buteo swainsoni) take up residence in the same nest trees as they have used for years (some birds reach more than 20 years of age). They fly about, repairing winter storm damage to the nest, and usually lay two eggs during May and June; young hatch in June and July, about 34 days after egg-laying.

This hawk helps farmers by hunting and killing rodents (usually pocket gophers and ground squirrels). It is also an unusually tame hawk, and will perch on a phone or power pole and tolerate close approach by curious people.

In the early days after hatching, one adult usually broods the downy young for protection. After about four weeks of age, the young will become very active, flapping and strengthening their wings for a life in the air (this cycle varies by three to four weeks from earliest to latest nests). From early July through August, the young will cautiously scramble about the edge of the nest and may even attempt short flights. This so-called "fledging" occurs about six weeks after hatch.

This is the crucial point for all young birds, as they begin to attain the ability to fly. Their first attempts usually result in crawling or flopping to land in nearby branches, or they may even fly awkwardly to land on the ground. At this very time, the adults become quite agitated (as indeed ALL adults would), and attempt to protect their vulnerable young from harm. This involves trying to scare off any potential threat, be it dogs, cats, or people. The adults become very aggressive for this short period (seven to 10 days or more) and appear to lose all fear. Stories abound about people being raked in the head by aggressive hawks. Our advice during this period is for people who must be in the vicinity of a hawk nest, is to wear a hat, maybe carry an umbrella, and keep an eye out if other children are playing outside near the nest tree.

While this may all sound alarming, we know of many property owners who defend their Swainson's hawks as aggressively as the hawks protect their young. The hawks provide a daily spectacle of nature at close hand. Most property owners value this, and keep binoculars and scopes at hand for frequent observations.

Environmentalists, property owners seek to enter bison suit

By Matthew Brown
Associated Press writer

BILLINGS, Mont. — Environmentalists and a group of property owners near Yellowstone National Park said they are seeking to intervene in a lawsuit over the capture and hazing of bison that wander outside the park.

A group of ranchers in May asked a state judge to force the Department of Livestock to capture, kill or haze any bison in an area west of the park by May 15 of every year. The ranchers, along with the Montana Stockgrowers Association, argue the bison could spread the disease brucellosis, which causes cattle to abort their young.

But no cattle graze on the land at the center of the dispute — the Horse Butte peninsula on Hebgen Lake near West Yellowstone. The National Resources Defense Council, Greater Yellowstone Council and eight nearby property owners want bison

On the butte left alone.

Although the ranchers seek to intervene in the case, have objected to the state's bison policies in the past, they contend the ranchers' lawsuit would lock in those policies and block any opportunity for more bison tolerance.

"Montana Stockgrowers is overreaching in their litigation by saying bison cannot be outside the park even when cattle are not present, when landowners are welcoming bison," said Amy McNamara with the Greater Yellowstone Coalition.

Attorneys for the Stockgrowers Association filed the suit on behalf of rancher Bob Myers and the Sitz Angus Ranch. It came after the state Department of Livestock allowed bison to remain outside the park this spring for two weeks following May 15, which is when cattle typically return to the park's summer pastures.

Myers and the Sitz Ranch run cattle near Horse Butte, Stockgrowers attorney

John Bloomquist said he had filed the suit to challenge environmentalists' motion to intervene in the case.

A spokesman for the Department of Livestock — which faces pressure from ranch summer pastures — said the state will continue to manage bison as appropriate outside the park.

State officials have said they were more lenient with bison last spring because there were fewer cattle at risk of contracting brucellosis.

Beyond Horse Butte, state and federal officials rounded up 1,435 bison migrating outside the park last winter and sent them to slaughter.

"We're going to continue doing what we're supposed to do, which is use our statutory authority to manage bison when they leave Yellowstone National Park," said Department of Livestock spokesman Steve Morrill.

The case is before District Court Judge Loren Tucker in Madison County.

Black bear euthanized after being fed for show

By Mike Stark
Associated Press writer

SALT LAKE CITY — State wildlife officials had to kill a young black bear in Utah County after reports that a man was feeding it junk food to his kids and grandkids could watch.

The bear had lost its fear of people, raising concerns that it would become aggressive if it wasn't fed.

With the bear euthanized, officials are now deciding whether to file charges against the man who was feeding it.

"It's been frustrating because the last thing we want to do is kill wildlife, but at the same time when human safety is involved, human lives are the top priority," said Lt. Torrey Christopherson of the Utah Division of Wildlife Resources in Vermilion. He said state officials had heard reports about the fed bear in Whitecliffs Canyon last year but weren't able to confirm it until July. He said the man was luring the 2-year-old bear onto private property with doughnuts, syrup and dog food.

"The complaint was this person was feeding the bear so he could display it to his kids and grandkids," he said. Wildlife officials worried that the bear could pose a danger if it went to neighboring properties and didn't receive any food.

"When a bear loses its fear of humans and equate food with humans, then our experience has been that we're going to have problems," he said.

The man, whose name wasn't released, refused to allow state officials to come on to his property. Wildlife agents set up a culvert-shaped trap on a neighbor's property and lured it inside in early August. It was later euthanized.

Christopherson said he's working with Utah County prosecutors to decide whether charges should be filed against the man who was baiting the bear.

Fish salvage at Little Camas

The Little Camas Reservoir in Elmore County will be open or nearly dry by late summer. Fish in the reservoir will have a high likelihood of dying as water levels drop.

For these reasons, the Idaho Department of Fish and Game opened the reservoir to salvage fish.

"We would rather have people harvest these fish than let them go to waste when the reservoir is dewatered," said Doug Megargle, regional fisheries manager.

Daily bag, possession and size limits were removed on Little Camas Reservoir on Wednesday and will end Nov. 30. After that date, standard fishing methods, bag limits and possession limits will be re-instated.

Large net anglers may take the fish by any method except firearms, explosives, chemicals or electric current. For more information: 324-4359.

Fish and Game hunter orange policy

The Idaho Fish and Game Commission is considering adopting this policy on the use of hunter orange at the Nov. 5 commission meeting in Lewiston.

The proposed policy is available on the Fish and Game Web site: http://fishandgame.idaho.gov/crms/re_c_add/. Or contact a local Fish and Game office for a printed copy.

Director, commissioner bag $1,000 for hunter education

Look out Robin Hood, when it comes to shooting for a pouch of gold, you have competition from Idaho Fish and Game Director Cal Green and his archery range partner, Fish and Game Commissioner Tony McDermott.

At this summer's meeting of the Western Association of Fish and Wildlife Agencies, commissioners and directors were challenged to an archery match with a prize of $1,000 going to the winning state's hunter education program. Green and McDermott competed against teams from other western states, won and brought home a check that will go to Idaho's archery education program for much-needed equipment.

Big Game rule book change for 2008

The 2008 big game rules brochures look a little different this year — with some noticeable changes in look and organization.

As the big game hunting seasons open, Idaho Fish and Game reminds hunters of changes that included shifting the order or the content and moved the regional maps and game management units into a separate publication.

Booklets with game management unit descriptions were printed separately and are available at regional offices and license vendors.

Game management unit descriptions are available in the Idaho Game Management Unit Boundaries booklets and on the Game Web site: <http://fishandgame.idaho.gov/crms/hunt/rules/gameManagementUnit.cfm>.

FISHING REPORT

Anderson Ranch Reservoir: Kokanee are staging near the mouth of the South Fork Boise River. They are beginning to turn red in preparation for the spawning run which typically starts in late August. Water levels are dropping quickly however Curlew Boat Ramp is open.

Anglers are still catching kokanee however most are between 7-9 inches long.

Blaine River: The river is fishing great. Most anglers are reporting good catch rates of relatively small rainbow trout.

Carey Lake: Anglers report catching 5-6 inch perch at high rates, but fishing has generally slowed due to lack of open water. Heavy vegetation growth makes fishing difficult except in a few locations, but may be worth a try for the family if you can find some open water.

Lake Cleveland: No recent fishing reports.

Little Camas Reservoir: Water levels are extremely low. Boat launch non-usable. A salvage order will be considered soon.

Little Wood Reservoir: Water level is dropping fast due to irrigation. Boat ramp is still available but there is no dock for use. Fishing has slowed with some trout still being caught from shore.

Magie Reservoir: Magie Reservoir: Water levels are dropping fast. Ingate report flow through the dam will stop between September 3rd -5th and the reservoir will be an extremely low storage levels. A salvage order will be considered at that time for the Richfield Canal.

Mormon Reservoir: Fishing still poor with water temps rising and algae blooming.

Salmon Falls Creek Reservoir: Trout fishing has slowed. Algae load has increased but does not seem as heavy as this time last year. Walleye are still being caught; however, most anglers report catching a larger number of small walleye.

Silver Creek: Terrestrial patterns have been reportedly working well for some anglers. Rainbow trout size is reportedly larger than last year with the occasional large brown trout.

As of Aug. 14, the latest fishing report by the Idaho Department of Fish and Game.

Feds watch as Nevada wilderness burns unchecked for 12 days

The Associated Press

RENO, Nev. — While armies of firefighters battle wildland blazes across much of the West, federal crews are watching from the sidelines as a 12-day-old wildfire burns unchecked in a remote wilderness area in the northeast corner of Nevada.

With no immediate threat to people or property, the Forest Service has been content to let nature have its way as the lightning-sparked fire crackles its way through more than five square miles of the Humboldt-Toiyabe National Forest's Jarbidge Wilderness Area along the Nevada-Idaho line.

Agency officials continue to monitor the fire that's 15 miles from the nearest town of Jarbidge, and will step in to fight it if any danger arises, said Linda Slater, a public information officer for the National Park Service who is assisting in the interagency effort.

"The safety of firefighters and the public remains the top priority," she said Wednesday.

But if all goes well, they're counting on rain or snow to put it out the old-fashioned way sometime early this fall.

The management practice called "Wildland Fire Use" is used to manage lightning-caused fires in remote areas where fire is a natural component of the ecosystem, Slater said.

"Right now, they are not putting it out in any place. We have teams in there monitoring the perimeter of the fire and they also fly over it once a day or more to keep track of it," Slater told The Associated Press.

It's a very different scene than in Oregon, where 500 firefighters are battling a stubborn fire on Mount Hood; eastern Washington, where 390 personnel are trying to stop a fire that has burned 24 square miles near Davenport; or the Sierra Nevada, where 150 firefighters now have a 650-acre fire in California's Mono County about 45 percent contained.

So far, the fire in Nevada's wilderness has burned 3,245 acres primarily through an area dominated by brush, bug-killed and other dead trees. Its perimeter is expected to grow, but many pockets of green trees within the perimeter remain unburned, she said.

It is burning very spotty. It is not black from end of the wilderness to the other," Slater said.

The vast wilderness area, home to the threatened bull trout, covers a total of about 195 square miles. The fire is burning within about a 9-square-mile area that has been closed to public entry near the 10,184-foot God's Pocket Peak.

"It is a pretty rocky, open area. It is not a densely covered forest. It is a lot of meadow, open area," Slater said.

For the first time since it ignited on Aug. 8, residents of Jarbidge could see smoke from the fire on Tuesday, but Slater said they aren't in any immediate danger.

"They are not going to let it burn out of the wilderness areas at all," she said. Dot Crechely, owner of the Outdoor Inn in Jarbidge, said the smoke was "pretty heavy" Tuesday evening, but the skies were mostly clear Wednesday morning.

She said she's not necessarily sold on the idea of letting the fire burn but was glad Forest Service officials were keeping them updated on its status. She said an agency official was due in town again later Wednesday.

"It's quite a ways to the east of us. Last year we got evacuated. That wasn't any fun. So they are keeping us informed," said Crechely, who has owned the inn in the old mining town for 39 years. "They told us it started by lightning so they considered it a managed burn and they told us if it went out of the wilderness area they would fight it," she said. "We don't control what they do, but I hate to see stuff burn."

Environmentalists generally remain supportive of the policy even in cases where protected species are involved, such as the bull trout.

"When you have a natural event like this, it is beneficial," said John McCarthy, Idaho forest campaign director for The Wilderness Society in Boise, Idaho.

"These fish have evolved in these systems. Bull trout actually benefit from fires, even high intensity fires, as long as there is connectivity so the fish can move out of an area if it gets too hot before or after a fire," he said.

"The key is there can't be blockages of their passage up and down, like culverts. You can have a total burn and within a couple of years, bull trout will be back and thriving."

Right light makes for a welcome star party guest

One of the main functions of amateur astronomy clubs is the star party, where telescope owners gather en masse to explore the sky. You needn't bring a telescope to participate, but there are some guidelines to keep in mind.

SKYWATCH
Chris Anderson

Sky Calendar through Thursday

Planets
One hour before sunrise:
No naked-eye planets visible.
One hour after sunset:
Jupiter: SSE, low
Moon:
Last quarter tomorrow, 5:49 pm.

Since star parties are often held in dark locations, proper lighting is a big deal. It takes at least 20 minutes for your eyes to become fully dark-adapted, so the fastest way to become the least popular star party visitor is to spoil others' views with a carelessly-aimed flashlight.

The solution is to use only red light, which better preserves night vision. However, even red light can be a problem if it's too bright, so use the dimmest red light that still lets you get around safely, and keep it pointed downward. Red LED "squeeze light" key chains are ideal, but in a pinch you can tape red cellophane or a piece of red band-aid over a small white flashlight. And be sure kids understand proper flashlight protocol.

Car lights are a challenge too. While most cars can be operated (carefully) with just their running lights, even those can be annoyingly bright to dark-adapted eyes. Some newer cars with bright, white, automatic-running lights make them star party pariahs. Even a dome light that comes on when the door is opened will be obtrusive. So plan carefully how and when you get to and from the telescope site.

Saturday night, the Magic Valley Astronomical Society and CSI's Centennial Observatory will host the second annual Pontreille Mountain star party. Because the telescopes will be accessible only by the chair lift, car lights won't be an issue. If you plan to attend, dress warmly and bring nothing brighter than a dim, red light, and everyone will enjoy great views of dark, starry skies.

great, it's quiet." Those are some of the same things that attracted Boomhower to south-central Idaho in the first place. Originally from central California, he moved his family to Twin Falls in the early 1990s because they wanted to flee the increasing crowds of the Golden State.

Always a fisherman — "fishing was great when I was growing up here," he said — of California — Boomhower fell in love with the sport all over again once he moved to the Gem State. It also confirmed to him that he had made the right decision years earlier when he decided not to sell his Grumman. It's been a good boat, he said, and has never given him any problems, but is full of memories.

He only wishes now it would become full of fish — or at least four more jaw-tagged rainbow trout, so he could meet his goal and better his chances at winning that elusive prize money.

But no matter, he says, he will continue taking his Grumman to his favorite fishing spot and there perhaps find new virtues at the end of a fiberglass pole.

Question: Fred wrote: "I filed a Chapter 7 bankruptcy in April. My uncle Donald passed away in July. Donald's personal representative just told me that I am in the will and should receive about $500,000. My bankruptcy attorney says I have to give the money to the Bankruptcy Trustee. Can't I just dismiss my bankruptcy and keep the money?"

ANSWER: The filing of a bankruptcy creates an "estate." All assets that exist on the date of filing become part of the estate and can be liquidated for the benefit of your creditors unless the assets are exempt under state law. Idaho law provides sufficient exemptions so that most Idaho debtors do not have any assets liquidated. However, the Bankruptcy Code specifically identifies inheritances that you became entitled to within 6 months after filing your bankruptcy case as property of the estate just as if the inheritance had existed on the date your case was filed. The Bankruptcy Court would not approve dismissal because your creditors are entitled to the money in your estate. Since Idaho law does not exempt your inheritance, uncle Donald's bequest to you will be used to pay the claims of your creditors and to pay administrative expenses of your case. After the expenses and claims are paid, the rest of the money will be returned to you.

Knights of Columbus name Family of the Year

The Crozier family of Jerome has been awarded the Knights of Columbus Family of the Year Award.

Family members include husband Reed; wife, Colleen; and children Molly, Katie and Patrick. Reed Crozier, who was also selected as Knight of the Year, has held various positions in the Jerome Council of the Knights of Columbus and has been a member for more than 15 years. He has served as Grand Knight, Inside Guard, Youth Program Director, Deputy Grand Knight and Warden. Reed has participated in many construction and demolition projects for the building of the new church in Jerome. The most notable fundraiser was the Holy Cow Project to benefit the building of the church. The project raised $95,000 in 2004 and $135,000 in 2007.

The Crozier Family has left their footprints on a number of ministries within the church. Music ministry has been one of the ways in which the family has been able to serve together. Colleen began leading music at Sunday mass almost 10 years ago. It became a family affair as Reed joined, and soon Molly, Katie and Patrick also joined.

The family's service spread as they were asked to lead worship at many weddings and funerals. Katie lead music at Boise State University's St. Paul's student center's daily mass, as well as the Sunday night mass celebration. While in Poetaville, she also led music at mass at the student center at Idaho State University. Patrick, while attending University of Idaho, led music at St. Augustine Sunday night mass.

Another area of service for the Crozier's is in the church's religious education. Reed began teaching the Confirmation class at St. Jerome's 10 years ago and is presently preparing 16 young men and women for the sacrament. Colleen has taught religious education classes for over 15 years. She began teaching the elementary grades and then became the youth minister at St. Jerome's. She was instrumental in starting a Lifetown program for the youth of the church and leading the music for it. She has organized and chaperoned countless retreats with the high school youth. Recently, she and Patrick chaperoned a bus load of high school youth to a Steubenville retreat in Denver, Colo.

Katie began teaching religious education as a junior in high school and continues to this day. After high school, she served two years with Reach Youth Ministries in Yakima, Wash. Reach Youth Ministries is a traveling youth ministry team that travels the country putting on retreats for Catholic high school youth. Katie also served as director of religious education in Spokane, Wash., at St. Joseph's parish where she was challenged to combine the Spanish and English speaking communities into one religious education program.

A cornerstone of service in the Crozier family is their service to the poor and disadvantaged through their involvement with Capstone Missions. Capstone Missions is a mission that serves the poor of Tijuana, Mexico and specifically St. Joseph's Home for special needs children; Casa de Abuelitas, a home for the elderly; and Verdad y Vida, which is a home for unwed mothers and their children.

The family has been involved with this ministry for almost ten years. Reed was on the Board of Directors from 2000-2004 and Colleen and Molly are currently serving on the board. Colleen is serving as vice president and is invaluable to the fundraising efforts. Molly co-chaired the project and was also chairman of the Annual Capstones Golf Scramble held in Boise. Katie spent two months living at the orphanage to help with care for the children and provide support to the sisters in any way possible.

Reed, Colleen and Patrick have been on numerous mission trips to Tijuana. Reed is also a regular at the Community Soup Kitchen that serves meals to those in need at St. Jerome's on Monday and Wednesday nights. The family also makes it a tradition to adopt a family in need at Christmas time and provide them with gifts and warm clothing.

Reed served on the Jerome Youth Accountancy Board from 1993-1997 and was a probation officer for the County of Jerome from 1997-2000. He is a certified, trained mediator for Jerome High School. He is currently on the Jerome School Board and has assisted in the building of a new elementary school and middle school for the school district of Jerome.

Colleen started a drug free all-night senior graduation party for high school seniors. She has been active in Habitat for Humanity and became a mentor for an at-risk mother for the program Mentoring Young Mothers and was awarded Mentor of the Year.

Katie was the Social Justice Minister at St. Paul's Student Center at BSU. She graduated from Boise State with a bachelor degree in bilingual elementary education and is in the process of getting her masters degree in theology from Franciscan University of Steubenville.

Patrick is currently employed with Easter Seals Good Will and assists inmates in their transition from prison to living in society. He graduated from the University of Idaho with his bachelors in secondary education.

Molly graduated from the University of Idaho with a bachelors in accounting and business management. She works for Hewlett Packard and has been instrumental in enrolling various charities into the HP Charitable Giving Campaign. She has raised funds for Capstones Missions and University of Idaho.

Breast-cancer treatment causes numbness in wife's feet

DEAR DR. GOTT: My wife has had breast cancer for two years. She had a lumpectomy on her right breast, followed by chemotherapy and radiation. The only problem she has had since her treatment is burning and numbness in her feet and legs. I might add she is on her feet eight hours a day as a cashier. She never had these problems prior to her cancer. Her doctors don't think it is neuropathy. We do have a couple of nerve centers in our area, but we would like your recommendation as to the right physician to see for pain relief.

DEAR READER: Unfortunately, breast cancer is the most common form of cancer among women. The good news is that it can be cured if discovered in its early stages.

Warning signs include breast lumps, thickening or swelling, skin dimpling, nipple retraction or discharge. Any changes in an otherwise normal breast should be reported to a primary-care physician or gynecologist for prompt follow-up.

Chemotherapy is often coupled with radiation for treatment of breast cancer. Chemo refers to the use of a number of anticancer drugs used to kill cancer cells, while radiation therapy is an extremely effective, targeted means of destroying cancer cells that can linger after surgery. Radiation can reduce the incidence of recurrence by more than 65 percent.

Side effects of chemotherapy include nausea, vomiting, hair loss, weight gain, a reduced resistance to infection, loss of appetite and more depending on the type used. Radiation side effects include armpit discomfort, heart and lung problems, fatigue and skin sensitivity. On the bright side, the effects of radiation typically vanish within a few weeks following final treatment. Each form of therapy will affect different women in different ways, so it will not be easy for a physician to state precisely what a woman with breast cancer will experience.

This brings me to some unanswered questions. When did your wife complete her chemotherapy? If it has been within a couple of months, her symptoms of numb feet and legs could improve. If, however, she had treatment two years ago, you will have to look elsewhere.

If your wife's doctor doesn't believe the pain is neuropathic, it will do no harm to visit a pain clinic for an opinion. Ask her physician for a referral.

DEAR DR. GOTT: I've had Restless Legs Syndrome for almost four years. After many medications failed, my wife bought Bigfoot gel, a veterinary aid, from our local cop. When I use it, the jerking stops immediately. It's good for minor arthritis and sore muscles, too.

DEAR READER: This is one product I've never heard of, but I am passing along the information.

Other aids for pain include Casifica, which contains capsaicin and is a topical ointment for arthritis relief; topical castor oil; Hawthorne berry; omega-3 oil; and 8 ounces purple grape juice mixed with 1 tablespoon pectin. Thank you for your tip.

Michael K. Cross

SAN MARCOS, Calif. — Michael K. Cross, 66, passed away at his home in San Marcos, Calif., on Saturday, Aug. 9, 2008.

Mike was born in Weed, Calif., on Jan. 19, 1942, to Edward and Bonnie Cross. The family moved to San Jose, Calif., where he grew up with two older brothers and a younger sister. Mike attended St. Patrick's Elementary School, Bellarmine College Prep and graduated from Santa Clara High in 1960. He joined the Navy and served on the USS Midway. Mike returned to Idaho after his discharge from the Navy in 1965, where he sold cars and became a legend at the Los Gatos Lodge.

In 1966, Mike married Patricia, formerly of Twin Falls; they were later divorced. In 1973 as a member of the Iron Worker's Union, Mike moved to Twin Falls to work on the Perrine Bridge and later the College of Southern Idaho. When the jobs were finished, he had made some great friends and enjoyed the area so much that he decided to make Twin Falls his home. While in Twin Falls he worked as a bar tender, boatman on the Middle Fork of the Salmon River, restaurant manager and former salesman and truck driver. He even tried his hand at politics and ran for mayor of the city but was defeated. For a short time Mike left Idaho to manage a restaurant in Oregon.

In 1991, Mike had an opportunity to work in Buena Vista, Calif., for a taxidermy company, so he moved to Cabo San Lucas, where he had vacationed over the years. In 1993, he was off on another adventure when he was a truck driver on the Trans-Alaska Pipeline in Prudhoe Bay. But Alaska wasn't Cabo, so after visiting friends in San Marcos, Calif., he decided to make this his home; he retired from Grangeritos in 2004. Retirement gave Mike a chance to walk the decks of the USS Midway again, only as a docent this time. The USS Midway is now a floating museum in the San Diego Bay. Whether cooking in a Dutch oven over a campfire or on his grill at home, Mike was a great cook and enjoyed entertaining his friends with a nice bottle of wine, a tasty steak and always lots of great music. Mike was a member of the American Legion and the VFW, where you could usually find him after work in a lively conversation with friends.

Mike is survived by a daughter, Tiffani Graham; and granddaughter, Mathea Langley, both of Twin Falls; a brother, Harold N. (Marty) Cross of Corvallis, Calif.; a sister, Annemarie (Nells) Stahr of San Jose, Calif.; and several nieces and nephews. His mother, father and a brother, Edward O. Cross, preceded him in death.

Please join family and friends for a celebration of Mike's life from 1 to 4 p.m. Sunday, Aug. 24, at the Cove Lounge, 496 Addison Ave. W. in Twin Falls.

Randall Demont McCullough

Randall Demont McCullough passed away Monday, Aug. 18, 2008.

He was born to Arthur and Iva McCullough on Nov. 6, 1970. Randy was one of four children. He was a loving brother and son; he cared deeply for his family. Randy enjoyed camping, fishing, music, cars and, over the years, became a fantastic artist. Randy was a first grader in life and challenged it to the fullest.

Patricia 'Pat' LaRue Main

JEROME — Patricia "Pat" LaRue Main, age 77, of Jerome, died Tuesday, Aug. 19, 2008, at the Twin Falls Care Center as a result of an extended illness.

Pat was born Nov. 21, 1930, in Kimberly, the daughter of David and Maebel Meeks. Pat was a family of 13 children, Pat was the second to the oldest and helped raise many of her younger siblings. On Sept. 11, 1947, she married the love of her life, Everett E. Main. Due to his lively and charming persona, their union together was always interesting and never dull. Pat enjoyed taking a back seat to her husband and children as they were each pursuing their dreams. There was never a better cheerleader than Patricia.

Her daughter, Penne Awnne, was born May 27, 1953, followed by her son, Edward Earl, born May 5, 1958. Her family lived and laughed in Jerome for the majority of their lives. Patricia loved people! She spent a great deal of her life in the retail business working in a variety of positions at M.L. King's to McCleary Drug to the Merc department store. One of her fondest memories was working the snack bar at McCleary Drug for Jack Morley and Robin Kinsey.

She always had a beautiful smile and a friendly hello for everyone she came in contact with. Her laughter was contagious. She loved God's gift of flowers and nature. She also had a special touch with small children. One of her favorite pastimes, later in life, was working as a volunteer in local grade schools helping kids learn to read. A true believer, she found great comfort and solace in God's word.

Patricia was preceded in death by her husband, Everett; her parents; and eight of her siblings. She is survived by her daughter, Penne Main of Burley; her son, Ed (Dolly) Main of Winston, Ore.; four grandchildren, Hugh Allen Schick of Victoria, Texas, Deea Rae Main of Bozeman, Mont., Trevor Main of Winston, Ore., and Sloan Elizabeth White of the church; (Rasmussen Funeral Home in Burley); two brothers; and two sisters.

Mom, have fun with Dad up there — and put in a good word for your kids, OK? The funeral will be held at 11 a.m. Saturday, Aug. 23, at Farnsworth Mortuary, 1343 S. Lincoln Ave. in Jerome, where friends and family may call one hour prior to the service. Burial will be in the Jerome Cemetery. Arrangements have been entrusted to the care of Rasmussen Funeral Home of Jerome. Visitation from 6 to 8 p.m. today at Rasmussen Mortuary of Jerome.

The family expresses their sincere appreciation to Dr. Richard Hammond, Dr. Richard Dineggs and the Twin Falls Care Center Team for the tender care given to our mother.

Henry Ross Snoderly Sr.

BURLEY — Henry Ross Snoderly Sr., 70, died Saturday, Aug. 16, 2008, at his home.

He was born March 18, 1938, in Gooding. He was the son of our loving grandparents, Claude and Margaret. He grew up in the Wendell area, graduating from Jerome High School in 1956. He married Anetha Jean on Jan. 12, 1957, in Jerome. From this union, three children were born: Laurie Ann, the namesake of her two grandmothers, was his firstborn. She was born Nov. 20, 1957. Henry Ross Jr. (Sonny) was born July 28, 1959. Sonny was his only son. Kathleen Marie was born May 23, 1961. He worked in the lumber and pulp industry, from driving a truck to working in various factories. Henry and Anetha were divorced in 1975. Shortly thereafter, he moved to the Burley area. Henry's children expanded the family tree.

Although most describe his relationship with them as distant, he has six grandchildren and four great-grandchildren. A new great-grandchild is soon to be added to the family as well. There has been a significant family presence that was excluded from Henry's last days.

We were not afforded the opportunity to say goodbye but we have memories. We shared his passing with his cousin, who was as gracious enough to forward the information to his other cousins as well. Dad, I hope your journey was all you had wanted. We will take the good days.

Ed Freeman, Medal of Honor veteran, dies

By Jesse L. Bonner Associated Press writer

BOISE — Edward Freeman, a former Army helicopter pilot awarded the Medal of Honor for his actions during the Vietnam War and portrayed in the Mel Gibson movie "We Were Soldiers," has died. He was 90.

Ed Freeman said his father died Wednesday in Boise from health complications due to Parkinson's Disease after spending several weeks undergoing treatment.

The Mississippi native braved intense enemy fire in the Drang Valley as he carried out rescue missions on Nov. 19, 1965, during what was considered one of the fiercest battles of the Vietnam war.

After an Army battalion was surrounded by enemy forces, Freeman flew his unarmed helicopter through enemy fire to evacuate 30 seriously wounded soldiers and bring them to safety. He also delivered water, amputation and supplies.

Actor Mark McCracken portrayed Freeman in the 2002 film.

Freeman was 73 years old when President George W. Bush awarded him the Congressional Medal of Honor at a White House ceremony in 2001.

During the ceremony, Bush and Freeman jointly won the Distinguished Flying Cross for his actions, but his commanding officer and other witnesses believed he deserved an even higher honor.

In a statement, Doug Freeman described his father, who lived in Idaho for the last 30 years, as a humorous person with a lot of integrity.

"People could relate to him," Doug Freeman said. "He made an impression on people."

By Tim Marsano, the Idaho National Guard, said funeral services have been scheduled for Saturday. Freeman will be buried at the Veterans Cemetery in Boise.

of cliff gave way several hundred feet below the golf course, which hosted the U.S. Open in June.

The victim was on vacation with his family, said a man who identified himself as his brother and declined to give his name.

Former Chinese head of state Hua Guofeng dies

By Mark Magner Los Angeles Times

BEIJING — Hua Guofeng, one of the last of the original Communist revolutionaries who was named briefly to succeed Chairman Mao Zedong, died Wednesday, Chinese state media reported. Hua, who is credited with putting China on the path to reform by removing the Gang of Four, was 87. Sometimes dismissed as insignificant, Hua was a man caught between two eras who created a bridge over the gap before gracefully exiting the political stage.

In the past, the Communist Party has waited several days to announce the death of a major current or former leader. No cause of death was given.

"The most important thing is how relevant his death is to the politics of today, which shows how much China has changed," said Stephen Tsang, a professor at Oxford University. "I'm sure there's an element of management in the announced timing. When he actually died, we don't know, but I suspect it was in the course of the Olympics."

Mao picked Hua to succeed him as a compromise candidate unwilling to name a successor either from the media revolution, 64 N. Tigger Drive in Jerome; visitation from 6 to 8 p.m. Friday at Rasmussen Funeral Home, 1350 E. 16th St. in Burley, and 10 to 10:45 a.m. Saturday at the church.

hardline revolutionaries. Mao on his deathbed, reportedly wrote in a message to Hua: "With you in charge, I am at ease."

But in what some credit as his biggest contribution during a two-year reign that started in September 1976, Hua destroyed the Gang of Four politically, allowing China to ease away from the Cultural Revolution.

"Without him, it would have been much more difficult to get rid of them, so on that count his contribution was huge," said Huang Nangping, professor at Beijing University, a mix of Marxism and Leninism.

Hua lacked a strong political base, however, and rather unimagnitively followed his predecessor in a movement labeled the "two whatever's," namely to reportedly follow whatever policy decisions or instructions Mao gave. At one point Hua even copied Mao's hairstyle.

Cervical cancer shots less cost-effective with age

By Mike Stobbe
Associated Press writer

ATLANTA — An expensive vaccine aimed at preventing cervical cancer makes sense for young teens when it comes to cost-effectiveness, but not for women in their 20s, contends a new report.

The vaccine against the HPV virus was licensed in 2006 for use in girls and women ages 9 to 26. Health officials recommend it for girls at age 11 or 12, and some doctors offer it to women in their 20s in "catch-up" vaccination campaigns.

The maker of the Gardasil vaccine, Merck & Co., also wants to market it to women ages 27 to 45, but so far the U.S. Food and Drug Administration has denied that request.

The government-funded study found the HPV vaccine is very cost-effective when given to girls at age 12, but raises questions about the value of pushing for vaccinating adults.

Two researchers at the Harvard School of Public Health did the study, one of the most sophisticated analyses of the issue so far. Results are in Thursday's New England Journal of Medicine.

Gardasil is given in three doses over six months and costs about $375. It targets the two types of HPV or human papillomavirus, believed to be responsible for about 70 percent of cervical cancer cases, and two other types that cause most genital warts. The virus spreads through sex.

Health officials say it's best to give the shots to girls at age 11 or 12, before they begin having sex. Some parents think that age is too young for a vaccination campaign against a sexually transmitted disease.

But that is when the shots make the most economic sense, the researchers found.

They used computer models to predict the health outcomes of girls and women who get the vaccination as well as Pap tests or other cervical cancer and other illnesses targeted by the vaccine.

To determine cost-effectiveness, the researchers used widely accepted economic measures of how much society is willing to pay to extend the life of a person by a year.

They set a figure of $43,600 per year for the Gardasil vaccination of each 12-year-old girl, well below the $100,000 mark seen as an upper range for cost-effective treatments. That assumes the vaccine gives lifetime protection — something doctors don't know is true, because the shot is too new.

"Their base-case assumptions are quite optimistic," wrote Dr. Charlotte Haug, a North Carolina physician, in an editorial that accompanies the study.

Army promises families of fallen soldiers more help

By Kimberly Hefling
Associated Press writer

WASHINGTON — The Army is mailing out thousands of letters to survivors of soldiers killed in Iraq and Afghanistan, asking what it can do to better help them, even years after the deaths of their loved ones.

The Army recognizes it's made mistakes in some dealings with the families of fallen soldiers. Col. Carl M. Johnson, director of the Army's Casualty and Mortuary Affairs Operation Center, said in an interview. And the letter, a copy of which was obtained by The Associated Press, encourages families to be candid in their comments and suggestions.

About 13,500 letters have been sent this month, and copies are expected to reach about 20,000 survivors of those killed while on active duty with the Army since the Sept. 11, 2001, terrorist attacks — either in a war zone, in the United States or elsewhere.

Some families may have been offended by past actions, Johnson said, and the Army wants them to know the service has learned from its mistakes, has made changes and wants to make additional improvements.

"Some of them may have said, 'You know what, I don't need to be a part of the Army any more because they don't want me or they don't know how to treat me,'" Johnson said. "Well, we've learned a lot and I think we've improved a lot and this is a way to reconnect with them."

The Army has made a significant shift and is now committed to providing services to survivors not just in the immediate period after soldiers' deaths but for as long as the families want the help, he said.

The letter came as a surprise to Judy Faunce, whose son, Capt. Brian Faunce, 28, was electrocuted in 2003 in Iraq while he was in a Bradley fighting vehicle. Faunce, whose son was born in Philadelphia and grew up in Bensalem, Pa., said it had been years since she'd heard from the Army.

While she said she had had

a very positive experience working with the Army personnel assigned to help after her son's death, she said she still had not received answers to some questions submitted related to the death. Also, she said she thinks there was a factual error in the initial report from the Defense Department related to the circumstances of her son's death and she'd like to get information about how to get that corrected.

"I think it's wonderful that they're going to reach out and offer assistance to families that may need it... but I really never expected anything from the Army so getting this letter was a surprise," said Faunce, who lives in Ocean, N.J.

The letter informs families that meetings will take place with survivors over the next several weeks at military installations and that they will be receiving additional information about how to attend.

"Please be candid in your conversations with our staff, as your comments and concerns are important to us," says the letter, which was dated Aug. 5. It is signed by Gen. Benaben D. Jones, the Army's adjutant general.

Following complaints from families, the military has made several changes in how it works with them after a soldier's death. For example, more assistance is provided not just to soldiers' spouses, if they are married, but to soldiers' parents as well.

About six months after a death, the Army also sends a questionnaire to family members asking what it did right and wrong.

In 2006, the Army created a long-term case management office tasked with answering questions about how to file Freedom of Information Act requests to obtain records about a soldier's death and with assisting with other matters. Johnson said the effort has grown from having just a few people answering the phone to an Army-wide effort to be more accommodating to survivors over a longer term.

Although the letters went out to families of Army soldiers killed in recent years, Johnson said survivors of those who served in other military branches or during an earlier era can also reach out to them for help.

"We understand the sacrifices you and your family have made in service to this nation and we want to assure you the Army is here to provide you the support you need, for as long as you desire."

Post office offering early retirements

WASHINGTON — In a lackluster economic times, not even postal workers enjoy much of a security envelope.

Faced with losses that could near $1.5 billion this year, the U.S. Postal Service is offering early retirement — without incentives or bonuses — to thousands of clerks, mail handlers and supervisors.

The push to cut costs involves retirement offers to workers 50 and older who have 20 years of service and employees of any age who have 25 years of service. The agency began, in the fiscal year last Oct. 1, with 684,762 career employees, down from 696,138 a year earlier.

Anthony J. Vegliante, the Postal Service's vice president for human resources, said Wednesday that as many as 130,000 workers may be eligible for the offers, some of which are already in the mail. He declined, however, to predict how many would accept them.

"It's not about meeting a magic number," Vegliante said in a telephone interview. He said the strategy is more directed toward future growth, focusing on efficiency and taking advantage of new technologies and automation.

Tentative $10M settlement in church abuse cases

KANSAS CITY — A Roman Catholic diocese has tentatively agreed to pay $10 million to settle nearly 50 sexual abuse claims against the diocese, and 12 of its priests.

Kansas City-St. Joseph Diocese Bishop W. Finn on Wednesday apologized for the abuse that occurred at the hands of current and former clergy members, and promised that steps are being taken to make sure such abuse never happens again.

"A priest is ordained with the privilege of celebrating the church's sacraments by nothing less than a holy order," Finn said at a news conference. "The behaviors attributable to certain priests involved in this matter... not only betray those holy orders but diminish the stature of the faithful and responsible priests who dispatch their ministry effectively and faithfully day in, day out."

Armed 85-year-old woman makes intruder call cops

POINT MARION — An 85-year-old woman boldly went for her gun and busted through a 22-caliber burglar inside her home, then forced him to call police while she kept him in her sights, police said.

"I just walked right on past him to the bedroom and got my gun," Leida Smith said.

Smith heard someone break into her home Sunday afternoon and grabbed the 22-caliber revolver she had been keeping by her bed since a neighbor's home was burglarized a few weeks ago.

"I said 'What are you doing in my house?' He just kept saying 'I didn't do it,'" Smith said.

McCain again questions Obama's judgment on Iraq

By Philip Elliott
Associated Press writer

LAS CRUCES, N.M. — Republican presidential candidate John McCain told voters on Wednesday he is not challenging Barack Obama's patriotism in criticizing his call to pull out of Iraq, only the judgment of his Democratic rival.

"He's making these decisions not because he doesn't love America, but because he doesn't think it matters whether America wins or loses," McCain said.

During a town-hall meeting in this swing state, McCain repeated his charge that Obama would rather forfeit than win in Iraq just to boost his own political ambitions. Obama has denounced that assertion as an assault on his patriotism.

The contest between the two presidential nominees-in-waiting has grown increasingly caustic over the unpopular war in Iraq and how best to end U.S. involvement there. McCain challenged Obama's positions on Iraq, including his opposition to the temporary buildup of troops last year. Obama has acknowledged that the so-called "surge" reduced violence in Iraq, but he adds that the surge has failed in its political goal of facilitating a reconciliation among contentious Iraqi factions.

Republican presidential candidate Sen. John McCain, R-Ariz., speaks during a town hall meeting, Wednesday at the Pan American Center on the campus of New Mexico State University in Las Cruces, N.M.

Obama proposes to withdraw U.S. combat forces from Iraq within 16 months; McCain opposes any timetable for withdrawal. Meanwhile, Iraq leaders have been pressing the U.S. for a timetable.

"He opposed the surge," McCain said. "He said it wouldn't work. He announced his policy toward Iraq the day before he left for the first time in over 900 days to visit Iraq, and then he refuses to acknowledge the surge has succeeded."

Remarkable, remarkable," McCain added. "No rational observer can go to Iraq and see what we are doing for the last years and say the surge hasn't succeeded."

Also Wednesday, McCain started wiring a radio ad that repeated his claims that Obama would raise electric bills and tax tax life savers. Obama spokesman Hari Sevounan called it "another false, low-road attack."

Never far from McCain are questions about the pending vice presidential picks. Obama is expected to choose his running mate in the coming days, and McCain is considering announcing his as early as next week.

One voter asked, "Are you going to pick a vice president that conservatives can rally around in the future, or are you going to give us someone that is going to make us want to stay home?"

Giuliani, Lieberman to speak at GOP convention

WASHINGTON — Socially moderate former New York mayor Rudolph Giuliani and former Democratic vice presidential nominee Joseph Lieberman will have featured speaking roles at next month's Republican National Convention, party officials announced Wednesday.

Giuliani, who once thought he would be the one accepting the GOP nomination, will deliver the keynote address on the Tuesday night of convention week. The mayor's unorthodox campaign never found favor with the party's faithful, and he ended his presidential bid without winning a single delegate.

But he remains a popular figure among Republicans, and is thought to appeal to Democrats and Independents. But he fairly quickly gave anti-abortion activists in the party something to gnaw about.

Asked in a conference call with reporters whether Sen. John McCain, the presumptive GOP presidential nominee, could choose a running mate who supports abortion rights, Giuliani said yes.

He said he knew McCain's first criterion would be selecting a person "who could immediately be president of the United States." He added: "That person happens to be, among other things, pro-choice, the party will support that."

At least 153 dead as jet crashes at Madrid airport

By Harold Hecke
Associated Press writer

MADRID, Spain — A jetliner heading to the popular Canary Islands vacation resort crashed during takeoff Wednesday, turning a wooded area off the end of a runway into a hellish scene of charred bodies and smoldering wreckage. Some 153 were believed dead — Spain's worst air disaster in nearly 25 years.

Only 19 people survived the mid-afternoon crash of the Spanish MD-82 at Madrid's Barajas International Airport, and some were in critical condition, said Development Minister Magdalena Alvarez, whose department oversees civil aviation in Spain.

The airline didn't release a death toll, but said the plane carried 172 crew members and passengers, including two babies and 20 youngsters. There was no word on how many children died.

AS smoke billowed from the wreckage, dozens of fire trucks and ambulances rushed to help, lining a nearby road and filling a field next to a swath of charred vegetation. Helicopters flew over dumping water on fires.

"The scene is devastating," said Pablo Albelá, an emergency rescue worker. "The fuselage is destroyed. The plane burned. I have seen a kilometer of charred land and few whole pieces of the fuselage. It is all destruction."

Rescuers rushed the few survivors to hospitals, while emergency workers shrouded the dead in white sheets. One body lay on burned grass, an arm and a leg poking out.

Later, a long convoy of black hearses rolled onto the airport grounds to carry bodies to a makeshift morgue set up at Madrid's main convention center — the facility used for relatives to identify bodies after the 2004 Islamic terror bombings that killed 191 people on Madrid commuter trains.

A steady stream of hearses arrived at the morgue under police escort Wednesday night. Mourners went to a special waiting area, avoiding photographers and reporters.

It was not immediately clear what went wrong, Alvarez said the jetliner had barely gotten airborne when it veered right, crashed and broke into pieces.

Spanair, a Spanish company wholly owned by Scandinavian Airlines, said it did not know what caused the accident. Alvarez said investigators ruled out foul play and considered the crash an accident. She said the plane's flight data recorders had been recovered.

While preparing for a first takeoff attempt, the plane's pilot reported a breakdown in a gauge that measures temperature outside the plane. The gauge was fixed, delaying the departure, said Spanair spokeswoman Susana Vergara.

It was on the second takeoff attempt that the plane crashed.

Spanair Flight JK5022 originated in Barcelona and was headed for the city of Las Palmas. It was a code-share with Flight LH255 of German carrier Lufthansa.

In Germany, Lufthansa said it issued tickets to seven people who checked in for the flight and four of those were from Germany. It was unclear whether they were German citizens.

The accident was Spain's worst air disaster since 1983, when a Boeing 747 operated by the Colombian airline Avianca crashed near Madrid on landing approach, killing 101 people. In 1985, an Iberia Boeing 727 crashed near Bilbao in the Basque region, killing 140 people.

The deadliest disaster in aviation history occurred in Spain in 1977. Two fully loaded Boeing 747s collided on a runway in the Canary Islands and a total of 583 people died.

After being informed of Wednesday's crash, Prime Minister Jose Luis Rodriguez Zapatero broke off his vacation in southern Spain and rushed back to Madrid, heading straight for the airport. He expressed condolences to people who lost loved ones "in this tragedy that strikes us today." Later he went to the morgue to comfort mourners.

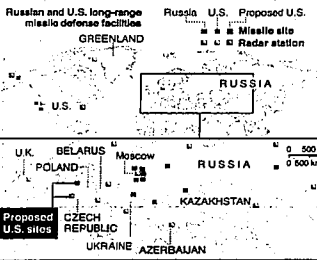

In an expression of mourning, a soccer match in Copenhagen between the national teams of Denmark and Spain started with a minute of silence and players on both teams wore black armbands.

Sergio Alard, a Spanair spokesman, said the crashed plane passed an inspection in January and no problems had been reported since then. The plane was 15 years old and has been owned by Spanair the past nine, he said.

But it has had a number of fatal accidents, the deadliest of which was a crash of Slovenia's Adria Airways flight in Cois Rodriguez Zapatero, which killed 170 people in 1981, when all 180 people on board perished.

Contention over missile shield sites

The U.S. and Poland have signed a deal to build a missile defense base in Poland. The deal has strained relations between Moscow and the West, coming on the heels of Russia's invasion of U.S. ally Georgia.

US and Poland OK missile defense base, riling Moscow

WARSAW, Poland — The United States and Poland signed a deal Wednesday to place a U.S. missile defense base just 115 miles from Russia — a move followed swiftly by a new warning from Moscow of a possible military response.

For many Poles — whose country has been a staunch U.S. ally — the accord represented what they believed would be a guarantee of possible military response.

Negotiators sealed the deal last week against a backdrop of Russian military action in Georgia. Former Soviet republic turned U.S. ally that has worried former Soviet satellites across eastern Europe. It prompted Moscow's sharpest rhetoric yet over the system, which it contends is aimed at Russia despite Washington's insistence the site is purely defensive.

After Wednesday's signing, Secretary of State Condoleezza Rice dismissed any suggestion the 10 missile defense interceptors — which Washington says are intended to defend against the U.S. from the possible threat of long-range ballistic missiles from Iran — represent a threat to Russia.

"Missile defense, of course, is aimed at no one," Rice said. "It is our defense that we do this."

Such comments "border on the bizarre, frankly," Rice told reporters in Warsaw. "The Russians are testing our credibility," she said, adding that Moscow would pay a price for its actions in Georgia, though she did not specify how.

It's also the case that what you threaten Poland, you perhaps forget that it is not 1988," Rice said. "It's 2008 and the United States has a ... firm treaty guarantee to defend Poland's territory as if it was the territory of the United States. So it's probably not wise to throw these threats around."

Poland has been a staunch U.S. ally in both Iraq and Afghanistan. It sent combat troops into Iraq as part of the U.S.-led coalition and had 2,300 troops deployed there at its peak. That has been reduced to about 900, who will be pulled out in October. At the same time, Poland has been building up its military presence in Afghanistan, where it currently has some 1,600 troops.

Hours after the signing, Russia's Foreign Ministry warned that Moscow's response would be beyond diplomacy. The system to be based in Poland lacks "any target other than Russian intercontinental ballistic missiles," it said in a statement, contending the U.S. system "will be broadened and modernized."

In this case Russia will be forced to react, and not only through diplomatic channels, it said without elaborating.

Officials: Deal calls for troop pullback in Iraq

By Qasim Abdul-Zahra and Robert Burns
Associated Press writers

BAGHDAD — Iraqi and U.S. negotiators have completed a draft security agreement that would see American troops leave Iraqi cities as soon as June 30, Iraqi and American officials told The Associated Press on Wednesday.

In Washington, a senior military official said the deal is acceptable to the U.S. side, subject to formal approval by President Bush. It also requires final acceptance by Iraqi leaders, and some members of Iraq's Cabinet oppose some provisions.

Also completed is a companion draft document, known as a strategic framework agreement, spelling out in broad terms the political, security and economic relationships between Iraq and the United States, the senior military official said. The official discussed the draft accords on condition that he not be identified by name because the deals have not been publicly announced and are not final.

In addition to spelling out that U.S. troops would move out of Iraqi cities by next summer, the Iraqi government has pushed for a specific date — most likely the end of 2011 — by which all U.S. forces would depart the country. In the meantime, the U.S. troops would be positioned in bases in other parts of the country to make them less visible while positioned to assist Iraqi forces as needed.

U.S. officials have resisted committing firmly to a specific date for a final pullout, insisting that it would be wiser to set a target linked to the attainment of certain agreed-upon goals. These goals would reflect not only security improvements but also progress on the political and economic fronts.

It was not clear Wednesday how that has been settled in the draft security accord, which the two governments are referring to as a memorandum of understanding. The draft agreement must be approved by the Iraqi parliament, which is in recess until early next month.

The senior U.S. military official said the draft is consistent with U.S. objectives, which include setting a "time horizon" rather than a firm date for the future withdrawal of American forces.

"The improved security in Iraq allows us to have conversations with the Iraqis about setting goals for more American troops to come home and for the Iraqis to take the lead in more combat missions," White House spokesman Gordon Johndrow said. "Any dates in an agreement will be based on conditions on the ground because we do not want to lose the hard-fought gains of the surge."

The draft agreement addresses issues that are key points of contention in the U.S. presidential election — in particular, the future of troop presence in Iraq. GOP hopeful Sen. John McCain is opposed to setting any timeline for withdrawals; his Democratic opponent, Sen. Barack Obama, says he would bring all combat troops home from Iraq within 16 months.

An Iraqi official who was involved in the protracted negotiations said the latest draft was completed last week and sent to the two governments.

The official said a compromise had been worked out on the contentious issue of whether to provide U.S. troops immunity from prosecution under Iraqi law, but he did not give details.

U.S. soldiers walk past as a displaced Iraqi family returns to their home in the Jihad area of west Baghdad, Iraq, Tuesday. The Iraqi army launched a series of raids on the Jihad area last week and arrested the head of a U.S.-funded Sana'i group, aiming to clear the area of suspected insurgents so that about 240 displaced families could return.

Moore named BSU's starting QB

Freshman beats out senior Hamdan

By Dustin Lrapay
Times-News Correspondent

BOISE — Chris Petersen ended months of speculation Wednesday, announcing that redshirt freshman Kellen Moore will start at quarterback for the Boise State Broncos to open the season against Idaho State on Aug. 30.

Moore battled senior Bush Hamdan for the starting role through the spring and fall camps. "These guys made it hard on us, deciding who the quarterback was going to be," Petersen said. "That's a good problem to have as a coach. Kellen has done a fabulous job, not only this fall, but in spring ball, bowl preparations. He's ready to go."

Moore and Hamdan have been near mirror images of each other throughout fall camp. Both seemed ready. Moore got the job.

"I'm pretty excited about the opportunity," Moore said. "I am very thankful the coaches have the confidence in me and feel that I'm ready to take over and follow the long tradition of quarterbacks at this school. The quarterbacks he mentioned Thursday (Bart Hendricks, Ryan Dinwiddie, Jared Zabransky and Taylor Tharp) put up massive numbers during their tenures at BSU. Tharp only played one year, but he finished with the highest completion percentage in school history last season. Zabransky only lost five games in three years and led the team to the famous Fiesta Bowl win.

Dinwiddie and Hendricks both threw for more than 9,000 yards in their careers. Dinwiddie finished all three of his seasons with a quarterback rating above 160. His career average of 168.79 still ranks as the

Peacock looks to be next big foreign star for Golden Eagles

By David Bashore
Times-News writer

For some, the road to the College of Southern Idaho volleyball program is as short as the 1.3 miles from

Twin Falls High School. Others take a more lengthy route.

In order to continue CSI's long-standing tradition of winning championships, head coach Heidi Carrisser continued another prominent tradition bringing in players from overseas.

Jessica Peacock, a 21-year-old Australian who has spent the last five years playing at the international level, joined CSI as one of its newest outside hitters. She's also the 2008 team's third international player, to go with setter Jelena Savic of Croatia and Brazilian outside hitter Nathy Neres.

frontier, of sorts, for an international player who hadn't experienced the United States despite being well-traveled.

"America's the only place I haven't been, so I wanted to try it," said Peacock. "Sometimes you can't get the whole experience by just traveling or coming on holiday."

Peacock is the latest in a string of high-caliber international players — including 2005 NJCAA Division I Player of the Year and 2008 Olympian Asia Kaczor, last season's All-Region 18 selection Gabriela Bolawczyk and a host of others — brought in to both hone their game and deliver national championship banners to the CSI gymnasium.

"What Jessica brings is a wealth of international experience. She's played at a high level," Carrisser said. "What's great for her is that she's all about the team, willing to give herself for the team and you can see that on and off the floor."

"She's very coachable, well liked and received well by all her teammates."

Her dedication is evident: Next month will mark the first time in five years Peacock will be unavailable to play for her country because of her decision to play at CSI. While it's hard to turn down the chance to play for her country, she is at

Van Vliet adjusting to life as a Bengal

By Mark Liptak
Times-News correspondent

POMACATELLO — Those of a certain generation remember the book Future Shock by Alvin Toffler, a look into a changing world and how it would impact the everyday lives of every individual. Now we consider the "future shock" of former Lighthouse Christian star player John Van Vliet.

Van Vliet, Van Vliet, Van Vliet. Van Vliet is another one of the promising walk-ons learning his trade as a first-year member of the Idaho State Bengals. He's a 6-foot-2, 220-pound undersized defensive lineman.

Considering where he's come from and what he's doing now, talk about a shock to the system.

"Those first few days, it was different," he said after practice Wednesday. "I came from a team that had 13 guys on it — how many do you have out here? Eighty-five? Ninety? And all of them are really talented players. There were only about 150 students at my school."

At Lighthouse Christian, playing eight-man football, Van Vliet dominated the football field, doing almost anything he wanted. But at ISU, those days are a thing of the past.

"The biggest adjustment for me was the speed of the game here," said Van Vliet. "That and the game is so complicated at this level, especially when you are on defense. There's a lot of learning to do."

"I'm holding my own, but I know I've got a lot of work to do."

BYU backups sloppy in final scrimmage

By Darnell Dickson
(Provo, Utah) Daily Herald

The final BYU football scrimmage of fall camp was predictably sloppy.

Wednesday's 59-play offering at LaVell Edwards Stadium was filled with fumbles, interceptions, assignments and four-count 'em, four — blocked punts.

The good news for Cougar fans? Few, if any, of the first unit players took any reps. The scrimmage was designed for coaches to make some final decisions on players second, third and fourth on the depth chart. "Our intent was to allow every 2, 3 and 4 on our team to play and to show where exactly they stand," said BYU head coach Bronco Mendenhall. "I was disappointed overall, not only in assignments, but in execution in position mastery and just effort overall."

"We hoped to see where we'd have to consider some players to play and to move up. What we saw was not only a big drop off with the offense and defense but special teams took a drop off even more. Some players at some positions there was so far of a drop off we couldn't function."

The only touchdown drive came at the end of the scrimmage when fourth-string quarterback Stephen Covey came in to run the option offense. He completed a 57-yard pass to redshirt freshman J.J. Dilulgi to the 5-yard

Vandal O-line showing depth, savvy, experience in fall camp

MOSCOW — Idaho offensive line coach Dan Finn and his boss, head coach Robb Akey, were not smiling because of the cool breeze and Ideal temps for August fall camp. Certainly Mother Nature refreshed their spirits, but it was the thought of a bevy of quality running backs moving the chains behind a massive and talented offensive line that gave them the skip in their step.

"From last year at this time to this year at this time we're a lot further ahead," said Finn of his linemen. "They know what I am going to say and how I am going to teach things. When we watch film they're correcting their own mistakes. I got a bunch of guys back who have been with me for two spring balls and all last season. They know all the assignments and calls."

Depth is now an asset that the Vandals have in this area, a good thing since two of their probable starters are out. Senior guard Mike Iupati (6-foot-6, 330 pounds) is out with a shoulder injury and redshirt freshman Matt Cleveland (6-4, 310), pro-

Iupati is expected to return to action in early October.

"He's dying to play," Akey said of Iupati. "But we got (Adam) Korby doing a good job being a leader in there. There's Kris Anderson in there, too. We have (Billy) Bates over at the left tackle now. Who's off the shelf? Will it be (Tyron) Novitski, Kellen Beum?"

Korby, a senior captain, is on this year's Rimington Award watch list. He begins his season with a streak of 35 consecutive starts at center. Novitski, a redshirt freshman, takes up space with his 6-foot-7 frame. He tips the scale at 308 and hails from Curlew, Wash. Beum, a sophomore out of Spokane, is pushing for a starting role.

Said Finn: "I do feel pretty good about

Bolt's double vs. Phelps' feats?

BEIJING — Move over, Michael. Make way for Usain.

The Beijing Games will no longer be remembered only for what Michael Phelps did in the pool. Usain Bolt made sure of it on the track Wednesday night.

Already the champion at 100 meters, Bolt whizzed through the 200, too, making him the first winner of both Olympic sprints since Carl Lewis in 1984.

Yet Bolt one-upped Lewis, Jesse Owens and the other guys who've pulled off the 100-200 double. The long, lanky, joyous Jamaican also set a world record in both races, and that's never been done at an Olympics.

"I blew my mind," said Bolt, "and I blew the world's mind."

So now it's time for a new debate, sports fans. Which is more impressive, Phelps' eight gold medals and seven world records or Bolt leaving no doubt that he's the fastest man in the world, the fastest man ever?

Bolt's Games are memorable a day that was supposed to be a bit of a lull before the big finish this weekend. Only 11 medals were decided, fewest since the first day of competition.

There was another notable news, though. Like the U.S. softball and men's basketball teams getting tested before moving closer to playing for gold. There also was the first-ever medal of any color at any Olympics for Afghanistan (a bronze in women's taekwondo), the debut of BMX cycling and another dingy case, this one involving a medal winner.

The International Olympic Committee said it is investigating Ukraine's Lyudmila Blahovska. If found guilty of doping, the 30-year-old Blahovska would lose her silver medal in heptathlon and be expelled from the games.

Another piece of news is that these Summer Games are on pace to be the most watched in history, a figure skewed by how many of China's 1.3 billion residents were tuned in.

Then again, Phelps — and now Bolt — are making for must-see TV.

The United States still leads the medal count, up only 82-79 over China. The hosts bumped their gold count to 45, with a first-ever sailing victory joining the list.

China already has won more golds than the United States when it hosted the 1996 Olympics in Atlanta, and has tied the number won by the Soviet Union in 1992.

TRACK AND FIELD

Bolt needed just 19.50 seconds to go from start to finish and he made sure not to waste any time showboating.

Pushing with all he had in his favorite event, Bolt broke Michael Johnson's mark that had stood since Atlanta by a mere 0.02, but his margin of victory — 0.66 — was the biggest ever in the Olympic 200.

Bolt is the ninth man to sweep the 100-200, but Bolt is likely more excited about being the first man to own the 100 and 200 world records since fellow Jamaican Donald Carrie did it in the 1970s.

While most eyes were on Bolt, judges say that the second- and third-place finishers — including American Wallace Spearman — went outside their lanes. They were disqualified, bumping Americans Shavon Crawford and Walter Dix up to silver and bronze.

Also at the Bird's Nest on Wednesday: The Jamaican flag also waved proudly for Melaine Walker, who won the women's 400-meter hurdles.

Aksana Miankova of Belarus set an Olympic record in winning the women's hammer throw.

Bernard Lagat advanced to the 5,000-meter final, moving on to Saturday night's medal race.

Three Jamaicans and three Americans were among those advancing to the women's 200 finals, which will be Thursday night.

SOFTBALL

The U.S. came as close to defeat as they have in a long time. Not that it mattered in the end.

The Americans were in a scoreless tie with Japan after seven innings, then scored four runs in the ninth — three on a loozing homer by Crystal Bruce — for a 4-1 victory and a spot in the gold-medal game.

Again, their opponent will be Japan in

The Japanese beat Australia 4-3 in 12 innings late in advance, leaving the Aussies with the bronze.

BASEBALL

The guys went to extra innings against Japan, too, and also pulled out a win.

Brian Barber signed in the go-ahead run to break a scoreless tie in the 11th inning on the way to a 4-2 victory. The Americans earned the third seed in Friday's medal round, with the Japanese getting fourth.

The U.S. will play defending champion Cuba, while Japan will take on South Korea, the only undefeated team.

WRESTLING

Ben Askren has to be thinking, "I cut my hair for this?"

The bushy-haired former NCAA champion who promised a gold medal lost in freestyle's 74-kilogram round of 16, ending his hopes after two matches. The gold ended up around the same neck it has been placed at the last two Olympics — Buwaysa Sayitov of Russia. The three straight golds in the sport ties a record.

"I lost — I don't know what to say, my dreams are crushed," said Askren, who cut the hair he'd been growing for two years because he feared having it pulled.

MEN'S VOLLEYBALL

The U.S. men beat Serbia, remaining undefeated and earning a spot in the semifinals against Russia.

Brazil plays Italy in the other semifinal night on Friday.

MEN'S BEACH VOLLEYBALL

The stunning loss in the tournament opener seems like ancient history for Phil Dalhausser and Todd Rogers, especially now that the Americans are playing for the gold medal.

The guys needed only 41 minutes to eliminate Georgia in straight sets in the semifinals, then watched Brazil's No. 2 team beat its best, the Athens gold medalists.

BEIJING (AP) — Don't doubt this U.S. men's basketball team — and sure don't challenge them, either.

Especially if it's going to make Kobe Bryant flash his NBA MVP form.

Bryant scored 25 points in his best game in Beijing, and the men's U.S. Olympic team advanced to the semifinals by beating Australia 116-85 on Wednesday night.

The United States will play defending champion Argentina or Greece on Friday night for a spot in Sunday's gold medal game.

Locked in what looked like another tough game in Australia, the Americans sent the Aussies' upset hopes down under with a 14-0 burst to open the second half, featuring nine points from Bryant.

LeBron James added 16 points for the Americans, who are guaranteed a chance to play for a medal. They need two more wins for their first gold medal in a major international competition since the 2000 Sydney Games.

As the U.S. expected, with the gold medal getting closer, the games are getting tougher. Australia stayed with the United States for the first 15 minutes of the game, duplicating the strong performance that Australia had against the Americans in an 85-76 exhibition loss in Shanghai on Aug. 5 — a contest the Americans led by seven points midway through the fourth quarter.

U.S. players picked from a list of excuses, including fatigue from too many games and looking past the game while thinking ahead to Beijing, but it was clearly early on that the Australians gained confidence from that effort.

Showing no fear of the Americans, the Australians delivered hard fouls and attacked the basket instead of settling for jump shots. They trailed by just a point after a quarter and five more than halfway through the second — and would have been closer if not for missing four easy shots in the half.

case with deciding to play for CSI.

"I've come for a different experience, so I accept that there are some sacrifices to be made to succeed. I'm not here to have some of the younger girls on the team get a chance."

Peacock was born in Basingstoke, England, a town of 100,000 people, about 45 minutes southwest of London. Her parents moved the family to Australia when she was 2. She said the move was due in no small part to the emphasis placed on athletics in Australia, and it proved to be a good move.

In 11th year — what Americans would call her junior year of high school — Peacock moved to Canberra to join the Australian Institute of Sport, an elite sporting academy reserved for only the best athletes Australia has to offer. Peacock's parents accompanied her to the international volleyball ball scene at age 16, and has been part of the player pool ever since.

"I don't think they expected it to go as far as it did," Peacock said, deadpan, of her parents' decision to move to Australia.

The transition from club and international volleyball in Australia to junior college competition in the United States hasn't been the easiest for Peacock, and that's even before mentioning on-court adjustments. Let lag and time-zone differences turned her days into nights and vice versa. Jet lag followed, and then an injury shelved Peacock during the first week of practice. Then there's the adjusting to food, and being without family for the first extended period of her life.

Having fellow international players on the team has helped. "Every now and then they just explain things a little bit differently on the court and clarify on the bench, but that's just being homesick because it's a lot further away for all of us," Peacock said of Neres and Savie.

"It's probably the biggest time I've had to deal with, so it's been interesting. ... the toughest part is missing my family. I'm a big family girl — my mom's my best friend. You only have a window of an hour or two each day, and you just not to be able to communicate."

Carriser, however, is confident that when the adjustment period comes to a close, Peacock will prove to be a special player for CSI.

She's struggled a little bit putting a complete practice together because of sleep deprivation, being sick and then a muscle injury. But it'll be fun to have her with all this training. We know she's capable," Carriser said of Peacock. "I think she has a very good perspective that volleyball provides opportunities, and that's her past experiences, she's had a lot of opportunities. This is another opportunity for her to grow as a volleyball player."

Carriser's assessment matches Peacock's. That much is obvious in the way she's approached the junior-college level, even if the international stage has allowed her to see far greater competition than almost anything the NJCAA will present.

"It's different in every team you play in ... whether you're playing against someone who's been playing for a week or you're playing against someone there's always something different, something you can learn," Peacock said. "I'm hoping to just fit in the team and make a difference in a positive way."

the depth over all. We got a couple of young guys who gotta get a few more reps. They will step right into those roles."

Finn relies on Korby to teach the fundamentals to newcomers. "In my opinion he's the best center in the WAC," said Finn. "He helps me with instruction, and in fact, all the experienced guys are teaching technique."

"Depth is going to help the team with that match-up situation," said Korby. "It's nice to know that you have someone who is reliable, and if someone goes down, there's someone in the second string that is just as good."

With two quarterbacks vying for the starting nod, Kris Anderson pointed out that the line has to be savvy and smart. With speaker Quinn Ashley getting time behind Nathan Enderling, Vandal fans may see a mix of passing and option runs.

"There's going to be new wrinkles. Football is a game where you're constantly figuring out the other team. So, every time you play another game you constantly have to have something new," said Anderson.

The goal for this year's O-line: Move the chains, eat up the clock and produce multiple 1,000-yard rushers.

"We had Deonte (Jackson) with 1,100 last year so, yeah, obviously we will go to more than one," said Anderson with a grin. "Our plan is keep the ball and not let our plan off the field."

Good plan, especially considering Idaho opens against the potent spread offense of Arizona Wildcats in Aug. 30's season opener.

line, then scooted into the end zone from three yards to two plays later.

"Stephen Covey gets one drive and does what the other quarterbacks were unable to do and that's get into the end zone," Mendenhall said. "I thought O'Neill Chambers showed athleticism and made some plays just as he has in our early scrimmage. I thought the defense was more in a state of readiness than the offense, and the offensive line controls that."

Another touchdown of sorts was scored when Rex Morgan, a freshman wide receiver from Greeley, Colo., blocked a punt against the second string. Matt Marshall ran the ball into the end zone. In fact, BYU tried to punt five times and was blocked four times, twice by Landon Jaussi.

"There will be other things that start to do when we watch film," Mendenhall said. "The lack of readiness can be leveraged. If we uncovered a punt blocker or another receiver or defensive back, it was worth the format today."

Brenden Gaskins was 12 of 15 for 99 yards and two interceptions and third-stringer Kurt McLean was 6-of-12 for 56 yards and one pick. DLHJ had three catches for 96 yards. The offense had plenty of highlights defensively. The interceptors, which all came off of tipped balls, were made by JC transfer nose tackle Veiva Holo, junior linebacker Jeff Bell and walk-on freshman safety Travis Uale. Senior defensive end Brock Richardson, sophomore nose tackle Rick Wolfey, freshman walk-on linbacker Jefferson Court and freshman linbacker Michael Alisa were credited with sacks. Redshirt freshman defensive end Matt Putnam and freshman walk-on nose tackle Victor Unga both knocked down passes at the line of scrimmage.

Despite the sloppy play, Mendenhall said he was pleased with the progress his team has made during fall camp.

"I feel like we have a really good team," he said. "It's the furthest along any team has been since I've been coach. We've accomplished the goals and objectives we set out to do. We're as healthy as we've ever been, and our execution is solid right now. My hope was after today I'd feel better about our depth. That's not what I feel now, but the players in front of them feel very good about it."

Put some leg into it: During kicking drills, sophomore Mitch Payne made field goals from 30, 39, 49 and 56 yards. Then came a short from 63 yards. But when I look at the leadership of Fowler, Bauman, Nixon and Jorgensen, I think it will end up being a good defense. I don't think it will take as long as some people expect."

ready for the Aug. 30 opener.

What's next? Wednesday was the last opportunity for the team to be in the stadium and scrimmage before the opener. Today, players will have weight training and rehab while the coaches finalize the Northern Iowa game plan. There will be a team activity tonight to signal the end of fall camp. "A lot of the Northern Iowa work was done this summer," Mendenhall said. "We'll go through our basic defense. I don't think our plan of our team now. We'll see if our plans still fit or if we need to alter them." Friday will be a "Monday" game week practice with scouting reports, first looks and impressions and basic schemes. Both Saturday and Monday practices will be considered "Tuesday" game week practices in structure.

Mirror images: Despite returning only three starters, Mendenhall continues to praise his defense. "I don't see any significant differences right now from this defense to last year's or the year before. It's certainly logical to say we're young and inexperienced and it may take them a while, and it might, but when I look at the leadership of Fowler, Bauman, Nixon and Jorgensen, I think it will end up being a good defense. I don't think it will take as long as some people expect."

NFL ROUNDUP

Rams RB Jackson ends holdout

ST. LOUIS — St. Louis Rams running back Steven Jackson ended his holdout on Wednesday while his agent continues negotiations for a new contract.

The 235-pound Jackson, a bruising runner and the centerpiece of the team's offense, is entering the final year of a five-year, $7 million deal he signed as a first-round pick in 2004. His prolonged stand perhaps reflected a realignment of his value to an attack that averaged only 16 points last season while going 3-13.

The Rams cut off negotiations in late July on the first day of training camp after Jackson's agent, Eugene Parker, turned down a deal the team said would have put Jackson in the top echelon at his position.

At that time, Jay Zygmont, the Rams' president of football operations, said it means he has no further talks until the running back reports.

"This is certainly a step in the right direction," coach Scott Linehan said. "We're hoping we can get this thing straightened out quickly." Parker did not return a telephone message from the AP.

Jackson is scheduled for a physical Thursday morning and could make it onto the practice field that way. He has a workout scheduled for 10:30 a.m. CDT.

"Steven is one of the best players in the NFL and we'd like to have him back," linebacker Chris Draf said earlier Wednesday before Jackson ended his holdout.

Jackson had his third consecutive 1,000-yard season in 2007 despite missing four games with injuries and the Rams had made signing him to a contract extension a priority in the offseason.

Zygmont said the team approached Jackson's agent not long after the season to discuss a new deal, but negotiations stalled when Jackson switched representatives and signed with Parker in late June.

SEAHAWKS QB HASSELBECK STILL OUT

RENTON, Wash. — Seattle Seahawks quarterback Matt Hasselbeck did not practice again because of a stiff back on Wednesday, and he may also miss his second consecutive preseason game against San Diego.

Coach Mike Holmgren is trying to ensure Hasselbeck is ready for the regular season opener Sept. 7 at Buffalo.

"Absolutely your starting quarterback has to be ready for the first regular-season game," Holmgren said after No. 3 quarterback Charlie Frye again took most of the snaps Wednesday morning.

St. Louis Rams running back Steven Jackson ended his holdout on Wednesday, while his agent continues negotiations for a new contract. Jackson is scheduled for a physical this morning and could make it onto the practice field today.

— Just as he is likely to do on Monday night against the Chargers.

(With) the guys that have played as long as he has played ... you are not quite as concerned about their minutes in the preseason," Holmgren said of Hasselbeck. "Now, I want him to feel better. That's my main concern. But as far as not playing or not getting enough reps, I don't worry about that too much."

Hasselbeck first felt his back tighten while completing seven of eight passes for 70 yards and a touchdown in two sharp series of the preseason opener Aug. 8 at Minnesota.

That could be the only game action for the three-time Pro Bowler before the opener. Seattle has just one practice day between Monday's game and the preseason finale against Oakland on Aug. 29.

"We're going to take it day at a time and just see how he feels," Holmgren said when asked if he would shut down Hasselbeck until the week before the regular season.

EAGLES' CURTIS TO HAVE SURGERY, OUT INDEFINITELY

PHILADELPHIA — Philadelphia wide receiver Kevin Curtis will have surgery Thursday to repair a sports hernia and will likely miss the start of the regular season.

Eagles coach Andy Reid believes

Curtis, the team's top receiver last season, will be back during the regular season, but no timetable has been set for his return.

"I'll be back this season for sure," Reid said. "I'd like to tell you a time on it, but I can't. I don't know what that time is on it."

Even if Curtis is able to return to the field during the season, there is a good chance his performance will be adversely affected. Quarterback Donovan McNabb and tight end L.J. Smith each have seasons derailed by a sports hernia in recent years.

Reid said Curtis "felt tight" after last week's preseason win over Carolina.

"He practiced Tuesday and just felt like he couldn't get up and go full speed," Reid said.

After signing with the Eagles as a free agent last year, Curtis had a career-high 77 catches for a team-best 1,110 yards and six touchdowns.

Reid said Greg Lewis and Hank Baskett will share Curtis' starting spot in Friday's preseason game against New England.

PATS NOT OVERLY CONCERNED BY POOR PRESEASON GAMES

FOXBOROUGH, Mass. — The New England Patriots played poorly on offense in their first exhibition game. The offense and defense were shaky in the second game.

"It's only the preseason, so there are no signs of panic in their locker room, even with Tom Brady limited by a foot injury. Yet a team that was a perfect 10-0 before losing the Super Bowl certainly doesn't look like the team."

"It's our preparation for the season," defensive tackle Jarvis Green said Wednesday. "We've got to get better because you never stay the same. You get better or worse."

New England has been outscored 21.5 points to 12.5 in losses to Baltimore and Tampa Bay. Last regular season, they averaged 36.8 points and allowed only 17.

Of course, coach Bill Belichick hasn't installed sophisticated game plans and has taken long looks at youngsters and other players trying to make the team. But the third exhibition game is usually where the first-stringers play the most and the strategies are more complex.

So Friday night's home game against Philadelphia should be a decent test against a good team. The Eagles nearly beat the Patriots last season even though A.J. Feeley played in place of injured quarterback Donovan McNabb.

Kyle Busch, left, pours water onto his crew chief, Jason Ratcliff, April 5 as they celebrate in victory lane after winning the NASCAR Nationwide Series' O'Reilly 300 auto race in Fort Worth, Texas. NASCAR suspended seven crew members of Joe Gibbs Racing, including Ratcliff, on Wednesday for cheating after last weekend's Nationwide Series race.

NASCAR hands out suspension to Gibbs

CHARLOTTE, N.C. (AP) — NASCAR's latest attempt to reel in the rule-breakers aimed at an unfamiliar target: the normally squeaky-clean Joe Gibbs Racing.

NASCAR's decision Wednesday to suspend seven JGR crew members indefinitely for attempting to manipulate a horsepower test after a Nationwide Series race last weekend put a serious dent in owner Joe Gibbs' reputation.

While NASCAR decided against banning the cars from future races, the penalties were among the harshest NASCAR has levied.

— Crew chiefs Jason Ratcliff and Dave Rogers were suspended and fined $50,000 each.

— No. 18 car chief Dorian Thorsen, engine tuner Michael Johnson and crew member Toby Bigelow and No. 20 car chief Richard Bray and engine tuner Dan Bajek are all suspended indefinitely.

— Drivers Tony Stewart and Joey Logano were each docked 150 driver points. JGR was stripped of 150 owner points for each car, and the teams were placed on probation for the rest of the season.

"In this particular case, the rule violation was serious and was attempting to interfere with our ability to conduct an accurate post-race competitive analysis," NASCAR spokesman Kerry Tharp said. "It called for a serious reaction on our part and we think the penalty speaks to that."

Gibbs, the former Washington Redskins coach, indicated he would not appeal the major penalties. Gibbs said he'd even impose additional fines, and all the crew members involved would be suspended at least through the end of the season.

"In 17 years we have never had any representative of Joe Gibbs Racing knowingly act outside of NASCAR's rules, and that is something we consider essential to how we operate on a daily basis," Gibbs said in a statement. "What we have determined is that these individuals involved used extremely poor judgment."

After Stewart finished third in Saturday's race at Michigan International Speedway in the No. 20 car and Logano was seventh in the No. 18, inspectors found magnets on the gas pedals on both cars when they were sent to the chassis dyno for examination. NASCAR's vice president of competition, Robin Pemberton said the teams were attempting to mask the cars' true horsepower.

"I would like to apologize to the employees and partners of Joe Gibbs Racing," Ratcliff said in a statement. "Because of poor decision making, I have failed you as the leader of this team and I am solely responsible for this situation. Secondly, I apologize to the men and women of NASCAR for my dishonesty and interference during a testing event."

Clayson, Bryant Ward and Erik Jacobson, it was the appeal of the Bengal coaching staff that led Van Vliet to Poncahola.

"I've been coming to the Bengals' summer camp for four years, and last year I really tried to get to know the new coaching staff," he said. "Coach Whitworth was still around and that helped me. I was comfortable being here and around the coaches. They were friendly, they tried to get to know me."

The future isn't guaranteed for the dark-haired player with a big smile. But year I really tried to get to know the new with the choice he's made and will do everything he can to get meaningful playing time at some point in his college career.

Said Van Vliet: "I made up my mind that I was going to play football at the highest level I could go to. That turned out to be here and I want to make the most of it."

Moore

highest in the history of the NFL.

Petersen thinks Moore may be farther along than any freshman in the program's history. He will become the first freshman to ever start the opening game of a season in the NFL. He cracks started the eighth game his freshman year.

"He's different certainly than any of the young guys I've seen, as far as how far ahead mentally he is in the scheme of things," Petersen said. "I can't wait to watch him play. I think he has a tremendous feel for the game. It's nice."

"Now each guys up and teach them each reads and where to go with the ball, but things change very fast out there. A lot of this comes down to instincts and big decisions that are hard to teach."

Moore set just about every passing record in Washington high school football history. He led Prosser High School to a 12-1 record as a senior, racking up 200 passing yards to go with 67 touchdowns and only seven interceptions.

"He's one of those guys who gets the ball out in a hurry," Petersen said. "He can feel the rush and the ball comes out when he's being rushed. He uses his backs and his check downs really well. He's got a little bit of Brett Favre in him when he's trying to fire something and you're like 'whoa, where did that come from?' Brett Favre will get those in there and he will too."

Hamdan will have to settle, for now, into a backup role again. He lost the starting battle to Tharp last season and only ended up throwing six passes, falling to fourth in the depth chart.

Petersen said the decision was hard, as was breaking the news to the senior.

"Bush has been one of my favorite guys to ever coach," Petersen said. "These are hard things. It's kind of a bittersweet day, because we feel awesome about Kellen, but that's a hard thing to tell somebody that's been here five years, that's done everything we've asked, a tremendous ambassador for our football program, for this university, has gotten better every year, including this year. To have that conversation is tough."

Hamdan will start as the No. 2 guy, Petersen said he still needs the senior, adding that all the quarterbacks help in gameplanning and film study, signals from the sideline. They help each other. Now Hamdan will have to help the guy who took the job from him.

"(Hamdan is) a guy who's been around a long time and knows us, the coaches, very well, knows what the schemes all about, asks unbelievable questions in meetings," Petersen said. "We're all in this together. We need all of our guys to get done what we need to get done."

It all came down to a 'gut decision,' Petersen said. He referred to Moore as a 'football junkie,' said his computer is filled with a multitude of offenses he has studied over the years.

Petersen said he first noticed Moore's focus during the preparations for the Hawaii Bowl last season, that the freshman had soaked in everything he was going to be the starter, even though he sat out last season as a redshirt.

"I watched him the whole time," Petersen said. "He was processing every word that was being said, and digesting this like he was the starter."

"He has been doing this for a very long time which has given him the opportunity to be a lot farther along than your normal freshman-type player."

The decision has been made and Moore now gets the starting reps. The gameplan will be built around him and the multitude of weapons at the skill positions.

"It's always exciting," Moore said. "Now we're focusing on Week 1, Idaho State. It's all about now. We've got to take back that WAC. Like we like to say lately."

For now, the reins of the Bronco program are in the left hand of a 6-0, 187-pound red-shirt freshman, Kellen Moore, already has history in the state of Washington.

This season he begins his quest toward history at the national level.

HOROSCOPE BY JERALDINE SAUNDERS

IF AUGUST 21 IS YOUR BIRTHDAY, you have any important project, your business sense and expertise are at a high point this month. Because you are passionate about success, no obstacles can possibly stand in your way. If you just want to start a diet or return to school, in December you may have some prayers answered. Remain alert and take advantage of any opportunities that arrive, since you may not fully recognize them as being beneficial. You are likely to be satisfied with the status quo next spring and happy to travel along without making waves or kicking up a fuss, but it is a smart idea to avoid making major changes or starts in February or March.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Don't let an "aw, shucks" philosophy get you. Those laid-back attitudes of yours (or his) might have a trick or two up their sleeve. You are dealing with matters and relationships of prime importance.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Mind your eye sun in Gemini. Financial matters and business give you the edge in any competition. Accept an opportunity to take command. A special someone may be passionately persuasive later tonight.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): No one lives in an ivory tower. Your cussing charm can get the message across to others without using semaphore signals. This might be a good time to present your ideas to those who hold opposing views.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Don't be content to just be a link in the food chain. Restore your confidence by impressing a co-worker or looking up with a fascinating new hobby. Existing relationships get an infusion of passion.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Small deeds don't mean you are dealing with small potatoes. There is a lot more than meets the eye. You can win someone's heart just as easily as you can win someone's trust where a business deal is concerned.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Invite others into your territory rather than defending it. Don't draw a line in the sand over deeply entrenched beliefs. Don't settle for the mundane when you can easily set your sights on the superlative.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): People are blind to your warts and whiskers. There is a wee bit of magic in today's stars that make you appear in a more attractive light. This is a good time to ask for a raise or make a fresh commit-

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Don't settle for second best. Set your sights on the best that money or passion can obtain. Your money-making instincts are honed to a sharp edge, so dig up an ample piece of economic pie.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Your feet-propped-up-on-the-desk style belies your industriousness. You may have many irons in the fire, so slip up on anything of importance. A bit of romantic flirtation hits the mark.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Don't look a gift horse in the mouth. An unexpected gift or present might drop in your lap. Graciousness from others is a signal that you deserve, and should enjoy, respect from your peers.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Play the balloon game. You are more attractive than usual and someone may let you know that you have their heart in your hands. Your romance can have a happy ending.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Little do you realize that you can pay off. Cash might not grow on trees, but that doesn't mean the pickings aren't plentiful. Start projects and put extra effort into making your most treasured plans a reality.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Thursday, August 21, the 234th day of 2008. There are 132 days left in the year.

Today's Highlight in History:

In the early hours of Aug. 21, 1968, the Soviet Union and other Warsaw Pact nations began invading Czechoslovakia to crush the "Prague Spring" liberalization drive by Alexander Dubcek.

On this date:

In 1831, former slave Nat Turner led a violent insurrection in Virginia. (He was later executed.)

In 1881, the most of seven debates between Illinois senatorial contenders Abraham Lincoln and Stephen Douglas took place.

In 1878, the American Bar Association was founded in Statonville, N.Y.

In 1911, Leonardo da Vinci's "Mona Lisa" was stolen from the Louvre Museum in Paris. (The painting turned up two years later, in Italy.)

In 1920, exiled Communist revolutionary Leon Trotsky died in Mexico City from wounds inflicted by an assassin the day before.

In 1944, the United States, Britain, the Soviet Union and China opened talks in Dumbarton Oaks in Washington that helped pave the way for establishment of the United Nations.

In 1959, Hawaii became the 50th state as President Eisenhower signed an executive order, five months after he'd signed the Hawaiian statehood bill.

In 1963, martial law was declared in South Vietnam as police and army troops began a crackdown on Buddhist anti-government protesters.

In 1981, Philippine opposition leader Benigno S. Aquino Jr., ending a self-imposed exile in the United States, was shot dead moments after stepping off a plane at Manila International Airport.

In 1991, the hard-line coup against Soviet President Mikhail S. Gorbachev collapsed in the face of a popular uprising led by Russian federation President Boris N. Yeltsin.

Ten years ago: Samuel H. Bowers, a 73-year-old former Ku Klux Klan leader, was convicted in Hattiesburg, Miss., of ordering a 1966 firebombing that killed rights activist Vernon Dahmer.

Five years ago: Alabama's top judge, Chief Justice Roy Moore, refused to back down in his fight to keep a Ten Commandments monument and lashed out at his colleagues who sided with the state
