ADMITTING FOREIGN MATES

THE bill now pending before Congress which would admit to this country the foreign-born husbands or wives of naturalized American women and men is a measure that ought to be passed as a matter of course.

In general, the sentiment of the country is undoubtedly squarely in favor of strict immigration restrictions. We discovered, some years ago, that the melting pot was not functioning perfectly, and cutting down on immigration was nothing more than ordinary common sense.

But the law must be humane and reasonable. To admit to this country the mates of immigrants who have become citizens would not appreciably swell the total of incoming foreigners. And it would relieve a good deal of distress and avert a lot of unnecessary suffering and unhappiness.

WONDERFUL POSSIBILITIES

THERE are many evidences of a welcome upturn in local business conditions, traditionally present with the passing of the sluggishness of Winter and the anticipation of Spring.

The new season always brings with it new demands on the part of the public for farm equipment, for apparel and for diverse commodities; in an agricultural community the Spring season restores farm labor activity and in consequence business demands.

The entrance of our new large mercantile establishment into the Twin Falls field is a gratifying evidence of the reputation this section possesses; and locally there are many other indications of bright prospects, including the possibilities of such cash crops as sugar beets this year by virtue of the cold winter and the apparent absence of pest problems.

The first month of 1932 has made very definite contributions to a year destined to have wonderful possibilities.

BRITAIN'S "KINGDOMS"

ONE of the interesting little developments in current history that went almost unnoticed by the world at large was the signing by King George recently of the Westminster statute, which turned the dominions of the British empire into kingdoms.

Thus, technically, the Dominion of Canada is now the Kingdom of Canada, the Dominion of Australia is the Kingdom of Australia, and so on.

Actually, it makes very little difference, and the word "dominion" will probably continue to be used in ordinary speech. But the action seems to mark the culmination of the long movement for complete autonomy within the British empire. The various "kingdoms" of the empire are now, to all intents and purposes, independent nations. Only imperial sentiment, attachment to the homeland and loyalty to the throne bind them to Britain.

Yet there is every reason to suppose that those intangible ties will be as binding as the most loyal son of the empire could wish.

WHY FOLLOW THE MARKET?

MILLIONS of eyes all over the land are following the trends of security prices on Wall street. Every spark brings a wave of enthusiasm and hope. Every decline darkens the gloom. The stock market, in some way, has become a regulator of national feeling. Our hopes rise and fall with the fortunes of the Morgans and the Rockefellers.

But why, asks the Boise Capital News, should we worry or enthuse about the development of these vast fortunes, in which we do not share?

Why should we look upon the stock market as a barometer of hope?

Why has this odd way of thinking developed?

When we have money to spend we eat too much and get indigestion. Hence, should we welcome attacks of indigestion as a sure sign of coming wealth?

When the nation is prosperous and the national payroll is huge, big business takes out enormous profits to build yachts and palaces for the millionaires—and their stocks go up and up. And so, it seems, to be popular to follow the backward reasoning that more profiteering on the part of the millionaires will add to our own welfare.

And this, to us, seems all wrong.

The kind of prosperity we want is a prosperity that will eliminate unemployment and be more evenly distributed through the adoption of a higher-wage basis. Let big steel and the aluminum trust take care of themselves.

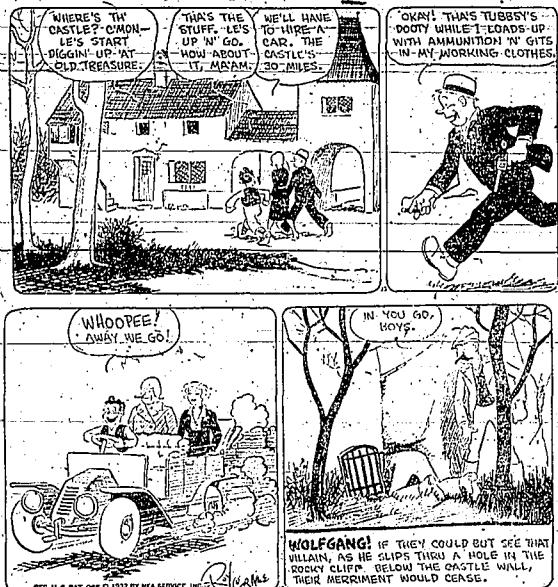

After all, why should we be happy just because a few men—who hold practically all of the stocks listed on the exchange—can sit back with their hands folded and watch their wealth increase by the millions and billions on a rising market?

The wealth we need most is more money for everybody.

JUST HITS OF HUMAN INTEREST FROM EVERYWHERE

A friendly chimpanzee which escaped from his cage off the island kissed the 12-year-old daughter of George R. Washington's last appearance because of his attraction to Harry Johnson, deputy city prosecutor of Hollywood.

Coy, Queenie and Yancy, animal film celebrities, sometimes sit out at the theater—especially in doorsteps of play with children.

Northland and a few other residents of the neighborhood participated—but children came to the surprise of the chimp, and testy words were offered when they were kissed.

Tony Gentile, owner of the house illustrated their usual hardnesses by "kissing" by "thighs" of Joe Miller, 24, who had been a "hot" woman, cook served knight, in the face during the course of a picture without anger.

So rattled was Robert Gaudie, Los Angeles, when a bandit forced him into an automobile driven to a flat-roofed garage, he dashed out, found a .38 at the establishment and nearly caromed.

Gaudie entered the shop, dressed in his underwear with the intruder and waited on his nerve to report the robbery.

"All right, then, give me back the gun," the highwayman said. "And when you get it let's have another round."

Gaudie gave him $17, and today was trying to figure out why he had not captured the bandit with his own gun.

Charley Padwick, who recently was refused an amateur athletic card to participate in amateur events, has now joined the title of "the most notorious hooligan" will not tell all about the A. A. U.

He asserted he had turned down an amateur athletic expense with this statement:

"I hope I am no good a sport to do such a thing. I still believe that I will be permitted to compete and so have my bid for the American Olympic team."

When a "wine party" turned out to be a grape juice party, students participating were entitled to their juice, but deplored the lack of education at Los Angeles.

The board refused to grant diplomas to four seniors at Bell High School and disciplined eleven others on the ground that they had participated in a wine party.

Parents claimed that although the boys had sent one of their sons to a vineyard for wine, the boy's father had agreed to have him institutionalized, not this way from smoking a big black cigar.

Locked in a Salt Lake police station, "Sergeant Jack" police dog at large, demonstrated his intense dislike of oranges by chewing a whole orange on the desk and "chasing into the receiver."

A frightened telephone operator in the local office through to the police station. Answered. Retreated to a corner and closed the door to investigate.

A swat team to the station found the dog gone. Officers were met at the station door by a definitely happy and triumphant dog.

The trial marriage of Leslie Fuerrier, 35, former world-class endurance swimmer, was shattered through radio reports that he had got what pictures should be hung, she asserted yesterday at Los Angeles.

The swimmer married George for the field for birds in South America empires despite the authorities' warning that the birds are not in the field in advance of such issues and that bribery was used in the flotation of at least one large international loan.

It begins to appear that this country, by design or not, was played to the tune of $15 million, and well on its face. While our exports down there were increasing by hundreds of millions of dollars, our loans were decreasing by hundreds of millions of dollars, and we were, in effect, paying for the exports which those countries were commanding. Now, as a result of the International Conference, we are told, the loans are up to about 60 issues in Latin America are in default, including several government loans, and their Latin-American import term loans have been virtually discontinued on the New York market—and the Spanish colonies were paid off at less than 10 cents on the dollar.

Latin America has had an era of revolutions, but defaulted on $150 million of debts and has "been" and "is" bad credit, and has now lost all confidence in the ability of the government to meet its obligations to us, except that while the Hoover administration has been unable to pay her reparations only through post-war borrowing largely from the country, and the credit it should provide for the war debt payments would be glad to settle on at least some of the loans for 10 cents on the dollar.

There were difficulties in our relations with Europe, except that while the Hoover administration has been unable to pay her reparations only through post-war borrowing largely from the country, and the credit it should provide for the war debt payments would be glad to settle on at least some of the loans for 10 cents on the dollar.
