THE CALL OF THE WILD

The call of the wild is supposed to be an ever-potent thing as far as forest animals are concerned, but apparently wild creatures can become so fond of captivity that they don't like freedom when they get it.

New York's state conservation department a year ago brought a herd of elk to a corral in the DeBar mountain game refuge, planning to feed and develop the herd, turn it loose, and thus restore the wild herds that once roamed over the state.

The other day the animals, having waxed robust in the corral, were given their freedom. A few wandered off into the woods—but most of them, after sauntering about aimlessly for an hour or so, came back to the corral! The call of the wild, evidently, is not as alluring as the prospect of good bedding and three square meals a day in a man-made habitat.

"CANNED" SPEECHES

The average citizen may be pardoned if he shudders just a trifle on receipt of the news that politicians are now preparing to have phonograph records made of political speeches, for dissemination over the radio during the approaching campaign.

This news comes via the theatrical magazine Variety, which finds that Los Angeles politicians are already having such records made that politicians in other parts of the country are expected to follow suit.

Getting the speeches of the candidates over the air is a fine thing, of course. It enables the candidate to reach a far wider percentage of the electorate than ever was possible before. But somehow, the thought of "canned" speeches being stored up for broadcasting purposes, is dismaying. Campaign blair is even harder to listen to when it comes out of a machine than when it proceeds from a flesh-and-blood thorax.

THERE'S GOLD IN THEM THAR HILLS!

Three thousand men, possibly even more, who are prospecting for gold in Idaho this summer, know rather well what they are up against, believes Dr. John W. Finch, dean of the University of Idaho of mines:

Although most of them are amateurs, they are not the type of men who expect to pick up gold nuggets by the handful, he explains. They know that a living wage is about all they can expect, and prefer even a bare living out in the open to unemployment at home. Always before them is the possibility of a "strike," and the more experienced they aren't, may come across an occasional rich-placer-pocket—or even a gold bearing vein worthy of development.

Reports from men in the field show that the placer deposits of Idaho were not all found by the old-timers and Chinamen, and no reports have come to the schools of mines of any distress among the prospectors. Placer mining is yielding a living to men in Idaho, Valley, Custer, Boise, and some of the northern counties. The Idaho bureau of mines and geology is watching carefully the outcome of the prospecting movement, and one of the bureau staff members, Prof. W. W. Staley, is making a tour of the placer districts of the state.

Most of the men out in the Idaho hills and along the river beds have written at least once to the school of mines for advice and information, judging from about 3,500 such requests received during the past year. All have been warned, either in bulletins or personal letters, that the way of the prospector is rough and uncertain, and that easy fortunes just aren't in the cards.

"Don't go into the hills alone, without essential equipment and food supplies, or without a person of some experience in the party," is the first of the warnings which has been constantly repeated. "Form a partnership with an experienced miner," and "have money enough to cover at least one month's expenses," are typical bits of advice. Several localities usually must be tried before gold is found in paying qualities, hence the necessity of having some money.

Dean Finch always advises search for veins as well as placers. "Placers may yield a living, he says, "but a good vein may mean a fortune."

A reference in this column to the wide margin of votes received by Governor Ross over those cast for congressional candidates, failed to take into consideration the votes cast in the first congressional district. However, taking the totals of votes received by the five Democratic congressional candidates in the first district, and those in the second district, the combined total is still only 38,444, or 1,757 fewer ballots than were cast for the governor in the state at the primary. On the Republican ticket the total cast for Smith and French was 46,264, which was 2,622 more than received by Defenbach; while the vote cast for United States senator on the Republican ticket was 49,230, or a lead over the 48,644 votes received by Defenbach, of 5,586.

THE ARTIST blends colors. The cigarette maker blends tobaccos. The artist must use just the right amount of each color to get a pleasing effect. And the cigarette blender must use just the right amount of the right kinds of tobacco to get better and more pleasing taste. Both must know how!

A "balanced" blend . . . the right Domestic and Turkish tobaccos in the right amounts . . . blended in a different way . . . "welded" together.

That's the Chesterfield Cross-Blend . . . an important reason why Chesterfields are milder and taste better.

It isn't just taking the tobaccos and mixing them hit-or-miss.

The Chesterfield Cross-Blend mixes one type or one variety of tobacco partake of the qualities of another. It "welds" together all that is best in each variety.

It's a balanced blend in the truest sense . . . giving you what really amounts to a new kind of tobacco . . . Chesterfield tobacco . . . milder, more fragrant, better-tasting.

that's why Chesterfields TASTE BETTER
