STAYING THE HAND OF DEATH

Dr. William J. Mayo believes that mankind is coming appreciably nearer to the day when there will be no "unnecessary" deaths.

In a speech at St. Paul, the famous Minnesota physician points out that the number of diseases which can be cured is constantly increasing, and remarks that the advance in the fight against sickness in the last decade is "little short of miraculous."

So, once again, a great medical scientist has given us a new and welcome hope. But it is his phrasology that attracts attention, somehow; that little expression "unnecessary deaths," sums up so graphically mankind's long fight against an enemy that is certain to win in the end.

What it implies, of course, is something that even a small child knows—that death is inevitable for everyone, and that even the "wisest" doctor cannot, after all, do more than postpone something that is bound to happen eventually.

But that perfectly obvious and inescapable truth is one to which the race has never quite succeeded in getting reconciled.

All of our churches, most of our great art are simply expressions of a pathetic, wistful human feeling that death is, or ought to be, something that can be conquered. We can never quite accept the knowledge that we were born to die. The race's noblest moments have grown out of that deep yearning for a life that can go on and on.

And yet, it is so clear that it is the "unnecessary" death that causes the most of our suffering.

The death of a small child, so unbelievably hard to bear; the death of a young man who has just begun to show promise of great achievement; the death of one who has just reached the height of his powers; and who has a fine work to do; the death of a loved person with whom one has just started to explore the inexpressible richness of human devotion—these are the tragedies that darken life the most.

If we could once know that death could be made to wait until its season had come, its final arrival would not look so appalling. And it is this fair prospect which Dr. Mayo has held out to us.

WIPE OUT THE SLUMS

Two states have already taken steps to prepare their cities for slum-elimination projects under the auspices of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. New York and Ohio have passed legislation which will enable their cities to use federal loans to clean up slum areas and install model housing plans; Illinois is about to follow suit; and Massachusetts, Pennsylvania and Indiana are preparing to do the same.

These states are acting with great wisdom. The slum problem is one of the most vital problems that the American city today faces. No city can do itself a better service than by getting rid of its unsanitary, crime-breeding tenements and substituting for them dwellings in which even the poorest people can have decent living accommodations.

Furthermore, there never was a better time to start such work than the present. States which have not paved the way for such projects should begin looking into the matter at once.

CHAIN-GANG HORRORS

Disclosures made in the criminal court at Jacksonville, Fla., about abuses in the Florida prison camps are inexpressibly shocking. They become worse when one reflects that they are not peculiar to Florida. Several other states which have the chain-gang system have records quite as black. Florida simply happens to be the one that is getting the limelight.

The fight for prison reform has been going on for a long time, and even in the most enlightened places it is not yet won; but these things that have happened in the chain-gang camps indicate that the fight has farther to go than most of us had supposed. The day is past when the country can calmly accept torture and utter heartlessness as concomitants of prison administration. It is to be hoped that these revelations will jolt people into insisting on a speedy and drastic change.

This campaign appears to be all even. President Hoover splits infinitives and Candidate Roosevelt uses "like" as a conjunction.

Perhaps the Pittsburgh boy, 5 years old, who smokes cigars, merely doesn't want to seem effeminate.

Gandhi is reported to have partaken of some graines and sugar the other day—the old wine-bibber!

This section is now in the midst of what should be a golden harvest season. Stiffening of prices of several commodities is one encouraging factor. The other will be the solution of the local banking problem upon which a committee is working and expects shortly to make a report on its accomplishments.

PARTS of Hoover's speech at Dog Mountain may be interpreted as a nationalistic act. His account of the Democratic leadership in the last Congress was particularly vicious, and he also asserted that measures he sponsored prevented an acute banking crisis.

He is critical of the economy and speech is critical of unwise consumers. Further extensions of credit are regarded here as the main remedy to which the farmer turns.

No credit now means debts to be paid later. There is also a proposal to limit the tariff and on the creation of an export market to be viewed as contradictory, since it would mean an increase in the wholesale dumping of cheap foreign goods in this country, how can we possibly hope to sell our own products abroad at a higher price level?

TUNISIA.

The portion of the speech dealing with the gold standard is interpreted here as entirely irrelevant. The reason is that the Smith gold standard was a fine idea last summer when every sizable lawyer's office in New York was touting with the public the virtues of the gold standard. In April, the Japanese obligations payable in gold if the gold standard were dropped, it was considered that Roosevelt would not be likely to hold payments to the gold standard. It was believed that the Courts would inevitably hold gold payments to the gold standard and that this would give Roosevelt a popular repudiation.

The trick is that there are only 11 million dollars in gold reserves in the world. Total debts fluctuate greatly, payoffs in gold amount to nothing but paper. The tendency to use up the world's solid cash would change it to a completely unpredictable situation.

THE TRICK.

A significant change in financial thinking is indicated by the tendency to regard the role of government, especially monetary, banks in the past few weeks. This means that the banks now feel compelled to hold on to their funds to think more in terms of income rather than terms of loss. Income, holding on to their funds, is the higher interest, lower risk, short-term low-rate investments.

The statement of conditions of both state and national banks as "good" is on the effect. THE
