

BUYING OF NEEDED ARTICLES ADVISED

Iowa Farmers Pledge Purchase of Products Adopt Resolutions

MITCHELVILLE, Ia. (UPI) — Purchases of farm equipment by farmers themselves from their neighbors will constitute the way in better times, a group of farmers who met at the Chilton, Iowa, home late here agreed.

Meeting of the Chilton group of farmers to discuss the purchase of needed items of equipment to the limit of their means and in a statement of their resolutions, said they will go to others to get the same.

The meeting grew out of a discussion of the financial condition of the community. Those present as prescribers held it has become fashionable to appeal for poverty stricken and that those individuals have refused to buy while others who can and are willing to buy have been unable to do so because of fear of criticism by business associates, relatives or neighbors.

Statement

The statement adopted in the farmers' group follows:

"It is evident that prices of farm products must be higher than they are now and that they should be increased."

"Legislation may help farmers to get better prices, but regardless of legislation, we firmly believe that immediate improvement in the price of farm products can be had only through the efforts of individual circumstances. A great demand for farm products, both food and fiber, is the only factor which certainly results in improved prices. As employment increases, there will be a greater demand for farm products and employment must increase only when people buy more."

A Much Money

Speaker last year of crop money in the country was $100 billion. There were in the home lines of 1928 and 1929. There are hundreds of them scattered throughout the country in the United States who, like automobile, home furnishings, clothing, furniture, business equipment and other articles of value, are used up with which to buy. But, they have not buying.

While there are many people who are not buying these things, we want them, because they have the belief that they are doing the popular thing when they are worn out and need to be replaced. Of course, they fear they will be criticized by neighbors, relatives, employers or friends, or, having their incomes reduced, are convinced that since this condition which prevents people who have money to spend from buying the things they want, it is best to wait until the money comes in again. This is not immediately and that we will benefit along with people in other industries, too. We have the greatest confidence in the future of the farming business and we have faith in the work and life of the people of the country."

"Our Part"

Another farmer member before the soundness of the foregoing statements, and agreeing that our personal home or farm business should be the first to buy, said: "I know $10,000 to $50,000 worth of farm equipment. We will buy this equipment ourselves first, just as rapidly as we are able."

"Second—We will give a word of warning to all to wait to buy in your own country what you think they want, and can afford."

"Third"

"Third—We will encourage, by every means we can, those who have the time and ability to go ahead and buy. We realize that money so spent will bring a return. We will also encourage the buying of surplus land and equipment, if possible, to help us in our walk of life, involving business for everyone, including them."

We believe that the items contained in the resolution represent the sentiments of a large portion of the farmers of this country. In our opinion, we believe it is typical of widespread sentiment."

A FACT WE OVERLOOK IN WAR ON CRIME

Judge William M. Lewis of Philadelphia has announced that jobless men who steal to feed their families will receive no punishment in his court.

Philadelphia has some 250,000 unemployed, and for the past month they have received neither money nor food from the unemployment committee. A number of them, says Judge Lewis, have taken to stealing in their desperation; but when such men come before him they are promptly put on probation.

Probably there won't be anyone in the country to quarrel with the stand this judge has taken. To recognize that the man who is driven to crime in order to keep his wife and children from starving is not in the same class with the professional housebreaker or slick-up man is only common sense.

But it's a little odd, that it has taken a business depression of unparalleled severity to make us accept this obvious fact.

In ordinary times our tendency is to make the punishment fit the crime. The man who steals property of such and such a value must stay in prison for such and such a period; the man who holds another up on the highway gets a similarly indefinite sentence; and while efforts have been made, through probation departments, the use of the indeterminate sentence and so on, to soften the rough edges of these harsh rules, we have not got so very far away from the old, traditional code.

Such men as Clarence Darrow have been trying for years to make us understand that the compelling motive back of most criminal acts is the economic one. "Dig back far enough into the life of even the most hardened yegg-and-you-are-apt-to-find—that same desperate craving for the necessities of life. Later to be sure, the criminal may follow his calling for other reasons; but his origins, in a tremendous number of cases, stem straight from the swamp of hopeless poverty."

Until we accept that fact we shall never make any headway in the age-long "war on crime."

PANNED WITH APOLOGIES

(Ottawa Free Press)

Senator Pat Harrison the other day delivered a Democratic "keynote" speech. If he panned President Hoover, his expressed idea was that for some things the president and his cabinet have said and done or have left unsaid and undone, they should be "condemned and crucified upon the cross of failure."

We don't know what it was all about, but as a keynote address for a political party it was a great speech—great because it panned the president and his chief adviser.

The Idaho Statesman took the matter in and panned Pat because he had panned the president. This arbiter of the political destinies of the State of Idaho and critic self-conceived pan excellence of Senator Borah rightly panned Pat—not because the president and his advisors have made no mistakes—but because it is cheap politics to platinifidously parade the warts and wrinkles of an opponent without including in the picture the contour of the noble brow. This heroic defense of the president even exhorted the Democrats to "remember that President Hoover is not the first great man to be condemned and crucified." Of course the Statesman did not take time to define the term "great man."

We quite agree with the Statesman. Pat should not have panned the president. Nor by the same logic, should the Statesman have panned Pat. Each may be "host by his own petard." Our memory may be at fault, if so "twere a grievous fault, but somewhere floating in nebulous space is a hazy recollection that one of the pastimes of the Statesman, for these two years past, has been that of panning Ben. Ben Ross, governor of the State of Idaho. We are not assuming that Governor Ross is a "great man." We are only recalling that when the Statesman was not boozing Borah it was baiting Ben.

But this panning process is often a cold, wet and fruitless business. When the stuck-in pan has been assiduously wiggled and squiggled, rolled and wriggled until it has clouded with dirt the clear stream of reason and what remains in the pan has been prescribed for inspection—there often appears only a blank. A few heavy black bubbles sit only for the assassin's sling. No color of justice or of kindness remains for any wealth of well-being.

We are not particular whether it is Pat Harrison panning the president, the Statesman panning Borah or Ben, or even the Free Press panning the Statesman from the ground up. It is a sorry business, but a constructive idea in the whole of it.

The result of business is fewer prophets and more profiteers.

A town in Tennessee made a bonfire of all the burning suits owned by its inhabitants. We understand the blaze was visible for several feet.

What use of he would like best right now is to have the neighbors catch us of allowing our new wealth to go to our heads.

Breakfast Favors Orchid and White

Mr. Frank Horwitz entertained at a bridge breakfast Thursday morning at his home on Second Avenue west, continuing from Miss Rose Costello. A color scheme of orchid and white prevailed in the quiet of pastel hues, blending with the color scheme, arranged in soft shades, centered in one large room. The favors were placed for 18—labeled orchid tapers in silver holders flanked by pink carnations.

Mrs. L. E. Blomquist, San Diego, guest of her parents, Mr. and Mrs. C. P. Lind and Mrs. Clara, was a guest at the breakfast. The breakfast was catered by the Twin Falls Catering Company.

Miss G. E. Lind won the prize for best dressed. Miss Costello received greatest favor.

WIDOW OF SMITH
REYNOLDS UNDER
CARE OF DOCTOR

Thursday evening was ideal for the mid-century tea garden party at the Methodist church hall, home of Mrs. Mabel Atkinson, conducted by the Methodist society of the Christian Endeavor. Enthroning the hours of refreshment were the quietude of electrically lighted grape arbors; the waterfall, the comfortable furniture groupings.

The Younger women of the church were the hostesses. Mrs. Littleton, Alice Carlson, Sister Smith and Irene Sharpe, in gay dresses typical of former fashion, made sketches. Colored spotlights played on the performers, as they

Mr. Hoover has delayed his acceptance of the invitation to speak at the meeting and meditation. No circumstance is to accompany it. A simple, direct, solid speech to the citizens, followed ten minutes, the meeting followed after the interview of the Marine Corps band.

Governor Roosevelt, however, may elicit an oration from an airplane and make it a national broadcast, according to the most recent information of the Marine Corps band.

Mr. Hoover, unless his speech is measured, will be called once again to his public press stage management, he said. He added, "I am not going to have to do things in my own way."

He was failing then about three days ago.
