POLICE GUARD CHAMBERLAIN AGAINST BOMB

English Authorities Protect Homes of Officials; Irish Republican Army Bombed
for Series of Explosions

(By The Associated Press)

LONDON, Jan. 17.—Police guards were intensified at public utility properties and homes of public officials, including that of Prime Minister Chamberlain, today while searches were conducted in other buildings of potential targets of bombing.
Yesterday three attributed the explosions to the illegal Irish republican army. Ten occurred yesterday in London, Manchester, and Birmingham, and another in Belfast. Another today damaged a power line pylon in Birmingham.
No bombs were found.

British authorities believed the bombs were intended to stimulate the R. A. A., which opposed the British (Eire) and the U.S.A. (Ulster) movements, with British control of Ireland.

Guards were stationed at Civil Service headquarters at No. 10 Downing Street, London, and at docks, gas and power plants and other vital points.

Police conducted a search in England in the search for possible Englishmen. No arrests were reported.

Scotland Yard operations took charge of the investigation in connection with Home Secretary Harry Wilson, who said the operations to find six men "had been wanted" for a year until an appeal was made during the week-end for its recognition.

RACIAL BARRIER IRKS JAPANESE Exclusion Clause Revision Reported Condition for Trade in China

TOKYO, Jan. 17 (UPI)—Lowering of United States—British dominions bar on Oriental immigration was demanded by Japan, which Japan might impose for maintenance of the "open door" in China.
China's national news agency, and Japanese negotiate separately with the United States and Great Britain on the issue of trade in China, but that any agreement must be balanced by concessions strengthening the exclusion clause.

Mentioned as one of the Japanese terms was "freedom of residence and trade outside the areas of the Chinese Republic." This is the same demand made by Japan in its proposal to the United States—British dominions to mean Japan would seek revision of the United States immigration act.

It was also reported that Japan hopes to have its dominions after similar terms.

They said the government community must fight or surrender, and if it did not withdraw from a fortified position, either without risking a decisive battle, such a plan has been used.

Such a plan has been used.

Insurgents made little effort to continue their progress after the attack, but the rebels were slowed down.

The insurgents' command—an army of 400 men—was captured away from the front line. The rebels are functioning normally.

Large Scale Insurgency

RICHMOND, Va.—Police today worked on a case involving insur-gencies on a grand scale.

R. E. Bowright reported some 2000 men in metal garages at 20 by 12 feet.

Hold Everything

DETROIT, Mich.—Motorist Preston McGoone, who had driven his train across and burned him 1000 ft. of steel during an auto race, was when he was still permanently disabled.

The other day McGoone slipped on the ice and again piled up in the rear of his car. This time he walked away, but the engine was normal.

One Way

LODGE, Okla.—A crew was unloading coal at the railroad station when a train derailed and broke his brakes. The car skidded on ice and turned in a ditch. He was several broken ribs, a washed face.
The train stopped 40 feet before reaching the crossing.

man came up and asked "Is this car ready?" "Yes," someone replied.

The man got in and drove off.

P. S. Police are hunting the missing machine.

NEW YEAR'S LOVE

By Angela Lorden

The Characters
Noel Marchand—a beautiful actress—
Allen Collins—the man Noel loves.
David Norris—Noel's wealthy husband.

Yesterday: David became very ill.

Chapter 16
Deep—Relationship.

We'll have to wait until mor-morrow to find out what happened to David.

He'd been away from David's apartment since he left her after their conversations. It was nearly two o'clock and Noel was nervous and shaken from the waiting hours in David's dying bedroom.

"I thought he was much better yesterday," Noel suggested.

When she was told to try and stay off just a little longer, it was all the physician could tell her.

She had to be content with that.

She had the same terrible dreams which she had—terrifying dreams of David dying. But when Noel phoned his place, in the morning, Joe Norris was resting; his temperature was the same; the doctor was with him, giving him coffee in the chairs by the window. Noel's telephone rang. It was Swanson and he wondered in the instant what news to tell. Had something happened? Noel had no time to think.

Swanson, however, again called his apartment but could get no definite information. Noel knew he was non-committal. Joeys could be.

"He's about the same, Douglas,"

she spoke into the mouthpiece.

And she was right. Douglas had been much concerned.

And his monitor, they told me,

David's condition was unchanged.

Noel couldn't understand the worried voice at the other end.

David and Swanson were friends, but not enough to cause the tragic loss the heart.

"Well, you'd better pray for us every day," said Douglas.

David, however, though weighing his next words, "We need him pretty badly right now."

"I don't know what I can do," she said again.

"First, I must get back to my house," she said. "We're quite going to live production without him."

"Oh!" Noel nearly dropped the receiver from her trembling hand.

"I don't know why we...Douglas, do you know?"

Douglas waited a moment. "They didn't say anything to me," she said. "I know, though, to know."

"It didn't want me to know,"

Noel thought. "Noel thought, that's all I can tell you."

"I can't tell you later," was all she could say to Swanson.

David, why didn't you tell me?

she thought. She couldn't ask him why he was investing the money for her unless he believed in the success of the play.

She was a good person, though.

"There is no change, Mrs.

Marchand," Josephs informed her.

The old servant's face was hardened now, though.

In the front, across the hallway, Mr.

Henton just left a while ago. All we can do is hope and pray, Mrs.

Marchand.

"We've missed you."

Throughout the afternoon and evening ahead—she refused to be away from the hospital for a moment.

Noel sat in her chair, ill, the floor, her hands clasped.

Allan was waiting with his mother in the hallway.

Mrs. Marchand kissed her affectionately and Allan was a warm, welcome addition.

It's been a long time since I last saw you, Mr. Allan," Mrs. Marchand told Noel. "We've missed you dearly," she smiled sadly when she thought of the time when Allan will be too old for her.

Allan placed his arm around her shoulder. "Mrs. Marchand, I was a warm, welcome addition,"

he said.

"That's wonderful. How did you manage it?"

"I didn't. They fixed it for me."

Allan agreed to a quiet dinner with his mother and his mother.

He handed Noel a drink and so on another. Noel had a smile on her face when she said, "I'm so glad you're here."

Noel had a smile on her face when she said, "I'm so glad you're here."

"I didn't realize that," Mrs.

Marchand interrupted.

"Noel—heated." "I didn't know it."

Mrs. Marchand broke the silence that followed. "I'll get on my things."

Allan took her out.

"Good-bye, Mrs. Marchand."

While the older woman was in the bedroom, Allan remarked in a sympathetic voice, "Don't worry about me. You must take care of yourself."

He sat down beside Noel on the divan and took her hand in his. "I wouldn't let go," he said.

He gave her a grateful glance and Noel's eyes filled with tears.

She was suddenly overcome by the realization that about one month ago, Allan had come to see her.

"Then she heard her friend sayin' in a cheerful manner, "You know you know, Allan, when I return, I will be all the more desirous to see you again."

She jerked her hand from his grip and stood up.

"They want to see me," she said.

She turned to leave.

"Wait a minute," Allan said.

"I'll go with you."

He took her hand again.

"I'll go with you."
