Cardinals Beat Cincinnati to Hold Lead

NEW YORK, Apr. 23 (UP)—The New York Yankees were in sole possession of first place in the American League today, but victory that put them there yesterday was roughly leveled by a defeat from the services of the fifth inning for at least a week. Each half of a game in his right as he attempted to catch Tom Dyer's fly in the fifth inning of the Yankees' 2-2 triumph over the Boston Red Sox.

Washington's 2-2 defeat of Philadelphia Athletics while Cleveland was losing to the Chicago White Sox enabled the Yankees to climb into the leadership.

Lefty Grove held the Senators safe all the way with Crona's base run in the second frame accounting for Washington's defeat. Behind the catching of a fly by Pat Caraway, the Chicago White Sox whipped Cleveland 10 to 2.

The Sox' defeat eliminated their lead in the National League by defeating Cincinnati, 7 to 1. Robert's double after the homer and Watkins had singled scored the winning tally in the sixth.

Brooklyn's weary heroes made their 1931 home debut by taking another facing, this time at the hands of the Boston Braves. 4 to 0 Ed Tolan's Zachary hold the Boston to four hits, Phelps on the mound for Brooklyn, turned in a good performance but his mates, counting their sloppy fielding, contributed four errors.

The New York Giants celebrated their official home opening with a 5 to 4 victory over the Philadelphia Phillies.

AN ELECTION

THERE is no denying it, the 1932 election is well underway. Many eyes are already going through the processes of being elected and defeated, maybe even without the knowledge that they are candidates.

Perhaps the 1932 election will climax all previous such events in the matter of interest, for more and more persons have come to realize the importance of government and its relation to the personal welfare of the individual.

From now on we may look for much blathering as regards the availability of presidential candidates, with the field woefully short of pre-eminent candidates. Certainly the Republicans are bound to Hoover and will of necessity have to renominate him, mainly because he is entitled to face the country on his record, but in addition because the party right now faces the peculiar situation of having no one else to run.

To be sure, that is an easy way of disposing of Morrow, Curtis, Hughes, Borah, et al, but most of us can readily perceive sufficient reasons for eliminating them.

On the other side of the fence, there is already a veritable scramble being made for public favor, even at this early date. Franklin D. Roosevelt, and Owen D. Young are out in front, doing nothing to prevent their names receiving consideration. Ritchie clubs have been organized, and only this week there was put into the mails a speech by Cox before the Democratic national committee, evidencing some sort of a movement for him—possibly self-inspired. Then there are rumblings of a McAdoo boom, and back of them all sits Al Smith in his Empire building, puffing his aromatic cigar.

Now it is not necessarily true that all the names mentioned in either the Republican or Democratic line-ups are desirable candidates. But the fact remains that the two that are to be chosen to oppose each other just a little over a year from now, had better be.

Neither of the parties should be satisfied with anything less than its best man, its most formidable candidate. Certainly the electorate is going to be mighty particular.

The people are doing a lot of thinking: prohibition, unemployment, business conditions, farm prices, production, tariff, Communism, foreign relations, Central America, veterans' bonus, gangsters, factories, wheels, party management, taxes, and everything down to the weather, which in some quarters they may be charging up to Hoover.

Those persons who are convinced that they have their man picked already will stay with their opinions doubtlessly to the bitter end. But the great majority of the people, or what is more significant, most of the members of the parties, especially the Democrats are awaiting developments and looking for the Leader, whoever he is, to crystallize party sentiment in his favor.

That man's fate is in the lap of the gods.

ORGANIZED CRIME MUST GO.

SHALLOW-THINKING men have often pointed to Chicago as the most wicked city in the country. Watching the drama between society and entrenched gangsters, they have at times felt sorry for America's second largest metropolis. Such an attitude is not justified.

Chicago is fortunate. The citizenry is crime-conscious. The forces of law and order are gaining momentum, slowly it is true, but nevertheless effectively. Sooner or later organized crime must surrender.

The new mayor, Cermak, may be but an incident. If he fulfills his promises and wipes out gangdom he should be congratulated. If he fails, the drive will continue without him and, if necessary, despite him. The masses are fundamentally honest and with full realization that crime is a great problem they are going to solve it.

The Chicago Crime Commission, now more than 12 years old, is bringing intelligence to solve the problem. Honest lawyers are cooperating. Men like Judge Lyle are wholeheartedly buck of any movement that will better conditions. Capone and all-he symbolizes will eventually abdicate. Fearless leaders will demand it.

Now, before so-called experts start deriding lawless Chicago, conditions in other cities should be investigated. Many of them have more crime than the Illinois city. To arouse the people and make them aware of true conditions in their communities is a finer duty than knocking Chicago.

In many cases, where crime and corruption is rampant, the real state of affairs hasn't been fully exposed. Let the experts think that over. They can be of service.

Those given to complaint over Wednesday's storm, must bear in mind that they got just a sample of what the pioneers of this section went through time and time again. Many thought such weather was a thing of the past here and for the most part it is, but this week's exhibition was no "patchin'" to the real storm of 1905-1908, thank God!

What Others Say

ANOTHER QUARTER MILLION ACRES

(Idaho Times-Register)

The promoters of the Idaho project, the first of which is to bring into cultivation about 100,000 acres in the Snake river valley, are making a good thing out of the minds of many of the landowners in that section. The cost is estimated at $15 million dollars, which would bring the per acre cost to $150. Many experienced farmers to doubt the possibility of paying interest on the investment.

Just how much water is there in the Snake river? Right now there is some considerable discussion of the amount of water available for irrigation this season and were it not for the art of water there would be no question of allowing all these acres would not be water available at the normal time.

Those who engaged in agriculture make a good thing out of the much land in cultivation now to find a market for the products. Promoters make the attention it is necessary to plan in advance order to anticipate the needs of future generations.

Modern methods of farming and the conservation of water and use of products formerly let go to waste is to be saving the problem of the future without bringing any great amount of additional lands into production at a cost making success prohibitive.

Evening Times Cooking Class Enters Variety Course

LATEST RECIPES UNFOLD AS NEW APPETITE TESTERS

Salads of Fruit, Vegetables And Fish Added to List For Students

"If you want to bring variety and distinction to your salad course select your salads according to the part they are to play in the menu . . . and select a salad dressing that will bring out all the flavors of the salad ingredients."

This was the statement made yesterday at the Evening Times cooking school by Mrs. Jessie Scott in a talk on appropriate salad dressings.

"For every occasion," Mrs. Scott said, "there is an appropriate kind of salad and for every different kind of salad there is an appropriate dressing. Mix the dressings as suggested in the recipes of the salad."

Mrs. Scott talked on appropriate salad dressings and made reference to the new book on this subject which was just written by Miss Mary H. Murray.

Each Miss Place

"Each kind of salad," Mrs. Scott said, "has its own appropriate place . . . in the menu in the pleasant art of dining. Some, for instance, serve best at formal dinners and others belong to the luncheon or to the buffet supper. And still others are best at the bridge party or afternoon tea."

"The hostess of today, who may select her salad course on the almost limitless range, is presumed to know the correct salad for every meal and every occasion . . . and which dressing goes best with the salad she is going to serve."

"The dressing and the salad should be served with just as much care as the turkey and current jolly good ducks. So, because of this, our salad dressing can possibly be served on all kinds of salads. It would be ridiculous to disregard all the possibilities our wide range of salads offers us. Each one would taste like all the others. All their individual flavors would be leveled to one taste."

Nothing Takes Its Place

"Just as Miss Murray says in her new book, nothing can take the place of the salad dressing. You make yourself to suit the flavors of the salad. Because the dressing you make is very definite creation . . . an expression of your originality and your own good taste."

"If there is no rule for success in salads it is this: Decide what part you want the salad to play in your meal and then select the salad that is best suited for the occasion. And then mix a dressing that best suits the flavors of the salad."

Mrs. Scott made several salads which were prepared for different occasions.

If you are going to have a formal dinner, Mrs. Scott suggested an asparagus salad, which is to be served between the main course and the dessert. In this case the salad refreshes the appetite after the heavy main course for the dinner. It should therefore be light and simple . . . and served with a dressing which complements the delicate flavors of the salad. Mrs. Scott gave the following recipe for the salad and its dressing:

Asparagus Salad

Place three stalks of large asparagus on a thick slice of tomato. Put a ring of green pepper around the asparagus. Garnish with leaves of crisp lettuce.

Bechamel (White Dressing)

Combine three tablespoons of Wesson Oil and three tablespoons of vinegar, one tablespoon of salt, and one teaspoonful each of dry mustard and paprika. Beat thoroughly and then add two tablespoons of onion chopped very fine. This dressing has a long and active career.

If your salad is to be served before the main course, replacing the special, a fruit salad would be most appropriate, Mrs. Scott said. Care should be taken, however, to select a salad and a dressing not too sweet or too fat. Some of the excellent other salads which are most like this:

Peach or Pear Salad

Place a half of a can of peach or pear on a nest of shredded lettuce and fill the hollow with Amvica. Chopped string beans with three large radishes.

American Cheese Dressing

Take six tablespoons of Wesson Oil and one tablespoon of onion juice, one (tablespoon) of orange juice, half teaspoon of salt, three-quarters of a teaspoon of paprika, and four teaspoons of mayonnaise. Beat thoroughly and then add three-quarters of a cup of grated American cheese. Put in all the ingredients and thoroughly combine.

Sometimes the salad plays the part of the main course. In this case, Mrs. Scott said, the salad should be served before the main course. In this case, the salad should be served before the main course. In this case, the salad should be served before the main course.

Trametes Salad

Beat thoroughly and then add three-quarters of a cup of grated American cheese. Put in all the ingredients and thoroughly combine.

MURRAY RECIPE BOOKS ON HAND AT TIMES OFFICE

Women May Obtain Copies by Sending in Names to this Newspaper

"So many women were anxious to see copies of Miss Murray's new booklet on appropriate salad dressings, which was offered at yesterday's session of the Evening Times' cooking school, that the supply of booklets was soon exhausted. And, as a result many women in the audience failed to get their copies."

Miss Murray's booklet is already being called the 'bible' of modern salad service. It tells you what dressings go best with what salads and how to serve salads according to the customs and fashions of today.

Nourishment is Greatest Factor in Household Cooking

HEALTH-BUILDING ON SMALL INCOME TEST OF MANAGER

Purchasing of Proper Foods and Kitchen Application is Big Question

To provide nourishing food for a family is not a simple task, and when the income is small the problem becomes more difficult. Knowledge both of food values and human needs coupled with ingenuity and much thought makes it possible to spend the food allowance wisely and well.

Milk is the food which stands first in the list of foods essential to health. Comparing its relative food value and cost with other common food-stuffs, it is found to be the cheapest source of calcium, iron, potassium and phosphorus. And although it is an expensive source of iron, since its iron content is low, this condition is compensated in part by the fact that the iron is in an especially available form.

When milk is supplied in adequate amounts, the diet may as well be iron-free, without sacrificing any real essential to nutrition. Professor Sherman recommends a quart of milk a day for every boy until he is 21, and a pint of milk a day for every girl until she has reached her first child. It is generally agreed that a pint of milk a day for each child and one-half pint for each adult is the minimum amount that should be supplied and that no diet should fail to contain a full quart of milk a day for every child and a pint for each adult in each year and every effort should be made to supply it.

To Nourish the Young

There are many reasons why no other food stuff gives greater returns for the money expended than milk does. In the first place, milk is one of the foods primarily designed by nature to nourish the young and for that reason contains elements which, weight for weight, furnish more nourishment to the human body than almost any other food.

The generous use of milk in the diet safeguards the body against many of the deficiency diseases, its vitamin and mineral content is high. In fact, milk is rich in Vitamin A that if a child is given a full quart a day there is little danger of a deficiency of this vitamin no matter what other foods may be lacking. The vitamin B content is good. The presence of Vitamin C is so variable that it should not be depended upon. Fruits and vegetables must be used to supply this vitamin.

Secret of Good Diet

The protein, fat and carbohydrate calories of milk are particularly well utilized by the body. The protein is recognized as "high quality" of the very best quality for growth. The fat is in emulsified form—broken up into tiny globules—which makes it especially easy to digest. The carbohydrate in the form of milk sugar is broken up very easily used by the body.

If milk is supplemented with whole grain cereals, the legumes—dried peas, beans, lentils and potatoes—the cheaper vegetables, such as potatoes, carrots, cabbage, turnips and turnip greens, tomatoes, dried fruits and fresh fruits in season, a varied and complete diet can be maintained at low cost.

The secret of making an interesting dietary for a small amount of money lies in developing the characteristic flavor of the bland foods as much as possible and to include in the day's menu some of the highly flavored foods.
