Twin Falls Rallies To Defeat Bulldogs In Closing Minutes

Thomas Dashes 98 Yards for Winning Score

SAMPA (Special)—It was the toughest period of the game in the concluding period of the Twin Falls Bulldogs' season, as they perfect season record of defeating the Bulldogs 12-0 in an exciting game, reversing the trend of the season last year.

During the last three periods the Sampans forced their way on several occasions to the shadow of the Twin Falls goal only to be repulsed in the nick of time. Four times Sampans threatened to threaten but the Bulls held them off.

Twin Falls seemed unable to get started until the fourth period. With Sampans holding the offense and only five minutes to play the Bulls began a drive that ended when Smith, first quarter, crossed the goal-line to tie the count.

Smith's drive, which was sudden, many offensive, drove deep into Twin Falls territory in a full attempt to win. They took the ball to the three-yard stripe and then on the next play, at this point that the most thrilling play of the game developed. Thomas, full back, crossed the line, intercepted the pass and dashed 98 yards for a touchdown and victory.

Never has a more exciting gridiron contest been seen in Sampa. From the beginning the game held a good-sized crowd in a friendly atmosphere. The quarter was packed with thrills.

A DOCTOR FOR CORONER

Every time the occasion arises when the services of the county coroner are required, there comes to light the wisdom exercised in having a physician occupy the position.

For the past two years the place has been filled by a doctor, first by Dr. Leete, and then upon his death, by Dr. F. A. Dwight, who is now a candidate for reelection to the position.

The real saving comes from the ability of a doctor to determine the cause of a fatality without the necessity of calling a coroner's jury, and without the cause of death. As a physician, he is interested in a mortuary establishment he is enabled to rotate among the different mortuaries the cases which are either public charges, or where the victim of death is an unknown "fairness" in the distribution of this work has resulted in morticians generally, favoring one who is not an undertaker for the place, and in the interests of economy and efficiency the public has come to learn of the wisdom of the enlightened policy of having a physician in the office.

The record of Dr. Dwight, candidate on the Democratic ticket for reelection demonstrates he should be re-elected.

OPPORTUNITY'S STILL HERE

The young chap who is just starting out to make his way in the world these days faces a tough prospect. But before he gets through he is likely to find that "opportunity" has picked a better time to make a beginning.

So at any rate, says Charles M. Schwab, who seems to feel that since there isn't any place for things to go but up, the lad who begins at the bottom now will find all kinds of opportunities opening in front of him in the near future.

Writing in the current issue of the Pictorial Review, Mr. Schwab points out that even though the depression has been long and hard, the world isn't going to come to an end day after tomorrow, after all. America is not suffering from a shortage of food and supplies; potentially it is richer than ever, and sooner or later a financial energy and intelligence will bring us back to a time even better than any we have had before.

This little song, to be sure, has been sung before. But Mr. Schwab learned about the opportunities that exist in a depression from one of the greatest industrialists that ever lived—Andrew Carnegie; for it was always Carnegie's custom to use a depression as a time for expansion, a time for getting ready for a future boom.

In the panic of the '70s, when most industrialists were busy at the wailing wall, Carnegie kept hard at work building new plants all getting ready to do a bigger business than ever before. It was the same when the depression of the '90s came along. Always Carnegie knew that there would be an upswing; always he used hard times as a period of preparation. The result, of course, was that Carnegie became the world's greatest steel master—and, in the end, was able to die rich after giving away $325,000,000. And the young men who found places with him during those bygone years of depression are not getting hungry today. Mr. Schwab, incidentally, is one of them.

THAT "LAME DUCK" PROBLEM

What all the campaign rumors are is the one which has it that the present administration, if defeated in the election, will resign in a body on Jan. 1 and permit the incoming administration to take things over two months ahead of time.

Such a rumor is hardly worth discussing seriously. But it does present one good service; it does emphasize the great value of the "lame duck" amendment to the Constitution, now pending before the several states.

Under this amendment a presidential term would begin early in January following the election. We would not have the dreary four-month wait between election and inauguration. If a new president were chosen, he would not have to wait until the election was almost forgotten before going to work. This wild campaign rumor at least calls that fact to our attention, and reminds us that ratification of this amendment must not fail.

Recently the Republican press has made much of the fact that Henry Ford had called in a personal, intimate duty to give up the air with speech urging the re-election of President Hoover. For obvious reasons the G. O. Papers didn't say so much about the news that Mr. Ford had failed to register as a voter in the coming election. Personal political obligations sometimes seem inconsistent.

A doctor advises that cod liver oil, aside from medical values, will bring contentment. After taking cod liver oil, probably the patient is satisfied with anything.

Swergin stood with his thick neck thrust forward and his heavy brows furrowed. "I don't blame the girl for such. But in a handsome devil she is handed her a line that was very pretty. Played gentleman to her all the time and made a big show to get her to feeling sorry for him."

"I'm sure," Swergin nodded. He remembered young Ball very well and thought he understood. "I know fast about her. He managed it," he grunted. "He's on foot. We have his name down at the corral now. The man should be able to run him down. I found his hideout, and he can't go back there without a horse he won't get." Swergin was content again.

"This time I'll be far from the scene when they get him and there won't be any fight," Swergin grunted. "I'll be in the city. If it was to do me, I don't care. I never have had to use a mob to get things. You'll have to get this show away as it can be."

"I want him alive!" Asper said promptly. "I can't promise anything but that I'll get him." With this Swergin stamped off the porch.

Dana halted and looked down. She came out on the porch as readily as she could as though she had never been closer to danger than the open air. She looked at the things affixed to the road daylight. Something and gives her eyes a glow that had not been for months. Asper noted this and so did Dudley who was waiting to take her to the main cabin. "You've thought that apart like it," Asper smiled and chuckled her under the chin.
