NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS BOARD
Mills Tower, 220 Bush Street, San Francisco, Cal.PRIMARY THREATENED
Idaho's present statewide direct primary law is threatened by the votes of Democrats in the senate and house.

The state senate, by vote of 23 to 19, has approved a bill which would provide for the election of one delegate for each 60 voters in precincts, those to meet in county convention where county tickets of each party would be named; and delegates chosen to state conventions where state and congressional tickets would be nominated.

Indications are that the measure will not get far in the house of representatives.

The senate action proves that the old direct primary law does not necessarily have the approval of all Democrats, any more than is the convention system—the tool of the Republican party. In the last G.O.P. state convention that party went on record, at the behest of Borah, in favor of strengthening the primary law. Meanwhile there are plenty of Democratic leaders, as is proved by the senate vote, who would practically abandon the primary for a mere improvement on the convention system.

After all the thing to be secured is not a particular law governing the method of nominating officials, so much as a representative and satisfactory result. It is possible under the direct primary to deprive the people of free action, and it is possible also under the convention system to preserve the democratic method of choosing officials.

That both the primary and convention methods have their faults is admitted, leading to the conclusion that the most satisfactory system would be a combination of the two, which the proposed bill appears to offer. It fails however in preserving the right of the people themselves to name their candidates, which is the prime purpose of a primary.

It is good to see the present legislature go into the subject, giving opportunity for intelligent discussion. Out of it may come ideas and proposals which at this session or the next may see desirable improvements in method of nominating candidates for public office.

Jimmy Walker, finally reporting that he's broke, was able to hold out much longer than the city he helped break.

THIRD HOUSE IS DANGEROUS

If you could get the seventh son of a seventh son off in a corner and ask him, man to man, what the next great political reform in the United States was going to be, he would probably tell you that it would involve adoption of the one-chamber plan by state legislatures.

This idea, which Sen. George W. Norris put over single-handed in Nebraska, seems to be taking hold everywhere, for the excellent reason that it is completely logical and sensible proposition.

The weaknesses of democratic government are nowhere more apparent than in the average state capital. State government has grown expensive, and unwieldy.

To a large extent this is because we cling to a device invented by the British back in the days when the power of the throne was a thing to be feared.

In theory, the British House of Commons and House of Lords represent very different groups. The former gets its authority from the people, the latter from the crown.

Working side by side, they are supposed to act as checks on each other so that neither class can legislate to the detriment of the other.

Because of that theory, the American state legislature has two houses. All reason for the division has vanished; what we have now is best described by Senator Norris, who calls the two-chamber legislature "as useless as a wagon with five wheels."

"You cannot have a two-house legislature," says the senator, "without in reality having three, for the conference committee that must set up to iron out differences between house and senate constitute a third body."

Moreover, it transacts its business in an un-American and undemocratic manner. Its meetings are held in secret; there is no such thing as a roll call, and there is no record of its proceedings.

"A bill once referred to a conference committee cannot become law unless it is agreed to by a majority of the conferees. Thus it is within the power of the conference committee, in secret and without a record vote, absolutely to prevent legislation and to kill or modify at its pleasure any proposed legislation within its jurisdiction."

The lever which this gives to special interests to block legislation designed for protection of all citizens is too obvious to need comment; so, too, is the opening which it gives to all kinds of political chicanery and thimblerigging.

Once the public awakens to the merits of the single-chamber plan, it is a safe bet that state after state will follow the lead of Nebraska.

SILKEN SPINDLES

BEGUN HERE TODAY.

GAIL HENDERSON, pretty and 23, works in a silk mill in Twin Falls, a town whose inhabitants are mostly Chinese.

She works in the mill, asks Gail, to earn her living.

"I'm answer in a few days."

Gail goes skating, breaks the ice on the lake, and when Julian Westmore, whose wife has come home after two years in Japan, comes to town she goes shopping with him.

"Julian, I'm afraid before he can learn her name."

"Julian," Vicki said, "I've been thinking about things."

"What things?"

"I'm afraid I'm tired of doing the same old things—shopping and playing bridge and going to parties. Seeing the same people and hearing them say the same old things."

"Julian, you are a Wally Carter."

"Julian, I saw that same girl again."

"Julian, I saw you with another girl."
