BRIGHT DAMAGE TO TEXAS SPUD CROP REPORTED

Adverse Weather Conditions in
Rio Grande Valley Said
To Be Cause.

SPRING PLANTING LAGS

Idaho Shipments Heavy During Week; Prices Low

IDAHO — PALIS—According to announcement from the Washington office of the bureau of agricultural economics, department of agriculture, portions of the lower Rio Grande valley in Texas suffered severely from adverse weather. Warm, foggy weather, and a moist soil resulted in the development of a "black rot" disease which spread actively to the entire area. It is estimated that 100,000 acres may be lost due to the excessive rainfall. Hardest hit areas include the Pecos Valley crop should start about March 20, but there is a chance that a few cars might move prior to that date. Current market transaction last season amounted to $4,682.

Idaho shipments continued heavy last week, 1,100 cars moving in and out of the Upper Snake River valley loadings amounted to 545 carloads. Lower valley loadings were 100 cars and 6 carloads were moved in other directions in the state. To date there has been more than 10,000 cars shipped from the upper valley, and about 9,000 from the lower valley. Shipping movement from other districts helps the state total to about 25,000 carloads of spuds harvested. These shipments are already larger than the total movement of all previous crops except that of 1937, which is believed to be a record for Idaho spud shipments.

Carlet prices on Idaho potatoes are still being held at 10¢ per bushel pack of number one. Bushels brought around 70-75¢ each truck while number two were in some cases 50¢ each truck with a few cars selling at 45¢ each.

Combination packs of No. 1 and No. 2 Russets in plain bags were offered at 50¢ each. Russets in boxes were offered at 55¢ each. Russets in fine demand late last week and available supplies were practically exhausted.

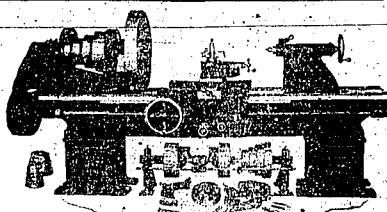

Future sales for April delivery at Chicago showed a slight advance in price over the last few weeks, reaching 14¢ at the close of Tuesday's market. Dealers were somewhat reluctant to observe themselves. Price reflected the condition existing—in the earliest potato-growing areas. Terms of payment were not materially changed from the previous week but a better understanding prevailed at many shipping points throughout the country.
